As I said earlier, we believe that this is the right forum. We know that there was an inquiry proposed by the last administration. It was in recognition of these representations that I felt that the inquiry that was proposed by the previous administration would not necessarily meet the concerns of the pensioners. Therefore, we decided to cancel the inquiry that was set up by the previous Government.

I want to say to all Members of the House, and indeed to Mr. Brian Williams, that in making the decision I certainly in no way want to cast any reflection upon the integrity, reputation or ability of the commissioner who was appointed, namely Mr. Brian Williams of Vancouver. My decision to cancel that procedure should in no way be construed as a reflection upon his competence, but rather it was a decision based upon the desire to proceed in a more direct public manner in tune with the issues and the desires of the pensioners, the people who feel aggrieved by the way in which their pensions had been handled.

The second reason for choosing the Standing Committee on Transport is that, as well as being a pension issue, this is a matter which involves Canada's railways. There has always been a special relationship in Canada between the railways and Parliament. I think that is recognized by the fact that we have a Railway Committee Room in this building. The Railway Committee Room stands as the permanent room for the activities of the Standing Committee on Transport.

Those of us who have been a part of this committee for many years are very proud of that fact. I guess that in a technical sense I am not a member of that committee, but I still feel very much a part of it.

Mr. Benjamin: It is still your home.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, I feel very much at home when I go to meetings of the standing committee. The railways have a special place in the history of our country. I believe that the people who work for the railways deserve special recognition.

I know that in my days as a member of the standing committee, the concerns of railway employees were always of interest and concern to all members who sat on that committee, particularly those who were former railroaders and never ceased their efforts on behalf of their co-workers.

I can certainly single out the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), who has been a champion on behalf of not only the current railway workers, but of the pensioners; his former colleague from Moose Jaw, Mr. Skoberg; and, of course, the eminent Member of the other place, the former Whip of the Liberal Party, Senator Charlie Turner, who certainly distinguished himself in terms of representing the interests of the railway workers and pensioners. I guess if I had one regret, it is that Mr. Turner will not be a member of that committee. I am sure that he will find the occasion to come in from time to time and give the committee any advice it may wish to extract from him.

I am sure as well that the present committee will benefit from many of the new members. The new membership on that committee is made up of a very talented group of Canadians. That new blood and expertise, combined with the stability, wisdom and commitment of veterans like the chief spokesman for the Official Opposition Party and the chief spokesman for the New Democratic Party and others, that blend will augur well in coming up with a real set of balanced recommendations that we can follow.

I urge all Members of the House and the standing committee to remember that we are dealing with an issue that affects the lives of some 47,000 former CN employees and their dependants. It may very well have implications beyond that. These people have provided years of dedicated service to our country, many for as long as 30 or 40 years. They are now senior citizens and do not have the sophisticated computers or lawyers to argue their case. I believe that their views must be heard and that in the standing committee they will find a responsive and sympathetic listener.

Third, and this relates to my previous comments, the standing committee has shown considerable interest in this matter in the past and has acquired a knowledge and understanding that should be utilized. As recently as in the spring of 1984, the standing committee was seized with this particular issue. The committee had the opportunity, at least in part, to hear from the Pensioners' Association and CN. Unfortunately, we were not able to complete a thorough examination such as today we are proposing to do.

Previous to that in June, 1982 the standing committee adopted the motion of the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) to consider the issue. Regrettably, that examination was also not concluded. Given the historical work of the committee, its interest in railway issues and the desire of the pensioners for a proper public hearing, I think that the broad order of reference to the committee which we have put forward is the most appropriate approach to this long-standing and very complex matter.

I must emphasize that the decision to bring forward an order of reference is consistent with the Government's interest in an over-all approach to Canada's pension and retirement income system. We are fully aware of the importance of the whole pension question and the great deal of work and examination that has been undertaken recently. Our Government is committed to assisting all Canadians in preparing for retirement that would allow them to live in dignity and security. I believe that the efforts of the Standing Committee on Transport with respect to CN pensions will provide valuable information and insight regarding retirement income arrangements for all Canadians.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House by discussing the specific issues of concern to the pensioners. I believe we should leave it to the wisdom of the committee to determine the best manner in which to proceed on those questions which might require special attention. We deliberately tried to shape the order of reference to permit this sort of flexibility. At the same time, notwithstanding the committee's own expertise, we have recognized that this issue contains many complex technical, legal and financial elements. Accordingly, we believe that the committee will benefit from the assistance of various experts such as actuaries and pension fund analysts, and that the terms of reference provide the committee with the ability to engage such assistance as it may require. Again, that expertise and background competence that will be required combined with the expertise and the political judgment of the members of the committee will, I am sure, give us the ingredients to come forth with what I would hope to be fair, equitable and practical recommendations.

If I might, I would like to say that I think this reflects the kind of faith that we as a Government place in the institutions and instruments of Parliament, and that faith is shared by all Members on this side of the House. We are committed to restoring the role of Parliament and parliamentarians and in particular we believe that committees can play a valuable role in the exploration of issues and the formulation of public policy. I say to the members of the Standing Committee on Transport that I intend to seek their advice on a wide range of issues and policy matters. I hope to count upon their advice and good counsel on these issues. They have already provided valuable advice and recommendations in several areas and I look forward to their efforts with regard to the CN pensions and to other matters.

If I may indulge in a moment of flattery, I would like to state that in my years as a parliamentarian, there has been no finer committee in the House than the Standing Committee on Transport. I have witnessed, as I am sure have many Hon. Members, some very remarkable and fascinating debates around that committee table. A great deal of thoughtful analysis has provided many outstanding and constructive reports and pieces of legislation to this House. I know that that tradition will be hard to live up to, but I am confident that the present membership is equal to that task. I sincerely look forward to their positive efforts on behalf of CN's 47,000 pensioners and I urge the House to give its approval to the order of reference so that the committee can get down to work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to infringe upon the time allotted for the reply by my hon. friend from the Official Opposition. However, I would like to point out to the Minister that it seems to me that there is an omission in the order of reference. I would like to know what his view is regarding the matter of the committee's right to travel. If the Minister will recall, in 1970 we went to six cities because the pensioners could not afford to come to Ottawa. Will the committee have the right to travel? If not, will the committee have the right to provide funds for those witnesses who are pensioners to come to Ottawa?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in the case of providing funds for witnesses to come to Ottawa, I think that has always been a standard procedure. If the committee desires to cover the costs of witnesses whom it wants to bring to Ottawa, that is certainly within its power. I am not sure about the committee's mandate to travel. I had sensed that it was considered more appropriate, given the fact that there was going to be a considerable battery of expertise required, to conduct most of the hearings in Ottawa and to bring to Ottawa those witnesses whom the committee deemed necessary. If there are extenuating circumstances and travel arrangements may be required, I would in no way want to impair the ability of the committee to do its job simply by denying it the right to travel. I am sure that that is something that can be arranged.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, further to that, should the committee decide that there is a need to travel to one or more places, will the Minister and the Government be willing to bring in an amended or additional order of reference?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if that provision is not provided for in the terms of reference, I would certainly take it up with the House Leader if a representation were to be made to me.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to support a motion presented by the Government on behalf of my Party, the Liberal Party of Canada, a motion that will empower the Standing Committee on Transport to study the very important question of the Canadian National Railways' pension plan. It is a question that, as the Minister said earlier, affects some 45,000 CN pensioners, and as such, it is extremely important but also extremely complex and should be examined forthwith by the Members of this House, since it has already been the subject of discussions and in-depth studies for a number of years. These pensioners want action, and they want that action to be taken as soon as possible in this case.

I noticed that the Minister said the motion will empower committee members to retain the services of experts, professional technical staff, actuaries and other professionals to help them in their work. The Minister has therefore realized that this is a very complex matter. In fact, although I can give the House the assurance that the Members of the Official Opposition are prepared to give their full co-operation and support for this study, there are nevertheless two things that I regret. First of all, I think this Government has taken far too long since the opening of the new session to decide what it was going to do, before it finally referred this question to the Standing Committee on Transport. It is a decision I can accept, and I congratulate the Minister for having made the decision. However, I would have preferred the Committee to have been better prepared to do its work. The Minister mentioned earlier that he had to cancel a study by an expert who had been selected to examine the question by the previous, Liberal, Government. I maintain that if the study by this independent expert had been done, the Members of the Standing Committee who must examine this matter today would have been better prepared to do their work quickly, incisively and effectively.

I think it would be in order to recall a few historical facts. The Minister mentioned the name of Mr. Earl White, the National President of the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association. The House will recall that Mr. White appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport on June 7, 1984. I am going to quote a short passage from the statement made by Mr. White at that time. He said that they examined the pensions being paid by the CN pension fund and concluded that CN were using an inappropriate or unsound mathematical equation to calculate pensions. This had led to massive gains to the fund at the expense of pensioners.

Mr. White went on to say in his statement before the Standing Committee on Transport, and I quote:

• (1640)

[English]

CN chose to use an inappropriate equation and have continued to use it for 19 years of higher-than-normal inflation. As a result, it is estimated that about 20 per cent of the pension that pensioners should have received has stayed in the fund. Some pensioners will receive in 1984 only about half the pension they should receive. Others will receive about 17 per cent more than they should receive, but that is a short-term gain.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this was indeed a very serious charge which caused some commotion among members of the Standing Committee on Transport.

Following Mr. White's testimony, the President of Canadian National, Dr. Maurice LeClair, wrote a letter to the Minister of Transport at the time in which he made the following comments, which I also would like to quote very briefly. Mr. LeClair said the following, and I quote:

[English]

The most recent evidence of this concern is a submission presented to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport by the President of the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association, Mr. J. Earl White. The Association's brief was provided to the Committee members on 28 May, and Mr. White appeared as a witness before the Committee on 7 June.

We are prepared to appear before the Standing Committee to respond to the statements made in the brief and to answer any other questions concerning the Company's management of its pension plans.

However, it seems to me that the interests of all parties involved in this debate would be better served by some new initiative designed to remove the mistrust which appears to exist at the present time.

I am suggesting that you consider the appointment of an independent consultant or advisor to review CN's stewardship of its pension plans and pension trust fund and report to you on his/her findings. The examination should include an analysis of the matters contained in the submission presented to the Parliamentary Committee by Mr. White on behalf of the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association.

At the same time, we believe it would be useful to report on the adequacy of the ad hoc adjustments provided to our pensioners. It is our opinion that our actions in this regard should be assessed in comparison with other "commercial" Crown corporations and large private sector employers, especially those of our main competitor, and with appropriate recognition to the level of initial benefit provided by our pension plans and the ratio of pensioners to active members of our workforce.

[Translation]

Subsequently, after hearing these widely divergent points of view, the Minister of Transport appointed on August 21, 1984, Mr. Bryan Williams of Vancouver as special adviser responsible for examining the financing and administration of Canadian National's pension plan. This independent commissioner could obtain the views of both parties and be instrumental in neutralizing the atmosphere of suspicion that seemed to prevail on both sides, and he would be able to review the structure, policy and administration of CN pension plans as well as the pension fund itself. The commissioner was to include a detailed analysis of the claims presented by the Pensioners' Association before the Standing Committee on Transport on May 28, 1984. He was to have meetings with most of the parties concerned in this case, including CN authorities, the Pensioners' Association, the unions, government representatives and pensions experts. Everyone had approved and applauded this initiative by the Minister of Transport at the time. Everyone acknowledged the competence and impartiality of the expert in question, and I was glad to hear the Minister earlier this afternoon when he recognized the qualifications and impartiality of Mr. Williams, whose competence and ability to examine such issues are certainly not in doubt. In fact, Mr. Williams had already started on his study. He had several meetings with the President of Canadian National and his immediate staff. He also met with union representatives and already started to do some very important and very useful work. All of a sudden, however, he received a letter, a notice, a telex in fact, announcing that his services were no longer required by the new Minister of Transport.

I think this was a rather hasty decision on the part of the new Minister, because it will cause the Members who are to examine this question to lose more time. The fact that the Minister, in his motion, recommends retaining the services of consultants, actuaries and specialists to help Members in the work they will have to do in the weeks to come clearly indicates how important it would be to have this impartial, independent and objective study to give Members some clarification regarding the recommendations and the decisions they will have to make. I say that if Mr. Williams had been allowed to continue his work, we would now, on this very day, have a thorough study of the issues that would help us understand and analyze what we can and what we should decide on the Standing Committee on Transport. And we would not have to start from scratch as will now probably be the case, and hear testimony and get the advice and information of all parties concerned, consult the experts and finally make recommendations. All this work would have been done in recent months, and we would now, in Committee, have been able to proceed with an analysis of the expert's recommendations after examining any testimony he would have been able to collect, and in a few weeks we would have been able to proceed and give satisfaction to the parties concerned.

I believe that the task that awaits the Committee on Transport is a very difficult one that will take several weeks and that will require a great deal of attention and a great deal of study on the part of the members of this Committee. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Members who sit on the committee will be unremitting and unrelenting in their work on behalf of those pensioners, for it is obvious that we consider this to be a vital matter for thousands of CN pensioners who have been urging all along that something be done about it. I give them the assurance that we will give our undivided attention to this new mandate of the Standing Committee on Transport.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, we fully support the motion, but we believe that the work will take more time and be more difficult because Mr. Bryan Williams was not allowed to do the preliminary work required to find acceptable solutions to this problem. I hope we come up with the answers and find a satisfactory solution to this question of retired CN workers' pensions. The recommendations of the Standing Committee on Transport will also be useful to Canadian Pacific pensioners because, although the Canadian National is a Crown corporation and our duty is to look after Government employees or CN pensioners, I would suggest that our work will serve the interests of CP pensioners. That is the hope I express, Mr. Speaker, as I give you the assurance that the representatives of the Official Opposition will do their utmost to find a viable solution to this problem.

• (1650)

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the observations and intervention by the transport critic of the Official Opposition go by without at least a brief comment. The distinguished Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) should know better than to attempt to mislead this chamber and the pensioners. The Hon. Member for Papineau is fully aware that this matter was before the Standing Committee as early as 1982. The committee at that time was prepared to go ahead with it. The then Minister of Transport was not prepared to let us go ahead, and I can assume that was because of a government decision.

The second comment I would like to make is, the Hon. Member will be fully aware that it was in early November when the first draft of the terms of reference for this very matter with which we are dealing today was presented to the Official Opposition for its consideration. It was rejected at that time by the House Leader of the Official Opposition and by the transport critic.

My third brief comment has to do with the single commissioner named by the former Minister of Transport. When was he named and under what circumstances? It was in the heat of an election in response to pressures being brought to bear upon him, when, Mr. Speaker, in fact that Party had two and a half years to deal with it. It had been aware of the issue for four or five years. I have no specific questions to ask the Hon. Member, but I wanted the record very clear with respect to that matter. Don't start us out this way. We have a good committee. Perhaps if I have a question for the distinguished Hon. Member, it would be to ask whether or not his views could lead the committee to believe that he might grace the meetings once in a while with his presence.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: In connection with the comments the Parliamentary Secretary has just made, I should like to say very briefly that the representations made last November to the House Leader of the Official Opposition clearly referred to the vast number of subcommittees which the government wanted to establish to meet the aspirations and frustrations of its crushing majority of backbenchers which it wanted to keep busy. Neither the House Leader of the Official Opposition nor the House Leader of the New Democratic Party could accept the large number of subcommittees the government was recommending.

We received only recently its recommendation to refer the matter to a standing committee, not a special committee or a subcommittee, and we accepted it immediately.

Also, the Hon. Member has regards for no comments but his own. I have listened to him most attentively and I should appreciate it if he acted likewise.

Finally, he stated that Mr. Williams had been appointed during the election campaign. Let me tell him this: The impartiality and competence of the independent expert who was appointed at the time by the former Minister of Transport were recognized by all interested parties. Because the appointment of this highly qualified expert took place during the election campaign, the Parliamentary Secretary feels it is a political one.

So I understand why the new Minister of Transport has hurriedly cancelled that appointment which he considered a political one. I think it is regrettable, notwithstanding the fact that the appointment took place last August, during the election campaign. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that if he had not been fired by the new minister, Mr. Williams would probably have already completed his study, informed us of the results of his investigations and conversations with CN pensioners and officials, as well as with union representatives and Canadian pension plans administrators. But someone else will have to do that job all over again. I suggest, therefore, that the new Minister of Transports' ill-advised decision will only delay the work which, I think, we are all anxious to start.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) for a question or a comment.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is trying to tell us that no political appointments were made by his party before the last election. Are you aware that you lost loads of votes in Canada because of what you did? Have you not realized that yet? I would advise the Hon. Member for Papineau to come to the House once in a while and see what is going on and see how many people his party has in this House. This is the result of what you have done. You may have appointed people whom you should not have. You have to face the facts and I think that this is altogether obvious. What the Minister of Transport has done, I believe, he has done in good conscience and with integrity.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) had better keep silent and see to his own affairs instead of getting mixed up in something which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport. I can hardly wait to hear him talk about the fate of the Federal Business Development Bank the headquarters of which are located in Montreal, and which is also about to be phased out. That was another one of the major achievements of the previous Government which is being sabotaged by the Progressive Conservative Government.

I maintain that Mr. Williams' appointment was not of a political nature. This man is a commissioner with the Law Reform Commission; he is one of the senior officials of the Advocacy Public Interest Center in British Columbia, his actuarial abilities are well known and respected, and he was appointed to do a job. The Minister of Transport is doing his best to repeal all the appointments made by his predecessor throughout the years. Not only has he fired Mr. Williams, but he has also, in a manner quite unprecedented in Canada, massively hired all the directors of the Crown corporations under his jurisdiction. As far as partisanry is concerned, we definitely will not accept being lectured by the Hon. Minister who has just risen. He has only to look at the shameful patronage schemes being carried out by his colleague, the Minister of Transport, who has appointed friends of the Prime Minister to Air Canada's board of directors without doing anything to keep the board representative of the various groups in Canada. Friends of the Prime Minister and no one else have been appointed to Air Canada by the Minister of Transport, and unfortunately, I am afraid that Canadian National pensioners will have to wait several months before we, in the Standing Committee on Transport, can make recommendations to help solve their problems. They will have to wait several months because Mr. Williams was prevented from doing his work last summer, last fall and last winter by the Minister of Transport.

● (1700)

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that I find it most amusing listening to kettles calling pots black and pots calling kettles black when they are both black.

I want to congratulate the Minister for bringing in this order of reference. I know he and his colleagues were working on this back in November and they were good enough to show me a first and second draft. I do not know what happened in between times, but we have the order of reference in this motion and I want to say that Members of the committee, the chairman, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), and the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), as well as the Minister, have been most helpful and co-operative in this matter and I give them full marks and full credit for it because those three, myself and one or two others who are still Members of this House have been faced with this issue of railway pensions every darn year, several times a year since 1968 when I first came here. Frankly, we are all sick and tired of getting this thrown at us every year.

I want to tell you a little bit about the history of this matter starting in 1968. My friend from Vegreville will remember the way we finally got the matter of CNR pensions referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. We filibustered the old style CNR financing Bill for two sessions to the point where the CNR had run out of money and had to go to the private market because the Government could not give them any. Then and only then did we get the CNR pensions and the matter of the CNR debt referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the former Hon. Member for London East, now in the other place, was an active Member of that committee. The then chairman of the committee from the Government side, plus the Members I have already mentioned, as well as myself and the former Hon. Member for Moose Jaw, spent months digging into this issue. It was one of those rare occasions when a committee came up with a unanimous report and it was unanimously adopted by Parliament which, in essence, said that those CN pensioners should get a 2 per cent per year increase retroactive for 20 years.

In effect, this meant a 40 per cent increase. Now, for many of them it was no big deal. Three thousand of them were getting $25 a month or less so all we accomplished was to get them boosted up to $40. Well, it was better than nothing. A little over 10,000 of them were getting less than $100 a month, so we got another 40 bucks for them. But when Parliament had unanimously adopted the unanimous report of the committee, the CNR refused to do it. So we had to go back to filibustering the CNR financing Bill until finally the then Minister of Transport made the CNR do it by 1971 or 1972. Then the CPR had to follow suit.

If I have a criticism of this order of reference, it is that I think it should include Canadian Pacific as well as Canadian National because, in many respects, Sir, their pension plan is even worse. Their pensioners get an even worse deal than those of the CN. However, I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary and the chairman of the steering committee will agree that we are going to invite Canadian Pacific to appear voluntarily. If they refuse to do so, that is their problem, but maybe we can come back to the House and ask for the power to subpoena them. But if they choose not to appear voluntarily, I am hoping the committee will choose to invite CPR pensioner associations as well as the CNs, because many of them are in even worse shape.

There is something else about railway pension plans, and this also applies to a lot of other public and private pension plans. In the years when I was on the railroad I was always under the impression, which turned out to be a delusion, that the company deducted 6 per cent or 7 per cent a month from my pay cheque, contributed an equal amount and at the end of every month they took that money and sent it to the pension plan. Well, Mr. Speaker, when I first came to Ottawa as a new, green and stupid MP, and I am not green any more, the first time we had to deal with the CNRs annual report, it said the pension liability was about $1.5 billion. It said in the annual report what was in the CN pension fund. Well, I thought, if there is $1.5 billion in the damn thing, they should be able to double the pensions just on the earnings of the pension fund. Well, that was when I found out the difference between funded and unfunded liability. I am just an ordinary country innocent, a prairie boy, and did not know the difference, never heard of such a thing.

Mr. Mazankowski: I thought you were a railroader.

Mr. Benjamin: Same thing. I found out that what an unfunded liability of $1.5 billion means is that the money is not there. It is just a liability on paper. That is when I found out that my contributions and the company's contribution did not go into the pension fund every month. They did not put my money, any railroader's money, or even their own money into the pension fund until the employee retired.

Those contributions are part of the cost of labour for the railroads, for which they take full tax deductions. That money belongs to the employees and the pensioners and to no one else. All these decades both railroads have had unfunded liabilities. There were some steps taken by a previous Minister of Transport requiring that they bring these pension plans into a funded liability state. I think CN has until the year 2006 and CP has until the year 2025. In the meantime, they are using those employee contributions and the money they should be putting in for other purposes until they catch up with the funded liability. In other circles, that would be called theft or fraud, but I am not suggesting for one minute that the officers and management of the pension plan of CN and CP are crooks. Not at all. They are doing it according to the law, the way the law lets them do it, so they are no different than any other taxpayer in this country. But that means there is something wrong with the law and it is the job of the Standing Committee on Transport and the job of Parliament to change that once and for all so we do not have this every darned year for the next 25 years. I, of course, will not be here then, but maybe the Hon. Member for Vegreville will be, although he looks older than me. We should once and for all establish a fully funded regime for a pension plan of this, Corwn corporation which sets an example for all other public and private pension plans.

The Minister mentioned 47,000 CN pensioners. That is another reason I wish that the order of reference included Canadian Pacific, because that would include at least another 30,000 or 35,000. We must hear from them. There are no ifs, ands, or buts about it. Much has been said by the rail pensioners associations. Their major premise was that those on pensions do not get adequate increases from excess earnings which amount to tens of millions of dollars. There has been no orderly, regular increase in existing railway pensions. It has been done as and when the railway pension board got around to doing it. There was no systematic built-in increase, even for the cost of living.

Between the two railroads there is something close to $4 billion in liabilities for those two pension funds. That money belongs to all employees; union, non-union, and management. That money does not belong to the companies. That is why it is imperative that we get those pension plans on a fully funded basis. If the CNR or CPR want to borrow the money back from the pension fund for use for capital expenditures or cash flow, that is fine. Those pension funds invest in a host of things including government bonds and annuities. They get a return on those investments. The companies must be made to put the employees' share and their share into the fund in cash at the end of every month. There is nothing wrong with them borrowing it back from the fund, but a pension fund must be a fully funded liability. There must be one, two, or three railway pensioners on the Pension board. There must be adequate representation from the organizations representing present employees.

I would like to say that I appreciate the lifting of the deadline on the committee. With the amount of work which was on the plate of the Transport Committee there was no way in which we could have completed this work by the end of June. We now have no deadline. I am confident that the committee will report back no later than the day we adjourn for the Christmas break, and hopefully a month or two sooner than that. I would even be willing to spend a week in the summer travelling and hearing witnesses.

As something of a compromise between the other side of the House and the Official Opposition, perhaps we should ask Mr. Williams to appear as a witness. He has the expertise and I am sure he would be welcome. In that way we will get the benefit of his views and have the best of both worlds. The job was initially done by the Transport Committee in 1969 and 1970 and we can do it again.

In addition to any recommendations that we may make regarding increases and benefits for those already on pension, I hope that we will make unanimous recommendations requiring fully funded pension plans which will put an end to this continuous pressure on Members of Parliament from pensioners. If we can set that example in the railway field the other public and private pension plans will have to measure up. The pressure on them will become so horrendous that they will have to do better jobs in funding pension plans and in the treatment of pensioners.

I know railroaders who worked for 40 or 45 years and got $400 or $500 a month pensions when they retired 15 years ago. They had planned ahead to the day they would retire. That looked like a good deal. Those are the ones from whom we are getting letters now. What was a comfortable living 15 years ago is not adequate now. It costs that much to rent a half decent apartment. It costs twice that much to go into a privately run senior citizens home. Even adding veterans pension, old age pension, and Guaranteed Income Supplement together, it is not sufficient for a retired couple to keep their bills paid and have enough money left over to bury them. They need at least $2,000 or $2,400 a month just to be comfortable.

I welcome this move by the Government, Mr. Speaker. If the committee finds it needs an extension of the order of reference I hope the Government will be co-operative. I am confident that the Minister will fight for the needs of the committee. I would like to duplicate what we did in 1969 and 1970 in terms of hearing witnesses. I believe we went to Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton, and Vancouver. We then paid travel expenses for pension groups to come in from other places. Some of the railway pensioner associations dug into their own savings to cover the cost of printing and duplicating their submissions to the Transport Committee. Last year we were able to allot some money to them to cover those costs. The steering committee will have to decide which is the most economical, efficient and fair method. Most of the witnesses and their associations cannot afford the expenses.

I would again like to thank the Minister for finally getting this to us. We support the motion and look forward to a successful series of hearings, a unanimous report from the committee, and the unanimous agreement of the Parliament of Canada to enable us to do something about this, once and for all.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, first, I would acknowledge that as a general rule pension plans should be funded. However, funding them implies that there must be funding from some source. What does the Hon. Member believe should be the source of the funds? Would he specifically comment on whether he believes the railways should increase freight rates to cover them?

Mr. Benjamin: When one looks at the profit and loss statement of the railways for the last couple of years, one knows where it can come from. However, the contributions to a pension plan from the employees' wages and the company's equal contribution I believe are considered, under the tax law, as part of the cost of labour and fringe benefits for which the company may deduct from their corporate tax liability. That means that the money is there to be put into a pension fund. If it is not there, of course the railroads would have to raise their charges. What else is new? They have raised their freight rates about 40 times in the last 15 or 20 years and they sure did not raise the pension plans as often. Rather than raise the service, they reduced it and laid off their employees. But they are making more money.

When the Western Grain Transportation Act was passed in 1983, much to the disgrace of that Parliament, the best bet in the world was to buy 100 shares of CPR stock. It went up $4 in the first week, and has stayed up.

According to a collective agreement it is the obligation of the employer to match the contribution made by the employees. It is that money which must go into the fund at the end of every month.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows: Mr. Mazankowski, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study all matters related to the Canadian National Railways' pension system; That the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AERONAUTICS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, April 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski, that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are eight minutes remaining for questions and comments on the speech by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall). Are there any questions concerning the member's speech?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a question with respect to the matter of a tribunal. According to the Bill there is an appeal procedure by the tribunal which will be welcomed by all licensed holders in the aviation sector. Suspensions have been issued in the past by individuals who acted as both the investigator and the judge. If it is not already available in the Bill, is the Government willing to amend it so that under the new regime these people will be able to start again with a clean slate? Previously there was no provision for appeals, and while some suspensions were deserved, others were not. We would not want those with unfair suspensions to come into the new regime with what is the equivalent of a criminal record. Would it be possible to allow everyone to have their licence in good standing under the new regime so they can start off with a clean slate?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) puts forward a very interesting proposition. It is a matter being examined by the Department. Generally, it is a legal question about which I am at somewhat of a loss to answer, except hypothetically, perhaps. The Department is studying the legal implications of this question.

Hypothetically, should there be no way around the dilemma, it could be resolved by reinstating everyone and immediately cancelling the licences so they would have immediate access to the appeal procedures through the tribunal, either singularly or by a panel. I assure the Hon. Member that the matter is under active consideration.

Mr. Benjamin: In his opening remarks, the Minister referred to the matter of medical examinations. I appreciate that there are difficulties in the whole question of confidentiality of the doctor-patient relationship, however, the Canadian Medical Association is concerned about the Bill's potential threat to that traditional doctor-patient relationship, as well as its effect on the confidentiality of medical records. Doctors from the Canadian Owners and Pilots Association have also expressed the same concerns.

In the Armed Forces, pilots are compelled to have a full medical examination on a regular basis. Would it be possible to provide for similar examinations that would be carried out by a medical practitioner who is appointed and mutually agreed to by the pilots, the airlines, air traffic controllers, the ministry and others? There could be a panel of doctors in cities across the country, similar to the Department of Veterans Affairs medical examiners who report not only to the applicants but make a report to the Department. These are kept completely confidential. Would that not be a way to alleviate the concerns of the pilots' association, medical practitioners in the CMA and the doctors who examine pilots in COPA?

Mr. Forrestall: The fact is that there are appointed aviation medical practitioners in the field of optometry and medicine across Canada. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that standard procedure requires regular medical evaluations to be carried out to maintain certificates of a wide nature, particularly pilots' licences.

When an optometrist or medical practitioner who is not a designated transport examiner for these purposes believes a condition might be hazardous, the Bill requires him to advise the patient. The patient must advise the ministry within 72 hours. It is also the further responsibility of that doctor to ensure that that report was made by the person in question. The Ministry would then order that person to appear before a qualified medical practitioner who is authorized by the Department to conduct medical examinations.

The Hon. Member raised some concern about the Canadian Medical Association with respect to the privacy of the relationships between doctors and their patients. I might just say in that regard that the Ontario Medical Association in 1983 passed a resolution which in effect called for this type of procedure.

Mr. Mazankowski: It was supported by many other associations.

Mr. Forrestall: Recently there was publicity, press attention as a result of a coroner's inquiry following an accident. In fact, we have come to understand that lives were lost as a result of a heart attack occurring while in flight. There is no doubt at all about the necessity for this type of protection, or going to this extent with respect to safety in the air.

I should like to make a very brief final point which in a sense flows from that. Many provincial jurisdictions have similar or like requirements with respect to the safe operation of motor vehicles. There is a tendency on the part of society, on the one hand, to want to maintain the privilege which exists between doctors and patients and, at the same time, to recognize that we must move ahead in the interests of safety.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has terminated.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could commence my remarks by asking a couple of questions which the Minister might pick up when and if he closes the debate.

My first question deals with the cost of flying. I am thinking about the private area of general aviation. In the past the costs have been reasonable. Generally there is a misunderstanding about flying. I own a small aircraft. Its cost of acquisition was about the same as that of a car. Over the past few years operating costs of aircraft, whether for business activities or pleasure, have sky-rocketed. When I learned that I would have an opportunity to speak on this Bill I obtained some figures to illustrate this particular problem.

Ten years ago at a particular flying club the cost of solo flying was $18 per hour and the cost of dual flying was $24 per hour. That happened to be at that time a non-approved school, and it required 45 hours to obtain a private pilot's licence. For a reasonable amount of money an individual could become licensed.

Today that same flying club is not doing well charging $45 per hour solo and $65 per hour dual. It is certainly not a commercial operation in the sense of trying to earn revenue. It is simply trying to provide a service to club members in pilot training and licensing. With that charge of $65 per hour it is just making it, and no more.

I would like to ask the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary, whoever will be wrapping this up, would it be possible for the Department of Transport within its aviation group to put together a group to look at ways of cutting costs to people involved in private aviation? Over the years—and I know that both government Members who spoke on this will agree—government-administered fuel cost increases have been enormous. The price of aviation fuel has sky-rocketed, largely as a result of government administered tax increases.

There is also the problem of private concessions at airports. At most airports in the country there is no competition whatsoever, and the cheapest grade of gas starts at 60 cents per litre and works up from there. In more remote communities or less populated areas there is more difficulty obtaining gas, certainly at reasonable prices. However, the combined effect of those fuel increases, coupled with import duties and normal inflated cost increases, has been devasting upon many small flying operations. As well, direct component costs have been a problem.

Another area of concern has been the administrative costs of the Government through the philosophy of user-pay. I use the example of airport parking fees which have risen dramatically. An average fee in many places would be $40 per month for parking small aircraft. There has been a determination by the Department of Transport that it wants to become involved in cost recovery. It is also involved in charging landing fees in many areas. There has been talk of charging for a variety of different services. Eventually people will be driven right off airports and instead of being able to obtain some revenue there will be no revenue at all.

The way in which this selectively affects the population is interesting. If one's income level is fairly average, one will simply be unable to fly. The only people who will have the benefit of those services at government airports will be those with substantial incomes who can afford any price, either for recreation or for business. The only other way one could own and operate an aircraft is if one is able to write it off against some other income and gain a tax benefit.

By continuing to press the user-fee idea, only a very select group of people will be entitled to use those services. Those services are paid for by all Canadians. Airport facilities, air traffic systems and support services are used by all people. Eventually I suspect only a small number of select individuals will be able to use them. Even though the cost recovery will be neglible, many people will be driven off the airports. For example, all private aircraft actually moved off an airport in my riding, administered by the federal Department of Transport, because of the difficulties in meeting increased parking fees.

There are serious problems as a result of the ordinary costs associated with flying. Also there are problems in that the Government of Canada is looking at more and more ways of becoming involved in cost recovery. It is my hope that the Minister will request his departmental officials to find a way of reducing those costs, or to find out whether it is really necessary for things such as radio licence fees suddenly to jump to $40 annually. The administrative renewal of a licence fee certainly would not cost that. The Minister should become involved in setting up a group of people within his Department charged with the responsibility of finding ways of cutting costs to general aviation so that people could remain in it, and possibly look into expanding small businesses, with some beneficial effect on local economies.

I have another area of serious concern in terms of cost problems associated with private aviation. I am referring to the administrative burden which the Government of Canada places upon pilots. Anyone involved in the business is seriously concerned about safety. An individual who goes out on his own takes a chance. It is a serious problem if he does not operate by the rules. It is even more serious when he takes up a load of people. He jeopardizes their lives. Often people load their families and their close friends and take them out. They take responsibility for the well-being and lives of those individuals. There must be some serious conditions met with regard to safety. That was the purpose of the Dubin commission.

Somewhere things seem to have gone amok. The private aviation area has found itself burdened with administrative problems that do not relate to the key questions with which Dubin was dealing. People now seem to be imposing conditions that are not related to safety or accidents. Those conditions are activities on the ground level. It is difficult to tell where they come from.

I will use an example of an RCMP officer responding to what he feels is the needs of Dubin. He is at the airport, someone has just landed, the person is checked. He may not have his pilot's licence, or the logbook entries may not be up to scratch. The logbook may not be there. That person may end up with a $100 fine. Normally that person would have to go to the local RCMP detachment within 24 hours to show that he is properly licensed. If that were a motor vehicle, that would certainly be the case. That is not what Dubin was getting at. This does indicate law enforcement statistic. However, when you look behind the statistics, those are not the things which he was looking at, and they do little for private aviation.

The second matter is flight training. I talked to a CFI the other day who had recommended two people for flight tests. Both failed. He has been teaching people to fly for 25 years. He is a good instructor, a former Designated Flight Test Examiner, and one of the most conscientious people that I have known in the business. I have had instruction from him.

This person said there is a real problem. The MOT has come into the area. They are doing the flight testing according to their standards. He told me that one of the people who went up was a good pilot. He said he may have been spooked with someone else in the airplane, made two serious mistakes and had to go back to the barn. Unfortunately, that goes on his instructor's licence. My understanding is that a licence can be downgraded with enough failures. It reflects directly on the instructor.

With regard to that particular flying club, I only recall two accidents in the more than 10 years I have been around that area. Both of those accidents involved former members of that club. The club had had one accident years and years ago in which two individuals were killed. A qualified flight instructor made an error and the two were killed. Those are the only two examples. Years after they left the club, two commercial pilots died in accidents related to the commercial field. To my knowledge, those are the only accidents that ever happened involving in any way that flying club and I have been closely associated with that club for years. I have also been associated with five other flying clubs.

It appears that the Department of Transport is loading on administrative problems, and there will be an increase. I understand they are looking at an additional five hours of instrument time. At $65 an hour, that will cost $325, depending on the kind of standards they insist on. If an instructor takes up a student whom he knows is competent to fly, but knows that the flight examiners are going to be checking his students and checking him and there may be problems, he will give another five hours in order to protect his licence. He will do that to make sure the student knows it inside and outside. That will add on another $325. That is only one example of additional costs that will occur. If a flying school had only one accident which had nothing to do with the Dubin problem or anything else, a very unique situation, should you continue to impose administrative requirements?

The Bill before us today is very general. It allows the Department to propose regulations to the Governor in Council in a broad range of areas. Ultimately those will go through. I guess the large groups like COPA, CALPA and some others will examine it. CALPA is not really concerned with trying to keep down the costs for private aviation. COPA should be more articulate in trying to work with the Minister. Possibly the Minister can give us some idea how to get those costs down.

I know there are others who want to speak, so I will leave it at that. Can the Minister indicate what is being done, if anything, to try and bring down the costs for private aviation, to see that they level off at some point? Can he indicate ways to try and bring the costs down?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Hovdebo: I was going to speak, Mr. Speaker, but I will defer to the Minister and speak at report stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. Members realize that if the Minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Hovdebo: We can direct questions to the Minister after he speaks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to all Members of the House how much I appreciate their comments, goodwill, support and co-operation in moving this piece of legislation ahead. I will respond to as many points that have been raised as I can, recognizing that there is a disposition to have this Bill move to committee prior to the adjournment today.

I particularly appreciate the comments, support and the spirit of co-operation that was prevalent in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). He raised a couple of issues that I would like to talk about. He questioned the issue of the Gimli report. That has to do with the inquiry into the Air Canada Boeing 767 which was forced to land in Gimli because it ran out of fuel. That report has been referred to me. It is being translated at the present time. Under the normal course of events, it will probably be made public.

Respecting the specific question that the Member raised, which had to do with whether there was provision within this legislation to incorporate any recommendations that may flow from that report, the departmental officials have generally looked at that. It appears, based upon the terms of reference that were enshrined in the inquiry, there is sufficient latitude within this piece of legislation to incorporate any recommendations that may flow therefrom.

He also mentioned the technical briefing which we had talked about unofficially. I would leave that to the discretion of the committee. I can say to all Hon. Members, if it is the wish of the committee to have an informal technical briefing by Transport Department officials on the over-all aspects of the Bill, that could be arranged either informally or through the aegis of the committee structure through which everything would be on the record.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) raised a number of points. I want to preface my remarks with respect to his intervention by saying that I appreciate the spirit of goodwill and co-operation that was evident in his remarks. He got off on a bit of a tangent talking about the views he holds with respect to economic regulation. We all know where he stands on that issue. I am sure there will be another appropriate time when we can get into that debate more fully.

• (1750)

I would like to reiterate that the major thrust of this Bill is an attempt to provide for a safe and secure environment for civil aviation in Canada. I think any regulation or legislation that is inherent in this Bill has one common goal and objective, and that is to enhance the environment for civil aviation from a safety and security point of view.

The Hon. Member spoke to a great extent about regulations. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) also alluded to regulations. If I interpreted the Hon. Member correctly, he wanted some assurance that the regulations that would have to accompany this Bill—

Mr. Benjamin: Draft regulations.

Mr. Mazankowski: —draft regulations could be made available to the committee. I cannot give an outright assurance on that, but I can say that in principle, I certainly have no objection to that.

I realize that the legislation provides rather broad enabling powers for the proclamation of regulations. Of course, the principle is enshrined in the legislation. The regulations are really the guts of the Bill. They are what makes it work. To the extent that I can, I will certainly co-operate with the committee, to the extent that regulations are drafted. Of course, I must say that in the context of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) I am sure he would not want me to present a fait accompli to the House. I cannot draft regulations on the basis of this Bill because that would be presuming there will be no amendments or changes to the Bill. Given the wisdom, good advice and counsel of the members of the committee, I think there may very well be some very valid amendments that may have to be considered. To the extent that we possibly can, we will try to co-operate with the Hon. Member and with other Hon. Members as well.

I really appreciate the tone of today's debate. Safety and security, whether it is in the air, on the sea or on the roads, is not a partisan issue. I do not think anyone in the House has a monopoly on good intentions to promote a safe environment for the transportation of people or goods in this country. I will provide all the information I can to make the work of the committee easier.

The Hon. Member took issue with the establishment of the tribunal. We took the position that this legislation, as with other legislation that emanated from the recommendations of the Dubin Inquiry, should be treated as a package. A clear and very integral recommendation was advanced by Justice Dubin. We thought that if we did not follow that particular recommendation, we would certainly be deviating from the basic thrust of his recommendations. We are looking at this legislation in terms of a total package.

The establishment of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board was another vital element of the recommendations that were advanced by Justice Dubin. If we were to take away those two very important elements of his recommendations, we would in essence be gutting the bulk of his recommendations.

I am not sure about this, but I think the Hon. Member suggested that the CTC might be a better body to act as a tribunal. I think there is the possibility of a perceived conflict of interest there, because to some extent the CTC does engage in regulation of aviation. Perhaps it does not deal with safety per se, but it does deal with forms of the regulatory environment of civil aviation in this country. I think we are really trying to set up an independent tribunal to ensure that the adjudication of safety is done in such a way that there is no real or perceived conflict of interest in terms of its handling.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) wanted to know whether the legislation would provide for an independent review process with respect to the establishment of aerodromes. He specifically mentioned social and economic considerations. Fortunately, or unfortunately, this Bill does not provide for that. It basically provides for legislative and regulation authority with regard to all elements affecting safety in aviation and the safety of the public. To that extent, the legislation provides for some power over the location of airports and aerodromes.

A very interesting point was injected into the debate by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River. I sympathize with his comments regarding the high cost of aviation, particularly private or general aviation. I certainly have recognized the acceleration of cost involved in owning and operating an aircraft and in acquiring the expertise necessary to fly an aircraft and become licenced as a pilot. The Hon. Member would be the first one to tell the House that, from his point of view, private aviation is not a luxury. In many areas it is a necessity. In the area in which he lives, and in areas in the North, it is in many respects the only mode of transportation.

The Hon. Member asked that we consider ways and means of cutting costs and ensuring that the burden on the private pilot and general aviator is reduced. To some extent—and the Hon. Member may find it difficult to follow this logic—that is really what we are doing in this Bill. We are tightening up the procedures for collection. At any one given time, approximately $10 million is owing in overdue fees. Collections are not being made for services provided to people who use the airport system because there is no provision for the application of interest and, it is very difficult to collect. Of course, this Bill will tighten up that procedure. I think we would all support the idea that everyone should pay his or her own fair share. By providing a more effective collecting regime we may very well be able to reduce the burden on those who do pay.

We have to strike a balance. One of the ways of cutting costs is by cutting services. The Hon. Member has more knowledge about private or general aviation than perhaps anyone else here. I hope he will come before the committee as often as he can. I know he is occupied in other areas, but I hope he will be able to come forth to give us the benefit of his own personal experience in these matters. I am certainly sympathetic to the private pilot, the private aircraft owner and the general aviator. I can assure the Hon. Member that we will do whatever we can to ease their burden.

The Hon. Member also spoke of the excessive growing administrative burden imposed upon air travel in this country. I think the Hon. Member knows me well enough to know that I by nature am not one who willy-nilly promotes more regulation and more legislation. In fact, it is quite the contrary. I think he recognizes that there has to be a balance; a certain element of judgment and a certain amount of common sense has to be exercised. We are really trying to put in place a mechanism or legislative framework that will provide for that kind of discretion, common sense and practical application of good rules of airmanship. We have to be fair, we have to be firm, and from the federal point of view, we have a responsibility. I recognize that we should not encourage harassment, but we should encourage the kinds of balanced judgment, fair play, common sense and practicality that are required. With that in mind, perhaps we could put the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Mazankowski, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-39, an Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987 be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to bring before the House today Bill C-39, a Bill which relates to fiscal equalization, one of the country's most important programs. The unconditional payments which equalization provides to provinces which are relatively less well off than others make it possible for them to provide their residents with public services on a level that is reasonably comparable with other provinces. In this way, the equalization program provides an assurance to all Canadians, irrespective of where they live, that they may expect to enjoy a reasonable level of public services from their provincial and local Governments. It therefore meets an important objective of our nation and one that is recognized in the Constitution.

The expenditures which the federal Government makes under this program are large and have grown steadily over the years. Beginning at less than $140 million in 1957-58 when the program was introduced, they now total more than $5 billion annually in payments to six provinces. The growth in the program reflects the rising cost of financing public services in Canada generally as well as the persistence of disparities in the abilities of provinces to finance these services through taxation.

This Bill resolves a particular situation which has arisen in the equalization program, one with which this Government was confronted when it took office. It concerns the decline in equalization payments which some provinces are experiencing in 1985-86 and the strong interest which they and other provinces receiving equalization have expressed in obtaining additional federal Government assistance.

The Government's overriding concern in approaching this question was to ensure that its response would be guided by the fundamental principle of fairness. It is the principle of fairness which this Government believes must underlie its relations with the provinces and which provinces expect of us. It was with a desire to be fair that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) discussed this question extensively with his provincial colleagues over the past several months and listened to representations from interested Canadians in an effort to come to a reasonable solution.

Before addressing the contents of the Bill, it may be useful to elaborate briefly on the circumstances which give rise to this projected decline in payments. In particular it should be understood that in none of the four cases do these declines in payments occur as a result of an expenditure cut or any other action taken by this Government. Rather, they are a reflection of the payments generated by the current equalization program which was enacted in 1982.

There is a particular reason for these declines in payments. This involves the expiry in 1985-86 of the special three-year transitional guarantee provision which was added to the equalization program in 1982. This provision authorized additional payments to provinces over and above their basic equalization entitlements in order to help smooth the shift from one formula to another and give provinces a period in which to adjust to the new system.

As it happened, events differed from what was anticipated in 1982. Basic equalization payments fell considerably below original expectations at the beginning of that year. This was largely as a consequence of the severe economic recession, the effects of which began to be felt soon after the new formula was adopted. At the same time, the transitional guarantee levels remained high because they were based on the growth of equalization payments in the pre-1982 period. As a result, a large gap developed between basic equalization payments which were lowered by the effect of the recession and the guaranteed transition levels which were not. The consequence was heavy reliance on the transition provision by the provinces receiving equalization. These transitional payments have totalled $2 billion over the past three years.

Those provinces faced with declines in payments made representations asking if something could be done to provide continuing additional assistance. The Provinces of New Brunswick and Newfoundland, like the other provinces, have also been concerned about their fiscal situations. These requests for assistance could not have come at a more difficult time for this Government. Having inherited the problem of a very massive deficit which is expected to total more than $34 billion for the year just ended, the federal Government is faced with serious fiscal difficulties of its own. This enormously constrains what it is able to do.

The fact of the matter is that all Governments in Canada, both provincial and federal, are under severe financial pressure. In these circumstances the federal Government had to take very difficult decisions. First, should it do anything at all to provide support to the provinces whose equalization entitlements would decline significantly in 1985-86? Second, if anything could be done, should it be restricted to these provinces, or should something also be done for New Brunswick and Newfoundland, whose capacity to raise revenues is, generally speaking, not as strong as that of other provinces?

Bill C-39 sets out the Government's response to these questions. It reflects the decision to provide additional payments, to be called "supplementary equalization payments", and a decision that these payments should be made to all six provinces qualifying for equalization. These payments are fixed, lump sum amounts which are set out in the Bill and total $285 million.

The amounts of these payments in 1985-86 are as follows: Manitoba, $50 million; Quebec, $110 million; Nova Scotia, $20 million; Prince Edward Island, $5 million; New Brunswick, $20 million; and Newfoundland, $15 million. In the case of Manitoba, a further $65 million will be paid the following year because current estimates show a further decline in payments in 1986-87.

The amounts of these payments were derived in two ways—one for those provinces confronted with significant declines in equalization payments in 1985-86, and the other for the remaining provinces which received equalization. The first group consists of Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia. In each case the payment to these provinces is based upon current estimates of the amount of additional equalization that each province would receive if its basic equalization entitlements over the next two years were protected by a "95 per cent floor". This provision already exists in the equalization formula for other provinces.

Let me be more specific. The equalization program now protects provinces against declines in payments from one year to the next in a way which varies with their capacity to raise revenues. The highest protection, the 95 per cent floor, is given to those provinces which are not as strong fiscally as others and ensures their payments will decline by no more than 5 per cent from one year to the next.

What the Government is doing in this Bill is giving Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia the benefit of this 95 per cent floor for the purpose of making a lump sum payment which will assist them in the remaining two years of the current program. This payment is also based upon the latest estimates of each province's equalization entitlements.

The second group of provinces consists of Prince Edward Island, which is confronted with a small reduction in 1985-86, New Brunswick and Newfoundland. These provinces have the lowest capacity to raise revenues from taxation. The Government could not exclude them from additional payments being made to provinces which are in relatively stronger fiscal positions.

Accordingly, the provinces in the second group will also receive lump sum supplementary equalization payments. Specifically, each will receive an amount which, in per capita terms, will equal the average per capita payments to Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia. On this basis, Prince Edward Island will receive an additional $5 million; Newfoundland, $15 million; and New Brunswick, $20 million, all in 1985-86.

I have often had to explain the method used in calculating these payments, because people wonder why one amount is paid to one province and an entirely different amount to another province. The explanation is simple. The difference is due to the fact that the per capita value of the decline in payments varies according to province. It follows that the per capita value of supplementary equalization payments would be different in each province. For instance, Manitoba will suffer a much greater per capita decline than Quebec or Nova Scotia. For the same reasons, the per capita value of each payment will also differ from province to province.

In any case, payments to provinces that have suffered a considerable decline in their payments have all been fixed on the same basis. Payments to the other provinces were of course determined on a different basis, but that basis is identical for all three. Thus, the Government has done everything in its power to guarantee that supplementary equalization payments will be fair and equitable for the six provinces concerned.

[English]

The Government is also acting to ensure that the payments are made to provinces as quickly as possible. The Bill, therefore, provides that payments in 1985-86 will be made within 30 days of its passage. The additional payment to Manitoba will be made in the first month of the 1986-87 fiscal year.

These payments are substantial and should be of considerable assistance to these provinces. They are in addition to some $5.1 billion which the Government expects to make in regular equalization payments this year. Adding the supplementary payments together with estimated regular equalization entitlements, total payments in 1985-86 are expected to be as follows: Manitoba, $458 million; Quebec — which accounts for well over 50 per cent of all equalization payments — $2,920 million; Nova Scotia, $588 million; New Brunswick, $572 million; Newfoundland, $616 million and Prince Edward Island, $130 million. The new supplementary equalization payments will bring total federal expenditures on equalization in 1985-86 to approximately $5.3 billion. This is in addition to the very large amount which the federal Government also provides in transfers to provinces for such purposes as health care and post-secondary education.

Total cash transfers to provinces are expected to exceed $20 billion in 1985-86, accounting for close to 20 per cent or one-fifth of all federal expenditures. With the inclusion of the value of federal income tax transfers to the provinces, the total reaches more than $27 billion.

Legislation is required to authorize the supplementary equalization payments because there is no existing basis upon which such additional payments can be made, nor is there any provision for these payments in the Main Estimates for 1985-86 or in the Government's present fiscal framework for 1986-87. The Government is not, through this legislation, attempting to address all of the questions which provinces and others may have about the equalization program. That is the function of the review of the program which takes place every five years and which will be getting underway shortly with a view to meeting the scheduled expiry of the current program in March, 1987.

The purpose of this Bill is to make fixed payments to Canada's less wealthy provinces to help carry them through the two remaining years of the arrangements. As I have said, these are payments which the Government did not have to make and which it is providing to provinces despite its own very serious financial position. While the amounts may not in all cases be as much as provinces had hoped to receive, they are the most that the Government is able to afford in light of its own serious financial situation. They have been calculated on a basis which is fair and reasonable.

In short, the decision has been taken in the spirit of co-operation and mutual understanding that this Government is endeavouring to develop with the provinces so that we may together build a stronger nation from coast to coast.

I earnestly encourage all Hon. Members to support this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to respond in a positive way to the Minister's invitation with respect to Bill C-39, but unfortunately, I cannot support this Bill, and, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it quite clear at the beginning of my speech that the Official Opposition intends to oppose the passage of Bill C-39 because it believes that the Bill is, above all, inequitable for Quebec, unfair to Manitoba and inadequate for the Province of Nova Scotia.

During the few minutes I am allowed, I intend to explain why we are judging this Bill so severely and also to draw the attention of the public to the fact that in allocating the limited resources available to this Government, the Progressive Conservative Government has preferred to support the cash flow of the oil multinationals instead of supporting that of the provincial Treasuries.

I assume the Bill before the House today, like any other Bill, can be examined in a number of ways. In this particular case, and we have already had an example in the speech just made by the Minister, some Hon. Members will say that the shortfall experienced by several provinces as the equalization formula is applied in 1985-86 and 1986-87 is the result of mistakes made by the previous Government, and that Bill C-39 is an act of great generosity for which the Government deserves to be congratulated. That was exactly the tenor of the Minister's speech, which means I guessed right when I was preparing my notes, and it is probably the line of reasoning that will be followed by other speakers on the Government side.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition maintain and will continue to maintain that in a democracy, the Parties that form the Government change from time to time, depending on the wishes of the electorate. However, the responsibility of those in power cannot be brushed aside by mere rhetoric, because a government, especially when it has a substantial majority, has the power to make changes. The best example of my premise that a government that wants to make changes can make them is the decision of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) who, supported herein by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), changed the taxes on the multinational oil companies so that in the years to come, these multinationals will be receiving from the federal Treasury a present worth $2.4 billion. Mr. Speaker, that was a very substantial change: giving $2.4 billion to the oil multinationals was not a decision made by a backbencher but by Ministers, and I would say by the Prime Minister himself. Mr. Speaker, it proves that when a government wants to make changes it can do so, even if it costs $2.4 billion. When the Government gave those $2.4 billion to the oil multinationals, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not protest that the public purse could not afford these presents to the multinationals. However, when the Minister of Finance announced on April 1 of this year that Bill C-39 would be tabled in the House, he said the supplementary payments could not be any higher and were the maximum this Government could spend, given the serious state of the Government's finances.

Mr. Speaker, some problems in this country are given more equal treatment than others. I find it hard to believe that the Federal Government has $2.4 billion to spare to refresh the cash flow of the oil multinationals and can find only $220 million to achieve a better balance of this country's wealth, the negligible amount it is giving to the provinces.

Before pursuing my detailed analysis of this Bill and its impact, I would like to say a few words about the line of reasoning followed by the Progressive Conservatives and the Minister of Finance himself, namely that the problems in applying the equalization formula in 1985-86 are to be blamed solely and entirely on the previous administration.

I shall, if I may, provide some historical context and we shall see whether, aside from the partisan rhetoric being dished up by the Government, there are other, more serious reasons, and to do so, we must go back a few years.

• (1125)

I am not suggesting that all decisions made by a Liberal Government are good and that all decisions made by a Progressive Conservative Government are bad, but I think that now and then, when one wants to raise a serious argument, there has to be some give and take.

In 1980-81, the Government advocated a new equalization formula after analyzing the fiscal arrangements for 1982-87. Under the new formula, equalization would apply to 33 instead of 29 revenue sources as had been the case until then. In addition, and this is significant, equalization would be based on the full value of provincial oil and gas revenue rather than on only 50 per cent as was done before. This broadening of revenue sources used to set the amount of equalization payments to the provinces would inevitably result in much higher equalization payments, quite obviously. Some people went so far as to claim that, in certain cases, one of Canada's richest provinces—Ontario—might eventually receive equalization payments under the new formula.

Since the new formula and the wider equalization basis would result in what appeared to be an overly sharp increase, a change was made in the way equalization applied to the various provinces—there were to be 33 instead of 29 revenue sources—and it was decided that equalization would be based on the average of the same per capita revenue sources of five provinces, namely Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, rather than on the national average. That is probably the major change in the equalization formula.

Since it is difficult to predict five or six years in advance the impact of such radical changes, the new legislation provided for a three-year special payment transition period to help the provinces adjust to the new formula and, more particularly, to have sufficient time to assess its consequences with respect to equalization payments. It was with that consideration in mind that the Government and the Minister of Finance introduced transitional payments which featured two elements, and I will have more to say about it later. As I just said, these transitional payments, which include two elements, were made in fiscal years 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 to the provinces of Quebec, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. According to the information I have, only the Province of Newfoundland got more money under the new formula than it did under the old one, without even having to ask for interim payments.

Mr. Speaker, I might add that, at the close of that three-year experiment, regardless of the political Party in office in early 1985, it was bound to tackle the issue in an attempt to offset, if necessary, any untoward consequence of having done away with the transitional payment formula. That is exactly what happened, and negotiations began last summer, as the three-year agreement was coming to an end, to see how corrections could be made.

In all honesty, Mr. Speaker, can anyone blame a Government for acting objectively and playing it safe? Who can blame a Minister of Finance who wants to know where he is going before giving eternal guarantees? Besides, the formula adopted in 1981-82 did not set a deadline and, now that the Constitution has been amended, the equalization formula would remain in force even though fiscal arrangements might be scheduled every five years. That is why transitional payments had been limited to three years, subject to review should adjustments be required.

Therefore, transitional equalization payments were limited just so the impact of the new formula could be measured. Anyone familiar with the complexity of equalization payment computations readily appreciates why the transitional payment formula had to be given a limited lifetime so that stock could be taken.

Having been directly involved, I recall that the federal Government had decided to revamp the whole tax structure in the early 70s—the famous tax reform of the early 70s. The Government had suggested a tax reform and some of the provinces were worried, especially those that have collection agreements and must use the same tax basis.

In view of the difficulty of forecasting the actual results of such a basic change, the Federal Government had at that time guaranteed the provinces that they would be compensated for any loss if the new taxation system were to produce effects totally different from those under the former system. After five years, the complexity of the calculations was such that it was difficult to carry out the necessary assessments, especially because of the changes made by certain provinces and other changes introduced on a yearly basis to the taxation system by the federal authorities. It had therefore become very difficult to continue to apply this guarantee provision. However, the same formula had already been applied under identical or similar circumstances.

With respect to equalization, as I have already said, the Federal Government wanted to move cautiously and this led people to believe that the transitional payments would have to be cut short lest the new formula or changes in the economic situation should have much more far-reaching results than expected. I do not see why the former Government should be blamed for having wanted to move cautiously so it would not now have to face up to its own responsibilities.

Experience has shown that at least three provinces were penalized by the new formula, but only beginning with the year 1985-86, and that these provinces would lose substantial amounts if provisional payments were discontinued on their behalf. Those provinces are Quebec, Manitoba and Nova Scotia. Mr. Speaker, I said at the beginning of my speech that we of the Official Opposition would oppose this Bill because it is unjust to Quebec, unfair to Manitoba and inadequate in the case of Nova Scotia.

If I may, I will try to use the figures I have here to show, first, why Bill C-39 is inadequate in the case of Nova Scotia. In 1984-85, the Province of Nova Scotia received $600 million in equalization payments, and this included a payment of $72 million under the provisional formula. As everyone knows, their transitional payments consist of two amounts. First, there is the provisional guarantee which assures an increase in minimum equalization payments compared with 1981-82. For instance, while I do not have the figures for Nova Scotia, under this part of the transitional payments for Quebec, the increase amounted to 11.7 per cent in 1982-83, 7 per cent in 1983-84, and 3.3 per cent in 1984-85. The other portion of these transitional payments is related to the basic formula, plus the guarantee I have just mentioned, and if there is a shortfall between this amount and the amount produced by the old formula, this shortfall is made up, and the two portions added together make up the transitional payments.

For Nova Scotia, Bill C-39 simply makes up the shortfall for 1985-86 and leaves the Province at the mercy of a decision by the Federal Government for the year 1986-87. Nova Scotia will have to come back on its knees to ask the Minister of Finance for what should be coming to it in 1986-87.

I would like to recall at this point, Mr. Speaker, that equalization payments are unconditional transfers to the provinces and that they must be made according to an equitable formula which does not put the provinces at the mercy of any arbitrary decision of the Canadian Government. If Bill C-39 remains in its present form, I maintain that it will not meet the very criteria of equalization and that it will be seen as a totally inadequate settlement for Nova Scotia.

If Bill C-39 is inadequate where Nova Scotia is concerned, the matter is even more complicated for Manitoba and the Bill is unfair to that province. Following the implementation of the new formula, the Province of Manitoba has received in 1982-83, $439 million, including $169 million in transitional payments, still consisting of the two portions I have already mentioned. In 1983-84, it received $466 million, including $163 million in transitional payments. In 1984-85, Manitoba received $479 million, including $138 million in transitional payments. With these transitional payments coming to an end, the equalization payments for Manitoba will go down from $479 million to $407 million, with a loss of $72 million. Even if we take into account another payment, this one provided for under Section 4(6) of the Fiscal Arrangements Act passed in 1982 which specifies that, for a province with a provincial per capita income in excess of 75 per cent of the national income, equalization entitlement cannot decrease by more than 15 per cent from one year to the next, as I say, even when this payment is taken into account, the loss for Manitoba is still more considerable. This loss figured at $72 million in 1985-86 would have been still more significant in 1986-87 since the payments specified for the last of the fiscal arrangements were supposed to be only $377 million, or $102 million short of the amount received in 1984-85.

The proposal contained in Bill C-39 shows how unfair this is to Manitoba, and the payments which will be made to the Province under Bill C-39 will be far from sufficient to make up the difference. Bill C-39 is simply a band aid measure and it should be amended to correct the injustice which will befall Manitoba. I think that in the case of Manitoba, the situation is even more obvious than that in Nova Scotia, since the figures and projections available for 1986-87 already show that it will be penalized, whereas in Nova Scotia payments could be inadequate, depending on the results of the economic development in that province.

Mr. Speaker, if Bill C-39 is inadequate for Nova Scotia and unfair for Manitoba, the withdrawal of temporary payments becomes an injustice as far as Quebec is concerned, an inequity which should be strongly exposed. All those who have followed the discussions over the years remember that Quebec has always disagreed about the equalization formula and especially about the withdrawal of temporary payments formula effective in the present financial year. As early as the first months of 1981, the pro forma statistics and projections provided by the Department of Finance in Quebec indicated what was going to occur in 1985-86 and 1986-87. The government of Canada stated that the temporary payments provided an adequate guarantee to Quebec, which was the case since those payments covered the losses and were even increased from one year to another. The government of Canada maintained that the temporary payments provided Quebec with an adequate guarantee to try honestly the new formula and, under the circumstances, for each of the years 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85, the temporary payments varied for Quebec between $350 and $400 million. The figures are clear and the evidence is sufficiently specific. It indicates that the fears of Quebec were well-grounded and this is why Bill C-39 should permanently correct the distortion or at least extend until new negotiations begin in 1987 the enforcement of the clause dealing with the temporary payments due in 1984-85.

I will come back to the matter later because I would like to indicate to the minister right now that if subsection (4) covering the guarantee of temporary payments for 1984-85 is enforced and the percentage remains at one third, the equalization payments made to Quebec in 1985-86 and 1986-87 will only be increased by 3 per cent, which is below the present inflation rate. And it could not be said that those are extravagant payments.

Mr. Speaker, in 1983-84, the temporary payments, as I said, amounted to some $400 million, $399 million on a total of $2,976.6 million. The following year, in 1984-85, the temporary payments amounted to $392 million on a total equalization sum of $3 billion.

When I say that Bill C-39 is unfair for Quebec, you will understand, I hope, why I say so. Indeed, in 1985-86, according to the statistics disclosed by the Minister of Finance on April 2 last, and I know how qualified are the officials computing those figures and I do not doubt that if there are some mistakes of a few hundred dollars, the general tendency and the basic issue are surely correct.

Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments

In 1984 and 1985, that province has received $3,074 million in equalization payments, and in 1985-1986, that amount will drop to $2,784 million, a loss of $290 million. In 1986-87, according to the estimates, Quebec will get $2,902 million, a reduction of $172 million compared with 1984-85.

In view of the normal growth which should take place from one year to the next, Quebec's loss in the area of equalization payments is quite significant, and Bill C-39 will compensate Quebec for only 15 per cent of its losses in this area. And this, because of the ending of the transitional adjustment payment formula.

If I suggest that the solution proposed in Bill C-39 is unfair for Quebec, Mr. Speaker, it is also because the effects of the formula over the forthcoming years, not the past ones, will not be the same for every province which benefit from equalization payments.

According to the analysis prepared and published by the Quebec Department of Finance, an analysis which to my knowledge has never been contested, it is clear what this formula has meant for all the provinces: an unfair situation for Quebec which is quite different from the other provinces.

Let us take the case of Newfoundland . . . I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I am trying to find my table. I have the figures somewhere else. I am going to quote them. I cannot find my table. In Newfoundland, over the five years the formula will apply, that is three real years for which the figures are already available and the following two years, that province will receive $100 million or $102 million more than under the old formula. In the case of Newfoundland, therefore, the equalization payment formula adopted in 1982 has been far from unfair, since it provided the province with more money than the old formula. And, unless I am mistaken, there have been no need for transitional adjustment payments.

For Prince Edward Island, for the three real years and the two years to come, the province will gain $52 million. Therefore, the formula is not unfair to that province; in fact, the new formula 1982-87 gives it a certain advantage over the 1977-82 formula.

In Nova Scotia, for the five years, the gain is $233 million, but it is mostly concentrated over the first three years because of the interim payments, but the situation becomes very drastic and difficult over the last two years.

In New Brunswick, if we compare again the results for the five year period, three real years plus two estimated years, the gain of the new formula compared to the old formula is $65 million. The formula, therefore, is not unfair for New Brunswick.

In Manitoba, because of the interim payments, the new formula has generated gains over the first three years, but with the ending of the transitional payments formula, the loss over the last two years will reach some $172 million, which will certainly prove unbearable for the Public Treasury of Manitoba. But for the five years altogether, the formula has still given positive results.

Quebec will be a net loser, because even taking into account the $110 million the Minister has just mentioned and which will be paid under Bill C-39, the net loss for the five years under the new formula compared with the old formula will total $750 million, most of it in 1985-86 and 1986-87, because of the ending of the transitional payments. Quebec is the only province which will be faced with a net loss over the five year period under the new formula as compared to payments that would have been paid under the old formula.

I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for my extensive use of statistics, but as you know this is a complex matter which needs more than words to be properly dealt with, and all through my speech, I have tried to demonstrate with supporting figures that Bill C-39 does not make sense and that after applying the new equalization formula for the last three years, experience clearly shows that if the transition payments I mentioned earlier which the province of Quebec received in the last two years are not maintained in 1985-86 and 1986-87, that formula becomes totally unjust for Quebec, more so from this year on, as I said earlier, because those famous transition payments are abolished.

Therefore I ask the government, the Minister, to delay the passing of this bill for two reasons. I do not make this request lightly. First, the Prime Minister of Canada, the head of government, stated publicly, after the tabling or rather the announcement made in this House by the Minister of Finance, that he was willing to carry on negotiations with the government of Quebec. Therefore, in view of the situation, if the word of the Prime Minister is to be taken seriously and if it means anything, I believe that the government has no right to use its majority in this House to undermine the additional negociations which have been announced by the Prime Minister himself. So we should wait, in my opinion, until further negotiations have been held between the Minister of Finance of Quebec and the Prime Minister of Canada, to see whether Bill C-39 could not be improved upon, right now, because once this bill is passed, even days before a budget is tabled in Quebec and weeks before one is tabled in Ottawa, I do not expect the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance to come back three weeks later with another bill to change the payments that have just been announced and barely represent 15 per cent of the losses Quebec will incur.

Mr. Speaker, I say that we must postpone the passage of this Bill and give the Federal Government a chance to check whether my information that extending the transitional payments formula applied to Quebec in 1984-85 . . . if this formula were to be extended in 1985-86 and 1986-87 . . . to check whether the figures I gave, indicating that the increase in equalization over these two years would be only 3 per cent. If that is the case, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that an increase in equalization below the inflation rate, and the fact that the Minister of Finance told us recently, only a few days ago, that his budget would be inflationary, so that the inflation rate will certainly rise above 3.7 per cent, since that is where it is today... This means that an increase in equalization in 1985-86 over 1984-85, and in 1986-87 over 1985-86, an increase of 3 per cent, would be below the inflation rate, and I think we should postpone the passage of Bill C-39 to find out, from the negotiations referred to by the Prime Minister, whether the figures I referred to are correct. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it would be only fair to have the guarantee formula for the last two years of fiscal arrangements, as it refers to equalization, maintained. During the first three years, experience has shown that in the case of Quebec, the transitional payments were indispensable and that for the last two years, the loss will be enormous: $750 million. No government can afford to experience a shortfall in revenue of this magnitude. I would therefore ask the Government to postpone consideration of the Bill to a later date. I am not going to propose a motion, because I do not want to prolong debate unduly, but I do wish to appeal to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier), who is a Member from Quebec. As Parliamentary Secretary, he most certainly has access to the statistics and figures that were released by the Government of Quebec. If those figures are incorrect, I wish someone would point out any substantial errors. If we look at the results of the new formula, I say it is unfair to Quebec if transitional payments are not maintained, because even if transitional payments are maintained at the 1984-85 level, that is, by keeping one-third of the rate of growth over previous years, even if transitional payments are maintained at one-third, what does this give the other provinces per capita? The Minister referred to payments per capita. Leaving aside Bill C-39, this would mean that Newfoundland, for instance, would be favoured with an increase of $175 per capita under the new formula, over the old formula.

If we take Prince Edward Island, new formula over old, not including additional payments under Bill C-39, this amount is $422; Nova Scotia: $250 per capita; New Brunswick: $93, if we consider the 122 addition; Manitoba: $6, and this province is the worst off and because the transitional payments formula has been scrapped, this becomes negative, but Quebec is the only province where per capita payments have dropped $113, as a result of the expiry of transitional payments. By these payments beeing reinstated for the last two years, this gap can be corrected and Quebec's per capita payments can be brought up to the provincial average.

I wanted to mention these inequities, not necessarily to make a political point but to point out that I do not understand the "equities" referred to by the Minister in his per capita reports. I read the statement by the Minister of Finance, I examined it and I could not understand the meaning of the word "equity" in terms of the application of Bill C-39. Upon further analysis, I also realized—I had a chance to read what was said by the Quebec Minister of Finance in the National Assembly on April 2 of this year—that I was not the only one who did not understand and who objected.

This is what the Quebec Minister of Finance said in the National Assembly on April 2 of this year, and I am quoting Mr. Duhaime: "I am very disappointed," he said, in referring to the announcement made by the Minister of Finance, "because the Federal Government has obviously refused to recognize the inequities generated by the new program vis-à-vis Quebec". He also said: "I am surprised and in fact astonished at the complete absence of logic in the arrangement provided in Bill C-39. This arrangement provides for payments to provinces which, accordingly to the Federal Government's own forecast, will not experience any drop in their equalization entitlements in 1985-86 and which, furthermore, have greatly benefited from the changes made in the equalization program in 1982." Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I explained how the new equalization formula had been beneficial except for Manitoba and Nova Scotia, for the last two years and in varying degrees, and that generally, the equalization formula adopted in 1981-82 had benefited all provinces except Quebec. As I said before, in the case of Quebec, it is because the Government has refused to extend transitional payments that were included in the formula in Bill C-97 that was adopted by this House. All Canadian provinces receiving equalization payments have benefited in various degrees which I indicated, with the exception of Manitoba for the last two years, and this was also because the transitional payments formula was dropped, but on the whole, even Manitoba has received more money under the new formula than it would have received under the old one. Only Quebec has been severely penalized by the fact that transitional payments were dropped, even allowing for Bill C-39, and I maintain that there is an inequity here that must be remedied.

And obviously, the Minister of Finance can try... At the outset of my remarks, I alluded to the comments of the Minister of Finance concerning the ability to pay, it was the best he could do. Things have to be set in the proper perspective, and I want to caution the public as well as the Parliamentary Secretary—I know he is a serious man and wants to uphold the interests of Quebec, I am sure—and the other Quebec Members in the House. As a group or as a Party you might try to blame the former Government. That will be easy. You will have to take a bow, your constituents will congratulate you, but Quebec will not even get a nickel. Again I say that Quebec was not penalized under the three-year formula including transitional payments, but from this day on, it becomes the responsibility of this administration, the Progressive Conservative Government. Blame the former Government if you want—as I said, you will have to take a bow—but that is not going to redress the injustice and inequity done to Quebec by dropping transitional payments. I hope the Minister will get together with the Minister of Finance, the Parliamentary Secretary and the other Quebec Members who might take time to consider carefully the full implication of eliminating transitional payments beginning in 1985-86; get together, raise the issue in caucus, your Quebec caucus, and you will see that it does not make sense, that transitional payments must be kept in the law. I suggest that they be maintained at the 1984-85 level and, if you figure it out, you will find out that Quebec would not even get the full $750 million it stands to lose. It would be less than $750 million, but definitely more than the $110 million you recommend. As I see it, it would amount to something like $400 million or $450 million. But even at that, if the Progressive Conservative Government and the Members from Quebec examine the matter properly, and I urge them to do so, it is clear that with this formula Quebec will get less than any of the other provinces, on a per capita or nominal dollar basis, even if transitional payments are maintained at the 1984-85 level.

That is why I strongly urge the House to reconsider Bill C-39 in light of the facts I have just mentioned and keeping in mind that the Prime Minister of Canada said that the door was still open. However, once Bill C-39 has been given second reading, gone through committee stage and been stamped by the Senate, the door will be closed, padlock and all, and we will have to wait until 1987 before reviewing this matter.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is a basic question, a question of equity. Now that the Government of Quebec is considering the possibility of making proposals to the Canadian Government so that Quebec might become a full-fledged member of the Canadian Confederation, I think that if we look at Bill C-39 in that context, it is important and even imperative to reintroduce the transitional guarantee payments for the last two years. This way at least the equalization formula would not be a source of inequity as it is now, even though Bill C-39 will mean more money, but as a whole there would be more fairness, and I think that Quebec would then be on the same footing as the other provinces. Quebec is not seeking hand-outs or payments to which it has no right, it simply wants to have equitable per capita payments, with due consideration for the economic situation as described in the equalization formula whose principle is now entrenched in the Canadian Constitution.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I first want to indicate that I am glad that the Government has moved to increase the funding to some of the have-not provinces in Canada. I will say a few more words which are not nearly as complimentary, but I do congratulate it for implementing a move toward fairness in this country.

In doing so, I think we have to realize where the real blame belongs. That blame should lie with the previous Liberal Government. In 1981-82, the Liberal Government of the time knew that the equalization legislation it was bringing in would have the result of decreasing the amount of money that certain provinces would be receiving at this time. The transition payments about which the last Liberal speaker spoke so much were a step to cover the situation for a three-year period only. Liberal Government Members of the time knew that as of April 1, 1985, some provinces including Manitoba and Quebec would be receiving less money than they received in the previous year. That was something about which we and the Conservative Opposition Party told the Liberal Government. We do not want to say we told you so, but that is obviously the situation. The Liberal Government knowingly cut funding to some of the have-not provinces in this nation.

I do not think we can be completely nice to the Government of the day, and you would not expect me to be, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Murphy: Some Conservative back-benchers are asking why not. The reason I cannot be completely nice to them throughout my speech is that it would be intellectually dishonest to do so. We do realize that the Conservative Government, when it was first elected, had no intention of moving on the equalization issue.

Mr. Peterson: You don't know that.

Mr. Murphy: We do know that because the Minister left his briefing notes in the City of Winnipeg. Those notes were not left around on purpose. An unkind wag said that the Minister left his briefs in Winnipeg and that his office tried to tape up the situation. Seriously speaking, what that did point out to the people of Manitoba, Quebec, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island was that the Government had no intention of moving on this issue. It is a fact that a number of meetings were held at the request of provincial Governments in order to get this Government to move. I have already congratulated the Government for moving at least a step in the right direction.

So that the people of Canada and particularly the people of the provinces affected know the situation, it is necessary for me to go into it in a bit more detail. The legislation before us at this time does not provide the have-not provinces with the same amount of money they received last year. It provides them with only 95 per cent of the previous year's funding from the federal Government. That does not even allow for inflation. If we allow for the increase in the cost of living and for the inflation that exists in this country, those provinces are obviously receiving less than 95 per cent of what they received last year.

In the second year of this Bill, although the Government speaks of the fact that Manitoba will receive an extra $65 million, Manitoba will only be receiving at most 95 per cent of what it will receive this year. There will be a downward incline with Manitoba first receiving 95 per cent of last year's allowance and then the next year receiving 95 per cent of this year's allowance. There is no guarantee in this legislation that if the federal financial figures change, Manitoba will receive the full 95 per cent. By including a block amount of $65 million for next year, the Government seems to be indicating that if the economic situation in this nation changes, Manitoba is guaranteed only the $65 million even though it may end up being only 85 per cent or 90 per cent of what it receives at the present time.

When we get into committee, I would be happy if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or his designate would indicate the Government's intentions for next year. Is this $65 million for the Province of Manitoba the only guarantee for the people of that province or will there be some indication that there will be a further piece of legislation if it is necessary at this time next year?

We also have problems with the very concept of funding that is 95 per cent of what was received in the previous year. In the original legislation that was passed in 1982, the intent was that the 95 per cent floor existed not for those provinces that were in further need but for those provinces that might improve drastically their economic situation within the nation. For example, it was thought optimistically that perhaps Nova Scotia and Newfoundland would have more jobs and more provincial revenues as a result of oil production in those provinces. The Government of the day indicated that if that were to happen, it would not drastically cut the equalization money overnight but would guarantee a floor of 95 per cent of the money received in the previous year.

That was a very reasonable attitude. It is an attitude I wish the Government would take when dealing with unemployment insurance and welfare recipients who begin to earn salaries after they have been laid off or unemployed for a certain length of time. There should be some guarantees for those people when they go back to work. The concept existed and it was a good concept but it was never meant for those provinces that had the same need or could demonstrate increased need.

With this legislation, the Government has taken that same concept of a floor which was only to be applied for provinces that were improving their situations and has indicated that that is the most that provinces that are in worse situations will receive. The document that was left in Manitoba by the Minister of Finance indicated that Manitoba was the province that faced the most difficult situation with regard to equalization yet the Government is only moving to provide 95 per cent of the money the province received in the previous year. I think the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) recognizes the truth of that. For the year 1985-86, the Government is not guaranteeing any more than 95 per cent of what the Province of Manitoba received last year, and for the year 1986-87, the Government is only providing 95 per cent of what is to be received in 1985-86. That is the actual situation.

Provinces that can demonstrate at least the same degree of need or increased need should receive at least 100 per cent of the money they received last year. As well, we should take into consideration the increase in inflation and the GNP when making funding awards to those provinces. To use the Minister's term, it is hard to talk about fairness when actually decreasing the amount of money those have-not provinces will receive.

The Government has implemented a compromise between the deplorable situation left us by the previous Liberal Government and what is just and fair in this nation. A compromise is quite often what happens when we have a fix-up piece of legislation like that which is before us at this time. That is understandable. However, in seeking this compromise, I think the Government and the people of Canada would have been better served if the Government had recognized that the provinces should have received fully 100 per cent of what they received the previous year.

I questioned the Minister of Finance a number of times about this situation prior to his indication that he would finally move on supplementary equalization. In one of his answers in the House he talked about the fact that the situation of the federal Government could even be worse than that of the have-not provinces. Obviously that is ludicrous. The federal Government has a huge deficit and certainly it has to look at that deficit in making its plans for the future. However, somehow the concept that the citizens of the have-not provinces must make the sacrifice does not make sense. If we want fairness, then the cuts should affect all ten provinces, not just the have-not ones. If the Government is to cut services, then those services should be cut throughout the land. It is not that I am advocating that as a solution but, in fairness, to take money from the have-not provinces because the federal Government has a deficit is not a very fair or just solution.

The idea of the Minister of Finance of cutting services—and that is what he is doing, even in this compromise Bill—to the have-not provinces works against the very concept of equalization. Equalization is enshrined in our Constitution. It is accepted as a fundamental principle of the nation. Any tinkering or lessening of the redistributive nature of that concept works against equality.

Equalization, although it is a very long word, has a very simple meaning. By definition, it is a recognition that Canadians, regardless of where they live in this land of ours, should have a certain level of services provided to them. That is what equalization is all about. It means that if Prince Edward Island is poorer than Ontario, things will not be equal—certainly a rich province like Alberta will be able to provide certain services and benefits to its citizens which P.E.I. and Nova Scotia cannot match—however, at the same time the citizens of P.E.I., Nova Scotia and Quebec should have the same basic level of services as any other Canadian. That is why this legislation is in front of us. That is why this concept is in the Constitution. That is why it is so important to many people in the land.

As part of the equalization program, we have agreed that the federal Government would take money from its tax sources and give that money to the have-not provinces. Of course we all debate what is the most appropriate formula, whether it should be a ten-province average of economic ability or a six-province average of economic ability. We all disagree over what should be in the package, what taxes should be considered, or what potentials of the various provinces should be considered. However, I have never heard anyone argue against the principle that, if the provinces which provide services under the provincial sphere in our federal state do not have the funds themselves, the federal Government has an obligation to provide the funds so that the provinces can provide services to their citizens. In other situations which are not under provincial jurisdiction, often the federal Government provides direct services or tied funding, whether it be in medicare, hospitalization or something of that nature. For native and Indian people living on reserves, the federal Government either provides funds to the bands or directly provides services to the people.

It is interesting to discover today that the Government, in the paper which is presumably before Cabinet this morning, has decided to cut back funding to the reserves of the nation. Previously the federal Liberal Government decided to cut funding to the have-not provinces because of the economic situation. Now the federal Government is looking at a paper which indicates that for fiscal reasons it will be cutting back on money which is presently going to Indian people on the reserves of this land. I think the same principle is involved. This works against the very principle of equalization.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris and others who are in the House at this time have visited reserves. They have seen no water supply or sewage systems, that the schools are quite often deplorable, that the federal Government program for building new schools is way behind, that the housing situation is completely inadequate, that there is a building backlog and has been a backlog for years, that the roads are almost never paved—in some areas of my riding there are no roads—and that the recreational facilities for young people in these communities are basically non-existent. If the federal Government goes ahead and takes the advice of the overview committee on Indian affairs of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), it will decrease any concept of equal services in this nation. That is not acceptable. I know that this matter does not deal directly with the legislation before us, but it deals with the principle of the legislation. If it is to cut back on funding to the provinces and to cut back on services to the reserves, the Government is saying that it will increase inequality in the nation. That is what is happening.

As I have said before, the Bill itself is an improvement over what we inherited from the federal Liberals. However, the principle behind the Government's move shows a reduction in services. The paper which is before Cabinet today also shows the same principle, that a reduction in services is behind the thinking of the Government of the day. If the Government needs more dollars to decrease the deficit—and it does—and if the Government needs more dollars to provide increased services, not decreased ones—and it does—it should make sure that all Canadians pay their fair share.

In the last election campaign we talked about a minimum tax to those people who were not paying any income taxes and about the need for tax reform. In the House we asked the Conservative Government to re-establish on a short-term basis the cuts in the levels of taxation paid by those people who receive the most. It is ironic that in the very same year that the Liberal federal Government cut back in equalization when it brought in legislation, it decreased the percentage of income taxes paid by people with the higher incomes. It was deliberately so. It said that it would cut 9 per cent off the income tax paid by those who make the most, 7 per cent off those who make fairly high salaries, 6 per cent and 5 per cent, on a sliding scale. What this meant is that the more one made, the more one saved in terms of actual income taxes paid. When the Liberal Government cut services to the have-not provinces, it also cut the amount of tax and percentage of taxes paid by those people who received and made the most in this nation. That is not fairness. To provide the dollars the federal Government needs, it should put those taxes back to the levels they were at in the late 1970s and early 1980s. Money can be raised from the people who have money. It should not cut services to those who need them the most.

It is obvious to Hon. Members on all sides of the House that the corporations are also in a situation where they are not paying their fair share of taxes. For that matter, it is evident that corporations are paying less and less, as time goes by, as a percentage of the total income tax collected. At one time we had virtual parity. Individuals, through income tax, paid about 50 per cent of the money received by the federal Government and the corporations paid the other 50 per cent. What has happened over the years is that the percentage paid by individuals—and not always the richest individuals—has gone up to 75 per cent of the money received by the federal Government through income tax, and the corporations' share has gone to approximately 25 per cent or 27 per cent. So by increasing the tax loopholes, the tax depreciations and all the rest of it, corporations are paying less and individuals—usually with low incomes—are paying more in terms of the total amount of money which is coming in to the coffers of the Government.

I see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is in the House. One of the interesting things which has happened with her so-called Western Accord is that there are going to be more profits made by companies like Texaco which did little in the way of exploration over the last little while.

Mr. Brisco: What about jobs?

Mr. Murphy: I will talk about jobs as well. It is the case that Texaco did almost no research or exploration in this country but because of the new formula negotiated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources it is going to get a heck of a lot of money which is not going to be coming into the coffers of the people of Canada.

The problem is that there are certain people in this country who are not paying their fair share. The corporations are not paying their fair share. There is no talk about the windfall profit tax on the profits Texaco is going to receive as a result of this Western Accord. This Government quite honestly can say, "We have a huge deficit and we are not getting much money in". It should take the money from those who can afford it, from companies like Texaco which did nothing to receive this windfall profit. All it did was it failed to do any research or exploration, but it is going to make the biggest windfall profit of any of the oil companies as a result of the new formula negotiated by the Minister. That is ridiculous. At the same time this Government is saying it cannot afford to give the same amount of money to the have-not provinces as those provinces received in previous years. Inflation is with us, costs have gone up, and this Government is saying, "The most we can give you, Manitoba or Quebec, is 95 per cent of what you received in previous years". That has to be ludicrous.

Yesterday was a very important day, Mr. Speaker, for this nation. It was equality day. April 17, 1985 was the date when the equality provisions of the Charter of Rights were supposed to come into effect. We know that nothing is going to happen overnight but it was a very important day. The Constitution has been amended as of yesterday concerning those sections which deal with equality. But it only deals with equality in terms of legal rights. What we are talking about today in this House is equality in terms of economic rights.

We have recognized as well in our Constitution that it is essential that all Canadians, whether they live in Nova Scotia, Quebec, Manitoba or elsewhere, receive equal services, at least to a certain degree. We cannot provide complete economic equality in this country because of the federal-provincial system we have. We cannot say that everybody everywhere in this country is going to receive exactly the same types of services. That is an impossibility in a federal state. But we have said that if a person is a Canadian, regardless of where he or she lives in Canada, he or she is entitled to a certain basic level of services. That is what equalization is part of. Where the provinces do not have the money, the federal Government is supposed to contribute some money towards paying for those basic services. That is what it is all about, Mr. Speaker. I would hope that in thinking about equality day yesterday, this Government would be a bit more generous.

Miss Carney: Where was your leader on equality day? He wasn't in the House.

Mr. Murphy: Here is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who occasionally visits this place—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brisco: Oh, come on! Look at the record.

Mr. Murphy: —deciding that our leader has to be here. I am not going to be deviated from what is a very important point. I think that if anyone looks back over the record they will find that our fight for a Charter of Rights was not supported by the Conservative Party at that time. So let us not hear any crap about who fought for equality provisions in the Charter. Remember that the Conservative Party, and most of the Conservative Governments across this land—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member to get back to the Bill, please.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I believe that the word used by the Hon. Member is unparliamentary. I would like to have a ruling on this, and if this word is indeed unparliamentary, I would like it to be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall take this point of order under advisement and make a ruling in a few moments.

Mrs. Mailly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) may continue.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, if I did indeed use a word which is unparliamentary, I certainly will retract it and you can find out whether I did when you have a chance to check the rules.

The point I am making is that yesterday was a very important occasion, equality day. Yet we also have within our Constitution the equalization provisions. I would hope that this Government would recognize the significance of yesterday by amending this legislation in order not to provide just 95 per cent funding to the provinces in terms of money that they will receive next year and the year following vis-à-vis the money received in the past, but rather move to provide those provinces with at least an equal amount of money, at least 100 per cent of the money, that they received in years previous.

I have said earlier that this legislation is basically a fix-up of the deplorable situation we have faced in the past, and that there is a possibility that we are going to need a piece of fix-up legislation one year hence unless the Minister of Finance is willing to make significant moves when this Bill goes to the committee. I hope the Minister of Finance will make the necessary moves to be completely fair.

I would also hope that when this Government looks at the next five-year term, the 1987-1992 term, it will make sure that we do not have the same situation in which the Liberal Party left us, a situation similar to that when the Liberal federal Government of that day forced through equalization legislation which was completely unfair and was pushed through without the consent of most of the provinces. It was never a piece of legislation which could produce equality in this country; it was a piece of legislation which we all knew would result in the unfair and difficult situation which we face today. We have this legislation in front of us today because in 1982 the federal Liberal Government of that day decided to create inequality through its equalization legislation. We are now doing a fix-up and compromise. I recognize that the Government is moving in the right direction. All I say to the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris and other Hon. Members is, let us make it fair. Let us make it at least what the provinces should have received last year.

I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government will move quickly to start the process to provide real equality when we negotiate the next five-year period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: After having studied the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), the Chair rules that the words mentioned by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) are not unparliamentary.

Mr. Murphy: Then, obviously, I will not retract them, Mr. Speaker.

• (1230)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall resume the debate with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to authorize the Government to provide certain provinces with supplementary equalization payments, that is payments in addition to those already allowed to six provinces under the Canadian equalization payment program. As this program is one of the major features of our federal system, I would first like to examine its principles. I shall then explain why we have to consider allowing supplementary payments, and especially why the amounts provided for under this Bill represent an adequate solution to the problems faced by some provinces.

The purpose of equalization payments is to have all the provinces in a financial position such that they will be able to offer comparable public services at comparable taxation levels. This equalization program has received wide support since its implementation in 1957. All the provinces, including the three westernmost provinces, which have not obtained any payments for many years, and Ontario, which has never obtained any, are in favour or this program. Thanks to this support, we were able to entrench the principle of equalization in our Canadian Constitution. This means that equalization is now part of our national heritage and we have every reason to be proud of it.

It should be noted that equalization payments have always been unconditional. They do not aim at making provincial public services consistent or equal all across the country, but rather to allow the financially disadvantaged provinces to offer, only if they wish to do so, public services at a level deemed to be adequate as compared with that in wealthier provinces. As the provinces can dispose of these amounts with absolute freedom, it may be concluded that equalization substantially reinforces the financial independence of the less-favoured provinces.

Equalization payments have become quite considerable through the years. In 1957-58, when the program was implemented, they amounted to $140 million. This year, they are estimated at over $5 billion. One of the provinces which has benefited the most from this program is our own Province of Quebec. From 1980-81 to 1984-85, equalization payments to our Province increased from just over $2 billion to $3 billion. During the last three years, equalization payments have made up between 13 and 15 per cent of the total revenue of the Quebec Government.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill we have been asked to support tends to add a supplement to what we pay under the equalization program. Why this supplement? For the first time since the program was implemented, some provinces will have their entitlement to equalization reduced without their capacity to collect taxes being increased. This reduction, which affects mostly Nova Scotia, Quebec and Manitoba, is due to the fact that a special provision, called the transitional guarantee, expired last March 31. This provision is not an integral element of the equalization formula. Rather, it is a special and virtually temporary mechanism which has been developed to facilitate the transition from the old formula, which expired in March 1982, to the formula being applied since then. Indeed, this is why this mechanism was developed as a transitional measure to apply only during the first three years of applying the new formula.

Therefore, what is at issue is not the equalization formula itself, but a special provision expiring at the end of the year 1984-85. When this provision was developed in 1982, it was thought that its expiry would not cause any decrease in the entitlement to equalization payments. However, this forecast was based on the assumption that the rate of inflation, as well as the increase in provincial revenue subject to equalization, would be comparable to those at the turn of the last decade. Naturally, the recent recession invalidated this assumption. What happened is that the decrease in the inflation rate which slowed down the growth of revenues subject to equalization, also slowed down the growth of basic equalization payments, that is the payments determined under the original formula and excluding the transitional guarantee. The basic equalization payments have therefore been lower since 1982 than had been expected. However, the amounts paid under the transitional guarantee have been much higher, since they have totalled nearly $2 billion over three years, or eight times what was forecast in 1982.

In view of the foregoing, one can rightfully say that the federal government is in no way obliged, legally or otherwise, to compensate the reduction in equalization payments for 1985-86. However, for the sake of promoting a better climate of continuous federal-provincial cooperation, the government has committed itself to contribute $285 million in supplementary equalization payments to the six provinces which are currently qualifying for equalization. Of this amount, Quebec will get $110 million, Manitoba $115 million—$50 million this year and $65 million next year—Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will get $20 million each, Newfoundland $15 million, and Prince Edward Island $5 million.

As the formula for computing these amounts has already been explained by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), I do not feel necessary to deal again with the matter. I should like to emphasize, however, that as far as Quebec, Manitoba and Nova Scotia are concerned, the supplementary equalization payments are equivalent to the current estimates which these provinces would have received in 1985-86 and 1986-87, to the minimum of 95 p. 100, the so-called floor, applicable to the weakest provinces from the fiscal point of view. The formula is therefore fair and entirely equitable.

The Quebec government has stated that the amount it will receive is not enough, because that amount does not compensate for the reduction in equalization payments in that province. It should be emphasized, however, that the amounts mentioned in the bill represent the greatest effort which the federal government can make, in view of its current financial situation. Supplementary equalization payments are not provided for in our tax system and will result in an increase of our deficit. Common sense dictates that we could not do more. We are not being as generous as the provinces would like us to be, but we are as generous, and perhaps even more generous than our finances would allow us to be.

Quebec, however, ranks first as far as equalization entitlements are concerned. It will get more than $2.9 billion in 1985-86, that is, almost 56 per cent of the total payments. Never before has that proportion been so high since the coming into force of the current formula. By paying $110 million in supplementary equalization payments, the federal government demonstrates that it is anxious to meet Quebec's needs while respecting its own financial constraints.

Finally, in addition to the $2.9 billion the Quebec government will get in equalization payments during the fiscal year 1985-86, it will get $3.3 billion in cash transfers under various other programs. To this must be added the major federal spendings provided for under the economic development agreement which was signed recently. It calls for the federal government to spend in that province $1 billion over a five year period.

Quebec's reaction to the $110 million offer is understandable in many respects. All governments are subjected to enormous financial pressures, the Quebec government being no exception, and neither is the federal government. We have put forward a solution, which, while not perfect, is just as fair and equitable to Quebec as to the other provinces.

In short, this bill before the House represents a major effort on the part of the federal government to help all provinces qualifying for equalization payments. I, therefore, recommend that the House should adopt it without delay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for his non partisan comments. He has reminded us that during the benefic years under the Liberal government, Quebec was favoured. I should like to raise one or two points because the Hon. Member stated that from a legal point of view, the Minister of Finances did not have to act. I think that from a moral point of view, it would have been quite bad to do nothing for Quebec. When he says that the Minister of Finance has chosen a fair formula for Quebec compared with other provinces, I entirely disagree.

In order to state my argument clearly, I would like to show him a short table. If it was fair to cover the losses incurred by the provinces, Newfoundland did not have any loss. It received just before the election a gift of $15 million. Prince Edward Island incurred a loss of $5 million and it was granted $5 million more; Nova Scotia had a loss of $58 million and got $20 million; New Brunswick had no loss but was given $20 million.

Mr. Lanthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I am not very familiar with the Standing Orders, but when a document is shown in this House, is it not the practice to table it?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: It will not be necessary to hear the Hon. Member on the point of order. You may proceed.

Mr. Malépart: I just wanted to mention, for the benefit of the Hon. Member, that he received the document since it was sent to all Quebec Members.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Malépart: It was a table, a paper prepared by the Government of Quebec that was sent to us by the Minister of Finance. So I hope that you took a careful look—

Now, New Brunswick, which did not suffer any loss at all, is getting a present of $20 million. I do not mind the other provinces getting money. But Quebec, according to the Government of Quebec, has a shortfall of $150 million—in fact, compared to previous years, it was a shortfall of $263 million—and it is receiving only $110 million to compensate.

Manitoba, with a shortfall of $72 million for the next two years is getting $115 million.

My question is whether the formula is fair to Quebec if Quebec happens to be the only province that loses out on the deal. Surely the Hon. Member, considering what was said by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, and I think all the Members of this House, and the Hon. Member as well, will agree that Quebec has a special and specific and in fact different status, surely the Hon. Member will agree that Quebec, as far as equalization is concerned, considering the $800 million lost as a result of cutbacks by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and that the so-called billion-dollar agreement was challenged by a number of Members of the Quebec National Assembly, a development agreement spread over five years when you have just lost $800 million, considering the fact that coincidentally, the formula selected at random for reallocating the RRP program also penalizes Quebec compared to its impact on the other provinces, surely it would have been better, as was suggested by my hon. friend from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), to extend the original agreement for the next two years, in line with the decision made by the previous Government to the effect that the Province of Quebec would not lose a cent compared with the previous year?

Another point I would like to raise is where the Hon. Member mentions the deficit. I think it is rather amazing that where the multinational oil companies out West are concerned—companies that have made profits—the deficit was not a consideration. When a bank had to be saved, the deficit was not a consideration, but where Quebec is concerned, the deficit is always a consideration and there is always a problem. We have seen this happen with equalization payments, with Domtar it was the same thing again, there was no money, and the money they did get was part of a regional development grant. Since September 4, every time Quebec's interests were concerned, the deficit has been used as an excuse, and nobody is going to convince me that Quebecers are to blame for the deficit. We do not waste money any more than the other provinces do, and the Hon. Member ought to know since he comes from Quebec.

I would like to finish my speech on this note. Does the Hon. Member agree that the formula chosen by the Minister of Finance is unfair to Quebec, because as I showed in the table, provinces that suffered no losses obtained certain sums of money and it is normal that we should be discussing this Bill when the Prime Minister said that the door is open to negotiations?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Lanthier: As so many questions are being asked in this House, I should have been taking notes. I have a few here and I hope that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) will forgive me if I do not reply to all his questions for some of them have eluded me. He could repeat them later on.

If I may, I shall begin with the last ones. First of all, it is not because of the people of Quebec that we have a deficit. In this regard, it would be easy to say that a large number of Quebec Members of Parliament were part of the Government which caused this deficit. However, I shall simply say that we now have a deficit and that we have to face up to it, but since I was not here at the time, I unfortunately cannot comment on whatever caused this deficit. However, I believe that the people of Quebec, as all other Canadians and, their Members of Parliament, are partly responsible for the situation.

Secondly, the Member referred to a loss for Quebec. This is a theoretical loss based on an expired, not to say obsolete formula, as was recognized by both the Provincial and the Federal Governments. Let me explain. The obsolescence of the formula was confirmed by the transitional payments, which were added to the basic equalization payments, and secondly, the provincial Government and the Quebec Minister of Finance in their recent request did cut down on their expectations when they said that, theoretically, under the outdated formula, Quebec would be entitled to an increase of some $700 million, but that they would settle for $450 million. I therefore believe that the formula is considered generally as being obsolete. Coming back to the basic issues, I think that this is a theoretical loss based on a formula which everyone has recognized as no longer applicable.

Let us go back to my opening remarks. True enough, I was careful about what I said in my speech earlier, and the Minister of Finance has also said so, that the dice having been cast and the arrangements having been respected, we were no longer under any legal obligation. However, we went beyond that legal obligation. I believe that we also have a moral obligation and that the formula has to be fair to everyone and not be brutally and arbitrarily applied. It was developed in consideration of the needs of the provinces, and I believe that it faithfully reflects the ethics which inspired our decision.

Figures have been quoted and some charts have been shown. Needless to say, even though my remarks might not give a good idea of all the work I did in this field, I am not all that familiar with those charts. But unless I am mistaken about House rules, I do not think this is the proper forum to debate specific provisions and figures, although figures do not bother me. By training and through experience, I have become handy with figures, but I think we ought to be debating the basic principle. In both speeches, mine and that of the Minister a moment ago, the basic principle of equalization was the issue, and it might be a good idea if every Member—Mr. Speaker, do I have the right to read a short quotation from the constitutional statutes to explain the basic principle?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would only urge the Parliamentary Secretary to do so rather briefly, for there is very little time left for questions and comments.

Mr. Lanthier: I will read it if I am given time. As to the questions I noted, if I forgot a few which the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) thought were important, I will be pleased to consider them.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I too should like to emphasize the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance has chosen to keep the debate on a nonpartisan level and I intend to do the same. As a matter of fact, that is what I tried to do in the course of my remarks a moment ago.

I should like to thank him for the intellectual honesty he demonstrated when he described the climate which prevailed at the time the equalization payment act was adopted in early April 1982 and when he said that on the basis of the analyses which had been made—I do not know if I am using his exact words—the new formula was not expected to create major difficulties at the end of the transitional period. That is exactly what I tried to establish, namely, that the transitional payments under the guarantee and the rate of growth had affected the provinces diversely. I should like to ask him a two part question. Before suggesting that the House should adopt this Bill, should he not recommend that a more thorough study be made to determine whether the guarantee should not be extended, at least as far as Quebec and Manitoba are concerned, since the other provinces are not penalized? Should not the examination of Bill C-39 be suspended to allow for the consideration of this proposition, the more so in view of the statement made by the Prime Minister that the door was open to negotiations?

On the other hand, I should like to say that I disagree with him on the theoretical issues concerning the basic formula. In my view, the basic formula is very easy to use, and the transitional payments are very easy to compute, since they have been paid out for the past three years without the least difficulties. Why does he claim today that the loss which Quebec is talking about is only a theoretical one? That province is really going to lose $750 million, because the transitional formula will not be extended?

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, the transitional formula . . . I said that what we were asked for was to cover the loss, although in theory. I do not know if we are talking about the same figures. Essentially the Quebec Minister of Finance was asking for an extension of either the transition payments base or the orginal formula. However those two formulas have expired. According to what the previous government had provided, there would no longer be any payments. We made the moral judgment that things could not be left that way considering there had been adjustments and drastic reductions in the equalization payments that were due, particularly to Quebec, but to all other provinces as well.

A third point was raised about whether or not a postponement would be appropriate. I do not have a very long experience, but that suggestion did surprise me because ever since I have been here, the government has always been accused of delaying action through consultation. I can assure the House that the decision we are putting before it has gone through all stages of consideration, that is to say that after having gone through the process of consultation and negotiation we arrived at a decision. I think that should reassure opposition members. When the time to negociate comes, we negotiate, when the time to consult comes, we consult, and when the time to decide comes, we decide. And that is the way it happened and this is our proposal. It is therefore not a question of delaying action.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it will come as no surprise to Members of the House that the debate on this Bill today is of vital importance to the Province of Manitoba and several other provinces. We are faced in very real, human terms with substantial cut-backs by the provincial Government in funds to our universities, our community centres, our hospitals and to the basic structure of our social services. Our educational system is being affected, not to mention the City of Winnipeg, the school boards and other areas of our province because of the problems related to fiscal transfers.

It has been a matter of concern to representatives of all parties. In the provincial legislature, I believe the Conservative Opposition and the NDP endorsed the notion of a full repayment in order to maintain the existing transfer levels. Let me also say that historically, that was a position we endorsed as the previous Government last spring. We clearly indicated at that time to the Government of Manitoba that there would be a review of the transitional payments, that that review and the figures would be made public in the fall and then properly negotiated at a federal-provincial meeting.

That process has not exactly been followed. While there may have been a review, it was an internal review. The figures have not been shared with the provincial Government and there has been no public disclosure to Members of the House or to the public of the recalculation by the Department of Finance. Therefore I believe it somewhat goes against the spirit of the commitment made by the previous Government to recognize that there had to be an adjustment made to the payment and a recalculation of the figures. It was important that that be an open and above board sharing so that there would be an honest and objective judgment of what the real figures were.

This would be in contrast to what the parliamentary secretary objected to, whereby the Quebec Minister of Finance would have a set of figures, the Manitoba Minister of Finance would have a set of figures and the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would have another set of figures.

I suggest that one solution to the dispute in this case would be to follow the advice of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), who indicated several times that it is not only important to share the information, but to bring the concerned parties together to determine what would be a fair and equitable solution for the major change in the formula that was arrived at in 1982 as a result of changed economic conditions.

This matter is of vital importance and it concerns many human and other sensitive issues in the lives of our respective provinces. Therefore we are asking that it be approached with the same level of sensitivity. We do not suggest that the Government should change its opinion, or that there should not be a new formula, but it should be one that is based upon a more accurate reading of what the actual facts and figures will be and it should particularly try to find a resolution for future reference.

The immediate interim solution is coming very late and, while it may provide some limited comfort to provincial treasuries, it provides little in the way of ability for the major institutions of the respective provinces to know what services will be available in order to make future plans. If there has been any guilt associated with several of the Governments, federal and provincial, over the last several years, it has been this type of obsessive preoccupation with cut-backs and spending reductions. As a result, we have neglected the fact that there are many individuals being affected by these cut-backs.

This raises another important point. This issue is not only of immediate importance to the respective provinces, but it also goes to the very heart of what Confederation is all about. If one looks at the basic agreements that were signed over 100 years ago, one can see that the federal Government was to act as a balancing wheel of Confederation to ensure that there was a sense of regional equity with no imbalance between regions because of economic advantage. Through the tax system, the federal Government would collect from all citizens and transfer funds back to those regions in which there was disparity or disadvantage. That has been a fundamental principle upon which this country is based.

There is a deep sense of anxiety that that principle is not being adhered to by the present Government. We have seen time and again examples of reductions in the economic positions of the various regions of Canada. One does not have to look far, only at the November 8 statement, where there were substantial cut-backs in the industrial and regional development program that provided direct grants particularly to those areas of the country that rely upon some form of public investment in order to develop their economic base.

Miss Carney: Politics of hate.

Mr. Axworthy: Politics of hate. The problem with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is that she is so steeped in her own bile that she doesn't understand those who are approaching matters in a positive way. That is her problem. She judges people by her own standards and her own disruptive personality.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

WAR CRIMINALS

CALL FOR PROSECUTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, today is Yom Hashoa or, as it is better known, the day of the holocaust. It is an annual day of mourning on which Jews in Canada and around the world remember one of the saddest tragedies of mankind when 6 million Jews, innocent men, women, and children, were sent to their deaths.

The sadness, the suffering, and the outrage linger on, with the knowledge that some of those responsible for these hideous crimes against humanity continue to live without being brought to justice. A number of the perpetrators are amongst us in our country. As a decent nation, a nation that believes in justice, we cannot continue to sit idly by. This Parliament, on behalf of all Canadians, must show its absolute and unequivocal repugnance and bring these people to trial.

The Liberal Party had introduced proposed amendments to the Criminal Code to enable Canadian courts to try and punish convicted war criminals. This is of the essence, Mr. Speaker, if war criminals living in Canada are to face human justice. Ultimately, they will have their day of reckoning, of that we can be sure. In the meantime I call on the Government to support the Liberal initiatives so that we no longer have those amongst us in our free and democratic society who have caused millions of deaths, billions of tears, and shame to humanity.

TERRORISM

ONTARIO ARMENIAN COMMUNITY'S CONDEMNATION OF VIOLENCE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on April 2 I received a letter. The following was the content, and I think it deserves the attention of the House of Commons:

Terrorist developments over the last week in southern Ontario have disturbed us tremendously. It is with utmost sadness that we had to face this situation.

As you know, Mr. Deans, the media has handled this situation poorly, failing to distinguish peace loving Armenian majority from the few extremists, if any. The Armenian community in Ontario has been accused and sentenced without trial by the media. Our image as peaceful citizens has been severely damaged.

As a community, we have always condemned violence as a means to achieve our goal. Under no circumstances the Armenian community would be associated with such a cowardly act.

We have worked very hard to gain some public support for our cause through peaceful means, to some of which you might have attended. It will now take us many years to redress what has happened to the Armenian image in general.

I think it is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of the House of Commons would want to recognize that the Armenian community in Canada has made a valuable contribution to the growth of the country, and that the extremists to which the letter refers are the people the majority of us are dealing with when we make comments about the need to tighten security.

I think that with the support of the House of Commons we would want to commend the Armenian community in general for the good work it has done in Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NEW AGREEMENT WITH UNIONS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a most important agreement that has just been reached by the President of the Treasury Board with the Public Service unions of Canada.

The Government agreed with the unions to introduce in the Public Service a system of master agreement bargaining, a dental plan, a revised pension plan and improved workforce adjustment procedures. To improve government operations, the Public Service should be more responsive to the needs expressed and more efficient.

These new guidelines for cooperation, for consultation prior to decision-making and for setting common goals to settle important matters have been established to develop a sense of responsibility in all parties concerned and will be available as models for future labour-management agreements.

PIPS president thus termed the agreement "the most significant development in the public sector since 1967". The agreement will no doubt promote our economic recovery and improve the standard of living of all Canadians. The understanding will provide the terms of reference required to negotiate master agreements covering approximately 80 per cent of the working conditions now covered in individual collective agreements.

Mr. Speaker, after all those years of arrogance and autocratic rule under the previous Government, the Progressive Conservative Government has opened the way to a new era of understanding and faith in the years to come.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—VISIT BY CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, during the life of the Thirty-third Parliament we will be called upon to review all aspects of Canada's foreign policy. Part of that review should focus on the recent trip of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to the Soviet Union. That trip, I believe, has accomplished several things for Canada. To begin with, it has raised Canada's profile with our fourth largest trading partner. The agreement of the Soviets to renew the grain agreement between our respective countries is a positive step forward. Increased co-operation in such areas as acid rain, and economic and cultural areas, will enhance our relationship for years to come.

The trip establishes a stable, business-like relationship with the Soviet Union in spite of our differences. As was pointed out by my colleague, the Member for Parkdale-Hyde Park (Mr. Witer) we did not hesitate to raise the existing areas of differences between our two countries. As a member of that delegation I can say to this House that the Minister and my other colleagues used every opportunity to raise the issue of human rights. We made it very clear that family reunification, Jewish emigration, and related subjects, are and will continue to be of great importance to the people of Canada.

I was very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to see the extent and the type of coverage this trip generated in the media. However, I am not surprised by the attitude taken by the members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties. Sometimes silence speaks louder than words. It is significant, and a measure of the success of the Minister's trip, that four days since the reconvening of Parliament not one question has been asked of the Minister concerning his visit.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

FARMERS' SITUATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative government is lost in admiration for the American administration. The Progressive conservatives not only draw their inspiration from it, but they have also yielded to the Americans on all points, under the pretext that harmonious relations would result in jobs for Canadians.

I have yet to find one industry to which such ridiculous grovelling and shameful submission have been or will be beneficial.

Quite to the contrary, the consequences have been disastrous, particularly for agriculture. In fact, as a result of the savage and unilateral decision of the U.S. to impose a special tax on hogs imported from Canada, Quebec producers now have no alternative but to sell their product at a price substantially lower than the production cost. Several producers face bankruptcy and if this situation keeps up, it will surely end in tragedy. What does the future hold for dairy producers? If one looks at the situation in the United States, which will probably be duplicated in Canada, there is also reason for serious concern, all the more so because there is serious talk of abolishing the Canadian Dairy Commission. Besides, dairy producers are still awaiting since April 1st the $1.40 per hectolitre promised to them.

The only happy people in the Quebec agricultural sector are the 129 notaries, friends of the Progressive Conservative Party, who will probably become members of the select "Mulroney Club".

Farmers refuse to fatten 129 notaries when they also need money to pay for seed grains at this time of year.

AIR CANADA

TREATMENT OF FEMALE WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure most Members of the House are aware, Canada faces an impending strike at Air Canada. Air Canada claims to believe in equality for women, yet here is a workplace where 76 per cent of its clerical workers and 71 per cent of its service workers are women, while only 3 per cent of upper level managers and 7 per cent of middle management people are women.

Yesterday Air Canada proposed to decrease drastically the starting pay for CALEA workers, most of whom are women. Air Canada also wants to eliminate many full-time jobs which have a decent wage and benefit package, and replace them with lower paying part-time jobs. Air Canada claims that it needs over 30 per cent of its work force to be part-time only. Today when we are concerned about the rights of equality in the Constitution, we cannot allow de facto inequality not only to exist but to increase within one of our Crown corporations.

The Government has recently demonstrated its willingness to use its jurisdiction over one Crown corporation, the Post Office. The Government must also intervene in the case of Air Canada before strike action commences.

EXPO '86

CANADA PLACE—INVITATION TO VISIT

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, visitors to Expo '86 in Vancouver next year will be able to stand on the shores of tomorrow as they meet at Canada Place, the spectacular national pavilion gracing the shores of Vancouver's harbour.

Canada's world exposition in 1986 will showcase the transportation and communications advances of tomorrow. Beneath the lofty sail-like roof of the host Canadian pavilion, visitors will marvel at an astonishing Canada, presented in a dimension that no one has ever conceived before, Canada, a nation that is wielding its high technology to explore new frontiers in the skies above and the oceans below.

Canada Place is more than just the most exciting pavilion at Expo '86. It is an architectural marvel, rising atop a massive pier on the waterfront of the world's most beautiful city. It is a world class trade and convention centre, and a major cruise ship terminal set against the backdrop of elegant Stanley Park, vibrant Burrard Inlet, and the splendid coastal mountains. Canada Place is a cosmopolitan hotel, a world trade centre, and pier side public plaza.

I invite all Canadians to come to Vancouver next year and meet the world at Canada Place.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE OF MIRABEL

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, following some recent statements by a few carriers who request the elimination of Mirabel Airport, I want to inform the House of the role played by Nationair.

Since its first flight, on December 19 of last year, this company has carried almost 50,000 passengers and has become, starting from scratch, one of the main users of Mirabel Airport. Nationair considers Mirabel as an exceptional airport and intends to use it as a base for its future growth.

It is obvious that established carriers ultimately aim at the closing-down of Mirabel. Therefore, how could they be committed to the cause of this airport?

According to Nationair, the attitude of established carriers clearly demonstrates that we cannot expect any cooperation from them for the development of the airport. Therefore, if Mirabel is to survive, we must encourage new carriers like Nationair to provide new services.

Nationair believes in Mirabel and suggests that if the Government shares its belief, then we can rely on the airline to commit all its energy and as Nationair is already doing, to increase traffic and give a dynamic image to this magnificient airport.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DISCRIMINATION CAUSED BY BILL C-26

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was an historical day while some people drank champagne to mark the end of discrimination across Canada. But unfortunately, 80,000 needy senior citizens could not celebrate that day because of discriminatory provisions in Bill C-26. Moreover, the answer of the Minister of social injustice in Canada, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), proved clearly that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) was only bluffing in her statement on behalf of the Government.

The Minister would not tell us why he will not amend his Bill which would create discrimination against 80,000 needy senior citizens, most of whom are women, simply because they are single, separated or divorced. He would not tell them why he denies the spouse's allowance to them. On top of that these elderly citizens will not be able to join for a membership fee of $100 the Quebec club of "smiley brilliant Brian" because they do not have the money to have their views represented in this House.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

SERVING OF CANADIAN WINES

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign last summer the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), while campaigning in the Niagara Pensinsula, promised assistance to grape growers who were experiencing problems due to a surplus of grapes. In November, 1984, this promise was kept and 30,000 tonnes of surplus grapes were purchased for processing into various beverages.

However, on January 31, 1985, a delegation of farmers from Welland and the Niagara area came to Ottawa to meet with myself and other Members of Parliament. Upon visiting the Parliamentary Restaurant we were served the house wine, and were told that it was an imported foreign wine. This naturally raised concern among both farmers and Members.

Shortly thereafter I contacted the purchaser for the Parliamentary Restaurant to question why foreign wines were being served as the house wine in this most Canadian institution. Yesterday I was informed that, in response to my questions and other Members' questions, Canadian wines are now being featured as house wines in the parliamentary dining room. I was also informed that the rotation of the restaurant wine list will be arranged to represent every wine growing district in Canada on a monthly basis.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and your administration, for these recent changes in policy. On behalf of all Canadian grape growers, particularly those in the Niagara area, I urge all Members of Parliament to do their part in support of our wine industry by ordering Canadian wines.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FORESTRY

NEED FOR AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, knowledgeable foresters in British Columbia and across Canada recognize that there is a need to spend $300 million a year to bring the good and medium Not Satisfactorily Restocked forest lands back into production for future generations in British Columbia. An area larger than Prince Edward Island now lies idle in British Columbia due to the continued negligence of the Social Credit Government's policies on reforestation.

The Socreds, along with the 19 B.C. Tory Members, are playing a game of smoke and mirrors over this issue with the B.C. public. Let us keep in mind that both are in power. Last year the Canadian Forest Service offered $50 million per year as a contribution to help reforest British Columbia. Now the Minister responsible for industrial expansion east of the Rockies is offering $150 million over five years, for a joint agreement of $300 million for British Columbia over five years.

This agreement should be split off immediately from the over-all ERDA package so that those involved in planting the seedlings this year can get on with the job. Each day that goes by limits the potential success of these needed silvacultural projects. The game of smoke and mirrors over whether the total Canada/B.C. agreement should be $650 million or not should be concluded at the earliest possible date between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premier.

The fact that the agreement on reforestation is only one-fifth of what has been identified as needed is what the media in British Columbia should be reminding the public about.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUTURE OF DEPARTMENT—TASK FORCE REPORT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. For the second time in a month he has seriously embarrassed a Cabinet colleague. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why he has undermined the credibility of his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, by failing to advise that Minister of the preparation of a report calling for the destruction of his colleague's Department, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the fairytale preamble of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is entirely inaccurate. The very competent Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and I have had ongoing discussions ever since the work of the task force on the program review commenced. What has resulted today is the disclosure of some of the suggestions that are flowing from our work on the task force, suggestions that the Minister will be considering pursuant to a mandate which has been given to him by the Prime Minister to chair a committee of Cabinet to look into the whole wide range of aboriginal policies in order to take into account some of these and, I am sure, other very broad dimensional problems that he will add to the task as he pursues his work with his usual competence and diligence.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is smiling as widely as I am after that elegy—I was going to say elegos remarks—by his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister.

I direct this question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Nothern Development. The report calls for the mutilation of his Department. It calls for the mutilation of programs which assist our native and aboriginal people. It demonstrates, I believe, the hidden agenda of the Government. It illustrates once again that the Government really does not know through one Minister what another Minister is doing, or vice versa. The left hand does not know what the right hand is doing. If what the Deputy Prime Minister says is so, and of course in Parliament I cannot doubt that, will the Minister say to our native and aboriginal people that the report is without foundation and that he continues his commitment toward the continuation of his own Department and toward governmental policies in which he believes?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think I can do better than that for the Leader of the Opposition. He may know that prior to the House meeting, at about 1.30, the Prime Minister made a statement which is now public.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He just made it.

Mr. Crombie: I think he did a masterful job in re-enunciating and reaffirming all those principles which he stated so well at the FMC two weeks ago.

• (1420)

Mr. Crombie: Those principles, of course, are consistent with the Government's desire to make sure that native people do much better than they did under 15 years of Liberal rule.

PROCEEDINGS AT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that answer is not really in the style of a Minister I have known since he was a very good mayor of Toronto. The Minister has referred to the last-minute bailout which was just issued at 1.30 by the Prime Minister. I am obviously invited by the Minister to address a question to the Prime Minister. He refers to that report as having been written by bureaucrats. Of course it was not written by bureaucrats.

The Deputy Prime Minister had a committee composed of outside business colleagues, most of whom were ideological friends of the Prime Minister. It was not a committee composed of bureaucrats at all.

In a salvage operation, the Prime Minister has appointed the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to supervise a committee to direct the future of the aboriginal peoples, something which is already the responsibility of the Minister. In other words, he is being asked to head a committee which is supervising the matter overseen by his own Department. Would the Prime Minister give the commitment that the recent Federal-Provincial Conference was not a sham in light of what has been happening in a clandestine fashion under the aegis of his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should say that that question is not in keeping with the style that the Right Hon. Member once exhibited as Minister of Finance some years ago. In point of fact we did not say that bureaucrats will do anything other than advise. The Government itself will make policy. There is nothing in here that said that the report—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They weren't bureaucrats.

Mr. Mulroney: I get the indulgence of my right hon. friend. It does not say that the report in question was prepared by bureaucrats. It was prepared by an outside advisory group. What I heard at the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Peoples from the aboriginal peoples was this: "We have had it up to the teeth with the manner in which the federal Government has administered our lives over the last number of years and we want to listen to new ideas and new approaches that will benefit us and bring equality and justice to aboriginals across the country." We are simply saying that there may be some good ideas and, if they will benefit aboriginal peoples, we will listen to them and implement them in a spirit of fairness and decency.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Liberal Members should not be heckling the aboriginal peoples. They should be listening, because this is a vitally important question that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development addresses with great leadership and sensitivity at all times.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, while we are on the subject of new ideas and fresh approaches, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister. As he probably knows, yesterday Norway very wisely and with some courage made a statement indicating that it would not become involved in star wars research. It has turned down the American invitation to do so.

It is clear that this Government's own sense of uncertainty is only causing dissension in the government caucus, and deep anxiety in the country. It is also losing a chance for Canada to make a very important and effective statement on the whole question of arms control and disarmament. Taking into account the stand Norway has taken, and the fact that the West Germans and the French are also developing a joint position, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would now join our NATO ally, Norway, and clearly indicate, in a very polite and direct way, that we, as a country, also do not intend to become involved in the research and development program that would lead to that very highly dangerous and destabilizing initiative of President Reagan.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what we will do is what the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs set out with great clarity and dignity on January 21. We will support our friends and allies in regard to the research component of the concept inasmuch as the Geneva negotiations were weeks away from beginning. We will examine any other possibilities pursuant to the national interest of Canada.

We have received what has been referred to as an invitiation. We will make the necessary inquiries. We will take a look at it in Cabinet, and we will be guided by what we have done at the insistence of the Minister of National Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and myself, when we included, for the first time, a sovereignty clause in our defence agreements. We will protect the sovereignty, independence, and integrity of Canada, and we shall always act in the national interest of this country, as a friend and loyal supporter of NATO, and as a believer in freedom, justice, and democracy.

UNITED STATES INVITATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, those are all values and purposes to which we can adhere. They key question is when will the Government make a decision in order to show us how it intends to keep those values.

I would ask the Prime Minister to confirm whether or not the country has now received an extension on that invitation from the United States, and whether or not there is some intention to send a task force composed only of Conservative Members of Parliament to Washington to discuss this matter with the Americans. I would like to get some kind of guarantee from the Prime Minister that, if there is to be such a task force, it would be a task force involving all Members of the House because we represent all Canadians, and that any extension would not result in the Government making a decision after Parliament has closed, at which time it would not have to face Parliament with what is a very critical decision in the history of our country.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is coming from a Cabinet Minister who was a member of a Government that never once in its life ever brought a treaty to Parliament prior to signing it. It always signed them behind the backs of the Canadian people. He now has the temerity to rise and say what he has said.

What we are going to do is very simple and straightforward.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Not true.

Mr. Mulroney: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon. It is quite true. What we are going to do is ask a very distinguished, principled, and impartial public servant to make necessary inquiries on our behalf, and to report to Cabinet. We will consider these matters within our own time frame and not with regard to any limitations of time imposed by anyone else. We will consider them and, pursuant to that, we will report to the House. I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs is deeply committed to consulting with opposition Parties and to keeping the House and the Canadian people fully involved in and informed of our intentions and actions in this regard.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am pleased to see that, when there is a crisis in his Department, this Minister at least has the courage to recognize his duty to be in the House.

The Minister has said that there will be no cut-backs in programs that count. Now we have a task force report calling for $169 million in cuts, for housing to be built to minimal standards, and for a means test for medical services. When did the Minister first become aware of the report and its contents? Does he endorse those contents?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, the report of the study team contains a number of recommendations, some of which are good, some of which are bad; some of which are wise, some of which are unwise. I can assure the Hon. Member that all of those recommendations, and recommendations from other sources, will be dealt with by the committee over time, and its recommendations will be consistent with the principles that were established at the First Ministers' Conference held two weeks ago.

Oral Questions

POSITION OF INDIAN GROUPS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the Minister's conclusion consultation with Indian people across the country, does he know of one single Indian group or nation that is in favour of having responsibity for medicare or education turned over to the provinces? Is there one single Indian group that wants that?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there may be, but the Hon. Member is absolutely correct, there is a strong feeling in all Indian communities with which I have dealt that they have a special relationship was emphasized and acted upon at the First Ministers' Conference, and that continues to be the policy of the Government.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister assure the House that he will oppose any transfer of powers over Indian people to the provinces, as long as Indian people oppose that, when we consider the record of the provinces, many of which oppose the whole concept of Indian self-government? Will he fight for the Indian people in that particular battle?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, at all times any policy initiative I have undertaken on behalf of the Government treaty renovation, block funding or community-based self-government—any of those—has always dealt with one principel, that is, grass roots community level consultation. That will continue, I can assure the Hon. Member.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY CHEMICAL SPILL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It flows from the negligence of the Ontario Government in failing to close the road immediately after the PCB spill was detected in Kenora, and failing to verify that the transformers were empty upon entering Ontario, and from the negligence of the Ontario Ministry of Environment in allowing unmarked boxes containing contamined PCB samples to be shipped via a passenger air line without its consent. What power does he have as Minister of Transport to stop Ontario Government mismanagement in handling the PCB question?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious the Hon. Member wants to fight the Ontario provincial election on the floor of the House of Commons. Perhaps he is more interested in that than in the real issue, which is very serious, I might add. As I said earlier in the House, the federal Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment are collaborating very closely with the Government of Ontario.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Finally.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, not finally. It was within hours.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Within the last few hours.

Mr. Mazankowski: Within hours of the accident occurring, I might say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. As I indicated yesterday to other Hon. Members in the House, departmental officials and myself are exploring ways and means of implementing Section 28 of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act that would provide for a protection directive which would have the effect of applying regulations with respect to the movement of PCBs or other substances of a similar nature.

CARRIAGE OF PCB CONTAMINATED MATERIAL BY PASSENGER AIRLINE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House have the protection and the safety of the people of Ontario at heart, contrary to what the Minister of Transport may think.

What action does the Minister intend to take with respect to the practice of Ontario environment officials allowing contaminated PCB samples to be shipped via passenger air line, as declared by David Edwards, who is quoted as saying: "We didn't ship these samples any differently than we usually do"? What action does he intend to take? That is his responsibility, isn't it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all know that no one in the House has a monopoly on the protection and security of the citizens of Ontario. Certainly that commitment is shared by Hon. Members on this side of the House, as well as Hon. Members on the other side of the House. I hope that is very clear. With respect to the incident to which the Hon. Member referred, there have been discussions between transport officials and Department of Environment officials of the province of Ontario. I think the particular issue to which he referred has been cleared up.

GOVERNMENT'S KNOWLEDGE OF INCIDENTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Minister of the Environment or the Minister of Transport, depending upon who is really responsible for federal action in the area of this PCB spill. Is the Government aware that a Red Lake family, a husband, a pregnant wife, and two children, followed the truck for 25 kilometres, pulled it over, and were told that it was only mineral oil, to be cleaned with rags and gas? Is the Government aware that the provincial hot line in Kenora advises that car bodies be washed with paper towels and that they be placed in plastic bags and taken to the dump? Is it aware that the Quebec Government was lied to by the company with respect to whether or not the transformer was full? Is the Government aware of all these things and, if it is, what will it do about provincial and industry incompetence in this area, and when will it take some responsibility for what has been going on around here?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from the New Democratic Party is actually asking three questions. I am going to answer one of them.

Not only are we perfectly aware of what happened to that family, but we are in contact with the chief medical officer in Ontario. We offered him means of transportation, medical equipment and our laboratories in case he feels they should be used for this particular family.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not told the House or the Canadian people what the Government intends to do about the rank incompetence and negligence we see rippling out from this one event, both on the part of the provincial Government of Ontario and now on the part of the fedral Government itself. Is it going to investigate this incident? Is it going to find out who was lying to whom? Were the drivers lying to the people? Was the company lying to the drivers? Was the company lying to the province? What is going on? Don't you even care about this any more?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wonder where my NDP colleague was in 1978 when PCB was banned, since he never once spoke up to ask for disposal sites to be planned according to the criteria he is talking about today.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and it concerns the White Farm situation. I understand that in the last 18 months this company captured some 22 per cent of the market as compared with 7 per cent in 1983, employs 700 people, and provides some 400 to 500 jobs in parts supplies. Why is the Government refusing to assist White Farm, after it belatedly provided aid to Domtar and Petromont, and in view of the fact that Borg-Warner is willing to assume all the debt of that company? Will the Minister explain why he is putting these jobs in peril and is not willing to provide assistance to this company?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member gets a better researcher. At no time has the Government indicated an unwillingness to help in the plight of White Farm Equipment. We met yesterday with Mr. Sinclair. We have met with and talked with representatives of Borg-Warner. We have indicated that if they feel we can help, if there is some way we can facilitate the company being re-established, we will do that. However, no firm proposal has been put to us at the present time.

We are very pleased to tell the Hon. Member that the deadline of Friday which was thought to exist is a much easier deadline than was originally indicated. If there is time to work, hopefully that plant can be saved.

PROTECTION OF TECHNOLOGY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister really intends to be so helpful, will he and his officials come up with a proposal which will achieve results with respect to saving jobs and the technology? In any event, if no proposal can be worked out, will the Government ensure that the technology developed by White will remain in Canada and that the workers trained in that technology will be able to keep working in that field right in this country?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there is no problem in what the Hon. Member is indicating. Of course we will work toward saving the plant and the jobs concerned, and we will do our best to see that the technology remains in Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS FOR NATIVES IN URBAN CENTRES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I think it is sad and strange that in a week when Parliament and the people of Canada are talking about equality, a committee appointed by the Government should be recommending reductions in expenditures for the most disadvantaged group in the country, native people. I am sure the Minister knows that in cities such as Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, to mention just a few, there is an ever increasing number of native people, both status and non-status, who are having great difficulty integrating into the life of those cities. Will the Minister give the House assurances that, in any discussions or proposals to reduce expenditures for native people, the programs now in place to help the native people who are living in our cities will not be reduced?

• (1440)

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. Indeed, in the statement to which I referred earlier, the Prime Minister makes it clear that levels of funding for the programs just described by the Hon. Member will be maintained. So the assurance is unequivocally given.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that virtually all of the discussions we have had with regard to native problems have focused on the problems of native people living on the reserves. Will the Minister look to the possibility of appointing an advisory committee of people who know something about the problems of native people living in the cities so that he can be briefed on those problems and we can begin to address and solve some of the major problems these native people have?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I might say that there is already an advisory committee dealing with Indian people living off-reserve. As the Hon. Member may know, that is a responsibility I share with the Secretary of State. Toward that end, I have met with mayors of major municipalities, including Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Toronto, and have indicated to them that it is time to turn the page and deal more appropriately with the plight of those people who live in those cities and who have not been dealt with in any significant or fair way over the past 20 years.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council. I am sure he can appreciate my interest, and that of my North Bay constituents, in a matter relating to Canadian-American co-operation in the air defence of the North American continent. On several occasions in the House, Hon. Members in both opposition Parties have asked the Government, in accordance with the 1980 Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence report, that this subject matter be referred to the committee at least a year prior to the renewal of the NORAD agreement. My question, Mr. Speaker, is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mantha: Since the agreement was last renewed on May 12, 1981, can the Minister assure this House that a reference will be made at the earliest possible moment?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the last questioner is as good a questioner in the House of Commons as he was a hockey player in his former incarnation.

The Hon. Member does raise a very serious question. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, we have been attempting to bring forward a reference to the committee of the renewal of the NORAD agreement. As a matter of fact, before Easter I communicated with the opposition Parties about this matter and asked for an immediate reference. I have to say that the New Democratic Party in fact agreed to have the matter go directly to committee so that the work could commence. We would be on with the job right now, but unfortunately the Liberals want to have a protracted debate on the floor of the House of Commons. If the Leader of the Official Opposition could get his Party together, we could get this matter to committee right away, today, and we would be pleased to proceed with this important issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

REPORTED HIRING OF FOREIGN ENGINEERS BY PRATT AND WHITNEY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It relates to the hiring practices of Pratt & Whitney. Mr. Speaker, at a time when thousands of engineers are unemployed in Canada, we are talking about 7,000 or so, Pratt & Whitney is advertising in the British media to recruit personnel from that country. In the meantime, an official of her department says he is prepared to approve automatically the applications of those British nationals. In fact, in English the words are: We will rubber-stamp them.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I am getting there.

[Translation]

I want to ask the Hon. Minister whether she is prepared today to make the commitment to curtail that policy of automatic approval, of rubber-stamping of those applications for residence, and to assure us that the existing rules will be applied, namely that no foreigners will be allowed into Canada to fill those positions as long as Canadian engineers are available.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that is the policy of the Government. There is no question but that while there are people in Canada who are unemployed, Canadian people who are without jobs in this country, the applications for jobs, whether it be engineers, the medical profession, or in any other level of work, will go to Canadians first.

AGREEMENT WITH AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote for the Minister the words of Wendy Cuthbertson of the United Auto Workers, who was reported as saying: "Not enough attention is paid to skills training of Canadian workers". She also claims that companies find it easier to import workers from places like Britain. Is the Minister ready to pursue the agreement which was reached some three years ago with the aerospace industry, and which called for joint planning of skills development, or has she dropped that program like she has dropped other worth-while plans?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member has not been in the House very much these past number of weeks.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, come on!

Mr. Gauthier: That's a lie, and you know it.

Miss MacDonald: Nevertheless, I would have expected him to have been aware of the whole new labour market strategy which the Government has announced. In those fields there are areas to which funding has been committed on a multi-year basis for skills development, for job development, for skills shortages. If the Hon. Member has not read the labour market strategy, I will be very happy to send him a copy.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY CHEMICAL SPILL—REQUEST THAT MEDICAL REGISTRY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the health and welfare of Canadians. It is reported that representatives of Kinetic Ecological Resource Group Ltd. advised an Ontario family affected by the recent PCB spill that they are more likely to be affected negatively by aspirin than by PCB contact. As the Minister knows, that statement is grossly irresponsible. I wonder if the Minister would not agree that since this is the largest, most publicly pervasive PCB spill in Canadian history, it would be appropriate for him to set up a medical registry immediately which would allow those people who came in contact with the spill to have a long-term medical evaluation done of any impact it would have on them?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is a serious question and one, in light of what has happened, which has to be taken seriously. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that our Department has been in touch with Ontario health officials on site, especially Dr. Peter Friesen. We have been in contact with him pretty well on a daily basis.

There was a family vehicle following the truck which carried the transformers. That family had their vehicle sprayed with PCB and the carrier solution. Unfortunately, the gentleman who was driving the vehicle which was sprayed came into contact with the contaminants themselves, or the toxic substance, as well as his family. We are looking at certain conditions there. I do not want to frighten anyone. I want to say that it is being examined very closely and, as I said the other day in the House, any help we can give, obviously, we are ready to offer immediately, and have done so.

With respect to the question of a registry, I do not want in any way to reject it out of hand or say it is not a valuable suggestion. I will look at that suggestion in light of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister may want to make a statement on motions.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the medical registry would be set up. It would not cost anything.

INFORMATION GIVEN BY TRUCKING COMPANY TO QUEBEC AUTHORITIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is also reported that Kinetic Ecological Resource Group Ltd. falsely advised Environment Quebec that the transformers were empty prior to this week's disastrous spill. Since the people of Canada have been criminally victimized by the negligence of this corporation, I wonder if the Minister would assure this House that those responsible will be immediately arrested, as they should be, and prosecuted under every possible statute, including the Criminal Code, because it is about time some of these environmental polluters, the bunch of bastards that they are, were put behind bars.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the gravity of the question but I must ask the Hon. Member to withdraw the offending word. The use of the language is unparliamentary. I am sure the Hon. Member can find a way to rephrase the question.

Mr. Fulton: I would be pleased to withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, but I trust they will be arrested.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can readily appreciate the indignation expressed by my colleague opposite, intemperate though it may be. I will take his question as a representation and look into it seriously.

Oral Questions

PETRO-CANADA

SALE OF COME-BY-CHANCE REFINERY—ASSESSMENT OF BIDS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the Petro-Canada sale of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery. On May 1, Petro-Canada will open and begin to assess the bids which have been received for the purchase of the refinery. Will the Minister please tell the House and the people of Newfoundland what criteria will be used by Petro-Canada to assess those bids?

● (1450)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter for Petro-Canada to decide in an open bidding process. I do not think it would be useful to discuss the question of criteria when it is still open for tenders.

ASSESSMENT CRITERIA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that a bid which has as its objective the reactivation of that refinery is infinitely preferable to the people of Newfoundland, indeed I am sure to the people of Canada, then one which would simply see the refinery scrapped, so the question of criteria in assessing the bids is fantastically important. It may be the difference between long-term economic benefits and jobs in Newfoundland, and someone who simply comes in and scraps the refinery.

If the Minister will not discuss criteria in this House, will she at least assure us that she will instruct Petro-Canada to look at long-term economic benefits to the people of Newfoundland and long-term jobs in reactivating that refinery, rather than Petro-Canada's cash balance sheet?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that we have done more for jobs to the benefit of Newfoundland in six months than his Party did in 16 years. I would further remind him that the Newfoundland election is over, and I have told him that all options for the future of the refinery are open.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport). Recently, some carriers spread uncertainty and confusion about the future of Mirabel. Some very dynamic carriers like Nationair consider Mirabel a remarkable airport, and they intend to develop new services there. Does the Minister intend to establish a development plan of the said airport to make the investments of Canadian taxpayers profitable?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure the Hon. Member. The Department of Transport cannot afford the cost of closing any airport be it Mirabel or even Dorval. It is obvious however that we are trying, mainly with groups from the Montreal area, to find solutions which would make it possible, on the one hand, to cover all the operating costs without incurring huge deficits and, on the other hand, to recognize the transportation needs in the Montreal area in relation to the needs of the country as a whole.

MINES AND MINING

FALCONBRIDGE INVESTMENT IN NORWAY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. On April 3 I asked the Minister in this House if he was aware of the fact that Falconbridge Mines Limited was preparing to spend $41.5 million in expanding a refinery in Norway to refine Botswana nickel while never providing a refinery in the Sudbury basin where Falconbridge is located. I asked him if he was prepared to approach Falconbridge to get the refinery built in the Sudbury basin. He said he was not aware of what was happening. Did the Minister contact Falconbridge and make representations to make sure that it put the $41.5 million as a down payment against a refinery and do something it has never done since it has been in Canada?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I have already provided the Hon. Member with the written response which I assured him he would get after his original question. I have since learned, and I think the public announcement in the press today confirms that this particular corporation plans to spend five times as much money in the Sudbury basin as is proposed for its investment in Norway.

DEFERMENT OF TAXES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I ask him the question not to put him on the spot but because I know he is knowledgeable in the mining field.

Over the last two years Falconbridge was allowed to defer $150 million in federal taxes. Yesterday Mr. Bill James said at the annual shareholders' meeting that they have found a new technique for not paying taxes in Canada. In view of that, will the Prime Minister use his influence, and the contacts I know he has with the management and executive officers of Falconbridge, and try to persuade them that this is the time, when the company is turning around, to make that big investment in Sudbury which can get us out of forever shipping our resources to be refined overseas, and give us a chance to recoup the 800 jobs we have lost at the Falconbridge nickel mine in the Sudbury basin?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I can only say, Mr. Speaker, what I think is widely known, and my colleague knows it at least as well as I do, that Falconbridge went through some extremely difficult times. There were many years of substantial, overwhelming losses, and a badly damaged balance sheet. It was the intervention, I think, of Bill James, a skilled management team, and excellent labour relations, which turned it around. I think all Members of the House should be saluting the management for what they did to save jobs in the basin.

With regard to any technique which may have been developed not to pay taxes, I assume that he was referring to loss carry forwards and things which are provided for under the Income Tax Act, because I can assure my hon. friend, knowing Mr. James and the leadership of that company, who are most honourable people, that this Government in any event will make sure that the doctrine of fairness applies and that everyone, including all corporations, pay a fair amount of tax.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about the refinery?

PAYMENT FOR RURAL POST OFFICE BOXES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue with respect to the Post Office. Bearing in mind that urban people can approach their post office box in any state of attire, reach around the corner of the door and get their mail absolutely free, does the Postmaster General consider it fair that in some rural areas people have to pay for their post office boxes and that there is an intention to have the room those boxes are located in closed at 3.30 in the afternoon?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I always look forward to getting these questions from my hon. friend. Let me start by saying that I am not the Postmaster General; I am the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. As the Hon. Member knows, the Corporation has a rate increase application before Cabinet. Cabinet's role at the present time is to act as a regulator, and for the next 60 days we will be receiving representations from Canadians. I will certainly accept the representation made by the hon. gentleman and ensure that it is drawn to the attention of Canada Post Corporation.

QUEBEC MILK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and deals with dairy policy.

Yesterday at the convention of the Quebec Federation of Milk Producers, all delegates were anticipating an announcement about the partial payment of $1.40 per hectolitre which was expected since the very beginning of April. Can the Minister tell the House when the payment will be made and what the amount will be?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question and the concern expressed on behalf of the dairy farmers of Canada. I can only respond by saying that the matter is under very serious consideration at the moment.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister of Agriculture now considering the abolishment of the Canadian Dairy Commission which has been so useful to farmers during the past ten years, providing some stability and security in that important production?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member knew a little more about the dairy industry in Canada he would realize that indeed the request put forward by the dairy farmers of Canada is not shared equally or totally or to the same degree by producers in all provinces of Canada at this moment.

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday we marked "equality day". At the same time as we were talking rhetorically about "equality day", the Conservatives on the Standing Committee on Regional Development voted down an amendment to take into account employment equity.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may not know that matters that are before a committee may not be raised in the House.

Mr. Langdon: I am not raising that question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Member's question?

Point of Order—Mr. Gauthier

Mr. Langdon: The question, Mr. Speaker, is whether the Government believes, despite that vote, that it should exercise its influence—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I just indicated to the Member that he could not mention the vote of the committee. Does the Member have a question? I realize he is new.

Mr. Langdon: Does the Government believe that it should exercise its influence wherever possible to encourage employment equity for those so long disadvantaged in our society, such as women, native people, visible minorities, and the disabled?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes.

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENT OF MISS MacDONALD ON ABSENCE OF MEMBER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to something that happened during Question Period. A comment was made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). It is well known that in the House we do not refer to the presence or absence of Members—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Such are the Standing Orders of the House, whether we like it or not.

As far as attendance is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) has one of the best records in this House and the Minister could follow his example before making charges as serious as those she made today. I would ask her to apologize.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, if I have in any way injured or embarrassed the Hon. Member, I sincerely apologize. I really felt that, having posed those questions, it must have been his absence that inspired them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think all Hon. Members know that there is a tradition in the House of creative use of language from time to time. I thank the Hon. Member for raising that point of order and would encourage all Members to refrain from mentioning the presence or absence of any other Member because, in fact, that is the rule of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader, the distinguished President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), what business he intends to call over the next week. In particular I would like to ask him, if he is so serious about having the NORAD agreement studied by committee, whether he would use his authority and responsibility to put it on the Order Paper, and call it for debate. He does not need the consent of the Official Opposition for that purpose. He may not realize, although he should as Government House Leader, that debate in Parliament has to have its focus on the floor of the House. He seems to be embarrassed by that but he is very wrong in that. Certainly if he does this he will find the motion will not receive protracted debate; he is quite wrong in suggesting that. It will have reasonable debate which will show the significant attention he should pay to this important subject.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I would like to respond to the distinguished House Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray). I want first to deal with the business of the House for the coming week. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that I, representing the Government, have attempted on every occasion to consult fully with him and the representative of the New Democratic Party. I have tried to take into account their valid points of view and to argue them out of their invalid points of view. In that connection the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition made a request through my office this morning with respect to the business of the House next week. To show what a swell guy I am, I accepted his suggestion and have altered the business of the House for the next week in order to accommodate the Official Opposition.

Rather than having an allotted day tomorrow, we are going to deal with Government business. We will continue consideration of Bill C-39, which is an Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987. I hope that will be disposed of tomorrow after a reasonable debate as I think this is an important matter which deserves urgent attention.

We will then follow with a Bill entitled "An Act to dissolve the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and to amend the Surplus Crown Assets Act and other Acts in consequence thereof", which is going to be introduced later this day by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre).

To accommodate the Official Opposition, I propose to designate Monday as the third allotted day in the Supply period. Tuesday the House will begin consideration at report stage of Bill C-15, which is Investment Canada. When we finish that Bill on Tuesday we will move on to the report stage of Bill C-18.

On Wednesday, if we have not completed consideration of Bill C-18, we will continue with consideration of report stage and possibly get to third reading of that legislation which, I understand, has now received very thorough consideration in committee and has the general support of all Members. After the consideration of Bill C-18 on Wednesday we will move to Bill C-40, which is an Act to amend the Customs Act. Mr. Speaker, I look forward to Thursday. In the event that we do not complete the consideration of Bill C-15 on Tuesday, I would propose to bring that Bill forward for further consideration on Thursday next.

With respect to the NORAD reference, the Standing Committee of the House of Commons has an unprecedented opportunity to consider this important treaty for one full year in advance of the renewal date. As the Hon. House Leader will know, I proposed to him and to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Deans) that this matter go immediately to committee for the purpose of allowing the committee to have a full year to consider, in the fullest context, every aspect of that particular treaty and its implications for Canada.

I received the consent of the New Democratic Party to have that matter go forward immediately. They were prepared to do that before Easter. Unfortunately, as I indicated in the course of Question Period, the Liberal Party insisted on having a full debate with respect to this matter prior to it going to committee. I think the Official Opposition has it all turned around backwards. We should first investigate and then have a debate with respect to the results of the investigation of the committee. I urge the Hon. House Leader to allow us to go forward with this reference. I am sure that all Members of the House are very interested in having this opportunity which we present, which was never given to us by the predecessor Government.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, although I am sure the Hon. House Leader is not intending to do so, in asking the Official Opposition to allow us to get on with the reference he is inadvertently creating a very misleading impression. The Government does not need the permission of the Official Opposition to put the motion to refer the matter to committee on the Order Paper. He does not need the permission of the Official Opposition to call that motion for debate. There are many provisions in the rules to limit debate if, in the opinion of the Government, the Opposition Parties are taking undue time.

Contrary to his recollection, I at no time said that we wanted to have a protracted or a full debate. I said that we wanted to have the motion called for debate and to have a limited number of speeches. I stand by what I said in that regard. If he would care to consult with me he will find a disposition, in line with my usual attitude of co-operation, to have the motion go forward relatively swiftly after a limited number of speeches. He must accept his responsibilities, put the motion on the Order Paper and call it for debate, it in fact he is serious about having the matter of the NORAD agreement go to committee for full study.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will allow the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) an opportunity to respond. However, as previous Speakers have indicated, this period is for announcing business. The negotiations concerning that business should occur somewhere else.

• (1510)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I take the previous statement by the Opposition House Leader as a question and my response will be very brief. The reason why I negotiate with the Opposition Party leaders is that I want to make the fullest use of the very limited time we have available for debate on a number of important issues. I could move ahead unilaterally but then I would be criticized by the Hon. Member for proceeding with motions before discussing these matters with the Opposition Parties.

I am quite prepared to accept what the honourable House Leader said. I will pursue this matter with him and discuss it with my distinguished colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen), who is anxious to get before this committee and answer all questions that the Hon. Member may want to pose.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would not be at all surprised if we resolve this.

In considering Government business, would the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) keep in mind that Motion No. 16 under Government Business refers specifically to the question of twin-tracking that is presently taking place through western Canada and the effect of that on native and other communities. Might he consider calling that motion for further debate at an early opportunity?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as you know, my colleagues the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) have demonstrated sensitivity and concern with respect to this matter and have involved themselves in very considerable negotiation with the people of British Columbia.

I can only say that I will take the Hon. Member's remarks as a representation in terms of the desire of the Hon. Member to have that brought forward as an item for debate. I think there is a resolution coming with respect to the matter on the basis of consultation. If we can get co-operation with respect to other items of Government business on the Order Paper, this would help free some time in order to deal with this important matter.

REFORM OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO FIRST REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of the Standing Order 46(2) I have the honour to table in both official languages copies of the Government's comprehensive response to the first report of the Task Force on Reform of the House of Commons, as requested by the committee pursuant to Standing Order 69(13). I know that the distinguished chairman of that committee is in the House and I applaud him and members of the committee for their excellent work.

STATEMENT ON TASK FORCE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have just tabled the response of the Government to the first report of the Task Force on parliamentary reform. I was very pleased to do so because my colleagues and I, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), have long held the view that the Government can only be a true instrument of the Canadian people if it is accountable to them through Parliament.

The Government was anxious to proceed with reform immediately following its election last fall. However, we recognized that Members of Parliament had to lead the effort for reform and that meaningful changes in the rules and structure of the House of Commons could only come about as a result of co-operation and consensus between members of all Parties. It was for that reason that the commitment to create a Task Force on the Reform of the House of Commons was outlined in the Speech from the Throne.

The members of the task force have taken their mandate to heart and produced a unanimous report which proposes significant changes to the rules of the House and the role of Members of Parliament. Therefore, I am pleased to tell the House that the Government supports the adoption of the majority of the task force's recommendations and we propose a trial period of one year in accordance with past practice with respect to the implementation of new and provisional rules.

As Members will know, reforms proposed in the last Parliament by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure formed the basis for the Provisional Standing Orders under which the House now functions. The Government believes that the recommendations contained in the first report complete the work undertaken by the special committee. For that reason, it is appropriate to adopt the recommendations contained in the first report of the task force at this time rather than waiting for a final report of the task force.

That having been said, the Government proposes to deal with all future reports of the task force as a package in order to avoid a piecemeal approach to parliamentary reform. As the final report of the task force is expected before the House adjourns for the summer recess, we believe this will not impose any delay in the reform effort.

Having outlined the general background, I would like to turn to a discussion of some of the specifics of those recommendations. The Government has noted its technical concerns about specific recommendations in the annex to the comprehensive response. In no instance have we found an obstacle that cannot be overcome. As you know, the task force has proposed that a change be made in the method of electing the occupant of the Chair. Although there is no reason to believe that there would be any need to elect a Speaker within the one-year trial period being recommended by the Government, we feel that this is an integral part of the reforms suggested by the task force and that the incorporation of this proposal in the experimental rules would send an important message to Members about our commitment to ensuring their increased participation in House affairs.

By agreeing to include Private Members and Members of the Opposition on the Board of Internal Economy, the Government will be asking Members to take responsibility for the management of the House of Commons, to meet the needs of Members and to make informed and accountable decisions about matters which impact upon public expenditures.

Independence in the management of the institution will be paralleled by an increased independence in the legislative operations of the House. The Government has and will continue to have the right and responsibility to initiate legislation, but Private Members must play a greater role in the legislative process. For example, we agree that the scheduling of Private Members' Business could more appropriately be done by the Table Officers than by the Government House Leader's office. Private Members should not feel that their right to initiate legislation is controlled by the Government or any Minister of that Government.

This is also the thrust of the recommendation that any four members of a House committee be permitted to initiate a meeting on due notice. In agreeing to adopt this proposal, the Government is taking a major step toward increasing real authority of the committees of the House.

More and more, the substantive work of Parliament will be done in its committees. By providing committees with greater independence and by increasing their budgets and staff resources, the Government hopes that Members of Parliament will apply their considerable skills not only to the study and improvement of legislation, but also to the analysis of major issues. When we create legislative committees, we will free the standing committees to devote their full time to the consideration of estimates, annual reports and special studies.

As well, it is the Government's hope that the removal of the automatic provision for questions of confidence on votable Supply motions will encourage the Opposition to bring forward substantive policy proposals for the consideration of the House.

Finally, we were pleased to see the recommendation that statements by Ministers be streamlined to ensure that time is not lost from the consideration of Government business. Contrary to the practice in recent years, this Government has made a conscientious effort to make major policy statements in the House and I believe there have been at least 20 occasions when major statements have been made by Ministers in the House. I might add that we have taken these steps at the expense of time which would have been available for Government business in the House. We believe the appropriate place to announce and debate policy is in the House, not, with the greatest of deference, in the National Press Theatre.

Since the task force report was tabled in the House, the Government has engaged in consultations with members of all Parties and a consensus in support of the task force recommendations has emerged. As I have said, the Government would like to see reforms introduced as a co-operative effort and I would like to thank my colleagues, particularly those in the Opposition, for the role they have played in this regard. The job is not finished. It is my intention to meet with the Opposition House Leaders in the very near future to discuss the timetable and method of implementation of the proposed reforms in accordance with the spirit that has prevailed up to this point with respect to consultation.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the Chairman—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the Vice-Chairman, and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the second Vice-Chairman of this committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I know something of the hard work that has taken place in this committee. I know all of us in this House share the sentiment of appreciation toward these Hon. Members and the other distinguished members of the task force. I congratulate these members of the task force. They have produced an excellent report. I wish them success in their continuing deliberations and look forward to receiving their further reports and ultimately their final report before the summer recess.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members who have been following the progress of parliamentary reform are pleased to hear today's statement by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). A great deal of thought by the special committee on parliamentary reform in the last Parliament went into the report upon which the recommendations of the present task force were founded, and there is a general consensus that the ideas deserve a good trial.

I am looking forward to meeting with the President of the Privy Council and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to discuss the details of the implementation of these measures and I hope that the Government will be ready with the specific proposals that will make it possible to clarify any minor difficulties that could exist.

We in this Party are quite prepared to endorse a different system for electing the Speaker, but we do not see much sense in putting in a new system for one year only in view of the very small likelihood of our having to elect another Speaker in this Parliament, unless the President of the Privy Council is trying to tell us something about which we have not been previously aware!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Similarly, we do not see the need for a one-year experiment with regard to the composition of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. There is so great a consensus on adding Private Members, including Opposition Members, to the management council of the House of Commons that I cannot understand why any experiment should be necessary.

Most other parliamentary jurisdictions have adopted an all-Party approach to such matters, and I would not think that we would be well served by delaying a permanent solution as recommended by the task force. Let us do this as soon as possible by bringing forward permanent amendments to the legislation in question, because as we know this requires a legislative change rather than simply having to amend our Standing Orders.

We welcome also the acceptance of the recommendations regarding statements in the House. I would say to the President of the Privy Council, however, that this change will work only if he insists that his colleagues adhere rigorously to his regime of giving ample notice of the statement, as well as providing copies of it, to the Opposition critics well in advance. I know that the hon. gentleman has tried to persuade his colleagues to co-operate, but on a number of occasions they have not done so. I want to commend those Ministers who endeavour to make that system work, even when it is decided to give a statement only shortly before the House opens. I could give a bit of a report card on those who have made it work and those who have not, but I think those to whom I could refer will know who they are. This procedure will work only if Ministers will co-operate and only in this way will an increase in the use of Minister's statements in fact enhance the role of this House of Commons.

The small alteration in arranging Private Members' Business certainly is acceptable to the Official Opposition, but the suggestion by the Government that a failure to provide 24 hours' notice results in the loss of Private Members' Business lends itself too readily to manipulation by a Government wanting to find a few extra hours of Government time. It is not unknown after all for Government back-benchers to respond readily to the Ministry's suggestions, if not outright direction.

The most interesting changes, of course, will be with regard to committees. The provision of budgets and staff is long overdue, but Members should remember that this places more demands on them rather than fewer. We must guard against creating committee bureaucracies. They must be instruments, tools, of service to the Members of Parliament in their work, not their masters.

With respect to the proposals regarding changes in the committee system, I must say I personally have some questions and there are questions that could be raised about the concept of legislative committees. In a House the size of ours, I believe that specialized committees are best suited to dealing with legislation; but our Party is certainly willing to see how the recommendations for legislative committees work for a one-year trial period. I am quite concerned, however, that the Government is already trying to dilute the effectiveness of the experiment by not agreeing to make Ministers members of legislative committees on their own Bills. This is a very serious departure from the concept of legislative committees and makes me wonder how seriously the Government is really prepared to take Parliament in this important area. After all, Mr. Speaker, there are already disturbing signs that Ministers of the current Government are not taking our current committees as seriously as they should when it comes to willingness to attend committee hearings, to stay at those hearings for the appropriate length of time and in fact to give due notice of when they are ready to come before a committee.

As far as dealing with tax bills in a committee other than a Committee of the Whole is concerned, I became convinced of the need for this many years ago when I had the responsibility of steering such matters through the House. I would hope that as far as possible most Ways and Means Bills would be considered in the same legislative committee because they are so interrelated.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to try and deal with all the recommendations but let me say that I welcome the willingness of the Government to try these experiments. I hope the Government will not succumb to any temptation to try to use the more complex committee system to diffuse the political process for its own objectives or to try to use the changes only to keep otherwise errant Government back-benchers busy. Most important, I hope all Members realize that these experimental rules mean more work, not less. New rules in themselves do not automatically make Parliament better; only the diligent work of Members can do that. In the meantime I await the call of the President of the Privy Council to discuss the details and terms of the proposed experiment.

I want to congratulate all members of the task force on their work. We await with interest their further reports and the Government's response to these reports.

This House of Commons and its committees are fundamental to the functioning, the very existence, of our democratic system of government. It is in the interest of all Canadians that we strive on an on-going basis to make the House and its committees as relevant and as effective as possible in terms of the needs of the country and its people. I believe the report will make a real contribution to achieving these objectives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by congratulating the committee. I know the hard work that went into the development of the report, both in the past and the report on which the committee is currently working.

I want to say something about the committee. The committee could well serve as a model for other committees. The way the committee has worked together, the way the committee has sought consensus, and the way the committee has worked in what I think could reasonably be described as a relatively non-partisan way I hope will be an example for the committees that will flow from the report we have before us here today.

There is no question that Parliament will be effectively changed by the recommendations being adopted which the Government House Leader indicated the Government is willing to see implemented here today. We are going to see Parliament move from what has been a somewhat misunderstood institution, I suspect, into a reasonably modern age. With the change, however, there will be a shift in the focus of Parliament.

While much of the focus of Parliament, from a public point of view, has been here in the House of Commons until now, with the new committee structure, funding arrangements and staffing arrangements that will be made available, a lot of the work that previously was done here will now be done by the committees. Therefore, the public of Canada will also have to adjust to the changed focus of Parliament. In addition, if the committees do in fact take their lead from the special committee's example and if the chairmen of the committees that will be established can take their lead from the work of the chairman of this committee, I am confident that the work of Parliament will be enhanced by the recommendations being adopted.

Like many Members, I am somewhat apprehensive, but nevertheless willing to go ahead with the change. It was our view that this committee, having worked as it did, deserved to see its recommendations implemented. We ought not to adjust unecessarily any of the recommendations. It may well be that the question of having Ministers as members of committees studying their legislation is something that will require additional thought. Although the Government has indicated that perhaps it is not prepared to proceed with that change, after our discussions maybe there will be a way to incorporate it in the final recommendation that will become legislation and will become part of the temporary rules of the House of Commons come September of this year. It is to that that I want to address myself.

It is very important, now that we have the Government's response—a response which I might say I welcome and a response which I might say is pleasantly surprising—that we set about to work out the methods of implementation. We do not have a lot of time. The rules will have to be in place by this summer in order that those who are going to have the responsibility for administering, whether it be the Table Officers, the Speaker, the committee chairmen or the administration of the House of Commons, will have time to become fully aware of the changes that have taken place and to put in place the mechanisms necessary to allow for the changes to be effective.

For example, the request for ways to ensure adequate funding for committees will have to receive serious discussion about how that will take place, what methods will be used to determine budgets and who will be responsible for the final decisions on matters such as that. Therefore, those things must be put in place very quickly.

The other matter that strikes me as making very much sense is the proposal to include opposition Members among those who administer the House of Commons. It is quite clear that, since the Commissioners of Internal Economy deal primarily with matters relating to those things directly responsible to Parliament, Parliament itself has to be represented on that, all of Parliament and not just simply the Government side. Therefore, I welcome the proposal from the committee in the first place and the Government's acceptance of the proposal to establish a place for the Opposition.

I trust that the recommendation will be interpreted in such a way as to make sure that both opposition Parties will be represented. I would certainly find myself somewhat less supportive if that were not to be the case. For example, I would not like to see members of the Liberal Party left out. I want them there.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Have you thought this through?

Mr. Deans: I thought it through. When we replace them as the Official Opposition, I will still want them there.

Mr. Axworthy: Can you get there in a wheelchair?

Mr. Deans: I may be able to get there in a wheelchair with the assistance of my friend. Having said that, I do think it is an important matter that has to be looked at.

The other reason for speed—not haste but speed—is that the rules of the House are again being reviewed by yet another standing committee of the House in addition to the special committee. It is in the process of reviewing the rules for technical changes. Clearly if that committee is to do its work, it has to know exactly what the disposition of the recommendations is to be.

I close by saying that I commend the Government for taking this step. I want everyone watching to recognize I have said that because frequently I have been told that never in my life have I congratulated the Government. Today I do. That is a momentous moment in the history of Parliament. I commend the Government for taking that step. Now the task is to get it into legislative form and do it quickly, not rush it through at the last minute.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

First, I should like to congratulate him on the Government's decision to accept the first report of the committee. In my opinion, this is the kind of encouragement of which the Chairman of the Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), is particularly deserving, but it is encouraging as well for all other committee members who have worked very hard under the able guidance of their chairman and who have spared neither energy nor time to draft these recommendations.

Here is my question: Can the Minister give us the assurance that these recommendations, which have been endorsed by the Government, will be implemented when the parliamentary session resumes, at the latest by next September?

Second, since the Minister knows that the second report was tabled and that it has to do with structural changes, particularly concerning the voting procedure in the House and better facilities for parliamentarians in some committee rooms, would the Government agree to the proposed changes and carry out major projects this summer so that, when we return in September, the new voting system would be in place, if that is the wish of the Government? I imagine some of the structural changes will require some time, and I am concerned about the remarks of the Minister who seemed to imply that, with respect to the second and subsequent reports of our committee, the Government might wait to give an overall response to all our recommendations. I think an exception should be made at least in the case of those recommendations of the second report which might entail summer work.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, may I deal with these matters raised by hon. friend in sequence. We certainly do intend to have a target date on the introduction and implementation of all the provisions in the first report, and which are the subject of the responses which I have tabled today, in place by the time the House resumes its business after the recess which takes place in July and August.

Obviously we are not oblivious of the fact that there has been a report of the committee. That report addresses itself specifically in terms of accommodation and structural changes that will be required with respect to the facilities of the House. I did not intend to give the impression to the Hon. Member or any other Member that somehow we are going to delay the implementation of any subsequent report. Indeed, the contrary is the fact. We will want to move quickly on giving a full response and indeed we look forward to hearing the final report of the committee so that we can look at it in its total context.

There has been a disposition by Members of Parliament represented by the House Leaders to move forward on these matters. As the Hon. Member will know, we had an unprecedented occasion on which all three House Leaders, arm in arm, cheek by jowl, shoulder to shoulder appeared before the task force. There was an amazing degree of unanimity in the presentation which we made. We discussed the matter and attempted to meet the various questions of the members of that task force. One of the things upon which we all agreed, I think, is that in accordance with the tradition that we have established, we should implement these matters on a provisional basis for a period of one year to iron out the kinks so that we can in fact review these matters at the end of that period of time and make improvements after we have had the benefit of experience.

In terms of the facilities of this institution, we will have to make accommodation for the new legislative committees and we will have to look at what we have to do in terms of making appropriate space available. I simply say to the Hon. Member that I hear from members of the committee that they have very great ideas and some very important initiatives they want to bring forward. They have talked about the precincts of the House of Commons and the creation of an intendant of Parliament with respect to its facilities. I do not want to make structural changes and find later on that I have offended the intendant who is subsequently appointed after consideration by the House of Commons, if that is the will of the House.

I assure the Hon. Member that we will carry out the spirit of the first report and make sure that there is full consultation. We will make sure that all Members of Parliament, through House Leaders and members of the task force, are consulted so that we will have something of which we can all be proud and something in the evolution of which we can all feel that we have taken part.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to say that, having had the opportunity to serve on the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure in the last Parliament and now serving on the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, I am glad the Government has taken the initiative and indicated its support for the reforms that were suggested in the first report. I would say briefly that the Government could have gone a little further. It could have used some elements from the second report such as those that did not have to wait for subsequent reports. It could have acted all at once to bring in not only the reforms that were contained in the first report but also a handful of those contained in the second report. In any event, there were only a handful of reforms contained in the second report.

If the Government House Leader felt he needed to put off the recommendations vis-à-vis the intendant of Parliament which was recommended in the second report, that is fair enough, but I do not see that that was just cause for putting off some of the other relatively minor reforms that could have been implemented now without leaving the Government open to the accusation that it was engaging in parliamentary reform in a piecemeal fashion. I appreciate that concern. It is just too bad that the Government did not seize the moment to do a bit more than it has indicated it intends to do. I would encourage—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Blaikie: Do I have a question?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, this is a question period. I appreciate the importance of the issue. It is, however, a question period.

Mr. Blaikie: Perhaps the Government House Leader has already indicated this, but I was not able to be here for the beginning of his remarks. I would like to ask him just what kind of time frame he had in mind for getting the House to act and to actually put these things into place so that they can be ready when he wants them to be ready.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, as we indicated to the task force when all three House Leaders appeared before it, we thought that an appropriate time would be the commencement of the sittings of the House in September. This would give us ample opportunity to make a number of adjustments in terms of ensuring that the Standing Orders are in proper form, that facilities have been looked at and that there has been a reasonable interlude from the parliamentary life that we experience while the House is in session.

In terms of the observations made with respect to why we did not respond to parts of the second report, the answer is quite simple. It was not by virtue of any intention on our part to forestall consideration of these matters, but to get where we are today involved a consultative process. I could have returned to the drawing board and consulted with House Leaders again to make sure that everyone was on side with respect to additional recommendations. However, and I think other House Leaders would share this view, I wanted to do this on a basis that was not unilateral, however admirable or meritorious the report may be. Accordingly, we opted to respond to this report as requested by the committee and in the course of that we indicated that we would like to look at the final results of the task force to see where we are in the total context.

Again, I reiterate the fact that we on the government side are committed to early action with respect to items that find the approval of the House of Commons through the task force report. I do not say this in any partisan sense, but I do not think anyone who has listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speak on this topic and doubt the will of the Government to move forward with respect to the recommendations of this committee. We hold the members of this committee and the process under which they operate in very high regard. We intend to use our responsibilities as a Government to support the task force in its excellent work.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

MOTION TO REFER DOCUMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are two orders of reference with which I want to deal at this point in time, on the basis of consent. There have been consultations with the opposition Parties and if Your Honour were to put these motions forward—they are references—you will find that there is unanimous consent. The first order of reference is to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and reads as follows:

That the document entitled "The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion," tabled earlier this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs;

That the Committee examine and report on the proposals contained therein;

That the Committee be empowered to retain expert, clerical and secretarial staff as may be deemed necessary; and

That the Committee submit its final report to the House of Commons no later than September 30, 1985.

That reference has received the assent of all Parties and if you put it, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be adopted unanimously.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the adoption of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO REFER BILL C-37 TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the order of reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, which reads as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be empowered to consider the circumstances leading up to the support package offered to the Canadian Commercial Bank as approved in Bill C-37, the Canadian Commercial Bank Financial Assistance Act as passed by the House on March 28, 1985; and

That the Committee submit its findings to the House no later than May 31, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the adoption of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY FISCAL EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS 1982-87 ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-39, an Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the warm-up just before the luncheon break, I was addressing the central principle and purpose of this legislation, which is to provide for a response to one of the fundamental responsibilities within the federal Government—to ensure a fair sharing of equity across Canada in terms of the distribution of benefits and certainly the distribution of economic opportunities. I was making the case that one of the serious transgressions and uncertainties which has become the hallmark of the recent Government is its lack of attention and sensitivity to those issues, and that in fact the whole thrust of its economic program is not a thrust at all, but a scattered, disorganized, chaotic, random set of actions which has no coherence as far as a regional development program is concerned. We only have to return to the November 8 statement for proof of that. It is recognized that those areas which are most disadvantaged suffer the most severely by federal government cut-backs. There is a direct relationship and axiom between the two. The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) has become one of the all-time slashers of history. In fact, it is a deliberate attack upon the regional foundations of Canada. We saw a clear example of this today in Question Period. His advisory committee was given the objective of trying to reduce the deficit and in fact chose an area of programming dealing with economic benefits for native people. That is the choice which it made as the basis for its so-called reduction. Once again, those least able to protect themselves and those most in need of economic opportunity will be the victims of this peculiar and ill-thought-out approach to economic matters in Canada.

Certainly we see it not only in the cut-backs in industrial development programs, in investments in public infrastructure, in transportation, in research and in the environment, but we see it, perhaps most seriously, in the erosion of other forms of transfer programs.

I should like to talk about one program in particular, the unemployment insurance program. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has made it quite clear that he intends to transfer a large proportion of the present premium rate of unemployment insurance back to the tax rolls. This means that the unemployment insurance program, which probably nets a full $2 billion of transfers to the poorer regions of Canada to ensure at least some basic level of income stability, will not be subject to entitlements under the Unemployment Insurance Act, but to the whims and caprices of the Minister of Finance and his officials at tax time. In fact, we will see a total erosion of the program. We have already seen cut-backs in severance pay and on pension rights. Who does that hurt? It is not the well-to-do nor the members of the "Mulroney Club". It hurts people who are faced with economic disadvantage. Those are the ones who are affected by those kinds of cuts, not the friends of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who are paying a hundred dollars for special access and special privilege. The ones who are really being hurt are those in the region.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I see Conservative Members are coming to life. I suppose it is because they are not members of the club. They went through that awkward stage of getting themselves elected as Members of Parliament only to find out it is really the people who can afford it who get special access to the Prime Minister. That is the way the system works. I give my deep sympathies to members of that caucus that they have been so excluded from the privileged circle of access and information, but that is something that they will have to work out for themselves.

● (1600)

The point I am making is that this attempt by the Government to build one block upon another has become a major withdrawal of commitments to regional development. In my own Province of Manitoba the evidence is very clear. As a result of the November 8 statement, the minimum reduction of job levels in that province was 4,000 permanent jobs, to say nothing of the 2,000 summer jobs which were lost. That is clearly reflected in the substantially increased unemployment statistics for that province. The withdrawal of federal investment in a number of important projects, the slowing down of the Churchill program, the withdrawal from the rebuilding of the railway cars at Transcona, the stoppage of the downtown programs, are all beginning to eat into the responsibility of the federal Government to invest in regions which do not have the economic wherewithal. Now Government has added insult to injury by bringing in on top of that a further reduction in the equalization payments. The two-year program which is announced in this Bill in fact will result in approximately a $60 million reduction according to the figures which were provided by the Minister of Finance himself; some $22 million in this fiscal year and some $37 million in the next fiscal year.

I go back to my point and the point which was raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), who argued that the equalization is so essential an underpinning to the whole question of regional equity and regional sharing, that it should not be one which is arbitrarily decided by this Government alone. Surely, in the spirit of co-operation and consultation and all the fine sounding promises which were made, this is an area which should certainly be discussed, but it was not. There was no agreement with the provinces. They were simply handed a fait accompli. The only access to information they had is when the Minister of Finance left his briefing books on a coffee table in a Winnipeg hotel. That was the only way they found out what the Department of Finance and the Minister were really thinking. That is a very unique and curious way to transfer information back to the provinces. It certainly saves on stamps, but the fact is that it does not result in the kind of sharing of information which is essential to make this kind of program work.

If one looks at the various tiers of assistance, one finds the withdrawal of direct grants by the federal Government in terms of investment in federal programs. If one looks at the transfer programs to individuals such as unemployment insurance, one finds withdrawal. If one looks at the basic fiscal transfer programs, one finds withdrawal. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the total equation cannot be added up simply by taking a look at one tier. We have to look at the entire set of withdrawals, and we find that the poor regions of this country are becoming the real victims of the so-called economic renewal. And to be a so-called winner or loser in this society really depends upon where one lives and which kind of club one belongs to and whether one can afford it.

I also want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces themselves cannot absolve themselves entirely of responsibility in this matter. I believe one of the most useful reports, one which has been dropped like a hot potato by the Government because it provides too much incriminating evidence on its friends, is a report on the funding of post-secondary education across Canada. It points out that over a period of time the federal transfers for post-secondary education were going up on an average of 13 per cent each year, and the provinces were not in any way matching those transfers. In fact, in my own Province of Manitoba in 1977-78, the proportion of funding for operating grants to provincial colleges and universities by the federal Government was 80 per cent. By 1984-85, it had reached 103 per cent. That example is repeated in several other provinces. I know that there have been provincial Governments, mainly Tory in origin, which have banged the table and said they were getting a raw deal. The fact is that these figures clearly point out that what was happening was that the federal Government was doing more than its share. In no way were those funds being matched by the provincial Governments. As a result, federal funds were in fact supplementing or subsidizing other provincial expenditures. It would seem to me that one of the clear priorities of the Minister of Finance must be a direct response to the facts and figures provided in this report. This report demonstrates dramatically how the provincial Governments have been camouflaging in terms of fair sharing.

We are not saying that the federal Government, when it gets into questions related to fiscal arrangements between the provinces and the federal Government, should simply put more money on the table. But it should at least adopt some kind of bargaining attitude. It should at least come together with a total package in mind. What is it going to do on higher education? What is it going to do on unemployment insurance or regional development grants? That is the kind of effective federal-provincial initiative which we would recommend and which my colleague who spoke first in this debate strongly promoted and endorsed.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, to Hon. Members opposite that they should recognize that this is one of the vital issues with which they will have to deal. If they fail to come up with a clear, concise and coherent answer and response to the question of how to deal with regional inequities, and fail to make sure that federal and provincial Governments share equally in the responsibilities in that area, we will have a serious problem down the road in not being able to provide for proper economic opportunities for all Canadians. Once we are in that situation, the very basic underpinnings and foundations of this country are in danger.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the member of the Opposition whether his Government since 1977 took any active pains to come to an agreement with the provinces about the use of federal funds? Having sat on the other side of the fence, I can say that I never heard very much about what that Party wanted in terms of a federal input into the higher education system. I thought that Party was content to transfer the money. The people who were transferring the money now, suddenly, have this new-found conscience.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, all I can do is to ask the hon. gentleman who said he was on the other side what he was doing on the other side. For the past two and a half years there have been a series of federal-provincial meetings between the federal Secretary of State and the provincial Ministers of Education at which very clear demands were raised and very clear questions were asked about what could be the new formula after the EPF program came to an end. A number of formulas and proposals were put on the table to try to get provincial Governments to at least match up to their obligations which were to maintain some consistent level of support. So there was no lack of concern being expressed both privately and publicly. There was no lack of formulas being put on the table and no lack of negotiating going forward. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that by this time, if we had been re-elected, the solution would have been found.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any other questions or comments?

Mr. Ouellet: Debate, Mr. Speaker.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-39, an Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, it seems that every time I have the opportunity to speak in the House, you are in the chair, so I hope I will keep you interested today, as I have tried to in the past.

I would first like to commend the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and her colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), for bringing forward Bill C-39. On behalf of my constituents and those Manitobans who feel we finally found a Government which recognized equalization payments were not the size they should be, I thank the Minister and the Government for the extra $115 million Manitoba will receive in the next two years. This Bill is an example of the fairness and good will which our Government has with respect to the provinces and to our country. It is also an example of the way our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wants to see a fair and reasonable Government, and I commend the Government for taking the action it has taken in this particular Bill.

It is always interesting to see how the Opposition handles good legislation. I listened to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). The Hon. Member for Churchill stood up and thanked the Minister for part of the money and then proceeded to try to pat the NDP on the back by saying that Manitoba got more money becauses of the NDP Government and the NPD Members in the House of Commons. Therefore, I would like to quote the Minister of Finance from Hansard of April 1 when he made the announcement of this further payment to the six provinces which needed those additional funds. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I should first say that, unlike hon. members of the New Democratic Party who spend a lot of time crowing but get little action out of the noise they make, hon. members of the Conservative Party who reside in and represent Manitoba, have constantly dealt with me on a quiet basis on this issue. I can tell the Hon. Member that they were far more effective in their representations because they had substance and a good analytical basis for the statements they made, as opposed to the shrill rhetoric we received from the other Party.

I think that says it in a nutshell. It is not necessary to get up in this House and bombard us with rhetoric.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He said "no equalization" at a Liberal meeting in Manitoba.

Mr. Minaker: We will get to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in a minute.

Mr. Ouellet: No!

Mr. Minaker: I think it is important to recognize that our Government did not have any legal obligation to extend these payments or to supplement the equalization payments. I have to remind the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry that they were in the Government and sat around the Cabinet table and made the decision in 1981 on changes to equalization payments. Because of opposition from the Progressive Conservative and NDP Members at that time, they brought in these transitional payments. So that I find it very difficult to take the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry seriously when he talks about sensitivity. They did not make any decision that was, in my opinion, sensitive to the needs of the provinces in 1981. I also find it difficult to take a person seriously with regard to sensitivity when he increases his office budget to, I think it was, $3.2 million from $1.2 million. I call that very insensitive to the spending of taxpayers' money.

I would also like to advise the House that there was a degree of consultation with respect to the PC caucus members from Manitoba. We consulted with a number of people from Manitoba. We met with presidents of universities, government officials and the provincial PC Opposition as well who made a very good presentation on why Manitoba was unique. I thank the Minister for recognizing that Manitoba has a unique economic situation and for seeing fit to give our province an extra $115 million over the next two years.

As I said, it is always interesting to see how the Opposition reacts to something like this. I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Churchill intended to do it, but in his presentation he gave the impression that this was the only money Manitoba was going to get from the federal Government. I think it is important to clarify that because I know Manitoba, like other provinces in our domain, will be getting transfer payments. For Manitoba it is somewhere in the order of about $1.25 billion, of which the equalization payment is part. So when you consider the other programs coming forward this year, these transfer payments, along with the additional $50 million this year, mean that the total payments will be in excess of what they were this past year. For that reason I say that the Government is being very fair with us and we appreciate that.

I want to commend the Minister for bringing forward the Bill at this time. It is good legislation. It is fair legislation. I hope the House will see fit to pass it so we can obtain Royal Assent so that the provinces who need this assistance will have use of that money this year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member how, in congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for the legislation, he reconciles himself with the statement made by the Premier of his province to the effect that his province will have a shortfall in the fiscal year 1985-86 of $263 million, and a projected shortfall of $80 million in the fiscal year 1986-87 if this legislation is approved without amendment? I find the Hon. Member really does not truly represent the interests of his constituents and the people of his province in supporting the Minister of Finance instead of siding with the Premier of his province.

Mr. Minaker: I thank the Hon. Member for raising that question because I would suggest that it is an NDP Government which is in power in Manitoba and which has seen fit to double the deficit of the province over three years. It increased the deficit from something like $1.23 billion to over $2.5 billion in three years. If it cannot spend within its means then I cannot endorse or support that type of Government in Manitoba. But that is for the people of Manitoba to decide. I feel we were treated fairly. The previous Government, of which he was a part, made a decision that would result in a shortfall of $72 million this year. We have been able to find some $50 million to try to compensate for that. But I would like to draw to the Hon. Member's attention the fact that the existing shortfall in the equalization payment represents less than 2 per cent of the total revenue transferred by the federal Government. When compared to the total revenue which the Government of Manitoba collects, it is less than 1 per cent of that. I cannot support a decision to overspend and have a large deficit because I think it is wrong.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I gather from the remarks of the Hon. Member that he does not like the current Government in Manitoba. If we accept his line of argument, we have to conclude that the Conservative federal Government has the right to penalize the population of Manitoba. I think that is regrettable and unacceptable.

In answering my question the Hon. Member said that the NDP Government in Manitoba is spending too much. I submit that the Hon. Member does not understand what equalization payments are all about. I ask him to review the arrangements that have been in progress in Canada for a long period of time. In the process he might consult the Parliamentary Secretary who this morning gave a good history of equalization payments that are given by the federal Government to the have-not provinces in order to ensure equal services in the fields of education and health so that you can rest assured that wherever you live in Canada, because you are a Canadian, you are entitled to equal and fair services. I submit that the Hon. Member disregard the reasons that we have equalization payments. He is certainly not speaking on behalf of the people of Manitoba when he supports this legislation.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, this is unbelievable. I do not agree with the policies of the present NDP Government and never will agree with the policies of over-spending to the point that it has over-spent. I believe a Government should have a conscience with respect to the future taxpayers of the country rather than spend willy-nilly because it feels it should.

I was the Minister of Community Services in the Province of Manitoba for several years. I am fully aware of what equalization payments are. I am also aware of the Canada Assistance Plan and medicare. I was trying to explain to the Hon. Member that the total equalization payment is part of the $1.25 billion in transfer payments. The $22 million shortfall this year that the NDP Government is talking about represents only about 1.7 per cent of that total $1.25 billion in transfer payments. I fully understand the equalization. I believe the $263 million he talked about was for the Province of Quebec rather than the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am provoked into entering this debate. I have some questions for the Member who has indicated that he could never support the policies which the New Democratic Government in Manitoba has put into effect. By this does he mean the policies that have established jobs as a priority within the budget-making process? Does he mean the policies that have made affirmative action a part of the encouragement policy to bring in foreign investors? Does he not support that? Does he also not support the attempt to provide, through hydro development, important export prospects for future income opportunities for the people of Manitoba? Does he not support the valiant fight that the Premier of Manitoba and his Cabinet have put on in order to force this Government, screaming and kicking, into accepting a somewhat fairer allocation of funds from the federal Government to that particular provincial Government?

Conservative Governments in British Columbia, while in search of restraint, have created huge levels of unemployment. The policy of emphasizing jobs in Manitoba has brought that province to a position where it has been recognized as the leader in job creation and job expansion across the country. During the period when the Hon. Member was a Minister in that particular province government policies led to an outflow of people. The new policies of the NDP Government have brought thousands of new people into Manitoba to take advantage of the opportunities and benefits of the progressive Government there.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not support a Government which has spent and spent until it has doubled the deficit in the Province of Manitoba within three years. Many of the policies are no different whether instituted by members of the NDP, by Conservative or by Liberals. Anyone who knew me in Manitoba as the Minister of Community Services would not argue that point.

If the Hon. Member will look at the StatsCan figures of the average number of those employed, he will see that within four years of the time that we took over government we had created 30,000 new permanent yearly average jobs. As of last December 31, the NDP had only created 14,000 new jobs, even with all the spending which the Hon. Member seems to support. Long-term jobs are not created strictly through Government spending money. Private industry must develop the jobs. That is the principle which I support.

Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a short question. I think the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is either confused or is deliberately confusing the House. The Province of Manitoba is receiving $50 million this year and $65 million next year. Is it not true that, rather than in any way suffering from this deal, the Province of Manitoba is actually coming out in a better cash position than any other single province?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) is correct in what he has said. The Province of Manitoba will be receiving more funding this year than it did last year under the former Liberal Government. If the estimates continue in the way that they have, Manitoba will be receiving more money in 1986-87 than it will in 1985-86.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, before I say what I had intended to say, I would like to remark on the most recent comments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) who referred to the deficit in Manitoba solely within the category of spending. In the interests of intellectual honesty, the Member for Winnipeg-St. James ought to acknowledge that the deficit in Manitoba, as is the case with deficits in all the provinces in the country and in the federal Government, has as much to do with a shortfall in revenue due to the economic recession which we have just come through, as it has to do with government spending. Yet, we continue to hear this kind of rhetoric about spending from Conservative Members of Parliament, Conservative Governments, and Conservative MLAs, to the extent that one begins to wonder what kind of simple view they have of economics which allows them to talk about increased deficits without making distinctions between revenue shortfalls and increased government spending and between what money is and is not being spent on. The world is much more complicated than the Member for Winnipeg-St. James would have us believe. Perhaps the reason is that he and his colleagues do not realize the complexity of the issue. However, if they are going to speak about deficits they should take that into consideration.

● (1630)

Members, particularly those from the Conservative Party, should also talk about the balanced books that were left to the Progressive Conservatives who took over government in Saskatchewan in 1982. Conservative Members never recount the history of the balanced Budget in Saskatchewan and the fact that a Progressive Conservative administration not only suffered a general revenue shortfall after taking office in that province, as all Governments suffered as a result of economic conditions, but created a deliberate revenue shortfall by proceeding with its ludicrous promises about reducing certain taxes.

That province had a history of impeccable fiscal responsibility. It now has a deficit in the hundreds of millions of dollars. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James could have mentioned that in his remarks, but it would not have lent credence to his argument.

Let me deal specifically with the Bill which introduces supplementary equalization payments. I would like to share with Members who are present and those people who may be watching some of the history of this regime. I recall the time when Bill C-97 was introduced by the former Liberal Government. The intention of that Bill was to establish a unilateral change in equalization payments.

I represented my Party in the committee that studied that Bill. At that time I collaborated with the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who I believe moved a motion which I seconded in a rare moment of unanimity between the Hon. Member and myself. We have subsequently had occasion to agree with respect to the Canada Health Act, but with respect to Bill C-97, in a rare moment of unanimity the Hon. Member moved a motion, which I seconded, calling for an amendment to Bill C-97 which would have had the effect of doing what the Government is only partially accomplishing now, that is, restoring that money to Manitoba. Both the Hon. Member for Provencher and I felt at that time that that money rightfully belonged to Manitoba but that it was being deprived of it as a result of that Bill.

Immediately after the election on September 4, I wrote to the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare to remind him of our collaboration in 1982 and to ask him if he would use his influential position as a Cabinet Minister in the new Government to ensure that Manitoba had its $72 million restored.

It took a great deal of time for the Government to announce this legislation and many people were involved in bringing it forward. The Manitoba Government should receive a lot of credit for its persistence in insisting that the federal Government come up with that money. I believe that I can say with absolute assurance that this legislation would not be before us today if there were a Progressive Conservative Government in Manitoba, because that administration would have been silent in the interest of Party unity and federal-provincial relations. It would have had very little to say about the injustice being done to Manitoba.

However, as a result of there being an NDP Government in Manitoba, it was able to stand up to the federal Government and demand justice for our province. As a result of that stand over the last six months we are able to speak to this legislation today.

This legislation comes about also as a result of the efforts of many Manitobans who wrote to their Members of Parliament, to Progressive Conservative Members in the Cabinet, and who wrote in support of the Manitoba Government's position to let it be known that the federal Government should take action to redress the situation that was visited upon Manitoba unilaterally by the Liberals in 1982.

This legislation will provide in the first year $50 million to Manitoba of the $72 million which everyone believes is owed to the Government. However, as the provincial Government has said and we have said, we welcome this action. While we are not satisfied completely, it is a response to a perceived injustice, and the Government should be commended to a degree for doing that. No one has disputed that fact but the history of the situation should be understood.

The only people who cannot take any credit for this are the Liberals. They originally brought about that unilateral injustice. I notice there are none of them present in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe that earlier this day the Speaker advised Members of the House not to reflect on the presence or absence of Members in the Chamber. I believe there was an Hon. Member from that Party in the Chamber.

Mr. Blaikie: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if I was inaccurate in my remarks. I did not notice the Hon. Member at the front of the House.

In any event, it is only the Liberal Party of Canada that cannot take any political satisfaction from what is happening today because it is they who unilaterally brought about the injustice that is being partially corrected in this legislation. They are the ones who remained silent, for all intents and purposes, during the time when Manitobans of every political stripe were trying to persuade the federal Government to move in this respect.

I might say that it took some time to gain the support of some Manitobans. I am thinking of the Progressive Conservative Leader of the Opposition in Manitoba, Mr. Filmon. Although he aspires to be the Premier of the province, at that point, at least, he knew nothing of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. At that time he was so naive as to suggest that the Manitoba Government had somehow agreed to this unilateral reduction. He did not know what he was talking about and I am sure he was advised of his mistake. Perhaps it was the Hon. Member for Provencher who had to tell him that this reduction in equalization payments for Manitoba was a unilateral action by the Liberals which the Conservatives as well as the Manitoba Government opposed at the time.

In fact, the Manitoba Government in the person of Vic Schroeder, the Minister of Finance, appeared before the committee to oppose that legislation. I am sure that Mr. Filmon was asked not to go around the province saying that the Manitoba Government agreed to that action because it would have been an embarrassment to the Conservatives to see that he did not know what he was talking about.

Some time later, the Leader of the Opposition in Manitoba must have been advised of the facts of the case and how this had really come about. Ultimately, Manitoba was able to present a united front with respect to the need for the federal Government to take this action.

I hope that background will be of assistance to those who want to know exactly what took place with respect to this issue and I hope that this legislation is an indication from the new Government that it intends fully to respect the principle of equalization which is enshrined in our Constitution.

I believe that a number of improvements can be made to equalization, some of which were recommended by the special Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements which reported in 1981 and on which I had an opportunity to serve. Those recommendations included an enriched equalization arrangement for those provinces that fall below a certain economic criterion. There are a number of other recommendations in that report concerning equalization that I would commend to the House for further study.

We know that in 1987 these will come up for renewal. I have suggested to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he recommend to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that perhaps Parliament should be involved in this review again, as it was prior to 1982, although the procedure did not work at that time because the Government operated unilaterally. However, there was a special parliamentary task force dealing with federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. Perhaps Members from all Parties should again be involved in a review of those arrangements. That might be a tradition well worth establishing and it would become a tradition if we did it again in anticipation of the 1987 agreement.

I hope the Government will give serious consideration to that recommendation which I am making now and which I have made before.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I want to address my remarks to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has just said and then I shall ask him a question. I have known the Hon. Member for a long time. I know he is a very knowledgeable person in his understanding of the political process. I am disappointed, however, that in his analysis of the history of this development, which is a very positive development for the Province of Manitoba and which is a development very indicative of this Government's trend toward its commitment to consulting with the provinces, the Hon. Member forgot—and I can only assume he forgot deliberately or perhaps for politically partisan reasons—that the key factor in this process was the presence in the Cabinet of four Members from the Province of Manitoba. They are four very significant Members, who I suggest are much more significant in the carrying of the message in the decision-making process than those whom the Hon. Member has identified. In the art of politics there is a public role and a private role. It strikes as being extremely fortunate that this problem arose at a time when the Province of Manitoba was so well represented in the Cabinet of Canada, which was not the situation in the previous Government. I am sure the Hon. Member will join me in being thankful that we were well represented on this particular and very important occasion.

Let me ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees that Manitobans are delighted that they are receiving a total of $115 million as a result of this legislation which is before the House, and that the Province of Manitoba is coming out of this in a better cash position in terms of total dollars awarded than any other single province. Does he not agree as a fellow Manitoban that this is a very positive step forward?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I said earlier, and I do not know why the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) bothered to ask, that I thought it was a positive step. I simply said what else I thought might have been done and added certain qualifications. I assume that Manitobans are delighted that this happened rather than nothing. It is a step on the part of the Government that we welcome.

With respect to other things the Minister had to say about the great influence that the four Manitoba members of the Cabinet have, I will be a lot more impressed about the influence that they wield in that Cabinet when I see the VIA Rail maintenance and repair shop being restored to Winnipeg. I will be a lot more impressed when I see the box car rehabilitation program, which is supposed to be taking place at the Transcona shop, going ahead, a program that was put off by this Government. I will be a lot more impressed when I see the program for the development of a prototype grain hopper car at Transcona going ahead, and when the manufacturing of that prototype takes place in western Canada, particularly at Transcona. Then I will know that a lot of the rhetoric about western Canada being respresented in the Cabinet has actually some substance to it. That will be the real test, Mr. Speaker, to see if some of those things go ahead and to see whether the Progressive Conservatives were serious over the last 15 years about complaining on and on about how western Canada was getting a raw deal from the Liberals.

I have a hunch, although I hope I am wrong, that the same people are calling the shots and that western Canada is not going to get the kind of treatment from the new Government that many people hoped it would get when they voted Progressive Conservative. One of the first tests, as far as I am concerned, will have to do with transportation policy and with whether or not those programs scheduled for the CN shops at Transcona go ahead.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) a question. It concerns having Members of Parliament from Manitoba in the Cabinet.

Does the Hon. Member think that having four Members from one's province in the Cabinet is more influential or less influential than having people who sit in third Party Opposition who might be able to influence some of the decisions in Winnipeg that the Hon. Member just talked about? Does he think those things would ever happen in the City of Winnipeg as a result of Members sitting in third Party Opposition?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question put to me, this reminds me of the kind of question I got from my Conservative opponents in the last three elections. In the first two elections it turned out to be a very hypothetical question because the Conservatives did not form a Government, although in 1979 they formed a Government of a sort. In 1980 the Conservatives did not form a Government. This question now I suppose is, at least, in theory relevant. The fact is that all Members of Parliament, all political scientists, everyone who has given any attention to the political process whatsoever, knows full well—and you can find it in book after book and in analysis after analysis—of the contribution that opposition Members have made over the years in getting certain things done. One of the things to be remembered, and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) is going to find very irritating after a while—he likes it here right now—is the silence that will be imposed on the Member as a government back-bencher. The Government will try to do things to his riding and he will not be able to say anything about it. The Hon. Member will sit there and suffer in silence. One of the things we do not have to do in opposition is to sit and suffer in silence. We can speak on behalf of our constituents. Often by doing so, we can get a lot more done for them than can government back-benchers who simply stand up when instructed to and vote as they are told by their Government House Leader. The Hon. Member should watch for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no other questions, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

• (1650)

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in the debate on Bill C-39 introduced by the Conservative Government and I wish to express my objections to this Bill. This morning, my hon. friend from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) referred to the Bill as being inequitable for Quebec, unfair to Manitoba and inadequate for Nova Scotia. In fact, the Bill does the exact opposite of what the Conservatives promised they would do if they formed the Government. It may look good to table a Bill that will provide lump sum payments for the six least advantaged and least fortunate provinces in Canada. However, although on the face of it the Bill seems generous because it gives certain sums of money to the provinces, there is unfortunately no mention of the sums of money the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should have given the provinces and is not giving them.

A while ago, I heard two Conservative Members who were asking questions to show the people of Manitoba that it was thanks to the presence of four Ministers from Manitoba in the present Conservative Cabinet that Manitoba was getting a certain amount of money. However, Manitoba will be getting less than the Government of Manitoba hoped to obtain. Even with four Conservative Ministers, the Province of Manitoba will be getting far less than it should.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to concentrate today on analyzing Quebec's situation, because I think the Province of Quebec stands to benefit least in terms of equalization payments under this Bill. I want to focus particularly on Quebec, because I am sure that our new Conservative Members from the Province of Quebec are once again going to remain silent on this matter.

Mr. Della Noce: Do not worry, you will hear from us!

Mr. Ouellet: I hear the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) making noises. I think he would be better off keeping quiet in the House, especially since his Party has just given $2.4 billion to the multinationals which are going to raise the price of gas, after the Hon. Member promised voters that he would make the price of gas go down. It never has been as high as since the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) was elected, and the Hon. Member has not said one word in this House against this increase in the price of oil or against the $2.4 billion handout to the multinationals while his own Province of Quebec is being treated high-handedly by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and is not getting any support or assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for us in the Liberal Party to oppose this Bill because it is totally unjust and unfair to Quebec.

During the electoral campaign, the Conservatives in Quebec were talking about promoting better understanding with the provinces and the provincial governments, especially the Government of Quebec. Everything was going to change; everything would be perfect with the Conservatives in power in Ottawa; they would work hand in hand with the Parti Québécois! In this regard, I would like to quote the comments of the Quebec Finance Minister, who is most eloquent about this Bill, much more than the Conservative Members from Quebec, who by the way have remained rather silent. This is what the Quebec Minister said:

"The Federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced yesterday the solution he has come up with to meet the requests of Quebec and certain other Provinces. All the Provinces receiving equalization payments will share $285 million over the next two fiscal years. Of this amount, $175 million will, strangely enough, be added to the $445 million already granted, for a total payment of $660 million to the Atlantic Provinces and Manitoba. But at the same time, the $750 million loss for Quebec under the new formula will be compensated to some extent by a payment of $110 million in 1985-86, leaving Quebec with a net loss of $640 million."

And the Minister of Finance added: "I must admit that I am very disappointed with this decision from the Conservative Government in Ottawa. During recent negotiations with the Federal Government, we discussed the difficult financial and budgetary situation inherited from the Trudeau administration and agreed to reduce our claims to a total amount of $450 million, or $300 million in 1985-86 and $150 million in 1986-87. However, the arbitrary and political settlement announced yesterday by the Federal Minister of Finance is far from satisfactory and is even impossible to understand."

Mr. Speaker, these are the comments of the Quebec Finance Minister, who clearly states that this Bill is unacceptable. What makes it even more unacceptable is the fact that the decision of the federal Minister of Finance is of a political and partisan nature, because when one considers the requests made by the Provinces, one realizes that, of the six Provinces who receive equalization payments, the two most seriously affected by the decision of the Conservative Minister of Finance are, by a strange coincidence, the two Provinces which do not have Conservative Governments. Indeed, the two Provinces most seriously affected are Quebec, where the Parti Québécois, not the Conservative Party, is in power, and Manitoba, which has an NDP, not a Conservative Government. While Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Newfoundland will have a supplementary bonus under this Bill and are being favoured because they are on friendly terms with the other Conservative Governments, petty politics are being played at the expense of the people of Quebec and Manitoba because they do not have Conservative Governments at this time.

I find this utterly unacceptable, because the Minister of Finance has the choice to decide how he is going to spend the taxpayers' money. Ever since my little fight with him, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) has kept quiet.

Mr. Della Noce: Your turn will come, Papineau.

Mr. Ouellet: But it is a fact that the Minister of Finance has arbitrarily decided to kowtow to the oil multinationals and give them some $2.4 billion.

Mr. Della Noce: Where were you when they murdered the petrochemical industry in Quebec?

Mr. Ouellet: And who are suffering in the meantime? The provinces which are the poorest, the least affluent, especially Quebec, which is being played a dirty trick by the new Conservative government.

This morning, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the fine remarks made by the Parliamentary Secretary; he explained to the House the historic background to this equalization program, where the Minister of Finance to some extent plays the part of a modern Robin Hood, stealing from the richest provinces to give to the poorest, taking money from the richest taxpayers to distribute it among the poorest. That is what is called the equalization system, the root of true federalism, which allows the Parliament of Canada to share equitably among the least affluent provinces the taxpayers' money, making sure that Canadians from all provinces receive adequate health care and education services. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Finance had the opportunity this year to review this formula. We have had for three years a transitional payment system which favoured the poorest provinces and especially Quebec, a province which had not lost a cent under the formula which the Liberal government had adopted in 1982. That government had agreed to review, if necessary, the 1982 agreement. In 1982, nobody could be expected to foretell what the inflation rate would be now, what would be the current growth rate, what would be the extent of the recession in Canada and the economic problems facing a number of provinces. Well, if we had today a Liberal Minister of Finance, if the Leader of the Opposition was now Prime Minister of Canada, with the support on economic issues of my colleague the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), I am sure, as I said, that a Canadian government under a Liberal Prime Minister would be more generous, equitable and favourable to Quebec than the present Conservative government.

I say, therefore, that members of the Progressive Conservative Party representing Quebec must, as a duty, follow the recommendations of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides and oppose these agreements, in order to extend the transitional period for a couple of years and maintain the interim payments. That is a proposition our Quebec colleagues must consider. I urge them to show some courage, to stand for Quebec's interests and oppose this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 92?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before presenting to the House the motion of the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), the Chair would like to comment briefly on the subject of the motion. Recently, the House adopted the second reading stage of Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, which is currently being examined by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Section 5 of Bill C-26 concerns, in fact, the matter that the Hon. Member, through his motion, is urging the Government to reconsider. One could maintain that the motion is out of order because it is anticipatory. Nevertheless, I am willing to put the motion before the House, but I may remind all Hon. Members that they must speak only to the subject of the motion and refrain from speaking to Bill C-26, its provisions or any other matter arising from the Committee's proceedings on Bill C-26.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ADVISABILITY OF EXTENDING SPOUSES ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should reconsider its intention to limit the eligibility of spouse allowance to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 and that it should extend the program to all persons of this age group living alone and having the same means, without taking their marital status into account.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think this motion is very important, and I am convinced that all Members of this House will wish to rise above political considerations in discussing a motion that invites the Government to examine the feasibility of extending the spouse's allowance to all needy persons, living alone, between the ages of 60 and 64. Since the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is in the House, I am sure that he would rather not be called the Minister of social injustice in future and will therefore recommend that all Members vote in favour of the motion and make the necessary amendments in committee.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain. We have a situation where three people, three women, all the same age, namely 60, all living on the same income, which is very low in fact, they are living on welfare payments of $430 per month. These three people are identical as far as economics is concerned. The only thing that differentiates them is that the first person is a widow and has been for five years. The second has been separated for five years and the third is single. Unfortunately, if we use marital status as a criterion for eligibility, the second woman who has been separated for five years and the third woman who is single will not be eligible for this very important program. I do not think the Government has any excuse for opposing this amendment or rather, this motion. When it comes to funding, the Government keeps bringing up the deficit. I raised the issue before the Christmas holidays, but as soon as the House resumed sitting, the multinational oil companies had no trouble getting $2.5 billion. The Government says it was to create jobs, but the multinationals are already making a profit.

In the case of the needy elderly, it would mean $250 million extra that would go into the economy. This particular group would also create jobs, because the additional $100 would be used by them to purchase essential goods such as food and housing and such purchases would automatically create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I do not buy that and I suggest that the Government is using the deficit as a smokescreen. Think of all the money wasted for defence simply to buy uniforms for the military, they are now talking about sending more troops to Germany, and then the star war, it is altogether shameful that they cannot find $250 million to redress this injustice and make life easier for Canadian men and women.

Mr. Speaker, strong support has been expressed throughout Canada for the motion urging the Prime Minister to eliminate such discrimination—47 groups from every part of the country are behind us all the way. I received petitions from 180 ridings—Conservative ridings included—signed by people who urgently ask the Prime Minister of Canada to amend that legislation.

I should like to point out to the people who are listening, not only to Hon. Members, that they ought not to forget the procedure. I have no intention to speak the full twenty minutes allotted to me. Most people here know what the problem is, and they also know the solution. But still I want to caution our listeners—Government Members on the Conservative side will rise to speak, they will make nice speeches to say that they agree, but to our listeners I say this: Keep one thing in mind, they will rise to speak until six o'clock because they want to kill this amendment, deprive 80,000 Canadians of an opportunity to see an end to such discrimination.

Yesterday was a memorable occasion, guests were drinking champagne, but 80,000 senior citizens could not join in the celebration because the Progressive Conservative Government simply will not honour its commitments.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks because I am convinced that all Hon. Members, regardless of political affiliation, are aware of this problem, this injustice which affects women mostly in each an every riding, and I am convinced that a Member of each Party will speak and that the motion will be passed unanimously.

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion put forth by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I do so as the sole speaker on behalf of my caucus. We too want to see what the response will be of government Members who, I am sure, have heard time and again from people in their own constituencies that there is a need for equality in this regard. I am sure they have heard that there is a need for the kind of excitement there was yesterday when we celebrated getting that much closer to equality in this country to make sure that all of those older adults aged 60 to 65 receive the same level of support from the Canadian taxpayers.

We are not talking about the Government's money, about the Liberal Party's money or about the New Democratic Party's money. We are talking about the money the people of Canada pay through their taxation system. I would say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the Conservative caucus that what I have heard is that the people want their money to be used to support those people who are aged 60 to 65. In particular, they see a real injustice in the fact that women who, for whatever reason, chose to remain single throughout their adult lives are being discriminated against. They have the same needs—food, shelter and clothing—as women who choose to marry and, for whatever reason, whether through the death of a loved one or separation, find themselves alone. The same needs are there, the same costs are there. We as a society have a responsibility to provide the kind of protection to which the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart) referred.

Let us take a look at some of the costs. This week, Statistics Canada along with the National Council on Welfare issued a report indicating the poverty levels in the country. In our large cities it costs a single person $10,238 per year just to get by, just for the basics; in our medium-sized communities, one of which I represent, with populations of 100,000 to just under 500,000, it costs $9,763; in communities of 30,000 to 100,000, $9,121 per year; in communities of less than 30,000, $8,432 per year; and in our rural communities, where I think single women are even in more difficult situations, it costs $7,571 per year to survive. Surely $100 per month or $1,200 per year added to the existing incomes of these people makes a lot of sense. It is only humane. However, I find it amazing that in 1985, on the day after the equality provisions of the Charter were proclaimed, we are still fighting for this kind of justice.

I had the opportunity to have lunch today with three very outstanding Canadians who throughout their lives fought for justice for people and fought for women in particular to ensure that they had the same options, abilities and rights of survival. My luncheon companions were three former Members of the House of Commons—Grace MacInnis, Stanley Knowles and Tommy Douglas, fine Canadians who worked hard on behalf of Canadians across the land, not just for decades because when their years of service are added together they would probably total more than those of all of us who are present in the House this afternoon. Their commitment was a very substantial one.

In supporting this resolution we should keep those people in mind and make sure that we go forth and improve the lot of single women. I compliment the Hon. Member for bringing forth his resolution and conducting his campaign. However, on a somewhat negative note, I wish that in his previous incarnation as a member of the Liberal Government he and his colleagues had moved a little more quickly to implement the kinds of things for which we are trying to fight today.

I encourage Members opposite and those on the Conservative benches in either wing not to talk out this Bill. They should have one speaker rise and say, "Yes, we agree the time is now". Then let us get on with it.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in this discussion and in particular to reply to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to the effect that the provision concerning the eligibility of the spouses allowance is too restrictive.

Ideally, the program should indeed go a step further, and I am quite willing to admit that the allowance will not be available to everyone. However, Mr. Speaker, the Government has to face the economic and social realities. One of those economic facts is the unprecedented deficit that the Government budget has been plagued with. This Government must therefore proceed with caution and try to alleviate that burden by implementing sound economic policies as well as promoting a responsible social and financial development.

It would of course, be irresponsible to promise funds when we are short of money. It would also be irresponsible for the Government not to make a commitment to share the funds available. So, Mr. Speaker, we took the only approach that was both responsible and cautious to that reform: we made a commitment to use the scarce resources available to help those people in our society who are most in need of help and protection. In other words, the spouse's allowance be extended to all needy widows and widowers between 50 and 64, regardless of the spouse's age at the time of death. Finally, this amendment will allow us to include in the spouse's allowance program those Canadians who have been left out since of the legislation was first implemented. And in my opinion, this proposal and the related increase are no different from most proposals put before the House of Commons.

In fact, a large part of the social legislation introduced in the House aims at improving social benefits gradually. Each amendment adds a little to the security net by extending the eligibility, increasing the allowances and adjusting the programs according to changing social realities.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the spouse's allowance program, like the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement, has developed gradually thanks to several improvements made to the original provisions. It is a well known fact, known even to the Members of this House. In fact, by the mere implementation of the guaranteed income supplement in 1967, the government of the day recognized that the basic old age security pension in itself did not provide an adequate income to people without any other source of income, more particularly if the additional income that future pensioners might expect under the newly implemented Canada Pension Plan were taken into account. The supplement subject to a means test was thus introduced to help the neediest pensioners.

However, the shortcomings of this supplement soon became apparent. In 1971, to take into account the various situations and needs of pensioners, both single and married, different and more adequate rates were introduced for the guaranteed income supplement.

As the economic situation evolved, it became obvious that the original provision limiting the indexation to 2 per cent inadequate to the extent that the purchasing power of the aged was being increasingly eroded. Therefore, in 1972 and 1973, more realistic provisions came into effect for quarterly increases in the allowances in line with the rise in the consumer price index. The progress of the supplement did not stop there. The monthly supplement paid to a couple of pensioners was increased by $20 in 1979 and by $35 in 1980.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that this House and its Members have sometimes been accused of going around in circles. I must admit that there is a certain truth to the allegation. In 1984, we took measures to correct once again an injustice in the level of allowances paid to couples with only one pensioner as opposed to couples with both spouses being pensioners. In fact, in the first case, an increase of $50 was granted. Finally, new Canadians will be entitled to a basic minimum income equal to the allowance paid to Canadians who have been in the country for a long time.

I mention these amendments merely to prove without the shadow of a doubt that this Government has absolutely nothing to brag about because it proposed an approach based on progressive increases to enhance social programs. Indeed, the spouse allowance which we are discussing today was introduced to compensate for the shortcomings of the Old Age Security Program and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, for if the benefits paid under these programs were enough for couples where both spouses were pensioners or for single pensioners, they were simply inadequate in providing decent assistance to couples where only one of the spouses was a pensioner.

The allowance was therefore introduced in 1975, subject to a means test, to assist needy spouses aged 60 to 64 of old age security pensioners. It is a fact that thousands of needy spouses have been helped.

Unfortunately, the allowance was cancelled when the pensioner died. Thus, the spouse would lose not only the income of the pensioner, but also his or her own allowance, at a time when he or she actually most needed this assistance, when he or she was the most unable to cope with the situation.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, the safety net was made a little wider. In 1979, when our Party came to power, provisions were made to extend the allowance after the death of the pensioner until the surviving spouse reached age 65 or remarried.

In 1979, in 1980 and 1984, the spouse allowance program was again enhanced, more specifically by bringing in the same improvements as in the case of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, so that the allowance recipients would be treated equitably.

I think that I have established clearly that our proposal to extend spouse allowance eligibility to needy widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 is another step in the evolution of the program. Of course, we would prefer being able to help a greater number of needy Canadians, but the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is only too well aware that what is preventing us from doing so is the extremely disastrous financial situation in which we found ourselves on September 5.

The Hon. Member says that we are curbing the allowance granted to this group of needy Canadians, while we are actually extending eligibility to this group. While he has stated that we are excluding those who will not be entitled to the allowance, I would say that we are including those who will become eligible. Finally, while he says that we are penalizing those who will not be eligible, I say that we are offering long-awaited assistance to needy widows and widowers aged 60 to 64.

Mr. Speaker, if we analyze the comments made by the Hon. Member, we could summarize them as follows: If you cannot do everything, do not do anything. This approach may be defended in theory, but in actual practice, it results in inactivity and failure to help. For my part, I believe that we should be proud of doing our best at this time when we have the opportunity to do so.

In closing, I would like to quote these words from Cicero: "Let us be guided by reason rather than by public opinion."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon).

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt for one moment that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is sincere in introducing this motion, and I am in a position to know how relentlessly he has pursued the matter. However, before going any further, I would like to make one thing very clear. The government is not limiting the eligibility to the spouses allowance, on the contrary, despite our own very serious financial position at this time we are proposing for the first time ever to extend to all low-income widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 the protection offered by this important social program.

The spouses allowance, Mr. Speaker, is the monthly amount that is now paid to low-income spouses between the ages of 60 and 64 of old-age security pensioners, or to widows or widowers of old-age pensioners who were entitled to it at the time the pensioners died.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there are two different categories of needy people between the ages of 60 and 64 who get a guaranteed minimum income under the Spouse's Allowance Program. First, the spouses of guaranteed income supplement recipients, and second, the widows and widowers over 60 who were eligible to the allowance when the pensioned spouse died.

It is obvious that the Spouse's Allowance Program as it exists today leaves something to be desired. People in the same age group as the allowance recipients, for whom the cost of living is just as high, are still not entitled to an allowance. Are we to believe that the then government made a mistake when it established the program in 1975? Did the succeeding governments err in broadening the initial conditions of eligibility to the program? Unlike some people, I would be prepared to undertake a task although I might not be certain to see it through. Fortunately, many of the architects of the Canadian social security system did not wait for such certainty before they acted.

Mr. Speaker, I have read over with care the debates that took place some years ago and to which my hon. colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) participated, concerning the necessary changes to be made to the Widows' allowances and the Old Age Security Pensions, and with that knowledge, I realize that the criticisms were always the same. When it comes to improving a program, it is advisable to go all the way. I believe this is an important step. On the other hand, considering the determination of my hon. colleague in defending this proposition and this motion, I found it amusing to see the kind of accusations brought against Members of the Opposition who were also asking for changes. They were told that if they wanted some changes it was because they had an ulterior motive, being recipients of the Old Age Security Pension.

An Hon. Member: What about the other poor.

Mr. Hudon: All right. You are already discriminating between the rich and the poor. Your approach is discriminatory. We could discuss at length the subject of discrimination, but I must confess, my dear colleague that, that kind of rhetoric has little effect regarding the intentions the Government now has. We have a perfect example of this gradual approach in the way the Old Age Security Program has improved to the point that a basic pension is now paid to every Canadian having reached the age of 65, provided they meet certain residential requirements.

Mr. Speaker, there are significant differences between the Old Age Security Program as we know it now and the first pension plan introduced by the Government which in 1927 became our first Old Age Security Act. Of course I was not there.

Mr. Malépart: I am not sure of that.

Mr. Hudon: Oh! You are not! According to this legislation, only certain people were entitled to a pension, and they were subjected to a means test. Every real property or personal belongings were assigned a value and accounted for as revenue. Once all these conditions were met, the claimant was then declared eligible. The program, however, was very peculiar. At the death of a pensioner the provincial governments were allowed to reclaim from his estate all the moneys paid to him in the form of Old Age Security Pension, plus the interest. Of course the first pension program was far from being perfect. Actually, in 1945, only 37 per cent of the people 70 years old and above were receiving the Old Age Security Pension.

However it is important to realize that this program was an improvement for 37 per cent of those people. Obviously, it would have been better if the rest of them, or 63 per cent had not been excluded, but the previous government had recognized the importance of helping as many people as it could help and this is precisely what it had done.

Fortunately, the Old Age Security Act was implemented in 1952 as a result of which a universal pension was paid to people 70 years old and over provided they met residency requirements. It was a significant improvement. The Old Age Security Program was going to be improved many times over the years: for instance, as my hon. colleague has just mentioned, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, an allowance based on a means test, was introduced in 1967 and the Spouse's Allowance, in 1975.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that I spent more than a few minutes on the history of Old Age Security. In fact, the development of the program is similar to that of the Spouse's Allowance. A program that, initially, was far from being perfect was extended and made more generous over the years, as succeeding governments considered they could spend additional resources on it.

What we must ask ourselves is this: Should we stop trying to improve the Old Age Security Program until we can afford to make it perfect? Must the Government refrain from helping those it can help on the pretence that it cannot for the time being improve the lot of other needy persons? Certainly not! We must continue to seek steady financial and social improvements whenever and however we can. And in this respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my hon. colleague that the pension reform as proposed by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is in line with the commitments we made during the last election. We are indeed too often blamed for not keeping our word.

And I also remember how vigorously at times that promise has been said to be ridiculous, that it did not make sense and yet, today there are people who say that not only does it make sense but that it should be extended. Like I said, in taking this step now we are moving in accordance with our promises and our means.

Another point was also important in terms of universality: Pensionable age could be lowered from 65—my hon. colleague knows that, it was also part of their political commitment—from 65 to 64 years of age. That is considered universal. That is a horizontal category. I know that possibility was scoffed at recently but we had to choose either a horizontal group or a vertical one among the neediest.

Mr. Malépart: You stopped half way.

Mr. Hudon: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Malépart: You only went halfway.

Mr. Hudon: So, extending the Spouse's Allowance Program to all low-income people between 60 and 64, without taking into account their marital status, would cost an estimated $1.5 billion in the first year. I say again that would cost $1.5 billion for the first year.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, that is not true.

Mr. Hudon: Had you spoken longer, you could have disproved that figure.

Mr. Rossi: That gives you no right to use inaccurate figures.

Mr. Hudon: In view of the economic situation, we cannot afford new expenses of that magnitude. The government was in a position to . . . Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there were the two following options. First, not to change the Spouse's Allowance Program, under which only spouses and widowers or widows of recipients of the Guaranteed Income Supplement were eligible. This was the first option.

Or, following the recommendation made in 1983 by the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform, which had an all-party representation, we could extend the Spouse's Allowance Program to all low-income widows and widowers between 60 and 64 years of age, thus recognizing that they form a priority group which needs more assistance.

Nevertheless, this resolution was made by the parliamentary task force in 1983 and we followed up in 1985 to an important part thereof. In doing that, we also recognized the efforts and work done by the members of the parliamentary task force.

Fortunately, we know that the only way to reach one's goal is sometimes to go step by step. This is why the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), on January 25, has tabled Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. We do not claim that this Bill is perfect. It is not! Nevertheless, we should not excuse ourselves for providing as much help as we can to those who most need it.

As of September 1985—

Mr. Malépart: The uniforms would have been better used on older people?

Mr. Hudon: Anyway, I will say to my hon. colleague that people in the Armed Forces need a pair of pants, and whatever colour we may have chosen, we still bought them because you would have waged a real war in the House if they had walked about bare bottomed, I guess.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hudon: I don't know whether these terms are unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker?

An Hon. Member: They are parliamentary.

Mr. Hudon: They are parliamentary. Therefore, as of September 1985, almost 85,000 widows and widowers, whom I, unfortunately cannot name, will receive, should Bill C-26 pass, a minimum income which will help them face standard costs of living. This guaranteed income will be equal to what is received by the 6,300 beneficiaries of spouse's allowance.

Mr. Malépart: Do you know why a 60 year old person does not receive the same amount as a 65 year old?

An Hon. Member: Are we in question period?

Mrs. Mailly: You already spoke!

Mr. Hudon: The Government recognizes that many people between the age of 60 and 64, who are single, separated, divorced or married will continue to be deprived of spouse's allowance. We also acknowledge that if our resources where not so limited, we could be talking about very different issues. If the Government had not inherited such a deficit, if we had a balanced budget, and if our economy was going as well as we could expect, as well as Canadians would like, we might be able to introduce the kind of social benefits the Hon. Member is talking about, and even go beyond our electoral promises.

In the meantime, he is free to criticize the Minister of Health and Welfare and the Government who make genuine and responsible efforts to help the needy. However, I can guarantee him that his criticism will not prevent the Government from doing whatever is possible, when it is feasible.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the financial realities we face and our sense of responsibilities totally prevent us from improving further the spouse's allowance program. It is sad, but we should not, nevertheless, underestimate the importance of this benefit, which will start being paid to 85,000 more widows and widowers in September.

We can now see, Mr. Speaker, how legislation develops, how it changes, year after year. Parliamentarians can, when the time and the situation allow it, make the necessary changes, horizontally or vertically, but I repeat, the Government priority at the present time was to help the widows and widowers in their early sixties because, according to a parliamentary group, they were the most in need.

[English]

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the motion presented by the Liberal Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) concerning Bill C-26. The purpose of this Bill is to extend the Spouse's Allowance Program to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, regardless of the age of their spouse at the time of death.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a very significant step in the battle against poverty since this age group is particularly affected. Women in this age group are rarely poor as a result of misfortune or other foreseeable events. For the majority, their poverty is the consequence of the role society has assigned to them, their difficulty in gaining access to the job market, the conditions they have had to work under if they did work, and the poor protection they have had under the Canadian pension system.

Society has assigned the responsibility for rearing children and doing unpaid domestic work to women and the responsibility for meeting families' economic needs to men. People of my generation will remember the social disapproval there was in the past of any married woman, but particularly those with children, who wanted to get a paid job. Most working wives then were forced on to the labour market by the difficulty of their family's economic situation. Since the role society has reserved for women went hand in hand with financial dependency, it is not surprising that they are without resources when their husbands die.

The low level of participation in the labour market by older women also contributes to their poverty. According to Statistics Canada figures, only 26.2 per cent of women between the ages of 60 and 64 were in the workforce in 1984. Women of all ages made up 53.5 per cent of the workforce at that time.

This low figure may be explained by the many obstacles older women face when they try to get into, or go back into, the workforce after spending a large portion of their lives at home. First, there is the problem of training. What they have learned is often either obsolete or inadequate for the increasingly specialized needs of today. There are training and refresher courses available to prepare them for entry into the job market, but those cannot keep up with the demand. Older women must also face certain prejudices when it comes to candidate selection. A number of employers prefer to hire younger people over those who will be taking retirement in a few years. It is a well known fact that employability decreases as a person gets older.

Access to paid employment does not necessarily mean that women will be protected against poverty. Some who do work do so under the most unenviable conditions. They are still concentrated in a limited number of often poorly paid jobs with the least advantageous working conditions.

The protection offered to surviving spouses under the Canadian pension system is another cause of the difficult economic situation a large number of widows aged 60 to 64 find themselves in. I would remind you that in the Throne Speech the Government announced its intent to engage in discussions with the provinces on a total review of the Canadian pension system. Survivor benefits will be among the points discussed.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, those aged 60 to 64 deserve a better fate than the one in store for them at the present time. It is the duty of the Government to come to their assistance, regardless of the current economic situation. We are assuming that responsibility by proposing an extention of the Spouse's Allowance Program to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. Starting this coming September, some 85,000 people, 72,000 of them women, will be able to benefit from this measure. These 85,000 represent some 61 per cent of the total population of widows and widowers aged 60 to 64.

Essentially what we are offering to those people is the possibility of sufficient income to meet their basic needs. The Spouse's Allowance Program will guarantee them the same level of income as is currently provided to the surviving spouse of the pensioner who was in receipt of Old Age Security benefits before his death. At the moment, the maximum benefit is $536.26 per month. This figure will, however, be raised slightly in September since benefits are indexed every three months to the cost of living.

The Government is well aware that certain groups of the needy near-elderly will still be excluded from the Spouse's Allowance Program, but unfortunately we cannot go any further at this time given the current economic situation.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I express my sincere wish that the evolution of women's roles within society, the improvement of their working conditions, and the review of the Canadian pension system will mean that coming generations of women will be better off.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on that very important issue and I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for his great kindness which leads him to consider that problem of our senior citizens. I should also like to say to the Hon. Member that I would be very happy if it was announced today that not only we would pay to our seniors in distress the amount now allotted to the surviving spouse but we would also grant them a pension which would bring them over the poverty level. As you know, Mr. Speaker, even with the pension now paid to senior citizens, a too great number—60 per cent of them being women—live in poverty. Those people who worked hard and paid taxes throughout their life, who have raised families, who have made Canada the great country it is today, those older citizens live in truly inhuman conditions.

Now I would merely like to indicate to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie that the allowance to which he referred comes under a legislation aimed at spouses and providing them a spouses allowance. It is unfortunately impossible to use an allowance provided under a legislation meant for a certain group in our community, that is spouses in distress due to the death of the partner looking after his or her needs or merely contributing to the family income... It would be somewhat as if aged couples in distress would receive family allowances after their children have reached adulthood. What we need—

Mr. Malépart: What about the separated woman?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue without being interrupted. I did not interrupt the Hon. Member when he was speaking.

Mr. Rossi: Is it an order?

Mrs. Mailly: No, it is merely the wish of a member who has the same rights as you have. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is asking whether it is an order, Mr. Speaker, I merely ask the members opposite to let me enjoy the same rights as they have.

So, I was saying that it was necessary to find, as my colleague from the Conservative Party who spoke just before me has said, a way to rehabilitate these women in society and a small number of men as well, because more and more, we find couples where the man is the surviving spouse, and since his wife contributed a lot to the household revenue, once he reaches a certain age, he finds himself in the same situation as many women. So, I would like, as my colleague has said, this whole question of the quality of life for all senior Canadians be reviewed. Tonight, at six o'clock, I must leave to attend a dinner of the Gerontology Institute, in Hull, where the Parliamentary Secretary of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bertrand) is scheduled to speak on this very subject of the quality of life of senior Canadians. She will address, I am confident, other aspects, apart from ways to alleviate current problems. She will speak about the future of Canadians, of those who are now on the labour market or, even, of those who just entered the labour market because it will take at least two or three decades before the situation described by my conservative colleague can change. When it does change, a woman will not have to totally depend on a man to survive, a woman will be paid the same as a man and, when she will reach a certain age and have to retire or cannot work anymore, she will be able to enjoy a fair revenue, a revenue above the poverty level and maybe even better if we have the chance to ensure the economic renewal which will allow us to improve the living conditions of all Canadians including our elderly.

Then, for example, there is the situation of people who are forced to retire. Many of our elderly live in poverty because, during their working life, they received a pay cheque which was maybe small, but was nevertheless large enough for their needs. They reach the age of 65 without any pension, because it is only recently that people have private pensions or they simply live on only the Government pension which, naturally, is not enough to give Canadians the same quality of life they enjoyed when they were on the labour market. Thus, forced retirement creates economic problems.

On the other hand, there is also the case, naturally, of people who would like to retire at 50 or 55. There is always a debate between these two groups of Canadians, the ones who would like to continue to work and receive the same revenue and the ones who think that once one has reached a certain age and worked very hard for 30 or 40 years, maybe as a labourer, one should be able to retire. Therefore, those people should enjoy full retirement benefits and not get, as it is the case now, one third or one half of their pension if they retire before the compulsory limit of 65 years of age.

Retirement and sufficient income for people who would choose early retirement are all matters that need to be examined.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I commend the Hon. Member for his deep generosity, but I would like to hear from him a real commitment to participating in any review on compulsory retirement for Canadians. I suggest that he considers the means to provide sufficient income for senior citizens so that they become more financially independent than they are now. In the past, 35 workers supported one individual unable to work. Today, that equation is three workers for each individual who is either too young, too old, handicapped or too ill to work. And according to statistics, that proportion could fall to one worker having to support one other person unable to work. Perspectives in that area are such that one must obviously encourage and help Canadians to secure now income for their old days so they could lead an independent life without being a burden for the government.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak on that subject.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): As my colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) stressed at the outset of his remarks, Mr. Speaker, we did not plan to put up more speakers on this motion simply to see what approach the Progressive Conservative Government would take on such an important motion concerning 80,000 needy Canadian citizens who are either divorced or separated and who will be subject to discrimination with respect to the way the spouse's allowance is granted.

Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin), the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon), the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha), and the Hon. Member who has just resumed her seat—

An Hon. Member: The Member for Gatineau.

Mr. Garneau: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). It was a brilliant idea to introduce this motion, because we have just heard the most praiseworthy comments on policies adopted by the Liberals in the past fifteen years or so, particularly from the Hon. Member for Gaspé, the Hon. Member for Beauharnois and the Hon. Member for Nipissing. But if we analyze their speeches to praise the evolution of social measures which were implemented by the Liberal Party and by Liberal Governments, we come to the conclusion that the bottom line is just a question of money. We could come to an agreement if it is a question of money. What I am saying and what my colleague is saying is that we have to make a choice. We on this side do not understand, particularly the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie who has been interested in social issues for so many years and who, although not fully at ease in English, has received support from Halifax, Yellowknife, Saskatchewan and even from the Canadian Association of Gerontology where the Hon. Member for Gatineau will be having dinner this evening. He has received a lot of support. But all that is a question of choice.

I conclude my remarks because it is getting close to six o'clock. Notwithstanding the fact that the debt is huge, and we will get back to this issue later, the Progressive Conservative Government has decided to give away $2.4 billion to the multinationals, not only once but year in and year out. And now, what do we hear from the Hon. Member for Gaspé, the Hon. Member for Gatineau, the Hon. Member for Nipissing, the Hon. Member for Salaberry-de-Valleyfield? We have no money! Multinational oil companies will get $2.4 billion, and the government does not have the money to extend the spouses allowance to single or divorced people, as they did not have any money to improve equalization. They made a political choice. The hon. member for Gatineau who mumbles in her place should not tell us today that she has no money, that her government does not have any money, and that they blame us for the deficit when they give out $2.4 billion. If they have money to reduce taxes for multinational oil companies they should have the money for needy divorced or single people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING (A) DECISION TO CUT BUDGET FOR HOUSING RENOVATION PROGRAM. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE SUPPLEMENTARY FUNDING

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should have chosen answer to a question other than the one I chose this evening because I would have been able to reply and to show how disappointed I am with my colleagues who spoke earlier. Let us now come back to the subject of housing.

An Hon. Member: Well, it is as bad!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, when Conservative Members start talking about social issues, they really do not know what they are talking about. They do not have a clue! In March I had a question for the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), who is responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the answers he gave me then, I said quite honestly that he did not know anything about the issue and that he was not even interested. And he knew even less about Quebec.

I think all Members of this House understand the importance of housing cooperatives and subsidized housing. There are three forms of subsidized housing. There is public housing, called HLM in Quebec or low-rent housing, which is financed by the provincial governments through the municipalities. We have non-profit organizations that are involved in residential construction and administered by a board consisting of five, seven or nine members. We have co-operatives whose members are all involved in carrying out the project.

To set up housing co-operatives, the Government finances interest payments. Co-operatives also help renew the supply of accommodation in working class neighbourhoods like in Sainte-Marie, and in towns across the country, where there are older homes that have to be renovated or restored. Usually, there are housing co-operatives organized by the tenants themselves. To help these people on moderate and low incomes to achieve something they would never be able to do without this formula, and become, collectively, the owners of their homes, they were allowed to take part in the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, the RRAP.

A budget of about $5 million was allocated strictly to setting up non-profit housing co-operatives. This made it possible to reduce rental costs, to get decent housing and to help people on moderate and low incomes become homeowners.

Unfortunately, when I asked the question, the Minister wondered whether he was going to maintain this RRAP program and the $5 million it needs to upgrade housing through housing co-operatives.

● (1805)

The Minister was certainly faced with a very serious decision, but he is to blame for not having the guts to make his case with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) so he would not slack millions of dollars from the financing of social housing programs and the budget of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, or RRAP. He kept silent in his chair and let the Minister of National Defence get all the money he wanted and left his own budgets truncated. However, the Parliamentary Secretary will be responding to my question later on, and I would like to tell him that I myself was parliamentary Secretary before September 4, and I trust that he will not just read the text prepared by his officials and will give us a satisfactory answer and tell us whether CMHC or the Minister have reached a decision and whether the financing of housing co-operatives under the RRAP program will be abolished or maintained. I would like him to tell us how many housing units will be cut off the programs this year. The figure is 5,000 units in the area of social housing. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to give us specific answers to these questions. I trust that he is aware of the impact of the decision made by the Minister and CMHC. If he cuts back the budget of the RRAP program for housing co-operatives, these will disappear all across the country because this will result in rent increases and people will no longer be able to form co-operatives or non-profit organizations to invest in existing housing.

Social housing programs that do not come under the responsibility of provincial or municipal governments will apply only to the building of new housing, and we all know how costly new housing is and this means that the rents will be too high for some people.

Mr. Speaker, I see that the time at my disposal is nearly over and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will prove to be much more efficient than his Minister and will provide me with the answer to two questions: in the first place, has the Conservative Government decided to withdraw altogether the $5 million allocated the RRAP for housing co-operatives? Secondly, by how much will the number of housing units be reduced? The Parliamentary Secretary is aware that, in previous years, 25,000 housing units were built in Canada. How many units has the Government decided to cut back?

[English]

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to the matters raised in the House by the Hon. Member on March 14 of this year and the matters he has raised today. These matters concern the non-profit Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program and the co-operative housing program.

With respect to the co-operative housing program, CMHC has put in place a competitive process. The intent of this process is to review projects, whether they be submitted by co-ops or non-profit groups, in an equitable and fair manner. The procedure is based on objective selected criteria. The selection process has been designed to improve the degree to which federal assistance is directed to those most in need and to reduce the over-all costs through the selection of well targeted modest proposals on a competitive basis. This reflects the Minister's commitment to help people most in need of assistance and to ensure that available funds are used effectively.

At this stage in the selection process, more than 50 per cent or more than half the projects selected to proceed to the next selection stage or decision stage are indeed co-ops. The important consideration here is that co-ops are being treated in a fair manner. Co-ops are able to compete for subsidy units on an equal basis with other worthy groups. In this House the Minister has put the process in its proper prospective, reminding the Hon. Member that such project decisions are a function of CMHC's competitive process and not, I repeat, not a matter of ministerial preference.

With respect to the non-profit RRAP program, I am pleased to say that funding will be available in 1985 for those projects which are successful in the current competitive project selection process. Non-profit RRAP funds will be used in specified circumstances to ensure project viability. The emphasis will be on the need to overcome to the extent that it is possible project viability problems in those market areas where existing housing activity is essential to meet the identified housing needs of the country.

The Minister is indeed sensitive to the housing needs of the country and to any cut-backs that may be considered or put forward by various groups. The Minister is dedicated to providing a sound, reasonable housing policy directed to those most in need and he will continue to be so dedicated in the years ahead.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY CHEMICAL SPILL—GOVERNMENT'S KNOWLEDGE OF INCIDENTS. (B) REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up the question I put to the Government today as answered by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). I put my question to the appropriate Minister but I am not sure just which Minister is taking responsibility for the federal response to the PCB spill that occurred between Kenora and Ignace in northwestern Ontario. Transportation of dangerous goods legislation falls under the purview of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), but the Minister of the Environment released a news release yesterday reannouncing the coming into effect of the regulations under the transportation of dangerous goods legislation to which the Minister of Transport has referred the day before. We are not sure who is taking the responsibility for the federal response to this event.

I was just accused in committee by the Minister of Transport of not being patient and not waiting until all the facts were in. The fact of the matter is that we have to make decisions and evaluations on a day-to-day basis with respect to these kinds of events. I have been after the Government, not only with respect to the facts that we already know but with respect to what I consider to be its inadequate interest in finding out just what are the facts of the case.

What do we know? We know that the interprovincial transportation of dangerous goods is a federal responsibility, contrary to what the Minister of the Environment said the first day she was asked about this matter. On a personal level, we know of a Red Lake family comprised of a husband, a pregnant wife and two children that followed the truck for 25 kilometres, pulled it over because this stuff was spilling out onto them and were told by the driver that it was only mineral oil and that it could be cleaned up with some rags and gas and forgotten about. These people had to travel all the way to Winnipeg in a contaminated car before reading in the Winnipeg Free Press just what it was that had splashed all over their car. Their car has now been impounded and will be sent to Edmonton, I understand, for examination.

We know that the provincial hotline in Kenora advises those people who call with the suspicion that their cars may have been splashed with this substance to simply wash their cars down with water and paper towels and to put the paper towels in a plastic bag and take them to the dump. We know that the Quebec Government was led to believe by the company involved that the transformer was drained before shipment, and of course we now know that not to be the base at all.

We know that no one from the Department of Transport was on the scene for four days and that all that happened was that the federal Government made itself available to the Ontario Ministry of the Environment. No one was on the scene for four days, and even then no one from the Department of the Environment or the Dangerous Goods Division of the Department of Transport was present. The only person present was someone who did a very technical assessment of the transformer that leaked. These are the sorts of things we know. Another thing we know is that the RCMP has seized three shipments of improperly labelled soil samples that the Ontario Ministry of the Environment shipped on commercial airliners without the appropriate labelling.

I want to make clear what I have been saying all along, and that is that I think the Ontario Ministry of the Environment has really bungled this affair. I think the federal Government has taken a far too lackadaisical and uncritical attitude toward the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and the handling of this matter by the Ontario Government. They should not be so trusting of their colleagues in the Ontario Government. They should have had a desire to be on site to see what was going on. Indeed, the Government of Manitoba has already had two people on site for some time now because it wanted to know what was going on, for the sake of the people in that neighbouring province.

I suggested that there should be a moratorium on the further transportation of PCBs until all regulations pertaining to their transportation were in place. The Minister seems to be considering something of that nature, although every once in a while he tries to accuse me of wanting a total moratorium on the transportation of all hazardous substances. That is not what I suggested, at all. I was very specific in what I suggested.

I think there should be a public inquiry into the matter so that we can learn more about just what went on and ascertain facts in addition to the ones we already know. After that inquiry if we have one, or if we do not have one, in any event the book should be thrown at these people. The book should be thrown at these polluters, not just on the merits of this particular case, but so that a clear signal is sent out by the Government on behalf of the people indicating that Canadians will no longer tolerate polluters acting in the negligent way they are in the habit of acting. We should draw the line and say that from here on in we will not tolerate this kind of behaviour. I think the Government could make an example of this particular company which would be useful for the environment and for the safety of the public for years to come.

Also I think the Minister should call for voluntary obedience under the regulations which will not come into effect until July 1. Those regulations are public. They have been gazetted. I had a look at them this morning. They are available to the industry. Why does the Minister not call upon those companies that will be transporting dangerous substances to voluntarily obey the regulations until they come into force?

The Minister should also make clear just what the regulations will do and will not do. I think too much has been made of the regulations. Even if they were in effect, all that would have happened is that the speed of the response to the event and the accuracy of the response to the event would have been improved. The leak itself would not have been improved because regulations concerning containers in which dangerous substances are to be carried will not come into effect until even later. They have not even been gazetted. Let us not have the Government, particularly the Minister of the Environment, make too much of the regulations which are coming into effect.

Finally, again with respect to the regulations, we will not change all of this just by regulations or laws, although I think in this case the Government should seek every avenue possible to throw the book at whoever is determined to be responsible. We will change it when we finally get around to asking some very serious questions about the extent to which our whole economy depends upon dangerous substances. That is a point which I made earlier this week and one that I wanted to reiterate before hearing the reply of the Hon. Minister.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has indicated that he does not know what are the areas of responsibilities of the various federal departments or how responsibilities are shared between the federal and provincial governments. I suggest that he should spend some time trying to find out how, in this country which is a confederation, responsibilities are shared between the federal and provincial governments.

The purpose of the federal legislation is to define common standards for all provinces, while provinces must take these standards and adapt them through legislation to their particular needs.

He told me that I should pressure the various provinces and companies into living up to the standards currently in force. That I have done and will continue to do. We have published a handbook which describes in minute details how to dispose of, transport and contain PCB. Most companies and several provinces have immediately agreed to apply these standards, so that, although the legislation has not come into force yet, Quebec is already applying these standards, and as soon as we were advised that PCB would be transported, we immediately advised the Quebec Department of the Environment, as it was our federal responsibility to do, that a dangerous substance would be transported, asking that an inspector be sent to supervise the loading of the PCB.

My hon. friend said that four days elapsed before we responded. In fact, we were involved from the very beginning, in a manner consistent with our mandate and jurisdiction. Moreover, as soon as we learned that some PCB had been spilled on the highway, I contacted immediately Mr. Kells, the Ontario Minister and advised him that our expertise was at his disposal, with all the technical support he could need. It is indeed the responsibility of the province to act when such a crisis occurs. On the other hand, Mr. Kells knows that he can count on the assistance of the federal government and, as a matter of fact, he has asked us to contribute to put together a plan to dispose of the PCB waste. We indicated to him that we would help him implement this plan to dispose of all the waste and other substances which had to be removed because of the spill.

We are therefore very present and very much aware of PCB hazards. If the Hon. Member is so concerned about these hazards, and since the use of PCB has been banned since 1978, why did he not stand up in the House on several occasions to demand that provinces agree once and for all on a disposal site, something which has been delayed since 1978.

ENERGY—NOTIFICATION OF ONTARIO PREMIER. (B) PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on April 2, I raised a matter in this House with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) involving the energy accord between Canada and the western provinces. The issue today, Mr. Speaker, is not whether we are discussing the east versus the west or anything like that. What I want to know from this Government is how much will the consumers of this country have to pay—not in oil prices—in excess taxes? My question involved taxes. I want to ask this Government how much the consumers of this country will have to pay in excess taxes because of the oil deal which was signed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney)?

What we on this side of the House, and what the people of this country also want to know, is why was the Premier of the largest oil consuming province of this country, the Province of Ontario, not consulted by the Government? I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is taking notes. He is probably going to answer that the Minister of Energy of Ontario was consulted. That's fine, Mr. Speaker, but that is not what I am asking. I want to know very specifically when the Premier was consulted. I asked that question on April 2 and, of course, the Deputy Prime Minister answered a totally different question. He has a right to answer whatever he likes but, as you know, Mr.

Speaker, he should at least answer the questions we are asking, which he did not do on that particular date.

According to estimates made by various people, the $1.3 billion lost by the federal Government in reduced revenues, if applied to the gasoline sales tax, would amount to an increase of 18 cents a gallon. You perhaps will recall, Mr. Speaker, that 18 cents a gallon is a figure which creates a certain adverse reaction amongst the Tories. Whenever they hear the words "18 cents a gallon" it really does something to them. But it is understandable. They were defeated the last time they tried to implement an 18 cent a gallon increase. What we want is the assurance that there will not be a disastrous 18 cent a gallon tax increase like the last time those Tories were in power. I am sure you recall vividly the disaster the last time they were in power.

If they can give us the assurance, and there is really only one means by which we can have that assurance, that there will not be a gasoline tax increase, I will be satisfied. But that is the only one way.

Two weeks from today there is a provincial election in the Province of Ontario. Why did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of this Government not table his Budget, including or excluding any disastrous tax increases that he proposes before the Ontario election? It is not a coincidence that this whole country has to wait for the political gain of those Tories who are not strong enough, who do not have the fortitude to bring in their Budget before the provincial election? I suspect that the Premier of Ontario probably tried to delay both the Western Accord and the Budget. However, there must have been a saw-off some place and they agreed they would delay the announcement of the Budget, because that would likely be a total disaster in terms of the vote-getting ability of the Premier of Ontario. It is being proved now during this election that the Premier's campaign is a total disaster anyway. However, we did not know that at the time, so the Premier of Ontario was not consulted before the oil-pricing agreement was signed. Afterwards he came to Ottawa, called an emergency meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and pleaded his case.

Mr. McDermid: He was here anyway.

Mr. Boudria: I am told by the Parliamentary Secretary, and others, that there was no emergency meeting. Perhaps it was not an emergency, but let us say they called it in a hurry; on a few hours' notice they managed to have this meeting. Following the meeting we asked the Premier of Ontario what assurances he got. He replied, "well, I am told that we are going to do our best". Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Ontario was not consulted. He came to Ottawa in a hurry, came out empty handed, and this Government still refuses to bring in a Budget before the Ontario election.

We need to have the assurance that this Government is ready to put its money where its mouth is, and I challenge the Parliamentary Secretary to give us his assurance—put his seat on the line—that there will not be a gasoline tax increase.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as you can see by my attire, I have another engagement tonight, but when I heard that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) was raising a question concerning energy I had to postpone that engagement and come in here to listen to him. Having done so, I am sorry I did not keep the engagement and ask someone else to reply.

Mr. Boudria: Because you do not know the answer.

Mr. McDermid: I listened to you without interrupting and I would expect the same courtesy. You have seven minutes, I have only three.

Listening to what he had to say, it is obvious he has sugar plums dancing through his mind. His imagination is running away with him. He should have stayed in the provincial House. If he wanted to run in the Liberal campaign for a seat, he should have stayed there instead of fighting the election here in the House of Commons, because it is just not working.

I can tell him that the Western Accord reduced taxes for the consumers of Ontario. It has removed those taxes which were piled on, one after the other, by the previous Liberal Government. The Western Accord is removing those taxes, deregulating the industry, oil prices are falling on the world market and so will they here. That is what deregulation is all about and that is what the Western Accord is all about. It is also about getting the energy sector going again.

In my riding of Brampton-Georgetown I have 53 companies who service the oil patch directly with products, and probably more if I did a little more investigating. But there are 53 which I have been able to find that feed the oil patch directly. So if it is going well with them, so it will with industry in Ontario. Jobs are being created in Ontario and that is very, very important. He asked if the Government consulted with the Government of Ontario.

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. McDermid: Certainly it did.

Mr. Boudria: No, that is not what I said.

Mr. McDermid: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) was in constant contact with the Ontario Minister of Energy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has allowed the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to deal with the other Ministers of Energy. If the Ontario Minister of Energy informed the Premier of what was going on at all times, which I am sure he did, that is the way communications work. Maybe, just maybe, if the former Liberal Government had communicated a little more with the provinces we would not have had all the bickering we have experienced over the last little while.

Let me tell you that this Government is concerned about creating as many jobs in Ontario as is possible, and both the Atlantic Accord and the Western Accord are going to be good for all provinces in the country—not just the western provinces, not just Newfoundland, but all the provinces. It was done through consultation and without all the bickering we have seen in the last little while, which the Hon. Member seems to want to continue to promote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

IMMIGRATION

SYSTEM OF RECOGNITION—STATUTE OF IMMIGRATION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last April 4, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that henceforth the Immigration Appeal Board would have to hear personally all applicants for refugee status. Following a first refusal, the future refugee could until now send his file to the Immigration Appeal Board, which reached its decisions on the basis of the transcript of an interview. From now on, all future refugees will be able to make their case in person.

Yesterday, the Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration stated during a TV interview that a general amnesty was one of the solutions being considered to unlock the refugee status recognition process. Between 13,000 and 20,000 people are now trapped in this system.

Whether or not there is a general amnesty, I would like to point out that this should not prevent the Government from reviewing the system used for refugee status determination. In addition, everyone suspects that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has already received Rabbi Gunther Plaut's report but does not want to make it public. Canadian men and women are all anxiously waiting for the publication of this report, Mr. Speaker, for immigration matters are all vitally important for the future of our country.

APARTHEID

CONDUCT CODE APPLICABLE TO CANADIAN COMPANIES OPERATING IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the House this morning regarding the Code of Conduct for Canadian companies in South Africa.

From Statistics Canada figures we know that there are 35 Canadian companies operating in South Africa, yet only 21 of the companies have been contacted by the Department of External Affairs to have the Code of Conduct communicated to them. Only six of the companies have ever reported under the Code, and only one company continues to report, Alcan.

I believe it is inexcusable for the Government to permit a code, which it says it takes seriously, to be treated so lightly by the companies involved. We call on the Government first, to strengthen the Code as the churches task force has suggested; second, to assure that all Canadian companies in South Africa are informed about the Code; and, third, we ask the Minister to use his moral authority to see to it that all companies report under the Code.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROSECUTION FOLLOWING DEATH OF INFANT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the abortion controversy has been focused on the question of the rights for the unborn, and now it seems that the disgraceful, unacceptable treatment of the unborn has been extended to babies as well. Last fall a pregnant 19-year old high school graduate gave birth to a healthy six-pound, full-term baby girl, and subsequently left the infant to drown in a toilet bowl.

The trial took place last month. The Crown laid four charges: manslaughter, infanticide, neglecting to obtain assistance in childbirth and concealing a dead body, and finally, concealing the dead body of a child. Through the process of plea-bargaining, the Crown agreed to accept a guilty plea to the charge of concealing the body of a child, which was the lesser of the four charges. On top of this, the woman was finally given an absolute discharge, hinging primarily on the irrelevant claim that the mother did not know she was pregnant.

On behalf of all the parents who have lost a baby, or who have not been able to have one, on behalf of those who have been blessed with children, and above all, for those who recognize the sanctity and dignity of life, I would like to register my disgust and outrage that neither our political nor our legal system has taken any steps whatsoever to appeal the extremely poor judgment of the Crown prosecutor in this instance.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, every week when our constituents go to the grocery store they have to pay their grocery bills. Unfortunately that has not been the case for the Prime Ministers of our country for many, many years.

Canadians understand that the Prime Minister does a lot of entertaining, and obviously must have some help in paying the bills for guests at 24 Sussex Drive. But that does not mean that the Prime Minister should not have to pay his grocery bills. Unfortunately, in the past that has not happened. Now, as of this week, we have a Prime Minister who is at long last prepared to pay his grocery bills and those of his family.

This week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) presented a cheque for $4,000 in payment of his family's grocery bills from September 17 to March 31. Finally, and at long last, we have a Prime Minister who understands the plight of average Canadians when they go to the grocery store, and the plight of average Canadians when the cost of food rises. Thank goodness for the present Prime Minister.

ENERGY

GRAND CANAL PROPOSAL

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week Robert Bourassa, the Quebec Liberal Leader, in his book, Power From the North, advanced a proposal called the Grand Canal. This idea for the development and export of hydro and water resources in the James Bay area has long been a dream of a resident of St. John's, Newfoundland, Tom Kierans. The proposal would amass great quantities of water in northern Quebec and, with the aid of increased hydro power, pump it to a height where it could flow into the Great Lakes water system and, indeed, further on west.

The idea appears to have received a very favourable response in the United States from businessmen and politicians. Indeed, in Canada a number of government agencies and a number of prominent Canadians have expressed enthusiastic support. Mr. Kierans believes it will be the greatest private sector-government initiative to take place in Canada since the CPR. For me, it could also be a key to unlocking the vast hydro electric potential of Labrador.

I know there are critics and opponents of this scheme. Yet it is said that the Grand Canal will provide more clean water, reduce acid rain, improve agriculture, encourage trade with the U.S., and last, but by no means least, create hundreds of thousands of new jobs. I want to know where the Government stands on this proposal. If it supports the proposal, why has it not promoted it in the U.S.? We as Members of Parliament should ensure that there is a full analysis and assessment of this proposal by the appropriate parliamentary committee as soon as possible

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—MORE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have again been told that the Canadian Commercial Bank needs more of their money for more bailing out, to the tune of $685 million total. The Bank of Canada Governor, Gerald Bouey, yesterday promised $215 million more of public money to the CCB stating that he will put in "whatever amount of liquidity it may require". This bail-out comes from a bottomless pit. This is the new Bank of Bouey.

I note with interest that the Canadian Commercial Bank deals not with ordinary Canadian depositors but with large deposits from the chartered banks and large corporations. The press reported today that $2.7 billion of $3 billion in liabilities were in this kind of deposit. Therefore the chartered banks are not happy with the $60,000 limit which ordinary Canadians received when Pioneer Trust went under. Instead, they call on the Governor of the Bank of Canada to bail them out. This is what it means when a bank cannot fail in Canada. It has too many corporate friends with the right government connections to allow failure.

Surely we should rename the Canadian Commercial Bank the "Bank of Bouey". It operates by his fiat alone, it brings no return to the Canadian public that is supporting it, it is a testament to the public policy failure that props up the fat cats who have over-gorged themselves. And the Government totally backs this policy of public welfare for the rich.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF INUVIK RADIO SYSTEM

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, on April 17, 1984, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) announced the phased closure of the Canadian Forces Supplementary Radio System at Inuvik, Northwest Territories. Although this had been anticipated for some time, the announcement still came as a shock to the community which will likely lose some 800 people out of a population of 3,500. The military has been an integral part of the Town of Inuvik almost since its founding, and has brought stability to an area with a precarious resource based economy. The part played by military personnel and their families in the life of the town will be long remembered in a most favourable light.

The commitment given by the Minister that he will co-operate fully with the municipal and territorial authorities to reduce the negative impact of the closure is welcomed, and the prompt action of the territorial Government, particularly that of Mr. Dan Norris, the regional director, is to be applauded.

It is essential that all government Departments work together to find uses for the facilities to be vacated by DND. In particular, in keeping with his promise to strengthen northern defences, the Minister must utilize Inuvik to the fullest extent in connection with the North Warning System and other military developments in northern Canada.

FINANCE

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) recently suggested that his budget would be inflationary and he added that wage increases would be responsible for a higher inflation rate in 1985.

I would like to point out to the House that, after the tremendous success of the six and five program, inflationary pressures have gone down in Canada and the rate of inflation has fallen from 11 and 12 per cent to 3.7 per cent, bringing down wage settlements and major collective agreements to a lower level in 1984 without affecting the purchasing power of workers.

In the private sector, the average wage increase has been 3.2 per cent, as against 3.9 per cent in the public sector, according to the figures released last March 13.

Unless this Government forgoes completely its responsibility as concerns wage policy, it is unthinkable for the Minister of Finance to accuse Canadian workers of being the main cause of inflation at this time.

Why is the Minister of Finance now saying that his budget will be inflationary? Could it be because of the additional tax on gasoline, which will have a direct and immediate impact on the consumer price index? The Minister of Finance is attempting to blame Canadian workers for an upsurge in the inflation rate which he himself will cause with his consumer tax increases.

On the other hand, the statement made by the Minister of Finance to the effect that his budget will be inflationary at a time when the wage negotiation process is in full swing can only result in even greater confusion and uncertainty for employers and employees.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

IMPORTANCE OF WORK DONE BY VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this is National Volunteer Week and ceremonies and celebrations are being held in communities throughout the country to recognize the valuable contributions of volunteers. Without the countless hours of dedicated work by volunteers, the quality of life for many Canadians would be considerably diminished. When volunteers assist the poor, the disadvantaged, the sick and the aged, they make those persons feel that their problems can be overcome, that somebody does care.

Today's volunteers are often advocates of social change. Because they are so close to the communities they serve, they provide both a social conscience and a knowledgeable voice. The self-help movement in Canada has become the new wave of volunteerism. In this form of voluntary action, individuals join together in groups to support each other in dealing with problems which affect them in their daily lives.

I like to think of the example set by Lindy Fraser here in Ottawa. Her efforts to overcome a debilitating bone disease led her to start a self-help group, not only in her own city but across the country, to provide advice, support, and understanding to others facing the same disease. Her action testifies to the creative powers which can be unleashed through volunteerism. Lindy's example is particularly compelling since she was 90 years old when she set up this organization. Truly, volunteerism knows no limits. It is therefore appropriate that Hon. Members take this opportunity to recognize the vitality, strength, and importance of volunteering which is exhibited not only during National Volunteer Week but throughout the year.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—
APPOINTMENT OF PUBLIC SERVANT TO REVIEW ISSUES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I noticed that just before Question period began he was having a quiet consultation with the Prime Minister, and I suspect it was about this subject.

While it may be amusing from time to time for the House to watch Ministers fail to communicate with each other or pass along information, and we had an incident like that a week or so ago, it is not funny or fair for a senior public servant not to be informed personally before a public announcement is made of his appointment, as was done in the case of the appointment of Arthur Kroeger to review the American invitation on star wars and the Canadian reaction to it. Why was Mr. Kroeger not informed before the announcement was made by the Minister when he left the House yesterday, and, now that Mr. Kroeger has been informed, would the Minister be good enough to table in this House the terms of reference under which Mr. Kroeger is to operate, and advise us which specific issues Mr. Kroeger is to examine?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would join with Members throughout the House in appreciation of the availability to Canada of public servants of the quality of Mr. Kroeger to undertake the kinds of sensitive examinations which will be necessary to allow the Government of Canada to come to a knowledgeable decision on the invitation made by the Government of the United States.

The decision to appoint a small, inter-departmental task force was taken at the Cabinet meeting yesterday morning. The process was begun, a phone call was placed to Mr. Kroeger's office to confirm that he would in fact be undertaking that responsibility. The question was raised in the House of Commons before there was an opportunity for a direct conversation with Mr. Kroeger. I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would understand that this Government has a sufficient respect for Parliament that we wanted that news to be communicated to this House as quickly as possible. That is the line of conduct we followed.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Of course the name of Mr. Kroeger was not communicated to this House; it was communicated outside the House and before Mr. Kroeger had ever heard about it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not true.

IDENTITY OF MR. KROEGER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. To whom will Mr. Kroeger report? To the Minister of National Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to the Prime Minister himself? Could the Prime Minister help clear up some of the confusion by indicating who will have the main responsibility for the Star Wars file.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I must clear up a very obvious misunderstanding. The Secretary of State and myself received from the Secretary to Cabinet, Mr. Osbaldeston, the assurance that we could announce Mr. Kroeger's fortunate availability for the job. So there was not the slightest doubt about this communication, and we wanted to release the news to the House and the Canadian people with all the celerity such circumstances demand. I can inform the Hon. Member that Mr. Kroeger and his colleagues will report to the Prime Minister and to the Privy Council, and that as soon as I receive their advice, opinions and information, I intend to share it with my Cabinet colleagues and also, probably very shortly, with all the Members of this House.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In that case, Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister undertake to table Mr. Kroeger's report, when it is completed, and the Government's response to that report? Would the Prime Minister go a little further than he suggested in response to the earlier question, and allow the House to review and debate the Government's reaction to the American invitation to participate in the research?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will see what Mr. Kroeger, who is a man of great principle and unquestioned objectivity, will report, and what kind of advice he will give Her Majesty's Government. We will act in the public interest.

I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, since assuming office, has taken unprecedented measures in terms of making statements at all times in the House, and of appearing before House committees in a manner never seen in recent decades in the House. He has been open and fair in consultation, and will want to continue to be so. I think you can count on our doing that in the future.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY CHEMICAL SPILL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of the Environment. It is with regard to the Ontario PCB spill. The Minister of the Environment has been attempting to wash her hands of this disastrous issue, claiming not to have authority, when of course she and her colleague, the Minister of Transport, definitely have the authority under the Environmental Contaminants Act and several other pieces of legislation.

Can the Minister tell us how many gallons of PCBs are missing? Can he also tell us where the leak started on the Trans-Canada Highway? I represent the riding where the Trans-Canada Highway begins in Ontario. Can the Minister tell us whether in fact the leak started in Thunder Bay or Ottawa, or was it already leaking when it entered my riding in Ontario?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is not true that the Minister of the Environment has not been involved in this issue. She has been very closely involved in this issue. Her departmental officials have been involved, as have the officials of my Department. The information that I have received indicates that the substances have been accounted for.

Mr. Boudria: How many gallons?

Mr. Mazankowski: I'm not sure about the number of gallons, but that is the report I have had. I will certainly recheck to make sure, and will perhaps get back to the Hon. Member.

Later this day, Mr. Speaker, I will be tabling a protective direction under the provisions of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act which empowers the Minister of Transport to make certain regulations that are not in force at the present time to govern the transportation of certain dangerous substances.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In addition to any criminal investigation which may take place on this issue, would the Prime Minister immediately order an independent public commission of inquiry into the Ontario PCB spill so that we can all be assured that this kind of disaster will never recur in our country?

• (1125)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and his observation. The Minister of Transport, the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and myself have, from the very beginning, been troubled by this incident and have given it full and urgent attention in co-operation with the Government of Ontario. We deeply regret the imperfections in our national system with the provinces that allow for this kind of tragedy to occur. Human errors will always take place, but it is the responsibility of government to guard against them to the extent humanly possible. We shall be doing precisely that.

I give the assurance that the Minister of Transport, who is as vigilant in this as he is in all things, will be coming forward with recommendations that I think will be of satisfaction to the Hon. Member and of reassurance to the people not only in northern Ontario where this particular incident occurred but elsewhere in Canada where it might very well have occurred. We want to make as humanly sure as possible that it never happens again.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, is pursuant to the question on the PCB spill in Ontario. It seems to me that what Canadians feel the other side of the House is lacking generally with respect to these kinds of events is the same sense of moral outrage that is shown at other events. A poor person could steal a quart of milk from a corner store and get two years in jail, yet people are allowed to demonstrate the negligence we have seen in this event and, according to a Department of Transport official, the most they can be penalized under the present law is $57 for not securing the load properly.

Will the Prime Minister give us his assurance that the appropriate investigation will take place and that, wherever possible, the book will be thrown not only at the industry involved but also since there is an investigation taking place with respect to how Ontario handled it, according to a Transport official, possibly at the Ontario Ministry of the Environment for that Department's attitude and negligence in the handling of this situation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge that it is difficult for me to compete with the Hon. Member in displays of moral outrage and indignation.

Mr. Blaikie: You are pretty good at it when you want to be.

Mr. Mulroney: We operate in a system of presumption of innocence. Even though it sorely tests our sense of fairness and honour from time to time, this country is governed according to a set of laws whereby we presume innocence. People must be given their day in court in a reasonable and serene atmosphere.

I can assure the hon. gentleman that we view this incident as deeply deplorable. It may be that there was human error involved which is excusable. However, it may be that there were violations of law and regulations and disregard for human life, in which case I can assure the Hon. Member that prosecutions will be made with vigour and to the fullest extent of the law.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister listened carefully to what I said, he would have heard I asked for an investigation and then that the book be thrown at whomever might be responsible.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You want to throw the book first.

Mr. Blaikie: The Government does not seem to be taking this seriously, once again.

Mr. Waddell: They are laughing.

Mr. Blaikie: It is not very funny at all.

Is the possibility of compensation for the people who have been affected by this spill being explored by the Government? There is a couple in Winnipeg who cannot get home because their car has rightfully been impounded because of contamination. What will these people do? What kind of assurances can the Government give these people, that they simply will not be left to fend for themselves with respect to the damages that have been inflicted upon them in the short and long term?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member. Because of his conduct in the last couple of days and his statement today, I got the impression that he wanted to throw the book first and read the book later. You cannot do that under a judicial system. However, I understand the impulses of dismay that motivate my hon. friend. I know he will not presume either dilatory action or bad faith on the part of the Government. We are as dismayed and concerned about this as any other Member of the House of Commons. The Minister of Transport and all other people involved have acted quickly within our jurisdiction, and we will give every assurance that this kind of incident never occurs again.

● (1130)

With regard to individual families who may be suffering unduly, apart from the tragedy itself, as a result of it, we will look at that, and where we can be helpful we will be delighted to come forward and provide facilities from the Government of Canada to assist them in any way we can.

CANCELLATION OF PCBS STUDY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister also comment on the cancellation by his Government of an Ontario Government request for an NRC study on up-dated scientific analysis of the key issues in the assessment of PCBs?

One thing that is perfectly clear is that we do not know enough about PCBs and their effect. Yet one of the consequences of the November 8 statement of the Minister of Finance is that this very important study, requested by the very province that now finds itself in trouble in knowing what to do, was cancelled. In light of this event, would the Prime Minister ask the Minister in charge of the NRC to reconsider that cancellation and reinstate that program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to take notice of the representation made by my hon. friend and to bring it forward quickly to my colleagues for their consideration. This is a most unusual and very harmful situation. I think all Members of the House will be seeking the assurance that it never happens again. If that representation turns out to be one way we can ensure that, Hon. Members may be certain that we will proceed.

ENERGY

GRAND CANAL PROPOSAL

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In his book Power from the North, the Liberal leader in Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, advances the concept of the Grand Canal, which, as the Prime Minister knows, is a scheme to accumulate quantities of water and hydro power in the James Bay area and to use them in Canada and the U.S. There are, however, critics of that scheme. If the scheme is feasible, it could have great benefits to Canada in terms of improved agriculture, a reduction in acid rain, and last but not least, the creation of hundreds of thousands of new jobs. For me, it could also be the key to unlocking the resource potential in hydro in Labrador.

Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the Government studied this issue? What is his position? Does he support it? If so, has the Prime Minister advanced the cause, and will he advance the cause in the U.S.?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity of reading Mr. Bourassa's book in this regard. But in my book published three years ago, which I know sold like hot cakes in my hon. friend's riding—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —I put forward a proposal which I thought would be fair to Newfoundland and Quebec, which would allow for the development of those rivers flowing into the St. Lawrence, particularly from Labrador west, which would provide unique benefits to Newfoundland and Labrador and to the lower St. Lawrence and eastern Quebec. In fact the project as we set it out would have cost about $25 billion in 1979 dollars and created thousands of jobs and new opportunities for Labradorians and Quebecers.

With regard to this specific point, I have met with Premier Levesque and I have met with Premier Peckford. I have offered the full services of my office and myself to see if we cannot find a tri-partite mechanism whereby the three Governments can proceed to the development of this enormous resource which will benefit both provinces and create thousands of new jobs.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I must interrupt. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's enthusiasm for that hydro development in Labrador. I want to tell him also that we do read his book in Labrador. We go across to Manicouagan and buy it in Quebec. It is cheaper there. We have read it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The project on which I wanted the Prime Minister to focus was the Grand Canal. It is not only for Labrador but also, more important, for the James Bay watershed. I hope the Prime Minister will look at this seriously. If he considers it of benefit to Canada, and worthy of at least serious investigation, would he ensure that the Government puts forward an order so that it could be studied by the appropriate parliamentary committee and that all parliamentarians could have a chance to assess and analyse the benefits for Canada of the Grand Canal concept? Would the Prime Minister give that undertaking?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not offended about where the book is bought, just as long as people keep buying it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: We will wait for the movie.

Mr. Mulroney: I want to give my hon. friend the assurance that I view the prospect with enthusiasm. In fact I can tell him that I am working on draft terms of reference whereby the federal Government might properly involve itself in co-operation with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the Government of Quebec in developing these kinds of resources for the benefit of the citizens of those two provinces and Canada. I thank the Hon. Member very much for his interest in what is a very important issue for both provinces.

CROWN SHARE OF OFFSHORE ON DEVELOPMENT—PRIVATIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will be aware that under the National Energy Program the Crown takes a 25 per cent share of the actual development of off-shore oil and gases, otherwise known as the back-in, because this is thought to be a reasonable return to the public for past tax incentives. The Minister is also aware, I think, that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has decided to privatize this 25 per cent Crown share, offering at least a first option to Canadian companies which will be called the Canadian share.

Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs written to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources mentioning the international implications of this change, which still continues the discrimination against American oil companies, this time in favour of private Canadian oil companies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that that matter is under active consideration by the Government of Canada. He will understand that international as well as domestic implications of any action that we might take are being considered.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister is ducking the question, Mr. Speaker. I just simply asked him whether he wrote.

INTERNATIONAL IMPLICATIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a supplementary question. In his letter, did the Secretary of State for External Affairs draw the attention of the Minister of Energy to the international implications? Did he suggest a discussion before a final government decision? Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs suggest—if you can believe this, Mr. Speaker—that the Americans get a look at the proposal to change the Canadian law before it goes to Cabinet?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat my answer to the Hon. Member that the question is under consideration in Cabinet and that we are considering domestic and international implications.

I suspect that the Hon. Member may think that he has a copy of a piece of correspondence that arrived in a brown envelope. If he has, let him be forthright about it and show it to the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where's the beef?

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

EXPORTATION OF ELECTRICITY TO THE U.S.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last week, the Leader of the Quebec Liberal Party, Mr. Robert Bourassa, had a meeting in the United States with a number of U.S. governors and financiers to propose a $25 billion project that would cultimate in massive exports of power to the United States. Can the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that he is prepared to support Mr. Bourassa in his representations to the Americans, U.S. senators and State governors and U.S. financiers and help realize this project which will create jobs in Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I believe that during his visit to Washington which ended yesterday, Mr. Bourassa mentioned that he was still trying to decide on the actual scope of these projects. Generally speaking, I would be in favour of any export project of this type which would indeed be very important for Quebec, and if the Federal Government can be of any help, we will be delighted to oblige.

POSSIBLE FUTURE MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH MR. BOURASSA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Does the Prime Minister intend to arrange a meeting with Mr. Bourassa to get more information on his plan and to find out what kind of help the Government of Canada could provide, either in the form of technical assistance or through the Prime Minister's own contacts with the United States, and also to see whether any financial assistance will be necessary to help realize this important project for Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I meet Mr. Bourassa quite frequently, and we have discussed various problems and issues. However, for the time being, this is a project he is submitting as Leader of the Opposition in Quebec. Elections will probably be held in due time, and until then, we are dealing with the duly elected Government of Quebec, and as a Quebecer and a Quebec taxpayer, I am of course very interested in any proposal likely to create jobs in our province. I think Mr. Bourassa is particularly knowledgeable in this field, considering his involvement in the James Bay project, and I listen to what he has to say on the subject with a great deal of attention and respect.

NATIVE PEOPLES

FUNDING OF ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who has been given notice of it. The Métis and non-status native organizations in Manitoba, Alberta, and British Columbia are still awaiting their funding, and we are well into the fiscal year. This is holding up vital work for native people, and it is also holding up the funding which goes to these organizations from the provinces. The Minister knows that these contracts have been on his desk for at least a month and that there was a commitment a full year ago to fund these organizations. Why is there a hold up in funding for native organizations in western Canada? Is this a part of the Nielsen task force strategy of cut-backs in funding for native groups?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving me notice of the question and for raising this important matter. As the Hon. Member will know, we are in the final year of the programming in relation to support for these groups. I am setting in motion a review mechanism for the future. At the moment, given the evolution of new groups and many demands, I have been having intensive discussions with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I expect to be making a decision, as I said in committee yesterday, in the very near future.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, native people have been in western Canada for a long time, and funding for native organizations has been in place for at least a decade. I do not know to what new evolutions the Minister is referring. Will he tell us exactly when he will make this money available, since the contracts are already on his desk and since he knows that if the underfunds these groups it will simply be a transfer of the cost to the provinces and an implementation of the Nielsen strategy of cut-backs to native groups?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is no anticipated diminution of the level of funding for groups. As the Hon. Member also knows, as a fact of the evolution of native groups across the country there are now many regional groups competing for the same dollar levels. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and I are trying to address the legitimate needs of people, particularly non-status people in cities and in areas such as the one the Hon. Member represents. We are trying to find a solution and will be announcing a decision for this last year of the program, as I said, in the very near future.

HEALTH

TESTING OF TOXIC HORMONE TO CONTROL COCKROACHES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister will know that his Department is currently testing a low toxic hormone called "hydroprene", which is being used quite effectively in the United States for the control of cockroaches. Cockroach infestation is a major problem for apartment dwellers across the country. Could the Minister advise us when this testing will be completed and when hydroprene will be available on the Canadian market?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the Hon. Member any indication of the date that hydroprene will be licensed and used in Canasda. The matter which he has raised is a serious one. He is aware, also, of recent publications regarding cockroach infestation. I will get further information on it and get back to him.

FINANCE

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Finance. I do not know whether I should direct it to the Minister of State (Finance) or to the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday we saw a television report from Halifax were six people applied for job openings and, worse still, 1,000 applicants for a non-specialized job in Cape Breton.

Here is my question: Can the Minister of Finance or his stand-in tell us if they will address this unemployment problem by implementing the suggestion made by the Chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Conservative Member for Mississauga South, who advocates a $5 billion deficit cutback and a $2.4 billion increase in gasoline tax?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to accept for one moment the proposition or the inference of the Hon. Member about the consequences of prudent management in government. In the absence of the Minister, I will simply say that I take the question as notice and will ensure that the Minister gets back to the Hon.

Member with an appropriate answer that sets the record straight.

[Translation]

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CHAIRMAN OF STANDING COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

To set the record straight, the Globe and Mail of April 18 attributes the following remarks to the Chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, a man who holds a very important position:

[English]

"I think the caucus would be unhappy if he"—that is the Minister of Finance—"didn't cut the deficit by $5 billion. I think he would like to go farther but he can't because so many people are out of work". I would like the Government House Leader to bring that to the attention of the Minister.

At the same time, would the House Leader ask the Minister of Finance whether he has also decided to follow up on the recommendations of the Chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Progressive Conservative Member for Mississauga South, concerning the abolition of the Federal Business Development Bank, the abolition of the Export Development Corporation, and the abolition of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Obviously, we want to cut down the deficit, and so did the Leader of the Opposition when he was running for the leadership of his Party. Unless I am mistaken, he said he would cut the deficit by half within a few short years. In the course of the French TV debate between him and me, he also stated that billions of dollars were being wasted here in Ottawa.

Hopefully with your support, we will try by every reasonable means to save taxpayers' money and handle every dollar collected by Ottawa with utmost care and attention. One of the problems is that there has been outright abuse in the past and, together, we are trying to set the situation straight. I know that the Hon. Member, as Quebec's former Minister of Finance, will give us full support. Surely he knows that a chairman of a House committee does not speak for the Government, the Minister of Finance does and will be doing so through the upcoming May Budget.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY—REQUEST FOR LOAN GUARANTEE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The future survival of White Farm Equipment is at stake today because the receivers are starting, through the dealers, to provide cut-rate sales of the equipment, despite the fact that the company itself has been making operating profits and has raised its market share from 7 per cent to 22 per cent over the past 18 months. Will the Minister commit the Government today to saving the 370 jobs involved, by joining with the banks and the Ontario Government that have assessed this company as viable? Will he see to it that a guarantee is provided for the $17 million in further bank loans which will help the company to survive?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will recall, yesterday there was a similar question directed to myself with respect to White Farm Equipment. The fact is that we had discussions with the various Borg-Warner officials, with Mr. Sinclair, and with union representatives. We are hopeful that something can be done to save this company. The rather pessimistic view the Member is taking about sellouts at the present time is, I think, being over-stated. There is a hope that over the next few weeks something can be done as far as White Farm is concerned, preferably by the private sector.

DAILY MANAGEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact the receivers are starting to sell off equipment. If that happens, the confidence of farmers across the country will be destroyed. During this period of time when the Minister is working out financial arrangements and discussing the matter, will he personally intervene to have the day-to-day control of the company put back into the hands of the Canadian management for a period of 90 days, in order to permit financial arrangements to be organized and these jobs to be secured?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, once again I only wish the Hon. Member would check his facts before he makes these statements in the House. The fact is that the receiver is not selling off equipment today, as indicated by the Hon. Member. I think there is a generally co-operative spirit on behalf of the union representatives, the Borg Warner people, and the existing management of this company. If there is a way to save it, hopefully it will be found.

CRIMINAL CODE

LIMITS OF DEFINITION OF THE WORD "PREGNANT"

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Considering that Wednesday last was a memorable day as clause 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into force, can the Minister tell the House whether he intends to amend sections 251 and 252 of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion that is discriminatory to women since it now reads as follows: "A female person who is pregnant." It could be replaced by "a person who is pregnant." Mr. Speaker, have we once seen a pregnant male? Does the Minister intend to amend that part of the legislation?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly do whatever I can to prevent men from becoming pregnant, although I believe there was a mayor of Montreal who came dangerously close.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I will review the Section in question, Mr. Speaker.

MASTER AGREEMENT BARGAINING CONCEPT—RIGHT TO STRIKE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I did give him notice of my question. On Wednesday the Minister told the House that he had signed memoranda of understanding with two major Public Service unions, maintaining the new approach of bargaining on a master agreement basis and thereby indicating to us that 80 per cent of the items under negotiation would not be subject to the right to strike. It appears that the Minister's comments in regard to the impasses which would not be settled by the right to strike are misunderstood either by public servants or by the unions themselves. Perhaps the Minister could clarify to the House, the Canadian public, and the public servants, if indeed the right to strike on the major items concerning the master contracts will be maintained or withdrawn.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question I certainly hope that my hon. colleague opposite has listened to the comments of the president of one of the unions, comments which gave rise to this controversy. We did sign the memorandum of agreement. It is a memorandum in which details will obviously have to be worked out.

As my hon. colleague knows, these contracts are complex. He certainly raised a question of interpretation. Could he ever go back to the old system? The agreement is clear. It states that on the issues that are mutually agreed upon to be discussed at the master table, the method of conflict resolution will be one of binding conciliation, and that is an agreement in principle that has been reached by both parties.

There may be questions of interpretation as to which items fall into which categories, but the statement I made in the House the other day was a statement that was thoroughly discussed with the unions over the last six months, and one that reflects thoroughly the position of both to move on to a formal agreement which is to be presented to the House in the very near future.

EXPANSION OF AGREEMENT WITH UNIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Notwithstanding the expression, "binding conciliation", which is not very clear to many of us—

Just to clarify the matter and avoid any confusion, could the Minister table the memorandum of understanding so that we on this side of the House can read it, public service employees may know what commitment their union made on their behalf and everyone may better understand exactly what is involved?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let us start with the concept of binding conciliation to which I referred the other day, in fact when I replied to a question of my hon. colleague. I explained it then. I explained the method of conciliation board appointment and pointed out the differences between this formula of conflict resolution and the one that existed in the Act. If at this rather early stage of the discussions union members would like to know more about the terms and conditions their union leaders agreed to, I would think it is up to them to get the information from their union leaders.

As for us, I stated clearly the agreements in principle the government is going to implement over the next few months, on the one hand, to fulfil the election commitments that were made and, on the other hand, to improve, for the first time in more than twenty years, as was mentioned by one of the union leaders—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but this is becoming a Statement on Motions.

FORESTRY

REFORESTATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—SEEDLING PLANTING SEASON

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. A year ago the federal Government offered $50 million per year for a reforestation agreement with British Columbia, and British Columbia refused to sign that agreement. Because of that we lost a much needed year of tree planting in British Columbia. As the Minister knows, the temporary reforestation agreement expired three weeks ago.

Since the planting of seedlings in British Columbia can only occur during a very limited number of weeks and since that period of time is now upon us, will the Minister agree today to sign that part of the ERDA related to the Canada-B.C. reforestation agreement, which includes $150 million of federal money and $150 million of provincial money, so that the planting of the seedlings can go ahead this year since it did not last year?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as we have indicated to British Columbia, we would be willing to sign the $300-million forestry agreement to which the Hon. Member refers. We have indicated that that would certainly be the highest amount to which we would go, and we are waiting for the reply of the British Columbia Government on whether or not that agreement, and certain other agreements, might be signed.

REQUEST FOR EARLY SIGNING OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's colleague, the Minister of State for Forestry, has indicated to me that there is nothing in law or in practice stopping the Minister from signing the B.C. reforestation agreement now. The B.C. Government has made it clear that it is prepared to come forward with $150 million. The Minister has made it clear that he is prepared to come forward with $150 million. Why does he not sign the agreement today so that those who want to get the seedlings in the ground, and the nurseries under way, can do so? There is an area that is larger than Prince Edward Island that needs to be replanted in Canada's most important forestry province.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as far as we are concerned there is absolutely no problem with signing the agreement but, as a rule, one signs agreements with other parties.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY CHEMICAL SPILL—FUNDING OF DEPARTMENT'S EMERGENCY BRANCH

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to return to the matter of the PCB tragedy in northern Ontario. In the Department of the Environment there is a section dealing with environmental emergencies and the interprovincial transport of dangerous wastes. Why, in the current estimates, has the Prime Minister's Government cut the budget for that section by some 25 per cent, or more than $1 million, from last year's funding? Does this not show a serious lack of concern for Canadians and the Canadian environment? It is certainly something that is not consistent with protecting Canadians from tragedies like the northern Ontario PCB spill.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker I think it is quite unfair for the hon. gentleman to try to tie a given budgetary measure to the serious accident that could or could not have occurred but unfortunately did occur in northern Ontario. In any event—

Ms. Mitchell: Can't hear you, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: That is because you are used to the shouting that comes from your colleagues next to you.

An Hon. Member: You damaged your ears.

• (1200)

Mr. Mulroney: Your ear-drums are damaged, Margaret. I want to ensure that my hon. friend hears me, and I apologize.

Ms. Mitchell: I listen intently. Let's have some sense while you are at it.

Mr. Mulroney: Well, there may be something wrong with her ears, but there is nothing wrong with her voice.

I would say to my hon. friend that the Minister will be filing regulations with the House very shortly. But, in any event, I know that my hon. friend, who was a Minister in the former Government, will agree that the Government of Canada has acted in complete co-operation with the Government of Ontario. I salute the Minister of Transport and other colleagues who, under very difficult circumstances, have done an outstanding job in being helpful to all concerned. They will continue to do so.

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF BRANCH STATUS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Can he explain to the House why the section of the Department of the Environment which deals with environmental emergencies and the transport of dangerous wastes has been downgraded by his Government from a full branch to simply a division of another branch? Will the Government commit itself and move immediately to restore the status of that division to a full branch as it was previously, and to restore the budget of that division of the Department to what it was previously? If the Government does not do that, then its words, with respect to its concern about the environment and Canadians and preventing occurences such as the tragedy of the PCB spill, are hollow and empty.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's comments are most unfair. The fact of the matter is that the Government has taken some very major initiatives with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods. The promulgation of the regulations has been accelerated to July 1 and, as I said previously, we will table further regulations today. There is close co-operation with the Department of the Environment in all of these aspects. I think we all agree that when we can put in place the kind of legislative and regulatory framework which governs the transportation of dangerous goods, which we are trying to do—and which process has been accelerated in co-operation with the industry and the Province—it will be a much safer environment for the movement of all dangerous substances.

PEACE CAMP ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a petition which is signed by some 1,300 Canadians, who are exercising their rights as Canadian citizens. They believe that the ugly tent on Parliament Hill is a fit reminder of the prospect of ugliness of a war fought with nuclear weapons.

COAL DUST EMISSIONS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House which is signed by a number of senior citizens from the community of Agassiz, British Columbia. The petition concerns the emission of coal dust from coal trains which use the CPR rail lines. Their petition asks that the Government take the necessary steps to reduce the emission of coal dust, and also to reduce the speed of trains which carry hazardous material near residential areas.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): The Canada Post Corporation informs me as follows:

1. Yes. (a) (i) 133 employees including two executives, (ii) The total budget for fiscal year 1984-85 for Corporate Communications Head Office was $13.3 million, (iii) 4.3 million to January 31, 1985.

2. Will the Government amend the Program to include persons with a mental disability?

3. Will the Government initiate a policy whereby companies that receive contracts from the Government would be required to show that they intend to make positive efforts to hire persons with a physical or mental disability as a pre-requisite to receiving such contracts?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Treasury Board and Employment and Immigration Canada as follows:

1. Yes. Thirty-nine departments and agencies were asked to submit a multiyear (3 years) Affirmative Action plan while 14 small agencies (with less than 100 employees) were asked to submit only an annual report on their situation and a description of the activities undertaken to improve the representation of the target groups members within their organization.

The action plan submission date for four of the five Affirmative Action pilot departments (Employment and Immigration Canada, the Treasury Board Secretariat, the Secretary of State and the Public Service Commission) was established in light of each department's planning cycle and vary from March 31, 1985 to October 31, 1985. (a) To date, 20 plans have been received. (b) April 1, 1985.

2. The Program, as it now exists, does include individuals who are mentally handicapped.

3. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced in the House on March 8, 1985, "This Government will require Crown corporations, federally-regulated businesses, and contractors providing goods and services to the federal Government, to implement employment equity" and "Businesses seeking Government contracts for goods and services of $200,000 or more will have to show their compliance or stand to lose their right to compete for Government business."

Employment equity applies to women, disabled persons (including physically, psychiatrically, developmentally and learning disabled persons), Native people, and members of other visible minorities.

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 18, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-39, an Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House today to speak to a Bill that, while it is very important to the country as a whole, is particularly significant because of the resulting inequity in its treatment of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments.

I would like to say first of all why I am opposed to the Bill, and at this point, I want to express not only my own opinion as the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, as a Member from Quebec, but also the views of the Government of Quebec, and I would like to recall for Hon. Members what was said by the Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Duhaime. I shall, if I may, give a summary of the statement made by Mr. Duhaime in the Quebec National Assembly.

First of all, Mr. Duhaime explained that the Premier of Quebec and himself had made representations to the Federal Government, urging it to provide an equitable solution to the problem created by the 1982-87 formula that will result in a drop in equalization entitlements for Quebec. The Government felt that two points were particularly important and, in fact, fundamental. First of all, Quebec could not accept the reduction in equalization entitlements for 1985-86 and 1986-87, compared with 1984-85, considering that the province does not expect any significant improvement in its economy compared with the other provinces, and the reduction thus contradicts the whole philosophy of the equalization program.

The second major point for Quebec, still according to the Quebec Minister of Finance, is that the Federal Government should consider the more general problem caused by the anticipatory aspect of the new equalization program for the five years in the period 1982-87. According to Mr. Duhaime, Quebec is the only province getting less out of the 1982-87 equalization than it would otherwise have obtained. Quebec's loss is very substantial, according to Mr. Duhaime, and was estimated at about $750 million, while the other equalization recipients were gaining a total of $445 million under the formula.

Mr. Duhaime went on to recall that during his meetings with the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) he pointed out that the Federal Government's device for providing supplementary equalization payments for the year 1985-86 meant that lump sum payments would go to six provinces receiving equalization, namely, $110 million to Quebec, $50 million to Manitoba, $20 million to Nova Scotia, $20 million to New Brunswick, $15 million to Newfoundland and $5 million to Prince Edward Island. In 1986-87, no payments will be made except to Manitoba which will receive $65 million. Thus, all provinces receiving equalization payments will share $285 million over the next two years. Out of that amount, a sum of $175 million, according to Mr. Duhaime, is being added to the $445 million already received, making a grand total of $620 million for the Atlantic Provinces and Manitoba. At the same time, Quebec's loss of $750 million, under the new formula, is being corrected, but only very partially, by a payment of $110 million for 1985-86, leaving Quebec with a net loss of $640 million. Mr. Duhaime went on to say that, in his discussions with the federal Government, he had given due consideration to the federal Government's precarious financial and budgetary situation. I think that the Government of Quebec, particularly the Minister of Finance, and the Premier of Quebec did show restraint in this case since the Government of Quebec agreed to reduce its initial request for $750 million to $450 million, $300 million in 1985-86 and $150 million in 1986-87. According to Mr. Duhaime, however, the unilateral and political settlement announced by the federal Minister of Finance is far from satisfactory, it is even beyond comprehension.

Mr. Duhaime pointed out that, under the solution advocated by the federal Government, Quebec's equalization rights this year will be close to $200 million less than last year's. He stated: "I am surprised and astonished, but I see no logic in the proposed settlement. It allocates funds to some provinces which, according to the federal Government's own forecasts, do not stand to lose any equalization rights in 1985-86 and which are already favourably dealt with as a result of changes to the 1982 equalization program." Be that as it may, Mr. Duhaime said that the file remains open as far as the Quebec Government is concerned, and that they are waiting for further discussions with federal officials with a view to obtaining fair and equitable compensation based on the very principle of equalization rather than on unilateral policy as stated, unfortunately, by the Minister of Finance of this federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to understand what is going on. I think that all Members of the House, particularly Quebec Members, have received a document from the Quebec Minister of Finance. All explanations in the file were crystal clear. Yesterday I showed the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) one of the documents contained in the file of the Minister of Finance, and I dare hope that all Quebec Members will look over the chart showing that the Province of Newfoundland, which had not incurred any losses, was given a $15 million gift on the eve of the election. As we all know, they have a Conservative Government. Prince Edward Island had a loss of $5 million and got $5 million, Nova Scotia lost $50 million and got $20 million, New Brunswick—another province headed by a Conservative Government, no losses, according to the federal Government—received a $20 million gift so Mr. Hatfield might spruce up his image. As to Manitoba, a loss of $72 million last year, a gain of $50 million this year and $65 million more next year.

I would suggest that the Members from Quebec would be well advised to examine the Quebec figures in the document sent by the Minister of Finance. Quebec has a loss of $750 million but gets only $110 million. Why did the Government fail to react positively to the proposal or suggestion made yesterday by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the compromise offered by the former Liberal Government? Interim compensation over the next two years would have enabled Quebec to get the same amount as before, it would not have been penalized. In the meantime, the federal Government could have had discussions with Quebec with respect to such contentious issues as population figures and the overall total. In my opinion, Members of the Quebec caucus could have been wiser, and I hope they will be on the ball and raise the issue at next week's caucus and urge the Minister of Finance to maintain the transitional payment formula for the next two years. Why did he not do it for Quebec, and why not do it now? Second, why this attempt to push the Bill through? Why does the Minister of Finance want to give us that hand-out? I was disappointed yesterday when it was a Member from Quebec, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance and Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), who said: That is all we have. We must therefore try to find out who is telling the truth in that party opposite. In a statement made in public at a press conference, following a meeting with the Premiers where the Quebec Finance Minister was also present, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) said that the door was still open and that negotiations were still possible even though the Minister of Finance had closed that door. We do not have to take the Minister at his word however because it is often possible to have him change his mind. In any case, I trust that the Prime Minister himself can keep his word, otherwise, everyone will know that he cannot.

If the Prime Minister said that he was willing to resume negociations with Quebec, why are they in such a hurry to pass this Bill? Why not wait? Would it not have been wiser for the Quebec Premier to meet with the Prime Minister of Canada, as the Prime Minister was willing to do, and review this file and at least listen to what Quebec had to say and make the necessary changes?

I presume all Quebec Members have seen in the newspapers the headline "Equalization: Duhaime will keep after the Quebec Conservatives". He helped you during the last campaign, but I will say he is beginning to regret it.

"Wilson: Quebec must recognize that the Federal Government could not do any better in the present situation." The Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Finance keep talking about the deficit, but it was not the same tune when it was time to negotiate $2.5 billion for the West. I can see the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard), who carries the luggage for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and who is saying that all this is not serious as far as Quebec is concerned. I can hardly wait to see him rise and speak for Quebec.

I have here another article entitled "Equalization: Ottawa is willing to listen". Are the Prime Minister's statements made at press conferences mere rhetoric? Or mere bluffing? "Mulroney is willing to re-open the equalization debate on a more comprehensive level." This means that what the Prime Minister said was untrue because, today, his Party is trying anxiously to get this Bill through post haste and in an underhanded manner without continuing to negotiate.

But Duhaime is not cringing! At least, he has guts. He could inspire others. According to Jean-Louis Roy, this is a flawed compromise as far as equalization is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be helpful and wise... Normally, when you are right in the middle of negotiations, and I believe that any ordinary Canadian will agree, when a tenant and a landlord are negotiating a rent or lease, the landlord does not write out the lease forthwith, but waits until negotiations and discussions are over. But now the Government is trying to impose this. Have any pressures been applied by Ontario or Western Members, since the Quebec Members in the Party opposite all seem to be sound asleep? This Bill will be passed quickly and the money will go elsewhere. I do not know about that. Well, then it is not too bad.

Some Hon. Members: We are awake!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that they are trying to wake up. But it is not in this House that I am asking you to wake up. Just a moment, I see the Minister of Transport. It is about time he should wake up. I am told he could do better. From his performance rating, it is time for him to wake up in Cabinet, to put his feet down, to muster up his courage and go at it. This is what it takes! People want to see men and women who know how to fight. They do not want chickenlivered people like the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette), who says: We are not here to defend Quebec. We can see that he used to be in the chicken business as he is still behaving like his feathered friends.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that Quebec is being conned by the Mulroney Government. I can give another example which shows that the equalization formula is penalizing Quebec and favouring the Provinces that have Conservative Premiers. On November 8, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced cutbacks in major job creation programs. Quebec lost nearly $800 million. What did we see then? All the Quebec Members rose and applauded. They were all so happy. They were all so satisfied. Even the leader of gas station owners in Quebec, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), said on television: "I will dare the multinationals!" Since he has been sitting in this House, the multinationals have made better money than ever, Mr. Speaker.

Recently, there was another $800 million cut. Why? Could a Progressive Conservative member or minister justify a $10 million cut in the National Capital Commission budget strictly made in Quebec? Ironically, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) is from Quebec. I know that he has been put under the supervision of his private secretary who is the real boss but can someone explain why, at the National Capital Commission, a $10 million cut strictly applies to projects which were to be carried out on the Quebec side while those to be carried out in Ontario are maintained. Precisely, the Hon. Member for Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean . . . the move of the marina, the old Montreal port, $3.5 million. It means less jobs and more unemployed. I understand that on November 8, you were all new around here and still did not know where the rest rooms were, but seven months have elapsed and it is about time some of you woke up. A sum of $85 million, again in the Chicoutimi area for the construction of natural gas branch lines has been cut. Two important projects in the Trois-Rivières area: a pharmaceutical laboratory and a botanical research centre in Victoriaville. Just imagine, the slasher of the Treasury Board, another guy who is supposed to be from Quebec, has made the cut and all the Quebec members rise to applaud him.

I remember that when they were elected, the Conservative members, especially those from Quebec, were schooled, they were not free. What happened at their first caucus? The party in power was compared to a football team: the Prime Minister is the quarterback, the ministers are the offensive and the defensive and then the members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With due respect, I would ask the Hon. Member to speak to the Bill.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I will speak to the subject under discussion, but I want to show how Quebecers are being hoodwinked by this government. I will carry on with my explanation.

Then a backbencher stands up and says: Yes, but what is our role in the football team? You have chosen the quarterback, the offensive line, the defensive line; what is left for us to do? He is told that as do the girls who lead others in cheering for the team between each quarter of the game, the role of Progressive Conservative members is to act as cheerleaders.

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau is rising on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I believe that you have already warned the Hon. Member that his remarks were far from relevant. But he keeps on doing it, and it seems to me that he should—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has made her point and that the Hon. Member in view of his experience, got it.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I gave that explanation precisely to show that this is an opportunity for Quebec Members to ask for more time to consider the bill as to ensure fairness. I am glad to see that the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who is responsible for the CMHC, is in the House. There again, Mr. Speaker, as if by chance, the formula chosen by the Minister responsible for the CMHC under the housing renovation and rehabilitation program penalizes Quebec in comparison with other provinces. As Hon. Members have seen in the municipalities of their own riding, and the Minister should agree with me on that, this year, under the housing renovation and rehabilitation program, Quebec is losing $17.8 million while Ontario is losing less than two million, that is 35.7 per cent compared with 9.3 per cent. I challenge the Minister to say those figures are wrong because they come from his department and his office. He is the one who sent them to me.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is another instance where Members from Quebec should stop being cheerleaders and start asking for results. Another one is the agreement with the petroleum multinational companies of Western Canada . . . What is this going to do for jobs in Quebec? Who is going to pay the piper? The people of Quebec. Quebecers want jobs. Today at least I had reason to congratulate the Prime Minister who supported Mr. Robert Bourassa in approaching people in the United States in connection with his energy project.

Mr. Speaker, for all the reasons I have just mentioned, I believe that we in the Liberal Party cannot support this Bill, even if it is advantageous for other provinces. As a Quebecer, I find this injustice unacceptable, and furthermore, I am astonished that the Conservative Members are about to make their leader . . . —I am not supposed to say it but you know what I mean—for having said: The door is open, I am ready to negotiate. He has the Minister prepare a dossier, the Quebec Minister of Finance is going to bring down his Budget, and now the Prime Minister is asking the House to pass this Bill, and he has not even finished his negotiations. This is outrageous. This is not how the Minister of State (Transport) used to conduct negotiations, I am sure of that. And the Member who was in your riding before would not have stood for it either. He would at least have risen from his seat, and he would have made a terrible scene. This is outrageous. If we consider the agricultural sector and the dairy policy, it is a disaster.

I am therefore going to conclude this debate on the issue—

Mr. Garneau: How about the $2.5 billion they gave the multinationals? They say they do not have the money!

Mr. Malépart: My hon. friend was kind enough to remind me about the $2.5 billion negotiated with the multinationals in Western Canada. When a western bank was in trouble, it did not take long to spend a couple of million. No hesitation at all. But when Domtar was in trouble, that was a Quebec project and what is Quebec, after all! I have a sneaking suspicion the Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Development does not even know where Quebec is. He says the Government does not have to give anything because they are making a profit. Why should we give a grant? The multinationals are making money too: $2.5 billion. There is just no logic in what these people are saying. And here I am quoting the Quebec Minister of Finance. These are not my words. Even the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Lévesque, and I cannot say he is one of my great friends since he is one of the people who helped to get you re-elected. And today you have betrayed him. Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to draw the attention of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to the fact that at least two projects in Ontario have been either cancelled or postponed, and I am referring to the bicycle path and the Eastern Parkway. What the Hon. Member said earlier was false. Second, on the Outaouais side, three or four projects that were on the National Capital Commission's calendar have been maintained, including the boulevard de la Vérendrye in the City of Gatineau, in my riding. It is therefore just not true, that this $10 million cutback in spending penalized Quebec or that the cutback was aimed at specific projects and included a substantial part of administrative costs. That is my first comment.

My second comment refers to the Domtar case which the Liberal Opposition seems to want to bring up every time, because there does not seem to be anything else on which they can get any political mileage. I may remind the Hon. Member that an agreement was concluded. Additional funding will be granted, but it will come out of the regional development budget . . . Yes, because our Government, unlike—

Mr. Malépart: What about the bank in Western Canada?

Mrs. Mailly: Will you keep quiet! You are always shouting when someone has the floor.

As I was saying, unlike the previous administration, this is a responsible Government that is concerned about how the taxpayers' hard-earned money is being used. Instead of wasting money and using funds to get re-elected in our ridings like the Liberals have been doing for 20 or even 100 years, we want to administer the money we get from Canadians in a responsible and reasonable manner, and we want to use that money where it will create jobs. Domtar will be able to proceed with its project with money from the budget for regional development. The Quebec Government, which owns part of Domtar, was satisfied with the agreement. It appreciates our situation because it is facing the same problems in Quebec where the taxpayer has a very substantial tax burden.

• (1230)

And another comment.

An Hon. Member: Is it a comment or a speech?

Mrs. Mailly: I will have another question at the end, if only you will shut up! It is unbelievable that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie should speak of treason on the part of a Conservative Government which at long last has managed to foster a spirit of concertation in—

Mr. Malépart: That is not what Mr. Lévesque is saying!

Mrs. Mailly: Will you shut up, please! In the regions . . . I am about to raise a question of privilege, I have the right to speak as a Member. This is the comments and questions period. I have comments to make on remarks by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie which border on truth—border on lie, I should say, because truth is something he has long since forgotten.

Mr. Malépart: I will get up and show how many times you lied to the people here in the House.

Mrs. Mailly: As I was saying about the question of treason against Quebec, I think that the 58 Conservative Members who represent Quebec have already shown to their constituents, in a very tangible way, that they can agree with all levels of Government, and that explains why things are going smoothly in our ridings.

There are things like Mirabel, for instance. There are things like the issue of Public Service unions' rights—

Mr. Malépart: You are having a hard time finding things!

Mrs. Mailly: —things which had been on the back burner for quite some time and which have been progressing thanks to this spirit of concertation.

So we have no lesson to take from the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie who, during the previous administration, was very divisive and promoted confrontation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask him a question, if he is still with us, or if he wants to read his . . . I have no idea what he is reading. So, to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie . . . It is . . . I beg your pardon? Pardon me? Mr. Speaker, I would like to know . . . No . . . Fair enough. I would like to ask him a question. Why this renewed attempt at creating a climate of dissension between Quebec and the federal Government now that, finally, we have succeeded in creating a link between Quebecers and Quebecers, be they at the federal of provincial level? What is the Hon. Member trying to do? What is the purpose of all this?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

An Hon. Member: His microphone is off.

Mrs. Mailly: He does not need one!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I found the Hon. Member's intervention rather brilliant yesterday, but today I find it rather less so.

To answer her last question, we should not speak without rhyme or reason. She asked: Why create those divisions? If only she had read her papers rather than having fun in the House. The paper from which I quoted is by the Quebec government. The comments which I quoted were not made by Liberal members but by René Lévesque and by the Minister of Finance Mr. Duhaime. He said that you had disappointed him. We did not express that view. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should read her papers; I think that she did not read them.

She suggested that what I said about the National Capital is not true. Well once again, she has not read Mr. Wilson's paper on page 87, with respect to the National Capital, it is written in black and white. The National Capital Commission is not an isolated case . . . the $10 million, the cuts have strictly been made in Quebec.

Mrs. Mailly: It is untrue.

Mr. Malépart: Is there a messenger? Can she read? A messenger to bring her . . . She cannot read, Mr. Speaker. The truth is that it is written in black and in white, $10 million. It is really a pity.

Mr. Speaker, I learned something when I was playing hockey. You do not hit weaker players and I will add nothing else about the Hon. Member because she really knows nothing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon). Questions or comments.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask whether there was a doctor in the House because I was afraid the blood pressure of my colleague for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) might get dangerously high. I was thinking: "There we are. Something is going to happen in the House of Commons today."

Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie has quoted an excerpt from a Quebec Government document because I believe it is the first time something from such a document has been quoted by a Liberal Member in this House. This is good and it could have been otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, the reply to the question asking why this Bill must be passed so quickly is quite simple. It is because the Provinces need the money and we promised to do it. You never made any such commitment yourselves. You had the truth at the time, but as concerns your equalization formula, you never made any such commitment. The answer is therefore quite simple, Mr. Speaker, and I can tell my hon. colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie that it is only because the Provinces need the money.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that if we want the negotiations to go on, it is because the Prime Minister said that the door was still open. The Hon. Member used to sit on school boards and he never accepted a settlement before the negotiations were over. I recognize that the Hon. Member is a man of ability and intelligence, but it was your Prime Minister, not mine, who said right on television, and it was reported in the newspapers . . . I see that the leader of the gas station owners is back in the House. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that he purchased a Mr. Muffler franchise and has had 58 mufflers installed in this House? To come back to the question asked by the Hon. Member, I think that while the negotiations are still in progress it is important for the Government to say: Let us pass that part of the Bill which deals with the other Provinces and wait for the negotiations to be completed with Quebec, at least to comply with Mr. Duhaime's request. His budget will be brought down on April 24. I think that the Hon. Member will agree that we should give them a chance, because if this Bill is passed before, there will be a "conservative" tax in the Quebec budget to compensate for the injustice created by your Government. The Hon. Member nods his head in agreement. If you agree not to defend Quebec, it is fine with me.

We were referring to Domtar a little earlier, Mr. Speaker, and there is the mapping service also. This money had already been allocated by the Government. However, when the Government took $2.5 billion, this money was not for regional development, but it was new money for the oil multinationals. And the money for the Commercial Bank, there is nothing new in all that. This is why I say that, where equalization is concerned, Quebecers are being tricked by the Mulroney Government and they have lost nearly $1 billion because of this Government since September 4. They deserve to be treated fairly this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. Debate continues with the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly to Bill C-39, a Bill introduced by the Government to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period from 1982 to 1987. First of all, I would like to say that our Party thinks the Bill is unfair to the Province of Quebec. In fact, that is why a number of my colleagues have spoken out quite vigorously on the subject.

Of course, I could enumerate the payments that will be made to the various provinces, but since this information is already on the record, I would rather elaborate on the specific case of Quebec which I feel is getting very little in the way of equalization payments under the new formula since the new Conservative Members from Quebec seem reluctant to comment at all, being content to praise and approve the Government's proposal. Mr. Speaker, Quebec's loss has been estimated at about $750 million, while other provinces are actually receiving payments totalling about $445 million. When I said $750 million, these are the very figures used by the Quebec Minister of Finance. Our Party cannot support this legislation, not because it gives money to the provinces, Mr. Speaker, but because we believe it does not give enough and is in fact unconstitutional. Last Wednesday, the Prime Minister spoke about equality. We are far from this equality enshrined in Section 36 of the 1982 Constitutional Act, which says the following about equalization and regional disparities:

● (1240)

36(1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to:

And then there are three commitments:

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

Of course, these three commitments in the Canadian Constitution underlie the whole equalization system in Canada. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I find this Bill unacceptable because it does not completely satisfy the three conditions I have just mentioned. Under the present formula, Quebec's equalization entitlement will probably be $200 million below the level of the payments for the last fiscal year.

On the one hand, amounts are being allocated to provinces which had already benefited from the changes made to the equalization program in 1982, and, on the other hand, a large portion is being taken away from Quebec, which seems to be the only province that has to pay for what I would call a poor decision made by the Conservative Government. This is a political decision considering which provinces will be losing. We have Quebec, on the one hand, led by a Parti Québécois Government, and not by a Conservative Government, and Manitoba on the other hand, which has also rejected the Conservative Party and elected a New Democrat Government. By accident, these are the only two provinces to lose out in the little game of equalization.

In my opinion, what should take place at this time is a public review of the equalization system rather than under the table negotiations with selected governments to quieten those that make too much noise and keep the friends of the Government happy.

As it was said in this House, some people want to blame the previous Government for the current equalization formula. Moreover, they want to do this while ignoring the economic situation. You will recall that, when the previous equalization program was established in 1981, very few Canadians could have forecast the economic problems that would befall Canada. Naturally, because of this economic situation, certain provinces did not receive as much money. Today, blaming the former Government is easy but at the time the legislation was passed in this House, no one could forecast that the years 1982 and 1983 would be disastrous economically, not only in Canada, but throughout the world. Yet, the agreement reached in 1981 was signed in good faith by a responsible Government. If it is felt that the time has come to review the agreement, let us do so! Indeed, by looking at the agreement and making certain changes, the Conservative Government could have been more generous. If it decided not to do so, it is its own decision and its own responsibility, and it seems to me that it would be difficult at this time to blame the previous Government, which is the strategy regularly used by this Government to extract itself from the difficulties it gets into from time to time.

My comments will be brief. I shall simply and unhesitatingly say that a Liberal Government under the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and advised by some of us, especially by my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), would have been a lot more generous than the Conservative Government has been to the Province of Quebec, and would also have been a lot more respectful of the rights of all the Provinces in providing their citizens with equal and equitable education and health services.

Where are the Conservative Members of Parliament when we speak about equalization and the punitive way in which this Government has treated Quebec? No one can say that they have been very forceful. I hope that they will have the courage to take more solid positions and to defend Quebec instead of approving their Minister of Finance, who is unfortunately trying to solve his deficit problems at the expense of Quebecers, and partly at the expense of Manitobans.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to briefly explain to you the reasons why we, on this side of the House, find it difficult to support this Government bill, a bill which we would be pleased to support if the amounts allocated, in particular to the Province of Quebec, were more generous. So, when the question is put and you see us oppose this bill, you should not conclude that the Liberal Party of Canada does not want that additional funding to be given to Quebec; on the contrary, we find that the increase granted to Quebec is not enough.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Bouchard).

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I am impressed with the way the Hon. Member links the generosity towards Quebec with the financial situation, knowing full well that it is because the previous government has badly used, insofar as Quebec and the other provinces are concerned, the funds it had at its disposal, to make sure that the present situation facing us, given the financial situation of the country as a whole, does not favour Quebec nor any other province. The Minister of Finance has been quite clear, he could not give more . . . thus he granted to Quebec the equalization payments.

I think that at the present time, Hon. Members from Quebec, the Government Members, are very proud to support what is essentially a very realistic position. It takes into account essentially the funds we have at our disposal, be it for Quebec or for any other province. The Hon. Member and his colleagues are constantly linking the notion of generosity with a spending spree which has led us, once again, on the verge of bankrupty, of disaster, but that Party has, for many years, misappropriated public funds, and it continues to act in the same manner even in the Opposition, at the very moment where the Government tries to straighten out the very serious situation which, once again, was on the brink of disaster. That Party still maintains the same spending spree philosophy, under the pretext of favouring Quebec.

An Hon. Member: It is true!

Mr. Bouchard: The minute the Government of Quebec was making a request, one year ago, it was considered irresponsible. But suddenly, because that party is in the Opposition, it discovers it has some things in common with the Government of Quebec that was banished and for which they had harsh words, under the pretext of being generous, Mr. Speaker, to the people of Quebec.

I think that was very clear on September 4 and it still is. The best way to be generous toward the people of Quebec, is to manage public funds in an intelligent and reasonable way. The Government of Canada gave to Quebec only what it could give. It did not act against the governments of other provinces. It would be naïve to think that because the Government of Quebec is not a Conservative Government . . . on the contrary, you have criticized us because of our too good relationship with the so-called Government of Quebec. One must be serious. We are administering public funds. The equalization entitlements and payments allocated to Quebec were essentially arrived at taking into account the availability of funds, and proportionate to the amounts allocated in other parts of the country. You may call us whatever names you wish; Liberals got used to this name calling when they were in power, and unfortunately, in the last 8 months, they have not parted with the habit of constantly trying to humiliate members across the way. But it does not matter to us. Members from Quebec are happy with the computation made by the Minister of Finance. We think that Quebec has been treated with fairness and that what Quebecers want is a fair share of the available funds, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the minister's remarks and I can say that he has honestly stated the position of his party and that is to limit government spending. He refers to a solution that is realistic, fair and that takes into account the availability of funds, then he repeats the same old story we have been hearing since September 4, and even before, that is that funds are limited because of the previous administration.

• (1250)

Indeed, they are fair and they do what they can by giving out less money. For the time being, we will still take notice of the Minister's remarks, but I only wish to tell him and his colleagues that as this Parliament lives on—only six months may have gone by out of a four-year mandate—they will probably have to change their tune because they will not always be able, after two or three years in government, to blame the previous administration for all those evils. I merely want to warn you about that. While you may now find that solution fair and realistic, the fact is that the Quebec Cabinet is still not satisfied. It is all so easy to criticize Liberal Members for the representations they do on behalf of our fellow-Canadians, but we have been elected here to do just that. And let me remind you, for instance, that it was because of the continuing pressures applied in this House by my party that some assistance was given to Domtar. We were told exactly the same thing, that you inherited a mess, that you were left with little money, with an empty purse but, once representations from those areas became strong enough, you finally had to admit that the request was reasonable and you agreed to it, while saying that if you were unable to do it it was because of the previous administration. But eventually you saw the light and you agreed to help them. That is what happened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) for questions or comments.

Mr. Garneau: I have one question and one comment. Mr. Speaker, I carefully listened to the speech of the hon. Member for Saint-Jacques. I want to commend him for representing the interests of the province of Quebec in a sober and honest fashion, thus fulfilling the mandate given to him by his constituents. Of course, I wish to emphasize one point. The Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard), who has just made a comment and put a question to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, emphasized the matter of distribution and the way the Province of Quebec was treated by the previous government in terms of equalization, the subject matter of the bill before us. Before asking a question to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, I want to remind the House that in 1982-83—and the Hon. Member will perhaps elaborate on this—provisional payments made under the equalization formula have brought in $354 million to the Province of Quebec. Those are the amounts that were paid, since the Minister of State for Transport wants to deal with that matter, $354.5 million were paid as a provisional payment to the government of Quebec by a liberal administration; in 1983-84, a provisional payment of $399.3 million was made by the previous liberal government and in 1984-85, $392.4 million were paid. Now, we are proposing a payment of $110 million whereas the Province of Quebec is losing 750 million.

Therefore, one could consider other cases as well and stress how the matter was handled in the case of Domtar, for instance. They simply took some funds that had already been granted to Quebec for regional development in an attempt to bail out Domtar through a special agreement on the development of pulp and paper companies. Finally, the Province of Quebec will have to pay 100 per cent of the costs for Domtar. I want to ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, who made an excellent speech, whether in his opinion, it would not be more profitable and fair to the Province of Quebec, instead of giving it $110 million as proposed in this bill—an amount arrived at by God knows what means and that the Minister of Finance of Quebec, Mr. Duhaime, called unfair and unjust, saying that it was irrational since some provinces did not loose anything under the present formula and nevertheless are granted additional funds—does the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques not believe that it would be a better idea to extend the provisional payments formula, thanks to which a balance was achieved during the first three years of implementation of the new equalization formula and that was developed to check whether this formula would have the expected results; the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) in his speech yesterday, and I remind it to the hon. member for Saint-Jacques, stressed that to start with, in 1982, when the new formula was implemented, officials of the Department of Finance had not forecast such a serious economic crisis. That is why the formula was implemented for three years in the hope that it would yield results and that after that period, the situation would get back to normal. I want to ask the following question: Would it not be more profitable to maintain this provisional formula whereby equalization payments to the Province of Quebec would only increase by 3 per cent from last year? Would it not be better to maintain that formula rather than to apply an ad hoc formula, draw a number at random and ask later: That's all?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, obviously it would be better to extend the transitional payment formula because, at least, it is a sound and fair method. While the Quebec government reacted to the political settlement that provided it with $110 million by saying that it was unfair and inequitable, I would rather describe it as arbitrary. Someone simply picked up $110 million out of a hat according to some unknown formula. That is why in my remarks I called it a political settlement. The Hon. Member from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is right. Had we used a well-known formula we could at least see that those figures were based on some computation. But here we have a settlement intended to pacify people I suppose, but which completely fails to meet its purpose.

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Take your time.

Mr. Nickerson: We doubt if you will be very brief.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: I just have a couple of words. I wanted to speak briefly to put on the record that whenever we talk about equalization payments and supplements to equalization payments or an increase or a decrease in equalization payments, we are always talking about dollars as they relate to this or that province.

To be perfectly honest about it, I think every place in the equalization payments Bill where it refers to X number of dollars—take for instance the $15 million to the Province of Newfoundland—it should rightfully read "$15 million to the Government of the Province of Newfoundland". I say that because of the actual and true intent of equalization payments. If you go back to the original legislation, the original intention was to give poor provinces that could not raise their own revenues some semblance of equality in Canada whereby the federal Government or the richer provinces in Canada would give money indirectly to those poor provinces so they could have services considered to be normal and expected in all parts of Canada.

That is where the entire intent falls down, Mr. Speaker. The money is simply given as a lump sum to a provincial government with no strings attached whatever. If a provincial government wants to build arterial and access roads into its one or two cities with that money, it could do so. Even when a province had sufficient access roads to its cities, it could still continue to build roads on stilts over roads presently going into those cities. In other words, it depends upon the benevolent attitude of the government in power at the time in a given province whether the actual intent of this legislation is fulfilled.

I will give you one example of what I was dealing with this morning, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to figure out how to get some government somewhere to put some money into supplying a water system to a community which had all its applications for wells rejected because all the health reports stated the water was unfit for human consumption. In the process of trying to do that, I checked with the provincial department of health in Newfoundland. I discovered there were numerous communities in a similar situation. In my area alone, 40 or 50 communities are affected. On the one hand we talk about $600 million or $700 million, loads of money, being given to a government to equalize services in this country, and on the other hand I have to tell these poor people: "No, there is no way that you can get any money so you can have pure drinking water for your school children".

I will call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and continue after lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) had the floor.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks on the Bill before the House today, an Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987.

Before we adjourned for lunch, I was making the point that the actual intention of equalization payments was to provide help to lower income provinces to make it possible for them, along with their local governments, to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. When we talk about public services, normally in high unemployment areas we immediately think about infrastructure in the form of water systems, sewer systems and roads. These are the very areas where there are incredible discrepancies in levels of service across the country. In the case of my Province of Newfoundland, about $600 million or $700 million this year will be passed over in the form of unconditional grants to the Government of Newfoundland to provide comparable levels of public services to those existing in other provinces. Of course the "have" provinces have the taxation base from which to be able to provide those services to the general public.

When we total all the equalization payments over the past few years, we arrive at an incredible figure. That money was supposed to go toward providing services for the general public. However, as I have pointed out to the House, there are 40 or 50 communities in my riding which do not have water systems. How could that be when the intent of these equalization payments was to correct such inadequacies? Why is it that the roads are not paved in a great portion of my riding, if the purpose of equalization payments, as the Act indicates, is to provide comparable levels of public services?

The point is that the money does not go to provide the services outlined in the Act and in the agreements. It does not go to assist communities which want water. Today, in 1985, there are school children who do not have the benefit of uncontaminated drinking water. If we ask medical doctors in certain parts of the country about major problems, of course they will talk about the inadequate quantity of drinking water. I have seen little slips from the Department of Health indicating the water is unfit for human consumption. Whenever I see a Bill such as this one coming before the Chamber, I think about the fact that this money is not used for what it was intended.

These communities try to obtain federal grants which are available. I suppose they will be available next year after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has his say in the Budget and after the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) decides what she will do as far as short-term job-creation programs are concerned. The majority of this money should be spent on providing water and essential services to small, isolated communities.

As far as the intention of the Government is concerned, we need only look at the publication entitled A New Direction for Canada to find the implementation of the strategy on page 84, where the following is indicated quite clearly:

> To achieve the target will necessitate a careful examination of all federal expenditures—economic and regional development, social programs, federal-provincial transfers, . . . to develop an orderly plan to slow their growth—

That is the intention of the Government. The Government will not increase expenditures over a period of time. There will not be the same level of increases we have seen over the years. It will slow the growth of these payments. It then says, "while reshaping their composition to minimize the effects of contraction on the economy". I would suggest that one of the measures the Government should take if it is going to cut back on these payments to the provinces is to ask the provinces to be accountable for where that money goes. In other words, if it is the intent of legislation to provide public services in a province that are comparable to public services in other provinces in Canada, then that provincial Government should have to indicate where the money went. That seems only logical.

It is fine to talk about equalization payments and about how much more money will go to provincial Governments. The Premier of Newfoundland has said that under this Government, we are receiving increased equalization payments. The Government of Newfoundland has received increased equalization payments every single year. The fact of the matter is that the formula is rather unfair. We are being told Newfoundland is going to be a rich province because of all the offshore oil out there. The fact of the matter is that energy revenues mean a reduction in equalization dollar for dollar.

The new Government indicated that for the first five years of oil production in Newfoundland, the diminishing return on equalization payments will be slowed down. If the provincial treasury were to get $10 per barrel on a billion barrels of oil, it would receive $10 billion over a period of 20 years, the time it will take for the offshore oil to be developed. When talking about equalization payments, $10 billion is peanuts. The province is already getting $700 million per year over 20 years, and that would come to much more than the revenue that would be received from the oil. The point is that in the case of the Province of Newfoundland as it relates to equalization payments, we should ask why the money is not being used to provide the services that are supposed to be provided.

If we were only discussing money and if the entire offshore accord with the Province of Newfoundland meant money and only money, we would have to come to the conclusion that under this particular piece of legislation Newfoundland ends up with zero. When the province makes money from energy, it loses on equalization payments.

The so-called poor provinces should be looking at a change of direction in provincial Government policy regarding the utilization of the money provincial Governments receive. We should ask what we can do to foster industrial development so we will then have a tax base and will not need to receive equalization payments. Why was that not considered when the offshore oil agreement was signed? Why did the agreement contain the clause that none of the oil from the offshore could come into Newfoundland to develop refineries and petrochemical industries there but rather that it had to satisfy the demands of the eastern Canadian refining and industrial capacity? In other words, the agreement was all about money going to the provincial treasury. It was about an amount of money that is not as great as the equalization payments would be over the life of the development.

In conclusion—

Mr. Boudria: Oh no, we want to hear more.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member behind me says he wants to hear more. I think my time is pretty well up. I do, however, have a few minutes left.

When thinking of equalization payments, one always thinks of the other transfers that are made, including transfers for post-secondary education, health services and the like. We can see what happens when money is transferred to a provincial treasury without any strings attached.

When block funding came into the Province of Newfoundland, the provincial Government froze the development of all senior citizens' homes and nursing homes in the province. They put the matter under study for four years. That payment is made on a per capita basis and has a built-in escalation. Therefore, money was going into the provincial treasury for the purpose of providing 75 per cent of the cost of the retirement of the debt on senior citizens' homes and nursing homes after individuals had paid and CMHC had brought the mortgage rate down to 2 per cent. That amount of money was increasing every year but no senior citizens' or nursing homes were being built until the matter was studied for three or four years. Where did that extra money go? It certainly did not go to senior citizens' homes and nursing homes.

When looking at the financial papers of these senior citizens' and nursing homes, one begins to realize that every time the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) announces an increase in the old age pension, no one who lives in a senior citizens' or nursing home in this country sees that increase. We see what happens when a provincial administration is given a bunch of money with no strings attached other than a general intent to increase the level of public services. Some provincial Governments will spend the money where it is supposed to be spent but a great many of them will not do so. In fact, when examining the expenditures of the Government of Newfoundland, we can see where waste exists and where the Government has not been following through on the intended use of the money that was being transferred.

It is indeed unfortunate that when looking at the formula that controls this Bill, one must realize that the bottom line is zero in certain administrations. The bottom line is zero as it relates to Hibernia. The bottom line is zero as it relates to the Government of Newfoundland. The bottom line would not have been zero if there had not been the clause in the agreement indicating that the offshore oil would be used to satisfy existing industrial capacity throughout Atlantic Canada. I still believe that part of the intent of that was to satisfy the Petromont industry in the Hon. Speaker's riding.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) knows that the purpose of the equalization formula is to distribute funds across Canada. The formula has been modified by the present Government in an attempt to bring about the agreement of some of the provinces with respect to the payments which will be made this year.

The Hon. Member comes from a province which is in a very peculiar situation. The revenue of his province is likely to vary substantially over the years because of the oil situation. What is the effect of a fixed equalization formula on a province such as Newfoundland in which revenues are likely to increase in a very substantial fashion? Does he believe that his constituents will be able to live with a formula which is set in concrete, when the income situation will vary greatly in that province?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, as far as energy revenue is concerned, if there is a development which is to last for a period of 20 years, the province would arrive at a point in the first five or six years when equalization payments would disappear. They would disappear almost totally. However, if the development in Newfoundland was to be stretched out over a 20-year period, then equalization payments would never disappear. There would always be some difference on the bottom. What is important is that there must be a constant increase to the provincial Governments in the equalization formula. A constant increase was always the intent of the legislation as growth occurred in that particular fiscal arrangement. However, if it is limited, for example, to $670 million this year, and that limitation was to be in effect for the next ten years, then the difference in the income from energy revenues and what is owed through equalization payments would be less.

To answer the hon. gentleman's question, it would be much better for the Government of Newfoundland to have equalization payments increase drastically.

Hon. Members will note that I said it was very important to the Government of Newfoundland. I do not accept the wording in this legislation which says that the payment will go to the Province of Newfoundland. Also, I do not accept it when it is said that the payment will go to the people of Newfoundland, or to Newfoundland. It is the Government of Newfoundland which decides where the money will go. Too often, the decisions of the Government of Newfoundland are not very good. Sometimes I wonder if it is interested in governing the province, or if it just wants to hang out a carrot as it does during every election campaign. It hangs out the carrot and says that all the people of Newfoundland will be rich. However, the carrot gets rotten after a while.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In resuming debate, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Supplementary Fiscal Equalization Payments

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak briefly on Bill C-39. I would like to begin by congratulating my colleague from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) for his eloquent remarks. I hesitated in rising to speak this afternoon because I wanted to give the Conservative back-benchers from the Province of Quebec an opportunity to speak.

[Translation]

Although I waited for a few moments, Mr. Speaker, I failed to see the Hon. Member from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and other Hon. Members rise to speak on behalf of their constituents and ask the very questions they should have raised in the House this afternoon. I must say that I am somewhat disappointed, because I was looking forward to hearing the Hon. Member for Duvernay who undoubtedly would have made a very eloquent speech, perhaps he will choose to do so when I am finished.

Mr. Speaker, when discussing fiscal equalization payments, we should remember the promises that were made to the Canadian people last fall.

[English]

When the Conservative Government was elected last fall, I do not recall that it said it would short-change the Province of Quebec or any other province, not even the Province of Ontario, which also qualifies for equalization payments. The Province of Ontario should not qualify for equalization payments, but it has been so poorly run over the last number of years that it is in the situation in which it does qualify. The Province of Ontario definitely needs a change.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be campaigning in Ontario for the next few days to give a hand to Premier Miller. Perhaps the Prime Minister is right in doing that because the Premier needs all the help he can get. As the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) is from Ontario, he will know that the Premier's campaign is flat and that he is not doing very well. The Prime Minister is setting a precedent in helping the Premier, and I hope that he will campaign on the same theme on which he campaigned last August—time for a change. It would be nice to hear the Prime Minister say that during the election campaign in Ontario. Perhaps he could also raise the issue of equalization payments and indicate that the Province of Ontario has been so poorly run over the last number of years that it now qualifies for those payments. But the province will not take the equalization payments because that would indicate that it is not in as good a financial situation as it was before, and Ontario Tories would never admit to their shortcomings. That would be admitting that a change is needed in Toronto. Of course, we all know that a change is needed. I hope that the Prime Minister will campaign on the same theme as he did last summer and say that it is time for a change. After 43 years, it is time for a change.

Why is it that we are a little short right now in providing the provinces with the payments which they need? There may be several reasons. The Government spends 80 per cent to 90 per cent of its time telling us that it cannot fulfil its election promises because of the previous Government. That strategy is wearing thin. The Government has been in power for eight months. Government Members seemed to have had the resources to fulfil just about anything before they were elected. They made 338 promises. However, in none of those promises did they say: "Vote for me and I will cut your payments". Perhaps it was an oversight on the part of the Government.

Let us look at the areas in which the Government has cut its funding to the provinces. Not only do we know that the Province of Quebec and others will be losing many millions of dollars worth of equalization payments because of the actions of this Government, but we also know, for example, that as a result of the cut-backs which were announced on November 8, black Thursday, the Province of Quebec will lose $770 million because of the book of cut-backs. Those are the cut-backs which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) inflicted upon the people of Canada. They range from cuts in agricultural programs to cuts in capital expenditures and construction and all kinds of other reported cuts. The cancellation of the census is even included but, of course, the Government changed its mind on that.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that the information in the census was necessary in order to establish the equalization grants, to which the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), who is here right now, would attest. The provinces probably shook the Minister of Finance hard. The Minister of Supply and Services must have given him a few shoves himself. And it was only because of those actions that the Minister of Finance changed his mind and reinstated the census, ensuring somewhere in the order of 6,000 full-time jobs, plus about 40,000 part-time jobs, which had been lost as a result of this particular cut-back. A vast amount of funding has been cut by the federal Government throughout those same areas of the country which are once again suffering because of the lowering of the equalization grant.

I must also take a moment to discuss what the Government is doing with the funds it has. Of course, one of the reasons it cannot provide these grants is because it is spending—or should I say "wasting"—the money elsewhere. What is it wasting its money on? Let me start by stating the fact that we have the largest Cabinet in the history of this country. It is not just 1 per cent or 2 per cent larger than we had before, not even 10 per cent larger. The Cabinet we have now, Mr. Speaker, is about 25 per cent if not 30 per cent larger, than the Cabinet of the previous Government. The population of this country did not explode by 30 per cent overnight when this Government was elected. They are the same people who were here prior to September 4. But the Conservatives, in order to run this country, needed a Cabinet which was one-third larger than the Cabinet of the Liberals. Perhaps that is because the Conservatives are only two-thirds as efficient as the Liberals and needed a larger Cabinet in order to get the same results.

There may be another reason, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Conservatives needed a make-work program. One would think that a make-work program would address itself to the general population. However, in the case of this Government, the make-work program really addresses itself to members of the Conservative Party who had been elected—and some who were not who needed something to do. So the book-ends, or "surfers" as we call them, those who came in with the tide, needed something to do and, of course, the Government decided to appoint a much larger than necessary Cabinet. There were 40 Cabinet Ministers. We are seeing a gradual reduction in the size of the Cabinet as Ministers resign; however, it is still a 39-member Cabinet. There are 39 limousines, or 40 limousines if the Minister who resigned kept the limousine he had. The west door of the Parliament Buildings looks like a used car lot. I have never seen so many cars in all my life in any one place. The other day I had a hard time getting into the parking lot with my automobile, Mr. Speaker, because a lot of limousines were blocking the entrance, waiting for Cabinet Ministers to come out of their meeting or whatever it was they were doing in the building at that particular time.

On top of those 40 limousines and 40 Cabinet Ministers for which the people of Canada have to pay, we have to have 40 political commissars. These are the people in the office who apologize and write letters of refusal for the Ministers. Of course, the Minister himself writes a letter of acceptance whenever he gives out money and the political commissars sign the letter whenever he refuses. I've had experience with that in letters I have received from Cabinet Ministers. Some of them are signed by the political commissars, but whenever a letter says "We are glad to agree with you", in most cases it is signed by the Minister.

The Government seemed to have plenty of resources when it came time to reward its own. The Government has made approximately 1200 political appointments since the election of last September. I am sure that every Conservative back-bencher must be ashamed of this record, Mr. Speaker. Not only did the Government appoint 1200 people, but a large number are defeated Tory candidates. Not 1200 Tories were defeated, of course, but I will say that most of the high-paying jobs were given to defeated Conservative candidates. There is the case of Lawrence Hanigan who was defeated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). Mr. Hanigan was running the Montreal Urban Transit Commission and was doing a fine job. There were only 20 strikes in ten years. Now that particular gentleman is hired to run our railway system at $100,000 a year. And once he was appointed to that position, it was determined that that salary wasn't enough. How could the poor guy live on $100,000 a year? So he was given a $25,000 or $30,000 salary increase so that this defeated Conservative candidate could make ends meet.

So we wonder, Mr. Speaker, why it is that we have no money to run the necessary programs we must have. It is small wonder, Mr. Speaker, if we waste money in that way. I see the Conservative back-benchers across the floor nodding and agreeing with me. Do you know why that is, Mr. Speaker? Some of them must be almost disappointed that they were elected. They would have had higher paying jobs had they been defeated along with Lawrence Hanigan and others who received large pay increases. They were justly rewarded for having lost the election. In that Party winners become the losers and losers become the winners, providing they are friends of the Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: What about Lloyd Francis?

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member opposite talks about the 1 per cent or 2 per cent of political appointments which were not given to prominent Conservatives, but the fact still remains that this Government has appointed one prominent Conservative every three hours since it was elected last summer. And this is a Government which promised not to partake of patronage and not to waste the Canadian taxpayers' dollars which are so necessary in order to run the valuable programs for which the Government is saying it does not have the required funds. This is the same Government which said it would only appoint people who had a willingness to serve and who had a high degree of competence. This is the same Government which turned down the reappointment of Senator Florence Bird who is one of the most competent people in this country. That is acknowledged by Amnesty International and all the refugee groups in this country. They have all given their support to the reappointment of Florence Bird. Why was she not reappointed, Mr. Speaker? It was because the Minister wanted to imprint her own style on her Department.

This is not a Government of substance, this is a Government of style. We have political commissars to hide the Ministers. We have style when we appoint new people. Whatever happened to substance? What is wrong with substance instead of style? We have the Prime Minister starting his own fan club. At $100 a throw, people can actually become members of the fan club of the Prime Minister, "The Brian Club", I believe it is called.

An Hon. Member: Of course, it beats John Turner's club.

Mr. Boudria: We hear an Hon. Member who is pleased. He probably bought one or two memberships in the fan club of the Prime Minister in order to make his way from the back row where he sits to a row closer to the front, in Cabinet. Perhaps he will succeed by buying a membership in that fan club, but maybe not. I do not want to speak too long on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to return to the issue of equalization. For a moment, as I am sure you noticed, Mr. Speaker, I was dwelling a bit on patronage. But it is all linked. This Government is wasting money on unnecessary things, and then has none left where it makes a difference, where it counts, in helping out the people of this country who need it the most. Why does the Government not have the money? Because it spent it on other things. Because Members opposite partook of patronage. They wasted taxpayers' dollars by redecorating their offices on Parliament Hill. They rented limousines. They delivered a Budget using a Government jet. All these and other kinds of things they have been partaking of since last September.

• (1440)

Why don't I hear Conservative Members from Quebec standing up in this House and making a speech, saying that their province needs more equalization payments? Why don't I hear Conservative Members from the Maritime Provinces standing up and speaking on behalf of their constituents in this House? They should be standing up demanding the funds from that Government. They should be putting their seats on the line if they have to. But we do not hear that from the Conservative back-benchers. They are nice and silent here. Even the Member who wanted to abolish the tolls on the Champlain Bridge is not moving. His colleague over there is not doing so either. They were talking of lower gas prices, abolishing tolls and all those other issues, and now they are not doing anything. They are content and happy to just sit there and wait just in case they get their turn to be called to the front row and join the executive of the Brian fan club as opposed to being just regular Members, which is what they are now. Well, we in our Party are not satisfied with that.

[Translation]

What Liberals want, Mr. Speaker, is to promote equal opportunities for all Canadians in their search of well-being. What they want is to enhance economic development so as to reduce disparities. They want to provide all Canadians with an acceptable level of equality and essential public services. They also want provincial governments to stop wasting taxpayers' money. We know, Mr. Speaker, that several provincial governments, when they were given, with no strings attached, the power to manage federal funds, squandered that money and did not spend it the way they should have. I am sure my colleague opposite who shares my opinion will agree with me that we should get rid of all those Conservative provincial governments that are now in power.

[English]

In the Province of Ontario, for instance, just to give an example of how those funds have been used, 97 per cent—well, this better be good.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is rising on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I wonder if those remarks are relevant. The previous subject was dear to the Hon. Member's heart, and he is now starting on another. It seems to me provincial elections have nothing to do with the equalization matter now before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member deals with the Ontario government's policy regarding equalization, that could be relevant. But I believe the Hon. Member is getting the point which was made by the Hon. Member for Gatineau and that he will act accordingly.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I agree entirely, as I usually do, with the impartial ruling you have made on that matter.

Mr. Speaker, let us refer, for a moment, to the government of Ontario.

[English]

In relation to the funds being awarded to the Government of Ontario by the federal Government, and its investment particularly in the area of housing, right now the programs we have are such that 97 per cent of the funds for public housing in Ontario come from the federal Government and 3 per cent from the province. This is only one example of a program in a province which was supposed to have a two-government component. Once we removed that condition and gave it to a provincial Conservative Government, they wasted the money.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. On a question or comment?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, if I can ask the Hon. Member a question, is he at all familiar with the Canada-Ontario rental supply plan and the 50/50 sharing of that plan between the federal and provincial Governments? This will provide something like 2,800 units to the people of Ontario through the auspices of the previous Minister of Housing, Mr. Bennett, and now through the auspices of Mr. Timbrell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, yes—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring to your attention the fact that the Minister is asking a question of a Member which is irrelevant to the Bill before us, namely equalization payments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I rule the question pertinent because the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) brought the matter up by what he said concerning the use of equalization payments by the Government of Ontario.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the rental supply program. I am also familiar with the municipal non-profit housing program and all the other programs we have in relation to housing in Ontario. I am also aware how, if you take those programs, combine them together and divide the federal and provincial components, you end up with 97.2 per cent federal money and 2.8 per cent provincial money. Most of these programs were designed for an equal contribution from both levels of Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows: Mrs. McDougall, for Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), moves that Bill C-39, an Act to provide for the making of supplementary fiscal equalization payments to certain provinces for the period April 1, 1982 to March 31, 1987, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill C-43, an Act to dissolve the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and to amend the Surplus Crown Assets Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to begin debate today on this very important legislation, especially as it is the first piece of legislation I have had the opportunity to introduce.

Mr. Boudria: It is your second.

Mr. Andre: Yes, it is my second; I stand corrected. I do not think I had a chance to debate the first one.

In any event, although this is essentially an administrative or bookkeeping Bill, it is important because it directly reflects this Government's commitment to fiscal responsibility, deficit reduction, leaner government, increased accountability and a reduced role for Crown Corporations. I will return to those points in detail in my later remarks, but first I thought it would be useful for the House to have a brief history of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and the events which have precipitated the introduction of this Bill today.

The Corporation was created by the Government in 1943 under the name War Assets Disposal Corporation. Its purpose was obviously to dispose of excess materiel from World War II. In wartime all kinds of materials are purchased in pursuit of the war effort, not all of which are consumed in war. Those not consumed are of course unnecessary in large part after the restoration of peace. The Corporation carried on this activity until 1949, when its name and mandate was changed by the Surplus Crown Assets Act. As the name implies, at that point the Governor in Council granted to the new corporation responsibility for disposing of all surplus Crown assets, not only those relating to the war effort. It also gave the corporation responsibility for disposing of surplus assets of foreign powers located in Canada.

In those formative years the corporation performed its function effectively and efficiently. Unfortunately, in the 1970s I do not think that efficient and effective would be two adjectives that one would use to describe the performance of that Crown corporation. If our late colleague, Mr. Tom Cossitt, was still with us, he may have had a pretty long list of activities of the corporation of which he would wish to remind the Canadian public. Those who are interested might look at some of the questions which Mr. Cossitt put on the Order Paper in 1978 and 1979 which were never answered. However, perhaps the past should stay in the past.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, Crown Assets Disposal was not unique in that regard. There were many aspects of government performance, both within Crown corporations and otherwise, that were subject to scrutiny and probing questions by Mr. Cossitt, a great many other Members of the House, and members of the public which precipitated the establishment of a royal commission on financial management and accountability called the Lambert Commission. That commission recommended a number of quite important and profound changes to the way in which government functioned in an effort to improve accountability and financial management to save the taxpayers money and ensure that the taxpayers know how their money is being spent and their assets are being disposed of. It attempted to restore some degree of political accountability in keeping with the traditions of our parliamentary democracy.

One of the recommendations of the Lambert Commission was that the activities of Crown Assets Disposal should in fact be placed directly within the operations of government as a common service. In 1982 this occurred and the disposal activities of Crown Assets Disposal were moved into the Department of Supply and Services and have been a part of the operations of my Department ever since. It was decided that there were no advantages to retaining the arm's length relationship that a Crown corporation implies and that there would be improved accountability and responsibility and a better deal obtained for the taxpayers by having the activities conducted within government. In addition, the management and administration of the corporation was taken over by the Department of Supply and Services. These changes were implemented by Order in Council in 1982 and have been phased in. At that time all employees of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation were offered employment within the Department of Supply and Services. No one's employment was terminated outright. The vast majority of employees did accept employment with the Public Service and are so employed today.

Consequently, we have a situation in which we have a corporation in form only. There are no employees. Its activities are undertaken entirely by the employees of my Department. However, there is a legal requirement for such a corporation to exist. It must have a board of directors, hold annual meetings, produce annual reports, and maintain separate accounts which must be audited. For three years we have had these unnecessary expenses carrying on.

However, as the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) knows, it has not been a total loss. There have been opportunities to appoint directors. Outstanding Canadians from coast to coast have been sitting on the board of directors. I'm sure the Member would know most of them personally because they were quite active in his political association. It was certainly enjoyable for them to come to Ottawa from time to time to attend annual meetings and collect a per diem. The taxpayers of Canada enjoyed the opportunity of subsidizing some very honourable and hard-working members of the Liberal Party. In October, after being sworn in as Minister, I had the sad duty of terminating some of those appointments.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Now you've got enough Tories.

Mr. Andre: No, as a matter of fact we replaced them with public servants who reside in Ottawa and receive no per diem for attending meetings. Therefore, that expense has been cut out, but there is still the expense of maintaining separate books, producing annual reports, et cetera. This legislation is introduced to clean up that situation by removing this corporation from the books. Instead of having 438 Crown corporations we will now have 437. That is a start on the road toward reducing this unconscionably large list of structures and organizations that have been put in place over the last 20 years.

The substantial portions of Bill C-43 are dealt with in Clauses 1 to 6. I'm sure Members will have noted that Clause 5 allows any business transaction which is still in progress involving Crown Assets and outside parties to carry on. Therefore, no one will suffer personal, financial or legal consequences of these changes. The remaining 10 clauses of the Bill are consequential amendments to the Surplus Crown Assets Act and are administrative in nature. The final section is a schedule outlining consequential amendments to Acts other than the Surplus Crown Assets Act.

This is a straightforward, uncontroversial piece of legislation. For that reason I urge the House to give it speedy second reading and expeditious reference to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. I would like to take this opportunity to look beyond the technical aspects of this legislation and recognize its profound symbolic importance. I am deeply committed to the principle of this legislation, as is the Government. I spoke earlier of several principles which guide the Government's action.

First, the Government is committed to fiscal responsibility. Bill C-43 is fundamentally designed to eliminate duplication of effort in the Government of Canada and to formalize a process which has already saved $600,000 for the taxpayers of Canada and will result in an annual saving of that amount. In the figures we deal in around here of millions and billions, it may not seem like much, but if you look after the thousands, the millions and billions will look after themselves.

The Government is firmly committed to the principle of deficit reduction. The legislation has as its underlying premise the perpetuation and improvement of a regime which successfully recovers for the Crown some $23 million annually from surplus assets. The administration is committed to a leaner, more efficient Government. In his statement last November 8 my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), indicated that of his four-part strategy for economic renewal one was to have less government intervention. This is one small step, but I can assure my colleagues opposite that there will be many more in the future. When the electors, or more likely old age, require us to move on, we will definitely be leaving behind a leaner, more efficient, and more effective Government than that which we inherited after 20 years of Liberal rule.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has announced a number of very important initiatives that will attempt to clear the mess left by his predecessor. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), has indicated the Government's intention to consider the privatization of a whole range of Crown corporations. Furthermore, those that will be retained for good public policy purposes will be more accountable to the House and the Canadian public and will operate in a more responsible fashion than has been the case in the past.

I have stated that accountability is the cornerstone of this Government's mandate. Therefore, we do not accept the use of the arm's length relationship of Crown corporations to avoid that accountability and responsibility. In a democratic society, we do not find reasonable and proper the previous Government's habit of removing the day to day scrutiny of activities by leaving it to the Crown corporations when those activities are part of the Government's ongoing activities. We will be increasing accountability and the responsibility of Ministers of the Government to the House on a daily basis which will be combined with the very important initiatives being recommended by the Task Force on Parliamentary Reform. This will lead to a much more democratic procedure which will assure the electors of Canada that they know what the federal Government is doing with their money and that their representatives in the House can hold the Government accountable. It is only through such change that we will begin to reverse the trend of 20 years of Liberal rule and restore a reasonable kind of Government to this country.

Although this legislation is not profound in itself, it will save money. It does establish the trend. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) laughs. Much time is spent in the House worrying about appointments to directorships of Crown corporations and other positions which he believes is a concern. I suggest to him that he should be applauding loudly because we are eliminating some opportunities for such appointments through this legislation. I am making the commitment that we will continue to do so. Our Government is firmly committed to the privatization of Crown corporations when it is no longer necessary for the Government to own them. It is firmly committed to winding up those Crown corporations that no longer serve any useful purpose. Therefore, the Hon. Member should be applauding us for removing these opportunities for political patronage.

In the meantime I can assure him, with respect to those Crown corporations that are retained for good public policy reasons, that we will continue to maintain our current practice of appointing the best people possible to those positions. He can be assured that the taxpayers and electors in his riding will be well served by the Government of Canada even though they may have chosen not to elect a representative of the right Party in the last election.

I welcome the support of my Cabinet colleagues who I know support the aims of this legislation. I urge members of the Opposition, whom I know to be thoughtful and honourable, to support this worth-while initiative.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party and as official critic I am pleased to respond to Bill C-43 which was moved by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre). The Minister is slightly guilty of plagiarism in his comments. He should have at least acknowledged that the previous Government had begun the process of dismantling the Crown corporation. Of course, the Minister forgot to mention that.

The Minister's remarks left me with the impression that he was reading his address in reply to the Throne Speech rather than introducing a small, administrative Bill to eliminate a redundant corporation. Understandably, our Party is in agreement with the Bill since we had begun the process pursuant to the report of the Lambert Commission to which the Minister referred earlier. The Lambert Commission had also recommended the unification of the two arms of the Department of Supply and Services, which has already taken place as a result of the last shuffle of deputy ministers.

I was pleased to hear the Minister refer to a reduction in the number of people who are appointed through political patronage. He stated that there would be less political patronage as a result of the elimination of the board of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. However, I wonder if this is an indication from him that there is division within the Cabinet as far as Crown corporations are concerned because I am sure the Minister will recall that his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), indicated his desire to form a new Crown corporation to take over the Cyprus-Anvil Mine in the Yukon, in his riding. I am sure that difference of opinion between the Minister of Supply and Services, who wants to do away with many Crown corporations, and the Deputy Prime Minister, who wants a new Crown corporation to serve a specific interest in his riding, will eventually create a rift within the Government of Canada.

Our Party supports the dismantling process of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. The Minister gave us the assurance a few moments ago that no one will lose his employment as a result of this dismantling. The Minister also informed us previously that the corporation itself had very few people, if any, left on staff because it had essentially been united with the Department.

However, I want to reiterate that we believe the functions of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation should be united with those of the Department of Supply and Services because the Minister should be in charge of all activities within his Department. We have no difficulty with this legislation, other than our wish to receive the assurance that I requested earlier.

The Minister concluded his remarks by saying that he wanted the best people to serve on Crown corporations. I am pleased that he said that. I am sure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reads Hansard regularly, and that he will read the Minister's speech. After taking a copy of Hansard and reading the Minister's speech, he will probably immediately remove from the board of Air Canada Gayle Christie, the former defeated mayor of the City of York and the former defeated candidate for the Conservative nomination in that riding. The Duchess of York was appointed to the board of Air Canada and was interviewed afterward by a journalist. The journalist asked Mrs. Christie how she felt she qualified to be on the board of Air Canada. Her reply was, and these are not my words but hers: "I know how to drive a car". Those are the qualifications of the Duchess of York.

They are similar to the qualifications of other Conservatives appointed to various positions by this Government since the last election. Perhaps some of the people were even less qualified than Mrs. Christie. I referred earlier today to the appointment of Lawrence Hanigan, and I have referred to several other people who have been appointed by this Government to sit on various corporations whose qualifications seem to be that they held a membership card and had a prominent position within the Conservative Party.

Mr. McLean: They are outstanding Canadians.

Mr. Boudria: I am glad that the Minister has said he personally does not want to partake in that practice and he will fight in Cabinet to ensure that the appointment of political hacks to boards of Crown corporations will be terminated. I am glad to see that at least one member of the Cabinet is on my side in this issue in the person of the Minister of Supply and Services and probably the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who is heckling right now. He should be heckling. He should be upset at the fact that so few women have been appointed to these Crown corporations.

Mr. McKnight: You just criticized the last appointment.

Mr. Boudria: He is—

Mr. McKnight: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has talked about the appointment of women to Crown corporation boards. He has just now personally criticized the last appointment, one of an outstanding Canadian by the name of Gail Christie who was appointed to the board of Air Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect, I do not believe that is a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Not only is it not a point of order, Mr. Speaker, but it is not even a good point, as you have recognized. I have only described the qualifications which the individual attributed to herself.

If Hon. Members want to talk about outstanding Canadians sitting on boards, let me talk about Florence Bird. Why was she not reappointed? She is an individual with outstanding qualifications. I know the Minister of Labour is concerned about the status of women and is probably fighting right now to get her reappointed. I hope he succeeds because Senator Florence Bird should be sitting on the advisory refugee board. I give the Minister of Labour all my support when he wants to get more qualified women to sit on these Crown corporations and fewer of the likes of Mr. Hanigan and the others who have been appointed by his Leader.

Mr. McLean: There have been more women appointed than ever. Take a look at the record of your Government.

Mr. Boudria: I am right behind the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, but I am not behind the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) who fired Geraldine Copps. Geraldine Copps did her job. Geraldine Copps' daughter, a member of this Parliament, criticized the Government and for that reason her mother was not reappointed. I am not behind that Minister, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First, the Hon. Member has already alluded four times to the attendance of members and ministers particularly. Secondly, the case he mentioned has already been disposed of in favor of the Secretary of State. So, I doubt he can make comments on that very subject in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau would be right on her first point of order. As I know the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), I am sure he will take note of it. As far as her second point of order is concerned, I suggest that it is rather a matter of debate.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for having ruled in such a way on the minor point of order raised by the Hon. Member. You noticed of course that I asked some ministers to intervene, but I don't think I made any comment regarding whether they were or were not present in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker.

Anyway, I will be brief because I am almost finished with my remarks on this Bill. However, I want to say this to the Secretary of State who spoke earlier. Even if I agree with his colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), who wants to depoliticize Crown corporations, and as well with other Ministers, for instance the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), to whom I give credit hoping he will continue to make sure qualified women are appointed to the boards of many Crown corporations, I sometimes find myself in disagreement with the Secretary of State of this country who decided at one time to deal in his own way with a candidate related to an opposition member of this House.

[English]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to participate in this debate on behalf of our Party. Our Party is in favour of this Bill. We want assurance that any employees who may be remaining in the corporations do not lose their employment on account of this change. We are in agreement that the Minister of Supply and Services should be running the Department in its entirety and that this change was recommended and was already in process when the previous Government was in office. This is a continuation of what had already been stated. I applaud the Minister for continuing a previous Liberal initiative.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-43. It is an appropriate piece of legislation to be brought before this House. It is quite clear that the corporation itself has served its day. My understanding is that there may be only one actual employee. There is a board of directors but there may be just a bookkeeper associated with this Crown corporation.

There is a point I want to make in relation to this Bill that I think this House should take into account every time a Bill comes before this House. Very recently, during the last Parliament, I do not know whether it was an accident of numbering, but Bill C-44 which came before this House was an amendment to the Yukon Quartz Mining Act which had a very deleterious effect on one person whose name happens to be John Turner. He actually lives in Vancouver but is a prospector in the Yukon. That piece of legislation has had a very serious and harmful impact on him.

I draw that to the attention of Members because if Members look at Clause 5 in Bill C-43 they will see there a protective mechanism placed in the Bill that should be put in every piece of legislation to protect those who are involved in litigation or who are in the process of initiating litigation against the Crown or against corporations associated with a piece of legislation. Clause 5 says very clearly:

> 5. (1) Any action, suit or other legal proceeding in respect of an obligation or liability incurred by the Corporation, or by the Minister in closing out the affairs of the Corporation, may be brought against Her Majesty in any court that would have had jurisdiction if the action, suit or other legal proceeding had been brought against the Corporation.

It is a very important principle for those members of the public or, in terms of this corporation, I suppose for other countries because this corporation over the years has acted as a disposal agency for foreign nations which have assets to dispose of in Canada. In the case of Bill C-44, the rights of at least one Canadian and perhaps a number of Canadians were quashed by this House by the lack of provision of proper, full and adequate information to Members of this House, including myself.

I am sure Members on that side know that I am in the process of dealing with this matter with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The John Turner in question has been dealt a serious blow by an action taken by this House without consideration having been given to his right as a Canadian citizen in the legal process in which he was involved in the Yukon.

A second part of this Bill which I am very pleased to see is clause 5(2) which reads:

(2) Any action, suit or other legal proceeding to which the Corporation is party pending in any court on the coming into force of this Act may be continued by or against Her Majesty in like manner and to the same extent as it could have been continued by or against the Corporation.

That is very important, Mr. Speaker. The basic duties of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation are being transferred to the Department of Supply and Services. I think all Hon. Members of the House recognize that that Crown corporation is basically a dummy corporation. Its employees have been transferred to the Department of Supply and Services. They are public servants.

Earlier today I was advised that six public servants have been appointed to the board of the corporation, including the chairman. Four of them are from DSS, one is from DND, and one is a former Assistant Deputy Minister of DSS who was seconded, apparently, from the Calgary Olympics Board. Our contact earlier today was with one of the auditors in the Auditor General's Department. The conclusion was that they saw no reason to retain this corporation, considering that all its work is now done by DSS. By eliminating the corporation, as the Minister pointed out, Canadians will in fact save money, such as the administrative costs, audit costs and so on. As long as the corporation was retained as a legal entity, the Auditor General's Department had to report on it and, of course, the board and the hollow corporation had to respond as well.

In his press release the Minister concluded that there had been a realized savings of $600,000 so far and that there may be future savings as well. I certainly laud him for this, and I think all Hon. Members who take the time to look at this Bill will do so as well.

I should like to refer to some of the history in this regard. In 1943, this corporation was set up and was called War Assets Disposal. Six years later its name was changed to Surplus Crown Assets Disposition, for getting rid of the assets of all Crown agencies and for disposing of the assets of foreign powers as well. In April of 1982, an Order in Council was passed moving almost all the functions of the Crown corporation into the Department of Supply and Services.

I should like to deal with some questions which I hope the Minister can answer today so that we could conclude consideration of the Bill or, should it go to committee later this afternoon, so that the committee could be provided with the information. As is often the case when Bills come before the House, there are housekeeping matters associated with them. Albeit this is a housekeeping Bill, there are housekeeping matters associated with it which should be dealt with clearly and openly by the Government so that those who have historically been employed by Crown Assets or have recently left its employ know that their rights are protected, and that the public is protected, as I believe it is, at least in terms of litigation by Section 5.

I notice that in 1981 and 1982 there were some 95 employees, according to the annual report of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. In 1983 there were 104 employees. However, I draw to the attention of the Minister, in the hope that he will be able to provide the House with some information this afternoon or once the Bill is in committee, to figures which I have taken from his own Public Accounts of Canada, Volume III, 1984. I note that the salaries and allowances in 1983 for those 104 employees were $2,463,978 and the employee benefits were $355,548. I would like some explanation from the Minister in terms of the movement of those employees into the Department of Supply and Services. Either this afternoon or in committee, could the Minister provide the agreement on the transfer of employee benefits and associated fiscal matters, along with any outstanding concerns of former employees and the notification of any expected or present litigation?

I ask for this information because since the passing of the special Order in Council in 1982, the winding down of this corporation has occurred quite quickly. On looking at the financial statements of the Crown corporation, it is unclear exactly what happened to the extraordinary items at which the Auditor General has also taken a look. I should like to put on the record just exactly what is in the notes on the financial statement of March 31, 1984. I think Hon. Members should have the answers to these questions very clearly in their minds before this Bill extinguishing that legal entity is passed into law. In part it is indicated that in prior years it has been the policy of the corporation of accrue vacation and termination benefits due to corporation employees and to record these amounts as liabilities on the books of the corporation. As a result of the corporation's employees being transferred to the Department of Supply and Services, the employee-related liabilities established on the books of the corporation as at March 31, 1983 are being reversed in the current fiscal year as extraordinary income. In the future these liabilities will be paid by DSS and charged to the corporation in the year they are paid. Further, a lump sum amount was paid in settlement for the cancellation of the Montreal Office accommodation lease. This office was relocated to that of the Department of Supply and Services.

Many matters have been put before the House by the Minister in terms of the winding up of this corporation. They should, at the very least, be put before the committee so that they can be made very clear. On page 147 of the public accounts on March 31, 1984—that was the date the statement was made and in fact is the date of the public accounts published by the Minister—the following amounts are indicated in terms of this extraordinary income. For example, reversal of vacation pay liability, $131,262; reversal of termination benefits liability, $125,492; and the extraordinary loss, which is the lump sum settlement regarding the Montreal office accommodation lease, $95,000, for a total of extraordinary income in the amount of $161,753. I hope the Minister brings the House up to date on how that is being handled by DSS. I think it is important that we have an update. I think we should know what has happened in terms of the transactions related to the 104 former employees and what has happened in terms of the leases.

The next section in the Minister's public accounts points out the long-term receivables. I think we can get clarification on that because long-term receivables include mortgages relating to land and buildings sold prior to 1974 and loans outstanding from the sale of major equipment. The receivables mature in 1984-85 and on up to 1999, for a total of $1,630,151, less the current portion of $263,000, giving $1,367,035.

Perhaps the Minister could clarify where those mortgages and the sale of land and buildings stand. I assume all that money will move into DSS and will be seen within its accounts receivable. That is unclear in the Bill. The Bill does not specifically deal with it, other than the unwinding of the corporation. I have not found any section of the Bill dealing with the movement of either the extraordinary income or the long-term receivables. It may be that within the legalese of this Bill there is wording to deal with it, but I have not found it.

There are two other matters related to that—"Due to Canada and others—Agency Account" and "Commission to agents", for example, Vebeg, an agency of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany which retained $19,652 from the proceeds it remitted to the corporation. I think the Minister can clear that up quite quickly. I understand that it is related to the sale of goods related to the Embassy of the Federal Republic of Germany. Perhaps we could get clarification of that, because again there is no specific wording in Bill C-43 to deal with it.

Then there is "Lease commitments". I think the House should know whether or not those have been increased or decreased. We are dealing with three fiscal years here. We are dealing with 1983-84 and on up to 1986-87. There is almost $200,000 in these commitments. Could the Minister simply clarify whether or not DSS will pick up those lease arrangements? I think the general regional agreement now is that those Crown Assets Disposal sites have simply moved their operations into DSS locations. We should have clarification of those lease commitments.

Then there are the contingencies upon which I touched. I give the Minister full marks. He may not have heard my concerns regarding Bill C-44 which passed in the last Parliament, but that was a dark day for the House. I think the Prime Minister will take extraordinary steps to see that the prospector John Turner is given his proper due because he was done a very ill deed by the former Parliament through Bill C-44.

Clause 5 very clearly deals with litigation and gives those who are in the process of litigating or who may litigate in regard to something that is just happening right now the opportunity under Clauses 1 and 2. Perhaps the Minister could respond either today or in the committee regarding Clause 10 on contingencies. That Clause indicates that claims aggregating approximately $266,000 in respect of contractual obligations, accidents, alleged misrepresentation of assets sold and sundry other matters in dispute have been received by the corporation but are not reflected in the accounts. In the opinion of management and legal counsel, the position of the corporation on these claims is defensible. However, the final outcome of such claims is not determinable. Settlements resulting from the resolution of these claims are expected to be accounted for in the year in which the settlements occur.

I would solicit the views of the Minister on this, but I would hope that we do not find ourselves in the same situation as we did with Bill C-44. In that situation, someone who had a contingent liability or was involved in litigation regarding falsification of the age of something acquired from Crown Assets Disposal was precluded from obtaining redress from the Crown. I know only little bit about the law, but my unpractised reading of Clause 5 would lead me to believe that the public is covered in that way, but I am concerned about the wording that is contained in public accounts under contingencies. Legal counsel to the corporation indicate that the claims are defensible. However, they do add the rider that the final outcome of such claims is not determinable.

Again, on a reading of Bill C-43, I do not find a clause that would allow greater assurance to the public and to any of those who may be involved in litigation or considering litigation that their rights are not being precluded. The John Turner case from the last Parliament will, over time, come to be a very well known case in this country because it was a terrible error on the part of Parliament to have blocked his opportunity to complete litigation before the legislation was passed by the House.

Let me deal with a few other matters related to Bill C-43. The matter my friend the Minister raised is one that irks me to a great degree. It flows from the directors' meetings costs. In the annual report it is indicated that in 1984, the meetings of the directors cost $14,390, whereas in 1983, they cost $695. Perhaps the Minister could advise the House as to why there was such an enormous jump from 1983 to 1984. I notice as well that there is a listing of what is called other costs. It appears on page 145 of the financial statement of the Crown Corporation and indicates $23,000 in 1984 and $54,000 in 1985 for other costs, immediately after directors' meetings costs.

For a long time, the Canadian public has been concerned about the random and often irrational appointments of people associated with politics to boards of directors, and particularly so in this case which dealt with a dummy corporation. There was no longer anyone working within the corporation. All of the employees except one had been transferred to the Department of Supply and Services. One can only wonder why, in an election year, board of directors' meetings costs should go from $695 to over $14,000, and why there was such a dramatic increase in other costs when there are no employees. I am sure the Minister would want to make some comments on that.

Again, I seek the views of the Minister and the Government. When an agency of the Government got rid of surplus commodities, it cost the corporation $240 per report in 1982 and $226 per report in 1983. Coming from a rural area, I am a great attender of farm auctions and rural auctions. I solicit the Minister's view, and I think we might be on the same wave length on this, but it seems to me that it might make more sense in many areas of Canada to dispose of assets by way of auction rather than by going through the great costs of reporting back on these particular surpluses.

If there are six desks that need to be disposed of from the RCMP offices in Terrace, British Columbia, it might make more sense to have the provision under another Act for their disposal by auction if the articles are valued below a certain amount. A government official could simply phone a local auctioneer and say, "Look, I have six desks, five chairs and three lamps that are four years old. The desks have six broken legs and a bunch of cracks. You pick them up and auction them off". Rather than incurring enormous bookkeeping costs of $200 to $250 per lot for the disposal of small numbers of low-valued items, we as taxpayers and Members of the House would be better off to use local auctioneers.

I think the Minister has a sharp pencil. He might want to give Members of the House an answer to the following question. As indicated in the annual report, there were 104 employees in 1983. Salaries were $2,463,000, employee benefits were $335,000 and accommodations were $558,000. Perhaps the Minister could clarify those employee benefits and how the accommodation section that is noted within the audited report fits in. It is obvious that it does not deal simply with the leasing of premises for Crown Assets Disposal. I wonder whether or not that accommodation section relates in some way to accommodations for employees. It is unclear. It does not deal specifically with that of which we are disposing in this Bill but it is simply a point of interest. I wanted to find out what was going on.

Having dealt with those items, I would like to finish going through the Bill. Members of the public may wonder what we are doing this afternoon by dissolving the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Members have made it clear that there may be one employee left. There is a board composed of public servants who will not be displaced. The Minister will respond either this afternoon or in committee regarding what is happening to their benefits, vacation pay and so on so that Members of the House are assured that there are not any outstanding matters of which we should be aware. One of the duties I intend to take upon myself, having been one of those who was burned on Bill C-44, is to make sure the Government provides publicly any information regarding outstanding contingency liabilities, lawsuits, grievances of employees and so on so that we do not make errors in passing a Bill on Friday afternoon, a Bill that should have a greater degree of scrutiny.

I have brought to your attention, Mr. Speaker, my concerns over what I see as being things that may be missing within the Bill. There may be ways in which the Department of Supply and Services could deal with things like contingent lease liabilities and so on. I think it is important, though, that Bills contain clauses directly relating to points that have been raised either by public accounts or by the Auditor General.

In conclusion, let me say that I support the Minister's actions today. I do not think we should have dummy Crown corporations on the books. I do not think we should, at any time in the future, allow any Government to set up a Crown corporation with a board of directors and allow directors' meetings costs to go up about 1500 per cent in an election year. It is a remarkably repugnant situation.

I am pleased that the Minister has brought this Bill before the House. It is good legislation, it is appropriate and it will save the public money. The legislation appears to have a proper protective mechanism which should also be included in Bill C-44, but perhaps that could be done retroactively. Clause 5 seems to provide that mechanism.

My concerns with regard to the rest of the Bill are more related to the affairs of past employees and the present employee, contingent liabilities and the possible litigation which may be ongoing. The Minister may be able to provide that information this afternoon, and then we could pass the Bill.

I believe that I have raised all the principal concerns which the public might have and today would be a good day to get rid of what might be considered a contingent liability for the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am asking for the unanimous consent of the House to undertake an extraordinary procedure, in the sense of attempting to respond to the questions which the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has raised, with the hope that if I can respond to his concerns, perhaps there might be a disposition, by unanimous consent, to proceed with committee stage and third reading this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House realize that if the Minister speaks again he will be closing off debate?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief concerns which I would like to raise with respect to the remarks of the Minister when he introduced the Bill, and I would like to set the record straight.

The activities of this Crown corporation were wound up about two and a half years ago and integrated with his Department. There is little doubt that the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation will be busy during the coming months and years of this administration if the recent actions which were taken by this Government are any indication.

It is interesting to note that the corporation has the responsibility to sell practically everything that is determined to be in excess of government need, with the exception of land.

With reference to the Minister's statements, I would like to point out to the House that his Department took steps to cut back on its operations. In the Expenditure and Program Review which was presented in November, it was indicated that steps would be taken to improve administrative efficiency and that regional centres would be closed. In closing those centres, the savings would amount to $14.2 million. It also indicated that the disposal of surplus properties by the Department of Public Works would save $27.2 million and that the disposal of those properties would be accelerated. The list goes on and outlines the sale of assets, cut-backs in government Departments and increases in public fees. These include the user fees in national parks; berthage fees for fishermen; parking fees; commercial rents and toll bridge fees. As well, projects involving the redevelopment of federally-owned waterfront land were cancelled, and certain capital projects were terminated. Car parking rates at airports were increased, as were rental rates for airport lands and buildings. Tariff structures were revised. The list goes on. Then the Minister rose in the House and said that the Government wanted to get rid of Crown corporations because they cost too much money. However, another section of that document outlines saving measures. The document indicates that CN Marine will be established as a separate Crown corporation to respond more effectively to the needs of Atlantic Canada to reduce administrative costs. That will amount to a saving of $21.5 million. How does that jibe with what the Minister said a few minutes ago? The Government did it in a very sneaky way. It jacked up the rates in a particular activity in eastern Canada so that families will now have to pay $200 or $300 to get from one province to another via the ferry system. Then the Government turned around and said that it would save a further $21.5 million by establishing a separate Crown corporation.

It is not very difficult to pick holes in the speeches of the Ministers of this administration. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) gave a speech a few moments ago as if one of the primary actions of the Government were to cut back on Crown corporations when that change had already taken place. He justified the change, he told us why the change was taking place, but the change had already taken place. It will only save doing up two sets of books instead of one.

With those few words, I will bow to the Minister's explanation of how he can, on the one hand, say that the Government is getting rid of Crown corporations and, on the other hand, create Crown corporations, as was stated by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), "to respond more effectively to the needs of Atlantic Canada, and to reduce administrative costs". I wish they could get their act together.

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The difficulty which we might run into—and I would solicit the views of the Minister on this—is that it is not a situation in which there could be a question and answer period. If something has been left out to which he has not been able to respond, or if he has not been provided with something by the Department—

Mr. Andre: There will be a second round.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre).

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to be brief.

The Hon. Member asked me a question privately about the fee to Vebeg which is an agency of the West German Government. I am informed that we have a memorandum of understanding with the German Government and that, in essence, it is acting as the Crown Assets Disposal for us in Germany having to do with assets respecting the Canadian military in Germany. We, in turn, provide the same function for it in Shilo when the German forces are in Canada. That acts as their commission or brokerage fee.

With respect to the question regarding contingent liabilities, those are contingencies for the potential litigations which exist. When the accounts were published, there were 11 cases. Three cases have been resolved and eight are outstanding. Seven of those cases are against the Crown, and the eighth case is the Crown against the customer. In total, it amounts to a contingent liability of $266,000. It is the opinion of officials that there is no change in the legal opportunity to the companies as a result of this Bill, and that Clause 5 will protect them absolutely. Of course, we are all interested in having that accomplished as quickly as possible.

With respect to the $161,000 worth of extraordinary items, I am informed that there have not been any further extraordinary items since the public accounts were put in place. The reason for the extraordinary items being placed there was that the initial estimate of adjustments, because of employees moving from the Crown corporation to the Public Service, was high. Those items represent that difference. It is a one shot thing. Now that the employee situation has been straightened out, the officials can see no other such extraordinary items arising in the future. It is listed as an extraordinary item because it does not naturally fit into the accounting procedures.

With respect to the question of more efficient ways of disposing absolutely, the interesting thing about this Department, which I have enjoyed working with, is that we work on cost recovery. We charge, in essence, a brokerage fee for our service. That gives us, in a sense, a bottom line—and I am sorry to use that corporate jargon—which means we can measure efficiency and effectiveness.

We are exploring constantly for ways in which we can do what we do cheaper. The suggestion of the Hon. Member that in some remote areas it may be cheaper over-all to delegate an auctioneer to dispose of the assets and so on is a good suggestion. If we are not doing it, we ought to be doing it. I certainly hope we can pursue that in other areas. I am attempting throughout, both in our buying function and in our disposing function, to move toward giving more responsibility to regional offices which are closer to the source of the action, so that we buy closer to where it is used and we sell closer to where it is disposed of, again for reasons of economy.

I do not know whether I have answered all the questions of the Hon. Member. But if perhaps he has other questions, he might put them now.

Mr. Fulton: In terms of the extraordinary items, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has touched on what they were. Those were for the transition, I take it, of 104 employees from the Crown corporations to DSS. In the same way as with the contingency, he has touched on the outstanding cases and he was advised that Section 5(1) and (2) will cover those people. The litigation is not going to stop. They are going to be able to find a resolution to it, which pleases me, because I do not think we should ever close the door again as we did on Bill C-44.

On the transfer of the employees, are there any other outstanding items related to the employees of which this House should be aware, or has this basically resolved it, that is, paying the differential between the employee benefits, which was a point I raised with you? It seemed amazing to me that where the Department is paying $2 million in salary, it is paying $355,000 per annum in employee benefits. I have had an opportunity to look at enough Public Service contracts to know that that is rather substantial, especially when you add somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500,000 in accommodation. We are looking at a fairly substantial package there and I am just wondering whether or not these extraordinary items which are listed in the public accounts cover all of the differential? The Minister said it is a one-shot payment to cover all of that, but are there any which are still outstanding? Are there any employee matters of which we should be aware which are not dealt with by this? I take it they would still be dealt with by the Public Service. Are there any outstanding matters?

Mr. Andre: I am aware of a couple of individuals who feel that they have not been properly dealt with. They are going through due process now as members of the Public Service. Whether the Bill is passed or not does not affect their position because the Order in Council of 1982 established that they are moved into the Public Service if they so chose, and that was the procedure. So this Bill does not affect that in any way. I am told that except for one or two what are described to me as minor situations, which should be accommodated through due process, the transition has been made and there are no further employment matters.

I neglected to mention under extraordinary items the question of the Montreal office accommodation. Given that DSS, as other Departments of Government, is now a tenant of the Public Works, it was necessary to take care of the leases, and what have you, which Crown Assets had. So to dispose of the Montreal lease, if you will, and move into a Public Works accommodation, a payment was made, and that is cleared up and done. I do not know what it was. The Hon. Member mentioned the cost of directors' meetings and so on, and I can say that we are of a like mind.

Mr. Fulton: I have one final point, Mr. Speaker. I agree that the matter of the amount the directors were taking for their meetings right before the election is rather disgusting.

Under "Dissolution", I just want to make one point clear, that in Section 6 in the Public Accounts of Canada, Volume III, the $1.6 million and the $1.37 million, which are long-term receivables, I take it that the dissolution section of Bill C-43, subsection (4), deals entirely with that. That amount in excess of $1 million is simply transferred to receivables of DSS. That is all I have.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Andre, seconded by Mr. McKnight, moves that Bill C-43, an Act to dissolve the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and to amend the Surplus Crown Assets Act and other Acts in consequence thereof be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there have been discussions and there may indeed be a disposition to deal with this matter through all stages in the House this afternoon, including Committee of the Whole. I meant to rise before you put the motion, Mr. Speaker, but even though you have, it may be that, by unanimous consent, we can carry on with this Bill and deal with it in all stages in order to give the Senate something to do next week.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the comments made by the Hon. Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), I must say that I did not know about the suggestion that we should go through all stages this afternoon. Perhaps the Hon. Government House Leader would let us know who he has dealt with in our Party. That comes as a surprise to me.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I just came in myself, Mr. Speaker, but I had understood that the Minister and the opposition critic had had an informal discussion with respect to this matter and that there was—

Mr. Boudria: I have no objections.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I apologize. I was just informed of this. I know the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has been sitting here all day. I know there was no serious objection to the legislation and there was a possibility of getting it through all stages this afternoon. I apologize for not communicating with the Hon. Member because I had not heard about it until I walked in just now. But if there is such a disposition, we can deal with it now. I apologize and I will make it up to the Hon. Member in some other tangible way, if he can accommodate us today.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We certainly have no objection to the substance of the legislation and I made that point to the Minister earlier. I am simply surprised that the Hon. Government House Leader would have the idea that there was agreement. I do not think there was any agreement. We can try to develop one on the floor of the House. However, I would hate to see agreements being put to us when they have not been concluded. This being said, it would be nice, this being a TGIF Friday.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I can clear the matter up a little, Mr. Speaker. I did have brief discussions with the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and with the Minister. I do not object, alghough I have not been privy to the discussions which were held between the Opposition House Leader and my own House Leader. I think the agreement was that the Bill would go from here to committee, but from what we have heard this afternoon, I believe the Minister has answered the concerns which have been raised in the House this afternoon and, at least speaking for myself and my colleagues, I do not object to our proceeding. I think it is a good Bill.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, let us deal with it in Committee of the Whole and let us forget about the clock. Perhaps we could get unanimous agreement to go a few minutes past four o'clock so that we can deal with it. Perhaps we can have the agreement of the Hon. Member who is coming up with Private Member's legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Andre, seconded by Mr. McKnight, moves that Bill C-43, an Act to dissolve the Crown Assests Disposal Corporation and to amend the Surplus Crown Assets Act and other Acts in consequence thereof be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie) moved that Bill C-221, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House today and speak to my first Bill, which consists in amending certain sections of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

I had very specific reasons for proposing this Bill. First of all, the Bill is aimed at correcting a situation which, I feel, has led to a double standard. Let me explain. Today, when a person applies for a course with his Manpower counsellor, they take his application form and invite him to an information session where they start off by telling him he should not expect to be on a course the next day.

It's true! I know someone who applied two years ago and is still waiting. Then they tell him that if he does not have an income, he will get about $85 a week or more, depending on his status. He will also be told that he may work. If he does not work more than 25 hours a week, he may earn as much as he wants. If he is unemployed, he will be given what he is entitled to and the course will be paid for by the Employment Centre.

I know someone else who was working as a waitress without tips, who was on her feet all the time and had a constantly changing schedule. Her doctor strongly recommended that she stop doing this kind of work, for health reasons, and she wanted to get a better job. For her, the answer was to take a course in a subject that would suit her, such as typing and work processing. Her boss refused to let her change her hours, so that she could work and take a course at the same time. She left her job to take this course, which is from 11:45 a.m. until 3:45 p.m.

This woman, who is paying $1,000 for her course and who is still looking for another job has lost her unemployment insurance benefits and is being penalized because she had the courage to leave her job to take a course and make a better life for herself.

Under Section 39(1) in the present legislation, a legacy from the previous Government I may add, and I quote:

For the purposes of this Part, a claimant is unemployed, capable of and available for work during any period he is attending a course or program of instruction or training, or other courses or programs designed to facilitate the re-entry of a claimant into the employed labour force, to which he has been referred by such authority as the Commission may designate.

I propose that Section 39(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

For the purposes of this Part, a claimant is unemployed, capable of and available for work during any period he is attending a course or program of instruction or training, or other courses or programs designed to facilitate the re-entry of a claimant into the employed labour force:

(a) paid for and authorized by the Commission; or

(b) paid for and chosen by him, with the approval of the Commission;

I repeat, with the approval of the Commission.

Although I do not agree with the interpretation, even after checking the present section, I am convinced that the proposed amendment will improve its clarity and accuracy.

This Bill entitles a person attending a course or program of instruction or training chosen and paid for by him to receive benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 subject to the approval of the Commission——and I repeat, subject to the approval of the Commission.

Such a person, unlike those attending courses paid for by the Commission, is not entitled under the present provisions of the Act to receive unemployment insurance benefits because he is deemed unavailable for work.

As a result of this amendment, a person who wants to quit working to attend a course will have to get prior permission from the Commission, which is intended to avoid possible abuses. Should the employment counsellor refuse, the person will still have the right to appeal to the board of referees, as is the case under existing legislation.

Mr. Speaker, let us figure out what it costs now and what it would cost under my amendment.

Let us take the case of a man who earns $200 a week and who is eligible for unemployment insurance benefits after having been authorized to attend a course by the Commission. His gross benefits will amount to 50 per cent of his salary, or $120 a week. In addition, the Commission will pay $1,000 for tuition fees, if I take the example mentioned earlier. Assuming the course lasts eight weeks, the State will pay $1,000 in tuition fees plus $960 in benefits, for a total of $1,960.

Now then, under the proposed amendment, if the same man is authorized to attend the same course, the Commission will not have to pay the tuition fees, only the benefits of $960, so it is easy to figure out that the State will save $1,000.

Mr. Speaker, here is what officials have been saying:

The mere fact that a person quits his or her job proves that he or she is interested in attending a course, not in returning to work.

Must we conclude that any beneficiary who attends a course paid for by the Canada Employment Centre is interested only in attending courses, not in working?

In my opinion, Section 39(1) as it reads now discriminates against people who want to be self-sufficient. Here is another example which illustrates the situation.

Last September, a single woman aged 35 with three children was without a job and drawing unemployment insurance benefits. She looked for work, but invariably she was asked whether she could speak English. Since she did not, she had a hard time finding employment. So she decided to take evening English courses, at her own expenses, while continuing to look for a job. Believe it or not, her benefits were cut off because she had taken the initiative of attending a course. And yet, Mr. Speaker, this was supposed to make it easier to return to work and, in any case, she did not have much else to do. So I asked a qualified person from my office to represent that woman before the board of referees. Fortunately, the ruling was in her favour. If she had stood alone in her fight, I am not sure that she would have won. She had a number of problems, especially during the holiday season.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment I have introduced tends to correct this deficiency and to be fair to all those who want to improve their lot. This is often their only recourse.

I am sure there is not one Member in this House who does not have at least one constituent who was put in such a situation.

As to the amendment I am proposing to Section 103, it simply says that, where a claim for benefit is allowed by a board of referees, benefits will be payable from the day of the initial claim if it is filed pursuant to Section 55. The reason for the change I am suggesting to this section is that, when a claimant appeals to the board of referees, one month may have gone by since he received his notice of disentitlement and another month may go by before his case is heard.

The best example which comes to my mind is the first one I mentioned. The claimant filed his claim on March 5, 1984, received a notice of unavailability on March 29, 1984, and appeared for the first time before the board of referees on May 23, 1984. This means that close to two months went by before the claimant was able to make his point. In this case, the board of referees allowed the benefits to be paid from the day it heard the appeal. This means that, under an amended Section 103, whenever the claimant has established that he was available at an earlier date than the day the case is heard, he will be paid from the day of his initial claim or from the day his availability was established.

If this section is not amended as requested and if the appeal is heard by the board of referees three months after the initial claim, the claimant will be penalized by the system.

Mr. Speaker, I think that I have explained the purpose of this Bill rather clearly. Naturally these two sections are not the only ones that need to be amended. The whole legislation should be changed and I know that this will be done. Until then, I would like the Unemployment Insurance Act and Regulations to be applied more humanely.

I am convinced that if some officials had more compassion and understanding for taxpayers, some cases such as the one which I have just described could be avoided.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that young people who deal for the first time with the big machinery of unemployment insurance and are the victim of such unfairness, find it discouraging and lose confidence in our institution, so serious is the wrong done to them. Some adults are also facing the same fate under that discriminatory clause. I say it over again: there is a double standard.

I hope that my colleagues in this House will agree with me and that we will redress as soon as possible that wrong which has lasted for too long.

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed listening to the Hon. Member's reference to that particular case. Most Members of Parliament get involved with appeals of decisions of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. One sees many cases in which a person worked and qualified for unemployment insurance and then did something. He may have gone to school, taken part-time work, become self-employed, or helped someone build a house. In other words, he did something other than remain next to his telephone and was thereby judged to be not looking or not available for work.

I am surprised to hear a government Member disagree so vehemently with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). The Minister of Employment and Immigration, through the instructions of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), has said publicly that she will cut $200 million or $300 million from the unemployment insurance fund. In fact, she said publicly many times that she agreed with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and with Mr. Bulloch that there were many jobs available which people were not taking because they were on unemployment insurance.

The fact of the matter is that when people who are on unemployment insurance wish to better themselves, they are afraid to do anything. They are afraid to work, go to school, or take a part-time job. In fact, the Unemployment Insurance Act says that you can make 25 per cent of what you are receiving in unemployment insurance without claiming it. We have all seen cases in which the investigators hired by the Unemployment Insurance Commission have automatically cut off benefits indefinitely, forcing people to go through appeal procedures, even though they were only making 10 per cent of what they were drawing on unemployment insurance. The list goes on and on.

A common case is that of students attending trade school or university who gained unemployment insurance stamps by working evenings at a gas station, by baby-sitting, or by working at a take-out restaurant. They thereby qualified for unemployment insurance. When they go to school they indicate to the Manpower office that they are available to work in the same positions they previously held, but between the hours of 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. When asked what they will be doing for the rest of the day, the students indicate that they will be going to school trying to improve themselves. They are then told that they do not qualify for unemployment insurance.

The decision is not made by the local unemployment insurance official, although some people believe it is. The person in the local unemployment insurance office sends a notice to the Department of National Revenue asking for a determination of entitlement for benefits. That is the form that is used. Someone in the Department of National Revenue makes a judgment on whether that person should receive unemployment insurance. He may make a judgment that that person must pay back unemployment insurance for as many as three or four years. That judgment is sent to the individual in question. The individual, who is perhaps going to trade school, college or university, wonders how he will pay back $5,000.

He therefore appeals to the board of referees. Over board members' right shoulder is the investigator of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Over the other shoulder is someone with the Unemployment Insurance Act and the determination is made by the Department of National Revenue. In 99 per cent of the cases the board of referees follows the original judgment made by the Department of National Revenue upheld by the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Of course, that student can then appeal to the Minister. Once that appeal is turned down, the Minister makes a judgment, and if the student really wants to go further, he can go to the Federal Tax Court of Canada. Last year, the umpire, who was similarly a federal judge, would hear the case. Many judges have made judgments concerning part-time and full-time students. One can read the many judgments that have been made over the years.

The basic is that one is not allowed to do anything while collecting unemployment insurance. Even if you leave your home telephone number in order to go looking for work elsewhere and someone finds out about it, you can be cut off for the time you have been gone.

Let me give an example of one of the most ridiculous aspects of our system. One can find, in those institutions that provide upgrading courses or courses in new occupations, people who are on what is called a manpower seat sitting next to a person who is not receiving any money at all. It is a situation in which they are taking the same course, have worked at the same job and finished their work at the same time. They have the same rate of benefit, but one is getting paid and the other is not. There could be someone on what is called a provincial seat. This leads to a situation where someone could find out how much a provincial seat pays for training and choose that, if that person qualifies for such an allowance from that particular province. It is entirely unfair that someone is receiving unemployment insurance and taking a course while the person in the next seat is not getting a penny.

This has nothing to do with income but with the way the lists are distributed. Currently, there are new rules for deciding who gets the manpower seat. The new rule is: first come, first served. For example, someone could be on that list for three years while another person might apply this year for a course because of his or her prospect for employment in that occupation. Although that person may need the course more than the one who has been on the list longer, the rules state that it is is first come, first served.

What should happen in the case of unemployment insurance? I believe that if somebody qualified for unemployment insurance and is available to work outside the normal retraining hours, he should be able to draw his unemployment insurance without any interference from the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

It is unfortunate that the changes being made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration are detrimental. Recently, she changed the mobility allowance. The Government announced that it was going to cut back on that allowance, but now one must exhaust one's unemployment insurance in order to get it.

I watched the news on one of the national networks in this country the other night. There was an item dealing with all the jobs available in Banff, Alberta. At that time I was staying at a home on one of the islands in Newfoundland where everyone in the house was unemployed. After this report about all the available jobs in Banff, the reporter said that there is even federal assistance available to move people to Banff to fill these jobs. Every one of those unemployed people in the house knew that was a complete fabrication of the truth because they knew of the requirements to get a mobility grant. In order to get a mobility grant, not only is it necessary to have a job that lasts for more than one year, the nearest Manpower office to that job must list that job for a specific period of time. It then must go to the next closest place to be posted again. Mobility is approved on the authority of the local Manpower office closest to the job, after you have a signed declaration from the employer guaranteeing work for over one year.

I suppose that there are people who do not understand what it means to be unemployed. They may sit in their homes and criticize people for being lazy for not taking those jobs. There are people throughout this country who are anxious to go there if they only had enough money to take the train. If the Department of Employment and Immigration decided to hire a VIA Rail car and provide meals along the way for people travelling, there would be plenty of employees in Banff.

The reason for this inequity is quite simple. There are people who have never drawn unemployment insurance and therefore do not qualify to go to work on any federal job scheme. That is the law because one must have exhausted one's unemployment insurance in order to qualify.

Now, people do not qualify for mobility grants unless they have exhausted their unemployment insurance. Let us consider the case of those over 18 years of age who are living at home and have lost their family allowance. If they have never worked before they cannot get welfare in four provinces in this country. If those people are living with someone else, they qualify for welfare in some province. In Newfoundland, it is $71 a month. The point I am making is that as a result of the Government's recently passed measures, it is really putting the nail in the coffin and giving no hope at all as far as the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Minister of Employment and Immigration are concerned.

The other day I asked the Minister a question concerning 210 people in Newfoundland who are judged to owe her Department between $5,000 and $7,000 as a result of an audit of a certain company. The Minister's response was that she responded to a telex from the Premier, a telex from the Minister of Fisheries and one from someone else. She said that her Department will go very easy on the collection of the money. However, it was a mistake in the company's books. That indicated to me that the Minister of Employment and Immigration knew no more about those cases than the man in the moon. She only knew what she was advised by her advisers in Ottawa and in the regional office in Newfoundland. Of course, their advice was that the company had made a mistake, as they saw it.

The fact is that the benefits from funds paid out to the Unemployment Insurance Commission by a company depends on the occupation and when work is performed for the company. Let us take the case of a fisherman. He is judged to have an unemployment insurance benefit when he sells fish to the company. Let us assume that he sold the fish to a company once every two weeks. The books would show that he worked for the week in which he sold his fish.

The Unemployment Insurance Act states that if that person worked the previous week, in order to get that particular product he was selling to the company the following week, that company can issue two unemployment insurance stamps. In other words, it is work for two weeks but it is not on the books of the company because audits are made according to what is on the books. What is on the books of the fish company is shipments of fish.

The Minister said that the company made the error in issuing those unemployment insurance stamps. I suggest that no one made an error. None of those fishermen should be paying back that money and receiving attachments. The people who made the error were the bureaucrats who advised the Minister to instruct her unemployment insurance officials and the Department of National Revenue to go over the books of these companies. That is who made the error. In other words, that will go, as the Minister said, to the board of referees. The board of referees will side with the Department of National Revenue, and then the case will go to the Deputy Minister of National Revenue on a second appeal. The Deputy Minister of National Revenue will side with the people who performed the audit. Then the case will go to the Federal Tax Court of Canada in about two years' time. Meanwhile people cannot collect their unemployment insurance.

What will happen in the court? A judge will sit on that case and he will say that if there is reasonable doubt, then the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) is wrong. We will go through this entire procedure for two years and at the end a federal judge will say: "There is doubt here because these are the facts". Meanwhile, what have you done? You have put all these people through all this misery, and the Minister gives a simple answer. She said: "The company made an error". That is what is wrong with the direction of the Government. It is trying to cut back on unemployment insurance. The Government does not want to give unemployment insurance to the fellow going to school. The Government is not going to correct that. The Government will not do what part of this Bill says. The Government is going to save money in the unemployment insurance fund. The Government will cut back and will look good to some of the employers in the country. The Government is going to look good to people who say that everybody on unemployment insurance is lazy. That is what is going to happen.

As I said before, what should happen is that anybody who wants to up-grade himself or herself and attend a trade school or a course of instruction should be able to draw his or her unemployment insurance, because as it exists today half the people in the class are drawing unemployment insurance and the other half are not.

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to express my views on Bill C-221. I must congratulate my colleague for introducing in the House this Bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. With the proposals he has set out, we have the opportunity to examine closely the said Act and the way it is applied to the Canadian people.

Today I will only talk about the proposed amendments to section 39 which sets out the requirements a claimant must meet to receive normal unemployment insurance benefits while attending a training course recognized by the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking now about the use of the Unemployment Insurance Fund for innovative purposes, a provision of the Act which has been in force since 1977.

In order to be able to assess the impact of the proposed amendment to section 39, I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is essential to understand fully what are those innovative uses I have just mentioned.

During the next minutes I intend to make a summary of the objectives of section 39, in its present form, and to explain how the provisions are applied.

Under the innovative uses of the Unemployment Insurance Fund, trainees who receive unemployment insurance benefits can continue to do so while they participate in programs designed to improve their employability. The purpose of section 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act is to simplify the provisions relating to income support as far as the claimants who are attending occupational training courses are concerned.

This process supports the following objectives: first, to accelerate professional re-entry of the claimants; secondly, to multiply the training opportunities for the claimants; thirdly, to mesh the objectives of the Unemployment Insurance Act and of the National Training Act for claimants. Fourthly, to increase the number of manpower training courses offered to the unemployed, taking into account the needs of the labour market.

Trainees who receive an income supplement from the Unemployment Insurance Fund belong to two different categories: those who attend training courses approved under the National Training Act, and those who attend approved classes at their own expenses or at the expense of a province or some other agency. Trainees may receive unemployment insurance benefits during the training session and six weeks thereafter in order to look for a suitable job.

Supplementary allowances to live outside their home, to look after dependents, to travel or to commute may be paid in accordance with the National Training Act or from funds earmarked for the mobility program. These supplementary allowances cannot be paid to those who finance their own training.

Selection and recommendation of trainees is done in the usual way by employment counsellors using the normal process for information gathering.

Trainees entitled to unemployment insurance benefits lower than the training allowance they would receive, can receive other benefits to bring the total to an amount equivalent to the training allowance.

To receive benefits under section 39, the trainee must be eligible to unemployment insurance benefits. Furthermore, he or she must be selected by an employment counsellor for an approved training program. Trainees which are sent to an approved vocational training course at their own expenses are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits as long as they have not exhausted their entitlement and the course is geared to the needs of the labour market.

Trainees who pay their own way must attend courses in trades of national or regional importance. Provisions have been established by members of target groups. Trainees can also attend language classes if their lack of knowledge of one or the other official languages prevents them from finding employment.

The total amount allocated under section 39 for every calendar year is established by order in council. Maximum payable benefits as well as unemployment insurance premiums are revised every year. In 1984, the maximum weekly benefit was $255; in 1985, it is up to $276, an increase of 8.2 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, according to the statistics provided by Employment and Immigration Canada, 56 per cent of trainees will take those courses under section 39. Those courses will last an average of 16 weeks. And their costs are estimated at $234 millions for the fiscal year 1984-85.

Eligible trainees receive unemployment insurance benefits as income support for the duration of the course. The government assumes part of the costs and the employers and the employees the other part with their contributions. But the government alone pays the entire cost of any extension of benefit granted to a trainee to conclude his training as well as the supplementary extension up to six weeks allowed to seek employment. It is a large sum of money. But it is a sound investment in our human resources and an efficient mean of preparing our unemployed for the labour market.

Mr. Speaker, let us now refer to the proposed change to section 39. In its present wording, section 39 deals with the attendance of beneficiaries to training courses which correspond to their needs and may help them to increase their earning capacity as well as their "employability". The submissions are based on the labour market criteria established under the National Training Act.

Bill C-221 would bring one change: instead of attending a training course paid for by the Commission, a claimant would simply be authorized to take a course. It is possible to link courses trainees could take at their own expense with the conditional enrolment policy.

According to that policy, a claimant may, under certain circumstances, attend a training course and receive unemployment insurance benefits provided for in Section 25. Here are the conditions:

1) an employment counsellor certifies that the claimant cannot be enrolled in a course under Section 39;

2) the claimant cannot find a suitable job in a reasonable length of time;

3) the training course suggested would increase his chances of finding a job;

And those are cumulative conditions, Mr. Speaker—

4) he would leave the course if he were offered a job.

Pursuant to this Bill, claimants to whom Section 39 applies can receive unemployment insurance benefits or training allowances, whichever are the highest. Moreover, the period of payment can be extended to 104 weeks if the trainee is attending a course.

The proposal is innovative. It is a step forward in that area. We want to make sure that unemployment insurance funds are used in the best way possible.

It also recognizes that training and retraining are vitally important to allow our citizens to participate in the economic upsurging.

Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members know, since last December the Minister has been holding extended consultations concerning the improvement of the Government's training and job-creation programs. Several interesting suggestions have been received from all sectors of society. With his Bill, the Hon. Member is making a valuable contribution and is keeping us abreast of the times.

In fact, the Bill and its consideration by the House will be a very useful contribution to the review of the Unemployment Insurance Act that was announced on November 8, 1984 and to the improvement of training programs throughout the country.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) for introducing this Bill. I regret that the Government has not taken the steps which it promised to take on numerous occasions over the last few months. We heard rather extensive discussion on the part of an Hon. Member on the Liberal benches which seemed to me to be a discussion aimed at prolonging the debate and making sure the Bill was talked out. However, I think the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques) made a valuable contribution. She spoke for a sufficiently brief time to indicate that it was not her effort to prolong the debate nor to talk the Bill out.

Anyone with municipal council experience knows of unemployed constituents who have attempted to take initiatives to improve their education and training and, if on social assistance or unemployment insurance, have found themselves threatened with disqualification. If it should happen that under the National Training Act they have to make a choice, they will find that the benefit under that Act will provide them with allowances which are less than social welfare payments. The unemployment insurance arrangements are somewhat better. However, the Hon. Member pointed out one of its significant defects. There seems to be an inclination to deprive the individuals involved of an opportunity to make their own choice with respect to what kind of training or education they will pursue.

I do not propose to take very much time. I just want to point out how consistent the Bill is with a document which was produced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) last December. It is really quite a marvellous document. Most people who read it will find that it contains a number of quite exciting ideas in respect of providing opportunities for those Canadians who want to work. I think most people would agree that most Canadians want to work and should be provided with opportunities to obtain training and education to provide themselves with the wherewithal to qualify for available jobs. However, I regret that the document which resulted from the discussion of this consultation paper, that is the agreement between the Government and the provinces, while high on rhetoric is slight on specifics. There is very little reference to many of the excellent ideas proposed in the document of the Minister in which key questions were posed. How can the unemployment insurance system be best used to promote training and prepare the unemployed to find jobs? Are arrangements under Section 39 of the Act sufficiently flexible to provide income for all who can profit from training? How can arrangements under the Canada Assistance Plan best support a co-ordinated country-wide skills development strategy? The document indicated that part of the answer would be an extension of training for those in receipt of unemployment insurance, including training in courses not directly sponsored by the Government. It would seem clear to anyone familiar with this document that the Bill before us today is a singly resourceful effort to prod the Government along the path it appears bound to take. It would be unfortunate and indeed hypocritical if Hon. Members in the House today did not express their support for the Bill by referring it for third reading.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to make a few comments in connection with Bill C-221, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. I, too, would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) for bringing the Bill forward. It is an excellent initiative by a private Member and one that certainly should be applauded.

The Unemployment Insurance Act is one of the cornerstones of our social security system. This is what gives me particular pleasure in having an opportunity to say a word or two about it. Years ago, as we are all aware, there was no such thing as unemployment insurance. Anyone who was faced with the tragedy of losing his or her job was forced on to the dole or general welfare assistance. Before then there was not even that type of assistance to look after someone who lost his or her job. I suspect that everyone in the Chamber today, and perhaps every Member of the House, has had that type of experience in their own family circle or in their circle of friends. We have had that type of experience in my own family. Before there was anything like unemployment insurance or general welfare assistance, my family had the tragic experience of unemployment. I can recall stories my parents and relatives told about members of the family having to struggle in that sort of a situation, and I can recall quite clearly the stories of members of my family who lived out the final years of their existences in complete and absolute poverty because of that sort of problem.

Fortunately for all of us, this sort of thing does not exist any longer. The unemployment insurance concept is one which recognizes that anyone who loses his or her job does not do so through his or her own fault. It provides people a method of providing for themselves and their families through a system to which they themselves have been able to contribute. That allows them to carry on with a great deal of dignity and a feeling of self-worth. A lack of self-worth is probably one of the worst problems associated with losing one's job. It is obviously not nice to have one's income suddenly cut off, but above and beyond all that is the dreadful feeling that one is not quite as worthy as one's neighbour who has a job. Certainly this type of legislation has made sure that that sort of problem will not exist.

In spite of the fact that the general principles of unemployment insurance are universally accepted, there are a good many problems with the details of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Over the last several years, there have been a number of such instances pointed out by a good many people. There has been a lot of debate and concern about a variety of different aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Just to name two or three such aspects, there is obviously a concern about the waiting period that exists before benefits can be collected. There is some question over whether or not, if one leaves one's job voluntarily, there should be a lengthening of the waiting period rather than the waiting period which now exists. As well, concerns have been raised about the amount of time one should have to work before qualifying for benefits. That too has been a matter of a great deal of concern and debate over the last few years on the part of those who feel that the unemployment insurance system has been abused from time to time.

In addition to that, there is the concern of employers and particularly small business employers over the contributions they must make to the fund and the feeling that those are out of proportion to the earnings they can generate within their own businesses. Because of that, there have been recent suggestions for changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. It has been suggested that we could take some of the employers' contribution provisions out of the Act and pay those contributions out of general tax revenues or the Consolidated Revenue Fund. All of those items are items at which we must look seriously.

The concern set out by the Hon. Member for La Prairie in Bill C-221 is another concern at which we must look very seriously with a view to amending the Act to make sure that there is equity and fairness in the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. A number of Hon. Members have referred to the purpose of this Bill. It is the intention of this Bill that a person attending a course or program of instruction or training chosen and paid for by him or her should receive benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act subject to the approval of the Commission since such a person, unlike those attending courses paid for by the Commission itself, is not now entitled under the present provisions of the Act to receive unemployment insurance benefits because he or she is considered to be unavailable for work. That is certainly an admirable proposal and one which I suspect every Member of the House endorses. It would seem that people who propose to pay for their own training and education in order to improve their employment chances should not be in a worse position than those who rely on training courses set out by the Commission itself. I endorse that proposition wholeheartedly.

The wording of the Bill itself, as I understand it, however, causes at least one technical difficulty in the administration of the Act. That has to do with the appeal provisions. As I understand it, the revised Section 103 would provide that where there was an appeal and the appeal was granted in a situation with more than one claim for unemployment insurance benefits, one of which was not under appeal and the other of which was, a claimant would receive benefits if his appeal were granted not only for the period of time it was under appeal but for the entire period dating back to the day the initial claim for the benefit was made. I do not really believe that that is what the Hon. Member intended when he put forward this Bill. I am sure he did not want to see someone getting a benefit to which he was not entitled. He wanted to make sure that people who should be receiving benefits would get them. With that in mind, it seems to me that the Bill does need a little polishing up before it is enshrined as part of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hopefully, the Government will bring forward very shortly a proposal incorporating the Hon. Member's proposal but one which would solve that small technical difficulty included in Bill C-221. At the same time, I hope the Government will put forward a number of other proposals that will improve the Unemployment Insurance Act while at the same time continuing to enshrine those general benefits all of us wish to see continue.

While I am one who believes that considerable changes should be made to the Unemployment Insurance Act, I hope at the same time that before we make those changes, we can produce a great many more jobs than exist right now. Any changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, apart from the one put forward by the Hon. Member, may very well reduce the benefits to potential claimants rather than enhance them. If that is the case, it would certainly work a hardship on people if it were to be done at a time when there were one and a half million Canadians unemployed. I know the Hon. Member would not want to see anything like that occur in his own riding.

While I applaud the Hon. Member's proposal and would like to see it incorporated in the Act and while I applaud many of the other proposals that have been made from time to time by small business and by individual Canadians across the country, I would really like to make sure that we put all Canadians who want to work back to work again before we run the risk of disentitling any of them from these benefits. Having said all that, I would like to applaud the Hon. Member for doing an outstanding job. I am sure that as time goes by, the concept he has outlined here will be enshrined in the Unemployment Insurance Act of Canada. I am sure such an amendment would be a glowing tribute to the Hon. Member and one of which he could be proud in the future.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government has displayed negligence with regard to the protection, maintenance and improvement of the environment as manifested in its ill-advised reduction in services, its complacent attitude toward controlling potential hazards and its complete abdication of any leadership in the protection of the environmental health and safety of Canadians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, you may ask why we have moved this motion today. Our answer to you, of course, is that there is a mounting dissatisfaction on the part of Canadians. What the Tory Government has boasted about achieving during the past six months, Mr. Speaker, was only possible because of the work done by successive Liberal Governments until September, 1984. In other words, the food was ready to be served. What was ready to be put on the table was the agreement with the provinces on acid rain; the provision of funds for the clean-up by way of modernization of the non-ferrous smelter industries, the car pollution controls; the laws and regulations on the transportation of toxic chemicals and the water inquiry. The groundwork was done. The foundation and momentum were provided by successive Liberal Governments. The Tories may not like to hear that but it is a fact.

What must be addressed today is what the Progressive Conservative Government has neglected to do with respect to the environment. That is what we call in our motion "abdication of leadership". It is abdication of leadership, for instance, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Quebec City fails to impress on President Reagan Canada's 50 per cent reduction program on acid rain; the Prime Minister allows himself to be sidetracked by President Reagan with the appointment of William Davis as the acid rain envoy. It is abdication of leadership when the Government of Canada abandons our international role on acid rain instead of intensifying it this spring in the months leading to the Helsinki agreement which is to be signed by the ECE nations of which Canada is a member, having launched the Ottawa Club in March, 1984. At that time there were ten nations taking part. They have now become 20. It would be extremely important to ensure by international and diplomatic initiatives that we get the United Kingdom to sign, or to declare itself ready to sign. That would make quite an impact in Washington. It is extremely important also to get Greece, Turkey, Spain and Portugal to join because this is the way in which, hopefully, we can get the United States administration to sign up in Helsinki in July of this year.

With respect to PCBs, Mr. Speaker, the Government failed to recognize immediately the federal role and responsibility both on the question of interprovincial trucking and on the question of controlling air transport of contaminated samples until it was pushed by the Opposition. I must say, Mr. Speaker, it took long and hard work to arrive at the Transportation of Hazardous Goods Act because of its complexity, the regulations and the consultations which were needed with industry.

Now that it is all in place, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the key word on this is "toughness"; toughness with regulations, penalties and with preventive measures. I say this because we must remember as a basic principle that the health of Canadians is the most important asset we have and we must protect it. The solution to the management of PCBs and, for that matter, other toxic substances is not through transportation arrangements across Canada but through a safe disposal policy, short transportation distances, safe methods of elimination, a well informed public, and provinces which have and must have the political guts fully to discharge their responsibilities, particularly in Ontario and Quebec.

While we are on the subject of transportation, I might ask what leadership is the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (Mr. Crombie) giving with respect to his responsibility to protect the ecologically fragile north from proposed tanker routes across Lancaster Sound? His silence on this issue as well as on the recommendations contained in the task force on northern conservation published in December of 1984 has been deafening.

Another Minister who seems to be silent on a crucial matter of interest to Canadians, that of pesticides, is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). Despite reassurances, he still has yet to move, despite all the work done in 1983 and 1984, on permitting public participation in the registration of pesticides and in arranging for a pesticides management advisory board. What we see instead is what I would call negative leadership. Let me explain.

Negative leadership is the ignoring of the plea by thousands and thousands of Canadians who still oppose the wildlife cuts, the amount being saved by that cut representing an infinitesimal fraction of 1 per cent of the deficit, while the social and economic loss is immeasurable. There is negative leadership in cancelling the Guelph Toxicology Centre, a centre of excellence which would have given Canada a lead role in the world. Would that centre have been cancelled if it had been planned in the Prime Minister's riding? I wonder. There is negative leadership in cancelling renewable energy research at the National Research Centre and the energy saving and conversion programs, while at the same time continuing with a very expensive system of grants to oil companies exploring for conventional energy in the Arctic. That does not make sense.

By looking at this kind of activity, one can also see a failure to confirm the policy in national parks, an established, long-term policy whereby Canadians know that what comes first is the conservation role of national parks and, secondly, tourism. What we see is what I would describe as inaction and wrong decisions. For instance, it was a wrong decision for the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) to go to Stockholm instead of attending an international conference on acid rain in Quebec City. That was inaction.

It is inaction when the Minister prefers to sit in her office checking whether she is getting work done by officials instead of getting out into the communities to listen and to learn. For instance, after eight months in office she has not yet visited the Niagara River. She has not given leadership on the recommendations published last October by the Niagara River toxic chemicals committee. It is a situation that cries for attention, action and leadership, but all we get from her are pious press releases. Although in office for eight months, the Minister has not yet met with the EPA on this crucial matter. She has allowed the cancellation of the toxic chemicals management program, a badly needed $2.5 million program to protect the health of Canadians with respect to water in the Great Lakes. Why has she done that, Mr. Speaker?

The Government's obligation of leadership, which is the body and spirit of our motion, is to be found also in fundamental, basic levels of policy-making. There is a failure on the part of this Minister and the Government to recognize that the environment is the foundation of our health. There is a failure to understand and recognize that the environment is the foundation of our economy. Therefore, there is a conceptual incapacity to understand that the environment, health and the economy are one and the same.

In justification of environmental cuts the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and the Government speak about "getting our economic house in order first". In doing so they abdicate leadership because they fail to recognize the inescapable reality that our health, the economy, and our lifestyle depend on a well managed environment.

Canadians will not be fooled by the false notion that we must look after the economy at the expense of the environment. Canadians are light years ahead of the Government in their view of the importance of the environment. The economic views uttered by the Minister of the Environment are backward, simplistic, and sheer nonsense. Canadians want the close relationship between the environment and the economy recognized by the Government. They know that neglect or postponement of preventive and clean-up action in the environment inevitably leads to greater costs in the future. That is economics, Mr. Speaker.

The support that the Minister has in this country can perhaps be counted on the fingers of one hand. She has not yet understood what her job is all about. Canadians want her to be an advocate of the environment. They want her to give a sense of direction at the provincial, national and global levels with non-governmental organizations and volunteer groups. They want her to be an impassioned speaker for our right to live in a healthy environment and to preserve it for future generations. They want to see her out of her office fighting for the environment and advocating the protection of our health, our water, our air and our economy in the long term.

In recent days we have heard a lot about the Charter of Rights. It ensures everyone the right to life, liberty, integrity and security of the person. The time has come to enlarge the interpretation of the notion of the security of the person to mean the right to a healthy environment. It should be declared as a constitutional right of every Canadian. To this end we will soon present a Private Member's Bill. The ineptness and lack of action of the Government in a variety of issues related to the environment is jeopardizing the inherent right of Canadians to health and safety as spelled out in our motion today.

It is becoming clear that Canadians have been fooled by this so-called Progressive Conservative Party. That Party, despite its name, is neither for progress of society as a whole, nor for conservation of our natural environment. The Government does not seem to realize that as long as it thinks about the economy as an entity separate from the environment, the economy as well as the environment will be in jeopardy. That is why the Minister of the Environment is on the wrong track when she talks of putting our economic house in order first. What does she mean by that? She does not know what she is talking about. It is such thought that was manifest 50 years ago when we were not facing scarcity and industrial waste at the rate and proportion we are facing today.

The Minister and the Government seem unaware of this basic, fundamental reality. Human health, the economy and the environment are one and the same. They form a single subject which cannot be separated. I suggest that it is an abdication of leadership not to realize that. Reducing services and eliminating programs is an abdication of leadership. Sitting in an office on the 26th floor of a tower across the river is also an abdication of leadership.

Enough time has elapsed for the Minister to understand the importance of the advocacy role. We all know that in every Government department one must speak for the interests of that department and fight for it. Not performing an advocacy role with passion and commitment at all possible levels is another form of abdication of leadership.

We have placed this motion on the Order Paper today with profound regret. We would rather be commending the Government for doing its duty with respect to the environment. We would be glad to applaud the Minister of the Environment and the Prime Minister, but the fact of the matter is that once we remove that for which the Government has been taking credit in the last six months—which is food prepared by the previous Government—one can see a horrendous vacuum.

We can see an intellectual bankruptcy and emotional emptiness. The environment, perhaps more than any other assignment in government and politics, is one that requires passion, commitment and a strong sense of leadership which shows a direction for this nation that will not be deflected by federal-provincial niceties. There is a time when Canada is more than just the sum total of each provincial Government. There is a moment when the health of Canadians is a national concern. That is the theme we are putting before the House and that is why we are so upset about the lack of leadership, indeed the abdication of leadership, on the part of the Government. For those reasons, Canadians are increasingly being turned off by the PC Government. It will not return as the Government, at this rate, come the next election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

[English]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, during his remarks my colleague referred to the Niagara River toxic pollution problem. He expressed his doubts about the work the Government has done on this particularly tough issue. Would he give us his opinion as to what the Government should do now to improve the situation in the Niagara River?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Government should implement the recommendations contained in the report by the Niagara River toxic chemicals committee that was published last October. There are some 26 or 27 recommendations that were jointly arrived at by the Canadian and American sides. However, only two recommendations were on the American side.

It is a very serious departure from past practices. Evidently there is a political message when only two recommendations are put forward by the American side, which are stalling-type recommendations. Evidently, the Minister must meet with the Environmental Protection Agency, speak up on this matter and take action. She must give her officials the courage and inspiration that they need in order to be effective in negotiations south of the border on this matter of toxic chemicals.

I was stunned to learn that as of April 1, 1985 the $2.5 million program for toxic chemical management no longer exists. It is gone. I hope the Minister will address that matter.

● (1125)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with absolute amazement to the former Minister of the Environment who was an acknowleged bankrupt in terms of getting anything done during his term of office. It was acknowledged on all sides of the House that no progress was made during his tenure as Minister of the Environment. It was an acknowledged fact that his Ministry, his Government, could not get along with the provinces and that was the reason there were no agreements signed on the transportation of dangerous goods. It was an acknowledged fact that the Canadian Government, under the Liberal Party, fought with the United States and thumbed its nose at the United States at every opportunity, and that was the reason nothing was done. Perhaps the bureaucrats were working hard, but there was absolutely no political will in the Liberal Party to get along with anybody. The Liberals wasted years of opportunities to do important things about acid rain, the environment and the transportation of PCBs. The House should recognize that the fault lies with the lack of political will by the Party that was intellectually bankrupt when it came to matters concerning the environment.

Mr. Gauthier: That is distorting the facts.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to set the record straight concerning some of the questions raised by the Hon. Member. First, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) spoke of no progress having been made. The fact is that on March 6, 1984, in Ottawa, the federal and provincial Ministers of the Environment arrived at a federal-provincial agreement at that time. They decided to go it alone setting themselves the target of a 50 per cent reduction in pollution by 1994.

The Hon. Member spoke about the fact that we could not get along with the provinces. We got along with the provinces famously, Mr. Speaker. The former Minister of the Environment for Ontario and I worked together 100 per cent all the time. He was a great source of strength to me. I want to recognize publicly his immense role in bringing about that understanding on March 6, 1984. Two weeks later we had the "Ottawa club" being formed when nine European nations came to Ottawa and made a commitment to cut acid rain by at least 30 per cent by 1993. Three months later in Munich, on June 19 approximately, those ten nations became 20, nations that say that by 1990 they will cut acid emissions by 30 per cent.

As for the last allegation of the Hon. Member that we fought with the United States, we spoke plainly with our neighbours. We told them that as Canadians we cannot tolerate waste being dumped on our side of the border because we are downwind to the United States. The United States produces 26 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide every year. We had good reason to be legitimately indignant about that. As a good neighbour one does not dump stuff into one's neighbour's back yard; not even the Hon. Member for Simcoe North would advocate that theory. We said to the United States, come and join us, we will work together because we know that we produce this nasty stuff to the extent of one-sixth of what the United States produces. We said since our waste is damaging the United States because the northeast of the United States is downwind of Canada, and since Canada is downwind to 26 million tonnes of U.S. waste, let us come to a treaty. This treaty was spelled out as an incipient concept in 1980 when the memorandum of intent was signed between Canada and the U.S. by a Canadian Liberal Government and a U.S. Democrat Government.

It is best to speak plainly with your neighbour, Mr. Speaker, and to put forward Canadian interests instead of crawling on your belly, going down on your knees with ashes on your head. This is what the Prime Minister did in anticipation of the Shamrock meeting when he said: "We are the culprits; please forgive us. Mea culpa". It was nonsense. It gave away our bargaining position. We have a 50 per cent reduction program in place; the Americans have none. We have a commitment to cut by 30 per cent by 1993; the Americans have none. We are delivering the goods; they are not. What is the point of being on our knees when we have a legitimate national, domestic interest?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, could the former Minister of the Environment let us know how we can take seriously his new-found piety in the area of the environment, given the fact that when he was in office he had an opportunity to put in place effective regulations which would deal with the transportation of dangerous goods and would have prevented the PCBs disaster that has just taken place? How can this former Minister stand and talk in a self-righteous manner about the environment?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to answer the question. It comes from someone who has never been in government and will never be in government. He does not know the reality of obtaining support for a very complex piece of legislation and then drafting regulations which will be acceptable to 10 provincial Governments, to the two Territories, and to the industry itself which just last week was still complaining about inadequate consultations. It was a very difficult process. It was under the jurisdiction of one of my colleagues who pushed very hard for it, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). If the process took a long time, it was because it was a complicated one. However, it was achieved. It was brought to a conclusion. There is no double standard on this. The fact of the matter is that we have the law and the regulations. Now we have to wait for the provinces to catch up with us by July 1.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the former Minister said that he took action on the environment. Sure, he took action, but that action was ineffective. How could he talk about taking action which allowed for the PCB disaster that we have just experienced? How could he call that action effective?

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Member is not listening carefully. The action was effective because it produced a law. The action was effective because it produced a set of federal regulations. The action will be effective once the provinces dovetail their regulations with ours. The goods have been delivered, although it took a long time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is terminated.

Debate resumed. The Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I really have to comment on what the former Minister of the Environment said, since his credibility is not very high as it is and the events are self-explanatory.

Mr. Speaker, the incident at Kenora which resulted in the spilling of PBCs on the highway over more than 70 kilometers, and which involved a number of individuals including a young couple with two young children, was quite dramatic, especially since it could easily have been avoided. There was probably some human error involved, but I like to think that there was no criminal negligence. However, I would not want to anticipate the conclusions of the special investigators or any other authorities who will be asked to give their assessment.

I have already said publicly that within hours of this dramatic incident, I got in touch with my Ontario counterpart, the Hon. Morley Kells, Minister of the Environment. I have remained in constant touch with him in order to evaluate on an ongoing basis reports of the various intervenors in this case, although it is mainly a provincial responsibility.

I have also given instructions to my departmental officials to communicate with the principal health officer for the Province of Ontario and offer any assistance my department might be able to add to what is being done by the Government of Ontario, either to the family or to experts already involved in this case or to other individuals who might have come into contact with the PCB's. Later on in my speech I intend to elaborate on the action taken most recently by my department in this case. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that notwithstanding the claims of the Opposition, this action has been frequent and always in accordance with our specific responsibilities.

In fact, the role and responsibilities of the provinces and the Federal Government in such situations are clearly defined in our emergency procedures, and it is therefore, both desirable and essential that each party act according to these procedures and stick to its assigned role to prevent any confusion in a situation that requires quick, sensible and effective action. The procedures are aimed at keeping the number of individuals on the spot, in case of an emergency, at a minimum, for efficiency's sake. The principal role in this particular situation is played by Ontario, which has acted with the requisite speed and taken charge of the emergency procedures, as was indeed its responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I think a few words are in order about the role played by the Opposition, especially by the Member for Danverport (Mr. Caccia) and by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in this matter, and I would qualify their conduct as shameful. All last week, Mr. Speaker, we have heard a series of charges directed at me and my department, on the action that we should have taken and the action we omitted to take, all of this proferred in the vociferous style adopted by the Opposition since the beginning of the new session, a style that the Hon. Member for Davenport wields so well. These charges, Mr. Speaker, are all preposterous and absurd, even allowing for the fact that the Opposition is trying to score political points. In fact they need to score a couple of points if we look at the polls. In this House we have become accustomed to the kind of absurdities that are being spread around and that are merely fodder for the sensationalist type of press and are not an attempt to inform the public objectively about situations on which it must form an opinion. However, this vociferous style and these erroneous allegations have not had the desired effect on Canadians since September 4.

Mr. Speaker, when the Members of the Opposition, including their party leader, the Leader of the Opposition in the House, play on the sentiments of the Canadian public in order to score political points, and I said it before and I say it again, their conduct is absolutely shameful. Let me give you an example of their behaviour. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition directed the following question to the Prime Minister on April 16 of this year, and I quote:

[English]

Will the Prime Minister consult with the Minister of the Environment to ask her to come before this House and admit that under the Environmental Contaminants Act, a federal Act, she has a primary responsibility, not diluted by provincial jurisdiction, for the prevention and cleanup of spills of dangerous chemicals?

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker, is it possible that the Right Hon. Member, the Leader of the Liberal Party and the Leader of the Liberal Opposition in the House, who is himself a member of the legal profession, is it possible that he does not know or understand the scope of the legislation to which he is referring and put his foot in it, all in good faith of course? Can he possibly have acted this way in good faith? Is it possible that a professional lawyer whose own Party was in office when that legislation was adopted—I am referring to the Environmental Contaminants Act—is it possible that a lawyer and Party leader does not know the application and scope of the law? Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition refers to the Environmental Contaminants Act and rakes us over the coals for failing to intervene in Kenora pursuant to that Act. Is it possible that the Leader of the Opposition is so badly informed or advised by his environment critic, the Hon. Member for Davenport, that he does not realize that in this specific case, the Kenora incident, that Act does not apply? Mr. Speaker, I leave you to draw your own conclusions on the ignorance—obviously crass ignorance in this case—or malicious intent of the Opposition. Mr. Speaker, that is reprehensible behaviour whereby the people are held to ransom instead of being given the information they need to make their own objective judgement on the events in Kenora.

So as to enlighten the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, I will give him a summary of the purpose of the Environmental Contaminants Act to which he erroneously referred in this House on several occasions last week. According to the Act, no person shall, in the course of a commercial, manufacturing or processing activity, wilfully release, or permit the release of a substance specified in the schedule or any substance that is a member of a class of substances specified in the schedule. It does not cover an incident like that in Kenora. It does not cover the use of dangerous substances in business and industry. Therefore, the Act to which the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition referred many times does not apply in this case. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Leader of the Opposition and his environment critic go back to the basics for further study and better understanding of the scope of the various pieces of legislation now in force in Canada.

The Act which might have applied in this situation is the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. Unfortunately, this Act could have been made operative under the former Liberal Government, but it has been lying on the shelf for five years and, owing to the inaction of the former Minister of Environment, the Hon. Member for Davenport, nothing has been done, as the NDP spokesman said earlier. Five years went by without the Liberal Government doing anything to make the Act operative. Having strongly criticized the use of PCBs in 1980, the former Government did not see any point in legislating on their transportation, storage and disposal. Of course, constant bickering between the former administration and the provinces made it impossible to reach the federal-provincial agreement required in this respect. It was the Conservative Government that had to tackle the issue shortly after taking office. It was the Conservative Government that took the initiative of amending the Act in the early days of its mandate and make it operative. Thanks to the intervention of my colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), Canada's Parliament now has the tools required to control transportation of dangerous substances and to draft the relevant regulations which will be in force as of next July 1. Following the Kenora incident and in view of the urgency of the situation, however, the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) availed himself of a specific provision of the Act to implement the regulations on April 19, thereby hastening the coming into force of the legislation scheduled for next July 1. That is the attitude which the opposition is trying to describe as inertia. Well, Mr. Speaker, I suggest Canadians have enough facts at their disposal to judge the performance of both the Progressive Conservative government over the past seven months, and the previous Liberal administration which had been in power for 15 years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the sharing of responsibilities in Canada. We are living in a Confederation. There is therefore in some areas a double jurisdiction. For the information of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who seems quite confused about this matter and in his interpretation of the relevant legislation in this country, I must say that the federal government clearly must assume a general responsibility in the area of the environment, but that it is up to the provinces to implement the legislation, to make the regulations operative by setting up their own legal framework within the confine of their own needs and jurisdiction. Thus, the provinces have the necessary power to administer most natural resources, including non renewable and forest resources, and to decide environmental issues within their own boundaries. And for the information of the former Minister of the Environment who does not seem to understand our Constitution, I suggest he should peruse Sections 91 and 92 of the Constitutional Act, 1867.

Unless the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is dreaming of rewriting the Constitution, Mr. Speaker, this sharing of powers is essentially what determines the interventions of the various jurisdictions. In the case of the Kenora spill, therefore, the Ontario government was the first to take action as it was its duty to do under the Ontario Environmental Act and they take charge of the situation. Hence, my department had only an auxiliary, complementary and supportive role to play.

Mr. Speaker, these provisions are consistent with a certain logic or rationale. When a disaster occurs in a given location, it is clear that a leader must take charge of the situation and coordinate action and thereby avoid total confusion.

Now, concerning the involvement of my Department in this matter, I said earlier that our interventions have been quite numerous and within the limits of our responsibilities.

On April 9, 1985, through its Alberta office, my Department advised the various provincial offices that four trucks operated by the Kinetic company would be carrying PCB wastes from Quebec. A description of the trucks was also provided. On April 11, 1985, a description of the PCB waste consignment which the four trucks were to transport was sent by my Departmental office in Edmonton to regional offices of my Department in the various provinces.

My Department's Environmental Protection Service in the Quebec area was notified by the Alberta office and in turn informed the Quebec authorities on April 9 and 11, 1985, so that the latter could enforce the regulations concerning the transportation of dangerous goods which exist already in the Quebec jurisdiction.

An inspector for Environment Quebec, Mr. Legault, checked the shipment before the trucks left on April 11 of this year. Kinetic Ecological Resource Group Ltd. also advised Environment Quebec directly, before the goods were shipped, that is, before April 11.

Mr. Speaker, many authorities were involved in acting on this emergency. I shall name only a few. When the incident occurred in Kenora on Saturday, April 13, 1985, it was immediately reported to the Ontario Provincial Police, which got in touch right away with Transport Canada's emergency center. The following parties were then immediately activated to play their specific role. The Kenora police, health officers in the Kenora area, the Emergency Measures Organization in the Kenora area, the Ontario Department of the Environment in Thunder Bay, the Ontario Department of Transport and Communications, the Ontario Department of Northern Affairs, Environment Canada and the Environmental Protection Services' emergency department. In accordance with the agreed plan for intervention in case of disasters, Ontario acted as chief emergency coordinator in the field and obtained advice, services and support from other services including the federal departments concerned. At the present time, we are keeping in close touch with our Ontario colleagues to provide for the transportation of the hazardous materials to their destination and to assess the extent of the contamination that occurred.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important that Canadians realize that since this Government was sworn in, there has been a high degree of federal and provincial solidarity and of respect for shared powers and jurisdictions, so that we are able to act quickly in case of a crisis. I submit, with due respect, that we were very quick to act, not only in this particular emergency situation but also to set up effective legislation that will help us protect Canadians when hazardous materials are being shipped. That is more than the previous Liberal Government ever did in the 15 years it was in power.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Minister for devoting half of her speech to my leader and myself. However, she has not answered the question which deals with the cancellation, as of April 1 of this year, of the toxic chemicals management program. That program is vital to the long-term health of Canadians. It is my understanding that as of the first of this month the program no longer exists. If that is correct, I would ask the Minister to give us a thorough explanation as to why that program was cancelled.

[Translation]

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I must say that the Liberal environment critic has been spreading all kinds of erroneous information around the country. One example is what he said in the House a few minutes ago, namely that I had yet to meet with the representative of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. He knows perfectly well that the Agency director's appointment was confirmed at the end of February 1985, and since then, as the Hon. Member ought to know, I had an initial meeting with Mr. Lee Thomas of the Agency, the director whose appointment has now been confirmed, on March 18, and with members of his staff.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, it is clear the Minister did not answer the question. In fact she never answers questions. She attacks. She attacks and I do not know why, she is worse than a kid at school.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. She said: I am going to deal with the problems that concern Canadians.

Well, we have seen $38 million in budgetary cutbacks. The Toxicology Centre in Guelph has disappeared, the National Research Center ... The Renewable Resources Research Program has been scrapped, the Wildlife Service—

[English]

The Canadian Wildlife Service has been reduced. The toxic chemicals management pgrogram, to which the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has just referred, has also been cancelled. That program addressed the question of toxic materials in Canadian drinking water, mostly in the Great Lakes area. The Minister did not answer that question. She did not answer it because no one wrote the answer for her. She reads well, but she can hardly answer a question of such importance which is put to her. I want to ask the Minister——the following question concerning PCBs or polychlorinated biphenyls. Here is the question. Access to Alberta's storage facilities is now being denied. We have been told that such toxic substances will fall under provincial jurisdiction. The Minister is undoubtedly aware that the residents of Pointe-Claire in Quebec are up in arms at the prospect of storage facilities being located in their area. What does the federal Minister intend to do to co-ordinate a program for the disposal of these extremely toxic products with the provinces so as to give them the leadership she is talking about? Will she at long last show leadership and urge the provinces to discuss the major issue of water and air pollution? I point out to the Minister that it is important. She ought to refrain from making partisan politics as she has been doing for half an hour.

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I should think that I have no lesson to take from the Opposition on partisan politics, because its performance is indeed far below any level of partisan politics. As to the disposal of PCBs, we will co-operate with the provinces as we have been doing from the beginning instead of berating them as you did during your last five years in office when you could have regulated the transportaiton of PCBs and set up storage facilities but did not.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question about the PCB spill in Kenora. In her speech she mentioned that she felt her Department and her role as Minister were auxiliary in this matter and that she was satisfied with the performance of the provincial Government. Canadians and the people of Ontario expect leadership from the Government. They do not expect the federal Minister to be auxiliary to the provincial Government, which Government has been ineffective in its actions.

The Minister said that she acted immediately upon the crisis occurring, but in the area of environment protection we need preventive action. We should not have to wait for a crisis for the Government to act. There should be legislation, programs and plans in place to prevent such disasters.

Finally, she said that there was legislation. However, this Government has a very poor record in terms of legislation. It has brought forward very little legislation in the House. There is no excuse for having ineffective legislation to deal with incidents such as the PCB spill in Kenora.

I would like the Minister to tell the House and Canadians why she has not provided adequate leadership with respect to PCBs, why she has not taken preventive action, and why effective legislation is not in place to protect Canadians from PCB spills.

[Translation]

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: When we talk about PCB disposal, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that we have to find solutions concerning disposal sites. The way things stand now, people do not want to hear anything about PCB disposal sites in their neighbourhood. The matter of finding suitable sites must be settled with the provinces, and that is why I have asked that it be considered as urgent in the next few weeks so that we might for once make decisions about the disposal of this dangerous substance. If every province does not want to have anything to do with PCB burial within its territory, we will simply have to find adequate means to take our PCBs far enough for storage. There are two aspects to this question: either each province agrees to acknowledge its responsibility with respect to disposal sites, or we will have to settle the PCB transportation issue which is now raising so many objections.

• (1200)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in the short time we have been in office we have reached agreement with the provinces for a 50 per cent reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions; we have announced tougher automobile standards; we have provided an assured budget for the science of monitoring; we have created an acid rain control office; we have appointed an acid rain control diplomat; we have given a budget of $150 million to the smelting industry—which is very important to the Sudbury area—and we have provided a budget of $70,000 for technology in the use of coal. Yet the former Minister of the Environment and the former Government were unable to do any of those things despite four and a half year in office; they were completely bankrupt. They had no ability to get along with anyone or achieve anything—

Mr. Keeper: For 16 years.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate my colleague from the New Democratic Party agreeing with me. I am sure that there are some members of the Liberal Party not here today who would also agree that there have been four and a half years of complete inaction by the former Government.

I admit there are things to do in the transportation of PCBs, and when we have a disaster like the recent spill, we have to examine the matter carefully and make decisions as to how we should proceed in the future. And we are all going to work together on that. I would like to ask the Minister how she accounts for the fact that she and her Department, and this Government, have been able to achieve so much when the Liberals, who were in office for four and a half years, were unable to achieve any of those things.

[Translation]

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Liberals spent all their time arguing with the provinces. They wanted to centralize all responsibilities in Ottawa—and that, of course, flies in the face of Canada's Constitution—whereas we tried to take a different approach by sitting down with the provinces to settle our problems. However, everything cannot be achieved overnight and negotiations do take some time, particularly given the utterly corrupt situation of federal-provincial relations when this Government assumed the leadership of the nation.

The Liberals did not do anything in the environment sector during their last five years at the helm, but now they are telling our Government that all the necessary Acts, provisions and policies were already in place and that we did nothing more than use them. If everything was in place, including the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act and the overall policy on the fight against acid rain, then I am wondering why the Liberals failed to act and come up with the kind of legislative provisions that would probably have prevented the Kenora incident!

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to say a few words in this debate. As I listened to the Minister give her answer to that relatively tough question, I thought of Dr. David Suzuki, the great scientist, geneticist and television personality from British Columbia, who gave a speech this weekend which was carried in the newspapers. He really communicates about the modern problems of Canadians. Dr. Suzuki gave us heck, if you like, a slap on the wrist, this weekend when he said that parliamentarians, Hon. Members of the House of Commons, are not really understanding when they deal with modern issues.

Part of this debate deals with a very serious spill about which there are allegations of negligence. We still have not got to the bottom of these allegations. We are dealing with cut-backs in the Minister's Department and in her whole tenure, whether she is going to survive as environmental Minister. But what do we get in answer to the motion? We get: "Blame it on the Liberals". I do not belong to the Liberal Party and, goodness knows—

Mr. Nunziata: You are welcome to come on over.

Mr. Waddell: —I stood up and criticized the Liberal Party for five years in this House. I just say to my friends across the way and to the Minister that there comes a time when perhaps they should stop blaming everything on the Liberal Party and the previous Liberal Government and start dealing with the current problems of Canada. I think most Canadians would agree with that. I think that if the honeymoon for this Government is not over, it is going to end very rapidly if the Government keeps addressing every question and problem by saying: "Oh well, it was the bad Liberals for the last 16 years".

Last week there was a serious spill of PCBs and no one has been charged, as far as I know. No one has been put in jail. Governments have been slow to react. But this morning, in what was a cowardly and gutless act, the Government used Gestapo-like tactics to take the peace camp away from the Hill. It took some poor young people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: My friends are laughing. They think it is very funny that there are young people in jail at this moment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering how the comments of the Hon. Member could be relevant. I thought that we were discussing the environment, but he is talking about a peace camp!

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the effects—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do you wish to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, I wish to speak on the point of order. I am speaking in this debate about the effects of pollution on the environment of the country. In fact, what I am comparing is what the Government has done with a bunch of kids in the peace camp, who have camped out for two years in winter and summer, and the kind of action it has taken in terms of justice against the environmental polluters of this country. If that is not relevant, I don't know what this Parliament is for.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will allow the comparison but not a long debate on the issue.

Mr. Waddell: I have made my point, Mr. Speaker. That action was cowardly, gutless and Gestapo-like, and the Government is going to pay for it as some time. This country will not put up with those kinds of tactics. We will raise the matter in Question Period and continue it on in the debate this afternoon. I tell Hon. Members that if I could I would adjourn the House in protest, but I would like to have the opportunity in Question Period to put some questions to the Government on this gutless and arbitrary action.

Mr. Fretz: For two years they have been there.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, they have been there for two years, my friend, prepared to camp out, which is more than you've been prepared to do for peace.

Mr. Fretz: Everybody has a right to speak here but not to camp.

Mr. Waddell: You are just Ronald Reagan's poodle. You just put your hand up like a dish rag—

Mr. Fretz: Talk about the issue.

Mr. Waddell: —when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says "vote, vote, vote". What a bunch of Levesques, dish rags.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fretz: Why didn't you vote against your Party?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to get back to the issue at hand today and I would ask other Hon. Members to listen to the Hon. Member who is speaking.

Mr. Lewis: Get introduced to, not get back to.

Mr. Waddell: I will return to that later in my speech, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this debate also concerns another matter, but the PCB spill in Kenora on the Trans-Canada Highway—

Mrs. Mailly: On the Trans-Canada Highway!

Mr. Waddell: —on the Trans-Canada Highway, is also related to the problem of liquid waste, and I think that Canadians are fearful and angry following this very serious incident. They are asking that preventive action be taken so that this type of accident, which was preventable, will never happen again. I think that in a Special Committee of this House, perhaps under the new rules, we should look into the transport of toxic and dangerous materials. We should ask what are the long-term effects of these dangerous substances, on a six-week fetus, for instance. The federal and provincial Governments have been neglectful, in my opinion. For example, the truck driver told this Red Lake family: "This is only mineral oil, not PCBs." What kind of Government cover-up must we put up with when we are told that this extremely dangerous leak was supposed to be mineral oil? How could this Red Lake family cover up the possibility of physical or mental deformity of their unborn child?

• (1210)

There are some real questions arising out of this spill. Perhaps I can put it in English, which I speak much better. If you look at the facts and the evidence, we have a family from Red Lake, Ontario, a husband, his pregnant wife and two children who followed a truck for 25 kilometres. They pulled the truck over and were told that this substance coming off the truck was only mineral oil to be cleaned off with rags and gasoline. The body of the car, including the windshield, as well as the motor, were covered with PCBs, this very toxic chemical. The family travelled all the way to Winnipeg in a contaminated car but they had to read about it in the Winnipeg Free Press. The car was impounded in Winnipeg. The truck was not carrying any warning signs and it appears, although I am not certain, that the driver was not aware of the dangerous cargo.

We are told that in Quebec, from where the truck came, the Government was led to believe the transformer was drained before shipment. Someone was obviously misleading the Quebec Government. Someone obviously misled the family concerned. The relatives of that family claim that at least six cars were contaminated and they are still driving the streets of Red Lake. The provincial hot line in Kenora as advising that the cars be washed with water and paper towels, and that they be placed in a paper bag and taken to the dump. This despite the fact we know that PCBs break down very slowly in the environment and are carcinogenic; they cause cancer. The RCMP has seized several shipments of improperly labelled and packaged PCB contaminated soil. The Ontario Ministry of the Environment shipped the samples on a commercial airline in violation of the rules.

It seems to me we have some real questions about the negligence, perhaps criminal negligence, of the company. We also have negligence on the part of the Government of Ontario given the way it reacted to the spill and dealt with it, and its lack of laws for dealing with this properly. The Trans-Canada Highway has been reopened even though the Ontario Government thinks entire sections will have to be replaced. The truck is still leaking PCBs one week after the accident. The facts mount up and up and present a case of negligence on the part of a number of people.

The point that I am making is that the Government is quick to put young people who are in favour of peace in jail, but it is very slow to react to the allegations of negligence in this particular case. As a matter of fact, the Minister said they reacted quickly, but where was she? She was not even in the House to reply. She had to be helped out by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Brisco: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe there is a Standing Order of the House which provides that reference shall not be made to the presence or absence of Members in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is correct; I am sure the speaker will take note.

Mr. Waddell: I am not making any reference to who was or was not in the House, but one would think that if there had been a major environmental spill which could be a disaster, the Minister of the Environment would be here to answer questions rather than leaving it to other Ministers.

Mr. Dick: She was there.

Mr. Waddell: She was not and you know very well she was not around. She is never around. The press wanted to interview her but she said: "Elle met son rouge à lèvres". She had to go put her lipstick on before she could deal with the press. That is what the report was. It just shows you how much the Minister knows about—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, once more, I fail to see the relevance of the Hon. Member's comments. He is now making personal comments about the conduct of a Minister who is here today and who will be able to reply to his questions. I wish the Hon. Member would stick to the subject!

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that is a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister can comment after my speech. The story in the press was that when they went to interview her the Minister was putting her lipstick on. I do not know, I am just repeating what was in the press. The Minister can reply. I will tell the House another thing about the Minister that we read in the press.

Mr. Dick: Down to your usual low level.

Mr. Waddell: No, it is very indicative of what kind of Minister we have. We have an incompetent Minister. She should quit. There are lots of other back-benchers from Quebec or other parts of the country who are probably quite competent and they should become the Minister. The Government should get rid of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) very quickly, and I predict in the next Cabinet shuffle she will be gone to her just rewards in the back benches.

Mr. Nunziata: There is nothing wrong with back-benchers.

Mr. Waddell: Her reward is on the back bench, my friend.

The other thing we read about the Minister, and I will give her a chance to reply, is that she shows up at a press conference and instructs her chauffeur to leave her car running. That takes a kind of mind-set which is not an environmental mind-set.

Mrs. Mailly: Every car on the Hill is doing that.

Mr. Waddell: That is absolutely wrong. People who are environmentally conscious—

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister does it.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister has to lead. Let me deal with a couple of other points the Minister raised in the debate. One is the role of the Minister. I think the Minister has taken a completely wrong role. The Minister should be an advocate for the environment. I do not want to embarrass anyone but the Minister has just looked down to the front bench to see the Minister of the Environment in the Joe Clark Government. He was an excellent Minister and took a role of advocacy, and I refer to the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). He was an advocate for the environment. The Opposition Liberal critic was not the Minister for a long time but he took the role of being an advocate for the environment. You do not push for cuts in your department; you fight the cuts. That is your job. You become an advocate. You are not like the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson); you are an advocate for the environment. Canadians demand that.

One of the good things which has happened over the last few months is that when the Minister made those cuts to her Department, there was an outcry. Even some Conservative back-benchers woke up, heard the outcry and asked the Minister about them. That shows some good things about modern Canadian families. They are very environmentally conscious. The battle of the 1970s has been won. There is an acceptance that you do not leave your car's motor running and waste gas because of that.

Mrs. Mailly: Tell your leader that.

Mr. Waddell: You turn lights out in the house, you try and heat your house efficiently. All these little things are part of the new environmental consciousness in Canada, but the Minister does not have that consciousness and it shows in the way she runs her Department. That is why she is not going to be Minister very long.

• (1220)

I would like to return to the issue of jurisdiction. In the Minister's speech she attacked our behaviour as being reprehensive because we raised this matter with some vigour in the House of Commons. We do not apologize for that. She says it is really a provincial matter. I think that the environment is a shared jurisdiction. It is not exclusively a provincial concern, as the Government indicates, but more of a joint concern in which the federal Government must be involved.

There was not a federal environmental official in northwestern Ontario until three days after the spill. That was negligence on the part of the federal Government. The federal Government did not know how to handle it. The Minister of the Environment did not respond. The Minister of Transport made a shaky response and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans made some responses trying to bail out the present weak Minister. We cannot have that. The environment is too important a matter to have a weak Minister such as we have.

The Minister should take the position that she has a right to be involved in the spill. She should be telling the House today that they will act quickly in the future. In his remarks the Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) made the point that we should figure out where we are going from here. I agree with that. It is a positive attitude in terms of what will happen with future spills. However, we are not yet finished with this spill.

The Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) used a word which has been ruled unparliamentary. It starts with "b". He said why don't we put those "blank" in jail. I must admit that I was a little startled when he said that in Question Period. However, you should have seen the reaction in the country. The people said "right on"!

Mr. Lewis: What about due process?

Mr. Waddell: Due process, of course. However, there is no process for environmental polluters. I found out this weekend that there was an incident last winter in the Northwest Territories. The TPL company was building an oil pipeline from Norman Wells. They were looking at the wells with a camera which contains a radioactive element. It was not working so the worker hit it, and so on, and the thing came out on his hands. Later he had black hands but the company never reported it. They did not even have a licence to have radioactive material in the Northwest Territories. The Atomic Energy Control Board was slow to do anything about it. They cannot find the worker as he has gone back to Edmonton.

This is the kind of gross negligence, if not criminal negligence, that is going on in the country in environmental matters. This spill is a perfect example because it is spotlighted. Canadians could actually see what happened. I read the evidence out and it is irrefutable. We know the reaction of the Ontario Government, the way the company conducted itself and the way in which the federal Government conducted itself. We have not heard one Member say that if there is criminal negligence involved, these people will be charged and put in jail and we will never have such an accident again. The only thing we hear is that they are going to put the poor peace camp kids in jail.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Members are laughing. I do not think it is particularly funny. I think this is a tragedy. While I am speaking today—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Waddell: —there are some young people who, instead of just getting drunk and things like that, are prepared to do things—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point a order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I remember you reminding the Hon. Member he should not hark back to that subject. Apparently he has no understanding of the rule of relevance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Replying to the Hon. Member, I have decided that for today whatever comparisons could be made between the Peace Camp and this Debate here would in fact be relevant. Speaking of comparisons, however, I would not want the debate to revolve around the Peace Camp, but if there were any comparisons, they would be allowed.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Member is complaining about the actions of our Member. Does the Member know that she should not be questioning a ruling of the Chair?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is one minute left in the time of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Member is sensitive to the peace camp matter, and she will become more sensitive later.

In summation I would like to say that this is a motion condemning the Government for its work in the environment. We have had a spill which highlighted what is going on. People could see the negligence of the Ontario provincial Government. They saw the slowness with which this Government did anything and the lack of response by this particular Minister. They have seen the past weak action on acid rain when the Government toadied up to President Reagan and appointed an emissary. They have seen the cut-backs in parks, environmental studies and so on. In short, they have seen the beginning of a Government which is very weak in conservation. I could speak about how they have failed in energy conservation but have fallen in line with the oil companies. With regard to the environment they have been weak and are falling into the routine of doing nothing. I think that the Government stands condemned.

Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, the great Russian writer, said that any village greybeard will tell mankind that 12 worms can only grow on one apple for so long. Canadians understand that we have a fabulous environment in this country. It is the greatest thing that Canada has. David Suzuki and other Canadians are telling us that we are starting to ruin and waste it in the modern world. We all share that problem and are guilty of it. That is why we speak with some passion, not to attack the Minister personally, but to get the Minister and the Government moving. We want some concrete action on this PCB spill and on protection of the great environment of Canada in the future.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, knowing parliamentary procedure, I of course would not comment on the Member's presence in the House at the start of the Minister's speech. In not saying that, I would like to say that it is normal for the Opposition critic to be here for the start of the Minister's speech in response to the motion introduced. Why did the Member not take the opportunity to ask questions at the close of the Minister's speech today?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I was not here at the beginning of the Minister's speech. I was listening to it outside.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Waddell: The Member cannot have it both ways. He cannot attack me for raising it. There are certain matters that arise which require the Minister to be in the House responding in Question Period. When I was on holidays in the States a few weeks ago—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: What a confession!

Mr. Waddell: That was when we had a vacation at Easter. At that time there was a food poisoning scare in Chicago and the medical officer was in Mexico for a few days. He was probably fired. If I were the Prime Minister and my Minister of the Environment were not present when an important issue such as this came up, I would fire her. However, that is the way the Government conducts itself.

Did the Member have another question?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member said that since he was not present he could not have heard the minister's comments and this may explain his misunderstanding of the contents of the debate. In her comments, the Minister made it clear that the statute involved in the Kenora incident is the Hazardous Products Transportation Act rather than the Environment Act, the latter covering toxic products only as far as the manufacturing and processing of certain chemicals are concerned. Had he been in this House, he would have been able to understand the reason why the Minister perhaps was not present on a certain day, when a certain question was addressed to her, because she was working with her provincial counterpart—rather than fighting him as was the practice under the previous administration. The Minister was looking for an agreement on how to solve a problem that does not now come under the federal statute but that will as of July, when we have new regulations that hopefully will help us prevent tragedies such as the one in Kenora. I simply wanted to stress this fact. The Minister quite clearly said so earlier.

Secondly, there was something else the Minister said while he was not in this House, namely that, contrary to what the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has suggested, she met very early with Mr. Thomson, the representative for EPA, the Environment Protection Agency, soon after he was appointed. He was appoitned in February and she met with him in March. This is a record as far as consultation and conciliation are concerned, since the previous Liberal administration not only would not agree with the provincial government but would seem unable to promote any understanding between officials of both governments.

To conclude, I also wish to ask him a question: Does he remember, when the discussion on the question that was very recently settled by the Minister when it was announced that there would be a 50 per cent reduction of carbon monoxide waste, yes, does he remember when the study was launched by the previous Liberal administration? And also, does he remember when the discussion on the control of automobile exhaust gases was initiated at a time when the issue was before the previous Liberal administration? I look forward to hearing his answer, and I would also like him to comment on the fact that the previous Liberal administration gave so little attention to the environment that there was just one Minister in charge of Science, Technology and Environment, while in this Government we have a full-fledged Minister for Environment, and whether in his view it makes a difference to have a full-fledged Minister heading such a department, contrary to the previous administration?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, I remember the car emission issue, because I was a member of the Committee on National Resources and Public Works in 1981. While on this committee, I moved an amendment to a Liberal sponsored bill calling for a tightening up of the car emission standards, and I believe that Conservatives members voted against it. Now, I am glad that emission standards have been tightened up, something for which the government must be praised. However—

Mrs. Mailly: Thank you!

[English]

Mr. Waddell: May I remind the House that I proposed it a few years before and it voted against it.

Some action has been taken, such as with the standards and pollution control. However, nothing has really been done with respect to acid rain in the American context. I suggest that the appointment of Bill Davis was a cop-out which will only lead to further study.

As far as the Government cut-backs are concerned, let me read what Tony Keith, a biologist in the Canadian Wildlife Service, said about that. Incidentally, I have received letters from scientists all over the world who have worked in our Canadian Wildlife Service. They were describing its good work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) rises on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: That is not the question which I directed to the hon. member. I did not inquire about the reduction in spending. I only asked him whether he remembered when we started to deal with—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! That is a debatable question.

[English]

It is up to the Member to answer the way he wishes.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I will read this and respond to the last part of her question. The article states:

> What Keith is saying is that sooner or later, some prairie slough will fill with the floating carcasses of ducks, killed by untested chemicals from a cropduster that accidentally overflew a field. Anthrax and brucellosis will cause bison to totter and fall to the muskegs of northern Alberta, and there will be no wildlife veterinarian to treat them. National park wardens may even come across the bloodied body of a camper, the victim of a grizzly attack that might have been prevented with another season's research into bears' feeding habits. And the public outcry may then be so loud that the politicians who are today making the cuts will be forced to rehire the very biological expertise they now dismiss as surplus to departmental requirements. Canadians will have learned the hard way about the true costs of casting out decades of accumulated ecological knowledge for the sake of quick-fix adjustments to one year's federal budget.

The Hon. Member asks me if I am aware of the laws. Is the Government telling us that the federal Government does not have any laws in the Criminal Code or under environmental protection to prosecute those people who are responsible for this PCB disaster, but it has laws to put a few kids from the Peace Camp into jail? If she is saying that, I don't believe her.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, first let me respond to the comment about the grizzly attack. Whoever wrote that cannot call himself a biologist or an authority. He is out to lunch. I would invite the Hon. Member to join me on a hunt at any time to find out what it is really like.

I do not wish to denigrate the importance of the PCB problem because it is clearly a very serious one. However, I would like to put it into perspective, if I may, by asking the Hon. Member if he could advise the House how many deaths have occurred as a result of exposure to the PCBs and how many cases of cancer have been identified as a result of exposure to PCBs?

Before the Hon. Member launches into a strident response, let me repeat that I am not in any sense of the word downplaying the seriousness of the problem. I would like the Hon. Member to respond to that particular element.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member talk to the Departments of Health in the provinces.

Mr. Brisco: Do you know the answer?

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the Hon. Member will listen. I treat his question seriously, in the manner he intended. I am told that PCBs are carcinogenic, very serious and so on. If he wishes me to acknowledge that we do not know enough about what PCBs do, I will acknowledge that. I believe our society still has a lot to learn about these chemicals and I agree that we should not panic.

However, that does not excuse us from not taking any action at all. My colleague, the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in the House the other day asking about a follow-up investigation and having some doctors study this couple who have been affected. I have yet to hear an answer about that from the Government. It could at least make one announcement about something substantial that it has done, whether to study the problem through doctors, as I believe the Member would support, or to prosecute or even have a joint federal-provincial investigation.

Again, I point out that when there is a major environmental problem the federal Government washes its hands of it and indicates it's a provincial responsibility. I suggest that the Province of Ontario has been negligent in its handling of this problem. However, the federal Government sure is quick to put a few kids who support peace into jail. The Government can find the laws and the spirit to put them into jail but when it comes to the environment it does nothing. I do not want to downplay it, as the Member suggests, but the fact is that the Government is prepared to act quickly to put kids in jail and it is prepared to drag its feet and be just as negligent as the Ontario Government in taking action on this PCB spill.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When the Liberal Member spoke earlier, Liberal Members were able to ask questions and make comments. When the Conservative Member spoke, Conservative Members were able to ask questions and make comments. When the NDP representative spoke there was no provision for NDP Members to rise in the House to ask questions or make comments. Since it was a person from our Party who spoke, Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the rule is that we have a right to have a Member stand up, to ask questions and make statements even when someone from our Party is the main speaker. I would like your guidance on that.

• (1240)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The priority is given to Members from the opposing Parties in the question and comment period. After I have gone through the opposing Parties, then I generally choose someone from the Party of the main speaker.

We shall now resume debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to the debate. It was very interesting to listen to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and to some of the charges that have been laid against her as far as the PCB spill is concerned and as far as the power that she possesses under the Act, the present legislation, to do something about it.

It is a somewhat confused area. However, it is not good enough for the Minister of the Environment to say that this is provincial jurisdiction. It is not good enough for us to have legislation on the books that we in effect are not using or to refer back to legislation that was formulated at a particular moment in time and to discover that that legislation was perhaps watered down from its original intent.

I would like to make reference to what the Minister of the Environment said by reading from the official record. I would like to read her remarks and her repeated references to provincial jurisdiction and to the suggestion that perhaps we should not be progressing as adamantly as some Members of the Opposition are suggesting.

I would like to read from the House of Commons debates these words:

> I said at the outset of my remarks that we approve of the principle of the Bill before us and indeed of its objectives, but I must say that we insist that these objectives be met without imposing excessive costs or hardships, and with the minimum of restraint put upon the operations of the carriers and the shippers.

Then later on this Hon. Member said:

> —this Bill is really an extension of the Criminal Code, not merely a transportation law.

Those remarks were made by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) speaking on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party on February 16, 1979, when a Bill was introduced into the House by the then Liberal Government. The Act was changed. The original Bill presented in February, 1979 was an Act to promote public safety and the protection of the environment in the transportation of dangerous goods. The Bill we have on the books was passed in 1979 by the Government that followed the Liberal Government. The Minister of Transport whose words I quoted a moment ago was the Minister who passed the Bill through this House on behalf of the Government. The Bill was called "An Act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods".

The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) made repeated reference in 1979 to why the word "environment" was removed from the title of the Bill and, indeed, from the entire Bill. I think that sets the record straight fairly well, Mr. Speaker. To repeat the words of the present Minister of Transport in introducing this present Bill that is on the books, he said, as reported in Hansard for November 27, 1979:

> Those Hon. Members—will note that the Bill currently before the House has been extensively restructured . . . This restructuring has been done as a result of lengthy and detailed discussions with representatives of affected industries and of the provinces, as I indicated earlier. However, as time passed, and as it was made clear that the federal Government was seeking co-operation and not confrontation in this enterprise, debates between the parties concerned became increasingly productive.

Increasingly productive, Mr. Speaker, when you do not want to have a confrontationist attitude with the provincial governments and the industries involved. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, the position of the Party being that you would not want to impose excessive costs or hardships and with a minimum of restraint put upon the operations of the carriers and the shippers. It is incredible philosophy when you talk about an Act that is supposed to protect the people and the environment of Canada in the transportation of hazardous goods.

I think the important point that should be made is that you simply say this is a problem of the provincial administrations, and that the provincial administrations do not act under their present legislation or they behave like the Ontario Government behaved in 1979 when it passed the Spills Act and never proclaimed it. Right now the Ontario Government has bought chemicals to spray over a million hectares in the Province of Ontario but it cannot be announced until the day after the election. What if you have a Government like the Government of Ontario that has jurisdiction but did absolutely nothing when cancerous tumours were found in fish and you had only the inland waters division of the Minister of the Environment conducting studies through a couple of person-years?

What happens when you have that kind of negligence on the part of a provincial government? What happens when you have the provincial Government of Ontario today with a Spills Act passed by the legislature but which was never proclaimed? What happens when you have a Government that has purchased materials for the biggest chemical air spraying program in Ontario's history, that has the materials in storage, that has consulted with the Canadian Wildlife Service on the actual application dates and then turns around and says "We cannot announce this program until the day after the election"? The Government of Ontario has made decisions on the types of herbicides it will use to kill the hardwoods. The Government does not want to hire people to go into the woods to do it. The Government will spray chemicals to kill the hardwoods in certain parts of Ontario and most of the activity is taking place in the northern part of Ontario; at least that is what the Government informs me. What happens when you have provincial governments like the Ontario Government that do not follow through with legislation or that play political games when it comes to chemicals?

If you say this is a matter of provincial jurisdiction but you have no action on the part of the provincial jurisdiction, then surely this Government has a duty to act. You will find in a lot of legislation, even in the transportation of dangerous goods and hazardous products legislation that is on the books now, that there is a clause that says after 12 months if a provincial government does not act, the federal Government has the right to impose its own standards. When you are so short-sighted that you do not pay attention to the long-term effects of chemicals on the environment and on people, then you are being absolutely negligent.

We could talk about PCBs or we could talk about fenitrothion, which is the chemical that is being used in northern Ontario, the spraying of which is to be announced the day after the election when over one million hectares will be sprayed and about which the Minister of the Environment is aware. We could talk Roundup, a chemical which is used as a herbicide, or we could talk about any chemical. The point is that we have legislation on the books, yet nothing is being done.

We have polychlorinated biphenyls stored throughout the country in various locations. Some of them are safe. Others are in vacated mines on private property. We can go back over the years and look at occurrences. For example, there was a high water situation and the fluid in a transformer spilled into a river. What action was taken right after that occurrence? I recall the situation involving the Exploits River just a couple of years ago. It involved provincial jurisdiction. However, what happened to the studies that were conducted after that incident occurred?

Let us look at the application of chemicals over large territories and at what scientists and environmentalists are recommending. Let us look at amino-carb. The officials of the Minister of the Environment recommended its use to provincial administrations. They recommended it to the Government of Ontario instead of fenitrothion. The Minister of the Environment has the responsibility right now to contact the Government of Ontario and impress upon it the importance of following the advice of the people in her Department. Very shortly, in three weeks' time, in Newfoundland they will be using amino-carb, BT and fenitrothion. In New Brunswick they will be using amino-carb, fenitrothion and BT. In Quebec they will be using BT and a small amount of fenitrothion. In the Province of Ontario, yet to be announced, just before the election, because of the problems with jack pine budworm, anywhere from 800,000 to one million hectares will be sprayed aerially with fenitrothion only.

Let us look at the list of herbicides which will be used. Certain parts of the country still use 2, 4, 5-T which is banned in other parts of the country, or Roundup or Velpar or gavlon. These are toxic chemicals. Of course the question is: How toxic are these chemicals?

A report was completed for the Minister of the Environment on what was the suspected cause of cancerous tumours in fish in Lake Ontario. That was the only place where it was actually investigated to any degree. Now we have to wait until the American Society of Limnologists has its meeting from June 19 to June 21 to find out the results of that particular study.

The point is that we cannot act only in the short term because we do not know what will be the long-term effects. We have to follow through. We cannot have, for example, a team down in Lake Ontario trying to find out what happened to the fish and not follow through on in next year, the year after and the year after that, to find out what is happening in the environment and to the fish. As the Minister of the Environment knows, she cannot cancel programs, as she did. She cannot lay off scientists, as she did, working in western Canada on what was causing the death of ducks as far as the use of a particular chemical was concerned.

There is a lesson to be learned in this debate. The Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Transport and all Cabinet Ministers should pay more attention to what is needed in the long term. They should stress the importance of the research being conducted by scientists in the Department of the Environment and in the Department of National Health and Welfare, even to the point of involving the Department of National Health and Welfare in some of the studies being conducted in the Department of the Environment.

In conclusion, in his press release on directions for the transportation of PCBs, the Minister of Transport did not go far enough. Why did he not make it mandatory to have another vehicle travelling behind a truck carrying hazardous materials along the highway? That is an obvious solution. If you move a house down a highway you have a truck in front and one behind. It is that simple. The Minister of Transport has to act under the legislation which exists, legislation which was watered down substantially from that of the previous Liberal administration.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to the motion of the Official Opposition condemning the Government for its handling of environmental issues. What is at stake here and has been at stake for the last week with respect to the PCB spill in northwestern Ontario is the extent to which the federal Government, and I would suggest many provincial Governments, are out of sync with the way ordinary Canadians feel about the need to protect them and their environment from the consequences of introducing, either accidentally or deliberately, the many hazardous substances which are now being introduced into the environment as a result of the way in which we live and as a result of what we tolerate, whether it is the way in which dangerous goods have been transported to date or whether it is many other industrial activities that have been allowed to go on. What is at stake is the extent to which Governments are out of sync with the moral outrage which people feel about these kinds of things.

Having been home this past weekend—and unfortunately I was unable to arrive in time for the beginning of this debate—I discovered that people have a sense of outrage that these things are allowed to go on. Unfortunately their outrage does not last as long as I would like it to last. It flares up around a particular event and then diminishes between accidents. We see people being much more conscious of these things after a Mississauga or a McGregor event or after this last spill. Yet, there is a general level of awareness or a desire on the part of Canadians for Governments to ensure that these kinds of things do not happen and that other things which do not attract the attention of a spill do not happen. That level of awareness is increasing every day. I think it is cause for reflection on our values as a society and upon the values of bureaucracy, administration and politics, for that matter, that we can have so much moral outrage funnelled over the years into various known crimes, that is to say, matters pertaining to the Criminal Code. Whether it is the campaign to return capital punishment or whatever, those kinds of things attract moral outrage, and properly so. I am not saying that they should not attract moral outrage, but it seems to me that the time has come when the actions of companies, the deliberate negligence of companies by which they introduce various kinds of poisons into the environment simply in the interests of their profit strategy, and the negligence of government in allowing them to do that, ought to invoke the same kind of moral outrage. I will have more to say on this matter later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REMOVAL OF PEACE CAMP

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, at 7.30 this morning the Government dismantled and expelled the Peace Camp from Parliament Hill and arrested two of the participants, after those young people had maintained their important vigil and message for over two years through the cold of winter and the heat of summer. This was after the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) indicated on Friday that they would have another 10 days. So much for the Government's rhetoric in favour of free speech, peace, and youth. What hypocrisy.

The Minister has said the peace campers had two years and that they have made their point. That is absolutely false. If the Government had understood their point it would have opposed the United States star wars proposal, it would have stopped more testing of Cruise missiles, and it would have taken a tougher position on disarmament. This is indeed a black day for peace, freedom, youth, and idealism in this country.

PORTS

VANCOUVER PORT—INCREASE IN LUMBER COMPANY'S RENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to share in the comments of the previous Hon. Member. That was a gutless act by the Government. It was cowardly. I applaud the young people who stayed there for two years.

I want to speak on another matter on which I was scheduled to speak. It is an important matter to my riding. I am told by members of the IWA, the Woodworkers' Union, and by company people, that a company called Nova Lumber, a sawmill which leases water frontage in the Vancouver Port, has had its lease increased by an incredible 35 per cent. There have been no improvements or anything to justify this.

When Ron Huntington was a Member of this House he used to stand up and was very tough on restraint, and very positive about helping small corporations. He is now the head of Ports Canada. I say in good faith that I wish he could take another look at this deal because the lumber market is soft in British Columbia. This mill could go down. Five mills have gone down. If this increase could just be changed, or put off for a while, the mill could survive a short-term period until the market revives.

I could give details about the market, but I will just make my point generally that this is too much of an increase. I would like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Ports Authority to look into this drastic increase to see whether it can be changed.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

ADDITIONAL GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend our Government, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in particular, for the budget increase of $30.9 million recently given to the Medical Research Council. This raises the 1985-86 MRC budget to $158 million.

Although the previous Government approved a five-year plan in 1983 for the further development of the health research system in Canada, increased funding was granted for only the first two years. Our Cabinet found the base level provided for, in projecting the 1985-86 MRC budget, totally unacceptable. This additional funding will allow MRC to continue its vital work and pursue the implementation of the five-year plan.

Members will be aware that the Medical Research Council funds many research foundations and institutes with a significant portion of their operating support, and they will now be able to continue their established world class research programs.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S COMMITMENT TO WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a report on the continuing emancipation of western Canada after years of Liberal neglect. Last July at Prince Albert the PC caucus gathered to reaffirm its commitment to western Canada. At Prince Albert we undertook to bring western Canadians back to the Cabinet table in positions of importance and influence. The West had one elected Cabinet Minister under the previous administration. By contrast, we now have 12.

The National Energy Policy was the engine of ruin by which the Liberals punished the people of western Canada. The ripple effects of the NEP are still being felt in the recent collapse of several financial institutions.

The PC Party at Prince Albert promised to listen and to act. The result is the Western Accord which lays the foundation for restored prosperity in western Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in holding the First Ministers' conference in Regina, signalled his recognition of the West. Contrast this to the penultimate Prime Minister who asked the farmers: "Why should I sell your wheat?"

Nothing changes. Only last week, in response to a serious question concerning the grasshopper threat on the Prairies, a Liberal responded: "Spray them with PCBs." Same old Liberals, same old hypocrisy, same old arrogance. We in the PC Party know that a truly prosperous Canada can emerge only from strong, revitalized regions. We in western Canada rejoice at being part of Canada once again.

POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, in a recent Canada Post Corporation release, it was announced that the postal rate for letters would go up by two cents as of next June 24.

This announcement is an insult to my constituents who have now been waiting for over a year to have their mail delivered at home.

On two occasions, Mr. Speaker, I presented petitions signed by hundreds of residents of my riding to urge the Government to make strong representations to the Canada Post Corporation. This community development is located in the centre of the City of Montreal, and it is altogether unacceptable that this service should not yet be provided for my constituents who pay taxes and should have it.

The cost of postal stamps has jumped 88 per cent since 1981, from 17 to 32 cents. Canada is already one of the major western countries where postal rates are among the highest. Should the Government approve this increase, our postal rates will have doubled over the past four years.

On behalf of my constituents who are taxed for services they do not even get, Mr. Speaker, I object to this rate increase.

PERMANENCY OF DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, at 7:20 a.m., the peace camp tent and information table on Parliament Hill were taken down and removed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and two peace camp members were arrested. This action took place after two years of demonstrations in front of the Parliament Buildings by peace camp volunteers, a group of Canadians for peace and against nuclear destruction. They expressed the concern of millions of Canadians who are for peace and against nuclear war.

Apparently the Government decided to bring charges of trespassing against the peace camp people, whose only crime was their passionate concern for peace. The Conservative Government had a choice of two responses to the presence of these demonstrators, Mr. Speaker: act on their request or remove them from their demonstration site by force. Unfortunately, the new Government has continued the policy of the previous Liberal Government by allowing cruise missile testing, and instead of objecting to the American Star Wars project with its tremendous potential for destabilizing the situation between the superpowers, it is preparing for Canada's participation in this disastrous project.

Mr. Speaker, my party and myself support the presence of the peace camp on Parliament Hill because it is a visible sign of the support of all Canadians for peace.

We deplore the Government's action. We ask the Government to stop harassing these demonstrators. It is not a matter of regulations, Mr. Speaker, nor a matter—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CRITICISM OF SERVICE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice the concerns of many of my constituents about the operation of the post office. In spite of the fact that the president of the corporation speaks in glowing terms about the efficiency of the operation, the reality of the situation is much different. Postal service has not improved since the formation of Canada Post, and the recent announcement of a proposed hike in postal rates has added more fuel to the fire.

• (1410)

Rural residents, faced with restricted hours of operation and severe increases in rental rates for post office boxes, have expressed concern, and rightly so. On the other hand some rural residents receive daily mail deliveries at no additional cost. Likewise, many city residents receive daily mail delivery at no additional cost. However, city residents in new areas experience great difficulty in getting mail delivery or even having the service provided through a private business outlet.

It is painfully evident to many Canadians that the entire operation of the post office must be reviewed with a view to correcting these discrepancies, as well as improving mail service generally.

POLITICAL PARTIES

APPOINTMENTS MADE BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, in 1972 the New Democratic Party was elected to office in British Columbia and held that mandate for three years. In those three years it enlarged the Public Service in that province by 8,000 employees. I suppose it is safe to assume that those 8,000 employees were not wild-eyed, blue Tories. I believe it is equally safe to assume that those 8,000 employees were probably people who had worked hard for the New Democratic Party and who believed in its philosophy.

I would suggest that before the New Democratic Party compaigns with saccharine piety on the subject of patronage, it should first think of its record in British Columbia, as well as in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, that it is a participant in the system, and its record is not squeaky clean. Second, it is logical for any political party to appoint people to offices of management who believe in its philosophy. It would be foolhardy and contradictory to do it any other way than to appoint people who believe in what it believes.

ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge the start of Organ Donor Awareness Week. The object of this event is to increase people's awareness of the success of transplantation and the need for donor organs. The Multiple Organ Retrieval and Exchange Program wants to encourage Canadians to sign the back of their driver's licence or an organ donor card. It aspires to making organ donations as natural a concept as donating a pint of blood.

There is a constant need for kidneys, eyes, hearts, livers, and lungs, for transplantation. Kidney patients can be kept alive on dialysis until suitable donors can be found, but for those requiring heart, liver, and lung transplants, there is no other treatment. A transplant is their last hope for survival.

In Ontario there are currently over 300 patients waiting for kidney transplants, and approximately 100 blind individuals waiting to have corneal transplants with hope of regaining their sight.

The best way to give effective consent is to fill in a donor card. People should carry it with them at all times in their purses or wallets. The card is a replica of the form on the back of a driver's licence, which is another way to give consent for donation.

During this week of donor awareness, let us be conscious of the need for organs and let us make our support explicit by giving consent for donation. I would like to tell Hon. Members that the requisite form is on their desks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OPPOSITION TO COAL IMPORTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, can you believe this? Canada, with millions of tons of recoverable coals of all classifications, imports, on the average, 15 million tonnes of coal every year. Further, to aggravate the matter, the imported coals have sulphur content of 5 per cent, whereas many Canadian coals have a sulphur content of only 0.5 per cent. In other words, the amount of acid rain caused in Ontario by the high sulphur content of imported coals could have been prevented had Canadian coals been utilized.

Ah! But you say the Canadian coals are in the Maritimes and in western Canada and the freight would have cost considerable money. You are right, but even the freight costs would have provided jobs for Canadians. And, hear this! To clean up the acid rain pollution it will cost a minimum of $300 million. Well, you can haul a lot of coal for $300 million.

I brought this matter to the attention of former Liberal Governments for the last 15 years, but nothing was done. Our PC Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has already provided $70 million for a start toward a solution. Hasten the day when Canadians will mine Canadian coals that will be hauled by Canadian railroads and Canadian trucks to fuel Canadian industries, preventing acid rain, and providing pay cheques to hundreds of Canadians. Vive le Canada!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RACISM

CIRCULATION OF RACIST JOKES—CALL FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago so-called ethnic jokes were circulating in the Winnipeg Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. When the 17-page ethnic jokes pamphlet came to the attention of an affirmative action consultant, he was justifiably shocked.

I will give the House an example in order that it can realize the seriousness of the situation. One of the jokes was: What is the difference between a Jew and a potato? The punch line: The potato doesn't scream when it is put in the oven.

Mr. Keisler was justifiably upset and shared the information with a human rights group which was meeting with him. The result was that the information became public. But did the Department investigate the persons who circulated the jokes? Yes, and they were disciplined, but not as severely disciplined as the guy who blew the whistle. Did the Department institute a training program with regard to prejudice and discrimination? No, but it investigated the man who blew the whistle and fired him for abusing his telephone privileges. Did the Department investigate the use of telephone privileges by all employees? We do not know, because the Department will not tell us.

During all of this the Minister has been strangely silent. We would like the Minister to mandate an independent investigation and end her silence.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

GOVERNMENT CONTRACT—ROLE OF DOUGLAS ROBSON

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Apparently a $234,000 advertising contract was awarded to Lawson Murray Ltd. Apparently the firm's President is Mr. Douglas Lawson, who is the Minister's brother-in-law. The Vice-President of the firm is Mr. Douglas Robson, who was, and still is, the President of the Conservative riding association for the Minister.

Did the Minister of Finance, when he became Minister, retain Mr. Douglas Robson to advise him in helping to set up the Department? Was Mr. Robson paid by the Department? Did Mr. Robson have access to departmental papers or to briefings from officials?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, most of what the Leader of the Opposition said is correct. Mr. Robson was asked by me, as someone who had served as my executive assistant in 1979, to help me get my office off and running because of the tremendous pressures which I was under at that time. He did so. We had a verbal understanding that he would be paid, and, in fact, he was not paid. During that time his responsibilities were exclusively on the administrative side and did not involve policy orientation.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the man whom the Minister asked for advice in setting up the office, and who stayed in the Minister's office, presumably had access to papers in the office and happenings within the Department of Finance. The man then left the office and went back to work for Lawson Murray. It is my understanding that he was a member of that firm and sought a leave of absence to come to Ottawa and help the Minister.

Does the Minister believe that under those circumstances the awarding of an advertising contract to that firm was right? Did he discuss with Mr. Robson, if he dealt with him verbally, the guidelines of the Prime Minister relating to conflict of interest? Does he not believe that those guidelines have been broken? Does he believe that this was the correct procedure for himself, and subsequently, Mr. Robson, to adopt?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one thing very clear. My Robson was sworn as my executive assistant in 1979. I believe that he was sworn again at this point. I should point out that he did not retain his corporate directorships while he was doing work for me. I believe that should register on the Leader of the Opposition.

I might also say that the work which he did was of an administrative sort and that it was not of a policy-oriented sort. He knew the way in which I operated back in 1979 when he was my executive assistant. He knew the type of operation I wanted to set up, so it was very easy for me to have confidence in him to get on with the job of establishing my office at a very difficult and busy time in my own life.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The man, Mr. Robson, left Lawson Murray Limited, came to the Minister to help him, and then went back to Lawson Murray and that firm received a $234,000 advertising contract.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. On July 7, 1984, the Prime Minister said at a public press conference; "Brothers and brothers-in-law are appointed to positions all over the place. It's a real scandal to act with such scorn towards the people of Canada, towards the average Canadian". Does the Prime Minister not feel that this family affair is a real scandal? Does he not feel that in this instance the people of Canada have been treated with scorn? Does the Prime Minister not believe that conflict of interest guidelines which he set up for his Ministers and their staff have been breached?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Minister of Supply and Services can, for example, and will—I am sure my right hon. friend would want to have it—file in the House an indication of the absolute integrity of this firm. For example, having received the contract by independent tender via another Ministry, it then recommended that this work be discontinued, that these practices were wasteful of government money and that $417,000 could be saved in the future. I think that is an indication of the tremendous integrity, not only of that firm but of the Minister of Finance and the kinds of people with whom he associates.

Let me say this in the larger sphere of events—and I think it raises questions for all of us—I have asked the Hon. Member for St. John's East to set up a panel which I hope will vet the kinds of important nominations. We are reaching agreement on that. It's an important part of parliamentary reform. But I ask the right hon. gentleman to reflect on this. For example, one of the most distinguished citizenship court judges ever appointed—

Mr. Nunziata: That's not the answer.

Mr. Mulroney: —is the sister of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. Mrs. Keith Davey is also a very distinguished judge.

Mr. Nunziata: That's not the issue, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: The right hon. gentleman's sister, one of the most outstanding women in Canada, was appointed to her position by the previous Government. We would like to reappoint her. What this raises is the following question: are people entitled to lives apart from elected politicians? I say they are entitled to live their own lives as men and women, building businesses and developing their lives in Canada. We respect their privacy and their competence, and we plan and intend to do that.

MR. ROBSON'S SALARY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns as well the Lawson Robson affair. Who paid Mr. Robson's salary, if it was not the Government of Canada, while he was in the service of the Minister? What was the period of time in which he was involved with the Minister, in his employ, after the election of last September? And did that period of time in any way overlap the period of time at which either the advertising contract was commenced or entered into by the Government of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me try and answer those three questions. The period during which Mr. Robson was with me was from September 17 to around the end of October, during the time I was establishing my office. During that time I presume he was basically on leave of absence from his firm. I presume that his firm was continuing to pay him, but I don't know that answer. The answer to the third question is that I am advised that the contract was signed between the firm and the Department of Supply and Services at the end of November, November 29, I believe.

ADVERTISING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Was Mr. Robson involved in any way in preparing the advertising requirements of his department including Canada Savings Bonds or rather the requirements for advertising Canada Savings Bonds? If so, how can the Minister, as an administrator of public funds, tolerate this kind of incestuous relationship within his own department?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will answer since I am the Minister responsible for that contract and it was my Department which selected Lawson Murray, on our own volition, to undertake this contract for the very good reason that it is one of the best financial institution advertising agencies in the country. It represents such clients as Dominion Securities; Pitfield, MacKay, Ross Limited; McLeod, Young, Weir Limited; Wood Gundy and others.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: As evidence of the value we received from that very intelligent selection of an advertising agency, I have a letter dated February 15, 1985 in which it outlines ways in which the Government can save several hundred thousand dollars, at least $400,000 per year, over the practices undertaken by the previous Government. One sentence states: "While I would regret the end of our association and the loss of revenue to Lawson Murray Limited, I do not feel that we would be responsible were we to advise you differently". Any time we can get a contract with a firm which is going to save that kind of money for the taxpayers of Canada, we're going to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S CONVERSATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well, and deals again with the Lawson Robson case. The Minister did admit to the media that he did speak with his brother-in-law about the awarding of this untendered contract to his brother-in-law. In that conversation did he talk about the fact that this could be conceived as improper by the people of this nation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we had a discussion subsequent to the awarding of the contract. We discussed the possibility that there could be some questions as to the awarding of the contract, but it is not a clear situation. It is not a clear picture—

Mr. Broadbent: You are right.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —as to whether or not there are questions, since, as my colleague has said, the contract is awarded by the Ministry of Supply and Services and the firm was dealing with the Bank of Canada. But, yes, the matter was discussed.

UNTENDERED CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Does he believe that there should be guidelines for executive assistants, party presidents, and relations, when they bid for untendered government contracts? Does he really believe that that should be there to protect the public interest?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker, this Government believes there should be guidelines respecting such things as advertising and the like. And, indeed, there is. This contract was let in complete compliance with the then existing Treasury Board guidelines, Chapter 485, if the Hon. Member wants to check. Since then we have introduced new guidelines to improve the situation, to introduce an element of competition which heretofore did not exist.

Mr. Murphy: When?

Mr. Andre: Those guidelines are now in place and Departments of Government are following those guidelines. We commenced the work immediately upon assuming the responsibilities for the Government of Canada, and upon discovering the mess which the previous administration had left for us.

MEMBERSHIP OF COMPANY'S BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it also concerns the Wilson family compact. The shameless Tory pork-barrelling has now become incestuous. A $234,000 advertising contract is secretly given without tender to members of the Minister of Finance's family and to his riding association president and former employee. Would the Minister confirm, first, that his sister, Wendy Lawson, is on the board of directors of Lawson Murray? And would he confirm as well that he discussed the contract before it was signed with members of Lawson Murray? And if so, why didn't he veto the contract and say no to it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Order.

Mr. Lapierre: Order.

Mr. Andre: The contract to which the Hon. Member referred as having been handled in a secret way is right here. He can look at a copy of it any time he wants.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We are asking him if he's got a sister on the board.

Mr. Andre: There is nothing secret about it.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Have you got a sister on the board, too?

Mr. Andre: One does not need to table these things. They are open. We have nothing to hide. The Hon. Member, in implying that there was something improper or illegal, is engaging in his usual muck-raking. He has implied a sort of guilt when the practices we followed were the same as what were left for us, we inherited from the Liberal Party on September 4. The Hon. Member has the assurance of myself that all of the guidelines of the Treasury Board were followed. He can look at the contract, he can look at the letter to see how much value the taxpayers of Canada have received. I am sorry to have to repeat, but perhaps it is necessary for that Hon. Member, that any time we can save the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars, we are going to do it.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, that is a lot of bunk. My question was to the Minister of Finance and I would appreciate his standing up and answering the question. Was his sister on the board of directors? Did he have an option, a choice? Could he not have said no? Will he not agree that the awarding of the contract to his sister and brother-in-law was nepotism in its worst form, and a blatant and obvious conflict of interest?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is saying to me now that my sister is on the board of directors of Lawson Murray, it is the first time I heard about it.

Mr. Nielsen: Character assassination.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As far as the other questions the Hon. Member has posed are concerned, he should be putting them to the Minister of Supply and Services; it is his contract, not mine. The firm is to deal with the Ministry of Supply and Services, not the Minister of Finance.

CONTENT OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the same subject. The Minister of Supply and Services has just told the House that all of the present government guidelines in this situation were complied with. Presumably that means it is permissible for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to obtain a quarter of a million dollar contract from the Government without being the lowest bid. Will the Prime Minister confirm that the guidelines are so deficient in this respect and, if so, will he undertake that within 24 hours he will change the guidelines to make it impossible for a relative of a Minister of the Crown to get a contract without having even to be the lowest bidder?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will confirm that the guidelines, the ones we inherited, were that deficient as applied by the Liberals. They have since been very seriously upgraded to accommodate the legitimate concern of my hon. friend. They have been very substantially improved to protect the interests of the Canadian taxpayer, and we will be happy to file them at your earliest convenience.

Mr. Broadbent: I regret to say, as is his wont, he did not answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: I did answer the question.

Mr. Broadbent: No, you did not.

Mr. Mulroney: Ask your question.

Mr. Broadbent: I will ask the question specifically.

LETTING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, do the guidelines now in existence, which the Prime Minister brought in, prohibit a relative of a Minister of the Crown from getting a contract without being the lowest bidder? If they do not contain that provision, why does he not make the change and put that in the guidelines?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Broadbent: I thought you were going to answer.

Mr. Andre: —as I said to Members of the House, and I believe to the Leader of the NDP previously this year, advertising is not let by tender anywhere in the world where they have advertising. What we have introduced is a procedure whereby there will be a degree of competition permitted within the practices of this profession by having several agencies, three, four, or five agencies, make a representation to a panel of public servants—a panel of public servants—to select from amongst those agencies that one which will represent that Department in its activities during the course of the year. I do not know what else could be fairer than to have public servants make the selection. This is an innovation which certainly Premier Pawley has not in place, nor did David Barrett, nor any other former or current Premier of whom I am aware.

Mr. Broadbent: I can inform the Minister, in so far as he considers it relevant, that the Government of Manitoba awarded contracts not long ago to two firms which had worked for the previous Tory Government. That has been the practice of Premier Pawley.

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who made such an issue of patronage in the last campaign. There is a role to be played in making a judgment about certain kinds of submissions on advertising contracts which do not necessarily go to the lowest bidder. We agree with that. But would the Prime Minister not agree that there is a distinction between permitting relatives of Ministers of the Crown to get contracts of that kind, which do not go to the lowest bidder, and getting contracts where they have to meet the lowest bid requirement? Surely there is a distinction, and surely it is the Government's responsibility to avoid even the appearance of a conflict of interest. When will the Prime Minister live up to his commitment to make a fundamental change in the whole patronage system of this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): But we have.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We have.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Listen.

Mr. Mulroney: If my hon. friend cares to listen—

Mr. Tobin: Ronald Reagan was an actor who went into politics, and you're a politician who should go into acting. Your nose is growing.

Mr. Mulroney: Now we have heard from the latest success story in Newfoundland after that last election. The fact of the matter is that there has been a very serious change made, and I think my hon. friend would agree. The manner in which tenders come forward is that they are analysed, the bids are brought forward, proposals are made, and they are left, for the first time, to the ultimate determination and adjudication by a panel not of politicians but of distinguished public servants. I cannot think of what would be fairer or more honourable and consistent with what I know my friend realizes to be an obligation of the Government to proceed in an orderly manner.

My hon. friend phrases questions mixing that practice, which I think is a very healthy administrative change, one that benefits Parliament, with the question of patronage, and criticizes us. I noticed no criticism from him when we appointed distinguished people like Paul David, Dick Doyle, or Sylvia Gold, noted for her association with the NDP. We do not think that disqualifies Ms. Gold from playing a prominent role in the life of Canada. We are trying to be fair with everyone, and I think our appointments reflect that attitude.

THE CONSTITUTION

FRENCH LANGUAGE RIGHTS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. During the previous Parliament, all political parties in this House agreed to adopt a constitutional resolution, that is, a joint resolution by all political parties concerning the language rights of Francophones in Manitoba. One of the Anglophone leaders in Manitoba who objected to the resolution was Mr. Bud Sherman, a prominent member of the Progressive Conservative Party, who was subsequently defeated at the polls in the federal election. Mr. Sherman, as Hon. Members are aware, has just been appointed a permanent member of the board of directors of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, the CRTC. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why Mr. Sherman, who objected to the constitutional resolution addressed to Manitoba, was appointed to the CRTC, a national body that oversees both French and English language television and radio? Is this really in the national interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, throughout the election campaign, Mr. Sherman defended vigorously and, I think, eloquently, this Parliament's national statement with respect to national bilingualism. This has always been accepted by Mr. Sherman. In fact, my hon. friend is well aware of the personal battle I waged in this area, and in Manitoba, I insisted that every candidate must accept the position I announced here in the House of Commons, and that includes Mr. Sherman. Furthermore, Mr. Sherman is a distinguished Canadian who is extremely competent and has a solid background in the broadcasting field. I think everyone would do well to acknowledge that this is an excellent appointment that augurs well for the future.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, putting aside the Prime Minister's love of equivocation, can the Prime Minister at least not show the same integrity as the previous Leader of his Party, and state that the language views of Mr. Sherman are not those of his Government, and that the Prime Minister's promises are not like snow which disappears in the spring? Will he keep his promises to make non partisan appointments based on qualifications, in order to uphold the national unity of the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend does a grave disservice to the cause of bilingualism and the notion of Canada by insisting that all Canadians, at all times, accept holus-bolus, his or my view of what Canada must be. This has always been a sensitive and difficult issue which demands understanding of the other fellow's point of view and persuasion. It demands generosity.

This House, of which I was honoured to be a Member, provided great national leadership at a critical moment. That kind of leadership was endorsed by the people of Canada. I do not say that in a partisan way. Bilingualism is an indispensable concept of this country which will always be maintained by Parliament. The appointee to whom the Hon. Member refers has at no time said anything inconsistent with our desire to maintain that vital national role of bilingualism.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REMOVAL OF PEACE CAMP

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It is with regard to the forcible eviction of four of my constituents from the lawns of Parliament Hill this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: They are applauding. Can you believe it? They are happy.

Mr. Cassidy: I represent those people and I am proud of the protest that they have been making in favour of peace on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Minister aware that the eviction of the Peace Camp has received widespread publicity across Canada, and now across the world, and that the message that is being conveyed around the world is that the Government of Canada opposes the views of those millions of Canadians who stand for peace?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Cassidy: Why did the Government allow that kind of message to be spread across the world when the alternative would have been to allow those demonstrators to continue their efforts to bring peace into the world and to bring the issue to the attention of Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Hon. Member is not altogether honest in his questioning, for he knows perfectly well that the two governments had accepted for the past two years the presence of the so-called official representatives of the international movement for disarmament. For the past three weeks, the Hon. Member and I have been aware that the peace camp people on the Hill have no connection whatever with this movement which we hold in high esteem. I have taken the initiative to personally ask these people to leave, because we have understood the message the Hon. Member would like to deliver to the House today. Under these circumstances, I think that the vast majority of Canadians who are in favour of disarmament and peace no longer need this peace camp on Parliament Hill.

[English]

GOVERNMENT OPTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister obviously does not understand that the peace movement is a coalition. The disarmament coalition in Ottawa is meeting tonight to talk about what action its members will take to support their friends in the Peace Camp. They are certainly not disowning the demonstrators who have been on Parliament Hill.

Is the Minister not aware that there was a choice? He could have kicked out the peace campers, which is what he has done, or taken action to ban Cruise missile testing in Canada and to withdraw Canada from participation in star wars research in the United States. Why did the Minister not take the courageous solution of stopping Canada's participation in star wars rather than the route of kicking the peace campers off the Hill?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the agreements which Canada might sign with the United States are outside my jurisdiction. I simply want to say that we have been most courteous with these people who do not represent the national movement. Under these circumstances, I can assure the hon. member that we will always accept orderly demonstrations on Parliament Hill and that we will always respect the right way of doing things.

As for camping, Mr. Speaker, I want the whole of Canada to know that Parliament Hill is not a camping ground.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED TOXICOLOGY CENTRE AT UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and relates to recent concerns over the spill of PCBs on the Trans-Canada Highway and the fact that apparently not enough is known regarding the effect of this toxic substance.

A constituent of mine called me today and advised that 10 gallons of PCBs were spilled just days ago in Saskatoon. This suggests that there is quite a bit of this toxic substance in Canada.

In light of the need to increase toxicological research, and in light of the fact that the University of Saskatchewan has a partial financial commitment to build a toxicology centre to serve western Canada, would the Minister play a major role in expediting a commitment to secure funding for this project and possibly enter into discussions with other federal Ministers as well as the private sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. I am quite aware of the excellent work done at the University of Saskatchewan under the direction of Dr. Bruno Scheiffer. Any proposal concerning private sector participation in our toxicology research will be carefully and gratefully considered.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT—ROLE OF DOUGLAS ROBSON

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I regret the refusal today of the Minister of Finance to answer many of the questions put to him. Everyone in the House knows that the Minister of Supply and Services is only a purchasing agent in this matter. We know that the Department of Finance determines its advertising needs and instructs the Minister when to make a purchase on its behalf.

I will ask the Minister of Finance again whether Mr. Robson was part of any initiative in his Department for determining the requirements of his Department with respect to advertising needs. More particularly, was he part of the determination for the particular contract that was let one month after Mr. Robson left his office without pay, presumably gratis of Lawson Murray which paid his salary while he worked in that office? Was he part of determining the requirement for that advertising contract?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite wrong in his premise. The Department of Finance deals with the over-all need for advertising.

The Ministry of Supply and Services decides who should do it. That was the basis on which this contract was awarded.

With regard to the second question, obviously Mr. Robson had nothing to do with the decision on who would be awarded that contract since the contract was awarded by the Ministry of Supply and Services.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Supply and Services awards the contract. Someone in the Department of Finance determines what its needs are. Mr. Robson was there for a month before the contract was let.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Was he aware of the family relationship between the Minister of Finance and Lawson Murray? Was he aware of the relationship between Mr. Robson, who worked in his office, and Lawson Murray? On the weekend his press secretary suggested that he was not.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, for many years the Bank of Canada has been running an advertising program for marketable bonds. The Bank approached the Department of Supply and Services for an agency to carry on this activity. My Department selected the agency because, according to one individual who informed me, this is the best advertising agency in Canada for handling financial institutions. They have proven that to us by the way they handled this particular account. They demonstrated that the money spent for years by the Liberals was being wasted. We are going to save $500,000 to $6000,000 a year.

The answer to the question is no, we did not know. We selected Lawson Murray on the basis that it is the best agency for this kind of work. I have here the proof that they in fact did a good job and are saving the taxpayers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Why does the Member object to having someone save the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

CARRIAGE OF PCB CONTAMINATED MATERIAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the bungling by the Ontario Government of the PCB spill.

The Minister will be aware that airport cargo workers want the Ontario Environment Ministry to be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law for not telling them that they were handling deadly PCBs on two passenger flights last week. Given what the Solicitor General said in the House last week, and what the Prime Minister told me on Friday about the Government's willingness to prosecute where violations were found to exist, could the Minister tell us whether any investigation is being made of the Ontario Ministry of the Environment pursuant to dangerous goods legislation, and whether any charges against that Government are being contemplated?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is provision in the Aeronautics Act which covers the transportation of dangerous goods. The issue to which the Hon. Member refers is under active consideration by departmental officials.

INVOLVEMENT OF ONTARIO MINISTRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that the suggestion of laying charges against the Ontario Ministry of the Environment is under active consideration—

Mr. Mazankowski: No.

Mr. Blaikie: —because that would certainly be a good idea, given the way it has handled the situation.

I want the Minister to be clear. Is it possible that there is a recourse in federal law for the people of Canada against the negligence of the Ontario Ministry of the Environment, or is the only recourse to toss out the Tories next week, when they have the chance?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unlike the NDP, we try to obtain all the facts before we start engaging in loose rhetoric like the Hon. Member.

THE ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGED SYSTEMATIC PATRONAGE CONCERNING FARM LOAN NOTARIES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. He told us before that changes had been made in patronage procedures and, sure enough, the Farm Credit Corporation was one of the victims of such changes, since his Government has set up a systematic patronage system concerning notaries handling FCC loans.

As we all know, the Agricultural Producers' Union management spoke out against that procedure last week, going as far as occupying the Farm Credit Corporation office in Sherbrooke. We also know that the Board of Notaries has urged that the procedure be abandoned. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has asked the Minister of Agriculture to put an end to his systematic patronage with respect to farm loans?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): What I do know, Mr. Speaker, is that we have asked that everyone be considered as being qualified in such circumstances, including those who had been systematically turned down for 25 years. That is all. Everybody is on the list, including those who were never given a change in 25 years. Decisions have been made accordingly.

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT NEPOTISM

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Well now, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is talking about 132 names out of 3,000 notaries in Quebec. In my opinion, it takes an awful lot of nerve to try to have us swallow such bullshit.

Mr. Speaker, how can the Prime Minister justify a case of nepotism where the two brothers of the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead had also been left out? How can he justify the case of the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance, and now the brothers of some Members who are feeding at the pork barrel?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the Hon. Member would level such serious accusations at me personally. Indeed, I read in today's La Presse that Ontario Liberal Leader David Peterson said that "Mulroney is the most extraordinary man I have ever known". So why is the Hon. Member being so harsh with me?

PRAIRIE WILDLIFE INTERPRETATION CENTRE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. On March 13 an announcement was made to the effect that the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre near Webb, Saskatchewan, would carry on, and further that an announcement of the group who would be operating it would be made by the end of March.

In view of the fact that it is now April 22, that the Wildlife Centre generally opens to the public in mid May and a number of school groups are anxious to plan visits, would the Minister indicate to the House who will be operating the centre and when we can expect it to open?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. I wish to advise the House that we have received four offers of people who want to operate the Wildlife Interpretation Centre near Webb. The delay is due to the fact that we received this morning a fifth offer from the Wildlife Canadian Federation, a provincial group based in Saskatchewan, and we hope to make a decision very shortly.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

INTRODUCTION OF NEW GUIDELINES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Earlier in Question Period the Minister of Supply and Services said that as soon as his Party came into government new guidelines were introduced. When the Prime Minister was answering questions from the Opposition, he said that he had been forced to use guidelines from the previous Government and that they are inadequate. Could he tell the House, in terms of the Lawson Murray affair, exactly when he brought in the new guidelines he was referring to in Question Period?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, certainly it was my intention and I believe I did say that we started working on new guidelines. We inherited a set of Treasury Board guidelines with which we complied absolutely, but immediately saw their deficiencies. We started working on new guidelines. A communications committee of Cabinet was established and we have, in effect, put guidelines in place because Ministers have been asked to comply with them, even though they are not as yet printed but within days will be printed and put in the Treasury Board policy manuals. As I have indicated, we are following them now.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he clarify exactly what date these new guidelines came into effect? Was it before or after the Wilson affair?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is the third time that I indicated we started working on new guidelines as soon as we came into office and had an opportunity to examine the circumstances.

An Hon. Member: When did they come into effect?

Mr. Andre: The new guidelines, a couple of months ago, were circulated to Ministers to tell them of their thrust.

I described them orally in the House in January. The direction we were taking is in Hansard, if you want to examine it. The actual material for the Treasury Board policy handbook has yet to receive the last few steps of the administrative process. However, as I described in the House in January, in essence they have been in effect since then.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REMOVAL OF PEACE CAMP

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Earlier in Question Period the Member for Ottawa Centre referred to the fact that at 7.30 this morning the Government of Canada removed the Peace Camp from Parliament Hill and arrested two of its participants. Would he tell the House, and Canadians, the reasons for this removal at this time, two years after the Peace Camp was first installed, and whether this indicates any weakening of the Government's commitment to peace in the world at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am flabbergasted that the hon. member should be wondering how we could put an end to a situation which had existed for the past two years and which his own government had tolerated for 18 months. I indicated earlier that a few weeks ago I had invited these representatives to go, in view of the fact that Parliament Hill is not a camping ground. They asked me to evict them, assuring me that they were anxious to leave, but that they could leave only if expelled. That is what we did this morning, and I repeat that we have as much respect as anybody in the House for the peace movement. We are as much pro-peace as anybody here, but I think that these people's presence had lasted long enough.

[English]

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT TO PEACE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question was on a much broader issue than that dealt with by the Minister of Public Works. That is why I asked it of the Prime Minister. Many nations have taken a message from this story, which has gone throughout the world, that there is a lessening of the commitment to the cause of peace in the world. The Minister said that the Peace Camp made its point. If it did, why is the Government not taking a strong position against star wars development in the United States?

I ask the Prime Minister to assure the House, and Canadians, that the Government is committed to peace and that the action this morning is out of line with that commitment? I think the Prime Minister should recognize that and be concerned about it.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the decision this morning was an administrative one which merely concerned making sure that the lawns of Parliament Hill were made available to everybody and not to a group of people, of whatever background, who chose from time to time to live there for given political purposes.

I feel that all Members of the House have demonstrated great tolerance, understanding, and sympathy, by watching this in a friendly manner for two years. It was felt that the time had come for some action. Having said that I want to give my hon. friend the assurance that one is an administrative a matter. The other much more important, infinitely more important, is on the political level which deals with all Members of this House and our commitment to securing a durable peace.

• (1500)

I give my hon. friend this assurance, that there is nothing more important to this Government, and I know to the Hon. Member, than the success of the Geneva talks which will make sure that we live in a safer world, that we minimize the risk of nuclear accidents. We are fully committed to that. We believe that is a most honourable goal, and we will pursue it with vigour at all times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: One question. The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CANADIAN TREASURY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since Canada supports and the Prime Minister has frequently referred to the Contadora peace process, and since the efforts of the Contras to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua are major obstacles to that peace process, when does the Canadian Government plan to inform the United States Government, as many others in this hemisphere have done, that we too are opposed to any and all financing of the Contras by the U.S. Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada makes its views known in a regular and vigorous way.

Mr. Benjamin: What about the people of Canada?

Mr. Mulroney: I may tell my hon. friend that, pursuant to our policy of trying to be helpful in that area, the Minister of External Relations will be making a very important visit to Central America in the very near future, and we hope that will be helpful to the Contadora process as well.

PRIVILEGE

PUBLICATION OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE REPORT PRIOR TO PRESENTATION IN HOUSE—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on April 16. I am prepared to give the House a minute to settle down, if the House chooses.

The Hon. Member complained of a premature disclosure of a report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and provided the Chair with two newspaper reports by way of evidence.

Order, please.

The two reports, one from The Toronto Star and the other from The Citizen, clearly indicate that these two newspapers were in possession of the report prior to its tabling in the House of Commons.

The premature disclosure of committee reports and proceedings undoubtedly encroaches upon parliamentary privilege if the traditional criteria are rigidly applied. The Hon. Member quoted relevant citations from Beauchesne in support of his complaint. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), in the course of his intervention, indicated that the British practice, which is referred to in Beauchesne, had been altered. In the interest of clarity—

Order. I presume rulings on matters of privilege are of importance to the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My friend is important to me, too.

Mr. Gauthier: Apologize.

Mr. Speaker: No apology is necessary. Order, please. All Members of this House are guilty at some point or other of talking when the Speaker is on his feet. That is an equal problem. I have made that point before and I will make it again. It is not for the Chair to have to cope with that matter, I think as all Members know; it is in the interest of those who wish to hear that all Members allow the Chair to be heard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In the interest of clarity, I should perhaps indicate the current British practice in this regard as described on pages 716 to 717 in the Twentieth Edition of Erskine May:

Publication of reports of committees.

Any publication of a draft report, which has been submitted to a committee, before such report has been agreed to by the committee and presented to the House, is treated as a breach of privilege; and when the report of a committee, which had been presented to the House, but was not yet available to Members in printed or photocopied form, was communicated to the press, the Speaker stated that the more regular practice was that the Members of the House should be the first to be put in possession of the results of the deliberations of a select committee. The practice was modified in 1967-68 by terms of Standing Order No. 92 which provides that all select committees should have power to authorize the Clerk of the House to supply copies of their reports to officers of government departments, to such witnesses who have given evidence to committees or their sub-committees as these committees consider appropriate, to lobby journalists and to such other press representatives as the committee thinks fit. Copies are to be supplied after they have been laid on the Table, but not more than forty-eight hours before the intended time of publication of the report; and they are to be regarded as strictly confidential until such publication.

In 1980 the British House also relaxed its position—

Order. Fair is fair. Perhaps Members of the Opposition Party would also care to allow me to be heard.

In 1980 the British House also relaxed its position respecting the publication of evidence given by witnesses at public committee hearings before such evidence had been reported to the House. The details may be referred to on pages 704 to 705 of Erskine May's Twentieth edition.

The British practice has therefore, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), been changed in recent years. However, the Canadian practice has never been entirely consistent with that of the British House, and in this regard I wish to refer to some important precedents.

On October 29, 1964, a question of privilege was raised complaining that an identified Member of the House had issued a press release concerning the report of the committee considering a national flag prior to the presentation of the report to the House. The Member concerned acknowledged that he had indeed done so. Mr. Speaker, Macnaughton took the position that since the complaint involved an attack on the conduct of a Member, there should be a specific charge by way of a substantive motion on notice, and he quoted from a ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener of June 19, 1959 as follows:

In my view, simple justice requires that no honourable member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

The matter was not proceeded with.

On October 21, 1975, the Commons chairman of a joint committee raised a question of privilege in which he complained of the unauthorized publication of excerpts from a preliminary draft of the committee's report, each page of which had been clearly stamped "confidential until presented in the House." Mr. Speaker Jerome in his ruling acknowledged that "the publication of such a report would raise the strongest suggestion that some act had taken place which offended the privileges of the House". However, he went on to point out that the complaint was not specific in alleging an act of misconduct on the part of any identified individual or individuals.

Another important precedent concerning the premature disclosure of committee proceedings is to be found in a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Jerome on June 23, 1977. Again, Mr. Speaker acknowledged that the complaint contained the elements of privilege and was supported by clear precedents in the British House of Commons. At the same time he pointed out that our own House had never followed the British practice in this area. He went on to express his concern that, while the complaint appeared to attack the press, it made no criticism of the attitude of Members themselves in respect of confidential documents.

He came to the conclusion that he could not allow such a matter to proceed as a prima facie case of privilege until the problems raised by this kind of case had been further considered by the House or one of its committees.

I fully understand the concern of the Hon. Member for Calgary West that a document, the content of which clearly indicated its confidential nature until tabled in the House, was prematurely released. If the Chair were to be guided exclusively by British practice, it would have to find that there was prima facie evidence of a breach of privilege. Although no evidence has been introduced which might help to place responsibility for the leaking of the document to the press, the press itself must take responsibility for the premature disclosure of a report it knew to be confidential until presented to the House.

This House has a very proud record of concern for the freedom of the press. Our practice has always been to lean toward press freedom rather than apply the test of privilege on every occasion. The rulings I have cited of my predecessors bear this out. Two of these cases involved an even larger question of privilege—the leaking of draft reports prepared before the committee had reached any final conclusions. In the circumstances, I feel I should follow these precedents and rule that this matter cannot be accorded precedence over all other business.

Nevertheless, this ruling should not be interpreted as a carte blanche exoneration of the press on any and every occasion that documents known to be confidential are prematurely disclosed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just wanted to be on record that I unequivocally apologize for any statement I may have made owing to my enthusiasm to greet back to this House one of our distinguished parliamentarians after a long absence, namely, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). We are all glad to see him back.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: No apologies were needed or necessary. Perhaps I could add my personal best wishes to the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government has displayed negligence with regard to the protection, maintenance and improvement of the environment as manifested in its ill-advised reduction in services, its complacent attitude toward controlling potential harsards and its complete abdication of any leadership in the protection of the environmental health and safety of Canadians.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, just before the House rose for the luncheon adjournment I had been referring to the fact that the reaction of the Government to the PCB spill between Kenora and Ignace, and for all we know at many other points along the Trans-Canada Highway, points to the fact that there is a gap between the moral outrage felt by Canadians and the offence taken by Governments. I am not referring to any particular Government but to Governments in general. Often these kinds of incidents arise out of the negligence of either the private sector or respective Government Departments which are responsible for ensuring safe transportation of dangerous substances such as, in this case, PCBs.

One of the oddities of our society and our civilization is that we rightly get ourselves worked up about criminal acts, whether it be murder, theft, or whatever, acts which come under the traditional notion of what it means to act like a criminal. We have not reached the point—and I think we need to reach it very quickly—where we take moral offence at actions by Governments, the private sector or anyone responsible for introducing poisons into the environment with which human and non-human creatures have to live either in the short run or in the long run. We have to come to the point where we take the same moral offence at those kinds of actions as we do at criminal acts of individuals. At some point we cannot just regard it as the price of doing business. We cannot just regard it as the price of a smoothly running economy. At some point we will have to realize that there is too much of a cost to pay, both in the short term and in the long term.

Let us consider the cost to taxpayers of having to rip up whole sections of the Trans-Canada Highway or of having to repair, whenever we get around to it, all the environmental damage which has been done in the name of short-term expediency, of the need of a particular company to be competitive with its competitors or of the need for a Crown corporation to realize a certain profit in order to maintain its credit rating. All these rather abstract economic indicators, I maintain, have been used over the years as grounds for doing things which have real physical consequences for the environment, for people and, as I said before, for non-human creation.

I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in the House. I hope he will be speaking later about how he sees his departmental responsibilities in terms of this particular spill. I hope he will be commenting critically—and I think it would be useful for him to do so—on the role that provincial jurisdiction has played in the matter and the way in which, by giving over too much of the responsibility for these kinds of spills to provinces, the federal Government finds itself in a position which, it either likes or dislikes, but which in any event, is a position in which they have not felt the freedom to be as involved in this event as they should have been and as many other people believed they should have been. We have mixed messages from the Government as to the question of jurisdiction, not only federal and provincial jurisdiction, but as to whom within the federal Government had jurisdiction for these kinds of events.

I look forward to hearing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) on this subject. If one thing is clear from all this, it is that the Ontario Ministry of the Environment has clearly bungled its responsibility. It did not take it seriously in the first place. It then proceeded to make a number of errors with regard to the information it gave out on the hotline for those who telephoned because they suspected they may have been exposed to the PCBs on the highway, the attitude toward the family who were exposed to the PCBs directly, and the attitude it took toward existing regulations in sending soil samples through Winnipeg to the Department in Ontario that were not clearly marked. We now have air cargo workers quite rightly complaining that they should at least have been told what they were handling. These kinds of things point clearly to the fact that the Ontario Ministry of the Environment was not doing its job.

If there is no legal recourse, as well there may not be, there is at least political recourse. It is time for that political recourse to take effect in Ontario. For five years the Government of Ontario has had a piece of legislation passed by the Ontario Legislature waiting to be proclaimed. It would have dealt with the very kind of event we now have in the form of that PCB spill in Kenora. For five years the so-called "Spills Bill" has been waiting to be proclaimed by the Ontario Progressive Conservative Government, and no action. If there was ever an example of rank neglect of the need to proceed with the kind of legislation that everyone thinks is necessary, whether it be the federal Progressive Conservatives, federal Liberals, provincial New Democrats, you could not find anyone other than the Ontario Tories who thought there was any wisdom in not proclaiming that piece of legislation. As I say, it has been around for five years.

I am really outraged and offended. When I get up to speak about this, I am not putting it on for the cameras or that sort of thing. For years the Ontario Government has demonstrated this kind of attitude toward the environment. Long before I ever ran for office, the Ontario Government deliberately turned a blind eye year after year to the fact that all kinds of people were pointing out that the pulp and paper mill in Dryden was poisoning the English-Wabigoon River system by allowing mercury to enter that system. That was having harmful effects on the fish in that river system and on the native people who made their living off that system.

What did the Ontario Tories do for years and years? The same Tories who are now running for election did absolutely nothing. They waited until that paper mill was taken over by another company. Now there are so many legal hassles as to who is responsible and who is not that there is no chance of anyone being brought to justice with respect to that ecological crime. We are talking about an ecological crime. We need to begin to talk about ecological crimes in this country.

The Ontario Government has been allowed in many cases to perpetrate or to allow those kinds of crimes without having to pay the political price. Who knows whether they will pay it this time around, but some day the political price will be paid. Some day Canadians will arrive at the point where they will not tolerate Governments that are lackadaisical about environmental matters. They will not tolerate Governments that are so short-sighted as to think that the short-term economic consequences of strict environmental regulations are more costly than the long-term consequences of not having those kinds of environmental regulations. I look forward to that day.

I wanted to say what I have had to say because it is important if only for a moment to get above this particular event and think about the over-all political picture and the need for Governments everywhere to be more sensitive to environment issues. If there is one Government that is particularly open to criticism on this in terms of what we have learned from this PCB spill, it is the Ontario Progressive Conservative Government. It has a history of not being sensitive to those kinds of things. It listens to the voice of the corporate ledger instead of the voice of the river, the native people or the fish. It listens to the voices of those who would have Governments think only in the short term and not the long term. That is where we have to go.

With respect to the PCB spill, I hope the Minister of Transport will have something to say about why in his protective directive that he issued on Friday, if I understood it correctly, he did not require the kind of convoy that seems to me would be in order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Convoy? What for?

Mr. Blaikie: So that if something is spilling out, someone would notice. You would not need to have a family of four in a family vehicle to notice it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Get off it.

Mr. Blaikie: If the Minister thinks that is an unrealistic demand, he is free to get up and say so. That is fair enough. It is an idea that was being thrown around. It is not included. Perhaps the Minister can say why he does not think that is necessary. That would seem to be fair ball. Maybe that is what he will do.

With respect to the regulations, I wonder if the Minister could clarify what the regulations that come into effect on July 1 will be. There has been some misapprehension about what those regulations will do. The other day in committee I asked what the regulations would do. I believe a false impression is being given, perhaps not deliberately, that the regulations which come into effect on July 1 would have dealt with all aspects of this Bill. All they would have dealt with would have been the speed and the accuracy with which people responded to the spill. They would not have had anything to do with preventing the spill.

As I understand, the regulations pertaining to the container itself will not come into effect until long after July 1. That comes with the next set of regulations to come into effect. I believe it was 1980 when we passed the transportation of dangerous goods legislation. We look forward to July 1, 1985 when a certain set of regulations will come into effect. Those regulations which would have enabled a comprehensive regulatory response to this event are still yet to come, even after July 1. It makes one wonder how long it takes. The Bill was passed in 1980. In 1985 we still do not have the regulations to deal with the problem.

Perhaps the Minister could comment on that. I know he will want to blame the previous Liberal administration. Maybe that had a lot to do with it. However, there must be some other reason why it is taking so long. I hope the Minister will address, in his new responsibilities as Minister of Transport, how we can decrease the time between legislative action and regulatory action so that we do not find ourselves in the position in which we so often find ourselves of something having happened, we thought we had legislation to deal with it but we did not because the regulations were not yet in place. At least, in this case, with respect to federal legislation, we had the legislation proclaimed and the regulations in process. But the Ontario Government did not have the decency to pass the legislation and get on with the regulations. That is where it stands on the matter. It is something for which I hope it will soon pay a political price.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the Hon. Member's remarks just before lunch when he established the basis for a federal Government policy. Could the Member expound on that? As environment seems to be a divided area, what does he feel the federal Goverment's responsibility should be and what direction does he think the policy should take?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Federal Government ought to feel more responsible, and indeed ought to have more responsibility than it now assumes. From the first time I heard of this, I assumed that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), by virtue of the fact that it was a question of interprovincial transport, had a mandate to deal with it. I realize that the responsibility for administering this area has devolved to the provinces, but if we have learned anything from this, it is that if a cargo of dangerous goods must pass through several jurisdictions in order to get from point A to point B, this is not the best way to go about it. We have learned that it provides all kinds of opportunities for error and misrepresentation. If the federal Government is serious, it will have to take a tough look at how the dangerous goods legislation is being administered to see if there is an opportunity for a greater federal role.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a quick comment as to whether the responsibility should be dual or separate.

After the court decision on bus pickups in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia was made, the Hon. Robert Winters, who at that time was Minister of Transport in the Liberal Government, asked all provincial Ministers to a meeting. The provincial Ministers of Highway and of Transport from across the country gathered in Ottawa for that meeting, and I was among them. At that time, the Hon. Robert Winters said that while the legislation placed the responsibility on the Minister of Transport, he wanted to delegate it completely to provincial Ministers. I remember one of the provincial Ministers asking him whether, if it was delegated, it would mean that the federal Ministers would interfere after the provinces had started administering the legislation. Mr. Winters said no, that that would definitely not be the case. He said that the full responsibility would be that of the provincial Governments.

I thought that I should outline that event. If Mr. Winters had not said that, the provincial Ministers would not have accepted the responsibility. All the provincial Ministers who were present at that time accepted the responsibility and have been carrying it since. I believe that the comments which have been made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) are in line with those which were made by the Hon. Robert Winters.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate knowing what happened previously. The Hon. Member is senior to me and I am fortunate to be able to learn from him. Certainly, it is the practice that if something is delegated, a commitment is made not to interfere. However, the case which I am making is that the delegation of that responsibility should be reviewed.

Obviously, there are elements of the spill to which the federal Government has responded. It has been involved. But it is a question of the timing of that involvement. There was a protective direction issued by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) last Friday, and the regulations are to come into effect on July 1. They are gazetted and, therefore, public information. Why does he not ask the relevant industries to obey the regulations voluntarily from now until July 1? Why must we wait until there is a legal reason to do something? Why can there not be a moral reason for doing things? We heard earlier today, what we heard all the time from Prime Minister Trudeau, when we were told that the Government was not breaking any laws. But we ought not to think only on a legal basis, we ought to think about what is right.

I was disturbed earlier today when I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) argue that the contract had been let to the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) before the new guidelines had come into effect. If they knew that new and better guidelines were coming into effect, why did they do what they would prohibit two months in the future? That is the same kind of legalistic and rigid thinking which we got so often from the former Prime Minister. I thought we were rid of that, but we got more of it today.

I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), with respect to his point about delegation, that it is a point which is well taken.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) a question about the action of the former Minister of Transport, Mr. Winters. That decision was made some 23 years ago when there was no concern about the transportation of dangerous goods. We are now in an entirely new regime. Does my colleague not agree that if the provinces want to have reciprocal agreements on load limits, speed limits and the size of vehicles, that that is fair? Does he not also agree that the jurisdiction of the national Government, under the Constitution, with respect to transportation of dangerous goods, both interprovincial and international, should remain the sole responsibility of the federal Minister of Transport and no one else?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has laid out very clearly the responsibility of the federal Minister of Transport. Since this incident became known to the public, we have been after the Minister of Transport to seize that responsibility. I think he has to agree, but I think he could go further.

As well, I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) will take this opportunity to do some work in the area of environmental health and safety. He should take up the suggestion which we made last week and implement a medical register. What harm could be done by gathering the names of people who suspect themselves of having been exposed to this chemical and keeping track of them? It is a terrible thing to say, but the opportunity does not arise every day for people who may have come into contact with a hazardous substance to be enumerated. I do not know why the Minister of National Health and Welfare did not think that it was a good idea. He should send his officials into that area of the country, gather the names, and keep track of those people for the next 10, 20 or 30 years.

When we are talking about potential carcinogens, we are talking about long lead times. Therefore, when we say that there are no immediate consequences, we do not really know. That is why it is all the more reprehensible that this Government cancelled the research program into the assessment of PCBs. It was short-sighted of the Government to have cancelled four or five of those research programs, particularly the one which was requested by the Government of Ontario. It would seem to me that it was an admission on the part of the Government of Ontario that it did not know enough about this hazardous substance. That study was ongoing, but it was cut on November 8.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I could not help but notice that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) accused the Ontario administration of bungling its responsibility. In fact, he is saying that it is a provincial responsibility in many cases. Just because this particular incident happened during inter-border transportation, he points his finger at the federal Government. I would just like to know if the Hon. Member feels that it was the Province of Ontario which bungled. If so, possibly there should be charges against the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Move a motion.

Mr. Holtmann: Possibly there are other things which exist right now. That's a possibility. On the other hand, what about the Province of Manitoba? If you listen to the Canadian Nature Federation, the Province of Manitoba does less than any other Canadian province to protect its environment. What is the Hon. Member's position? Does he really feel that it is a provincial responsibility? Even within the province from time to time, without going across a border, there are dangerous chemicals floating back and forth. What is the Hon. Member's position? Is it a federal responsibility or a provincial responsibility? I would like to know the Hon. Member's opinion on that.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) is starting to get the point, that charges ought to be laid against the Ontario Ministry of the Environment. I will talk about Manitoba and I will talk about the survey which was done by the Canadian Nature Federation. If one has a close look at that survey, which I did for obvious reasons, one will find that one of the ways in which it judges provinces is by deciding whether or not there is legislation on the books with respect to various environmental issues, one being environmental impact assessment, for example. It is a fact that there is no legislation in Manitoba which requires an environmental impact assessment of all projects. It is a policy decision on the part of the existing Government to have it in every case but it is not legislation, although it should be. It should not be left up to the discretion of Government, in my view.

The reason some other provinces received higher points in that particular area—the Ontario Government, for instance—was that they do have legislation. However, the legislation has all kinds of ministerial discretion, so that in Ontario, even though there is legislation, there are fewer environmental impact assessments done because the Ontario Minister of the Environment is constantly saying, "Well, in this case, we won't have one". But when you just have a kind of survey which asks if the provinces have legislation or not—and it is ticked off—then there will be a distorted view of just what kind of priorities exist in various provinces.

So I would recommend to the Hon. Member that he take a good look at the study and ask some questions about what kind of criteria are used in making judgments between provinces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has disappeared again. I hope she will come back.

Mr. Benjamin: She's not the one we need. Mr. Mazankowski is responsible. He's here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister has not been in the House to face the music since the first day we brought this issue up in the House, Mr. Speaker. In its first few months in office, this Government—

Mr. Caccia: Here she is.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's good.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Having respect for the right hon. gentleman, as I do, and having regard to his long tenure of service in the House of Commons, I think he would want to reconsider his opening comments.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not at all, Mr. Speaker. Since we have raised this issue, particularly the PCB crisis, the Minister has been in the House once. She said it was a provincial responsibility and she has not returned until today's debate. I am glad to see her in the House to deal with this particular issue. I say that having regard to my old friendship with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), and I want to record for Hansard the fact that I drew his usual benign smile at the end of my remarks.

In its few short months in office, this Government has turned the clock back on the cause of environmental protection by years and years. It is becoming crystal clear that there is no commitment on the part of this new Conservative Government for the protection or enhancement of the environment. As I and members of this Party have pointed out to this Minister and this Government on the Opposition Day we sponsored on March 5—this is the second Opposition Day we have chosen to direct to this important environmental question—we saw the first indications of how this Government was going to treat environmental matters in the statement of the Minister of Finance on November 8. Apparently that is just the tip of the iceberg because back-bench Tory Members of Parliament have warned us in the House and outside that if we thought the November cuts in the environmental commitment were drastic, we should wait for the May Budget, there are going to be even more. The list of cuts in that November statement reads like the dictionary of disaster which we recited here in the House on March 5; closing or attempting to privatize wildlife interpretation centres; cutting service in the migratory bird sanctuaries in the west and elsewhere; delaying work on the Fraser River dyking project in British Columbia; and eliminating the toxology centre at Guelph which would have been the first of its kind to monitor and assess the impact of new chemicals.

[Translation]

And the Environment Secretariat, which was part of the National Research Council and was made up of scientists who could sound the alarm whenever the environment was jeopardized has been eliminated. These scientists used to keep us informed of the hazards associated with asbestos, phosphates, heavy metals, mercury, PCB and other pollutants.

The government has attacked the Canadian Wildlife Service. It has laid off 84 people, which is 25 p. cent of its total staff. Some of the best biologists and environment specialists in the world have been "cut" and are now working elsewhere, in the United States, Australia, Asia and Africa. The minister's response is that, and I quote, these cuts will have no negative effect on the survival of the programs. It is like throwing a lead lifebuoy at a person who is about to drown.

The government then turned its attack on our national parks. In order to help Canadians celebrate the 100th anniversary of Parks Canada, it has reduced its services, doubled and tripled the admission fees and reduced the number of its employees. What a way to celebrate the anniversary of Parks Canada, which has a reputation for excellence throughout the world!

[English]

The Minister says that the provinces will pick up the slack in these programs which she is abandoning willy-nilly. She says, "Let the provinces do it. Let the private sector do it". All I can say is that it is not likely, especially when we consider that Ontario alone has cut some $29 million out of environmental programs in the past two or three years and the Treasurer of Ontario is campaigning on a promise to cut every Ministry even more. It is also unrealistic to expect private industry to do its own clean-up. The experience of the Hooker Chemicals Ltd., company which is polluting the Niagara River from the United States side, should be proof of that.

The Minister, as usual, is reading her mail, but she is not listening or responding in any concrete fashion. This morning in debate the Minister had some unkind things to say about this Party and about the New Democratic Party because of the concern we on this side of the House are raising about environmental issues. She says we are behaving "odiously". She says we are "making faceless accusations". She says we are "engaging in buffoonery to attract the press which is already on the lookout for scandals". In effect she is saying that the press has been scandal-mongering on this issue of fundamental importance to Canadians relating to the heritage of this country. If we have been blessed with anything in Canada, it is the birthright of one of the last great frontiers in the world, which is an absolutely priceless heritage, and that is what we on this side of the House are trying to protect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's all we heard this morning, Mr. Speaker. It is the motto of this Government that when the heat is on, lash out at the other side. Do not respond in terms of substance. Do not respond generously and directly to the questions. Do not respond in an expansive fashion, so that the people of Canada can take some comfort in the fact that the Government really does care about our heritage and our environment and about the priceless land and water we have been given by the Almighty.

Did we hear from the Minister about what she plans to do? Did we hear from her about what she stands for? Not a word. Did we hear from the Minister what action she would take to pressure her Tory colleagues in the Government of Ontario to bring into force a "spills Bill"? Let me talk about the Ontario "spills Bill". It was an Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act, Part IX. It was introduced in the Ontario Legislature in 1978 and passed by the Legislature in 1979. If it is ever proclaimed, it will oblige polluters to pay. But this Act, on the books at Queen's Park since 1979, has not yet been proclaimed into law. What is the Government of Ontario waiting for? Does the Minister know? Can she tell us why? Has she been in touch with her counterpart at Queen's Park to urge him to proclaim the Bill to give the people of this province some protection so that within the joint jurisdiction the two Governments can mobilize against the kind of incidents we are describing? Her colleagues in Ontario, the Ministers and the Government, are dragging their feet on this Act and on other environmental issues, and they have been doing so for the past six years, and it is becoming very obvious that the only thing the two levels of Government share on environmental matters is neglect.

Returning now for a moment to federal responsibility, we have had no explanation from the Minister of the reason for the cancellation, as of April 1, of the $2.5 million program regarding toxic chemical control, which cancellation will be particularly damaging in Ontario and Quebec. This program reviewed and monitored emissions by municipalities in Ontario and Quebec, emissions from industry and dump sites of toxic chemicals, waste and refuse. It was an absolutely essential program and the Minister either did not have the clout with Treasury Board or with the Minister of Finance, or else she was not advised that the program was about to expire on March 31. In any event, she has done nothing about it and that program is now dead, to the detriment of the people of Ontario and Quebec, indeed to the detriment of the people living around the international waters adjoining those two provinces. We did not get any information about that this morning when she responded in this debate. All we got, once again, was a feeble attempt to attack the Opposition.

I want to tell the Minister once again that that will not wash with the people of Canada. They want leadership on the environment and they are not getting it. She can smile, but it may be one of her last smiles as the people of Canada finally mobilize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have heard nothing from this Government on what action it intends to take to encourage the U.S. administration to take action to force its industries along the Niagara River to clean up leaking dump sites. One of the most pressing problems we face is the devastation of acid rain. At least 50 per cent of it comes from the U.S. and showers down on our forests, lakes and rivers, not only polluting but killing and poisoning. What was the Minister's response when we first brought this issue up in the House? Here are her exact words: "It is not a priority." The Prime Minister's response: "We are not doing our part on this side of the border so how can we expect the Americans to do theirs?" But as our critic, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who spoke so eloquently this morning, was so quick to point out, the truth is the opposite. Canada has done very well in reducing acid rain. We have had a program in place to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions by 25 per cent by 1990, and 50 per cent by 1994. The U.S. has no such program. They produce 19.6 million tons of nitrous oxide per year while we produce 1.7 million tons. So let us not play around with the facts in this particular case.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that acid rain was going to be at the top of his agenda at the Quebec Summit. We threw all our cards on the table. We told the Americans we were mostly to blame. We put in a last minute $300 million program spread over a number of years, true, but we told the President of the United States in effect not to worry about it; mea culpa on the Canadian side, we are responsible. So the President came here hardly believing that we took the issue seriously on this side of the border. We threw all the cards on the table and got nothing in return. All we got was two envoys, Drew Lewis from the United States, the former Secretary of Transport—and there is nothing wrong with that—and we got the former Premier of Ontario, William Grenville Davis.

Mr. Darling: Nothing wrong with that either.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Nothing wrong with that if he wants to do something about it, but I suggested to this House before, and I say this to the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) that the $1 per year which Bill Davis, in his patriotic fervour, is accepting, I venture to say that a year from now he will be overpaid at that.

What about the urgency with which Mr. Davis and his colleague, Mr. Lewis, have been taking this matter? They finally met just before the weekend, an hour and a half over a cup of tea or coffee or whatever was served. What was the purpose of the meeting? To get acquainted. A nice one and a half hour meeting to get acquainted. When is the next meeting going to be held? We do not know, they did not tell us. That is the type of urgency displayed by this Government and the U.S. administration, such that they are devoting another year of study, a moratorium and no action.

It is not just members of this Party who are critical. Congressman Henry Waxman of the United States calls it "just another delaying tactic". The action of the American administration and of our Government has been criticized by the Audubon Society, the Sierra Club, the National Clean Air Coalition, the Canadian Acid Rain Coalition, but you will be comforted to know that the acid rain envoys have finally met to become acquainted. That is the only action we got.

What we should be proposing from this side of the border is a clean air treaty binding on the U.S. and Canada, just as the Boundary Waters Treaty has helped us clean up the Great Lakes. We should have the same monitoring system and the same power of enforcement. We should have the same commitment of the Governments and the same dedication these two countries together since 1904 have devoted to the Great Lakes. With a lot of effort over the last 10 or 15 years, Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and Lake Michigan have been cleaned up. There are salmon again in Lake Michigan and Lake Ontario. In the same way when the two countries get together they can do something about the air. Just as important as the water along our international boundary, right up the same St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes system into the Superior-Quetico system, into the Kenora-Rainy River system, all the joint waters we share, equally important is the air we breathe crossing that border in both directions. The prevailing winds are now dumping refuse and poison on our forests and our lakes. What this Government should really be doing is bringing to Parliament and the committee a clean air treaty which will be signed and binding on both sides of the border, having been legislated in Parliament to cover federal jurisdiction and legislated in the Legislatures to cover areas of provincial jurisdiction. That is what we need.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Members of the Government are smiling and laughing at Canadians who are concerned about this very serious problem. But there is another urgent issue which is not a laughing matter either. There is the disastrous spill of PCBs on the Trans-Canada Highway near Kenora in northern Ontario. Let me say first of all that there is absolutely no scientific doubt that PCBs are dangerous. They have been found around the world, they are carcinogenic and can cause other health problems. As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) said, we do not know how long traces of those chemical substances can stay in the system in a sub-viral way until they become lethal years later. We do not know.

We learned last week that as part of the November cuts announced by the Minister of Finance, the Government of Canada cancelled an important study by the National Research Council on the assessment and analysis of PCBs requested by the Government of Ontario. Now, isn't that dandy? In addition, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) pointed out on Friday, the Government has also downgraded the provision of the Department of the Environment dealing with the emergencies in the interprovincial transportation of dangerous goods by 25 per cent, or some $1 million. Isn't that dandy? The services which could help the Canadian people to be prepared, to anticipate and to forestall a repetition of this kind of tragedy have been cut by the Government of Canada.

What was the initial response by the Minister on hearing of the PCB spill in Kenora? I can cite Hansard, and if she denies it we will quote it back to her this afternoon. Was her reaction one of outrage? Was it concern for the individuals and families involved? Was it concern for the safety of transporting dangerous and toxic materials? Was it a promise to ensure that this tragedy would not be repeated? No, it was none of those. The Minister's response was simply a rather pathetic claim that this spill of a toxic substance endangering the health of the people in the area, and possibly anyone else on the Trans-Canada Highway from Montreal to Kenora, was a provincial responsibility.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): She implied that it was just a little problem which the provinces could handle. After all, the Minister of the Environment of Ontario had assured everyone that the only ones in danger were roadside rats which might eat the PCBs. He may be on an election trail, but he certainly is not in control of his Ministry. That reply was echoed by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and the Minister of Transport. The Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) was not in the House when I put the question and it was responded to by the Minister of Fisheries. Anyone who says that maybe only a few rats will be involved really does not understand the gravity of the situation.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) has said, there is possibly a path of poison stretching from Montreal, through Hudson, Quebec and Hawkesbury, through this capital City of Ottawa, up to Arnprior, Renfrew, Pembroke and North Bay, through Sudbury and the north shore of Lake Superior right to Thunder Bay. We have heard people complaining about the effects of the PCBs such as rashes on children and nausea in adults. There is a general fear and apprehension over this spill. Meanwhile, the Minister is behaving like a latter day Lady MacBeth trying to absolve herself of responsibility. "Out, damned spot!" She hopes it is going to go away. She is a modern day Lady MacBeth hoping that the environmental traces left by this poison across the Trans-Canada Highway will go away and that people will forget about it. People are not going to forget about it. They are not going to forgive or forget.

There was a PCB spill on Friday in the Bank of Canada building in the capital. I do not know how much was spilled. I do not know whether the Minister has been advised of it yet. I would advise her to consult her colleagues. One employee has been affected already. I will give her a little lead time because we are going to ask her about it tomorrow, perhaps. Avis au préalable.

The Hon. Minister cannot wash her hands of this dangerous spill. She cannot wash her hands of the responsibility which she and the Government have to ensure that Canadians are protected from these dangerous chemicals. It is in the legislation and in her mandate as Minister. It is high time she lived up to her responsibility.

How many other trucks on the roads are carrying these toxic chemicals? How many other people's lives and health are being put at risk? We do not know. What is even more shocking and disturbing is that the Government does not know either. It is high time that the Government abandoned the idea that the protection of the environment and of Canadians from dangerous substances is something to be placed last on a list of priorities. It is not. It is time that the Government abandoned the idea that it is OK to ravage our environment today, because we can always clean it up. In fact we cannot. It is high time the Government abandoned the idea that provincial Governments, the private sector, or Governments of other countries are going to take the lead in protecting our environment. Mr. Speaker, they are not.

It is high time the Government woke up to the fact that Canadians are not going to sit idly by while the responsibility to protect and enhance our environment is neglected, because they will not, and neither will Members on this side of the House. We will not allow the Government to continue in its direlection, negligence and abandonment of its responsibilities affecting the birthright, heritage, and environment of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, although I agree with a great many of the things that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said, the motion moved by the Official Opposition has to do with environmental policy in general. In that context I would like to ask him a question about an issue on which his caucus seems to be speaking with two voices. My question is with regard to the proposal known as the Grand Canal. That is a proposal to damn James Bay, turn it into a fresh water lake of great magnitude, and pipe or otherwise divert water from there to southern Ontario and to the United States of America.

I have heard two different voices from the Liberal caucus on this matter. I have heard the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) indicate that he is against that, if I understood him correctly. On Friday I heard the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) speak favourably about that same project. He asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about it, and the Prime Minister seemed to speak favourably about that megaproject.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest environmental issues of the coming decade will be the future of water in this country and how we handled the 20 per cent of the world's water supply that happens to be entrusted to Canadians. Would the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition tell us where he stands on this megaproject proposal? I happen to think it is one of the most bizarre ideas to come along in a long time.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg-Birds Hill took some advice from one of our Alberta colleagues who has been around here for a long time. I was here in 1962 and 1963 and had the honour of being the Parliamentary Secretary to the late Arthur Laing who was then the Member of Parliament for Vancouver South and our Minister of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources, as he then called the portfolio. He was a very great British Columbian and a great Canadian. I had the responsibility of liaising with the standing committee. In those days we brought our treaties to Parliament. My first task was piloting through the committee the Columbia River Treaty, which involved the export of water to the United States. I recognized the concern that was building up in British Columbia and across the country with regard to whether we would ever have a future Columbia River Treaty type of project or whether we would keep the water and export the power instead.

In 1963, Tom Kierns, who was then living in Sudbury and now lives in St. John's, Newfoundland, brought his Grand River project, or Harricanaw River project as it was then called, before the standing committee. He asked to be heard as a witness. I had the opportunity of listening to him and cross-examining him on behalf of the Liberal Members on that committee.

That project involved the diversion of waters that are now flowing aimlessly into Hudson's Bay and the Arctic, back into the Great Lakes river system and the joint international waterways of the United States and Canada. It was very deep environmental and economic impacts. It goes right to the heart of the political sovereignty of our waters. My colleague, the Member for Davenport, has taken a personal position against the export of water. I can understand his feelings. I can understand the feelings of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, who wants the project constructively studied.

I think this matter should come before the House and a standing committee so that the economic, environmental, political and social impacts can be analysed and we can determine whether Canadians wish to become part of a North American water scheme.

At one time when I was in Washington as Parliamentary Secretary I met with the late Frank Moss, senior Senator for the State of Utah, who was very interested in this same project. I told him, and later a congressional committee, that there is no such thing as a North American resource policy or a North American water policy. There is an American resource policy and a Canadian resource policy. That is the subject that would have to be investigated by this particular committee.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my question is prompted by the number of times that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) ignored parliamentary procedure and made reference to attendance in the House. I would not normally bring this matter up, but since the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has chosen this forum to fight the Ontario election, I would like to ask him if he has chosen this forum because—

• (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Both Hon. Members know that comments of that nature are out of order. I know that the Hon. Member will say what is good for the goose is good for the gander, but the goose and the gander are both out of order. No one should raise the question about who is absent from the House. I am sure all Hon. Members realize that. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, is the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition choosing to fight the Ontario election in this forum because he will not be given any position on the hustings by David Peterson, Leader of the Ontario Liberal Party?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, you know how frivolous that question is, but I will answer it, not because I want to give credibility to the Member but because I want to give dignity to the House by responding to questions.

The answer to the first part of the question is yes, the Member is right that we do not refer to the absence or presence of Members in the House. However, this motion concerns the Minister and therefore I believe her presence is essential in terms of courtesy and of the dignity of the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: She is here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): She is here this time. She was not here the last time. It is also relevant, when issues involving a crisis such as the tragedy of PCBs, is raised perpetually and repeatedly in the House and does not receive the attention of the Minister because she does not happen to be here. I think that is relevant.

With respect to the Ontario election, I do not know whether the Hon. Member would like to follow me but I will be in Hamilton on Thursday and Renfew and Pembroke following that. I want to assure him that there is very, very close co-operation between the two Parties, not a type of closed circuit, hermetically sealed television between the two leaders.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the right hon. gentleman criticizing the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and in particular making remarks as to her demeanour, facial expressions and so on. Although I was disappointed at hearing it, I must say that I was incredulous at references to Lady MacBeth and remarks of that nature. He went on to accuse the Minister of not taking this matter seriously. He suggested that she did not understand the gravity of the situation with regard to PCBs. The Hon. Minister and our Party indeed take the situation seriously.

How does the Right Hon. Member reconcile his concern about the gravity of the PCB situation with the remarks of one of his colleagues, the rather shrill lady, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)? Last week in the House, during a very serious question posed by the Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) with regard to grasshoppers, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East said, "Spray them with PCBs".

Why does the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) find the remarks attributed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment offensive but he somehow glosses over the remarks of his own back-benchers?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that preamble was so labyrinthine that I really got lost.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, we in Manitoba are very concerned about environmental problems there, and this nonsense of laying the blame on one Government is simply not acceptable. All of them must make improvements and we must find huge sums of money to help out because one problem is that it will require billions of dollars.

One of our concerns in Manitoba is that the levels of mercury at South Indian Lake are four times the accepted level. If these socialist hypocrites are so concerned about the environment, I find it very strange that this issue has not entered into the debate today and into questions in the House. I certainly will be pursuing the Minister about dealing with this problem and I want her to find out if criminal charges should be laid against the NDP Government in Manitoba for its negligence in this area at South Indian Lake.

Furthermore, I am concerned about the statement made by the Canadian Nature Federation. Its shows that Ontario—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The time for questions and comments has expired. I will recognize the next Member to speak on debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would you enlighten the House as to whether there is some criterion guiding the Chair which states that questions and comments must be at least remotely relevant to the speech made by the previous speaker? Should not the remarks of the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) be related to the previous Member's speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe it is left up to the Speaker to decide whether or not they are relevant. I did not let the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) carry on with his remarks, and I would do the same the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) if he were doing the same thing.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government has displayed negligence with regard to the protection, maintenance and improvement of the environment as manifested in its ill-advised reduction in services, its complacent attitude toward controlling potential hazards and its complete abdication of any leadership in the protection of the environmental health and safety of Canadians.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I was going to respond to some of the comments made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). On reflection, however, I think he will agree with me, after he has had an opportunity to read and assess the content of his speech and some of the points he made, particularly with reference to the attendance of some Hon. Members, that today is not one of his better days in the House of Commons. I say that with the greatest of respect because I have known the right hon. gentleman for a long time. He has been a distinguished parliamentarian and I am saddened by the fact that he has engaged in an action today that is really not very becoming nor up to the high standards that he has set.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What you really mean is that you want to read your own speech.

Mr. Mazankowski: Unlike the Hon. Member, no one has prepared a speech for me. I know that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has thrown away the cue cards and has prepared his own speeches. That is quite obvious, but there is nothing wrong with that.

At the outset let me say that we have heard a lot of flim-flammery—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Don't look at those notes.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have heard a lot of flim-flam and advice from instant experts today. We have heard much about what should have been done with the benefit of 20-20 hindsight.

When the Opposition, particularly members of the Official Opposition, engage in the practice of suggesting what should be done on the basis of hindsight and condemning this Government and the Ontario Government, it is, in effect, condemning itself. It was the Liberals who were derelict by their own standards. They cannot escape that. When they occupied the Treasury benches they failed to do many of the things that we are doing today.

The right hon. gentleman said that we should have a Clean Air Act. Judging from some of what he said and the remarks of some of his colleagues, I suggest we need a hot air Act to clean up some of the rhetoric and flimflam in the House of Commons.

The fact is that this is a serious matter, one that is complex. It is an issue in which there is a split jurisdiction. There is no question that we must respect that jurisdictional issue. May I simply remind Hon. Members that the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act was proclaimed on November 1, 1980.

• (1620)

The last Government had four years to promulgate the regulations respecting the transportation of dangerous goods. It had four years. We came into office and accelerated the process. We announced the regulations on January 24 and worked out a deal with the provinces and the industry so they could be phased in in an orderly way. The purpose of the Act is to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods. The Act covers all modes. For the first time we have a single legislative authority to deal with the handling of things for transport, offering for transport and transporting Dangerous Goods. A lot of it emanated from the initiative of the Conservative Government in 1979, which accelrated the passage of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act and then caused a full-scale inquiry into the Mississauga incident. It really provided the framework for the establishment of the legislation and the rules and regulations which we are now putting in place.

The control and regulation of transportation is a shared responsibility between the federal, the provincial and the territorial Governments. The transportation of dangerous goods was partially regulated up to this time in more than 20 different statutes. When you have 20 different statutes, it really takes a little work to try to consolidate that effort into one embodying piece of legislation and one embodying group of regulations. That is what has been done. It requires negotiation and co-operation. It requires respect for the jurisdiction of the two levels of Government. That is what we have tried to do.

I do not think there is anyone in this House that has a monopoly on safety. As far as we are concerned, our Government and the actions of individual Members really speak loud and clear. In 1979, as I said earlier, we commissioned the Grange inquiry into the Mississauga incident, which was a major step forward. In 1979 we commissioned the Dubin inquiry into aviation safety. The legislation framework flowing from those recommendations is currently before the House and the committee. We accelerated the transportation of dangerous goods Bill. We did not water it down, as the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) said. There was no watering down. There was an acceleration. As a matter of fact, this was done against the wishes and the desires of the provinces, the industry and specifically the trucking industry. There was a clear understanding by the former Minister of Transport that these regulations would not be promulgated for a year. I can show stacks of correspondence from the respective provincial Governments, the trucking association and so on, recommending that the transportation of dangerous goods regulations not be promulgated in 1985 but rather in 1986. We said that in the interest of public safety and in the interest of transportation safety we must act, which is not to suggest that people should not follow good practices before the regulations are in effect. A good trucker and a good operator is following the rules today.

There are unwritten rules, the rules with respect to containers for the transportation of flammable goods, for instance. Theoretically there is nothing in effect, but practically most operators follow a very strict code. Some operators voluntarily do a good job and others do not. What we are trying to do is to move toward the establishment of a clearly understood, clearly enforceable set of regulations with which everyone can live and which everyone can respect. That is what has been going on.

What is unfortunate about this debate—and it was alluded to by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner)—is the fact that both Parties have seemed more interested in scoring political points by bringing the Ontario election to the floor of the House of Commons than in dealing with the hard issues. It was reflected in the way in which the Hon. Member for Birds Hill—

Mr. Blaikie: Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Mazankowski: Excuse me, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He tried to explain away the disastrous record of the NDP Government in Manitoba concerning environmental issues. When he was trying to explain to the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) and to rationalize that study, it reminded me somewhat of his own leader claiming victory in the last election while at the same time losing two seats.

Mr. Blaikie: One seat.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact is that the Winnipeg Free Press of March 15 had a headline which read, "Province fails test on environment".

Mr. Keeper: You will lose a lot more than two next time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Probably that Government in Winnipeg with its record on the environment will be turfed right out, as it should be with this kind of record. Let me quote as follows from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press:

> Manitoba does less than any other Canadian province to protect its environment, says the Canadian Nature Federation.

Look at that double standard, Mr. Speaker. People are trying to lay the whole blame on the Province of Ontario. Here is another headline: "Manitoba score in forestry area lowest in report". Who is number one in this report, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McKenzie: Ontario.

Mr. Mazankowski: Alberta is number one in this report.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Ontario is number two.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: And you know where Manitoba is, Mr. Speaker? Manitoba is number 10 right at the bottom of the heap. That is where that fellow will be right after the next election if he keeps spouting non-substantiated information. He talks in a very sincere way. He is a good performer. I give him full credit.

An Hon. Member: A bit sanctimonious.

Mr. Mazankowski: Sanctimonious a bit, just a bit. That is right. I can tell Hon. Members that most of the Hon. Member's words are hollow. They somewhat express a double standard, particularly when he attempts to lay the total blame on the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Blaikie: He tried to lay it on you.

Mr. Mazankowski: He has been fair. I must say he has been fair with me, but we have to put this whole debate into perspective.

Mr. Keeper: We do not want to be too rough on you.

Mr. Mazankowski: I appreciate that. The Hon. Member said he did not want to be too rough on me, and I appreciate that comment. He knows I am a very kind, considerate, and compassionate person and that I like to do my job.

An Hon. Member: And modest?

Mr. Mazankowski: And modest, very modest, as well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I know that this issue has evoked a lot of emotion. There have been a lot of impassioned statements. Some of them have been useful. This debate has been useful, there is no question about that. I think it is appropriate that the Opposition should bring forth an issue like this for debate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Thanks a lot, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: I appreciate that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition engaged in the debate even though it was not one of his better days. He did much better on Saturday night.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You were in a much better mood on Saturday night.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: It has served a useful purpose and I think it is important for all of us to be cognizant of the fact that emotion and rhetoric will not resolve the problem. We have to approach this issue in a very responsible fashion and in a practical way. When I hear some of the suggestions coming forward, they are difficult to understand, such as, for example, having convoys associated with the movement of dangerous goods. If you really break that right down, it means you would have a convoy with every gas tanker going up and down the highway for every truckload of muriatic acid, or sulphuric acid or caustic soda. We know that is not practical. People are now suggesting that the directive I issued on Friday should have called for a convoy. If the PCBs are put in proper containers and are properly fastened, there should not be any need for a convoy. They should not be any more dangerous than gasoline tankers going up and down the road. I mean, talk about an explosion if a gasoline tanker hit a corner store in Kenora! The whole community could be wiped out. Surely Hon. Members are not suggesting that we put convoys with every gasoline tanker which goes up and down the road. I think Hon. Members are carried away with these kinds of impractical suggestions. Surely there is a happy medium, surely there is a responsibility which we must all take. However, let us be realistic and practical. Let us engage in some common sense. Hopefully, after the Ontario election is over, we will have that sort of common sense and practical approach on the part of Hon. Members across the way.

● (1630)

Mr. Parry: With an NDP Government you will.

Mr. Mazankowski: We heard that leading up to the September 4 election, and I think the results speak for themselves.

I should like to deal with the role of Transport Canada in respect of this spill. CANUTEC was advised within two hours of the occurrence of the accident. There was constant communication at all times with all Departments of the Ontario Government which were on site, the police department, the emergency co-ordinator, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and our own Department. When it was deemed appropriate, there was a representative of Transport Canada on the scene.

Last Friday, as all Hon. Members know, I tabled a directive which has the effect of providing for very strict regulations with respect to the movement of PCBs. I will not go into the details. I think the record speaks for itself. As well, today I instructed the Inspector General of Transportation Safety, Mr. K. J. Thorneycroft, to commence an investigation at the earliest time possible into the circumstances and subsequent events of the April 14 spill of polychlorinated biphenyls at Kenora, Ontario. I have asked that a preliminary report be made to me by May 30 and that a final report be submitted to me by July 30. We believe this is important, having regard to the fact we are just in the process of promulgating and indeed enforcing the rules and regulations with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods. The information we may be able to obtain as to what was done, what was not done or what should have been done will be most important. I know there will be other investigations. This is certainly not meant to pre-empt other investigations, but it will certainly ensure Transport Canada's presence.

The investigations and reports are to be comprehensive and include all circumstances and subsequent events of the accident falling within the mandate of Transport Canada. We are asking the Inspector General to identify and report upon the responsibilities and actions of other federal Departments whose mandates may have encompassed the general or specific aspects of the accident. We are asking for his report to set out the general and specific responsibilities of the provincial Government in the circumstances and subsequent events of the accident and to link those responsibilities to that of Transport Canada and other federal agencies.

Despite the criticism, I think all Hon. Members will agree that we have taken action within the mandate given to us. When one sits down and analyses the matter, one finds that, while it was a serious accident, I suspect one could say, thank God it was not more serious. We will certainly be doing everything we can to prevent such occurrences. However, I believe that we will all agree—in the final analysis—that the Kenora accident, while serious, was professionally and properly handled by personnel of various provincial and federal agencies. We have learned lessons from the accident. We have made appropriate responses to reduce the possibility of further such incidents. Perhaps what we have to do is to address more vigorously the larger question, that is, how we dispose of products such as PCBs. That poses a very serious question regarding public attitudes, the location of disposal sites and methods of disposal.

As one who comes from the Province of Alberta, I can say that this has been a very hotly debated issue. Many people residing in that province are asking the following question: How come they are hauling all that waste from Quebec and Ontario and parking it in our backyard? There are some very legitimate questions about the principle of where disposal sites will be located and whether in fact we should be engaging in the transportation of these goods, particularly over such long distances.

The issue has focused on some very fundamental questions with which we have to deal. I welcome the opportunity to have been able to say a few words about this particular issue. I certainly thank all Hon. Members for their suggestions and their advice. I am sure we will be watching very closely the reviews, reports and investigations which come out. Hopefully we will be able to transform them into legislation and regulations which would serve to prevent a further recurrence of such a serious issue.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister complained about the Opposition dealing from hindsight, the event having taken place and the wisdom of being able to look back at it. I wonder whether he mentioned the Mississauga incident of a number of years ago.

There was an explosion in the CPR yards in Winnipeg. It was a small explosion but it scared many people. There were local calls for the mandating of an investigation with judicial powers to investigate the danger of the CPR yards being located in Winnipeg. I am wondering whether we have to wait for another accident in that city. Could the Minister take a serious look at the location of the yards in Winnipeg and at the potential danger in a city of half a million people? He has the Mississauga study in his hands. I wonder whether he would look forward and see whether anything could be done about the calls of the community of Winnipeg for a full public and judicial inquiry into the previous accident in that city rather than wait for a future accident to take place.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is implying that we should move the rail yards. There are many cities from which rail yards should perhaps be moved. The question is whether we can afford it. There are costs involved. The City of Calgary has the same problem. Every major city has the same problem.

When the Mississauga incident occurred, I think the present environment critic—perhaps I am wrong there—or one of his colleagues came forth and said that we should put a ban on the movement of all dangerous goods through the City of Toronto. That may seem appropriate in the heat of debate on an issue, but it does not make sense. The fact of the matter is that if we were to put that sort of moratorium on the movement of all dangerous goods, it would grind our country to a halt.

Yes, it is a very serious matter. I think the issue, in particular, has been addressed by the CTC. Some very good recommendations have come forward which are being considered by the Inspector General of Transportation Safety and will probably form part of the future regulations that will be promulgated with respect to the kinds of containers in which dangerous goods should be shipped. The simple answer is yes. I suppose at one time we wanted the railroads running right through towns. At one time we wanted all our highways running right smack dab down the middle of Main Street. Those attitudes have now changed. The cost of adjusting to current day realities is exorbitant, but in the meantime there is much we can do in improving safety and standards with respect to the movement of dangerous goods. I think progress has been made with respect to the rail field in particular.

Truckers have complained to me about the fact that we have given railways from five to maybe ten years to improve their standards with respect to safety and that we are asking them to do it within a shorter timeframe. They have told me that they will co-operate but that there is a balance and a degree of practicability which has to be taken into account when abiding by the rules and regulations. It is easy to stand in the House and say that we will force them to do something. However, we have found that we can probably work it out in a much better fashion if there is understanding and respect and if we are working together in a co-operative way.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with two matters which the Minister spoke of in his speech. He indicated that the legislation on the transportation of dangerous goods was a single legislative authority. As I add it, there are some 26 jurisdictions; federal, territorial and provincial Departments of Transport, federal, territorial and provincial—federal Departments of the Environment. There may be some areas where the Department of Labour is involved as well as some federal Government agencies. That is the problem. Too many, including myself, have the impression that no one is really in charge.

Does the Minister agree that it is time to retain under a single federal jurisdiction the transportation of dangerous goods? I have no objection to reciprocal arrangements between provinces with regard to speed, weight limits and size of vehicle. However, on the transportation of dangerous goods and health and safety standards, will the Minister agree that we should return to the sole jurisdiction of the federal authority? The Minister is responsible for interprovincial and international trucking.

My second question to the Minister has to do with his remarks about convoys. I was in the Armed Forces during World War II. When we moved artillery shells, plastic explosives or other high explosives, we travelled in convoy. There had to be at least one vehicle following so that if anything did happen, somebody would be there to do something about it. I do not accept the Minister's comment that convoys would be necessary for the transportation of every dangerous good. With regard to gasoline and so forth, we have experience, technology and equipment whereby they can be transported safely.

In the last 10 or 12 years, we have been in the phase of transporting new dangerous goods, such as PCBs and atomic waste, with which we have little or no experience. Until such time as we have the experience and the proper equipment, does that not call for convoying? It can be done by highway patrol. When a vehicle reaches a province, it could be followed. Something could then be done in the event of a truck going off the road or the driver falling asleep. Anything could happen until such time as the regulations are in place and we have the proper equipment, experience and knowledge with regard to the movement of these new hazardous products.

Mr. Mazankowski: There we go again, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious that the Hon. Member knows more about PCBs, their impact, toxicity and danger than I or anyone in this House, surely more than the Inspector General with regard to safety or those who will be investigating this. If after the review there is a strong recommendation made that future transport of PCBs should be governed in such a way that they are accompanied by convoys, certainly we will give it close consideration. However, the Hon. Member is engaging in the kind of overkill I talked about earlier. I am not discounting it totally. However, there has to be a reason for it. I know the Member has a lot of experience in transportation. However, I would need a better authority than him before I would make that kind of recommendation.

With respect to the split jurisdiction, the Hon. Member is right. There are a number of different legislative statutes. We have been trying to embody them in one piece of legislation and one regulatory framework. That is being achieved. It just takes a little time. I do not think we would get very far if we came in by unilateral decree and said that we are going to do this, here is the hammer, do this or else. What we have done is make progress through co-operation, consultation, collaboration and working together.

The federal Government is the co-ordinating body. The Transportation of Dangerous Goods directorate is located here in Transport Canada. The directorate has inspectors for industry compliance in Vancouver, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal and Dartmouth. The Transport Canada air administration and marine administration have regional inspectors located throughout the country. The federal Government is taking a lead role in co-ordinating.

I repeat, and this is something we all have to recognize, safety is a shared responsibility. The transportation of dangerous goods, by virtue of our legislative framework, is a shared responsibility. We have tried to bring some order into that sharing so that there will be a clearer delineation of authority. I regret that it takes a little time. However, when the regulations are promulgated in July in an orderly way and subsequently upgraded to cover some other matters, I think Hon. Members will recognize that we probably have gone the right way.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short comment on the accusation levelled against me by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) whith respect to having a double standard. I take that kind of accusation very seriously. If the Minister checks the record, he will see that as far back as my maiden speech in 1979, I indicated with regard to environmental concerns that I thought all political Parties and all ideological traditions in this country have a blind spot when it comes to that.

The Minister will also notice if he checks the record that on occasion I have been critical of NDP Governments for environmental policies that I have not agreed with, most notably the Uranium mining in Saskatchewan on the part of the NDP Government at that time. I ask the Minister of Transport to consider that because I take very seriously the charge of a double standard. I do not have one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Minister's time—

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I in any way offended the Hon. Member, I certainly want to apologize. I was not my intention to do so. In the thrust of debate, we probably say things that may be interpreted in a manner that may leave that implication, but I have the highest regard and respect for the Hon. Member. I know he sincerely deals with these issues with a great deal of vigour. Nothwithstanding that fact, he did have a little difficulty defending the record of his colleagues in the Manitoba legislature. It was in that context that I was suggesting that perhaps he was not as fair as he usually is.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House and add my comments on the motion moved by my hon. friend from Davenport (Mr. Caccia). First of all, Government Members may find my hon. colleague's motion rather severe, but if we look at this Government's record on environmental affairs since it came to power last September, the conclusion is, unfortunately, that the Hon. Member for Davenport was being relatively polite and moderate when he sat down at his desk to draft the motion before the House today. Mr. Speaker, this morning I was watching the Minister, who gave us a deplorable performance in response to the motion moved by the Liberal Party on this Opposition day. I say deplorable, because the Minister spent more than three quarters of her time criticizing the Opposition and attacking the Opposition parties, especially our party, in every way she could, instead of rising to defend the Government's record. Well, I can see why she acted the way she did, because first of all, the Government's performance on environmental affairs since last fall is not easy to defend, and one of the best examples is the incident that occurred recently, and I am referring to the spill of toxic materials, more specifically, PCB's, in Ontario near the town of Kenora last week. It is no surprise to me that the Minister should be constantly attacking the Opposition, nor her concern to wash her hands of any responsibility in this area, something she has been doing for most of the last week. Today, we hear the Government defending itself by attacking the Opposition and accusing us of having tried to score political points with this spill of toxic substances in our environment. Just think: an Opposition party that is just doing its work and trying to reflect public opinion by putting pertinent questions to the Government is now being accused by this Government of trying to score political points. Anyone reading the papers or watching television during the past week would realize that aside from politicians, everybody was talking about the very serious news of the PBC spill in Ontario. Why should an Opposition Party worthy of the name, as the Liberal Party believes itself to be, refrain from asking the Government pertinent questions about its involvement in this case, and the delay in dealing seriously with this incident? Why? Because we would be accused of wanting to score political points? Of wanting to act responsibly in the House?

The Minister's comments, which lacked substance, consisted for instance, in saying that legislation on the transport of hazardous materials should have been implemented by the previous Government. It is true that the legislation was adopted by the House of Commons some time ago, and that because of negotiations with the provinces, the regulations were not yet in place. However, today the Minister is going to have to deal with similar problems because when my hon. colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) asked her what she was going to do about disposing of toxic materials such as the PBCs, the Minister said she was currently discussing the matter with the provinces with a view to deciding on disposal procedures and finding appropriate sites.

I would like to point out to the Minister that such discussions cannot go on for much longer, because the Minister already has a problem now. The Province of Alberta announced last week that its PCB disposal site would no longer be open for the disposal of toxic substances from outside the province and that the site would be reserved solely for PCBs within the province.

I would therefore point out to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), who has just come back to the House, that she will have to hurry up her discussions with her provincial counterparts, because she cannot afford to spend months on finding ways to dispose of these substances. A cleanup is taking place in Ontario at the present time, and the substances will have to be disposed of somewhere. And according to what we are told by Mr. Lougheed's Government, there will be no disposal of Ontario's PCBs in Alberta.

I think the attitude of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) was rather odd just now when he asked the House some questions, and he said:

[English]

"The problem is, how do we dispose of PCBs?" Is that not a strange question for a Minister of the Crown to be asking? As a matter of fact, that is the question which everyone at home is asking. However, one is likely to expect a Minister of the Crown to have some sort of answer. No, the Minister asks: "How do we dispose of these substances? How come they are hauling that stuff across the land?"

[Translation]

These are questions everyone is asking in Canada, but that we would not expect a minister to ask. I can give part of the answer to the Minister of Transport and the Minister of the Environment. I would say that the role of these two ministers is to make every effort to discourage the transport of these dangerous substances instead of asking why they are being transported. Their role is to discourage the transport of these substances and to identify as soon as possible sites where these substances can be kept which are closer to where they are being used. It is all very well to regulate the transport of these substances, but the best practical solution to the problem would be to discourage such transport and to speed up research on methods and technologies to dispose of these substances. The solution is not to act surprised and say: Heavens, why is it that such substances are being transported across Canada?

These are the two pieces of advice that I can give the Department, first find ways to discourage the transport of these substances, and second, determine how they can be destroyed.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, my comments will now deal with acid rain, an extremely hot issue, especially in my own Province of Quebec and also in Ontario. As we know, those provinces are the most threatened by winds blowing from the South that carry SO_2, nitric oxydes and other gases in solution in the atmosphere that acidify our rain, endanger marine life in our lakes, curtail the production of maple sap as we have been told recently and damage certain other crops. Despite all the racket we hear from this Tory Government since it came to power who wants to have us believe that they have a quick, adequate and serious solution to the problem of acid rain, we should not forget that measures to that end had been initiated well before this Government came to power.

Under the previous Liberal administration, the goals of a 25 per cent reduction of emissions by 1990 and 50 per cent by 1994 had already been agreed upon with the Provinces. Of course we have been subjected more recently to the public relations ploy of the Minister of Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) appearing with the provincial ministers before the public to once more celebrate the fact that those standards had already been accepted. On that occasion came the announcement of a $2 billion program to clean up the atmosphere over the next ten years. But I suggest this is a project without muscle because the federal Government is committed to spend a mere $300 million over ten years, or some $30 million a year. In line with that public relations ploy, the Canadian Government bragged in front of the TV cameras: "We are going to make a big clean-up, but suggested that every citizen would have to pay. Every buyer of a new car will be dishing out close to $200 to have presumably an internal device, a catalyst to reduce emissions. But all Canadians will have to pay for it.

The federal Government bares its teeth without having the money to carry out its plans.

And after that first public relations exercise comes the second one in Quebec City, which saw the demise of all those beautiful government plans and the abdication before the American Government: "Yes, Mr. President, we are going to wait another year before making any move, before going further along the road to acid rain reduction. Yes, Mr. President, if it is your wish, instead of acting now and signing an agreement, we are going to appoint two representatives, two envoys who will spend a year thinking about the acid rain problem and who will then make a report." There is quite a gap between that second public relations exercise and the first one launched a month or a month and half earlier when we were told: "We are going to act now on acid rains. We are going to reduce emissions by 25 and 50 per cent in 1990 and 1994 respectively." As soon as Uncle Sam sets foot on Canadian Soil, out comes the jug of Irish Whiskey. And we hear: "Yes, Mr. President, we understand, we are willing to wait, we know that expenditures to reduce the huge quantity of acid rain blowing in from the United States are very heavy. We do understand. We will wait".

For sure this is not a conrageous attitude. Looking at those facts, it is more readily realized that the motion put forward by my friend for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) may sound harsh. In fact, it is not harsh at all, it reflects the moral offence of someone who fought for years to protect the environment in Canada, who has been sent into in opposition by voters but who lost nothing of his aggressiveness and commitment to the Canadian environment. And I very well understand my colleague for not being satisfied with the treatment applied by this Government to our environment problems, and I understand very well that he would put such a motion forward.

Mr. Speaker, to this day, this Government has no reason to brag about its performance in the area of the environment. And since the Minister of Environment is now back in the House and is listening to some of our remarks, I only wish that over the coming months and for the time she will be holding that portfolio, she will deal more seriously with the problems facing her.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Gary Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have been here only for the last three speeches. I heard a little of the speech of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who is not here, unfortunately, to hear my reaction to some of his comments. I really think it would have been a lot more appropriate if this motion had been changed, in fact. I believe an appropriate motion which could have been discussed intelligently by Hon. Members on all sides of the House, would probably read as follows:

> After years of relative neglect, relatively unproductive efforts, inconsistent and often inadequate funding, the Government should be strongly encouraged to advance the protection of our environment with the principles that have already been established by the Progressive Conservative Government, and those are of rapid implementation of action plans; continued tangible financial commitments like the $350 million that we have brought forward for the acid rain seduction program; continued and improved communication and co-operation such as with the Hare Commission, the MMT study group and others; and the continued co-operation and working with industry, provinces, the scientific and other interested parties, to help make the Canadian environment safe.
> Further, that the Government should be encouraged to continue to demonstrate the important leadership that it has established through many government Departments, including the Prime Minister's Office, and to ensure that the next generations do not face the continued and unfortunate abuses that have been thus far threatening our environmental future.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the record over the last seven months, that would be a genuine, reasonable and honest type of motion which we could debate. I believe that this Government wants to be encouraged in the handling and management of the environment and important environmental issues which will continue to come before it.

Why are we dealing with the PCB problem, Mr. Speaker? Why are we dealing with acid rain? Why are we dealing with difficulties in transportation of any dangerous or hazardous products? What is the problem? How serious is the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) when he can bring forward a motion such as the one he has knowing that for the last number of years in a number of areas there has simply been an inadequacy in dealing with the important issues? There is example after example of the type of thing to which I am referring. Let us take acid rain, for example. Back in 1977, acid rain was identified by a Minister of the then Government as a ticking time bomb. Since that time how much reduction have we really accomplished? What do we have to show until the last six months in terms of an action plan which would bring about a satisfactory resolution? There have been goals. There have been some nice words and some great debate. But where was the solid plan? If there has been a piece of legislation brought forward or some kind of tangible, solid evidence that the Hon. Member for Davenport could point to, that would be all right, but there simply has not.

Another prominent area of debate has been the transportation of hazardous products. We as an opposition Party in 1980 very strongly supported changes to the Act or the introduction of an Act which would in fact control the transportation of goods like PCBs. But what has happened since 1980? Here we are in 1985, having to depend on the intelligence and the understanding of the now Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in order actually to do something. Yet we still get the kind of—we would not want to think it was dishonest, but the political, if you like, harping from the Hon. Member for Davenport and other Hon. Members who have had their chance, and we still have the problem.

There are many other examples, Mr. Speaker, but one of the things I would like to focus on now is the question of relevance. Probably nowhere is it better able to be demonstrated than with respect to the question of the PCB spill. The problems which can be created in those incidents bring forward all of the important issues, transportation and the historical aspects. Just about every part of a hazardous product which one could think about or discuss is identified in this single focus.

I believe the first thing we have to do is to look at the relevance of the issue. As compared to gasoline, how dangerous are PCBs? From the notes which I have to make sure I do not make any errors I see one of the things which struck me in trying to find out just how dangerous PCBs are. What has happened historically with this substance? There have been several spills we can go back to to try to get an accurate idea of what the relative level of danger is. In 1968, hundreds of Japanese who consumed PCB-contaminated rice developed acne-like skin lesions, discolouration of toe nails, fingernails and gums. They showed a thickening of skin, especially in the region of the eyelid. In 1979, a similar outbreak involving some 1800 Taiwanese occurred. I would note, Mr. Speaker, the fact that these events were not the result of a one-day acute exposure but rather the result of very long and high level of sustained exposure. The skin diseases developed slowly and lasted in some cases for years. The onset of the skin signs occurred three or four months after the start of exposure and only after individuals had ingested more than one gram of PCB.

There is one other piece of very specific information I wanted to bring forward. It is a question of the concern about cancer. I was particularly interested in that. I am looking for the actual reference here, but if my memory serves me correctly, the longitudinal studies, after 17 years, of the highest level of exposures that we know of, have not confirmed any higher incidence of cancer in that population. I do not give that information to try to suggest that we should not continue to consider this matter with gravity and as a serious exposure because we do not know all the answers. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) asked a question of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). I think what the Hon. Member should do besides asking the Minister of Environment that question, is to ask the previous Minister of Environment, and perhaps even the next Minister of the Environment or the New Democratic Party critic on the environment, because there is no conclusion at this time. Because of the process which is under way right now, which is supported very strongly by the Minister of the Environment, we hope that an answer will be forthcoming. All of us are waiting for the answer, but we must first have public hearings, look at the technology and arrive at the best conclusion possible. Those things are under way.

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is honest, he will know that one of the difficulties in arriving at a conclusion for disposal is the fact that we have gone through public hearings and we know that there are very few people in Ontario who want to have a chemical waste site next-door to them. There is a very great deal of difficulty in the public's mind, and even in the scientific mind, in deciding what is the best technology to dispose of PCBs and other contaminants. So we either deny that process or go through it as well as we can and try to arrive at the best possible conclusion. That is precisely what we are doing. We are doing it as quickly as possible. The Hon. Member for Davenport should know that the Government of Ontario has been very much involved in this process, which it initiated, supported and is trying to bring to a satisfactory conclusion as quickly as possible. It is the process itself we are in the midst of right now. It is not a question of addressing the problem but one of trying to deal with it in a fair and reasonable way.

I have been focusing on the PCB problem and I would like to go back a little bit and talk about what the Minister and her Department have been doing in the last few months, as well as the umbrella under which she has been doing it. One of the things that confused me in listening to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition talk about this issue—I am not sure whether he was reading his own speech or whether he had a speech writer—was that either he does not know or else it was just the way he said it, but he was saying that the Minister should bring in a clean air Act. This was a little bit like listening to the Hon. Member for Davenport when he sometimes talks about an environmental contaminants Act. I sometimes wonder if he was ever Minister of the Environment because he does not seem to understand just exactly what that Act does or how it should work. I know he may not have been Minister for very long but he should have a better idea of precisely what is going on than he seems to have judging from some of his questions in the House. But going back to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, we do have a Clean Air Act. It is at the disposal of this Minister of the Environment and was at the disposal of the previous Minister of the Environment in order to try at the federal level to control pollution from being spread from province to province and country to country. This Minister is using it and doing so in a very effective and action-oriented way, as against just discussing it. We have that Act and it has regulations.

Quite apart from that, and to offer some support to the Hon. Member for Davenport because he may not have had a full sense of it, I might say that one of the things that the Department of the Environment had, without reference to the Act or the regulations or anything else, were guidelines on how to handle PCBs. It is my understanding that the company transporting PCBs had committed itself to working within the guidelines provided by the Department. I cannot give you the year they were written but they have been out for some time. Clearly the company did not do so or it would not have had the problem.

We have a number of Acts. I mentioned the Environmental Contaminants Act and the Clean Air Act. There is the Pesticide Act. There are Acts such as the Canada Water Act, the Food and Drug Act and the Pest Control Products Act.

One thing that any Minister of the Environment has a problem with is trying to bring together a comprehensive and reasonable plan of action for the literally thousands of new chemical products which come on the market every year. One thing I think we will see over the next few weeks is the very serious, very reasonable and very constructive work being done under the direction of the Minister to try to bring some reason to this mish-mash we inherited. I think every one of us could understand how it might happen, but the fact is that it is not adequate for today's technology or the conditions under which we have to operate. In bringing together and rationalizing the management and control of toxics in the environment, the Minister will have provided the kind of service we need from our environmental controls to look after the problems we will inevitably have.

I spent this morning speaking to two very significant groups from Ontario who were having a joint annual meeting under the umbrella of a larger federal organization to consider their activities in the management of the environment. They dealt particularly with air and water. Our discussion was good and we had an opportunity to consider what the federal Government was doing, the very real and concrete actions taken at the federal level concerning money, organization and regulations where appropriate and the co-operation we were trying to bring forward with groups like themselves, including such industries as the automobile industry. There is a group called PACE which deals with environmental problems in the oil industry. All these groups are starting to get a sense of the way we can work together because of the shared responsibilities we have.

I hope that in future opposition Members will view their responsibility in a serious, constructive and responsible way. I hope they are going to be able to take advantage of the emotional elements which surround these issues. I hope they will be able to take advantage of the legitimate fear which is raised in the minds of people about these substances. I wondered several days ago how much of an issue polychlorinated biphenyls, given the way we have to say it, would become. They would still be the same problem but one that would be much less attractive politically, because it is kind of catchy. One of the scientific experts who has been following this issue indicated that a lot of people, myself included, without being able to get into some of the substance of the technical aspects, get confused when they talk about dioxins. How are people to know what the relative dangers are unless there is a responsible discussion instead of trying to score political points and advance notions which could create almost as many problems as they solve? We look forward to getting that from the Opposition. I think it would serve Canadian interests and I look forward to it in the future.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the tone of the Hon. Member's contribution to this debate. He put some blame on the previous Liberal Government and its failure to take appropriate action at the appropriate time. But what bothers me is that he comes from a Party which has held office in the Province of Ontario for many years.

Mr. Lewis: And many more, too.

Mr. Cassidy: That may be; we will have to see on May 2. At the rate they are going, they may disappear below the floor before May 2.

I was in the Ontario Legislature in 1979 when we passed the Hazardous Products Act. It was called the spills Bill and it provided that the transporter of hazardous and toxic substances would be liable for any damages caused by those substances if there was a spill. It was a good piece of legislation and we laboured on it long and hard. My colleague, Marion Bryden, in particular worked very hard to get that Bill adopted. However, while the Hon. Member's tone is very positive, one has to look at the record. His leader is going to campaign with the Premier of Ontario in three or four days and say what a great guy the Premier is and what a great Party the Progressive Conservative Party is. That Bill, which would have in fact given some specific remedy against the spill in Kenora this week, has not been proclaimed for six years. That is a real dereliction as far as Conservatives are concerned. You cannot go with them when you try to win elections and then distance yourself by saying, "We have a great record and look at the record that they have". I think that is shoddy politics.

• (1720)

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I am never going to be able to match the Member's passion.

Mr. Blaikie: That is true.

Mr. Gurbin: Just wait a minute, let us put this in context. The question is irrelevant in this case because that company has accepted liability.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Birds Nest. I mean the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I will refrain from commenting on your obvious unintentional error.

I would like to comment on what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin) had to say. He expounded on the fact that we do not know enough about polychlorinated biphenyls. Would he now answer for the Minister and tell us whether the Department of the Environment and the Minister intend to stand by the decision to cancel the study asked for by the Ontario Government into the assessment of PCBs, which cancellation was a result of the announced cuts in the environmental secretariat under the NRC in the November 8 statement?

In the interest of being fair, would he take some time to look at the development of the debate as it began last week after the PCB spill? He made some charges with respect to people being emotional, taking advantage of fear, et cetera. If he refers back to the first question which I asked of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) he will notice that the question was asked in a very straightforward and calm way. I asked him about a moratorium in my first question.

I lost my temper the next day, and I make no apologies for it. In my first question I asked the Minister of Transport flat out whether he was considering a moratorium on the transportation of PCBs until such time as the regulations came into effect on July 1. Regardless of what you think of the merits of the question, if you check the tape of that you will find that it was asked in a very calm way. You will see that the Minister of Transport came back at me as though I had charged him with some heinous crime, when all I had asked him to do was to consider a moratorium. The theatrics began with the Minister of Transport who went on to talk about the Aeronautics Act and things that the NDP had done. All I asked him was whether he would consider a moratorium.

Before you go around making charges about who emotionalized what and who exaggerated what, check the record. It was not until the next day, when we could not get the Government to take seriously what was happening and to do then some of the things that it has done now, such as order an inquiry and issue interim protective directions, that we began to shout, yell, and express the legitimate outrage that opposition Members and Canadians in general felt about the rather relaxed attitude that the Government initially took forward this event. The Member's own Minister got up and said that it was just a question of provincial jurisdiction and he asked why were we even bothering to ask the question. Before you go around charging people with being emotional, check and see how the debate developed. While you are at it, answer the question about the study into the effects of PCBs which was cancelled.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I think the context of that moratorium question was really important. I was here for that question. If the Hon. Member will read Hansard, he will know that if he had defined it as PCBs, probably the Minister of Transport—

Mr. Blaikie: Do you want the Hansard? It says PCBs. Read Hansard.

Mr. Gurbin: The context in which the Minister was being asked—

Mr. Blaikie: It does so. Read it.

Mr. Gurbin: The context in which I know that the Minister had to deal with the question was the cancellation of the transportation of all "dangerous goods". That was certainly the context in which it was coming forward. That would have meant that your farmers—

Mr. Blaikie: You haven't read Hansard.

Mr. Gurbin: —could not have planted their crops. That would have meant that you would not have been able to carry on normal commerce in the whole country.

Mr. Blaikie: Read the record. Read Hansard.

Mr. Gurbin: I had the sense, from watching—

Mr. Blaikie: You're not telling the truth.

Mr. Gurbin: In answer to the second part of the question, I am pleased to bring a little additional information to the House. With regard to the PCBs, an epidemiological study is being set up by Dr. Friesen. His staff telephones are manned at all times, and all persons who even think that they might have been in contact with PCBs are being asked to complete a questionnaire. They will follow up on any health problems that may in fact emerge. Records of all information of this epidemiological study will be kept over a long period of time.

My second point is with regard to chlorobiphenyl regulations which are now prepared and before Cabinet. Regulation No. 2 will accelerate the removal of PCBs from service in the existing allowed uses. These are uses that were allowed under the previous administration. They are 1977 regulations under the Environmental Contaminants Act. The regulations will do this by prohibiting the sale of PCB equipment where the concentration of PCBs in any liquid contained in the equipment is greater than a certain part per million.

Regulation No. 3 will further control the dispersal of PCBs in the environment by placing quantity and concentration limits on the wilful release of PCBs into the environment during commerical, manufacturing, and processing activities. As all Members know, Mr. Speaker, the actual use of PCBs, in any additional manner, was banned in 1977.

Finally, to answer the last part of the question, on behalf of the Minister of the Environment and the Government I am happy to make the commitment that we will continue to fund, with a commitment for five years, any research program that requires a particular type of activity on the part of the federal Government. We will fund those research programs. We have not in fact taken away our ability to do the kinds of research which we think is necessary.

Mr. Blaikie: What about the study that was cancelled?

Mr. Gurbin: In relation to other studies—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): From the debate this afternoon and this morning the origin of the motion before the House today is very obvious. In that sense I, as the Member for Kenora-Rainy River where this spill occurred, am somewhat of two minds on how to view this attention. On the one hand, I would like to see the House offer a full examination of all forms of environmental contamination and of the record of the present Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). On the other hand, I am naturally very interested in having a full discussion and getting facts on the record concerning the spill of polychlorinated biphenyls in my riding. It is my belief that a spill like this, which has commanded national attention, should command national attention. That is a statement and a judgment which I think requires some qualification.

• (1730)

Similarly, I would say to the Minister, who has been flitting in and out of the House all afternoon, that while she has indeed, as has been said, been the victim of some sexist and biased reporting in the media, just because the media are against her does not mean that she is in fact doing her job. It is my belief that the extensive cut-backs that have been inflicted on the Ministry of the Environment by the present Government are indicative of a relative lack of strength in that Ministry. It appears to have allowed itself to be set up as one that can be readily cut back without offending regional interests or getting powerful members of the Cabinet opposed to its cuts. I feel that is an attitude in Cabinet which we do not have the luxury of allowing to continue.

Let me briefly go through some of the chronology of the recent PCB spill between Ignace and Kenora. On April 15, the Minister of the Environment responded in the House that this was a provincial responsibility. At the same time, provincial officials were saying that it was a federal responsibility. It seems to me that a criticism that we should all take to heart is that, as Canadian elected political leaders, all too often we think in terms not of what is happening in our country and in our communities but in terms of what level of Government is responsible for the corrective action or the original omission that has led to the problem.

After all, in the House on Tuesday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) said that it was a federal responsibility, while, on the other hand, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) was saying that it was a shared responsibility. Notwithstanding the evident disagreement among three members of the Cabinet, they looked rather good in comparison with the Ontario Minister of the Environment, who stated that the only danger from such a spill would be if one were a rat licking the material off the Trans-Canada Highway. That gentleman may have some funny ideas about what people in northwestern Ontario keep as pets, but I should let him know that there are indeed at least two cats which have been contaminated by the PCBs, which took that material home and consequently contaminated the home environment where they were pets and, of course, the people who tried to clean them up.

I believe the most encouraging aspect to all the government actions and reactions to this situation was at the local level. The actions of the local officials, while certainly not beyond reproach—since hindsight is 20-20—do them some credit. I think the municipal Government in Kenora and the municipal emergency measures coordination group worked well to establish the mechanisms that were needed to respond to the legitimate and real concerns of the people of the Kenora area.

I am glad to see that they used that CANUTEC number. When I was a mayor in a neighbouring community, I had that number posted on my desk for such an eventuality. I think that some of the activities of the health officials in the area also bear commendation. While the pamphlet put out by the district medical officer of health seemed to have some minor contradictions, I thought it was a commendable initiative in the circumstances.

In my question in the House on Tuesday, I cited the statement made to me in a letter from the Minister of the Environment that her officials and the officials of the Department of Transport had been working for years at the federal level on the transportation of dangerous goods. I was critical of the Minister of Transport at that time for offering the July 1 implementation date for the regulations that presumably resulted from that consultation process. I must acknowledge with pleasure that he has chosen now to make the ban immediate.

It was four days after the spill when the first federal official arrived on the scene. Even after the initial spill we saw some errors being made by government officials that were unfortunate errors, not errors of malice, of course, but errors of oversight in the shipping of unmarked boxes containing contaminated PCB samples on Nordair, a commercial air service, through Dryden, without telling the people who were handling them what they were handling.

Such an occurrence should not be permissible in our society. I am glad that the Minister of Transport, in his answer, at least contemplated some form of disciplinary action being taken in those circumstances.

The advice that has gone out to residents in the area has mostly been good. While some has been contradictory, I believe that over-all the local Government would appear to be well in the lead of the provincial and federal Governments in the effectiveness of its actions in relation to this spill.

When something like this happens in northwestern Ontario, we who live there have a very ambivalent reaction to the resulting events. We are descended upon by a media circus that we only see during election campaigns other than when there is an environmental disaster. It is indeed a media circus which exhibits a dedication and ferocious attention to the matter that it believes to be at hand, but which, to many of us, smacks of tunnel vision. It is certainly not that we would wish bad news not to be reported. This is bad news and it has been extensively reported.

There is also other bad news. Something that strikes me when looking at this recent spill is the clouding of people's vision which occurs, for whatever reasons, to some of the other problems that exist both in our environment and in my own region of northwestern Ontario.

For example, the spill did not lead directly to the death of a young man on a dangerous corner of the Trans-Canada Highway on Thursday night. The spill was not responsible for that. That death was not reported in the national media. It was not recorded on the CBC, but that is an example of what happens when that media focus all of their attention on a single issue and do not look at the social, economic and environmental aetiology in the area in which they are making their report.

We have a situation where the bureaucrats rather than the Ministers or the media actually come out looking the best in this situation. We also have a situation of a psychology, of which most of us are guilty—I would not exculpate myself—which makes us look not at the appropriateness of corrective measures but at where the legal responsibility for corrective action lies.

I feel that the House would do well to take to heart the words of my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), when he spoke of the moral imperatives of such a situation and the moral considerations which should be borne in mind when addressing ourselves to such an occurrence and to the underlying causes, the lack of regualtions or legislation to ensure adequate protective measures.

The spill, having happened over a week ago now, still leaves many outstanding environmental issues. There is the question of whether the sealing which has been applied to the road surface will be effective and whether it will prevent the leaching upwards of PCB contaminated oil. There is also the question of whether that oil may not also leak downwards through the granular sub-base of the road and thus run the risk of contaminated water courses and ground water. There is the risk to human health, which I am sure the parliamentary Secretary to the Minister (Mr. Gurbin) did not wish to downplay overly. Let me quote from the McGraw-Hill Encyclopaedia of Science and Technology. In the Japanese case there have been deaths attributed, though perhaps not completely attributable, to acute PCB poisoning. Polychlorinated biphenyls are contaminated, as indeed many complex chemical products are contaminated, with byproducts that occur in the manufacturing process. In this case it is polychlorodibenzofuran and polybrominated biphenyls which may be responsible for the effects that have been noted in the Japanese case.

I would not wish to over-dramatize the Kenora situation. That would be to do a disservice to the residents and tourists of our area. Even the symptoms of people who have had the most acute exposure obviously do not compare in intensity and frequency with those of people who have been eating rice contaminated with PCBs over a period of several weeks.

The question of human health is a serious one. I think it is now being appropriately addressed by the message being pounded in through the media for people to go and see the doctor if they are in any doubt about the symptoms they may be experiencing.

There are other outstanding issues, such as the integrity and the cleanliness of the environment which is so precious to us in northwestern Ontario. Perhaps the cleanliness of that environment is the leading one. I would call on the provincial and federal Governments, when they sort out the appropriate responsibilities, to institute a monitoring sampling and testing program at the roadside of the contaminated portion of the highway. I would hope that they do this over a period of years and even decades and make sure that samples are taken to determine whether the PCB-contaminated oil is leaching out.

I would like to see the truck which is presently in Kenora still leaking PCBs moved to a place of safety. I would like to see the commitment to clean up carried through right to its logical conclusion so that all contaminated areas and materials used in the clean-up can be safely disposed of.

I would make reference to a situation that is similar in southern Ontario. I quote the provincial Leader of the New Demoratic Party, Mr. Bob Rae, saying that an investigation is needed to discover why it took the Government more than a year to act after discovering the firm of Chem-King was storing PCBs without a permit. If PCBs are being stored without a permit in southern Ontario, in how many other locations are they being stored? If they are being stored illegally, they might be moved illegally, thus putting the environment at further hazard.

The thought of PCBs contaminating the environment leads me to another theme that I have been contemplating over past days, and indeed for a longer period, namely the cumulative effects of the wide array of chemicals used in so many manufacturing processes, in so many materials, and even in food, on ourselves, our children, and our children's children. We live in what is literally a chemical world. It is said that since the end of the Second World War the number of chemicals in common use industrially have quadrupled. PCBs are just one example of a wide range of contaminants being absorbed into the food chain, which they will if they leak into the lakes in the Kenora area, and then be absorbed into our own bodies. The combination and permutation of this may have effects of multiplying exponentially the toxicity of any individual agents by combinine the effect on people, animals, crops, plants and on the environment. We have a growing incidence of hypersensitivity to chemical products, chemical contaminants in the environment, indeed not only to contaminants, but to products that previously were not known allergens.

There are centres in the United States which unfortunately have no real parallel in Canada for the testing and analysis of people who have built up this extreme sensitivity, sometimes over a period of decades, and who in many cases cannot now live normal lives because of it. If there is a lesson to be learned from the Kenora spill, it should be put on the record in this House. I would like to offer my own modest ideas.

I do think there exists at the federal level a real need for co-ordination and for discussion with the provinces of an over-all waste management strategy for this country. Let us not forget that those products that are perceived to be safe today, acetylsalicylic acid, for example, may be found tomorrow to have very significant health risks to them. We have to have some form of social costing mechanism in Canada so that no company producing, as a main product, a byproduct, or a waste product, can be allowed to dispose of it without some form of approval. There has to be some knowledge, some calculus that will let us know whether we are building future Love Canals that will come back to haunt us at immense cost, not only socially but also in terms of dollars and human health.

Research has to be expanded, not curtailed. There has to be a comprehensive registration and evaluation system for new chemical products and processes before they are put into commercial production and not after.

We have to see the environment as a trust. We have to see this country and the beauty of it as something that is not inherited from our ancestors but borrowed from our children.

[Translation]

We should know in Canada that the resources of our planet are not inexhaustible—

[English]

—something that is capable of being damaged and damaged permanently. We have to forget the old Anglo-Saxon concept of title, that we can use everything on the earth just as we please.

I heard a babe calling in the Gallery earlier today. I was glad to be reminded of those for whom we are ultimately doing these things. It was something I learned early on in my political career from the Indian people who never exclude children from a meeting because they are the ones to benefit from whatever topic is under discussion.

In closing, I am reminded of the epitaph on the tombstone of the noted Georgian architect, Sir John Van Brugh. It reads: "Lie heavy on him earth for he laid many heavy loads on thee". Van Brugh was an architect who liked to build on a massive scale and in a grand style. We have laid many heavy loads on this earth of ours and it is up to all of us to show some leadership in lightening them.

Mr. Gurbin: I have a question for the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) for a reasonable and reasoned intervention. He mentioned two things to which I would like his response concerning activities at the local level. He may or may not be aware of or familiar with the reaction, response, or outline, an agreement on which was arrived at in consultation with the municipal, provincial and federal authorities. Could the Hon. Member comment on how he feels it would be appropriate, especially if one wanted a rapid response to a question that there is someone better than the local officer of health, someone better than the OPP, someone better than the fire department locally to deal with emergencies like this that could occur any time, any place, anywhere. Does the Hon. Member feel there is a better way of being able to arrive at that immediate response? Is the Hon. Member more familiar or does he know of any other cases than the cases of the people who were in the car who went to Manitoba? Does he have any additional information? The only other two cases of which we know of persons who came into skin contact with the transformer fluid were, first, that of a person who was changing a tire on his car after having driven through the oil spill, and the other was that of a person who cleaned a cat which had been soiled with it. Those are the other two cases of which we know, other than the people who were in the car. Twelve people telephoned Dr. Freisson, the local medical officer of health, who were concerned that they had in fact breathed in some fumes which might have contained PCBs. He has done the appropriate things in that regard and is following it up in the appropriate way. I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) could respond to these two questions.

● (1750)

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary. Obviously there is little capability for predicting incidents of environmental hazard or disaster before they occur. Therefore, the primary role for detection and for coordination lies with the local authority. When I was mayor of Sioux Lookout, I remember attending an emergency measures planning course with the then Mayor of Kenora, who is also the present mayor. I think the emergency measures organization under the aegis of the municipality is an appropriate model. In terms of the incidents of contact in this event, I will be happy to check my information and get back to the Parliamentary Secretary so that we can compare notes on the number of people who have been affected.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) on his comments. There are now certain guidelines, including some entitled "Guidelines on waste management of materials containing PCBs". I would like the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River to state his position on these guidelines. How does he see these guidelines being applied so that such incidents do not happen again and the guidelines are more generally and more strictly implemented?

[English]

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) for his question. Certainly it would appear to me that guidelines for compensation in such cases should be laid down. I do not feel that it is really a productive method to take cases on an individual basis, bearing in mind the number of cases of similar contamination which have occurred. Of course, the mercury pollution of the English-Wabigoon River in my own riding is another example. I feel that there should be some mechanism for environmental compensation tribunals so that people whose health has been affected or whose property has been damaged can have some form of less adversarial mechanism to which they could bring their claims. Similarly, the bonding and insurance of transporters and users of all potentially dangerous material should be examined to ensure that there is adequate coverage for the potential risks in the event of leakage or spillage.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). Obviously he brings a local perspective to the question of spillage and the problems surrounding it. I compliment his on his contribution to the debate. Also I should like to compliment the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on his contribution. They were constructive contributions. We know that we do not have all the answers but we have to learn from crises. One cannot always predict crises and how one will react, but I think their contributions have been useful.

I should like to point out to the Hon. Member the achievements that have been made by the Government in terms of the agreement for a 50 per cent reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions and the tougher automobile standards which were introduced. Also we have provided and assured budget to the science monitoring program and took steps in creating an acid rain office. There was also a budget of $150 million for the smelting industry for modernization and installations.

Mr. Frith: That is a speech, not a question.

Mr. Lewis: It is a comment. We also spent $70 million on developing technology for the use of coal. All these things were an effort by our Government to pick up from the stagnation which occurred under the Liberal Government in earlier years. Perhaps the Hon. Member, in conjunction with the positive things he said about the PCB problems, might want to comment on those actions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin where the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) left off. He left off on the issue of leadership which must be taken into account because each year spills occur in different provinces across the country. The only way in which we can judge the importance which Governments place upon the issue of spills and upon the protection of the environment is to witness the way in which the Government of the day reacts to a crisis.

I will not suggest that the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) was responsible for the spill which occurred on the highway in northwestern Ontario. However, the only way in which we can judge the political will of that Minister is to interpret from her actions the way in which she views the effects of that spill on the environment. Let us take a look at the leadership which was exhibited by the minister in this particular case. After the spill in northwestern Ontario was brought to the attention of the House, the Minister refused to show up in the House for several days to answer questions on the issue. We asked why the Minister of the Environment did not—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering about something. It seems to me that under the rules, one should not comment on the presence or absence of other Members in the House, but the Hon. Member is now getting into a debate which is not usually—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I understand. I addressed that same question earlier. I ask the Hon. Member not to comment upon the presence or absence of Hon. Members.

Mr. Frith: One should ask whether a Minister who refuses to instruct her officials to inspect the site is exhibiting leadership in this manner. For several days there was no communication between the federal Minister and her counterparts in the Province of Ontario. The Province of Quebec was just as negligent in its duties with respect to the spill in northwestern Ontario. Those issues involve leadership.

Let us look at the record of the Government in terms of the environment. Turning to the mini-statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, the Minister of the Environment allowed him to override her concerns about the impact the cuts would have on the Department of the Environment. What did we end up with? There were cuts in the budget in terms of waste management. Instead of trying to protect her Department, the Minister of the Environment allowed the Minister of Finance to run roughshod over her departmental officials. We have had cut-backs in wildlife services and in research into the medical effects of these kinds of spills. Is that the kind of leadership we want from Conservatives? I do not think so. As the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) said, Canadians want a leadership role taken by the federal Government to co-ordinate programs to deal with these kinds of emergencies.

As I mentioned earlier, this spill is not the first one to occur, nor shall it be the last. Examples abound, not only of PCBs but of other chemicals which impact upon the environment. It is important to note that part of the job of the federal Minister of the Environment is to protect the interests of her Department and the health of Canadian citizens. Also she must become an advocate for her Department when it comes to budget time, indicating to the people of the country that she will stand up and protect the health and safety of Canadian citizens. We are not receiving that.

This is not the first occasion where the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has neglected and been quite negligent in her duties with respect to the protection, health and safety of Canadian citizens. That is the kind of leadership that Canadians want from their federal Government. The suggestion that it was only in the last 24 hours or six to seven days that regulations had been passed to deal with this problem of interprovincial transportation is to stretch the imagination of the Canadian public that we have a Minister of the Environment who cares.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 62(11), the proceedings on this motion are now completed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF INVESTIGATION. (B) COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on my questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on Friday, April 19, having to do with the PCB spill that we have been talking about all day. I am not sure who is in the House to respond to my comments. In any event, on Friday I directed three questions to the Prime Minister. One had to do with the question of charges in respect of the PCB spill. The next had to do with compensation for the known victims, the family driving behind the truck. The third had to do with the cancellation of the study into the assessment of PCBs that was requested by the Ontario Government and which was cancelled by the federal Progressive Conservative Government.

On the question of charges, the Prime Minister indicated to me at that time, and I quote:

—it may be that there were violations of law and regulations and disregard for human life, in which case I can assure the Hon. Member that prosecutions will be made with vigour and to the fullest extent of the law.

I would ask the person responding on behalf of the Government to indicate in what area the Government might be contemplating this kind of action. Will the investigation announced earlier by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) when he was speaking to the House on this be the kind of investigation that could lead to prosecutions, if that was judged to be warranted after the investigation? Also, in the course of that investigation will not only the company involved but also the Province of Ontario be looked at in that same critical light with respect to its actions?

I also asked the Prime Minister about compensation for the family that was driving behind the truck and which had their car impounded. The Prime Minister replied:

With regard to individual families who may be suffering unduly, apart from the tragedy itself, as a result of it, we will look at that, and where we can be helpful we will be delighted to come forward and provide facilities from the Government of Canada to assist them in any way we can.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin), who apparently will be responding on behalf of the Government, tell the House whether the Government has made any overtures to the family and whether any provision has been made, for example, for transportation back to Red Lake, and any other short-term things of that nature that the family may require? I would appreciate being brought up to date on that.

The third question was the cancellation of the NRC study on updated scientific analysis of key issues in the assessment of PCBs. As I mentioned before, this study was requested by the Ontario Government. The study was cancelled as a result of the cuts announced by the Government on November 8. In response to me at that time, the Prime Minister said:

● (1805)

I think all Members of the House will be seeking the assurance that it never happens again. If that representation—

That is to say, the representation which I made on behalf of reinstating that program—

—turns out to be one way we can ensure that, Hon. Members may be certain that we will proceed.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment tell us whether or not, as a result of the Prime Minister having said that to me on Friday, any reconsideration has been given as to the wisdom of reinstating the study on up-dated scientific analysis of the key issues in the assessment of PCBs? The Prime Minister probably heard about the cancellation of the study for the first time on Friday, and I did not expect that he would have mastered all of the details of the cuts, but I believe that a light went on and the Prime Minister, in light of recent events, might have thought that cancelling that program was not such a great idea. Could the Parliamentary Secretary indicate whether any reconsideration has happened?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in the brief moments which are allowed, I will try to respond to the many questions which have been raised.

I would like to deal with the question of support for the family. As the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) indicated, the response mechanism, by agreement, is through the local medical officer of health and local officials. As part of the total response package, we have offered to provide, through the local authorities, an airplane or anything else which might be required by the people who are affected. I can assure the Hon. Member that that was done, and that the offer will remain if it becomes necessary. As well, I am sure that the offer can be expanded if it is appropriate from the point of view of local officials.

With respect to the investigation, I cannot specifically answer his question as to what might flow from the investigation which has been announced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). I do not know whether that investigation has anything to do with charges, but I will undertake to find that out for the Hon. Member. However, I can tell him that the liability has already been accepted by the company. I do not know what happens under the legal system following that, but the liability has been accepted.

I also indicated very clearly that there is a code of guidelines for the management of PCBs, which was established before the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was Minister of the Environment. My understanding was that the company had been transporting materials in agreement with that code. However, clearly the company did not do that. However, it had made that commitment to the Alberta Government. Therefore, again the liability is established. I do not know how that fits into the investigation. I believe the investigation was meant to be more broad than that, but it might include that.

The point which I think has to be made, and I can make this with some force because I was involved very directly—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member will have to make that point at another time.

Mr. Blaikie: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member finished at six minutes after six o'clock and the Parliamentary Secretary had three minutes to speak.

Mr. Blaikie: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we might seek the unanimous consent of the House for the Parliamentary Secretary to finish his remarks. That was not the way I read the clock. I thought that the Parliamentary Secretary had at least another minute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He had his three minutes.

Mr. Blaikie: No, he didn't.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would like to finish his remarks, I will grant him another 30 seconds. But, the Hon. Member finished his question at six minutes after six o'clock and the Parliamentary Secretary had three minutes in which to make his comments. Those are the time limits as far as the Adjournment Debate is concerned. If the Parliamentary Secretary has anything else to say, then he can say it.

• (1810)

Mr. Gurbin: I have much more to say, Mr. Speaker, and I will take 30 seconds to do so. The liaison which has occurred personally between our Department and the provincial Department, and those people on site, has been ongoing and extremely good from the very beginning. Finally, in my last 15 seconds, I will say that reconsideration of the whole toxic program is in fact what the Minister is spending all of her energy on right now. She has focused in a direct way on the consideration of all the programs which fall within that gambit.

BILINGUALISM—DECISION TO REDUCE NUMBER OF BILINGUAL POSITIONS AT RENOUS PENITENTIARY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question was directed to the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. MacKay) and concerned the number of bilingual positions at the Renous penitentiary in New Brunswick.

His colleague, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine), stated a few weeks ago that the number of bilingual positions in Renous would be reduced from 50 per cent to 30 per cent and exclaimed that this was good news. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General added in one of his statements in this House that this proportion was quite representative of the local population.

The question I ask myself and want to ask the minister is this: Should the Atlantic institution in Renous satisfy the local population first or should it instead serve its inmates as its first priority? In my opinion, it is obvious that our Atlantic Institution will have to accommodate first and foremost the inmates coming from every Atlantic region and even from elsewhere in Canada. It is therefore difficult if not impossible to predict the linguistic distribution of future inmates. That is why it is imperative to make sure that penitentiary services are available in Canada's two officials languages. Consequently, as much of the staff as possible ought to be bilingual.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of logic and justice, especially. Why should people who have spent years in penitentiary and who already have heavy responsibilities be forced to speak in only one language? Just because a group is in minority does not mean that their needs can be disregarded. On the contrary, you undoubtedly know what the Commissioner of Official Languages said about this issue. Here is a quotation from his latest annual report:

> The Correctional Service has responded to our 1983 audit but will have to do a great deal more to provide adequate minority-language services to inmates.

Further on, he goes on to say:

> Despite everything, Acadians are still considerably less equal than Anglophones with respect to Government services in their own language.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Government must implement the recommendations of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

Secondly, even if we keep in mind the argument of the Solicitor General who claims that the proportion of unilingual and bilingual positions must reflect the linguistic reality of the population, there again he is mistaken. When the establishment of the penitentiary was first announced, had it not been agreed that the staff would be hired in the ridings of Kent, Northumberland and Gloucester? Population figures for those three ridings reveal that the anglophone-to-francophone ratio is the opposite of that in the Miramichi region. To put it another way, those ridings and the one I represent have a lot more Francophones than Anglophones.

In addition, I must emphasize that New Brunswick's unemployment rate has increased to 17 per cent, and that in the south-eastern part which includes the counties of Albert, Kent and Westmorland, the rate has soared to 21 per cent, and that is totally unacceptable. And yet, we had been promised tens of thousands of jobs. It is really terrible!

Why did the Minister not respect the first agreement, and why did the Minister not take all those figures into consideration, for they fully justify his initial decision to hire bilingual applicants to fill 50 per cent of the positions?

No matter what the Solicitor General says, Acadian groups in the region have not been consulted in any way. The Minister has made non-substantiated claims. I might add that I use this euphemism to be polite, knowing as I do that it cannot be said in this House that a colleague is not telling the truth.

In fact, the vice-president of the Cercle français de la Miramichi said in the Times & Transcript that the Association is entirely against a reduction in the number of bilingual positions. Consequently, how can the Minister assert that Acadian groups favour the decision?

Finally, the Minister has no option but to withdraw his decision. In doing so, he will also have to determine and announce the breakdown of unilingual positions, what percentage will be classified Anglophone and what percentage Francophone.

Mr. Speaker, need I recall that the struggle of Francophones in New Brunswick has been a long and hard one. It is still hard. It took a will of iron to overcome the threat of assimilation. However, the French-speaking community has gained ground, and today, the Province of New Brunswick is officially bilingual. By maitaining its decision to reduce the number of bilingual positions from 50 to 30 per cent, the Government is undermining and denying the special situation in this province.

Mr. Speaker, we must respect the integrity of our Francophone communities and help them prosper in a favourable and privileged environment. Instead of putting obstacles in the way of this community, we should promote its development.

• (1815)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I welcome back the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

During Question Period on March 27, 1985, the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) asked about the announcement with respect to the percentage of bilingual positions at the penitentiary to be called the Atlantic Institution, now being built in New Brunswick. I trust, in the interests of fairness to the residents of the community involved, he will accept my reply.

Under the circumstances I cannot agree with the statements made by the Hon. Member that Acadians are less equal than the Anglophone population. The 30 per cent bilingual target to which the Hon. Member referred is considered appropriate to reflect the approximate percentage of Francophone and bilingual inmates who will require services in the French language, and reflects the demographic area in which the institution is immediately located. Since the percentage of Francophne inmates now serving sentences in the Atlantic region is about 12 per cent, and since the Francophone population in the local area is 25.8 per cent, it is evident that the target established for bilingual positions more than meets the minimum requirements for the provision of services and for equitable representation in terms of staff positions.

I must also make it clear that the Treasury Board policy with respect to official languages in the Public Service of Canada was duly respected and incorporated into the identification of the bilingual positions. Federal agencies are guided by the Treasury Board guidelines in the determination of bilingual positions. The bilingual status of the Province of New Brunswick was also taken into account in developing the language identification plan for the institution.

I spoke earlier of the linguistic profile of the area in which the new penitentiary is located and how the percentage of bilingual positions reflect that profile. That is an essential consideration in staffing a new institution. But, another essential consideration relates to the degree of acceptance of a penitentiary's existence within a community and the interdependent relationship which must be established and maintained. This cannot be accomplished if the penitentiary staff is a separate entity which has no reference to the community itself. The target set for bilingual positions in relation to the make-up of the local community will bring about a maximization of the employment opportunities in the immediate area, and this is the basis upon which the relationship between a penitentiary and the community should be established and upon which it shall flourish.

The identification of bilingual positions at 30 per cent will mean that the Atlantic Institution will be the most bilingual federal prison in Canada. In fact, the ratio of bilingual employees to French speaking inmates will probably be in the order of two to one; two bilingual employees for each French speaking inmate. Furthermore, the language identification plan has also taken into consideration the requirement that both Anglophone and Francophone employees must be supervised in their preferred official language. To this end, 41 per cent of the supervisory positions have been identified as bilingual.

The Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) is confident that the needs of the two client groups, inmates and staff, have therefore been met equitably through the bilingual targets set. The former Minister, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the Member's own colleague, was obviously in agreement with this, since he announced at a reception following the laying of the cornerstone of the new penitentiary in August 1984 his approval of this same bilingual target. Indeed, the Saint John Telegraph Journal of August 10, 1984 reported that the former Minister stated he had signed a directive allowing 70 per cent of prison employees at the Atlantic Institution to be unilingual English, with the remaining 30 per cent to be bilingual.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member will have a favourable understanding of this reply.

Adjournment Debate

INDIAN AFFAIRS—ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS FOR NATIVES IN URBAN CENTRES. (B) ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, last week when the press carried a report that a task force appointed by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) had recommended that funding for native programs be cut by $169 million there was, of course, an immediate attack on that proposal from native organizations and Members of Parliament. Many questions asked about this proposal. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) made it very clear that the proposal of the task force would not become part of the Government's policy.

Recently we have had a good deal of discussion and reporting in the media about the problems of native people. Most recently, however, the discussion has been about the issue of Indian self-government and aboriginal land rights, with less discussion about the abysmal conditions under which most of the native people in Canada live. It was reported in a survey done a few years ago that conditions on most of Canada's reserves were truly disheartening. The report referred to poor housing, inadequate education, and sub-standard health care. Unemployment on the reserves is a high as 80 per cent. Sixty per cent of the people on reserves live in homes without running water, and life expectancy is 10 years less than the national average. Perhaps the saddest and most revealing statistic of all is that the suicide rate among young people on reserves is six times that of other Canadians.

That kind of information is well known to many Canadians. What is less well known is the very serious plight of the native people who have been living in and are now moving, in increasing numbers, to the cities. A study done a couple of years ago reported that there were 15,000 to 20,000 native people living in my city of Winnipeg, 10,000 to 15,000 living in Edmonton, 5,000 to 10,000 in Calgary, 15,000 to 20,000 in Vancouver, and 15,000 living in Regina. The plight of native people living in those and other cities is truly alarming.

It has been estimated that in my own City of Winnipeg, 50 per cent of all the child welfare cases come from the native community. A high percentage of the people on welfare in the City of Winnipeg are native. Close to 50 per cent of the inmates in western Canadian prisons and jails are Native. In six schools in the core area of my City of Winnipeg, 50 per cent to 80 per cent of the students are Native people and many of them have a very limited knowledge of the English language. Those problems have been ignored to a large extent by federal Governments, both Liberal and Conservative, because they have taken the position that federal Government's legal responsibility is to Native people living on reserves, and once those people leave those reserves to go to the cities they are no longer the legal responsibility of the federal Government. As I have indicated, the plight of Native people living in the cities is close to a disaster.

Some good things have recently been accomplished in my province. The Children's Aid Society has been dissoved and Child Welfare Service has been reorganized so that there are now smaller regional agencies which give representation to Native peoples in the areas in which they live. We are beginning to get Native social workers who have been trained in our universities and community colleges and in special programs established for Native people. In Manitoba there are more than 500 Native teachers who have graduated, having received their training in special Native teaching training programs that were funded jointly by the Federal and provincial Governments.

There are special employment training programs in Winnipeg in the Core Area Development Program, a program funded by the federal, provincial and municipal governments. Recently, the Secretary of State sponsored a national conference on Native women in business in Winnipeg. In Winnipeg we have KNEW Housing, an organization operated by Native people using funds supplied by the federal Government. It purchased homes, remodels and refurbishes them and rents them to Native people who live in the City of Winnipeg.

Improvements have been made but a great deal needs to be done. I am pleased that the Minister says he has an advisory committee to look at these problems, but I call on him and the Government to do a great deal more than they have done to deal with this very serious problem.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) concerning Indians living off reserves, especially in urban areas. Indeed, he has raised a question that concerns all of us.

As the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) indicated in the House last Thursday, there is consultation under way to review key concerns regarding Indian people living off reserves. The Minister recognizes the seriousness of the problem and already has taken initiatives on this matter which has been left uncertain because of overlapping responsibilities between the various levels of Government. He has already met with the mayors of a number of major municipalities including Vancouver, Winnipeg and Toronto, and has indicated that a solution to the plight of many off reserve Indians must and will be found.

The seriousness of the problem should not be underestimated. The percentage of status Indians living off reserves doubled between the years 1966 and 1976 and has increased by a further 30 per cent since then. A large portion of these people tend to be unskilled and poor. Many move to the cities to seek better employment opportunities only to find themselves trapped in a vicious cycle of poverty and mounting social problems. In turn, this situation places increasing strains on the relationship between Natives and non Natives in these communities.

The most pressing issues are housing, education, health care and employment assistance. In these areas, jurisdiction is fragmented among federal, provincial and municipal Governments and financial requirements are increasing. It is recognized that better co-ordination is required among the three levels of Government to eliminate duplication of services, thereby maximizing the benefits from the existing resources. In addition, programs should be structured to be complementary and to address the basic problems rather than merely some of the social symptoms.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is committed to finding practical ways of dealing with the issue and I assure the Member that the Minister will continue his discussions on the subject with Native people, municipal leaders and provincial Governments.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, there are 99 motions on the Notice Paper in amendment at the report stage to Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada. With the little time available to the Chair, I have had an opportunity, with the Table Officers, to examine all of these motions to determine their procedural acceptability or, in any case, to group them for debate. I therefore wish to suggest, at the moment, in a preliminary way, the following. I want to emphasize at this point, and I will come back to it at the end, that this is a preliminary suggestion to the House.

1. Motions Nos. 1 and 2 should be grouped for debate with a separate vote on each motion.

2. Motion No. 3 gives the Chair some procedural difficulty in that it appears to violate the principle of the Bill as agreed to, by the House, at the second reading stage and is argumentative in its form.

3. Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 should be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

4. Motion No. 5 restricts the Minister's assistance to Canadian owned businesses to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement, thereby violating the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading.

5. Motions Nos. 6 and 7 be grouped with motion No. 4 and others.

6. Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75 all deal with publicizing the information received by the Agency and should be grouped for debate, with a vote on motion No. 8 disposing of motions Nos. 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75.

7. Motions Nos. 9, 10 and 11 were grouped with motion No. 4 and others.

8. Motion No. 12 be grouped with motion No. 8 and others.

9. Motion No. 13 seeks to introduce into the Bill new proposals which go beyond the four corners of the Bill.

10. Motions Nos. 14 to 18 inclusive were grouped with motion No. 4 and others.

11. Motions Nos. 19 and 20 would be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

12. Motion No. 21, like the previous motions referred to by the Chair, goes beyond the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading and therefore should not be proposed to the House.

13. Motion No. 22 goes beyond the scope of the clause it seeks to amend and would infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown.

14. Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25 should be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

15. Motion No. 26 adds a new exemption to the clause and goes beyond the principle of the Bill.

16. Motions Nos. 27, 30 and 67 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

17. Motion No. 28 seems to go beyond the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading.

18. Motion No. 29 seeks to impose certain tasks on non-Canadian businesses which goes beyond the principle of the Bill and infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown.

19. Motion No. 30, as I stated earlier, is grouped with motions Nos. 27 and 67.

20. Motion No. 31 should be debated and voted on separately.

21. Motion No. 32 was grouped with motion numbered 8 and others.

22. Motion No. 33 seeks to establish a committee not envisaged in the Bill and is a new proposition which goes beyond the four corners of the Bill. Motions Nos. 54, 62, 65, 66, 71, 73, 92 and 93 are consequential on motion No. 33 and, as well, should not be proposed to the House.

23. Motions Nos. 34, 35, 36, 38 and 38A will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows:

(a) An affirmative vote on motion No. 34 disposes of motion No. 35. A negative vote on motion No. 34 necessitates the question being put on motion No. 35.

(b) Motions Nos. 36, 38 and 38A will be voted on separately.

24. Motion No. 37 would cause the Agency to review the assets of non-Canadians thereby discriminating against them, which is contrary to the purpose of the Bill as agreed to at second reading.

25. Motion No. 38 was grouped with motion No. 34 and others.

26. Motion No. 39 would appear to exclude non-Canadians from directly acquiring certain Canadian businesses and goes beyond the scope of the Bill.

27. Motion No. 40 would oblige non-Canadian owners of Canadian businesses to offer them for sale under fixed conditions and this was not foreseen in the Bill as adopted at second reading.

28. Motion No. 41 should be debated and voted on separately.

29. Motions Nos. 42 to 49 inclusive are similar efforts to introduce into the Bill types of investments that would require review. This was not foreseen when the Bill was agreed to at second reading. Motion No. 51 is consequential on motions Nos. 42 to 49 and falls into the same category.

• (1110)

30. Motions Nos. 50, 52 and 53 are in order and should be grouped for debate. However, a vote on motion No. 50 will dispose of motion No. 52. Motion No. 53 will be voted on separately.

31. Motion No. 54 has been grouped with motion No. 33 and others.

32. Motions Nos. 55 to 61 inclusive appear to introduce new factors into Clause 20 which will affect how net benefits are determined and are therefore beyond the scope of the clause.

33. Motion No. 62 was grouped with motion No. 8 and others.

34. Motion No. 64 appears to add to the scope and purpose of the Bill and infringes on the Royal Recommendation. It also appears to do indirectly what cannot be done directly, that is, amend the definition clause.

36. Motions Nos. 65 and 66 were grouped with motion No. 33 and others.

37. Motion No. 67 was grouped with motions Nos. 27 and 30.

38. Motions Nos. 68, 70 and 72 should be grouped for debate. Motion No. 68 will be voted on separately and a vote on motion No. 70 will dispose of motion No. 72.

39. Motion No. 69 was grouped with motion No. 8 and others.

40. Motion No. 70 was grouped with motions Nos. 68 and 72.

41. Motions Nos. 71, 72, 73, 74 and 75 were grouped earlier by the Chair.

42. Motions Nos. 76, 76A, 77, 77A, 77B and 77C are to be debated and voted on separately.

43. Motions Nos. 78 and 79 give the Chair some difficulty in what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is trying to achieve. If the motions have, as their purpose, the expansion of the scope of the Agency, then for obvious reasons, they are out of order. I will, however, ask the Hon. Member to explain their purpose before making a final decision as to their acceptability.

44. Motion No. 80 attempts to provide regulatory power that is not contemplated in the Bill, is novel, and new to the Bill and should not be proposed to the House.

45. Motion No. 81 should be debated and voted on separately.

46. Motions Nos. 82 to 88 inclusive appear to be directly related. Motion No. 82 attempts to give to a committee of the Senate or the House of Commons authority which was clearly not contemplated in the Bill prior to its adoption at second reading stage. Therefore, it should not be proposed to the House. Motion No. 83 is contrary to the contents of the clause and to the principle of the Bill as adopted at second reading. As motions Nos. 84 to 88 inclusive are consequential to this motion, they should not be proposed to the House.

47. Motion No. 89 should be debated and voted on separately.

48. Motions Nos. 90 and 91 are interrelated—a multiplicity of reports. Motion No. 91 appears to place an additional charge on the Treasury and thus involves expenditures not foreseen in the Royal Recommendation attached to the Bill and should not be proposed to the House. As motion No. 90 is consequential to motion No. 91, it would also appear to be out of order.

49. Motions Nos. 92 and 93 were grouped with motion No. 33 and others.

50. Motion No. 94 attempts to delete all references in the Bill to the Minister and replace them with Governor-in-Council or body designated by the Governor-in-Council except in the interpretation clause, namely Clause 3. In the opinion of the Chair, this is inconsistent with the interpretation clause and goes against the principle of the Bill as agreed to by the House at the second reading stage.

It is my understanding from the remarks of the Hon. President of the Privy Council, the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), that this Bill will not be called again until Thursday of this week. It would be the Chair's intention, when the Order is called at eleven o'clock a.m. on Thursday next, to give Hon. Members an opportunity to speak to the procedural regularity of the motions on which I have expressed my reservations.

For the benefit of Hon. Members, these are Motions Nos. 3, 5, 13, 21, 22, 26, 28, 29, 33, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 71, 73, 78, 79, 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93 and 94.

For the moment, I suggest that debate begin on the Bill at the report stage on Motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just for the sake of better understanding and better work on this Bill at report stage, there are a couple of expressions that are new to Members, including myself. For example, at item 9 you said that Motion No. 13 seeks to introduce into the Bill new proposals which go beyond the "four corners of the Bill".

Second, in item 8 you state that Motion No. 12 has been grouped with Motion No. 8 "and others". Could you explain what "others" means?

Mr. Speaker: What is meant in the second case is that the grouping was already indicated in paragraph 6. I was trying to comment on each clause in order. This meant that in dealing with a subsequent clause, that clause was already grouped with an earlier clause.

If the Hon. Member looks at item No. 6 in the document, he will see the point that I am making. In other words, once I have given the grouping once, I do not repeat it.

With respect to "four corners of the Bill", I think pride of authorship allows me to say that it is meant to say outside the scope of the House of the Bill. We will now proceed to Motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 6 to 14 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Recognizing that increased capital investment and innovative technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities, and to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians."

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated, I propose to group that with Motion No. 2 by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Landgon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 7 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"the technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the government, would benefit Canada, the pur-".

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, may I beg your indulgence to say that I very much appreciate the work that you and the Clerk's office have done in dealing with this substantially large number of amendments. As you say, we have the right to reserve our comments until Thursday but we certainly appreciate the effort that has gone into trying to bring some order to this legislation. The amendments themselves are perfectly clear but we are glad to be able to offer them in a coherent way in order to aid and abet the development of better legislation. Therefore, I want to express my appreciation to you and the staff.

In moving Motion No. 1, I think we should go back to what has been a continual demand for clarity by all those who appeared before the committee. Even in the statements by the Minister himself there was the admission that in dealing with an investment community it was particularly important for the Parliament of Canada to make its intentions clearly known and not confused with any form of ambiguity.

The reason we moved Motion No. 1 is to attain that objective. First is to demonstrate clearly that the major focus of this legislation is a review procedure for foreign investment. It is a weak review procedure, it is an ineffective review procedure, it is a review procedure that will have limited impact but nevertheless it is a review procedure. To try to camouflage that somehow in the Bill runs against the signalling that is required for us to show the investment community, Canadian and otherwise, what the purpose of this legislation is.

What we are trying to point out is that the investment should be clearly targeted at having a benefit for Canada. One of the overriding concerns that we have raised during the course of the second reading debate and during the committee hearings, which was underlined time and time again by witnesses who appeared before us, is that foreign investment by itself is not an untrammelled virtue. It must be measured and judged by the impact it has on jobs, new technology and direct economic benefits. A number of cases were brought forward to cite how in fact foreign investment could be used to reduce employment, to reduce technological development and to reduce economic performance in Canada and, that foreign investment itself could be used to strip down emerging industries in the high-tech field. It could put newer Canadian businesses out of business. It could be used to crowd out the market-place by the superior market power of the large foreign-owned corporations. The reason for having a review is at least to try to ensure that the ability of this country to protect its own investment community is one that is a clear purpose of this legislation.

It is important to set forward that purpose in a very obvious and unmistakable fashion so that we know there is a purpose here now. Our Party intends to introduce a number of amendments that we hope will be incorporated in the Bill to ensure that that review procedure is improved and we are able more effectively to judge investment applications that will have an impact on Canada in a beneficial way and not in a negative way. We recognize that there is a different philosophy at work, which is simply to say on the part of the Minister and his Government that all foreign investment regardless is good.

But the Minister does not follow the logic of his and his own Government's rhetoric because if that was the point they would have no review procedure whatever. As it is, they maintain a review procedure but the review procedure itself is not a particularly effective, worthwhile or important one because it does not deal with the kind of problems clearly identified during the course of our committee hearings. There can be serious damage or negative results affecting resource communities, smaller businesses in Canada and the investment community dealing in high technology. Those are the areas where we have a high level of vulnerability in our business community. Most other countries do provide some protection. You have only to look at the Japanese market as an example of that. We have a review procedure without teeth. We have a review procedure that only because of the thresholds established and the vagueness of its terms will simply allow most of the investment that has a potential for some problems in our economy to be unreviewed and not judged as to whether it will protect Canadian workers, communities and Canadian jobs.

We have no quarrel with the other purpose of the Bill which is to promote Canadian investment. It has long been a major responsibility of the federal Government that the powers incorporated in this Act are powers which the Minister now virtually has as the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion. If it is there to be included in the Bill, there is no argument with that. We will be presenting amendments that will be used to identify clearly how the Minister might go about promoting Canadian investment in a more active, aggressive way. However, I do not think it would be proper for us to be presenting to the Canadian community on behalf of the Parliament of Canada a statement of purpose which tries to indicate that the primary rationale for this legislation is the promotion of Canadian investment. When we actually look at the substance of the Bill, parts of it deal mainly with setting out who is Canadian, who is non-Canadian, what the review procedures will be, and what the exemptions are to that area.

We think it is important. The Minister should agree with the logic of our position because he has been a proponent of the view that clarity is important and that we must eliminate uncertainty in the investment community. In the administration of an Act, as he well knows from his own experience, public servants, the legal community and others who must deal with the Bill—all those players who are involved with the administration of this Act—start out by reading its objectives as set out in Clause 2. The present Clause 2 is so vague, general and ambiguous that it is difficult to determine what in fact the Government is trying to achieve other than the general global interest of better investment. Legislation of that kind should not be passed; in itself it should relate to what are the prescriptions within the Bill. Therefore, we believe the amendments we have brought forward in no way deny the purpose of the Bill, in no way contradict the objectives set forward by the Government, but clarify, make more cohesive and more coherent and therefore make for a better piece of legislation. They would also establish more clearly what would be the operating principles by which the Bill would be administered and by which the applications would be made.

That is the purpose of the motion we are presenting today. We hope the Government will give it due consideration. We feel that we are presenting, as will always be the case at report stage of a Bill, amendments with the most constructive and positive point of view; that is, to have legislation which in fact will be more effective and more workable and for the general well-being of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by expressing a sense of appreciation to the Speaker for his efforts to unravel the great number of amendments which have been presented. What we are attempting to do within the spirit of the Bill as it was passed at second reading is to offer some constructive suggestions about mechanisms by which the Bill could be improved and elements which could be brought into the legislation that will in fact make it more useful.

What underlies the motion we have moved, and what in fact underlies the whole approach we are taking to this Bill, is the sense that direct foreign investment has both contributed to the country and to the problems of the country. Any attempt to deal effectively with this historically important phenomenon in Canada requires that we recognize the potential benefits as well as the potential problems and have a balanced approach which recognizes the significant leadership role of government, a leadership role which our amendment attempts to put right into the purpose Clause of this new piece of legislation.

During the committee hearings on this Bill we heard a great deal from business people about the potential problems which can exist in the context of foreign investment within this country. The former head of a large subsidiary here in Canada came before us and talked about some of the constraints under which he had to operate as the chief executive officer of his particular subsidiary.

Just this past week we have seen the parts producers in the automobile industry make precisely that same point, that left to themselves, foreign subsidiaries tend to constrain the opportunities that are necessary for the Canadian economy to create the jobs and establish the spin-off benefits which are essential to get our economy moving again.

Also, we have had concern registered to us by communities in the course of these hearings. They said to us that the possibility exists that we as a country can see jobs lost in our communities, that we can see workers and suppliers being hurt without a commitment on the part of the Government to take enough leadership in reviewing and encouraging the contribution of foreign investors to this economy.

We have moved the motion that we have to recognize the important role of the Government to set appropriate terms and conditions for foreign investment in this country. It is important to recognize that Government can give a leadership role to foreign investors. The Minister talked about this piece of legislation as signalling a new approach to foreign investors. Part of what we think has to be signalled is a sense of the responsibilities and the kinds of commitments to this community which foreign investors should accept when they come into this country and take over Canadian firms.

We will have a set of amendments which we hope to have included within the Bill. They will involve such important commitments to this country as the commitment to employment equity within firms that are taken over, commitments to economic spin-offs which will benefit all of Canada, commitments to good labour relations because that too is crucial within our country. The strategy of our amendments will be a strategy that attempts to make the whole process of review more public. Second, it will try to be even more activist in encouraging Canadian investment within our economy. It will be a strategy that will broaden the range of items to be reviewed because of the necessity to flash signals to investors of what we as a country expect them to contribute to our country and our community.

We hope to see improvements in the criteria that are provided to establish what a net benefit is to Canada in the process of take-over. We hope to clarify the cultural heritage clause of this Bill. In addition, we hope to be able to plug some important financial loopholes which have emerged in the course of detailed scrutiny of this Bill. For instance, those loopholes leave us not even looking at the financial situation of companies intending to take over Canadian companies during the review process according to these criteria.

We have a set of concerns about whether this Act inadvertently leaves out of the review process some very important considerations which I think the Government would not want to have left out. Branches of American companies, for instance, need to be reviewed if an indirect take-over is likely to lead to consequences for them and the communities within which they reside in Canada. As well, we need to have a clear definition of what the asset level is of companies which are going to be reviewed. We need to have a sense of what control really represents. We will be offering amendments that attempt to control and improve the financial aspects and details of this Bill through suggestions that will tighten up the wording of the Act.

We start with a basic thrust that there must be a commitment by government to the communities across this country when something takes place that threatens those communities. I refer to take-overs that threaten the jobs of workers, as was the case of Black & Decker, or when a Canadian company goes bankrupt and has to sell its assets, as is happening with a stampings firm now in Smith Falls, about which the Premier of Ontario has expressed concern. When we see cases of companies shutting down, companies rationalizing, jobs being lost, opportunities for Canadian entrepreneurs and opportunities for Canadian communities lost, we see that government has a role and a responsibility. There is a leadership which this Bill should recognize to take and establish the terms and conditions under which we as a country and our communities across this country can expect the very best and most benefits from foreign investment.

We have to make a commitment right at the start of this Bill that we as a country and as a Parliament are taking that leadership. We must recognize our responsibility to set the terms and conditions under which increased investment and increases in technology will be made to contribute rather than to counteract the economic growth that this country requires.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will introduce my comments by simply saying that the words in support of his motion expressed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and backed up by his buddy, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), were very similar to what we heard when the Bill was before the committee for such a long period of time.

We are dealing with a very fundamental difference between what the Socialist Party seem to espouse as expressed by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor, and to a great extent what the Official Opposition feel likewise to be the case. In considering Clause 2, which after all is the purpose of the Bill, and this is a very fundamental thing that we are dealing with, it is wise to remember what we are proposing to change. I felt that it might be good for the record what the existing Foreign Investment Review Act says under the purpose clause. It was passed in 1974, over 10 years ago, by the Government in power, now the Official Opposition, supported enthusiastically by the Socialists who were the rump group in the Parliament which maintained the Government of that day. This is what the Foreign Investment Review Act says:

> This Act is enacted by the Parliament of Canada in recognition by Parliament that the extent to which control of Canadian industry, trade and commerce has become acquired by persons other than Canadians and the effect thereof on the ability of Canadians to maintain effective control over their economic environment is a matter of national concern, and that it is therefore expedient to establish a means by which measures may be taken under the authority of Parliament to ensure that, in so far as is practicable after the enactment of this Act, control of Canadian business enterprises may be acquired by persons other than Canadians, and new businesses may be established in Canada by persons, other than Canadians, who are not already carrying on business in Canada or whose new businesses in Canada would be unrelated to the businesses already being carried on by them in Canada, only if it has been assessed that the acquisition of control of those enterprises or the establishment of those new businesses, as the case may be, by those persons is or is likely to be of significant benefit to Canada, having regard to all of the factors to be taken into account under this Act for that purpose.

The reason I read that into the record is because we must think of its tone. We must think of how offensive that purpose sounds to those who happen to be non-Canadians but might be considering investment in this country.

The reason we felt it was so important to change this type of image is that the record has shown, notwithstanding what the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has stated, that there has been a significant deterioration in this country with respect to job creation and with respect to the inward flow of capital to Canada. In short, the unemployment level of over 11 per cent that we inherited from the previous Government was due in large part to the fact that this type of legislation and its administration tended to kill the natural flow of economic funds that would benefit Canadians.

This debate is about jobs for Canadians. It is time the Socialists and their allies in the Official Opposition levelled with the Canadian public. To the extent that they are trying to frustrate the passage of this legislation, they are denying the creation of wealth in this country for Canadians and, most important, they are denying the creation of jobs for Canadians.

We should take a look at the change of thrust that has been suggested by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. I do not know whether or not the entire Official Opposition is behind that Hon. Member, but I can only guess that he has the support of the bulk of the Official Opposition. Our proposed Clause 2 reads:

Recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada, the purpose or this Act is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities—

That is our main purpose. The two Members from the Opposition who have already spoken propose to change that purpose very significantly. They do not propose to emphasize the encouragement of investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities. They indicate that the Act should provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure that they contribute to economic growth. They are right back at it. They want to return to the Foreign Investment Review Act terminology. They want to return to the policeman, regulator and agency that discourages investment and economic activity in this country. That is why when this clause was proposed at committee stage, we on the Government side felt that it could not be accepted. It is time we changed the image the world unfortunately has with respect to whether or not we welcome investment in Canada.

A very credible organization, the European Economic Forum, puts out an assessment once a year showing how countries around the world are perceived with respect to investment and economic activity. A year or so ago, its report indicated that in a 24-country survey of how welcome was foreign capital on an inward moving basis, Canada ranked 24th out of 24. Last year, the current report surveyed 28 countries and using the same test, how welcome is the inward movement of capital to the country, Canada ranked 28th out of 28. Is it not truly amazing, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition through one spokesperson, backed up by the Socialist representative from whom we have just heard, in spite of that fact, continues to pound home the belief that the old approach of the Foreign Investment Review Agency should be put in place once again?

The purpose we have set out is the purpose of encouraging investment by Canadians and non-Canadians in economic activity in this country. Since September when we took power, we have approved various foreign proposals for investment in this country. We did a recent survey to find out how many jobs had been created or are anticipated to be created as a result of this new money flowing into Canada. As a result of the applications that we have approved since September under the existing legislation, the figure is 21,000 new jobs for Canadians. We have been able to indicate that another 2,500 jobs will be saved. Think what can be done when we get the positive mandate that Bill C-15 will give us to look for more investment of this type from Canadians and non-Canadians.

We want to reverse the trend of capital flowing out of this country. Since 1979, the startling fact is that there has been a net outflow of foreign investment from Canada of $2 billion. That is shameful. Never before in our history have we had such an exodus of equity funds from Canada over such a time frame. This is the trend we feel must be reversed and those who speak against the thrust and purpose of Bill C-15 are denying the reversal of that trend and are denying jobs for Canadians.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of remarks to make regarding the statement of the Minister. I find it very funny to listen to the Minister speak about encouraging job creation when this very Minister accepted the cut made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) which removed some $200 million from his Department. From where did the Minister remove that $200 million? It was from his incentive programs. The very area of his Department which has a concrete effect on the high unemployment areas of the country has been cut. Yet the Minister rises in the House today to say, "Look at all these jobs we are going to create".

The Minister should realize that the real job creation in this country comes from the same sector as businesses that have survived the test of time in various areas that have experienced difficulty over the years and that is the sector composed of firms that have been owned and operated by Canadians. In the high unemployment areas, these firms have been family businesses in the primary sectors. The Minister should realize that.

The Minister made reference to the old policies of the Liberal Government, but he forgot to look at our new direction for change to see what we are advocating for the high unemployment areas of the country. The Minister forgets that his Government is saying to the fishing industry in eastern Canada, the greatest employer in eastern Canada, that it should consolidate. The financial statement, though, indicates that the consolidation of employment in the sector would have to be complemented by public and private initiatives to promote job opportunities in other sectors of the economy. What other sectors of the economy is the Minister referring to?

• (1150)

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think all Hon. Members are very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member but I wonder if it might be reasonable to expect him to discuss the contents of the Bill at some stage in his oratory?

Mr. Gauthier: That's not a point of order at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) is through with his analogy. He has the floor.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were here, and I presume he was here and listened to the Minister and heard what the Minister said—

Mr. Gurbin: I was watching and was very impressed.

Mr. Baker: He was watching on the television outside and found out that the communications system in the House of Commons probably increases the sound of the Minister's voice but doesn't do anything for his thoughts.

He even criticized the Liberal policy of direct job creation. What has that to do with the Bill before the House today? The point is, Mr. Speaker, that this Minister is introducing a Bill into the House and claiming that this is going to be the be-all end-all of employment opportunities for this country. At the same time he accepts the declaration of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board and chops $200 million from the money which Canadians were using to establish new business and to expand their existing businesses.

The Minister tells us to look at the actions of the present Government since it got elected. Well, if we look at the actions of the present Government, we see in every single Department cuts which discourage economic development, the very thing which this Minister claims this Bill is now going to encourage. The Minister talks about jobs. He says, "Look at all the jobs we created since we got elected"—which are the very words he used—"look at what we've done in six short months". We hear that said every single day in the House.

The Conservatives say they have created 120,000 jobs. Let's look at the three administrations on a month-to-month basis; this present administration, the Turner administration and the Trudeau administration. We find that the greatest number of jobs on a monthly basis was created by the short-term Turner administration; 33,000 jobs a month. In the last three months of the Trudeau administration there were 32,000 jobs created. The present administration is down to about 26,000 jobs a month, but the point is that that was job creation in the entire economy and in most cases, Mr. Speaker, has nothing to do with the Government which is in power.

I should be saying now that the Turner administration created more jobs than any other administration, but I am not saying that and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) would not say that. He realizes that a lot of these jobs which this Minister is trying to take credit for were not created by the present administration. The Minister should go back over the record and find out just how bad the record of the present Government is. But this Minister is embarrassed about the cuts in his own Department. He is embarrassed about the reduction in the amounts of industrial incentive grants he can now give out because of the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance. He is thoroughly embarrassed and I am sure he now feels he has to have something positive to say and this is the only thing he can hang his hat on. Time will tell, Mr. Speaker, that this Minister is wrong, the Government is wrong, and perhaps we will see the Minister move to a new Department.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to rise in support of Motion No. 2 which would require, if it were made part of this particular Bill, that investment and technology in Canada would continue under the appropriate terms and conditions as established by the Government of Canada. I feel this is extremely important, not as the Minister inferred because this is some sort of Socialist philosophy or plot, but for very good and pragmatic reasons, given the Canadian context. Developing technology is a means of developing new products which will permit us to be more competitive under export conditions. It also permits us to produce products within this country under more economically viable conditions. There is, along with the development of technology and the utilization and implementation of that technology, the possibility of creating a great many jobs as well as a lot of spin-off technology as the smaller companies develop ways and means of assisting with the various products required by the larger companies in order for their technology to be successful.

What we in this Party fear is a continuation—and I stress the word "continuation"—of the raids on Canadian technology which have been made by foreign corporations up to this time. In my comments, Mr. Speaker, in reinforcing this point, I am going to present to you a number of examples of what has happened within the last few years. I am sure that these occurrences are still in the memories of most Hon. Members of this House.

The first example of technology being developed and then being taken out of this country, and with it a lot of jobs which should have gone with that technology, is a technology which is of interest to me because a lot of mining rigs are required in my particular part of the country. We mine potash and we use electrical equipment to move that potash. In 1969 the General Motors Titan Division developed a mining vehicle which would carry heavy loads and ran with huge electric motors. This was developed in Canada, which made a lot of sense because Canada is one of the major mining countries in the world, and we do not, to a large extent, develop mining equipment in this country.

The General Motors Titan Division had developed this particular technology and were producing a truck which could be used in deep mining. Subsequently the General Motors Titan Division decided to sell this technology to a company in Texas. Not only was the technology in producing these heavy electric motors, and the trucks to go with them, lost to this country, but so were the jobs and the attendant technology to upgrade that particular product. It is now being produced in Texas and if Canadian mining companies want to buy this particular equipment they have to go outside of the country.

What makes it even more sad, Mr. Speaker, is that this all occurred prior to the Foreign Investment Review Agency "sticking its nose in", if we listen to Hon. Members on the Government side. There were, in fact, Canadian bidders who were interested in having an opportunity to bid on this company in order to keep the technology in Canada, but General Motors was not forced to open up the bids to Canadian companies and consequently that technology went down to the United States and was lost to us.

We have before us at the moment, I would remind the House, a possible loss of technology with the problems which the White Corporation is experiencing. An axial-flow combine was developed in Canada with assistance by the Canadian Government. The back-up technology to develop that combine is in the Brantford area, and those back-up agencies and small businesses would be lost if this technology is permitted to leave the country. This is very likely to be the case if we pursued this new policy which the Government is proposing.

● (1200)

I would point out to the House that during the committee hearings the Science Council of Canada pointed out that it is very common in the Canadian experience for smaller, high technology companies, those companies with a high component of brainpower and expertise but not much capital, to be raided and bought by foreign corporations. They take control of the company and, sometimes within a few months, often within a few years, the employees have been transferred closer to the head office of the new owners and the research and development component in Canada is shut down. We are not only losing jobs, we are losing a lot of the brainpower and training from our universities and training institutions. We are also giving up an opportunity for employment in Canada for graduates from those institutions. We see it as extremely important for this particular amendment to include these high technology firms so that they continue to be subject to review by either this agency or some other agency of the Government.

I am told that the Canadian Advanced Technology Association expressed great concerns about these take-overs. It was not just the Science Council of Canada who, I remind the House, is responsible for proposing science policy for Canada. As part of that role, it saw great danger and future damage to the hightech and scientific communities through this particular Bill. But the Association also pointed out that take-overs would probably continue and accelerate, as had been the case prior to FIRA being introduced. They, too, recommended that there be some sort of review process so that we would not find ourselves being raided by large corporations from outside the country who are after our brainpower, and who quickly drain off the small high technology companies which succeed in Canada, simply as a means of augmenting their technology as a large corporation.

As well, I am told that recently statements had been made by a former chief executive officer of the Philco-Ford Corporation which described in some detail the deterioration of the research component of Philco after Ford had taken it over. We have seen that corporation move most of its research component to the head office in the U.S. and there is no longer any Canadian component to that operation. Even though there had been a very firm and useful robotics operation begun in the Canadian component of this corporation, that has now been taken away and is being done in the U.S.

I just wanted to show the House that there were a few very real examples of what happens when Canada does not provide a review process to make certain that foreign take-overs of our high technology corporations do not result in those operations no longer being operative in Canada. When those requirements are not part of the law, we lose technology, jobs, information and the potential for future growth.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to speak in favour of Motion No. 2 put forward by the NDP caucus in this House. With the limited time I have to speak, I do not want to go through the whole motion but it is intended to clarify the legislation. The clarification concerns technology and the appropriate terms and conditions established by the Government for the benefit of Canadians.

What we are saying is that the Government of the day would be in a position to set terms to make sure that investment benefits Canadians. That is a natural right of government and it is expected that government would do that. Before a foreign-owned firm buys out a Canadian operation, the Government would be able to say that there should be certain benefits to the Canadian populace, and some mechanism for the Government to make that sort of decision. I do not believe that even under the present system involving FIRA we really look very carefully at foreign take-overs of Canadian firms. It is interesting that almost every application which comes before Cabinet under FIRA is approved. We have heard in the past that the reason for that is that the very concept of FIRA scares away foreign investment in Canada. That might be the belief of some people, but we also have to look at the real situation here. What other nation has so much of its manufacturing industry owned by foreigners? What other country has the majority of its oil industry owned offshore? To save time in this debate, what other country is owned as much by foreigners and foreign-owned companies? I believe this has had a real detrimental effect on the development of Canada.

The very nature of a foreign-owned corporation is such that they have their own corporate strategy, their own goals and plans for the future. That is quite right and exactly what they should be doing. I would think that a board of directors based in New York is going to have concerns different from a board of directors based in Toronto, Winnipeg or, hopefully some day, in Thompson, Manitoba. That is the nature of the beast. But what we are saying through the amendment put forward by my colleague is that we think the Government of Canada should review those applications with a certain strategy in mind. That is not to say that the Government of the day is not going to have a different set of priorities than we as the NDP in government would have. But they would still have that right. They would still be able to put forward regulations and certain guidelines on development which obviously a Party of a different political persuasion would not have. But you would still maintain that right and I think that right is very important.

A Member of our caucus, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), talked about research and the damage there could be to Canadians if new Canadian firms which had advanced research were bought out and the research was then taken to an American or European-based corporation. That is what happened with Philco when it was acquired by the Americans. A lot of the research that used to take place here is no longer taking place here.

There was a study done by the Science Council of Canada, even given the present regulations of FIRA, and it indicated we are in a situation where most foreign firms were not spending as much money on research in Canada as Canadian-based firms. Further to that, where there was federal or provincial Government money put into a research project, Canadian firms on average matched that with the same number of dollars of their own money. Not in each and every case but on average. However, that did not happen when it was a foreign-owned corporation. In some cases it did happen and probably in a very beneficial way. However, on average, foreign-owned firms were not matching the money they received from the Canadian Government or provincial Governments.

• (1210)

By denying the amendment put forward by the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), we are making it impossible for the Government to develop strategies for research vis-à-vis foreign-owned firms in the nation. We are a nation with our own problems but also with our own advantages. In order to develop we must be able to take advantage of the capacity of Canadians, their youth and relatively good education. We can do a lot in Canada based on our cheap hydro resources. We have a chance to develop but cannot take advantage of that as long as that development can be taken over in the future without any input from government whatsoever.

I come from a riding which is quite large geographically. It is two-thirds of the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. Lewis: Two-thirds of nothing.

Mr. Murphy: I hope you are on record for that one. I will be using it in my next campaign literature. I suspect the Member from the Conservative Party regrets saying what he did, because I certainly would use it in my next campaign literature.

I represent a riding which encompasses two-thirds of the Province of Manitoba. Jobs have been created by foreign investment in northern Manitoba. The City of Thompson has a fair sized workforce. Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting in Flin-Flon has a fair sized workforce. Those exist in part because of foreign investment. However, since there has been no Government strategy with regard to that investment, almost no research has taken place in those communities. Almost no women are hired by those companies. Despite the fact that the cities I mentioned are situated in the middle of a huge native population, there are almost no native people employed by those corporations.

Through the amendment before the House we are saying that the Governments of the day should consider affirmative action when foreign companies come into the country. Government should set forth the goals of Canadians, such as having more women and native people employed, having more research done, and having more regional development occurring in the nation. The Government should discuss these goals with the corporations as part of the decision-making process on whether there should be a foreign take-over. I think that is quite reasonable. Regardless of political philosophy, that is an expectation that most Canadians have of government. Government should have concern about how Canada is developed rather than only that it is developed.

That is what this very clear and precise amendment put forward by my colleague does. It does not say that foreign investors cannot come into Canada or that they must do 15,000 things in order to take over a particular Canadian firm. It does say that government should study any proposed investment and determine whether the appropriate terms and conditions are there. The amendment says that those terms and conditions should be established. This is not a very socialistic measure, Mr. Speaker. It simply says that we have a right to have input in our own future and that government should set out certain terms and conditions as to how the development of Canada should take place.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on the amendments to Bill C-15. Both the Official Opposition and Members of the New Democratic Party have recognized, from the time the Minister presented this Bill to the House, and in particular in studying the Bill in committee, that the Minister has really not given any fair consideration to the concerns that have been raised by Members of the Opposition in this Parliament with respect to Bill C-15.

Mr. Stevens: We reviewed it fully.

Mr. Tobin: The Minister says that he has reviewed it fully. The Minister has created a Bill, the net effect of which will be to allow foreign investment to come into the country and cherry pick Canadian industries. The primary onus or initiative that existed in the Foreign Investment Review Agency, formed by the Liberal Party when in power, was to determine what foreign investment was good for Canada and would contribute to this country's national objectives and long-term economic health. Those measures, which were implicit in the Foreign Investment Review Act, have been totally wiped out by Bill C-15. We now have a Bill which allows foreign investors to come into Canada and take the best and leave the rest, that which is unproductive, inefficient, old and outdated and needs retooling, to the Minister and the taxpayers of Canada to look after.

A particularly vulnerable and sensitive industry is the fishery. Fishing operations can be picked up a piece at a time for less than $5 million. In Atlantic Canada foreign investment could come in without bringing any new technology or creating one single new job.

In the Atlantic fishery, aside from giants such as Nickerson's National Sea and FPI, small independent companies which can be bought for a lot less than $5 million, and therefore would not have to be reviewed by the Minister's agency under this Act, represent about 50 per cent of the total production of the fishery in Altantic Canada. This Bill could now make it possible for foreign interests, which do not now have access to Canadian quotas of cod because they have been reserved for Canadian fishermen, to buy processing plants in single industry towns. Having bought those plants, they can then demand a share of Canadian fish in Canada's offshore. They can then demand to be allowed to bring factory freezer trawlers into the offshore.

The purpose of the amendment moved by my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), is to make it clear that the purpose of Bill C-15 is to show that we do welcome foreign investment that contributes to the economic lifeblood of this country. We welcome foreign investment that brings new technology to this country and explores heretofore unexplored areas of resource development in this country. We welcome foreign capital from investors who will treat this country with dignity and respect its value and culture. That is the purpose of this amendment.

The Hon. Member across the way smiles and mentions John Sheehan. Perhaps that is an example of a kind of foreign investment that he wants. Perhaps Members will recall that last time that John Sheehan became involved in a venture in this country at the insistence of and involvement by the Tory Government in Newfoundland under former Premier Frank Moores. The result was the biggest single corporate failure in this nation's history—$600 million—that precipitated the biggest single corporate failure in the history of Japan. It left the people of Newfoundland holding the bag for $70 million. It left the British Export guarantee department holding the bag for $110 million. If that is the Hon. Member's idea of what foreign investment should be attracted by this new Bill, then we in Newfoundland want no part of it.

Canadians who live in single industry towns where their culture and traditional lifestyle is dependent upon the resource sector are very worried because this Bill and its intent as expressed in Clause 2 makes it very clear that the Government has no concerns whether foreign investment creates new jobs or new technology. The Government has put Canada up for sale and no wise investor could be blamed for using the provisions of this Bill to cherry pick and come to Canada and pick those ripe industries and walk away from those that are not quite ripe. That is what will happen and the Minister has been told that.

I have given the fisheries as an example of an area sensitive to foreign investment. This Bill will allow foreign capital to come into the country to take over the most efficient and productive plants in small towns. While these take-overs do not seem to add up to much or give cause for concern when taken individually, the aggregate of 200 or 300 of such purchases could lead to a dominant position in the fishing industry.

Let us consider a Newfoundlander, Nova Scotia or Quebecer on the North Shore who lives in a small village where the fishery has been his lifeblood for hundreds of years. His way of life, his culture and history has been built on that industry. His greatest fear is that a small company that operates in those small villages will be taken over by a foreign concern.

Once that plant has been taken over, that company may claim to have a right to the quota offshore and instead of processing the catch in the plants of the small village it will put a freezer factory trawler offshore to process the fish there. As a result, the plants that have operated in these small villages will close down.

The people of Grand Bank have nightmares that Grand Bank will not be a vibrant fishing community in the future with colourful people and an interesting history but simply a boat named Grand Bank floating offshore. Where 400 people once made their living there, perhaps only 15 or 20 will make their living in this town.

This Bill opens the back door to foreign interests who are not interested in owning fish plants or employing people in small villages but whose only interest is obtaining the fish quotas that were unavailable to them up to this point. I urge Hon. Members to open their eyes, unlike the Minister, to be sensitive and show that they understand the regional nature of this country, and to support this amendment.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the review of foreign investment is a very important principle that was established by the former Government back in the 1970s after a very considerable amount of study. I found it amusing to listen to the remarks of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and his attempt to lump the Liberals and the NDP together as being responsible for this measure. I am proud that the Liberals are associated with this policy.

I am reminded of the original NDP attitude toward foreign investment review. When I was a younger Member of Parliament and the recommendations of the Gray report that led to this original Foreign Investment Review Act were brought forward, I recall the attitude expressed by David Lewis who was the then Leader of the NDP. It was that foreign investment review was a kind of smokescreen because there is no difference between a Canadian capitalist and foreign capitalist; they all want the same thing, which is to exploit ordinary Canadians.

We defended foreign investment review on a ground which I think deserves repeating. We believe there is a difference between Canadian ownership and foreign ownership. We do not agree with the NDP view that there is no difference between a foreign capitalist and a Canadian capitalist. That opinion animated our approach to foreign investment review.

On the other hand, we were certainly not opposed to foreign investment, but believed that Canadian investment was preferable since developing our own economy in order to have full autonomous control over it and to become a world-class economy in many industries would be better. We also recognized that with the opportunities in Canada and the high standard of living to which Canadians have become accustomed and to which we as parliamentarians should be dedicated to continuing, it was important to recognize that there should be a role for foreign investment in our country. We wanted our legislation to achieve the maximum benefits from any foreign investment that was made in Canada and that was the spirit in which the legislation was established. I believe that is the spirit in which it was administered.

I am aware that it had some very bureaucratic aspects and that foreign and Canadian capitalists are discouraged by red tape and screening requirements. However, although the potential for directing review is considerably reduced pursuant to this legislation, it still provides for an element of review. I believe the Government has done this in recognition of the importance of such a review. The Government realizes that we are an autonomous country and that we should have some kind of control over the flow of foreign capital into our country, whether it is to take over existing Canadian businesses within the meaning of the existing statute or proposed statute, or whether it is to establish new enterprises in our country.

What is troubling about Clause 2 of the Bill which Motion No. 1 seeks to amend is that it does not make that position very clear. Anyone reading the purposes of this Bill would not realize that a review procedure, however, reduced, attenuated and diminished, is still contained in the legislation of the new Government. The amendment proposed by my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), makes that clear.

• (1230)

I think that there should be the kind of review that is presently provided for in the legislation about to be repealed. I recognize that it has bureaucratic features. I know in the last two or three years efforts were made to streamline those procedures, but I think they can be over-streamlined. What this definition, the statement of purpose by the Government, makes me worry about is the general concern I have about the attitude which the present Government is taking toward the American Government and toward Canada-U.S. relations. Any political party in our country that came forward with an anti-American policy would be defeated in an election.

Mr. Lewis: That is what happened on September 4.

Mr. Kaplan: It would be defeated because this is not an anti-American country. While I have no doubt that there are people in our country who have anti-American feelings, they are such a small minority in Canada that they would never be able to elect anybody to this place.

Mr. Lewis: The NDP.

Mr. Althouse: We are pro-Canadian.

Mr. Kaplan: On the other hand, just because we are not anti-American, it is not our primary purpose to be pro-American either. We are not elected to serve the United States. We are elected in our Party not to be anti-American and not to be pro-American. We are elected to be pro-Canadian.

We know Canadians like the country to the south of us. We know that we are very fortunate to have the kind of neighbour we do and we are fortunate to have the kind of relationship that we do with that neighbour. I do not think this evasive statement of purpose contained in the Bill should be allowed to stand. It conceals the fact that in a marginal way there will continue under this new legislation a kind of review of foreign investment. That is as it should be. We should review and take responsibility for and interest in all American policies that affect our country.

What worries me is that I do not think the Government of the day is doing it adequately. I do not think in the area of defence that the Government is adequately respecting the autonomy of Canada or that it is adequately respecting the fact that Canadians want their Parliament and Government to stick up for them and not as a primary objective be a handmaiden, an envoy, or a client of the United States.

Seeing the language stated in this statement of purpose and knowing what I do of the other kinds of policies that have been introduced by this Government, I might mention the area of defence and the united approach to multi-lateral relations as examples of what I am concerned about. One could also talk about the attitude that this Government has taken toward research-sharing projects and even about police exchanges where the treaties signed at the Shamrock Summit opened the Canadian door as wide to the American law enforcement authorities as it is open to Canadian law enforcement authorities. It is something I am uneasy about. I feel we should co-operate with the Americans but that we should co-operate on the basis of an autonomous and independent country whose citizens like the Americans and who want to have close relations with the Americans but whose citizens are not Americans. Our citizens are Canadians.

I have to mention also, in talking about the importance of the Government accepting the amendment contained in Motion No. 1, the experience in my own constituency with de Havilland. The de Havilland aircraft industry was foreign owned. In 1972 when it appeared that its foreign owner was not prepared to give it a world mandate to develop a STOL aircraft for a world market, the Government stepped in and was prepared to buy that company and see it develop, as it has developed over the years, two or three, perhaps even four, new products which are distinctively Canadian and particularly relevant to the Canadian environment, to Canadian market circumstances, to a traveller with less money in his pocket than the American traveller and to an energy-conserving world, which is the world into which Canada is moving rapidly and perhaps should be moving even more rapidly to develop world-class products.

I have heard the Minister who brought forward this legislation indicate his vision of the future of de Havilland. He would like to see it sold. When we on this side asked him for guarantees, the kinds of criteria we had in mind when we were talking about guarantees were the kinds of things contained in the Foreign Investment Review Act.

We are not against the idea of the de Havilland corporation returning to private hands. We are not ideologically committed to public ownership even of some very important industry, like a portion of the aerospace industry. We are not even committed that much to saying it has to be preserved 100 per cent in Canadian hands. But the Minister offered absolutely no assurances at all. He said that we would have to wait and see. He said that we would be happy when we found out who the new owners of de Havilland were going to be and what the new rules of the game were going to be. We would like some statutory protections. The kinds of statutory protections that the legislation about to disappear contains were the kinds of safeguards and protections that we would like to have.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this important debate and to talk about Clause 2, which is in many ways at the heart of the proposed legislation.

There are two motions as I understand it currently before the House. First is the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Second is the motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Both of these motions seek to strengthen what is at the present time a very weak and dangerous purpose clause of Bill C-15.

I might preface my remarks on these motions by pointing out that in my view Bill C-15 is one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before this Parliament. What we are talking about in essence is the economic sovereignty of this nation. We have had a very early statement by the new Conservative Government of the extent to which it is prepared to cede economic sovereignty to the American corporate sector.

I want to indicate that what we are talking about in this legislation is a move backward. It is a fundamentally regressive move. We in the New Democratic Party have always been of the view that rather than weakening the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act, what we as Canadians should be doing is asserting our economic sovereignty by strengthening those provisions. But this Government is moving backward. The effect of Clause 2 and the effect of this Bill is to allow American-based multi-national corporations to determine what is best for them, and it will be their corporate priorities which dominate decisions made with respect to investment of new capital and new technology in Canada. It is for that reason that we fundamentally oppose the blanket statement that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada.

There has been a whole series of studies conducted which have demonstrated without any doubt whatever that the net impact of major corporate foreign investment in this country over the past couple of decades, instead of creating jobs for Canadians, has had the opposite effect. To suggest without any terms or conditions that increased capital and technology will benefit Canada flies in the face of our experience as a nation with foreign capital and foreign-based technology.

It is for that reason that my colleague from Essex-Windsor has proposed an amendment to change that wording to read that we recognize that increased capital and technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the Government would benefit Canada.

There is a profound difference in that approach, an approach that recognizes it is up to the people of Canada, through our Government, our elected representatives, to determine priorities for new capital and new technology. It is not automatically acceptable that the foreign corporate sector should decide what are those priorities. The reality in many cases is that what is good for the foreign corporate community, for the American multi-national corporation, in the short term may be good for Canada, but in the long term it may be tremendously destructive of our economic priorities and may be tremendously destructive of jobs as that foreign corporation seeks to maximize its global profit as opposed to seeking to ensure that Canadian interests are well served. At the heart of the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor is an assurance that it will ultimately be the Government which has the right to determine what are the appropriate terms and conditions and what are the undertakings which must be given by corporations which seek to invest in Canada from abroad.

As the Bill now stands, we are throwing open the door and effectively saying that any new capital or new technology would benefit Canada. As well, I would note that the purpose clause in effect contradicts the rest of the Bill. If there is to be a review process as the Bill sets out—and admittedly it is a very weak and ineffectual review process—what is the purpose of the review process if the Government in its preliminary statement in the Bill suggests that all increased capital and new technology is ipso facto beneficial to Canada? Obviously that makes a mockery of the suggestion that review is important, because review has no meaning if that is the Government's fundamental ideological bias. If nothing else, in order to provide for logical consistency in the Bill with the review process, the purpose clause, that is Clause 2, must recognize that it is ultimately up to the Government to determine what are the appropriate terms and conditions before permitting foreign investment in Canada.

Our concerns with respect to Clause 2 are part of our broader concern about the whole thrust of the Government in this Bill. For example, it is our view that by denying that in effect the Government has a role to play and that the people of Canada have a role to play in determining priorities for investment, the Government is making the review process a mockery and a sham. We believe, to the contrary, that the review process should be more public and more accountable to the people of Canada and to the people who work in corporations, particularly when we are talking about a corporate take-over. I have seen too many examples, both in my own constituency of Burnaby and elsewhere, of a corporation which comes into Canada, takes over a struggling Canadian company, makes certain promises, undertakings and commitments to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and then proceeds to disregard those promises, to the detriment of the workers in the community and ultimately to the detriment of the community as a whole.

A very large corporation in my constituency was a classic example of that. It took a great deal of effort even to obtain a copy of the written undertakings which that corporation made to the Government and ultimately to the people of the country and to the workers at the plant. When I asked what assurance there was that these undertakings were being fulfilled, in fact I was told that there was a monitoring process under way. When I delved a little more deeply, it was clear that the monitoring process was completely inadequate to ensure that jobs were in fact protected, as was the original intent of the review process. We believe that rather than weakening the review process, there should be greater public monitoring of the undertakings of the corporate sector that seeks to establish a new business in Canada or to take over an existing enterprise.

There should be far greater opportunity for intervention by the parties affected by the decision to take over a company or to establish a new company. Those affected parties will include workers, the community in which the company seeks to locate and, of course, possible competitors in the area which may be dramatically affected or undercut, whether it be through pricing policies, anti-labour policies, anti-worker policies, low-wage policies or inadequate environmental protection and so on.

One of the purposes of the amendment we are presently debating is to ensure that the Government has the right to establish conditions with respect to terms of employment and with respect to the impact of new technology, which so often has a particularly adverse effect on women.

I see Mr. Speaker indicating that my time for debate on this particular amendment is coming to an end. However, I want to reiterate that in many ways Clause 2 is at the heart of the Bill because it sets out the Government's broad thrust. In stating without any qualification that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada, the Government is denying the historic reality that in far too many instances the presence of foreign capital in the country has been destructive to the interests of Canadians. We in this Party believe that the motion which has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor will at least enable the Government of Canada, on behalf of the people of Canada, to ensure that adequate terms and conditions are in fact established, so that new capital and new technology benefits the people of the country and does not solely provide for maximum profits for an American corporate entity.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak at the report stage and to comment on the motion moved by my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I would like to say, first of all, that I was listening carefully to the Minister when he spoke to the House earlier about the purpose of this Bill. The purpose, he said, is to create jobs. I do not think any Member of this House would be against that.

With the amendment in question we are attempting to make the Government understand there should be a number of conditions under which Canada is open for investment. Capital is welcome, but the country is not for sale! We want to maintain in the legislation a number of measures that will make it possible for Ministers to explain, if necessary, to foreign investors that if they are coming here to invest, it must be in Canada's interests and for the benefit of Canadians, for the purpose of providing jobs, research and development, and that, in terms of an international mandate, this means developing foreign markets for Canada, so that the country's economy will benefit from sales made on those markets and thus experience new growth.

Mr. Speaker, last year foreign investment in Canada totalled $4.1 billion. One thousand foreign companies or foreign investors, if you prefer, invested in Canada. Ninety-seven per cent of the proposals submitted under the Foreign Investment Review Act were approved. I find this encouraging. What does the Government want to do? The Government says: Hold everything! Through its negative stance on this federal legislation, the Government managed to convince Americans, Europeans and the Japanese that the Foreign Investment Review Act was a measure that discouraged investment. That is absolutely untrue, as the Minister well knows. It is just not true to claim, as the Conservatives have been doing for two or three years, that this legislation was bad for Canada. That is totally inaccurate. The facts are there. I repeat: least year, $4.1 billion, 1,000 companies, 97 per cent approved. Why? To create jobs. Why? To promote research and development and to give us a chance to compete on international markets.

The Minister said that Canadian capital was fleeing the country. It was his buddies who were going to the United States to invest, obviously, where interest rates were exorbitantly high, and as all Members of this House are aware, and we might as well admit it, whether we like it or not, we depend on the economy of our good neighbour to the South, the United States. When their interest rates are very high, of course Canada must follow, unless we decide to do what some people suggested, which is to introduce currency controls that would affect the right of Canadians to invest where they want to invest and where they will get the best return on their investment. If this is what the Government wants, it should come out and say so, but it should not try and have the House and the Canadian public believe that the Act, as it was, was bad legislation and was not in the interests of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, for many years Canada has been trying to break into the international market in the research and development area. Hon. Members will recall that the Canadarm is a very good example. Nevertheless, as a country, our record is well below that of other major industrialized countries in research and development. Why? According to the Science Council, Canada's performance could be improved if the level of foreign ownership in our industry were not as high. That is what the Science Council said. The multinationals have a tendency to concentrate their research and development activities in their country of origin, which is normal, and they usually ignore the scientific potential of Canadians.

Foreign firms undertake far less research and development activities in Canada than Canadian firms do. In 1982, the level of research and development in Canada by Canadian firms was 1.4 per cent of sales, while for United States firms, this was 1 per cent, and for firms from other countries 0.9 per cent. These figures are even more revealing if we consider the fact that foreign firms are usually bigger and have access to markets already opened up by the parent company.

In addition, the degree of technological imports tends to increase rapidly as the level of foreign ownership rises. Such imports may reduce the creative capabilities of Canadian industry, jeopardize the development of qualified Canadian researchers, and even force many of them to leave the country.

Mr. Speaker, without foreign investment review, without maintaining the right of the Government and the Minister to exercise effective control, foreign investment may have a disastrous effect on Canadian exports, which constitute nearly 30 per cent of our GNP, and are thus a major source of income for this country.

Although foreign companies export a large part of their production, they generally must comply with the parent company's trade strategy. I have said so before and I repeat that they do not develop their own trade network here in Canada. Their products are for the most part shipped to the parent company or to other branches. These internal exchanges may very well prevent the expansion of Canada's trade. I shall, if I may, recall two quite recent occurrences.

[English]

The Hyundai company is established in the Minister's riding. It was because of the existing FIRA regulations that we were able to convince this Korean company to invest in Canada and create jobs here. That I applaud. The other one is the White Farm implement company in Ontario. That is an important issue. Borg-Warner, the trustees or holding company of this implement company, under the present legislation has been asked to guarantee that the technology that White Farm possesses in Canada remains in Canada. That is essential. Otherwise, the research and development which has been developed over years and paid for by Canadians, and which should benefit Canadians, will not remain in Canada. That would be wrong.

I will terminate my remarks. I see you are raising your finger, Mr. Speaker, to indicate that I only have a minute left. I will just repeat what I said at the beginning. This country is open for business. Yes, we welcome investment to Canada, but come here with the national interest at heart. Make sure it serves the national interest of Canadians, first by job creation, second by research and development, which is long term planning that is good, and a world product mandate. Make sure it keeps those three matters in mind. Then investment is welcome to come here.

I would ask the Government to consider the reasonable approach that is proposed in the amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It is reasonable and would reinforce the Bill. It would give the Bill much more oomph and guts than it has with the Minister's proposals.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate. We are debating the purpose of the Act. If we are to pass legislation through this House, the first thing we have to be clear about is the purpose of the legislation. I would like to take note of the purpose of this legislation as outlined in the Government's Bill. Under "Purpose", the Bill states:

> Recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities and to provide for the review of significant investments—

It goes on. Those are very fine words. We have chosen to amend this stated purpose. The purpose outlined in this Bill is to open the doors to foreign investment without a watchman at the door, simply having an unguarded entry into the country. We have moved a rather short but significant motion which comes into the clause at the word "technology" and reads:

> "technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the government, would benefit Canada,—"

We are emphasizing capital and investment under appropriate terms and conditions. In other words, we do not think that foreign capital should have a free hand in Canada. Rather, foreign capital should have to live by the standards of the Canadian community as expressed through our democratically elected institutions. The public interest should have an impact on the behaviour of capital in this country.

We are not prepared to leave ourselves to the mercy of decisions made in the boardrooms of international and multinational corporations. Those corporations have their own legitimate interest—to make a profit. Their aims do not always coincide with the national interest and the interest of the community. It is important that this legislation recognize that the community interest is primordial, that it comes first. We allow for people and companies to make a fair profit, but it has to be done in a way that serves the over-all community interest.

I will just give a brief example before one o'clock. In Manitoba, Toro Industries, a company which produces small pilling devices for gardening, decided to set up a plant and do some manufacturing in Manitoba. At the insistence of the provincial Government, the company accepted an affirmative action plan as a part of its industry in Manitoba. I think this is a concrete example of how government leadership can affect the behaviour of capital in a positive way and make that capital better serve the community.

• (1300)

That is the fundamental purpose of our amendment. It is to remind capital that it is there at the behest of the community. I will continue my remarks after lunch, Mr. Speaker. I see that you are indicating that my time is short.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TOURISM

HAMILTON EMPLOYMENT POTENTIAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, "jobs, jobs, jobs", was the Tory election cry, but that cry has left the people of Hamilton crying. Not only has the federal Government failed to take action to protect steel jobs from unfair international dumping practices, but the provincial Tories have refused to support the steel industry bid to recycle steel, not aluminium cans. The only Party which has taken a clear position on this issue is the Liberal Party. The New Democratic Party and the Progressive Conservative Party are both "reviewing" the situation.

The people of Hamilton do not want reviews. They want jobs, including people like Ernie Kablau, who has invested $800,000 and is ready to create 18 jobs by launching a Hamilton-based cruise ship on Lake Ontario. The Tory response was: "We won't help because Hamilton is not a tourism priority".

The Tories have always seen Hamilton as a dumping ground for projects like "Go Alert" but have never given us a chance to develop the tourism potential which could help get the Hamilton economy back on track. Instead, the Government is hindering. Not only has approval for Ernie Kablau's project been stalled by federal and provincial Conservatives, the project is now threatened because an American company has applied to do exactly the same thing. We want made-in-Canada jobs for Canadians, jobs in the steel industry, in tourism, home based jobs to make Hamilton proud. We don't want government red tape.

The hollow promises of the past federal Conservative election campaign are being echoed by their provincial cousins. Mr. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), won't you crack the whip with your junior cousin in Toronto—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

S.O. 21

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RETENTION OF PRAIRIE HEADQUARTERS IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, with friends like the four Manitoban members in the Cabinet, Manitoba does not need enemies. I am referring to the decision announced yesterday by the Government to establish the new position of senior vice-president for western Canada in the CNR. This position will be "based in Edmonton, and the new powers to be entrusted to it will reflect the reality that close to 70 per cent of CN's rail business is done west from Thunder Bay."

The fact is that the prairie regional headquarters of the Canadian National Railways is in Winnipeg. This announcement yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) gives rise to recalling the fears which Winnipeggers had two years ago when there were rumours there would be a reorganization of the CNR and only one region would be created out of two, the mountain and the prairie region, and that the new regional headquarters would be in Edmonton. Here we have what may well indeed be a foreshadowing of that future by having that new vice-president operate out of Edmonton.

I call on the Manitoban members of the Cabinet to make sure that this is not the beginning of the end for Winnipeg as a regional headquarters for Canadian National Railways. We have already seen the postponement of the VIA Rail repair shop in Winnipeg, the cancellation of the National Research Council project, and the leaking of work out of the CNR east to Toronto and now west to Edmonton. When are those Hon. Members going to stand up for their own province?

REFORM OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

FUTURE PROSPEC

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Last Thursday, Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader tabled the Government's response to the first report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, on which I have the privilege to sit.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that I found the response encouraging and that I am enthusiastic about the prospective changes this reform will bring for the benefit of Members of the House, a reform which will undoubtedly improve the perception Canadians have of this institution.

I invite and strongly urge Hon. Members to make suggestions and recommendations to the Committee, for it is important to reform Canada's Parliament so that every Member may be heard and have his or her say about legislation introduced by the Government.

I should add that, as a new Member, the Committee provides me with excellent opportunities to become familiar with the rules of this House. I am quite pleased that the Committee reached a consensus under the able guidance of Hon. James McGrath, and that the reform we advocate has been unanimously endorsed by the three parties in the House.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am particularly proud to belong to a Committee and a Government which historians will describe as having been among the most progressive in the reform of the Canadian House of Commons.

STEVE FONYO

ONE-LEGGED RUNNER REACHES BRITISH COLUMBIA BORDER

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, in about two hours from now something special will occur on the Trans-Canada Highway in Yoho National Park at the British Columbia border. There Steve Fonyo, our new Canadian hero, will start the home stretch of his "Journey for Lives". When Steve started his courageous journey in the chilly waters off Newfoundland, probably there were many skeptics. Over a year later, as we watched this courageous, gutsy young man maintain a gruelling pace, despite snow and rain, and in constant pain, we are touched deeply by Steve's dedication to the fight against cancer.

Steve's commitment has already raised over $4 million for cancer research, public education, and patient services, and more will come. One million dollars has come from the Government of British Columbia. I know that the people of British Columbia will show their generosity as Steve completes the last 1,000 kilometres of his journey.

On Sunday Steve ran 40 kilometres in blizzard conditions, uphill from the Morley Flats to Banff, and he will have tough days ahead through the mountains of British Columbia and the Fraser Canyon. Millions of Canadians show their admiration for Steve's courage and selflessness. He uplifts and inspires us.

Today, Steve, as you start on the last weeks of your journey, let our message reach you across the lakes and the plains and into the hills. Steve, we love you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED DISMISSAL OF BETTY HEWES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that many Members in the House today remember the old days in Quebec when parish priests would tell their parishioners that Heaven was blue and Hell was red. What a sad era for democracy!

Closer to us in time, we remember one election promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the effect that, under a Progressive Conservative Government, appointments would be made by an impartial committee. Such is not the case, far from it, and incumbents are not even given time to complete their mandate. As it happened, Betty Hewes has been dismissed as Chairperson of the Canadian National Railways' board of directors. She cannot possibly have been fired because of incompetence.

Mrs. Hewes was one of very few Western Canada women to hold such a position. If the Government insists on appointing Conservatives, it should at least replace women by women.

Mr. Speaker, I am flabbergasted to see that the Government has been unable to find a competent woman member of the Progressive Conservative Party to fill this position. It is an insult to the women of that Party, and I hope that my female Government colleagues will tell the Prime Minister, in no uncertain terms, that they disagree with this kind of appointments.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, may I say that Canadians, men and women alike, have just about had it with such partisan appointments and that, when they will vent their anger, the blue Heaven will turn red.

STATUS OF WOMEN

INUIT TAPIRISAT OF CANADA—WOMAN ELECTED PRESIDENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Rhoda Innuksuk, who has been elected President of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada. As the first woman leader of the Inuit people she symbolizes the growing participation of northern women in leadership roles in public and political life.

One of Ms. Innuksuk's first priorities is to deal with the very serious social problems of young Inuits who are experiencing the highest rate of drop-outs, crime, suicide, and unemployment. I urge the federal Government to give every assistance to Inuit people so that they may find effective ways to deal with social and health problems which are related to their invasion by southern society which is disrupting the native way of life.

If the young people of the North are to have hope for the future, they must have access to education, training, and jobs which are relevant to their needs and to their communities. Native health problems must be an immediate priority of the federal Government. Lung cancer in Inuit women has increased by 21 times the national average, and youth suicide by six times. Inuit people have little access to medical services and often must leave their families and fly to strange and distant hospitals, even for childbirth. They should have decentralized health services, staffed with trained community health aides.

I urge the Minister to make northern health needs his priority, and to encourage a new style of health delivery which will train local people as health care practitioners—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

PARLIAMENT HILL

EXPULSION OF PEACE DEMONSTRATORS

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my support for the firm and I would say courageous action taken by one of our colleagues with respect to the campers on Parliament Hill. I do not question the purpose of their demonstration which has been going on for two years. However, this kind of demonstration should not be carried to the point where it becomes an eyesore and an affront to public order and where the Government and people of Canada become the laughing stock of visitors from abroad.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against tolerance, but I do think there are limits to what we can tolerate.

At this rate, pretty soon these people will go and camp on anybody's front lawn, and will help themselves in the fridge, and we will have to go on being tolerant, as some people would have us believe. There are other ways to protest in our society, ways that respect the community, and which do not promote disorderly conduct and anarchy.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the Canadian people and the majority of the Members of this House approve the courageous action taken by our hon. colleague.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, one of the most important initiatives taken by the new Government has been the Task Force on Program Review headed by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). The task force is charged with a comprehensive review of all government Departments so that services might in future be delivered to the public in the most efficient and cost effective way. It is high time that this took place, and the selection of the Task Force leader lends credibility to the exercise. He is known for his integrity, ability, and concern for the taxpayers' dollar. He is not known, Sir, to curry political favour.

When the various reports are finalized it is likely, secrecy having gone out with the Xerox machine, that they will prematurely become public. It is equally likely that special interests, both within and outside of government, will react noisely if privileged positions are threatened. The Cabinet must hold its ground and follow up in a systematic manner with the implementation of the task force recommendations. To do otherwise would be for the present Government to be no different from its predecessor. The Government was chosen by Canadians to put our federal House in order, and this it must do.

FORESTRY

DELAY IN NEGOTIATING BRITISH COLUMBIA AGREEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House are aware of the very special relationship which exists between Members of Parliament from British Columbia and Members of Parliament from Newfoundland. In fact it is well known that the people of our two provinces have been described as the book-ends of Canada. Therefore, in the spirit of that special friendship, I rise today to express my regret at the unfortunate disease which has afflicted Tory Members of Parliament from British Columbia. The disease is called Nielsenphobia. It causes those so afflicted to lose their voice, forget their constituents, and makes them simply unable to find their way around Parliament Hill.

Because they have lost their voice at a time critical to the people of British Columbia, in the spirit of the friendship between our two provinces I shall say for them what I know they would say themselves if they could find their voice or, for that matter, their backbone. It is this. Will the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) quit treating the people of British Columbia with such scorn and disrespect? Will they move immediately to resolve the $75 million squabble with the Province of British Columbia and immediately cease holding up for ransom the future of the most important industry in British Columbia, the forest industry, as a means of trying to resolve that squabble?

While I am at it, on behalf of the people of Newfoundland to the people of British Columbia, and through them to their Members, I hope you get over Nielsenphobia very soon.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

ACCESS TO MPS' CONSTITUENCY OFFICES

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that I speak on behalf of every Member of this House when I draw to the attention of all Canadians the fact that many Members of Parliament, like myself, are forced to rent a constituency office on the second floor of a building which offers no access to the disabled or elderly. This regrettable situation arises because rents in many large urban areas in Canada are three times or more as expensive as those in rural or smaller communities. In effect, budgets for Members of Parliament do not reflect this reality whatsoever in order to deal effectively with this problem.

As a member of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, I am aware this matter has been addressed. However, the speed at which progress has been made in this area would make a snail's pace appear supersonic. Meanwhile, in many communities across Canada the disabled and the elderly are denied proper access to the office of their Member of Parliament, access which should be a right for those people.

I know I speak for all Members when I say how sincere we are in our efforts to create easy access to our offices for all Canadians.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AWARDING OF CONTRACT—ROLE OF DOUGLAS ROBSON

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the Wilson family compact which resulted in a $234,000 cozy deal between the Minister, his brother-in-law, and his riding association president. It is unusual that the words uttered in the past by Tories such as "fraud", "deceit", and "sham", have now been replaced by "integrity", "objectivity", and sometimes even "sanctity", to describe the present situation.

Would the Minister tell the House if Mr. Robson, during his employment with the Minsiter, was privy to any information which could directly or indirectly assist him in obtaining government contracts? Furthermore, could he tell us whether Mr. Robson and Lawson Murray Ltd, have any other contracts, directly or indirectly, with the Government of Canada at the present time?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday to the House that Mr. Robson was dealing in my office on a totally administrative basis. He was my executive assistant in 1979, as I said, and he understood the way I wanted the office set up. He was dealing strictly on an administrative basis; nothing to do with policy, nothing to do with the awarding of any contracts.

As far as a response to the second question is concerned, I do not know. I have nothing to do with contracts in the Government.

LETTING OF LUCRATIVE CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The current situation is intolerable and shameful, and the Minister's defence is even worse.

Is the Minister actually informing this House and all Canadians that any company may send emissaries or representatives to work in a Minister's office and then, quite coincidentally, leave that office with lucrative government contracts, and if so, could the Minister inform the House whether this kind of attitude is reasonable, considering the Canadian taxpayer who must pay the cost of these contracts?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I made it very clear in my first answer why Mr. Robson was there. He was there because he was my former executive assistant in 1979. He knew the way I worked; he knew the way I wanted to have the office established. I was under a great deal of time pressures at that time if the Hon. Member thinks back, and I had to go immediately to Washington for a series of international meetings. That was the purpose of his work.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I have in my hand a copy of his conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers of the Crown. Section III relates to avoidance of preferential treatment. It says that "Ministers shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to relatives or friends, or to organizations in which their relatives or friends have an interest. Ministers must also take care to avoid placing or appearing to place themselves under an obligation to any person or organization which might profit from special consideration or favour on their part". Does the Prime Minister not feel that this guideline has been broken in this particular instance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Inasmuch as the contract to which my right hon. friend refers is a contract that was awarded pursuant to objective criteria by another Minister completely, I am satisfied that there were no violations by the Minister, who is a man of great integrity. Having said that, I will certainly acknowledge that not only must Cabinet Ministers avoid conflicts of interest, they must also avoid even the appearance of conflicts of interest, which is why Canadians were so horrified when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition assumed the position of Prime Minister of Canada and for a number of weeks maintained important corporate directorships. There is the difference between what the Minister of Finance did and what was done in other circumstances. We will defend this Party's integrity any time and in any circumstances.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is misstating the facts. I resigned every corporate directorship on June 30, the day I assumed the Prime Ministership of the country. That is a fact, and he knows that.

FORMER OFFICE HOLDERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister the guidelines from Appendix 2, Post-Employment Guidelines for Ministers and, by reference, their staff. In any official dealings with former office holders Ministers "must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access, or preferential treatment". Does the Prime Minister not feel that this particular guideline has been broken?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend raises the question of appearance, with which we must deal. I acknowledge that. There will be further guidelines filed very shortly which will tend to eliminate even that possibility of appearance.

I point out to my right hon. friend that after he became Leader of the Liberal Party and Prime Minister elect, he was given secret and confidential briefings. I never once protested because of my full confidence in his integrity, notwithstanding the appearance of a conflict. I hope he would extend the same generosity to the Minister of Finance today.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows better than that. He knows that when I became Prime Minister elect I instructed the Clerk of the Privy Council to show me no documents that would provide a possibility of conflict with any of my earlier associations until they had been shed and I had assumed office. He knows that, and he can check that with the Clerk of the Privy Council.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister's own conflict guidelines have been broken in two respects. The Minister admitted that he knew of this situation and discussed it with his brother-in-law, and yet did not stop it. In the first place there was preferential treatment given to his brother-in-law. Second, his former executive assistant, vice-president on leave from Lawson Murray, Mr. Robson, was given the appearance of preferential treatment after leaving the office of the Minister. What does the Prime Minister intend to do about this?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what we are doing, as was my tendency at the time, given my understanding of my right hon. friend's long tradition of honorability, was of course to give him the benefit of the doubt. When we came in we inherited the same guidelines. We have since improved upon them. They will be filed with the House. I think it is the kind of document of which my right hon. friend would be quite proud. We did not do it overnight. I raised no questions at the time, notwithstanding questions which were being raised elsewhere, because of my feeling for this matter.

I can give my right hon. friend the assurance that the integrity of the Minister of Finance is absolutely unquestioned. I will acknowledge that even any appearance must be dealt with. This we propose to do in the new guidelines which we will publish shortly.

ALLEGED PATRONAGE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and concerns an absolutely shameless case of patronage in New Brunswick. Recently, the Minister fired ten wharfingers employed in Shippegan and other ports along the Acadian coast.

In a letter dated April 12, the Minister released the wharfingers from their duties effective March 31. The injustice was not only flagrant but also retroactive!

Does the Minister intend to undo this example of political interference in the Public Service or are we going to see further appointments of Progressive Conservatives to these positions?

[English]

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. friend would want to know that any changes made in the case which he has raised have been as a consequence of consultation with Members of Parliament. If there has been some injustice which the Hon. Member can bring to my attention, I would, of course, be prepared to discuss it.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, these particular 10 wharfingers won their jobs in an open competition. The local MP has told them that their replacements will start work on May 1. Is the Minister prepared to investigate this matter with a view to ensuring that these people can keep the jobs which they won fairly and squarely?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's representation may not be completely accurate as to numbers or the reference to "fairly and squarely". As I said, if my hon. friend has representations to make about some undue injustice, I would be prepared to discuss it with him.

Oral Questions

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MINISTER'S ADVERTISING EXPENSES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is with regard to the Wilson family compact. Yesterday in the House the Minister indicated that he did not know that his sister Wendy was on the board of directors of Lawson Murray Limited, the company headed by his brother-in-law, Doug. The Minister suggested that at all times he was dealing at arm's length with Lawson Murray Limited.

Would the Minister tell the House whether he is aware that one company, namely, Lawson Murray Limited, was paid $27,306.04, or 65.2 per cent of the Minister's total election expenses, during the Minister's election campaign?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what this has to do with the matter that we have been discussing. This company helped me in the advertising during the election campaign, and that is what they were paid for.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is unusual that one company should be paid 65 per cent of the total election expenses.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: The Minister practised nepotism during his election campaign. He is now practising nepotism with taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: This leads one to question seriously the credibility and competence of the Minister to carry on as Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. I am sure that the Hon. Member knows that he is rising in the House to ask Minister's questions with regard to their ministerial responsibilities. I am sure he knows that, and I am sure he has a question to ask.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): In view of the fact that the Minister discussed the propriety of the $234,000 government contract to Lawson Murray with his brother-in-law, Doug, and his sister, Wendy, before it was signed, would the Minister not agree that he exercised extremely poor judgment in allowing his brother-in-law, Doug, and his sister, Wendy, to get the contract?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the Hon. Member's question is quite false. He made two mistakes in the preamble.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPLEMENTATION OF NEW GUIDELINES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is related to the issue of the Government awarding contracts to its political friends without any tendering procedure. Last September Canadians voted for a breath of fresh air in the Government's dealings in the area of patronage and tendering.

Are the new regulations in effect, and were they used in the consideration of the contract given to the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance? Are they being used in the consideration of Camp Associates for the tourism business of the Government?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services I would like to address the question specifically. I do not understand why the New Democratic Party keeps asking the same question over and over again. If they cannot understand a very simple proposition, I do not know what is wrong with them. The answer to the question was given to them yesterday.

When we first came into office we were seized with the old guidelines of the previous administration, the Treasury Board directive. What we did at an early date was bring forward new guidelines which are now in the process of being completed by Treasury Board, and which have been in effect since early this year with respect to the method by which advertising contracts will be selected. This is a cost efficient and a new method in which there is a greater degree of accountability. This is a system that I recommend to the New Democratic Party which does not use it in any provincial administration that I have heard of.

• (1430)

Mr. Murphy: Concerning the Minister's last comment, I would ask him to check to see what does happen in Manitoba, because they do have contracts going to Tory firms. That is allowed in that province.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. A supplementary question.

FILING OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in his response the Minister asked why we have to keep asking the same question. I would like to know the answer to that, too.

Yesterday, in reply to our Leader, the Prime Minister said that there are new guidelines and "we will be happy to file them at your earliest convenience." Today our office tried to obtain those guidelines through the PMO. We were told that they are not available. What is the definition of "your earliest convenience"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): We will be filing them very shortly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend will see that they are a tremendous improvement over what we inherited. They have been in effect.

Inasmuch as he mentioned Manitoba, I have noted that Joanne McNevin, former aide to the Leader of the NDP, is now a consultant with the Government of Manitoba. Mark Eliesen, research director under the NDP here, is Chairman of Manitoba Hydro.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Chairman of Manitoba Hydro. There's a guy who knows all about lights. Murray Wepler, former executive assistant to the Member for Ottawa Centre, is communications director with the Manitoba Government. It is the Member for Ottawa Centre who needs the communications help.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Cliff Scotten, former Secretary General, is strategy consultant to the Premier of Manitoba.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: I could go on, and on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Churchill, on a supplementary question.

ELIGIBILITY OF FIRMS TO SECURE CONTRACTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): If the Prime Minister wants to compare systems, will he allow, in his new guidelines which he will finally show us, non Conservative firms to get government advertising contracts? They do that in Manitoba. You want to compare systems; will you do it here?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, absolutely non government firms, the same way that we have appointed so many members of different political parties.

With regard to Manitoba, can I go on to the second part of the list?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: You won't find a single Tory appointed in Manitoba or Saskatchewan by the NDP, and that is where your sanctimony is disserving you because the Canadian people know you're a bunch of frauds when it comes to the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is generally liked in Newfoundland because he reminds us of the key ingredient in our favourite meal, pea soup. You're a real hambone.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, but I want to tell him that we say in Newfoundland, you'd have to have the face of a robber's horse to expect Canadians to swallow your answers to the Leader of the Opposition's questions. Is the Prime Minister saying to Canadians. "Okay, so the Minister of Finance broke my guidelines. But that is okay, because tomorrow I will issue new ones." Do his guidelines have teeth and, if so, what happens to Ministers who breach them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I didn't think that there was a Newfoundlander who could sink lower than Roger Simmons, but was I ever wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister of Finance broke no guidelines and he broke no law. He is a man of great integrity, and the Hon. Member would do well to emulate the magnificent example of leadership and integrity that this gentleman has always inspired across Canada.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, this Prime Minister is trying to suggest that he does not have guidelines. These are his guidelines. He issued them and he instructed his Minister to follow them. I ask the Prime Minister are his guidelines worth the paper they are written on, or is it a waste of time, a joke?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Out.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Now that we have been through the first part of Question Period maybe we can treat the second part with a little more calm and quiet.

Mr. Shields: Don't bet on it.

Mr. Speaker: Whoever said "don't bet on it", I think I am with him.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

FORTHCOMING BUDGET—MINISTER'S SPEECH IN CALGARY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will try to change the tone. I rise as a humble and insignificant opposition backbencher.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I suppose that is better than being called a nobody, as said by the previous Government.

I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is sitting next to that heavyweight to his left. Yesterday he confirmed in Calgary that the first Tory budget of this administration will encourage foreign investment, and that the Government is considering the elimination of the 25 per cent Crown share in federal lands. Would the Minister tell the House the position of the U.S. Government on the privatization of the Crown share by giving a preference to Canadian companies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would have to ask the United States Government.

MINISTER'S VIEW

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has discussed this change with the U.S. Government and, if not, does he personally take the view that this change should be discussed with the Americans before the Government makes a final decision? He has expressed this view in the past. Is this still his present view?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I don't know how long it takes the Hon. Member to catch up with events, but the Right Hon. Member for Manicouagan is the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I think it would be prudent for the Government of Canada, when we are enacting legislation, to have some idea of the reaction that would come from either private investors or Governments in other countries. But I make the point that while we might seek some indication as to the reaction of other Governments, this Government of Canada takes Canadian decisions here, ourselves, and in the Canadian interest, no other interest.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM GAS REVENUE TAX

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On March 28 it was a great day for Canada, the day the Western Accord was signed. There is one major highlight. The PGRT, the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, will not apply to new production commencing on or after April 1, 1985. Does this mean that the PGRT will not apply to any new production, including reserves that were shut in prior to March 28 and may come on stream or be produced after April 1?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the revisions to the PGRT were designed to create activity in the oil patch to provide new jobs and new exploration. Having said that, I can tell the Hon. Member that there is a working group under the aegis of the Minister of Finance that is taking a look at regulations to govern the new petroleum and gas revenue tax, and this group will be giving its report to this House in due course.

FORTHCOMING BUDGET—MINISTER'S CALGARY SPEECH

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, folllowing on the question from the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, can the Minister of Finance tell us whether he authorized the Secretary of State to make these budget disclosures to the Chamber of Commerce in Calgary, or is this just another example of sloppy disregard for the budgetary process?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, maybe I could read the sentence that gave rise to the headline in The Globe and Mail today. It reads: "Our first major initiative was to replace FIRA and Michael Wilson's budget will continue the encouragement of enterprise and investment". It was two separate thoughts combined into one to make a headline.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, with that I think I should go to the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I wish you would.

PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister assure us today that when the Budget is delivered it will be delivered here in the House of Commons, and that it will be delivered by this Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will be delivered here in the House of Commons by this Minister of Finance, and it will be one hell of an improvement over previous Budgets delivered here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—APPLICATION OF NEW GUIDELINES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister about the Lawson Murray-Wilson affair. It has to do with the Prime Minister's statement that the new guidelines, which he promises to let us have a look at soon, appear to prohibit the apparent or real conflict of interest in which the Minister of Finance found himself with respect to that contract.

Recalling both Conservative and NDP unhappiness with the kind of narrow, legalistic arguments we used to get from former Prime Minister Trudeau about something being right only because it was legal, why did the Prime Minister not, in anticipation of the new guidelines, instruct his Government to behave in that way because that is the way Members of the Government ought to have behaved in any case, and not just because there were no guidelines to say they should behave that way?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I get the full question except that I agree with the implication of my hon. friend that guidelines are worthless unless they are accepted both in spirit and in letter, and with enthusiasm, and when I indicated these guidelines, I indicated at the time of the appointment of Ministers that there would be enhanced and more rigorous guidelines at the earliest possible moment. I demanded of them what my hon. colleague would want, the highest possible standards of deportment. I believe that has been the case. You may quarrel from time to time with the procedures involved in awarding contracts. There will be procedures for them as well, and enhanced ones. Surely there cannot be the slightest doubt as to the integrity and the honesty of the Minister of Finance. That is absolutely beyond reproach.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW GUIDELINES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I never questioned the integrity and the honesty of the Minister of Finance. I ask the Prime Minister whether the new guidelines prevent this kind of situation from happening, and if they do prevent this kind of situation, why did the Prime Minister not ask his Minister and his Government to act that way before the guidelines came into effect because they knew what was the right thing to do?

If the guidelines do not prevent that kind of situation from happening, then obviously they are inadequate, but we will not know until we see them. When can we see them? And when will the Prime Minister say, as I think he ought to, that the Government ought to have acted in a way to leave out possible conflict of interest even before the guidelines came in, given the inadequacy of the old ones and the possible inadequacy of the new ones?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I share the apprehension, and I recognize the legitimacy of my hon. friend's point. As some of my colleagues here from the private sector are aware, when I was President and Chief Executive Officer of the Iron Ore Company of Canada I imposed on the management of that company the most rigorous and demanding conflict of interest standards I believe that existed anywhere in Canada. Those are the kinds of standards we must have. I can assure you that the guidelines that will be filed will be the most rigorous ever demanded of federal politicians at any time.

Mr. Blaikie: Prevent it from happening again.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

LEVEL OF TOLLS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. At a time when the marine industry is in the doldrums, when shippers and shipbuilding are on the decline, and passage-way on the St. Lawrence Seaway is decreasing rapidly, does the Minister consider this is an appropriate time to increase the Seaway tolls or the lockage fees on that great waterway?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, a few months ago we announced the Government's intention to continue the tolls at the current level. There is at the present time no consideration being given to any increase in those tolls. I think the Hon. Member would know that any increase in tolls would be subject to consultation and collaboration with the American authorities as well.

Oral Questions

TOXIC CHEMICAL CONTROL PROGRAM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue a question that I asked twice yesterday during the environment debate of the Minister of the Environment, without getting a reply.

Why, as of April 1 this year, can Canadians no longer count on the toxic chemical control program which was suddenly dropped without any notice, a program meant to protect the health of Canadians? It measures the presence of toxic chemicals in lakes and rivers. It monitors the leaching into the Niagara River from the chemical dump sites there which are of great concern to four million Canadians who live in the Niagara Peninsula. Why did the Minister all of a sudden cancel this program, without any notice?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the research program to which the former Minister of the Environment is referring was a temporary one which existed already under his mandate. He is therefore well aware of the terms of reference of this research program. It was a temporary one which was due to expire at the end of the fiscal year 1984-85. Mr. Speaker, this is the type of spurious issue and question which the former Minister of the Environment likes to raise in the House. If he should require further information, I would provide it to him in writing. This program has never been cut.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE RENEWED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister look at her mandate, her responsibilities, her duties, and discover that if she were to do that she has the full power and responsibility and the mandate to go to Treasury Board and ask for a renewal of any program, particularly a program having to do with the health of Canadians? Why did the Minister surreptitiously cancel this program and not take the trouble to renew it for the protection of the health of millions of Canadians in the Niagara region?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the dramatic stance which the former Minister of the Environment has taken does not fool anybody. I repeat that this program came to its normal end, and that if I did not reinstate it, it is because it was a temporary one and is now included in my main estimates.

HEALTH

NATIONAL EPIDEMIOLOGICAL CENTRE PROPOSAL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the House in the last week or so, as well as in northwestern Ontario, we have been concerned about the immediate impacts of the PCB spill, but I would like to take a look at the longer term. The Minister knows that the registration of incidents of birth defects and certain diseases can assist Governments, both federal and provincial, in pinpointing above average outbreaks. In some cases this pinpointing can allow Governments to determine that there has been an environmental cause or environmental link.

Would the Minister be prepared to provide sufficient funding for the operation of a national epidemiological centre so that we could monitor the eruption of any specific diseases in a specific area, and therefore react more quickly to the impacts of chemicals on our environment?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, he should be aware that both through the Department of National Health and Welfare and provincial Departments of Health there is a constant monitoring of any risk factors. If he is specifically referring to risk factors as related to the PCB situation in northern Ontario, which perhaps has given rise to the question but is not the specific point of his question, there is very close co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments in terms of assessing risk factors. At the moment, unless other evidence is made available to me, I believe the system is working well and protecting the health of Canadians.

MONITORING OF BIRTH DEFECTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, agencies like the Canadian Congenital Anomalies Surveillance System have raised some concerns about the lack of proper funding for them to do the kind of job they need to do to monitor birth defects. Would the Minister reconsider the level of funding which is going to that organization, to ensure that at the very least, when children are involved, we begin to see some patterns to which we can react to make sure that we treat the problem, and not just a band-aid?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on the questions of congenital birth defects and exchange of information, it has been my experience in discussing the issues with my provincial counterparts that what would possibly be more helpful is a more free exchange of information that is already available both within provincial jurisdictions and within federal jurisdictions. If he goes back to the Canada Health Act, there was a provision for information largely to be used as a cudgel by the federal Government over the heads of provincial health Ministers.

I have said let's use this information in an open manner and, as we will do on May 16 and May 17 at a national conference of Health Ministers, look at the future together. Maybe we could use this kind of information. I believe it is there. It might have to be bolstered a bit, but I would rather go the route of co-operation than set up another superstructure which would really give us the information I think we already have.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of talk in Government circles about dismantling the Federal Business Development Bank. The Bank, which has its headquarters in Montreal, employs 500 people whose salaries contribute $18 million to the economy of Quebec.

My question is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses). Since the Minister has just come back from a long trip across the country, can he now inform the House whether he intends to maintain the Federal Business Development Bank?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, to answer the Hon. Member's question, as you know, all Government programs are now under review, including the Federal Business Development Bank. We are in the midst of a review and organization process, and we should be submitting a reorganization program by the end of June or the beginning of July, and we will see what we will be able to do with the Federal Business Development Bank.

NEED TO ASSURE MAINTENANCE OF FINANCING FOR SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Federal Business Development Bank has been in existence since 1944, and it may be time to reassess its mandate but certainly not to dismantle the Bank. We have just been informed that during the last fiscal year, the Bank lent $85 million to 4,571 customers, and 40 per cent of its work is done in Quebec. Is the Minister prepared to inform the House that he will refrain from taking any drastic action with respect to the Federal Business Development Bank, so as to ensure continuity of financing for small businesses?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, we are rethinking the role of the Federal Business Development Bank. The role of the Federal Business Development Bank—

An Hon. Member: You have a headache.

Mr. Bissonnette: I hope the Hon. Member who just spoke listens to himself from time to time . . . As I was saying, the role of the Federal Business Development Bank is actually to support small- and medium-sized business, and we are trying to redefine that role. We will do so and we will have something to submit by the end of June.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REMOVAL OF PEACE CAMP

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Yesterday the Minister, using the police forces at his disposal, threw the peace campers off the Hill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: He used the force of law to get rid of these idealistic young Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: —who are trying to bring us a message about the survival of humanity on this planet. The Minister had another option. Rather than using police forces he could have taken peace initiatives. He could recommend to his colleagues that there be no more Cruise testing in Canada and that there be no participation in star wars.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Keeper: Will the Minister consider recommending peace initiatives to his colleagues rather than abusing young people with police force?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and all his colleagues in the House know full well that we are in favour of disarmament, and the sooner the better. I have already explained the reasons and, in a non-aggressive manner, I told those people a fortnight ago that they would have to leave Parliament Hill. They responded by urging me to throw them out. In those circumstances, I would suggest that nobody was taken by surprise. I said and I repeat that Parliament Hill will no longer be a camping ground, not even for the Hon. Member across the aisle.

[English]

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to imply that the peace campers were simply camping, not demonstrating for the cause of peace. In his reply yesterday he said that there was no connection between the peace campers and the peace movement. In light of the fact that last night the Ottawa Disarmament Coalition praised the Peace Camp as a symbol of the peace movement in Canada, will the Minister reconsider his decision to use police force against young Canadians who are protesting war actions in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I made a decision. I said yesterday and I repeat today that anyone anxious to demonstrate in any way may do so in the appropriate manner. And, as usual, Mr. Speaker, there is no place to sleep on Parliament Hill.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

AWARDING OF CONTRACT—APPLICATION OF EXISTING GUIDELINES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a final question to the Prime Minister relating to the Minister of Finance. What we are really trying to get at here, of course, is the question of a Minister's judgment. The Prime Minister has been referring to some brand new guidelines which he is going to introduce. Will he admit that the guidelines which I cited earlier this afternoon were in force throughout the entire relevant period relating to the facts surrounding the situation of the Minister of Finance? Were these guidelines not in force at all relevant times affecting the situation surrounding the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, those guidelines were in force, but they were not breached.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS ON REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns his recent trip to the Soviet Union. Could he indicate to the House whether he discussed the reunification of families with Soviet authorities?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I discussed specifically with Soviet authorities the reunification of families and the very profound concern in Canada about questions of human rights in the Soviet Union. I also took the opportunity to indicate to Soviet authorities the view of the Government of Canada that there would be a much greater willingness on the part of the public of Canada to accept more extensive relations between our two countries if there were a change in the attitude by Soviet authorities toward questions of family reunification and human rights.

Mr. Speaker: I have no ruling to make today, but I do want to make one small comment to the House. I might remind Hon. Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 239 will be answered today.

STUDIES REGARDING CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Question No. 239—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1984 to date, were studies regarding child abuse and neglect done for the Department of National Health and Welfare by (a) departmental personnel (b) outside consultants and, if so, what are the names and publication dates of these studies?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) No studies regarding child abuse and neglect have been initiated or conducted by departmental personnel from January 1, 1984 to date.

(b) From January 1, 1984, to date, no studies regarding child abuse and neglect have been initiated from the department by outside consultants, however, the two following studies have been completed:

(1) The Directory of Child Abuse Prevention Programs in Canada initiated in September, 1983, and financed by the National Clearinghouse on Family Violence, designed to help professionals and community groups become more aware of local and regional child abuse programs across the country. The Directory, with over 200 entries listed, was published in August, 1984.

(2) A three-year study funded by the Departments of Justice and National Health and Welfare on sexual offences against children and youth, (Committee chaired by Dr. Robin Badgley), was carried out from 1981 to 1984. The report of this study, entitled Sexual Offences Against Children, was published in August, 1984. A summary of this report was published by the Department of National Health and Welfare and was also released in August, 1984.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), I would like to take this opportunity to make a few minor corrections to the preliminary statement that I made this morning concerning motions that appear on the Order Paper. This is purely correcting errors of numbers.

In paragraph 33 of the statement circulated to Hon. Members, I referred to Motion No. 62 as having been grouped with Motion No. 8 and others. This, of course, should have read Motion No. 63. Motion No. 62 was grouped with Motion No. 33 and others in paragraph 22 of the statement. Paragraph 41 should have read as follows: "Motions Nos. 71, 72, 73, 74 and 75 were dealt with earlier by the Chair". Finally, paragraph 35 is missing simply because it was not included. There is no change in the text as a consequence.

I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre in order to continue debate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to resume debate on the Foreign Investment Review Act. As I said before lunch-hour, what we are now dealing with is the statement of purpose for this legislation. I read the statement before lunch. It indicates that this legislation is meant to open the door to foreign investment without review. It takes away the watchman from the door as we allow foreign investment to come into Canada. We in this Party find that to be unacceptable. We want to amend this clause of the Bill to say that technology in Canada will be allowed into Canada under appropriate terms and conditions established by the Government, conditions which will benefit Canada.

It is the view of those in this Party that while it is useful to have foreign capital come into Canada, that capital must come here under our conditions. Capital must respect the values of the community. It is the community through its elected representatives that will determine the priorities that capital will serve. This morning I gave the example of Toro Industries which established a plant in Manitoba. As a condition of establishing that plant, it accepted that it would have an affirmative action program. In order to come into Manitoba, this industry accepted as a condition that it would have an affirmative action program.

This is what we mean when we say that we want capital to come into this country under appropriate conditions and for the benefit of Canada. I might elaborate. Affirmative action will mean that companies in the private sector will have programs that promote the employment of minority groups and other disadvantaged people, women, natives, the handicapped, visible minorities. This is important because our society is built upon the notion of equal opportunity and equality of the human condition. We cannot have equality unless we take positive steps in that direction. If the marketplace is allowed to operate free of any restraint whatsoever, it will not produce equality. It will produce inequality.

It is necessary to have positive measures in place which assure equality. Affirmative action is one way of doing that. It is important that we can say to private sector companies that affirmative action is something the Government feels is important because it promotes greater equality among the groups in this country.

It is not enough simply to have legislation that is meant to attract capital. It is not enough to have legislation that is simply a neon sign saying "Canada for sale". It is not enough to tell foreign bankers that their money is welcome in this country. They must know that we are not going to give them a free hand, that they will have to live by Canadian standards if they are going to operate in this country. If capital operates in Canada, it has to operate according to Canadian laws and standards and serve the Canadian community. I gave the example of Toro Industries to indicate that this idea is practical, workable, has been done and that there is no reason why it should not be done today for all of Canadian through the legislation before the House. It is crucial that foreign capital serve Canadian interests, particularly since such a large percentage of Canadian industry is foreign owned. The behaviour of foreign capital in the Canadian economy is crucial to the over-all quality of life in Canada.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that I have a couple of minutes left so I will wind down. My essential point is that this legislation is not good enough. It is not good enough just to open the door to foreign capital. We must set standards for the behaviour of foreign capital in this country. We need legislation which clearly indicates that when foreign bankers invest in Canada, they must invest for the benefit of Canadians. They will have to negotiate the conditions under which that investment takes place so that we, the elected representatives of the people, can be assured that that capital will serve the interest of the people. It must promote benefits such as greater equality, employment and development in underdeveloped regions of our country. It is crucial that we accept the amendment before the House today to amend the purpose of the Bill to the effect that capital is welcome here under appropriate terms and conditions that will benefit Canadians.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too rise in support of the amendment because I have been hearing from Canadians from coast to coast who are extremely concerned about the Government's move to gut, abolish and abort the Foreign Investment Review Agency. It has reached the point at which some major investors in Canada, including the Bronfman family, have recognized the folly of this particular piece of legislation. This legislation contains no such guarantees as those provided by this amendment. There is no guarantee that this legislation will ensure Canadian jobs for Canadians.

It is a sorry situation when the President of the Steel Company of Canada is forced to make a public statement on the Government's lack of guts on the steel issue. Members of this House should be well aware that the steel industry in Canada has been competitive on a world-wide basis. Unfortunately, because of the lack of political will, the lack of backbone and in fact the position taken by the Government that it is prepared not only to open our doors for business but to put us up for sale, we find ourselves in the position of having to oppose this Bill.

I as a Canadian am frightened when I am told that we have to sell off our water if we are going to be able to save our economy. That is the kind of mentality the Government has instituted. The business section of today's Toronto Star indicates that the Bronfman family is extremely concerned. Stephen Jarislowsky, speaking on behalf of the Bronfman family, states that the gutting of Ottawa's Foreign Investment Review Agency has made the Montreal-based Seagram Company a take-over target for U.S. companies. I want to know whether or not those U.S. companies will guarantee Canadian jobs for Canada.

We can hearken back to the difficult economic times of 1982 when parent companies started to go under and to look to develop in other places. Did Consolidated-Bathurst of the City of Hamilton guarantee jobs for Canadians? No. As a matter of fact, at the first inkling of any kind of economic difficulty, that company pulled up stakes and left Hamilton just as Allen Industries pulled up stakes and left our community. Inglis, after the infusion of millions of federal dollars, also pulled up stakes and left the City of Hamilton. How can this Government which was elected on a massive mandate of jobs, jobs and more jobs now come to the Canadian people and ask us to support a piece of legislation which would mean further U.S. take-overs, further foreign take-overs and no job guarantees for Canadian workers?

The workers at the Steel Company of Canada and Dofasco are concerned about keeping Canadian jobs in Canada. The workers at the Steel Company of Canada and Dofasco want the Government to put some teeth into its anti-dumping legislation. The workers in the City of Hamilton want the Government to start taking a positive attitude toward Canadian investment instead of blocking people like Ernie Kablau who is trying to put almost $1 million in the way of tourism into our community. What kind of response has he gotten from Conservatives at both the provincial and federal levels? The Deputy Minister of Tourism told Mr. Kablau that the Government will give him money if he moves his boat to St. Catharines because Hamilton is not a tourism priority. When the Conservatives in Toronto developed a tourism map, they left Hamilton completely off the map. That has been the attitude of this Government and the attitude of the provincial Government.

Certainly the people of Hamilton and the people of Canada, when they awarded a massive majority to the Conservative Government of Canada, expected a little more. They expected some job guarantees. They expected the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to deliver on his promises. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that if he did deliver on a promise, it would be a first for this Prime Minister. The people expected him to deliver on his promise to create tens of thousands of jobs the moment he was elected. Instead of creating jobs, his Government has actually put at peril thousands of jobs not only in the City of Hamilton but across this great country.

The other morning I had an opportunity to speak to the workers at Susan Shoe Industries Ltd. in the great riding of Hamilton East. Those workers are concerned and frightened. They stand to lose up to 400 jobs because of the Government's refusal to provide the kind of job guarantees of which the Prime Minister spoke so eloquently during the dark days of July and August. Those dark days have clearly shown the Canadian people that the Tories are not interested in helping Hamilton. The Tories are not interested in job creation whether it be at the federal or provincial level. The Tories are only interested in awarding jobs to friends, family members and brothers-in-law.

The feeling on the streets about this Government is not a very good one. People from Hamilton, Toronto and northern Ontario are asking questions. They are asking why the Government will not live up to the kind of expectations it instilled in the Canadian people and why it has determined that its first act as a Government will be to gut the very instrument of job creation that was instituted under the former Liberal Government, the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

Canadians realize that in return for investment, we must have a guarantee of Canadian jobs. The labour movement speaks very eloquently to the issue of job security at this point in time. We are no longer talking dollar increases. We are talking about the 60-plus per cent of Canadians who fear for their jobs or the jobs of family members. Canadians from coast to coast are calling on the Government to provide those kinds of guarantees rather than to introduce legislation which will gut any guarantees we had previously instituted in the form of the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

I doubt we will hear very much from government Members. They have been exceedingly silent on this issue. I hope Hon. Members from Quebec will take heed of what the Bronfman brothers had to say on this particular issue. I do not think the Bronfman brothers are crying in the dark when blaming the Government for the potential loss of thousands of jobs in the distilling industry if there is an American take-over. I do not think they are speaking lightly. I think they are speaking on behalf of all Canadians who are beginning to recognize that the cosy relationship, the open-door policy and the up-for-sale attitude of the Prime Minister is not reflected by the Canadian people. In fact, quite the contrary.

The Canadian people are prepared to compete. In the steel industry, we have competed with the best. We have shown the world how to create the best product possible. What has been the response? The response has been U.S. protectionism. The Government of Canada cannot convince the U.S. Congress to lift the provisions that were instituted under the labelling provisions passed by the U.S. Congress recently. The Prime Minister made a promise. He wrote a letter to the people of the riding of Hamilton East indicating that once he was elected Prime Minister, he would immediately solve the steel labelling problem. Yet we have seen that the Prime Minister has not delivered on this promise, as he has not delivered on hundreds of other promises.

There is an issue of credibility at stake. We cannot look at the credibility of the federal Government without looking at the credibility of the Ontario Government. It is very hard to ascertain the credibility of the Premier of Ontario because he cannot get out of the Prime Minister's lap long enough to make a statement or engage in a debate. This issue goes beyond Party boundaries. It is an issue of job security which touches every Canadian.

I would encourage every Hon. Member of this House to speak out in support of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) which will in fact ensure that the kind of provisions which were instituted under the Foreign Investment Review Agency, through the leadership of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) under the former Liberal Government, are not "gutted", in the words of the Bronfman spokesman, because of actions of this Government not only to open the doors but to put Canada up for sale. I don't think Canadians want to sell our water, Mr. Speaker, but this Government is selling us out.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have another opportunity to speak against this Investment Canada Bill. I think the most dangerous thing about this Government is that it refuses to recognize what is becoming very obvious, that is, that this Bill not only will have no beneficial impact on the economy of this country, but it will be a deterrent to investment. I find completely repugnant the attitude of this Government that there is something wrong about giving an incentive, an edge, to Canadians to invest and share in the benefits of their own country. We should not have to apologize to the rest of the world for wanting to put Canadian interests first and foremost in our own economy. It is becoming more and more evident that we are slipping more and more into the hands of foreign economic interests. The most important aspects of our economy are not going to be safeguarded. To the contrary, the safeguards which we have are going to disappear.

This Government has indicated that it wants foreign investment. There is nothing wrong with foreign investment. But to open the doors completely with absolutely no check on foreign investment is going to be the ruination of our economy and the principles which we want to follow in this country.

The Government says that foreign investment will create regional development, that we will develop in the areas which are undergoing regional disparity. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, it has been proven that if we encourage foreign investment in a country, that foreign investment will go to the areas which are the most successful and not to areas which need economic assistance.

This Government has no concept of regional development whatsoever. In my own area of Cape Breton Island the unemployment rate is 29.5 per cent. It is the highest by far that it has ever been. This is an unemployment rate which this Government and Employment Canada acknowledges. The actual rate is well over 40 per cent. Yet when this Government came into power it cancelled projects which were going to create jobs. It cancelled these projects in accordance with its policy of political attrition, nothing more. And it has not only not replaced those jobs which were cancelled but it has not replaced the ideas which were in existence for creating jobs. This Government has not come forward with one idea. To make it more dangerous, the man who is in charge of regional development is also the Cabinet Minister in charge of the cabinet committee which approves funds for regional development and economic expenditures.

It is absolutely frightening, Mr. Speaker, that this Government not only has no conception of regional development but has no concern for people. We have in this Investment Canada Act a lot of verbiage which is not in the interests of Canada but is in the interests of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). He has managed somehow with his own limited horizons to convince his cabinet colleagues that this legislation is going to be in the best interests of this country. Foreign expenditure in this country is not going to be investment, it is going to be a buy-all. This is what we are going to see from foreign capital. It is the only thing we are going to see, and this Government will be responsible. Why does the Government not give incentives to encourage small business and Canadians to invest in their own country? It is not doing this. It is taking away the icentives which were there before.

With respect to the Small Businesses Loans Act, it has taken away what incentive there was—and there wasn't very much—for the banks to put small business loans funding into areas where the funding was needed. Since the Small Businesses Loans Act came into being, in my area with an official unemployment rate of 29.5 per cent, the chartered banks have not allocated $1 under the Small Businesses Loans Act. What is the purpose of this Act? It was had then, but now the Government is only guaranteeing 90 per cent of the bank's investment under this Act. It is requesting a 1 per cent initiation fee, as I would call it, to take on a loan under this Act and to get the security. The Government is completely ruining any incentive in this country.

The Federal Business Development Bank requires criteria which are more stringent than that of the chartered banks, if that is possible. That is exactly what it is doing. In areas of this country where investment is needed, and where the Government is saying the private sector is the area which has to redevelop the economy of this country, one cannot get a commercial mortgage because the financial institutions are not prepared to take the chance. Rather than helping Canadians to invest and to make an income in their own country, this Government has completely abandoned its responsibility. The Government is saying, in effect: "To heck with that; we can't be bothered. There is too much detail. They are only little people anyway and it's going to take too many of them to bail us out of the hole we are putting ourselves in, so let's throw open the doors to the multi-nationals and the big foreign companies and hope that they will invest in our country and bail us out."

The only thing that these companies are going to do, Mr. Speaker, is buy up our profitable companies which are short of capital—and there are a lot of good, solid companies which are short of capital. If the foreign companies wave enough dollars in front of these people, they are not going to continue to accept the insults of this Government, the requirements of this Government. They are going to take the easy way out. They are going to sell for the price which is being offered by these multi-nationals and foreign companies, and we are going to lose Canadian content and this country is going to be the worse for it. We will become merely an extension of the head offices of the foreign companies. Canadians are not going to have the advantage of having successful businesses in their own country.

What will be the result of this, Mr. Speaker? We are not going to have a Canadian content. If we hit a downturn, these branch plants are going to be the first to lay off workers. We are seeing that now. The foreign companies are consolidating, particularly in the energy field. The multi-national oil companies are getting rid of their diversifications. They are consolidating their operations and pruning in areas which require more attention than the money which is generated would warrant. This is happening in all sectors of the economy, world-wide. Who is suffering? It is the branch plants of these foreign companies, and a lot of them are closing. We are going to lose a lot of jobs as a result of that. The employment we want to achieve for the people is not going to be there. In the manufacturing sector we are losing jobs to the parent companies. We are encouraging these companies to be more productive and competitive and as a result they are mechanizing, increasing their technical capabilities and laying off people.

Where are the jobs we need coming from? They are not coming from Canadian investment, because Canadian investment is not going to be given the incentive it needs. They are not coming from the multinationals and foreign companies because they do not want to invest. They want to use their capital to buy what already exists. They will then reduce the number of jobs because what they buy will be a duplication of other operations they have.

This Bill is wrong. There is nothing wrong with foreign investment, as I have said, and nothing wrong with the Foreign Investment Review Act as it was. It encouraged foreign investment but looked after the rights of Canadians and Canadian companies.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that it is really a pleasure to rise to speak on the matter of Investment Canada. It is a Bill which should not be before this House unless it were to strengthen the review process to ensure that investment in Canada benefits Canadians. What we have before us is an amendment which would correct an omission in the statement of purpose. The Bill states:

Recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada—

The resolution would rephrase that to state:

Recognizing that increased capital and technology under appropriate terms and conditions established by government would benefit Canada—

This seeks to correct an omission which could be a deliberate act. It could be the result of naivety, or the appropriate phraseology as suggested could have been omitted by oversight. I do not really believe that even this Government believes that increased capital and increased technology would of themselves benefit Canadians. To believe that would require us to ignore the experience of the Third World, South America and Africa, the expected beneficiaries of capital and technology from the western nations, particularly the U.S., but which have suffered to a tremendous extent as a result, and even now experience the effects of their attempts to establish at long last that foreign capital and foreign technology must benefit their countries and allow what it has in the past prevented, self-determination.

We could reduce the statement to the absurd or we could suggest that perhaps we are talking about the introduction of capital, as in Columbia, to grow marijuana and cocaine, or the introduction of weapons technology in peaceful nations, as has happened all over the world. We will not indulge in that exercise because I do not think even Conservatives would construe that as a benefit to this country,.

This could, however, be a deliberate act of omission because there are many within the Government Party who have rather strong allegiances to the international financial community, the multinationals, and could care less whether capital or technology introduced in Canada benefits Canadians so long as it benefits those who are already doing very well as a result of international investments which have only one end, that of pocketing huge profits to maintain a level of indulgence which benefits no one except those who are making huge profits.

I suppose there is some benefit from that approach because capital invested in Canada and reaping profits elsewhere will at least leave some small change for the rest of us. Fortunately, this is an attitude which is not perceived very happily by the Canadian people. They are not happy with this thrust to obsequious dependency on other nations in order to establish our future. They are not happy with the idea that we seek our economic future in investment and technology elsewhere when this has the effect of leaving too many Canadians unemployed, and provides no basis on which future economic developments and secondary industry will take place and thus create jobs. They do not want to see any future in which technology is allowed us only to the extent that it benefits people elsewhere.

If the omission is merely that of an oversight, then of course the amendment introduced is, I am sure, well received by those Members who noticed the accident. On that basis we might expect some support. But, really, we have a Bill which is for the sole purpose of producing some kind of a review process.

Surely it must be a trivial observation that if we are going to seek benefits from technology and capital, then we ought to define those benefits and assert the criteria which will be administered to ensure that those benefits will be forthcoming. For example, in Ontario over the last decade we have had numerous instances of plant closures. The fact of the matter is that 60 per cent of those plant closures have resulted from the closing of American subsidiaries. It seems to me that one of the conditions that Government would contemplate would be to ensure that subsidiaries are given sufficient market access in the export trade, that they have some research and development capacity, that some guarantee of the maintenance of jobs will be secured when examining investment in Canada on the part of American investors.

Having raised the issue of jobs, one thing is clear, as was determined by the Senate Committee in the U.S. and by the Harvard Business School. Most investment in Canada has produced far more jobs in the U.S. than it has produced in Canada. We cannot afford capital coming in and benefiting Canadians unless we assert that there are certain conditions which have to be met and which will benefit Canadians. Clearly this amendment should be supported by all sides of the House. It is helpful and will ensure that the intent indicated in the statement of purpose will be met.

In Windsor we have had the experience of American corporations where there could be no certainty, in the absence of Government demands for certainty, that Canadians would have jobs and continue to have jobs. I submitted in a previous speech an example of four companies there which, through closure, lost some 2,000 jobs in Windsor alone. That has to be looked after.

No other country would send its Prime Minister to New York to suggest that, "hey, fellows, we'd sure like to have you up there because really, after all, if you really think about us very seriously, we are so much like you that we are only the 51st state and on that basis we are very happy to have you determine where we will go on so many aspects of our society and economy and our politics." It is increasingly clear that the Americans, in their pursuit of armaments and defence spending, have established an economy which has distorted the economy of the entire world. Now they would fight back by demanding of others that they make concessions to this American aberration at the expense of those countries involved. That should be a lesson to us. The Americans have only one goal in mind, the American national interest. Canadians should have only one goal, Canadian national interest. Those national interests should not be established elsewhere. We should establish criteria to ensure that they are not.

● (1540)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. You will recall that when we discussed this Bill earlier in this session in the House of Commons Opposition Members objected quite strongly to the present state of the Investment Canada Bill which does away with many of the valuable protections that we had in the Foreign Investment Review Agency legislation.

I am sure you will know that we in our Party, and all Canadians, want investment. We all know that. No one is against having people come here to invest their money. That is not what we are discussing today. In our Party we want significant economic benefit for Canadians. That is the part of the equation which seems to entirely escape the Government. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and other Members on the Government side should take some time to consider this legislation. They should consider the fact that we need protection to ensure that investments made protect Canadian businesses. I cannot help but wonder why the Government does not seem to be aware of the fact that, although investment is needed, it must be done in such a way as to protect the interests of all Canadian citizens.

I would like to give a few examples of things that are happening right now between Canada and the United States. We must wonder what we are getting in return from the United States for relaxing the FIRA legislation. One could say that we are going to get more investment. Perhaps we will, but perhaps not. The Government made its intentions known some months ago. I have not seen hoardes of new people coming into the country to invest. We know that 97 per cent of applications were approved by the previous agency known as the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

In the last few months some things have happened which are worrying members of the Liberal Party. For instance, we now have a U.S. imposed tariff on saltfish for the first time in the history of the country. That is very important for many people in the Maritime provinces. It has very great effects on them.

The Commerce Department of the United States has also imposed a tariff on Canadian hogs exported to the United States. I happen to represent an area that has many hog producers. We are told that this fee is only in place for an interim period. We are told that the funds will be put aside and if the decision is overturned the money will be returned. Perhaps that is so, but nevertheless it has had a devastating effect on hog prices in the country. Prior to this initiative by the United States Government hog prices were at 69 to 70 cents a pound. The price has now gone down to 57 or 58 cents a pound. At that price the farmers of my riding cannot subsist; they cannot make ends meet.

I cannot help but wonder if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not really telling Canadians that he wants Americans to have the bigger share of the economic pie because he does not trust Canadian entrepreneurs. Perhaps the Prime Minister has the same attitude toward Canadian entrepreneurs as he has toward Canadian workers. You will remember what the Prime Minister said as reported in an article in Fortune magazine of March 4, 1985. On the charge by political opponents that Mulroney "has put Canada up for sale" he said:

> Who wants to buy it? What is there so compellingly attractive about Canada that causes us to think that anybody is going to rush in simply because somebody says, "I'd like to do business with you."

Those are the words of the leader of the Government. He continued:

> We do not have a very good track record. Our products have not been of the highest quality. Our deliveries have been lacking in reliability. Our expertise has been in large measure borrowed. Our technology has been purchased. What the hell makes us so special? If somebody wants to buy some oil, somebody wants to buy some wheat, hell, we're in the business. That's what it's all about.

That is the attitude of the Prime Minister of Canada toward the workers of the country and presumably toward the small businessmen and enterpreneurs of Canada. With that kind of attitude it is small wonder that the Prime Minister of the country is willing to give away the store. He has displayed an attitude of contempt toward the people of Canada by making those statements. By making such statements the Prime Minister has told the people of Canada that it does not really matter whether we sell everything or, more particularly, give everything to the Americans because, according to him, what we have is not worth having anyway. He should be ashamed.

The Conservative backbenchers must have a talk with the Prime Minister about statements like that which he has made. I am sure that sometime, somewhere behind the curtains of the House, when they muster up this courage, which Tories are known to do sometimes, albeit not too often, they will tell the Prime Minister that they do not want him to speak like that about Canadian entrepreneurs and workers.

When the Prime Minister was elected he talked about a new era of optimism. He talked about tens upon tens of thousands of new jobs overnight, or as quickly as the Government could be sworn into office. Where are those jobs? Where is that new optimism that the Prime Minister professed he would have and would instil into everyone else in the country? The Prime Minister obviously gave us empty words last summer. We see that in this Bill. We saw that when he referred to the Canadian workers in Fortune magazine and we are also seeing it now through the issue of patronage. The words of the Prime Minister are not to be believed by the Canadian people. He made 338 promises. He promised the people of the country everything they wanted to hear and the people believed him. However, they are sorry now.

In a little more than a week from now the people of Ontario will be sending the Prime Minister a message via his provincial counterpart and close friend, the Ronald Reagan of the north, Frank Miller. They will be telling Frank Miller that they have had enough of Tories and that empty platitudinal promises are not to be believed by the people of Canada. Next week the people of Canada will tell the Prime Minister that they have had enough of the attitude and contempt he has displayed toward them by giving away the store in terms of foreign investment legislation, and the attitude he has displayed toward workers. They have had enough of the attitude he has displayed in his so called solemn commitments to the Canadian people.

When discussing this Bill last fall, I recall that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion gave examples to Hon. Members of the kinds of activities that the Foreign Investment Review Agency was reviewing. He said that FIRA should not interfere with someone who attempts to set up a hotdog stand or small restaurant. At that time, I reminded the Minister that the largest restaurant chain in this country, and indeed in the world, is a chain of hamburger and hotdog restaurants. It is one of the most lucrative and profitable enterprises in the world. Our Party supports foreign investment but we want significant economic benefits for all Canadians.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. The purpose of the amendment put forward by my colleague is to allow the Government to maintain authority over the Canadian economy. The absence of such authority will be detrimental to our economy and not help the creation of jobs or the protection of existing employment.

This Bill is somewhat of a slight to Canadians because it is essentially suggesting that the Government does not have faith in Canadians to create the jobs and wealth that will improve our lot. The Government is suggesting that it is necessary to go beyond our borders in order to get that enthusiasm and willingness to expand.

This is similar to an attitude sometimes found in smaller communities where we tend to think it is necessary to bring in outsiders as consultants in order to build local roads or plan our cities. We sometimes believe that our local medical practitioners are not as good as those somewhere else. It is similar to the analogy that the grass is greener on the other side of the fence.

The purpose of our amendment is to show that the grass is greener on our side of the fence. We have the necessary human skills, intelligence and willingness to do those things which the Government would have us believe Investment Canada would do for us.

In fairness to the Government, its actions are consistent with the views of individual Conservative Members. During the committee last week, we had a discussion concerning the meaning of an entrepreneur. Very clearly, those members of the Conservative caucus who were present believed that an entrepreneur is someone who has dollars to invest. I believe that it is someone with a balance between having the financial wherewithal and the ability, energy and enthusiasm to create a worth-while endeavour. This means having the ability to combine one's knowledge with one's own capital or borrowed capital to develop an industry or business.

I am concerned that the defeat of this amendment will mean the loss of control over our economy as well as Parliament's ability to provide leadership. In some areas there is a real danger that we will not only lose control of the economy but jobs as well.

For example, a debate is taking place on both sides of our border with regard to the softwood lumber market. American legislators are trying to impose quotas on Canadian softwood going to their country because we have been able to compete successfully with their producers. If they fail in their attempt to block our wood going south, this Bill will provide an option to invest in places like Thunder Bay, British Columbia and Atlantic Canada to buy out the producers of softwood lumber, reduce their production or close them down while retaining the rights to the wood supplies. This will allow the parent companies in the United States to expand the market and create employment for Americans. This Bill could conceivably have such an effect on a pulp and paper industry which at times is very competitive with the Americans.

We have been accused of subsidizing our pulp and paper operations through grants and fees that are higher than those charged in the United States. This is another reason Americans may use the provisions of this Bill to acquire our assets and reduce operations at the cost of our communities and people. Many of these pulp and paper facilities are in one industry communities. I suggest that the direction this Bill would have us take is based on a blind belief in a system that no longer exists. While there is such a thing as private enterprise, corporate enterprise and public enterprise, the free enterprise system has not existed for many years.

I hope the amendments put forward by my colleague will be accepted so that the present mechanism may remain intact to at least allow Cabinet and the Government to review and set rules over and above those contained in the Act. If the Government does not accept this amendment, it is handing foreigners not only the keys to our cities, but the keys to our businesses, our jobs and our basic livelihood.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to once again participate in this debate on Investment Canada. Before Christmas, the Minister responsible for this legislation explained in quite bold terms that Canada is once again open for business and investment. Perhaps that is a key phrase that introduces a number of fallacies which this Government is trying to perpetuate from one coast to another.

The first fallacy is that somehow FIRA was anti-foreign investment and that the Liberal Party was anti-foreign investment. The second fallacy is that all of a sudden through Investment Canada the doors will be wide open for investment and that investment will flow in rapidly overnight creating the thousands upon thousands of jobs the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said would be created and would be required for Canada.

• (1600)

It should be pointed out in quite strong terms that those fallacies are just that. They are incorrect and unbased in fact. FIRA was not anti-foreign investment. It was a protective mechanism to deal with foreign investment. This Party as the architect of that was pro-foreign investment as long as that foreign investment was pro-Canada. There is nothing wrong with that kind of attitude. There is nothing wrong with suggesting that when we look at foreign investment we need to look at it through the eyes of Canadians and Canada first, that we place our country before the interests of the board rooms of New York. We should be recognizing that that kind of attitude and philosophy is one that is suddenly in practice and in vogue with other countries throughout the international scene. When this Government begins to say we have to know how to compete with other countries, be competitive with other countries and be competitive in terms of our products and marketing them, then I think Investment Canada does not speak to that competitiveness. Investment Canada does not suggest that the Government knows the game and the rules to the game.

In addition to perpetrating a number of incorrect fallacies about foreign investment in Canada as it relates to FIRA and our Party, I think the Government has a block in terms of the Tory mind-set, Mr. Speaker. FIRA was a part of building this country. It was, is, or should be part of the building block toward building an independent, strong, and mature Canada. It was the same Party to which we can draw analogies to FIRA that blocked other initiatives that were worthy and contributed tremendously to the evolution and economic growth of Canada. It was the same Party that was against having our own independent flag. It was the same Party that was against having our own independent national anthem. It was the same Party that was against having our own constitution. FIRA was in the same category. FIRA was up there with the flag, with the anthem, and with the Constitution that suggested this country is old enough, mature enough, independent enough and has vision enough to suggest ways of building Canada on our own terms for our own people and for our own future. There is nothing wrong with having that kind of attitude. There is nothing wrong with trying to have a vision of that kind of future.

Unfortunately we see once again that the same opposition which handicapped this Government in the flag debate, in the anthem debate, and in the constitution debate is again handicapping the Government when it comes to economic growth.

Mr. Brisco: That is hogwash.

Mr. Marchi: The Tories have no sense of nation building. They have no sense of putting Canada first. They have no sense of being pro-Canadian.

Mr. Brisco: You brought on the national energy problems.

Mr. Taylor: Who sold out western Canada? It was the Liberals.

Mr. Marchi: The Tories are basically saying Canada is up for sale. Come in and get it. We cannot afford that. We could not have afforded that kind of opinion when we were discussing the flag, when we were discussing the anthem and discussing the Constitution and we cannot afford that sense of debate and priorities in this debate in 1985 with respect to Investment Canada.

It is that same mind-set and regressive unCanadian policy that we also see permeating the evolution of the Tories' immigration policy.

Mr. Brisco: Explain that.

Mr. Taylor: Explain that.

Mr. Marchi: It certainly ties in to the whole sense of the foreign investment debate right now. I hear Members saying "explain". If they would be patient and listen, that is exactly what I am going to do in the next four minutes that are allotted to me.

At the beginning of this month Members of the Conservative Party, of that Government, on the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee suggested that increases in immigration for the next year and for several years should primarily consist of entrepreneurs. Essentially this means in ordinary English for Members across the aisle that only wealthy entrepreneurs need apply.

Mr. Brisco: Hogwash.

Mr. Marchi: That is the same philosophy we see permeating this Investment Canada Bill. The Tories' mind-set is blinding them because they cannot see, recognize or admit that thousands of average Canadians of different persuasion came to this country without the millions of dollars that the Tories are suggesting. These people made a life for themselves. They became success stories in Canadian terms. Thousands of average and poor immigrants came to this country and worked at jobs other Canadians did not want to do. All immigrants also brought with them trades and skills without the benefit of having the millions of dollars being suggested by this group of right-wing Tory members. All immigrants, regardless of economic status, and regardless of the fact they do not have the prerequisite of the chairman of the committee, who suggested that the ideal immigrant would be an individual who can start up his own business and have $500,000, or an immigrant who can come to this country and add to the economic growth, are first consumers, and second, they are willing to work. To suggest that economic growth cannot be contributed to by these people is a disgrace, first to the people who came here to work, and second, to other potential Canadians who wish to learn and live that same kind of life.

There is a tremendous resemblance between the philosophy which is dictating the immigration policy and the philosophy we see permeating this Investment Canada Bill, Mr. Speaker. It is a regressive philosophy. It is a philosophy that this Government will regret one day, because Canadians will suggest that we should be searching for foreign investment and we should be getting entrepreneurs to add to our economic growth, but we should not be doing it to the detriment of Canadians.

We should not be putting the United States first. We should learn that other countries are protecting their turfs. We should deal with the realities of the international community and deal and respect those entrepreneurs here in Canada. They are Canadians who give of themselves. This Government is missing an opportunity to build on a nation. It is missing the opportunity to take that building stone and to work from it. The Tories should be learning that we need legislation to put guarantees in place that will see this country and its people put first.

It is not surprising they have not done that because the Tories have missed those opportunities in the past. They have missed them yet they are the same people who cheer our flag today, they are the same people who cheer our anthem today and they are the same people who cheered the Charter of Rights last week when it came into being. Where were they, Mr. Speaker, when the debate that was going to dictate the future course of those Canadian entities was in progress? That is the essential question. To bring it into real terms today, in 1985, where is the Government on Investment Canada vis-a-vis foreign investment? This Government is on the wrong side. Canadians recognize that and they will deal with it eventually.

Mr. Taylor: The people kicked you out and put us in.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development, and Motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Investment Canada Act

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-15 respecting Investment Canada, as the Government likes to call it. Investment Canada is the present Government's attempt to get away from the Foreign Investment Review Agency which was brought in by the previous Government.

There were many problems with FIRA but there were no problems with respect to the intention of the previous Government in terms of that legislative measure. In fact, in many cases the problems were probably as a result of the bureaucracy being involved in speeding up decisions. There is absolutely no question in my mind that FIRA did the job it was supposed to do. The previous Government was forced to take some action in terms of reviewing the foreign investment in this country when there was a minority Government. My Party pressured that Government to bring in a measure which at least filled a gap but with which we were not at all satisfied.

Investment Canada which is being proposed by the present Government will not do the job in terms of protecting Canadian jobs, Canadian industry and Canadian interests. This particular Bill, like the one of the previous Government, does nothing to strengthen the inherent weaknesses in the Canadian economy and in our industrial structures. It is safe to say that Canada is probably the only country in the western world which is presently going through a process of de-industrialization. Nearly every other western country is industrializing. Every sector of our economy, especially in the area of secondary manufacturing, is in a period of decline, whether it be rubber, electronics, electrical manufacturing or even the automobile industry which used to be the mainstay of our economy. Every one of them is in a period of decline.

One of the reasons for this is the large degree of uncontrolled foreign investment coming into Canada. If one wants to use an expression which was used in the early 1970s, it is the branch plant economy of the country. We were invited, by Liberal government policy, to open the doors willy-nilly to foreign investment without any real control on how that foreign investment would be applied in Canada. Surely as Canadians we have a responsibility, not only to ourselves but to future generations of Canadians, to tell foreign investors that we appreciate their investment in Canada and to encourage them not only in terms of providing jobs for people but in terms of developing this country as a first-class industrialized nation. We also have a responsibility to ensure that their investment is in the best interests of Canada and of Canadians, if we are to allow them to come into our country, to exploit our market-place and workforce in the sense of people working for wages and profits. It is not good enough to say that Canada is now open for business and that we want any kind of investment as long as it is investment. That would take us back to the Liberal policies of 1949 when that kind of encouragement first gave rise to the very serious structural problems with which Canada is faced today. As I said before, we are interested in investment, but it must be the kind of investment which is good for Canada and good for Canadians, and the kind of investment which will be continued in Canada to develop us as an industrialized nation.

Several reports have been presented by well recognized groups. They are not necessarily groups with which I would agree, but they are certainly respected organizations. Recently they have released studies which clearly indicate that large foreign investment in Canada does not necessarily produce the kind of jobs about which this Government is talking. Much of the future investment being talked about at the present time will probably go into capital-intensive industries, such as exploration for oil, minerals, et cetera. That is capital-intensive investment, not necessarily labour-intensive. Just because huge chunks and dollops of capital investment come into Canada does not necessarily mean job creation. It could very well mean capital and profit creation, but not necessarily job creation.

If the Government were really serious about attacking the economic problems of our country, perhaps it should take a look at using some of the traditional approaches which we know work. For example, why does the Government not get into the housing market in a very serious way if it is interested in creating jobs? The figures are apparent and real to anyone who cares to look at them. For every one job created in building and constructing housing, another three to four jobs are created in spin-off industries. In most urban centres in the country there is a vacancy rate in adequate housing of less than 1 per cent. My office, like that of most other Hon. Members, in the last year or so has been inundated by people complaining that they do not have access to affordable housing. I am certainly not an old person, but when I was married and purchased a house it was a feasible thing to do. People still expect to be able to purchase their own homes. One cannot do that today unless one is in a high income bracket, or both partners are working, the husband and the wife. For most young couples getting married today the possibility of ever owning a home is minimal. There are more and more young married couples today who find that they have to move into their parents' homes in order to find accommodation because there is simply no available accommodation elsewhere. If the Government were serious about filling that obvious social need and creating jobs at the same time, perhaps it should get into the housing market in the way the private investor is not willing to do at the present time.

There is also another approach; that is, putting much more money into the pocket of taxpayers. Why does the Government not take a real look at correcting some of the injustices with which many senior citizens are faced simply because they do not have enough spending power? Why does the Government not take a look at putting more money into the hands of senior citizens so that they can live out the remainder of their lives in some dignity? At the same time this would put money back into the economy, and they would be making another contribution in addition to the one they have already made to Canada during their lifetime.

In the Investment Canada Bill the Government has hinted that it wants to increase investment in areas of technological change and technological development. I have not seen anywhere in the Bill, and I have not heard in the discussions by anyone on the government side, any reference to the effects of technological change on Canada's workforce. Very little is being done at the present time to train young people between the ages of 15 and 24 for skills which will be required for that big explosion, if it ever happens, in technological change or technological development. Young people, not only in my own riding but elsewhere, have written to me to indicate that they have gone through government programs to upgrade their skills for technological development only to find that they cannot obtain jobs because the Government has not placed any emphasis on creating employment opportunities in the fields for which it is training young people. That is very short-sighted, in my view.

I do not think we can say to young people in a very sexy way that we will open the doors to foreign investment in the country, that the doors are open to business, that all kinds of money will be attracted to the country and that jobs will be created. It is fooling no one. It sure is not fooling the people who are listening to this debate. It is certainly not fooling the young people of this country who are beginning to develop a very cynical attitude, not only toward Governments but politicians at every level when they start talking about job creation. They know what Governments and politicians are doing. They are putting up screens of public relations gestures, without any real meat in the proposals. If this Government had any sense at all, and the integrity it talks about, that is the kind of approach it would develop.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise in this House today to speak on Bill C-15, Investment Canada, and the motions.

It is the commitment of this Government to adopt an approach of consultation rather than confrontation in our attempts to develop a shared view of our economic strategy and to adopt policies that will allow the private sector to sustain growth. Bill C-15 is one of the examples of this approach of consultation. Judging by the number of witnesses who appeared before the standing committee and the debate which resulted during clause-by-clause deliberations, Bill C-15 is noted to be an important Bill.

We can no longer take wealth creation for granted. Rather, we must vigorously pursue and encourage that which can provide us with wealth creation. I believe we are beginning to look realistically at our problems. Bill C-15 is one of the first steps toward a resolution of these problems.

After a decade of hostility toward foreign investment, Canada is now ready and willing to welcome foreign investment. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has stated that the Government of Canada is there to assist and not harass the private sector in creating the new wealth and new jobs that Canada needs. This new attitude is the beginning of instilling a confidence in all sectors of our country.

I do not want to take a lot of time because I am somewhat concerned, as are the people of Canada. We have had 16 or 17 speakers today in five hours of debate. They tend to be saying the same thing over and over. At second reading stage, we had 16.5 hours of speaking. In the standing committee, of which I am a member, we had over 40 hours of talking, debating and listening to important associations and witnesses.

I believe the people of this country concurred with the Conservative Government during the campaign with regard to changing things around and attracting foreign investment to this country. The people of this country have asked us to carry on and get on with making these kinds of changes. That is what we are all about. That is what we are attempting to do.

I wish to speak briefly on motion No. 1. It attempts to turn around the whole intention of the Bill. I want to mention first that it makes the review function the most important element in the legislation, giving the positive function of encouraging and stimulating investment a purely secondary or, one might almost say, inconsequential role. Second, it confines that small positive role solely to the encouragement of investment by Canadians.

That motion is entirely opposed to the spirit and philosophy of the Bill. In effect, it reintroduces the Foreign Investment Review Act that has been shown to discourage investment in this country. One needs only compare the purpose of the Foreign Investment Review Act with the purpose stated in Bill C-15 to see the difference in outlook. The Foreign Investment Review Act found foreign control a matter of national concern and saw to it that no investments could be made by non-Canadians unless they demonstrated significant benefit. The aim of the new Bill is to signal that this Government welcomes foreign investment because it recognizes that it is generally of benefit to Canada. For this reason it would encourage investment by non-Canadians as well as Canadians.

Since that is the main purpose of the Bill, it is described at the outset. It also provided for a review of significant investments by non-Canadians in order to ensure that the benefits are realized. Only by putting things in that perspective and that order can the preamble, as mentioned by a previous speaker, "recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada", have any meaning at all.

It is important to emphasize the difference between the philosophy of the Bill and that of the motion because the kind of thinking that wants to recreate FIRA, even making it a bit stronger, which is what they are attempting to do, is behind nearly every motion presented by the Opposition Parties. That kind of thinking made investors look on Canada as a very poor investment prospect.

From my experience in my riding, foreign investment has had a very positive impact on our community. I receive nothing but encouragement from my constituents. An American company is looking to settle in our community. They have brought to my attention that their most serious concern would be any sort of discouragement. They felt the FIRA Act had been just that. They were very concerned about it. They called me the other day to ask me to continue speaking in support of Investment Canada and this new Act.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as one who looks at foreign investment from the perspective of acid rain, I want to bring to your attention an interesting number, namely, that there are 94 motions that were not accepted in committee and which have emerged here at report stage. Any seasoned parliamentarian, and I see many in the House today, knows that when a Bill generates that many motions at report stage there is a very profound difference of opinion. We have here a clash of views that evidently was not accommodated by the Government Party in committee. This is rather odd considering the fact that since the election, the Progressive Conservative Party has presented itself as the practitioner of consensus building, the practitioner of arriving at compromise resulting from consultations. If that is the way the Progressive Conservative Party manages the evolution of Bill C-15, then we are in serious trouble.

Evidently there is a profound difference of direction. It is embodied perhaps best of all in the difference of approaches. If you compare Clause 2 of the Bill with what is being proposed by our Party, you will notice that the purpose of the Act as proposed in the Bill is to encourage investment. It is as short as that. However, if you compare that with the alternative proposed by our speakers in committee and in the House today on the Official Opposition side, you will see the alternative approach which reads "to provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada". There is a big difference between the Government approach to encourage versus the Liberal approach to provide for the notification. Why do we say that? Because to provide is to take an approach that implies careful analysis of the proposal itself.

In putting forward the amendment under Motion No. 1, our Party bases its thinking upon the experience it has had over the last decade. This experience has shown that a well managed foreign investment policy that takes into account the long-term benefit of Canadians is much better than one that simply encourages investment. We have seen to many plant closures in the past. We have seen too many losses in potential research and development opportunities because of foreign investment. We have seen losses in the movement of profits back to the investing countries. We have learned from these experiences.

What is so sad about the Government's approach, and I suppose this is also why we have put 94 motions differing from the Government's approach, is that the Government does not seem to want to take into account the lessons learned so far. It wants to begin from year zero as if nothing had happened to Canada, and as if we could not learn from past experience.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: If the Hon. Member sitting behind the curtains has something substantial to say, why does he not resume his seat and have the courage to rise rather than making silly and indistinguishable noises that remind me of the caveman he usually is?

Mr. Lewis: Don't ever worry about me and courage.

Mr. Caccia: When we put stress on the importance of providing for notification of review, we do so because we have learned some good lessons from that in the past and we see that the necessity to review exists in the national interest. What is wrong with doing this in a more thoughtful manner, in a way that takes care of the long term rather than simply opening the doors?

The Bill as it is now proposed by the Government indicates that it will only provide for a review when dealing with significant investments. The definition of significant investment is unclear, but why should we leave open to review only significant investments? Surely there is a necessity in the Canadian interest for a thoughtful review, no matter the size of the investment.

When it comes to high technology, the technology of the future, investments from abroad are sometimes not significant. However, over a period of time these investments permit foreign industrial products to develop a base in Canada which would then permit the establishment of much larger foreign investment once the market has been exploited. This then permits the evolution of a real industry as a second step following what was not necessarily a significant investment.

In my recollection, this was the experience in the 1950s with electronics products. At that time we did see the first phase of investments by way of agencies that traded only in foreign-made products. These then became well established, and the industries then decided to take the next step of establishing industrial foreign investment at the expense of the opportunities for Canadians to secure those markets at home. We live in a very competitive world. Therefore, we must adopt the measures that are adopted by many other jurisdictions for screening investments, to find out whether or not they are in the interests of our own people and our own jobs.

When I see this Bill, I get extremely unhappy, to say the least. I recognize here a pattern which has already emerged with the dismantling of the National Energy Program. It makes me sick to think about what the so-called Progressive Conservative Government has done to the National Energy Program of which we were proud. We were looking forward to the results of the measures instituted in 1980-1981. They were a way of ensuring our destiny and of ensuring Canadian ownership over our own natural resources.

The Bill respecting investment in Canada also reminds me in a negative way of the evolution in Canada-U.S. relations since the Progressive Conservative Government took power. I make these statements in the presence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who is not very comfortable himself with the way things are going. Ottawa is being put in a position of imploring Washington to do the things that need to be done rather than being proud of asking that those things be done. We should be frank about asking our neighbour for the things for which we must fight, be they related to acid rain or trade interest. We have nothing to gain from creeping on our knees, imploring consideration from Washington. But that is what the Government has been doing for the last six months. I submit that that is the wrong approach.

The approach developed by Bill C-15 is the wrong approach. Dismantling the National Energy Program is the wrong approach. Future generations of Canadians will reject the tack that is being taken by the Government of Canada on this international front of great importance, because they will know that the rest of the world wants to invest in Canada. They will know, as do those of us who want to know, that Canada is one of the most desired places in which to invest in the entire world.

People are knocking at Canada's door to be admitted as immigrants. People are knocking at Canada's door to make investments because Canada is a rich and promising country. Therefore, everything is in our favour. We are in a strong bargaining position when it comes to directing and managing foreign investment. For the life of me, I cannot understand why we should take the route that gives up the store. That is not the route to take in the 1980s.

Canada is a sleeping giant. It has a financial potential which will always attract capital, today, tomorrow and 10 years from now. The sound approach, the approach that is in the interests of the Canadian public, would be to screen, as we have skilfully done over the years, and not to give up and let investment in without any conditions attached. That is not the way we should handle this very important policy.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this oportunity to comment on the amendment that I understand to be before the House, an amemdment which would change the purpose of Bill C-15 from recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada to recognizing that increased capital and technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the Government would benefit Canada. We are talking about the element of discretion that we think is absolutely essential to maintaining any semblance of Canadian national integrity when it comes to the question of foreign investment.

I see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is here. I think that is appropriate because I believe he is one who was once reputed to be a red Tory. There is another reputed red Tory in the chamber, the Hon. Member for Waterloo, the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean). This must be a particularly difficult moment for them when they see a Bill making it to report stage in the House of Commons which could have as its title the title of a book once written by another famous Tory, George Grant. This Bill should be called "Lament for a Nation". We are talking about the end of the vision which many Tories, as well as New Democrats and Liberals, have held over the years for Canada, of an independent, economically sovereign country on the northern half of the northern hemisphere.

But what we have here are Hon. Members of the Conservative Party, under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who have become absolutely raving continentalists, both with respect to economic policy and to bilateral relations with the United States. I believe it is a very sad day, not just for the country but for the Progressive Conservative Party, that this element within its tradition seems to have completely disappeared. There seems to be no one on the government side with any appreciation of that tradition who has any fight left in him at all. All those Hon. Members have been overawed, I suppose, by the mandate given the Prime Minister, and by the fascination with power. They have simply just shut up and become silent about whatever remnant there might be of that tradition.

I have to assume more and more that to speak of a "remnant" is perhaps exaggerating the case, because in all aspects of this government's policy we see no sign whatsoever with respect to Central America, disarmament, foreign investment or other questions as they pertain to the need for Canada to have an independent position in the world. We see no sign whatsoever of that element surviving on the government side. This kind of mindless statement which we find in the purpose of this Bill is unbelievable. It is unbelievable that we would make a statement that any capital, any technology, would benefit Canada, that we would want to be as a country that simple minded in our approach, or that we would not want to at least hint that we thought there was investment and technologies which might be harmful to Canada. This should come as a great surprise not just to Canadians who have thought about this at all, but to countries all over the world who know that in many instances capital investment and technologies from countries other than their own which have been introduced into their countries have been very harmful indeed. Yet in 1985, after all the evidence—not just Canadian evidence but the evidence of Third World countries and countries all around the world—indicating that we have to be discerning, make judgments and show discretion when it comes to what kind of technologies are employed where and for whose benefit, we haven't learned that we have to show that same kind of discernment, discretion and judgment when it comes to what kinds of investments we allow in our country.

We have the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, in its incarnation as the federal Government, dragging us back to a time in which no mature country in the world would even conceive of being at this moment, that is, simply throwing the gates open in some sort of 19th century laissez-faire way to any kind of investment whatsoever. That is exactly the purpose of the Bill.

I would imagine that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who on occasion has demonstrated some skepticism about the money lenders, the banks and some of the other financial institutions in our country and around the world, would be shocked that in this Bill we would have this kind of carte blanche statement which indicates that any kind of capital investment is to be regarded as a benefit, without condition. That is what is in the Bill as it is now. All we are saying is, for heaven's sake, let's at least indicate we have some critical faculties as a country.

The least the Progressive Conservative Government could do is indicate that it has some residual skepticism about the intentions of all foreign investors. Because if this Bill as it now reads was to be read by the international investment community, it would give the impression that we have a sign on our forehead which says, "Sucker". That's what it amounts to. The Bill is saying we now have a Government in Canada composed of 211 suckers. This Government is saying, We trust you, international investment community; we trust you banks; we know that you guys don't have anything but the national interest at heart so we are not even going to put in our Bill on foreign investment so much as an inkling that you guys have anything but our interests at heart. We are going to turn a blind eye to the fact that you operate according to profit strategies in that you are into the business of maximizing your profits. We don't believe all that stuff about you. That is just NDP rhetoric. We know that you guys are not really like that. We don't really have to put any kinds of conditions in our Bill having to do with foreign investment. That is the kind of simplistic, naive and innocent attitude that we are seeing in our Government.

But is it, Mr. Speaker, so simplistic, naive and innocent? I wonder. I would like to think, because there are a lot of fine human beings on the other side, that they are just sort of in the dark and have not grokked onto what's happening. I think that is true of most of those Hon. Members. But I also think that there are people calling the shots somewhere in this Government, and outside the Government, some very powerful people who want to see Canada returned to the colonial mentality which has so often characterized it over the years. If there ever was a sign of the return of the colonial mentality, it is in this particular Bill, which has all the potential to turn Canada into the late 20th century and early 21st century form of a banana republic.

We are talking about the future of our country and we are talking about Canada being now unwilling to do the very things which so many countries around the world now realize they have to do if they want to preserve their own national and economic integrity. That is, they must have some direct say and control over the kinds of investments which are made in their country.

But that is not where the Progressive Conservative Party is taking us. No, Sir. It is trying to recapture that golden age somewhere around 1955, I suppose, when we were part and parcel of the American economic empire. Everything was going smoothly. The Third World had not developed yet. There were no complications. The world was going along just fine. The Conservatives have got themselves convinced that all of the very deep economic problems which we are up against happened only because we had a Liberal Government for 16 years.

The Liberals caused a lot of problems, Mr. Speaker. We would all agree to that. But they did not cause everything. There are a lot of things which happened because of changes in the global economy and in the Canadian and North American economy that this Government is unwilling to face up to.

The Liberals were not willing to face up to it either, but they liked to pretend from time to time that they were. They knew that foreign investment was a problem so they created a Foreign Investment Review Agency and pretended to do something about it. They tried to have it both ways.

I will say one thing for the Conservatives, however, they do with enthusiasm what the Liberals used to do shamefully. When it came down to the crunch, the Liberals always did what the Americans wanted them to do but they used to have the decency to be ashamed of it, or to give some other reason. Not the Conservatives, though. They are honest in their stupidity. If the Americans don't want them to do it, they don't come up with another reason; they say, no, we are not doing it because the Americans don't want us to do it. You have to hand it to the Conservatives on that score. That's the kind of honesty one admires, I suppose, of persons who are not really in control of the world in which they live, and don't want to be in control. But that is what we are getting from the Government. That is what this Bill is a sign of. That is regrettable in the extreme.

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I cannot miss such a good opportunity to express my views about a Bill which reflects the basic ideological difference between the Party in power and the Official Opposition. Of course, Bill C-15 reflects the fact that our country must become increasingly open to the rest of the world. In the last few hours, the Official Opposition has found the answer to all the problems facing this country, especially job creation and investment. Members opposite have even mentioned economic sovereignty, saying that it should be preserved. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we have to ask ourselves what this economic sovereignty has cost our country in the last 12 years. The economic sovereignty mentioned by our Liberal colleagues has cost us nearly $200 billion in about ten years. Just ask the unemployed what it has cost, Mr. Speaker, between 1.5 and 2 million jobless. It is therefore important that our Government stick to its guns as far as this Bill and many other initiatives are concerned. What is involved here, Mr. Speaker, is part of the national rebuilding process initiated by our Government. Naturally, the Opposition parties are now powerless because they have been overtaken by the new national political reality which reflects our efforts to promote national reconciliation, as well as international reconciliation with our economic partners.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there have never been so many major agreements signed in this country as in the last few months. You just have to think of the oil agreement and of the national energy policy review. There has also been for the Quebec Government and Quebecers the general agreement of $1.6 billion which will be signed within a few days and is designed to deal with major problems in the areas of tourism, small business and forestry.

Faced with Bill C-15, which will show the whole world that Canada is now open to foreign investment, without any needless or artificial constraints, it is obviously easy for the Official Opposition to harp on about "jobs, jobs, jobs". Mr. Speaker, I remember that for four weeks, starting November 9, we were accused of victimizing the students, but nevertheless, our Government persisted and came out with the most progressive summer employment program ever, namely Challenge '85.

On that issue, the Liberal Opposition has been dismantled. For helping the aged, for the spouse allowance, $350 million. Although no government ever made such a significant effort, the Official Opposition never stops saying the Government is not doing enough. In spite of all that, I think it is important that this Government should proceed with Bill C-15 now before us and indicate to all Canadians that it knows where it is going in many sectors of Canadian activities, including foreign investment.

Mr. Speaker, our record concerning foreign investment is impressive. According to reports from experts, Canada ranks 24th on a list of 24 nations. There is room for improvement as far as attractiveness is concerned, that is our country's attractiveness to foreign investment.

Witnesses have appeared before the Committee, which sat many hours. The Opposition is demanding immediate jobs, but witnesses themselves have told the Committee that it is not possible to repair in three, four, five or six months the damage done by the Liberal administration. It cannot be repaired in less than two or three years. Two million unemployed cannot find jobs overnight. An international reputation is not rehabilitated overnight, Mr. Speaker. It is a slow, assiduous, perseverant process, and this legislation goes to show that our Government will give back confidence to Canadians and foreigners.

In an effort to ridicule every effort made by the Prime Minister, both on the international and national scenes, with all the goodwill we all are aware of, my colleague a few minutes ago asked the following question: "Who wants to buy Canada?"

Mr. Speaker, may I submit that at this moment, in the situation it was left in by the Liberals, nobody wants to buy Canada.

It is therefore important that the national reconstruction go on, despite the endless hours of debate on legislation. Currently, the Liberals are developing new roles. A few hours ago, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) became the environment guru. He was ready to allocate all the funds needed to the environment. But he is the very man who fathered the series of federal deficits which started some ten years ago. He fathered the first $500 million federal deficit. He also fathered the second $1.5 billion federal deficit, and today's $36 billion deficit.

Mr. Speaker, national reconstruction calls for realism, and this Government will go on proving it. It must also be pointed out that this nation needs both local and foreign investors. Do they know how much money debt servicing is costing? How much money the upcoming budget will have to provide for interest to repay for the Liberal damage? Seventy million dollars a day.

It is therefore obvious, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot accept amendments that would take us back to the former federal legislation on the screening of foreign investments. This Government wants to move forward, because over these past seven months we have shown that we were willing and able to sign significant agreements with provincial Governments. And this is obvious, Mr. Speaker . . . How could we fail to stress all the importance we see in our American friends in all our negotiations?

Perhaps some Hon. Members would prefer to have us negotiate with nations of the Warsaw Pact. Unfortunately, such is not our direction. Clearly this Government wants to move forward with this legislation which certainly is an important new departure on the international level bound to increasingly improve the management of this country's public affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved that Bill C-232, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 (determination of refugee status), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to speak again on this subject. This subject has troubled many people and the Government of the country for some years. I hope we are closer now to resolving it than we seemed to be before. This matter concerns how we treat people who are in Canada, having claimed that they are refugees from persecution in another country and should therefore be allowed to remain in Canada as refugees, and in most cases to be landed.

There is procedure in the Immigration Act which has turned out to be disastrously unworkable. That was pointed out several years ago. When I came to this place in 1981 it was pointed out, on the basis of experience, that it was not working right. In 1984 I spoke on a private Members' Bill with the same substance as this Bill. It was talked out at that time by Liberal Government members. Perhaps this Bill will be talked out today by Conservative Government members. I regret that year by year the problem grows worse. The commission does nothing about it and Governments, one after another, do nothing about it.

In this case the crisis has increased because on April 4 of this year the Supreme Court ordered that all these people are entitled to a hearing of their cases. The significance of that is that all but a very few of them were previously denied a hearing. Those 6,000 or 7,000 people whose cases had been decided have not had the opportunity to be heard directly by the decision makers. The other 13,000 people and their families who are waiting also do not have that opportunity. That has resulted in extreme unfairness in our procedure, as the Supreme Court has now acknowledged. This was pointed out many years ago by those dealing with refugee problems. Governments have been urged to rectify that. At least three years ago representatives of the Department of Immigration said it would cost too much money. At that time there may have been a backlog of 2,000 or 3,000 people. There is now a backlog of 20,000 people. We did not save money by putting this off and hiding our heads in the sand.

Last May a case was brought to the Supreme Court on which it made a decision after 11 months of deliberation. The commission could have guessed there was a possibility that the Supreme Court would decide in favour of the refugee claimants and order hearings. However, it appears that the commission is caught completely unprepared and has no advice for the Minister as to how this matter will be dealt with. It should be dealt with urgently, not only to save money for the Government, but more importantly, on basic principle. Some of these people have waited as long as eight years for decisions in their cases. If 20,000 cases are to be heard under the present procedures, many of them will have to wait years more.

It is not really necessary to carry on in this thick-headed fashion. It is possible, not only to save money and time, but to save human anguish by instituting these hearings. It is possible that we will not need to have nearly as many as 20,000 hearings in order to comply with the Supreme Court's decision. The senior staff of the commission has handled this in such a manner as to make the problem far more difficult than it need be. They have insisted, year after year, that oral hearings, such as have now been ordered by the court, were impossible because they would cost too much money.

Yet, after strong public pressure, a pilot project was begun two years ago. This pilot project has now handled approximately 3,000 cases. It has been found that, instead of two or three years, it takes an average of two or three months to resolve a case. In other words, the argument that we did not have enough money in Canada to have oral hearings was proven wrong through the experiment. Those few who were allowed to go through this pilot project moved through about seven or eight times more quickly than the average. The executive director of the Department of Immigration knows that, yet they continue to stonewall any efforts to establish the right of a hearing as a right in principle. The result has been a great deal of unnecessary hardship to claimants.

For example, there have been people claiming refugee status who should not have been. They were not trying to deceive us, but belonged in another program. These people should have been brought in on humanitarian grounds, which is provided for in our legislation, or under special programs, which again are provided for in our legislation. A number of groups who could have been brought in under those programs were instead shut out by officials who interpretated their cases negatively without due grounds, leaving them with no rescourse but to seek refugee status since their hardship case was a real one and in many cases was closely related to a refugee claim, as the special program concept shows. Instead of being dealt with immediately, to their benefit, and to save money and staff time, they have been added to the backlog of which is now 20,000. This is bad for every genuine refugee claimant, the staff, and taxpayers.

I would like to give an example that was brought to our attention by a witness before the committee last week. It was pointed out by the witness that our procedures are inefficient as well as inhumane. According to the transcript, a woman from Chile said she had been raped about four times by the military before she left the country. That woman broke down throught out her entire hearing, and the lawyer also said she broke down because it was so hard for her. None of that came out in the transcript. All that one could see written in the transcript was "recess". In other words, the denial of that woman being able to speak directly to those who made the decision made it impossible for people making the decision to properly evaluate her case.

Another case involves a family that has been here for eight years. It is an extreme case, but it happened. They have been here eight years waiting to find out if they will be accepted as refugees. That case could be determined much more quickly if the commission did not put up roadblocks.

There is a further example to which I wish to refer in the testimony before the committee. It is a case of a mother from Uruguay. As the witness said, that country had a reputation for human rights abuses until there were some changes in the Government recently. Her daughter and her son are Canadian citizens. They sponsored her to Canada but she was refused because the youngest child was mentally retarded.

The father of that family of seven children was in gaol for five years, and two of the children had been in gaol, one for six years and another 13-year old for three years. Of her other five children, two or more had been in detention for periods of time. Those submissions were put to the immigration commission, explaining what this woman had been through. She has two children here who are prepared to assist her in settling in Canada. She needs to get out of Uruguay, but was refused admission on the basis of humanitarian grounds. The case went to the Immigration Appeal Board. The Immigration Appeal Board asked why she did not make a refugee claim. She made a refugee claim and was accepted as a refugee but that was three years later. That woman is a basket case from the tension that she has had to undergo in waiting for that decision. Had she been allowed admission on humanitarian or compassionate grounds in the first instance, she would not have been waiting with uncertain status, not knowing if she was going to be sent back to Uruguay where she had already been through hell.

I have heard it claimed by a number of others, not only by lawyers but by church people who have been dealing with refugee matters, that there has recently been a change in interpretation of humanitarian and compassionate guidelines by the commission. An experienced Immigration lawyer states:

> So now we find persons who should come under special programs are not considered under special programs and they are put into the refugee stream because they feel they have no other option. Persons where there is humanitarian and compassionate grounds, because they also have refugee grounds they end up in the refugee stream because they do not want to return to their country of origin for fear of persecution. That is one way of increasing the statistics of the number of claimants. And I think it is being done deliberately by the commission in order to keep their statistics up.

There are ways to deal with this backlog. Whatever will be the legislative result of the intention of the Supreme Court decision, we can deal with the backlog immediately, as several people have noticed. While the legislation is being considered for amendment, perhaps there are administrative decisions that could be taken to ease the backlog considerably. While it would not be eliminated, it would be reduced to a much more manageable proportion.

For example, on the basis of transcripts, there are people who have very strong and credible claims to have been persecuted back home. They not only have reason to fear persecution but in fact have experienced that persecution. Those people could be landed now, without a hearing, without further delay.

Second, there are those such as the mother from Uruguay I have mentioned, who have strong humanitarian claims under our legislation, strong grounds on a humanitarian basis for being admitted and landed in Canada. Those could be taken out of the 20,000 landed who are in the backlog.

There are young children, some preschool children who under our law—which Charles Dickens described as an ass, speaking of the law generally—are required to go independently to a refugee examination to be examined under oath. That child is then dealt with separately from the parents. They are not allowed to have their cases handled together as a group. Those children could be taken out of the stream and dealt with separately once their parents' cases have been dealt with.

There are also those who are from war zones. For those, there should be special programs of the sort we have already had for people from Poland and El Salvador. Those should be taken out of the refugee stream and landed under whatever conditions are appropriate in that special program. At least they should be protected from being sent back to the war zone while it is a war zone.

There are others who could be classified under special programs and they all should be landed. For example, when the Iranians arrived at the Toronto Airport it eventually became obvious, after their hunger strike protest, that they would not be returned to Iran because it has already been our policy for several years not forceably to remove people to Iran. In that case, why were they being kept in detention for months on end at the detention centre near the Pearson International Airport? We knew that they would not be moved to Iran and there was nowhere else to move them. In fact, most of them have been given refugee status. If they had not made their point with a hunger strike, they might still be sitting in detention at the Pearson Airport.

There are those who should qualify as long-term residents simply because they have been here. They are like other people who are not in the refugee stream and have the same qualifications as those who have been found acceptable under our present laws. They have been living satisfactory lives in Canada, paying their way and breaking no laws, other than the immigration law they broke at the beginning. They have been paying their taxes and contributing as useful members of Canada. Many of these people have been landed.

Many of the people in this 20,000 refugee backlog would fit that classification and should be landed now. If that were done, and if we could land those who could be landed under our other programs, it would greatly reduce the 20,000 people whose cases the Supreme Court has directed shall be heard. A decision like that would not be in conflict with the Supreme Court decision because the Supreme Court declares that they have the right to be heard. If they are asking to be landed and they are landed, they will not quibble about the right to delay that landing in order to be heard.

Therefore I would ask that the substance of this Bill I have proposed be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. I ask that the Committee be urged to act quickly, in consultation with the Minister, for the reduction of this backlog of 20,000 potential oral hearings, and for the fashioning of improved legislation so that a backlog like this will never build up again.

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-232, and I am sure this will come as no surprise to the Hon. Member sponsoring the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) made a very interesting and thought-provoking speech in which he described some of the problems that immigration authorities must face daily when deciding whether or not to grant refugee status. Later on in my speech, I will try to put these problems into context for the benefit of the Bill's sponsor and the other Members of this House.

First of all, the problems described by the Hon. Member are certainly not new, either to the Minister or her staff. A comprehensive study of the subject will soon be released when Rabbi Gunther Plaut submits his report on the subject to the Minister in a few weeks. Our policy is in fact under permanent review, and it is no coincidence that this review process has led to a program for refugees that is very highly esteemed at the international level. However, there is no easy solution—

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my misunderstanding.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. The Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais).

Mr. Jourdenais: As I was saying: ... with regard to a refugee program that is very highly esteemed at the international level. However, there is no quick and easy answer to what in recent years has become a very complex immigration problem.

I am sure that all parties concerned ... Opposition Members want a realistic and humanitarian policy that will help those who are really in need. This means that we must implement a program that makes a distinction between individuals who are likely to abuse the system and those who really need a fair system for the recognition of refugee status.

It is a fact that we are experiencing a number of problems with our system for the recognition of refugees status, even if it is much admired by representatives from the United Nations and other countries. The fact that it has become increasingly difficult to distinguish quickly between bona fide refugees and individuals who are only trying to take advantage of the system for personal reasons has become a very big and complex problem. We must find answers that are not too simplistic, that will not aggravate the present situation and will not make the difficult task of helping bona fide refugees even more difficult.

The Convention of Geneva on the Status of Refugees defines a refugee as a person who, owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country; or who, not having a nationality and being outside the country of his former habitual residence as a result of such events, is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to return to it.

Since Canada is not geographically located near a country from which we can expect to receive a large number of refugees, the experts, and I am referring to members of the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate and members of Cabinet, have decided that our main role in refugee programs would consist in admitting individuals who have already been accepted as refugees in other countries. Thus, Canada is playing a fundamental part in helping first-entry countries to be more generous to people leaving their country for valid reasons. While we were expecting only a small number of people to come to Canada when we implemented our determination of refugee status system, this belief has proved to be unfounded.

Under the system provided in the Immigration Act of 1976, any person liable to be expelled from Canada can claim refugee status. This provision does not cover only those who wish to enter Canada but also those who have been residing in this country for some time as visitors or immigrants. The 1976 amendments also provided that the Refugee Status Advisory Committee would be created and make recommendations to the Minister about the validity of these applications. Under these amendments, the Minister decides whether the claims are valid, and those he turns down can then be referred to the Immigration Appeal Board.

It is at the second stage of review that the Supreme Court has ruled that a hearing is compulsory. This has allowed the claimants legal access to a standard consistent with the rights guaranteed under the Charter of Rights. However, this is not the last step in the process. Those who claim refugee status can dispute before the courts the legality of the process by which their claim was examined. They have a right to appeal under the provisions of Section 28 of the Federal Court Act, and the rulings of this court can be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. In the meantime, before their status is definitely established, the claimants may remain in Canada. Canada does not expel or deport those who are waiting for a ruling on their refugee status.

What has happened in fact is that the majority of claims have not been found valid by the Minister. It would be impossible to determine whether the new system allowing each claimant to be heard will produce substantially different results, even though an international survey reveals that the results of the former system were not excessive. However, it has been impossible at the administrative level to process claims rapidly, even in cases which are obviously not legitimate. The defence groups which maintain that the review process is not fair enough have encouraged the claimants to exhaust all possible legal channels. The already long delays in processing refugee claims have therefore become even longer.

As the delays have become longer, systematic attempts have been made to abuse the determination of refugee status system. Temporary Canadian residents quickly learned that in order to remain and work in Canada, they only had to claim refugee status. It was obvious that even the weaker claims would require nearly as much time as the most complex ones. The two or three countries responsible for the greatest number of refugee status claims in Canada are in fact parliamentary democracies where the rule of law prevails and where persecution under the terms of the Convention is nearly unknown. Nearly all claims were unjustified, but they caused a complete breakdown of the review system. The waiting periods grew longer, especially since certain people understood how to exploit the system by applying for refugee status, thus avoiding being quickly expelled from Canada.

Other countries have also found themselves with an increasing number of people claiming refugee status while their country of origin was going through an economic crisis. In fact, these people wanted to leave their country of residence for purely economic reasons. Host countries, such as Germany, Sweden and Switzerland, reacted by tightening the requirements for being granted refugee status, while Canada was relaxing its own criteria.

The substantial increase in the number of people who, in the last two years, have come to Canada by requesting refugee status has put a much heavier burden on those who must rule on the legitimacy of these claims, but those who suffer the most because of this are the genuine refugees. They must often wait a long time before knowing what will happen to them, and the immigration services have no control procedure because they cannot expel from Canada those whose request has been turned down. Bona fide claimants can no longer be granted refugee status quickly.

The Advisory Committee on the Refugee Status has a huge backlog. For example, during the 18-month period from October 1983 to this day, the number of applications and appeals has gone from 9,100 to 13,500, which does not include another 600 cases always on hold for want of staff to undertake the first inquiry. The acceptance rate has dropped from 38 percent in 1981 to 33 percent recently. In addition, an increasing number of people are systematically swindling.

The Advisory Committee on Refugee Status has tried to make the system as fair and flexible as possible. The output of the Committee has been increased through the appointment of new private members and an increased administrative support. A program of personal interviews was launched in June 1983 to identify as soon as possible the true refugees. In spite of those changes, there are 3,500 cases on hold. The settlement of some matters has been sped up, but the delays continue to pile up.

The Immigration Appeal Board has known similar problems. Only the obviously deserving cases are formally heard before the Board. A year in average elapses before that hearing. In the Federal Court, the average delay for a hearing is six months at present.

Since it takes sometimes three to four years to settle certain matters, an important immigration movement has developed which the government cannot manage or control. Therefore, we must conclude that the bill does not go far enough. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) suggests that hearings be held before the Advisory Committee on Refugee Status. By doing so, there would be one more step in the process for the determination of the refugee status which already provides for a hearing. What is the purpose of this proposal? Is the present system unfair? No. Are refugees sent back home? No. The problem, Mr. Speaker, is due to increased delays and the bill of my hon. friend will in no way settle it. Therefore, I object to his proposal.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support Bill C-232 concerning the determination of refugee status.

As the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) pointed out, the refugee status determination process should have been reviewed long ago. Unfortunately, changes do not come easily because of the complexity of the administrative structure involved. Still, the Liberal Government had sponsored a pilot project in 1983 with a view to experimenting with a new procedure to determine refugee status. Applicants were interviewed personally by a member of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. Instead of waiting for 18 months for a decision, it often took only two months.

In my opinion, it is an excellent idea to force the Advisory Committee to hear in person the applicants for refugee status. Committee members would then be able to pass judgment more rapidly and more efficiently, and that would cut down the painful waiting period which is the lot of too many applicants. Notwithstanding what some Progessive Conservative Members may think, that would not necessarily increase the costs to be paid by Canadian taxpayers for future refugees. Efficiency does save money.

Indeed, Canadian taxpayers do not save any money when people are kept waiting for one or two years, and even four years in some cases. Refugee status applicants have a hard time earning a living and they are worried. Some of them actually become a burden to their family and friends.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-232 opens up a new vista in light of the decision of the Supreme Court to force the Immigration Appeal Board to hold personal hearings for applicants who challenge the first ruling. Is there anything more logical than hearing the personal representations of people who are concerned about their survival? The way things are now, the Committee makes a decision after considering the transcript of interviews between immigration officials and the applicant as he or she enters Canada. The parliamentary committee has heard much evidence to the effect that applicants cannot adequately express their fears and anxieties. I think that giving refugee status applicants an opportunity to present their case personally is a more compassionate way to deal with future refugees. But as I said, Mr. Speaker, humanitarian considerations aside, I also want to lay emphasis on the huge savings which would result from a more equitable, more effective and more humane refugee status determination process.

First of all, the costs resulting from the slowness of the bureaucratic process would be eliminated. When a case takes two or three years to move from the Refugee Status Advisory Committee to the Immigration Appeal Board, to the Federal Court, and finally to the Supreme Court, a lot of energy and hence money is wasted.

Secondly, I should like to emphasize a most interesting aspect of the 1983 pilot project. In committee, many witnesses have stated that those who are not really refugees do not like to appear personally before committee members, and that, on the contrary, the persons who are real refugees are anxious to be heard by them.

Considering that about one third of the people seeking refugee status are real refugees and that the others are caught in the process for lack of another way to come to Canada, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that such a hearing would contribute to a more equitable process for the determination of the refugee status.

There are now people who have no right to come to Canada under the Immigration Act and who are using the loopholes of the Act to do so. There is an easy scheme for those who do not fit in any of the immigrant classes. They come to a Canadian port of entry and claim refugee status as defined by the United Nations Convention. If the determination process was fair and quick, the persons wrongly seeking refugee status could be expelled in a matter of weeks. Whoever is not truly a refugee would not spend money to come to Canada and risk being deported two months later. That is a matter of common sense, is it not?

Mr. Speaker, the people who are not really refugees know that it can take as much as five years for their case to move from the first level of decision making to the last. They find it worthwhile to borrow money and take the complicated steps required in order to find a haven for five years.

Those are facts which are common knowledge abroad among the people living in communities with a large number of potential emigrants. They are also common knowledge in Canada among the ethnic groups where people want to help a distant relative or friend to come to Canada. This works against real refugees who need immediate assistance and whose lives may be in danger in their countries of origin, and it works also against Canadian taxpayers.

It would be easy indeed to blame the current problems on the Liberal Party. But it is not so simple. I mentioned earlier a pilot project introduced by the Liberal government in 1983. The responsibilities of those in power cannot be underestimated or excused on another political group. Any government can always act to solve the problems Canadians have to face.

It can be said that the Conservative government has acted quickly to change a number of administrative practices in the area of immigration. Last fall, the Minister ordered immigration officers not to provide prospective immigrants, including refugees, with any legal aid during the hearings they have with them. As I indicated earlier, the Advisory Committee on refugee status decides whether the applicant will be admitted or not on the basis of these interviews. Now, these interviews are very intimidating for those people who do not know our laws or customs and who know that a wrong answer can send them right back to their country to live in difficult conditions.

• (1740)

Another example of the will of the Conservative Party to change our immigration policy is the over emphasis put on the entrepreneurs' program. Conservative members of the Parliamentary Committee are more concerned with the need to give a first-rate treatment to investors immigrants than with the need to deal with social problems resulting from the present situation.

Whereas Conservative members of the Committee want to increase the number of immigrants from 85,000 this year to 200,000 in 1986, they are not as willing to grant them the minimum services for an adequate integration.

We know that the lack of services which I would call essential, is sometimes rather serious. The Conservative Party thinks it will save money by cutting into services to immigrants whereas the social effects resulting from this lack of services are more costly than those services themselves.

The refusal to provide a language training course to all those who need it will eventually lead to immigrants being combined in ghettos and in low-paid and tedious jobs. If, later on, immigrants have to apply for unemploymnt or welfare benefits, that will foster racism. People will say that they are taking advantage of the work of Canadians.

Now, Mr. Speaker, many people who have to work with immigrants will tell you that those people are eager to work, to earn their living and support their families and to contribute to the economic development of Canada. However, in order for them to do so, they must have available to them the tools that will enable them to get integrated in a normal way into the Canadian society. They must have available to them services paid for by Canadians who will get largely repaid for them. This is what is important to understand when speaking of services provided to immigrants.

Bill C-232 giving claimants to refugee status the right to be heard in person by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee is a step toward a process of determination of the refugee status more equitable for everybody; perhaps in this way we will see an end to the many and unspeakable abuses of which the prospective refugees are the victims.

Those abuses are terrible, Mr. Speaker, and are not a great credit to Canada. Some journalists from The Globe and Mail asked a few prospective immigrants to go to some consultants or lawyers specialized in immigration matters. Those prospective immigrants had fictitious backgrounds totally unacceptable under the Immigration Act. Yet those people were told by almost every consultant and lawyer consulted that they could get admitted for a fee of $500 in one case, $1,500 in another case and $4,000 in a third case. It would therefore be necessary to regulate the immigration consultants since those consultants deal with those who are totally unaware of the Canadian laws and standards. As for lawyers specialized in immigration matters, the Bar takes upon itself to penalize them. It remains however that few immigrants will have the courage to question the fees or the quality of services offered by the lawyers because this requires knowledge in the field.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe Bill C-232 is a step in the right direction. I am sure that a more equitable process of determination of the refugee status will allow savings for Canadian taxpayers, and will be more humanitarian for prospective immigrants.

This will be a more efficient way for us to fulfill our international duty of welcoming refugees. Finally, since the Supreme Court recently ruled in a similar way regarding the Immigration Appeal Board, the process of determination of the refugee status will also be more logical.

[English]

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to participate in the debate on Bill C-232 on the subject of refugees, introduced by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

The Hon. Member for Spadina called this Government thick-headed and accused it of stonewalling on various issues. I would rather commend it and say that Canada's efforts in formulating and administering the refugee policy is one I believe we can look at with pride. After all, Canada has accommodated more refugees per capita than virtually any other country in the world. We have only to remind the House of the 50,000 Vietnamese refugees we took in. In addition to those from Vietnam, people came from Iran, South America and many other countries, especially eastern Europe.

Canadians have shown the capacity to care, that often neglected quality of reaching out to those who are suffering persecution for reasons of race, religion or politics, of giving comfort to the homeless and the stateless. We have also shown a concern to ensure that our institutions and our administrative practices reflect those humanitarian ideals that we have set for ourselves.

What we are concerned with here today is the maintenance of a realistic balance. The hard truth is that we must weigh our humanitarian instincts and goals against the obligation that every sovereign state has of maintaining the integrity of its borders. In other words, our international commitment to refugees must be fulfilled in tandem with immigration control factors and the protection of the interests of Canada.

Unlike other countries, Canada has not until recently faced the phenomenon of large numbers of people claiming refugee status suddenly appearing at our doorsteps. In the past, geography has acted as a buffer, if you will, providing a degree of isolation from turbulence in other lands that gave rise to large numbers of refugees. In many respects, this is a shrinking world. The movement of people either as tourists or immigrants has increased. Canada welcomes many visitors and newcomers each year to her shores. In fact, we have benefited from the dramatic increase of world travel because of the tourist trade. By the same token, we are no longer isolated from other countries where strife and civil unrest are not uncommon.

According to reliable estimates, there are some 70 million to 80 million people in the world today who have been permanently displaced from their homes. They move because of war, revolution, poverty, or simply in the hope of creating a better future for themselves and their children. Some of these people are refugees, others are not. The challenge is to distinguish between the two in a way that is fair and practical.

A procedure was established after we signed the Geneva Convention in 1969 whereby an individual could claim recognition as a convention refugee, either upon arriving in Canada or after admission to Canada if that person faced removal from Canada. Later, in 1978, the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, separate from the established program on immigration in the Immigration Department, was set up for the sole purpose of advising the Minister on refugee claims. The Minister was given the power to appoint committee members, but it was given little in the way of additional guidelines.

The creation of the advisory committee was a bold step in the evolution of a refugee policy, but there was some criticism. Some critics felt that the committee's recommendations were too harsh or arbitrary, that the United Nation's definition of a refugee was unduly restrictive and that the system did not provide adequate guarantees or fairness to all claimants.

In February of 1982, the Government acted to move the entire system in the direction of increased fairness and openness. The new reforms clearly separated the refugee determination process from immigration procedures to ensure that refugee cases are assessed on the basis of human rights considerations alone. Earlier this month, the Supreme Court concluded that the system designed in the late 1970s does not meet the standard of justice required under the Canadian Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, and has indicated that all claimants must be heard orally by the Immigration Appeal Board.

While our refugee determination system has been undergoing a process of reform and liberalization, more and more of the world's people have become refugees as a result of war, persecution and minority-majority conflict. Inevitably, the people displaced by these factors look toward the industrialized nations for help. The channel of last resort is that provided by the refugee asylum structures in developed countries like Canada. Even though these channels do not provide guarantees of long-term help for these people, these structures provide access to work and social benefits, at least on a temporary basis.

As more people use these systems, the greater the backlog and the longer the delays, even for those whose claims on the refugee determination system are tenuous at best. Thus the potential for abuse is great indeed. Since 1980, we have witnessed a manifold increase in the number of refugee claimants. This places an enormous strain on our resettlement resources.

Recent refugee claimant arrivals have averaged about 600 a month. About 13,500 cases are now under review, as the Hon. Member for Spadina said earlier, and more are under judicial appeal. Yet, only about one-third of those who claim refugee status have their claims upheld. Many of the claimants have been using the refugee system to get around our immigration laws. Not only is this unfair to those who are legitimately following the procedures, but it jeopardizes the entire immigration system.

I believe we would be faced with a serious dilemma if we were to endorse the proposed Bill. After all, claimants already have a right to an oral hearing at the Immigration Appeal Board. I doubt their protections will be enhanced by two oral hearings. We would, as I have stated earlier, appear to be improving the determination process, while in fact we would be undermining the claims process through further delay. By lengthening the period of time that individuals would be able to remain in Canada, more people will be drawn into the process, because being in it gives them access to working in Canada, living here, and in some cases drawing social benefits normally reserved for permanent residents.

Our Immigration Act recognizes in law our humanitarian concerns, and through the refugee determination system that exists today we are able to ensure that no one is sent from this country until he or she has received a full assessment of his or her refugee claim. One of the lawyers dealing with these cases, Patricia Ann Ritter, referred to me the case of Mr. Simon Bancroft Hall. His detention was reviewed on a weekly basis, pursuant to statute, and on April 9, the first working day for the commission after the Supreme Court of Canada decision, at a review of Mr. Hall's detention, the senior immigration officer submitted that it was the position that in light of the decision Mr. Hall would be heard as he had been denied an oral hearing previously. Something is being done.

This is not to say that the system is without problems, but to deal with these problems on a piecemeal basis is not really the answer. Therefore, we on this side of the House can only conclude that the Bill would do nothing to enhance the fairness and openness of the refugee determination system.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, after the very splendid address we just heard, I would like to enlarge on one or two points.

I believe our immigration system must be very fair. It has to be fair to Canadians who are living here now, and many Canadians who are jobless feel that the immigration laws are too lax. However, the laws must be fair to those in other countries who are trying to come to this country and who are doing so legally. I think we must emphasize that particular point.

There is a growing feeling in Canada that too many people are coming to our nation. I do not think anyone objects to people coming to our country because of terrible conditions in their own lands, but those who come here in a purposely illegal fashion should not be considered. I cannot follow the fact that some of them are waiting here for six and eight years.

One of my constituents contacted me when one of his relatives came to Canada from Yugoslavia. This man had applied twice to come to Canada and had been rejected. However, he came anyway. He got on a plane and simply came to Canada irrespective of the law. I do not think that is fair to those who make applications and wait for approval in their own countries. This man had a hearing in Toronto within two weeks of his arrival. My constituent contacted me and said that the man was here. He told me how he got here. I said I would get the hearing set as quickly as possible. I contacted officials and the hearing was held within two weeks. That man was sent back to his country. He claimed that he could not go back because he would be killed. That was nonsense and his relatives told us that. We were told that that was simply an excuse to leave his own country. Later on we found out that he wanted to leave his wife and three kids. That is like a Canadian who gets married in Alberta, gets divorced and leaves his wife on welfare rather than pay maintenance orders. These Canadians end up in Prince Edward Island, or any other province, with a common-law wife and more youngsters, following which he heads for British Columbia in order to avoid another maintenance order. That kind of person is no good to any country.

I believe we have to be absolutely fair to those wonderful citizens of other countries who want to enter Canada, and want to do so legally. I have no sympathy for those who come here illegally. I do not think they should be kept here for six, seven or eight years. If they come to Canada illegally they should be sent back immediately. They should not be kept here month after month when they have no right to be here at all. If an immigrant enters Canada and is classified as a refugee, he should not have special privileges over those who are entering Canada legally from China, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Japan, Korea or any other country. He should not have special privileges simply because he did something under the table. Let us give those who want to come to Canada legally the first opportunities. Let us not cry crocodile tears for those who come here illegally. Let us not try to keep them in the country month after month.

An Hon. Member mentioned that people were paying $1,500 to come here. The Hon. Member should let us have the names of those people, because I am sure the Minister would prosecute them. We do not want people to buy their way into Canada. We want them to come in legally. Those who come in legally are the kind of people who will make good citizens.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

PORNOGRAPHY—FRASER COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, on March 22 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) when we could expect to have the Fraser Committee Report dealing with pornography, and when we would be in a position to start to deal with that subject and tighten up the laws, rules and regulations of this country with respect to pornography. The Minister at that time advised me that the report was coming shortly. I am pleased to say that by some interesting coincidence the report of many, many pages dealing with the subject of pornography was released today. I know that the people of this country are very pleased that it is out so that we can start to deal with this subject.

Pornography is something which I suppose has been around as long as history itself. The fact that it has been around, however, does not deter from the fact that at this time it poses a very serious problem in this country. In recent years we have seen a great increase in the volume of pornorgraphy over that of a few years ago. Pornography is also of a much more explicit and violent variety. In fact, I venture to say that most of the things which we see on our television screens, in print and in theatres today are things which would not have been tolerated just a few years ago.

Pornography now is seen and observed by the public not only in books, the theatre and on the movie screens, but of course daily on television and also now on video casettes. Everyone is concerned about this subject but we have not been able to come to grips with it. There are a variety of reasons for that, but it is basically that there is a great difference of opinion and variance in attitude towards the entire subject of pornography. Many people share my view and my concern that not only is it something which offends taste but it is also something which is inherently harmful to society and does have the potential for breeding violence against other people, either of a sexual or otherwise criminal nature.

There is a concern as well on the part of many of us that there is a softening up process going on. We are being bombarded constantly with this sort of material and that has a tendency to soften everyone to the whole concept. Over time, people start to feel that there is nothing wrong with this sort of material. On the other hand, there are many people in the country, Mr. Speaker, who feel that to restrict and limit pornography is in fact some sort of infringement on basic human rights and an infringement on freedom of speech. It is because of that sort of feeling that we have this great conflict and are unable to come to grips with the whole subject.

I firmly believe, however, that even those who feel there is a restriction on freedom of speech in doing something to restrict pornography believe as well as the rest of us that child pornography is a real problem and of concern, is something which should be restricted and dealt with. I am pleased to see that the Fraser Commission Report does deal with the very subject of child pornography. It suggests that it should be an offence when it involves those under the age of 18. That deals very clearly with the concern that while adults perhaps can consent and understand what all of this is about, children cannot. Clearly it should be an offence and I am very pleased to see that covered in the Fraser Report. I would hope that the Government will deal quickly with that aspect of the report.

The other aspect, of course, is that which deals with pornography generally and the question of whether there should be some other restrictions on pornography, apart from child pornography. The Fraser Committee has again outlined recommendations dealing with that.

The Fraser Committee is not the first forum which has made some recommendations regarding this kind of pornography. I understand this House dealt with the subject in a previous Bill. There have been recommendations from feminist groups and from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Many of their concerns focus on two points. First of all, the question of whether pornography should be defined according to a public standard or whether there should be some objective test to deal with pornography, and secondly, whether it is only sexual acts which should be considered as pornography, or that violence should be considered separately. The Fraser Committee has recommended that there should be two separate offenses there, and also that we have an objective test.

It remains to be seen how quickly the Government will act on this matter, but I hope that the consultations have now come to an end. We have studied this subject long enough, and I hope the Government will now act very quickly. I am looking forward to hearing from the Parliamentary Secretary on the Government's response, and how soon it will act.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern about this very serious problem. As he said, the report of the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution was tabled by the Minister today. The Committee benefited from the submissions and briefs which were received in the public hearings and from research done by the Department of Justice. There are upwards of 100 recommendations contained in the report which will require consideration by the Government.

The Government especially wants to consult with the provincial Attorneys General in order to deal with the people who are on the, shall we say, practice end of any laws we pass—the people who have to prosecute. Naturally we want to see that the laws suggested in this House by this Government are capable of being put into practice at the working level by the people who handle them. In addition, there will be public interest groups which will want to be heard on the direction these amendments should take.

I can tell the Hon. Member that the Minister is especially concerned about the dramatic increase in sexually explicit material which has become more widespread and more readily available throughout Canada. I can assure him that the Minister will carefully consider the Fraser Committee's recommendations before proceeding to draft and introduce legislative proposals in respect of pornography and prostitution, and that such proposals will not be introduced prior to consultation with the Attorneys General. The legislation that we hope will result from this process will be developed only after careful study and consideration, and we welcome the Hon. Member's participation in that process just as we welcome that of any Member of Parliament.

TRUST COMPANIES—WESTERN CAPITAL TRUST. (B) MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on April 3 I raised with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the matter of a discrepancy between an event occuring on March 29 and a statement made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) in the House on the same day. The event was the failure of Western Capital Trust in British Columbia barely one week after the Government announced its plan to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank.

On March 29, during the debate on the Government's Bill to bail out that bank, the Minister described that situation as an isolated incident.

● (1810)

The Minister said:

> There are no other financial institutions in the country at the moment that are appearing to be insolvent in any way.

On April 3 I asked why the Minister of State for Finance would have said that to the House when she surely must have known that Western Capital Trust was in serious difficulty and was closing its doors as she spoke. The Minister of Finance replied that the remark of the Minister of State for Finance arose from her hope of success in the company's merger negotiations and that departmental officials had been meeting with Western Capital Trust over the winter on this matter.

That response makes no sense at all. The Minister of State for Finance said that no institution other than the Canadian Commercial Bank was in difficulty on the very day that Western Capital Trust announced that it was obliged to wind up its operations. Naturally, I take it for granted that the Minister would not intentionally mislead the House. The only remaining explanation is that she did not know what was going on. Why did she not know? Did her officials fail to brief her? Did the Minister of Finance fail to inform her?

Let us look at the chronology again so that this will be quite clear. On February 12 the Minister of State for Finance, responding to a question about another trust company, said:

I would like to reassure the House with respect to other western trust companies, that I'm not aware of any which are on the brink of collapse.

On March 29 the Minister also said that no institution, other than the Canadian Commercial Bank, was in any difficulty. On March 29 Western Capital Trust closed its doors. On April 2 the Minister of State for Finance then said that officials in the Department of Finance had met continually over the winter months with officials from Western Capital Trust. On April 3 the Minister of Finance said:

Mr. Speaker, for some months now the Government has been working with Western Capital Trust to try to assist it in merging with another, stronger trust company. At the time the Minister made that statement it was expected that those merger negotiations would be completed successfully. That is the basis for her comments.

Again, that simply does not make sense since the company in question, Western Capital Trust, was closing its doors even as the Minister spoke.

The issue of confidence in our financial institution is, of course, very important. The whole system depends on confidence. It is the cornerstone of our financial system. Members of the Opposition who ask questions in the House do not do so out of a desire to undermine confidence in the system. In this case, all the questions that I asked came long after the events had been made public. When Ministers make statements which appear to be contradicted by fact, and do not explain the discrepancy, it does not inspire confidence. I hope that, given the opportunity now, the Government will give the House a clear statement.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to elaborate on the situation for the benefit of the Member, who obviously has put a lot of thought into her comments.

Western Capital Trust had been monitored by officials of the department of Insurance for some time. In that regard, the examiners of the Department of Insurance, following an inspection of the books and records of the company in late 1984, concluded that the company had some $3 million worth of capital, but that additional capital was required to fully comply with the borrowing provisions of the Trust Companies Act. The company's annual financial statement was filed with the Department on February 28, 1985, indicating that the company had $3 million of capital at December 31, 1984. In an accompanying letter the company's auditors indicated that the financial position of the company was fairly presented in the annual statement.

During 1984, several different plans had been put forward to enable the company to fully comply with the borrowing provisions of the Trust Companies Act. The company sold large blocks of mortgages for cash to reduce borrowing, and it tried to arrange for private placement of preference shares. But none of these courses of action were successful so a formal report on the company's overborrowed situation was submitted by the Superintendent to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall).

That report recommended that limitations be placed on the company's licence so as to reduce its borrowings and thereby bring the company into compliance with the Act. A copy of the report was provided to the President of the company and he was given an opportunity to discuss the matter with the Minister. The Minister was up to date and current on everything that was going on, and was being briefed by her officials.

The President of the company chose to revive negotiations to merge Western Capital Trust Company and another corporation. Further meetings were held with the Superintendent of Insurance and the Department's examiners began a review of the assets of the other corporation early in March. The Minister and her officials were entitled to believe that everything was proceeding to merge the company. However, the Minister received a telex on March 29, 1985, from the company's directors requesting that the company be wound up.

I think it should be brought to the Hon. Member's attention that on February 28, 1985, the company filed the financial statement with the Department of Insurance, and it clearly showed that the company had a capital and surplus position of $3.1 million. The certificate bore the certification of the company's auditors. Under these circumstances, with an annual statement showing that the company was solvent and with the question of a possible amalgamation still under active consideration, it was unreasonable to characterize this particular company as being on the brink of collapse at the time the Minister made her statement.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS—WOMEN'S EQUALITY—ABELLA REPORT. (B) AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on February 1, I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to take positive action on the question of equality. Specifically, I asked him to act on the Abella Commission recommendations to legislate mandatory affirmative action and contract compliance before April 17, when the Charter of Rights would come into force. We have now received the Government report on employment equity which was tabled by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss Macdonald) a number of weeks ago.

Critics from my Party felt that the Government proposals were weak. We expressed our concern that there was no enforcement mechanism for contract compliance and companies which have contracts with the Government were left to establish their own targets for employment equity. As with the Liberals before, Tories seem to be reluctant to enforce mandatory affirmative action.

I also asked that funding for the Human Rights Commission be increased so that adequate staff may be hired to deal with the many additional complaints which will result from the Government's equity program. For several years we have had federal legislation which requires equal pay for work of equal value so that women will be paid at the same rate as men in similar job responsibilities. Despite this legislation, there has not been systematic change even within areas of federal jurisdiction. I have urged the Government to enforce equal value pay in every department and Crown corporation so that women will no longer have to appeal individually on a case by case basis to the Human Rights Commission.

● (1820)

On April 17 we celebrated the Charter of Rights and the coming into being of the equality clause. Having equality rights on paper, however, does not mean that people will be treated equally. Unfortunately, the Conservative Government delayed changes to legislation, and also to regulations which are clearly discriminatory and do not conform to the Charter. For example, the discrimination under the Unemployment Insurance Act is evident because it unfairly restricts benefits for unemployed women on maternity leave. They are eligible for fewer benefits because they happen to be pregnant. Another example concerns maternity leave in the military. We support the position of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women on this very important issue.

Another example of unfairness is the fact that while the Government has given lip-service to equality compliance in Crown corporations, Air Canada is establishing a very negative precedent by trying to bargain away women's rights to full-time jobs that are decently paid.

The Government by its inaction now has forced women to fight legal and very expensive battles to achieve their rights under the New Charter of Rights. A legal assistance fund is necessary to undertake test cases before the courts. Such a fund should be independent of government and political bias. I asked the Minister of Justice recently to celebrate equality on April 17 by generously contributing to the legal education assistance fund which has been established as an endowment for legal challenges by women related to equality under the Charter. Once again the Minister of Justice refused to act. This Government's inaction was a disappointment on this memorable and historic day.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for closely following the issue of equality in employment, which became even more important with the proclamation, on April 17 last, of the relevant provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Hon. Member knows, since she has just mentioned that fact, that women and minorities are the people who celebrated last week the historical proclamation of the provisions on equality which our Government acted to amend in the context of the debate on equality in employment.

The Hon. Member will also remember that on March 8, in this House, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced the implementation of measures for employment equity, the very words used by Judge Abella which singularly expresses the goals we are pursuing in order that women, natives, handicapped people and visible minorities may prove their worth in the workplace.

It was announced then, Mr. Speaker, that following study, debate and consultation, we would be introducing measures of unprecedented scope, the effects of which will be as far-reaching as the Hon. Member and myself might wish them to be.

In short, our action with respect to employment equity will consist of the adoption, by the federal Government, of decisive measures in employment sectors coming under its control and its jurisdiction. In the process, Mr. Speaker, we are encouraging provincial Governments and municipalities in implementing positive action programs.

Before the end of this session, Mr. Speaker, we will table in this House a legislation that will seek to make it mandatory for companies subject to federal regulations and having less than one hundred employees to take action to achieve employment equity and report each year to this House on their efforts in that area. Such legislation is presently in preparation and, as announced by the Hon. Minister on March 8 last, we are consulting with the representatives of the industry, the unions and the target groups on the way to present those reports. Furthermore, we are formulating directives in this regard.

We have also asked Crown corporations to implement equity measures in the area of employment, and to take the steps needed to be able to present to Parliament annual reports on their performance through the ministers responsible for those corporations.

Mr. Speaker, we are developing a program of contracts related to the implementation of equity measures in the area of employment. Under this program, businesses which have contracts exceeding $200,000 and have at least 100 employees will also have to implement equity measures in the area of employment, and we will control their implementation.

In all those areas, our action is based to a large extent on the conclusions and recommendations of the Abella report.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Hon. Member, like women and minorities all over the country, will realize that we are taking strong and responsible steps to promote equity in the area of employment, and we hope we can count on her support when the legislation is tabled in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.26 p.m.

MULTICULTURALISM

ARMENIA—IMPORTANCE OF ALL CANADIANS TO KNOW HISTORIES OF COMMUNITIES COMPOSING CANADA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and my Liberal colleagues, I wish to express to Armenians the world over our feelings of esteem, sympathy and understanding and join them in their desire for peace, justice and equity.

In the past, Armenia was exposed many times to persecution and atrocities. Its blackest day came on April 24, 1915. This date, which is being commemorated today in the Parliament of Canada and throughout the world marks the beginning of the dispersal and massacre of the Armenian people—the first holocaust of this century. Canada, a country that is still building its future, has thousands of Canadians of Armenian origin.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that soon, the Parliament of Canada will commemorate the anniversary of this tragic event every year on April 24, out of solidarity with the entire Armenian community in the diaspora. Canada, one of those rare countries born in times of peace, is interested in the history of every new cultural group that came to settle in this country after Confederation. In Quebec, we have a motto: Je me souviens. All Canadians should know what happened in Armenia, and when they do they will understand that realizing what happened in 1915 may help to prevent a recurrence of those tragic events.

DISARMAMENT

PEACE DEMONSTRATIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Ambassador for Disarmament told Canadians last week that the best hope of influencing government military and foreign policy was to take to the streets. Tens of thousands of Canadians will do that in the coming days. In Vancouver, where thousands took to the streets last year, thousands will again walk for peace this Saturday. Once again they will demonstrate their opposition to Cruise missile testing in Canada. The Liberals refused to listen. When will this Government listen? Once again Canadians will call for a nuclear weapons freeze followed by massive reductions. When will the Government listen?

Those who walk for peace on Saturday will also demonstrate their opposition to star wars. When will the Government say no to star wars and no to Canadian participation?

Those who walk for peace will demonstrate their anger at the Government's attack on the Peace Camp. The Government is wrong when it claims that the Peace Camp is not supported by Canada's peace groups. Today alone I have heard from Project Plowshares, Regroupement pour la non-violence, Lawyers for Social Responsibility, the national office of Operation Dismantle, and others, denouncing the harassment of the Peace Camp.

I urge every Canadian to take to the streets this weekend and say no to star wars and no to the nuclear arms race. We hope and pray that the Government is listening.

PROTECTION OF EMBASSIES

PINKERTON'S AGENCY—VALUE PLACED ON AGENT'S LIFE

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, Pinkerton's of Canada Limited has offered a modest $1,000 compensation payment to the family of Claude Brunelle, the security guard killed on duty last March 12 during the attack on the Turkish embassy in Ottawa.

As one of Canada's major security agency, Pinkerton's shows how little consideration it has for its employees and their families. It makes little sense to realize how such an important company as Pinkerton's rewards the devotion and dedication of its guards whose duties are just as dangerous as those of policemen. One would think that Pinkerton's practically reacts as a near-bankrupt company or as a business whose management has completely lost any sense of reality and of the real value of human life.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN MASSACRE

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today, April 24, 1985, is a special day of remembrance for the Armenian community. It is the seventieth anniversary of the commencement of the tragic events of 1915 in the Ottoman Empire. Canada sympathizes with all the victims of those events, indeed with all victims of armed conflict. We recognize that the Armenian community has made a vital and vibrant contribution to Canada's development.

Seventy years have now passed since those tragic events. Canada, of course, was not involved, except to open its doors to the unfortunate victims. We can now neither pass legal judgment on those events nor support territorial claims which might now be made. We can, however, express our deepest sympathy to all who suffered during the events of 1915.

Part of the compact between Canada and the victims we welcome has been that while Canada offers a free society as a place of refuge, violent protest in Canada will not be tolerated. Today, within the best spirit of our tradition, we have seen a peaceful demonstration of remembrance in Ottawa. I know that the great majority of members of the Armenian community object to terrorist tactics. As a Member who has many Armenian constituents, I would call upon their leaders to condemn such activities in the clearest and strongest terms. Let us work together to build a better future, and a better Canada where the rights of all are fully respected.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF ARMENIAN MASSACRE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, as has already been mentioned, today Canadian Armenians from across the nation have gathered on Parliament Hill. They are here to commemorate the seventieth anniversary of the Armenian genocide in which over 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children perished. I am sure that all Members of the House, and indeed all Canadians, abhor the violence that has marked world history. Events such as the Armenian genocide have mindlessly taken the lives of innocent victims.

Only one week ago Canada was proud to celebrate the entrenchment of Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Canada is now proudly regarded as a world leader in the areas of human and minority rights. Moreover, through our multicultural and immigration policies, Canada has made sincere attempts to treat all peoples and all minorities fairly, while at the same time reaching out with a compassionate hand.

In the coming weeks countries throughout the world will gather in Canada to discuss the subject of human rights. Not to acknowledge human rights abuses is virtually an admission that they are acceptable. As a participant in this conference, and as the host country, Canada has a tremendous responsibility to take a leadership role.

Today the Armenian commemoration serves to remind us all, in a profound way, of the importance of fulfilling our commitments to human and minority rights.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

WITHDRAWAL OF BOARD NOMINATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some embarrassment to defend the Hon. Minister of Energy (Miss Carney). She has been set adrift by her Cabinet colleagues while she is on a slow boat to China on government business. Let me explain how.

On Monday the Minister of Energy informed Dr. Ursula Franklin, a distinguished scientist at the University of Toronto, that she was appointed to the Atomic Energy Control Board. That is a nuclear watchdog agency of the Government of Canada. Dr. Franklin was contacted by Atomic Energy Control Board officials and was even briefed for a board meeting.

I must say that the Government took the wind right out of the Opposition's sails. We had been saying that the Government had carried political patronage to untold heights. Ministers were appointing every Tory bagman and advertising person to government jobs and contracts. Here was the appointment of someone who was a scientist, an environmentalist, and a well qualified person, to a board that had been under criticism for being very inactive. Alas for poor Pat Carney who has no clout in the Cabinet; alas for poor Dr. Franklin, because her appointment was revoked and shanghaied from her on Tuesday.

• (1410)

I am sending a postcard to the Minister of Energy (Miss Carney), who is in China, pointing out that the Cabinet has acted as the Energy Minister Control Board.

THE LATE FOSTER HEWITT

TRIBUTE TO PIONEER HOCKEY BROADCASTER

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to put on the record of the House a tribute to the late Foster Hewitt whose funeral was this morning. Although he did not play the game whose popularity he increased, he was "Mr. Hockey" to two generations of Canadians for whom

Saturday night was always more "live" because of his broadcasts.

To an impressive degree, those broadcasts went beyond sports and entertainment. They contributed to our consciousness as a people during years when we were still evolving from colony to nation. If hockey is our national sport, a major reason is the impact of Foster Hewitt himself. His breathless exclamation, "He shoots; he scores", has become part of our language.

But there are other reasons why he merits the flood of tributes which have poured out since his death. At a time when it is often difficult to distinguish between a hockey game and an alley fight, or even a Question Period, his speech and decorum exemplified what used to be called sportmanship.

Foster Hewitt belongs to all of Canada, but he was a lifelong resident of Metro Toronto. He spent his last years at the Providence Villa and Hospital in Scarborough West, and as its Member I am honoured to pay this brief tribute to him in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AID

NEPAL—CANADIAN GIFT OF MEDICAL TRAINING CENTRE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of spending most of last week in Nepal on behalf of the Hon. Minister of External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) responsible for the Canadian International Development Agency.

My role was to officiate, along with our ambassador to Nepal, Mr. Bill Warden, at the handing over ceremony to His Majesty's Government of the $4.4 million Dhanakuta Community Medical Auxiliary Training Centre and six outpost health centres. These projects will contribute significantly toward extending health services to all Nepalese by the year 2000.

It was not only refreshing to have witnessed the completion of a very successful CIDA project, but I was proud to have been received by such grateful hosts.

Our assistance to Nepal during the course of the last 15 years has been mainly in the areas of health care, surveying and mapping, water resource development, and civil aviation. The pride that the Nepalese have in our Twin Otters is a remarkable advertisement for a superb Canadian aircraft.

As I walked through some Nepalese villages at the lower reaches of the Himalayas, I witnessed the hunger, the poverty, the disease, and the unsanitary living conditions of many of their people, and I was reminded of the strengths of our country, and of the quality of life that the majority of Canadians enjoy.

Nepal looks upon Canada as a country of peace, as a friend, and as a generous supporter. We should all be grateful that we live in the most respected nation on earth.

AIR TRANSPORT

QUÉBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): In a report made public last week, Mr. Speaker, Montreal's Economic Development Board confirmed that the city's growth is due to the transport industry.

When it comes to air transport, however, the Conservative Government gives the Province of Quebec and Montreal arguments which the weekly Finance describes as being flimsy and malicious.

Among others, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Bouchard) has owned up to being incompetent in his attempt to justify his inefficiency in trying to keep in Montreal what the Province of Quebec may have left of the major air transport industry.

In his April 22, 1985 editorial, François Roberge concludes that, owing to the weakness of the Quebec caucus, Montreal is lagging far behind on many fronts.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the silent Quebec Conservative caucus to forget about shameless patronage and get down to brass tacks before it is too late.

INDUSTRY

GREAT LAKES FOREST PRODUCTS LIMITED

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's Globe and Mail Business Section reported that Great Lakes Forest Products Limited of Thunder Bay and Dryden hopes to get some relief on corporate taxation from the Government of Canada. This is not some impoverished company. Last year it had profits of $26.8 million. To date it has received $48 million in direct grants from the Ontario and Canadian Governments. This company already owes the Canadian taxpayers $125 million in deferred taxes.

• (1415)

Great Lakes had decided to invest $32 million in Canadian funds to build a pulp and paper mill in the United States that will ultimately lead to elimination of jobs in British Columbia. Great Lakes still has not compensated the natives of White Dog and Grassie for the destruction of their livelihood some ten years ago.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this company not only has no right to expect any further support from the taxpayers of Canada, but must be required to meet its commitments to Canadian society.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should call Mr. Charles Carter, President of Great Lakes Forest Products, 807-475-2110, and tell him that the answer is no, that Great Lakes has been at the trough once too often as far as we are concerned.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—APPLICATION TO MINISTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the current conflict of interest guidelines, guidelines that he admitted yesterday were in force. When they were put in force by the Prime Minister when he formed the Government, did he meet with his Ministers, either individually or collectively, to discuss the guidelines with them? Did he say to his Ministers that he expected the guidelines to be followed? Did he say to his Ministers that if they were not followed there would be sanctions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I cannot remember the exact sequence, Mr. Speaker, but I can give my right hon. friend the assurance that I did all of those things and conveyed to them, as he might properly expect, that Canadians want and will receive the highest standards from their public servants, particularly those to whom ministerial responsibility has been entrusted.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

GUIDELINES—THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I re-read the conflict of interest guidelines this morning, after listening very carefully, yesterday and the day before, to the answers given by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. The conflict of interest guidelines have been violated: I know it, the Prime Minister knows it, and the Minister of Finance knows it. My question is as follows: Has the Minister of Finance offered the Prime Minister his resignation? Has the Prime Minister met with the Minister to determine whether his judgment was sound enough to warrant that the Minister continues to work in his department?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no conflict of interest on the part of the Minister of Finance, whose professional reputation and integrity are well known in the House and throughout the country. There was no violation of the guidelines by the Minister, who today is behaving, as he always does, with great integrity and dignity.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister admmitted yesterday that the guidelines are in place. I read them to the House yesterday. It appears to us quite conclusively that the guidelines have been broken. I waited on Monday, and yesterday, and today, for some recognition on the part of the Government that bad judgment had been exercised by the Minister of Finance. But every answer that I have heard, particularly yesterday, just made the situation worse.

If the current conflict of interest guidelines in force mean anything at all, will the Prime Minister relieve the Minister of Finance of his responsibilities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the vast majority of Canadian citizens would agree on many things, but one is that no one has any lessons to learn in terms of probity and integrity from the Liberal Party.

Some Hon Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister of Finance is a man of unimpeachable integrity. He has at no time been in violation of the guidelines. The decision involved was taken by a Cabinet colleague in the exercise of his important responsibilities. That ultimate decision was exercised by public servants. I can say to my right hon. friend something which I am sure will not surprise him, because I know exactly the high regard in which he holds the Minister of Finance. I can tell him that we have absolute confidence in the integrity and probity of the Minister of Finance today and at all times.

● (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What childish prank are you going to pull today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister, in answering questions from Members on this side of the House, denied absolutely that there had been any breach of conflict of interest guidelines by the Minister of Finance with respect to preferential treatment, or the appearance of preferential treatment. What exactly did the Prime Minister mean yesterday when he said in response to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, as reported on page 4017 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend raises the question of appearance, with which we must deal. I acknowledge that.

The guidelines outlining conflict of interest provisions deal with both real conflict of interest, real preferential treatment given to friends or family members, and the appearance. The Prime Minister yesterday acknowledged at least the appearance. How can he stand in his place today and say there has been no breach of the conflict of interest guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Because, Mr. Speaker, I said no such thing. I agreed with my right hon. friend that the obligation is to avoid even the appearance of conflict. I acknowledged no such appearance of conflict which implies guilt by the Minister of Finance. I think that is a fundamental and a fair distinction which must be made.

The situation is not uncomplicated. We came in and we inherited from the previous Government a system of guidelines which we followed in the early months, which placed a specific responsibility on the Minister of Supply and Services that he exercised. In the pursuit of his mandate he determined that those guidelines were deficient, that they ought to be improved, and that the ultimate responsibility in such matters of contracts should rest with public servants. That is what we did. The guidelines are in the process of being so enhanced, and will be filed with the House. I see no impropriety at any time which involves the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: On the contrary, I see a man of great integrity and so recognized.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that his advertising management group is headed by two Tory campaign workers. He knows that, and the House knows it, but we are dealing with the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance himself has admitted in the House—and my supplementary question is directed to him—that he discussed this whole matter with his brother-in-law, Doug Lawson, and that having discussed it he decided that it was okay. I ask the Minister of Finance: would he behave in exactly the same way again should this kind of circumstance arise? Does he still think that it is okay?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That, Mr. Speaker, is a completely hypothetical question, but I will tell you that we acknowledge our obligation—and I have never tried to shirk it one bit—to have stringent and rigorous guidelines in the conduct of these matters, and we shall have them.

An Hon. Member: Read Hansard.

Mr. Mulroney: Well, you say, "Read Hansard". When the Liberal Party was up to here in Coalgate, its Members said that guidelines were only for guidance; where there were conflicts of interest coming out their ears, they said that guidelines were only for guidance. We say guidelines are for professional conduct and to assist the public, and to make sure the public trust is recognized and honoured at all times. The Minister of Finance has always upheld the public trust.

• (1425)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBILITY OF PATRONAGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the same subject. For a number of days we have been trying to obtain an explanation from the Government of a contract that was given to the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance. The Government has responded in the House, and elsewhere, by saying initially that it was simply the Opposition that was trying to make an issue of this kind of question.

Today the Prime Minister said something else to the press, and I want to quote him. After first blaming the press for raising the issue, he is reported to have said to a reporter: "Just because the Press Gallery in Ottawa decides there is an issue does not mean it's an issue in Canada." Will the Prime Minister explain what he means? Is he saying that questions about the possibility of patronage are serious matters only when they are raised about other Parties and other Governments, or will he admit that there are appropriate questions to raise about his own Government?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me just try to deal with the matter raised by my friend. My recollection is that in a scrum this morning, in engaging in what appeared to be a little bit of debate with a distinguished member of the Press Gallery, he indicated that this was a matter of national outrage, which is what he implied, and referred in rather disparaging terms to the reputation of the Minister of Finance. I said just because the Member for York South-Weston says this is a matter of national concern does not make it so, because the Canadian people know full well that the Minister of Finance is exactly what he appears to be, a man of overwhelming honesty and integrity. Everybody in Canada knows that. That was the context in which I said it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONTENT OF NEW GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister should know that it is not simply a matter of integrity. In other systems of government in the parliamentary system, men and women of integrity have in fact resigned when they made a mistake.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is not necessarily a question of integrity. Since the Prime Minister has come back to the very specific issue that is involved here, I want to ask him if the guidelines that he has promised to bring before the House, or at least announce in the House, would have made it impossible for a contract to be awarded to a close relative of a Minister of the Crown, i.e., would the kind of decision that was made in the case of the Minister of Finance be possible under the new guidelines that he is now going to bring in?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks (a) a hypothetical question ex post facto. I can assure my hon. friend that the guidelines that will be brought in, as they properly should be, will be the most rigorous and demanding ever placed before the House of Commons.

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's record is about 99 per cent solid in the House for not answering the question. Presuming that the new guidelines about contracts are going to be stringent enough to exclude the possibility of a future mistake of the kind that has just been made, instead of blaming the Opposition and blaming the press in a free society for doing their job, why does the Prime Minister not admit his mistake and bring in the guidelines right away?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, maybe I have a 99 per cent record, but we know why the Hon. Member is at 19 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You are wrong again.

Mr. Mulroney: Just keep it up. Every day you are sinking like a stone, and I love it. The only thing worse than a socialist is a sanctimonious socialist. The Canadians have had it up to the gills with you. The patronage practised in Manitoba and Saskatchewan makes Maurice Duplessis look like a choir boy.

● (1430)

In point of fact there was no conflict, but my response to my hon. friend is as well that new guidelines, more vigorous guidelines, and more demanding guidelines, are required and will be implemented. I think they will do honour to the House and will satisfy the very serious requirements of my hon. friend.

EMPLOYMENT OF DOUGLAS ROBSON

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have another question concerning the Wilson family compact and it is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Prime Minister told the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe the following, as reported on page 4019 of Hansard:

The Minister of Finance broke no guidelines and he broke no law.

Would the Minister now confirm what I know from speaking to the Deputy Registrar-General, which is that Mr. Robson never signed a conflict of interest document when he worked for the Government in 1979, nor did he sign one when he worked for the Government again in 1984, as he should have? Why did the Minister of Finance neglect to request from Mr. Robson a signature on a document regarding conflict of interest, before he hired him?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make one thing clear. The contract that has been referred to by many Members today was signed by the Minister of Supply and Services and not by myself. In response to the question regarding the conduct of Mr. Robson, he took an oath of secrecy back in 1979. That is the oath of secrecy under which he has been operating.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

LAWSON MURRAY COMPANY—ADJUDICATION OF CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Supply and Services concerning the Wilson family compact.

Yesterday, the Minister of Finance informed the House that he did not know whether Lawson Murray Limited had been awarded further contracts by the Government of Canada since September 4 of last year.

Could the Minister of Supply and Services now inform the House whether the Government has negotiated, either directly or indirectly, any further agreements or contracts with Lawson Murray since September 4 of last year?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, last fall the Bank of Canada asked my Department to supply an agency to carry on this program of advertising marketable government bonds. We selected from among the firms that we know, trust, and in which we have confidence, the firm of Lawson Murray to undertake work amounting to a total contract of about $200,000 for a fee of $30,000.

That firm replied to us on February 14 by way of letter saying that the Government has been wasting hundreds of thousands of dollars on this program, that the previous Government had been wasting all that money and that it was unnecessary. I think that that is laudable behaviour. I am very proud of the performance of Lawson Murray in this regard. I think I did an outstanding job in hiring that firm for the Government. I might say that there is an additional small contract we gave the firm in March, and any time I can give a contract to a company that will save the taxpayers half a million dollars a year, I am going to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNTENDERED CONTRACT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate for the relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefits from an untendered contract?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to explain to members of the New Democratic Party on at least five or six occasions the nature of the advertising agency business in this country. I repeat that we selected Lawson Murray because it is known to us—

An Hon. Member: It sure is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Absolutely. The firm is known to us. It has our trust because—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: —it is an expert in this field. The firm demonstrated the wisdom of our decision by coming up with savings of at least a half million dollars a year, and I repeat, I will always sign those kinds of contracts.

BENEFIT FROM CONTRACT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it the opinion of the Prime Minister that it is appropriate for the relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefit from an untendered contract with the Government?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we wanted—

Mr. Benjamin: We want Brian!

Mr. Andre: The guidelines indicate—

Mr. Deans: How about getting your boss to answer for a change?

Mr. Andre: Because—

Mr. Deans: Is he afraid to answer? Is he afraid of the answer?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the House would like to hear the answer, it will come to order.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Supply and Services I am responsible for contracting for some $7 billion worth of goods and services each year.

Mr. Deans: Then he should fire you.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: As the Minister responsible, it is up to me to ensure that all guidelines respecting conflict of interest are satisfied. I assured myself that all guidelines were satisfied. I repeat, I think it was a great contract. I would do it again tomorrow if the opportunity came up.

MINISTER'S CONVERSATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, the man the Prime Minister says has great and unimpeachable integrity. Yesterday the Prime Minister stated in the House that not only must Cabinet Ministers avoid conflicts of interest, they must avoid the appearance of conflicts of interest. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, first, whether or not he agrees with that statement, and second, after having discussed the contract with his brother-in-law before it was signed, why did he, as a man of integrity, not veto the contract and avoid any impression of a conflict of interest?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear. The contract was awarded before I spoke to my brother-in-law. He advised me after he got the business. He said that he did not think we needed to do this business and that he did not think it was a cost-effective use of funds. I asked him to give me his advice on this matter. He subsequently wrote to the Bank of Canada on February 11 indicating that this was not business the Government should be doing. On that basis we let the business lapse and, as my colleague has indicated, we have saved somewhere between $400,000 and $600,000 a year.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister continue to defend sleazy, slimy, Tory patronage when they campaigned so vigorously against patronage in the last election campaign? Let us be straight with the Canadian public. Given the fact that the contract went to the Finance Minister's brother-in-law, would the Prime Minister not agree that there is the appearance of a conflict of interest, or at least a very small appearance of a conflict of interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noticed one day that the Hon. Member was, (a) described as a member of the Liberal rat pack which, (b), often embarrassed the Leader of the Liberal Party. I can see why The Toronto Star for once was right on both counts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Very few Members have left such a forgettable impression upon this place as has the Hon. Member. When compared with the remarkable accomplishments and universal acclaim of the reputation of the Hon. Minister of Finance, I can say without hesitation or fear of contradiction that the Canadian people very much support the integrity of the Minister of Finance because they know it is there 100 per cent.

RECEIPT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that when the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain asked a supplementary question of the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister was rising to answer the question when the Minister of Supply and Services rose. I would like to give the Prime Minister another opportunity to answer the question. Does the Prime Minister think it is appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefits from an untendered contract?

● (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to my erstwhile friend, the Leader of the NDP, who is probably yours, too, the guidelines were being tightened up, and we are very much in need of them in the conduct of public life.

Mr. Benjamin: Is it appropriate?

Mr. Mulroney: No, in a perfect world—and, of course, the NDP believes that things are always perfect—there would not be the slightest problem at any time. I will acknowledge that from time to time administrative difficulties arise, particularly when a new Government comes in and inherits guidelines, and new situations come up. I will acknowledge that everything is not perfect. But we conducted ourselves honourably and we are bringing in new guidelines to improve upon that. I would hope that would satisfy my hon. friend.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister once again does he think it is appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefits from an untendered contract. If he does not think it is appropriate, and if that was possible under the old guidelines but not under the new guidelines, then why did he not order his Cabinet to behave in that way? Why does the Minister of Supply and Services keep insisting that he is happy with everything that happened in accordance with the old guidelines, if the Prime Minister feels that there is a need for new ones?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend perhaps is not making the essential distinction between the two sets of guidelines to which reference has been made. One was raised by my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, the day after we came in, after I had conveyed to them the guidelines for the conduct of individuals as Cabinet Ministers and Ministers of the Crown. I then assigned, in writing, the Deputy Prime Minister to review all of the guidelines with regard to Ministers of the Crown and their conduct, with a view to enhancing them and tightening them up. The Deputy Prime Minister has done that, and those will be filed with you very shortly.

With regard to the inheritance which we received, and the guidelines with respect to the tendering apparatus for the awarding of public contracts, the Minister of Supply and Services took the decision independent of me or any other Minister, according to objective criteria. He inserted public servants into that decision-making process.

In both cases there was no violation of any guideline at any time. What we have done is enhanced the severity, properly, of both sets of guidelines to ensure that the Canadian people are well served by their public servants.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OFFER RESIGNATION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I have been observing the situation for the last three days very carefully—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —and I know how important it is for the Minister of Finance to be above reproach.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance will bring down a Budget in a month, and in view of the fact that everyone recognizes that we are not questioning the integrity of the Minister of Finance but his judgment—he made an error in judgment in letting the contract go to his brother-in-law and his former assistant—will the Minister of Finance do what he should do under the circumstances, and offer his resignation, to relieve the Prime Minister of having to defend him on a daily basis in the House?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, because of the premise of the question from the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, I will repeat what my colleague has said again and again, and which I have also stated in the House. The contract in question was let by me, by my Department. It had nothing to do with the Minister of Finance. It was let by my Department. If anybody has a conflict of interest it has to be me. Again, the contract ended up saving the taxpayers a ton of money, and I am proud of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESIGNATION SOUGHT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, as the Ministry of Finance was the client of the Department of Supply and Services, and as it is the responsibility of the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could everybody in the House please listen to the question? Instead of yelling back and forth it would make things so much simpler.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as it was a contract for the benefit of the Ministry of Finance, will the Hon. Minister of Finance do what we expect from the Minister of Finance under the circumstances in order to clear the air completely, and ensure that the Minister of Finance who will present the next Budget will not have his name being questioned in the House of Commons and in the nation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I should not have to say this to a former Minister of Finance, but what we are talking about is the Bank of Canada, a different institution, not the Department of Finance. The Bank's office is in a different location. It has its own staff, separate from the staff of the Department of Finance. The Bank called us and said it needed an agency to undertake a program. We hired the agency. The wisdom of our decision is demonstrated by the fact that we are saving hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY IF MEASURES TAKEN TO RECOVER EXCESS PAYMENTS TO CERTAIN COMPANIES

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, could we perhaps have two minutes of minding the business at hand? My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Considering the fact that according to the Auditor General's report last December, the then Minister of Transport, in April 1983, gave VIA Rail $75 million more than was budgeted and that in 1981, the Minister did the same for Canadian National to the tune of $46.5 million, could the Minister inform the House whether he has taken steps or intends to take steps to recover the excess payments made by the former Liberal Government? Yes, you guys over there!

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. colleague, first, this particular issue arises from some very legitimate differences of opinion in accounting practices. Second, it may very well have to do with the disposition of the thirteenth and fourteenth billing, which occurred as a result of the kind of open-ended contractual arrangements which VIA Rail has had with the two operating railway companies. Hopefully, that is being cleared up by the establishment of a new costing arrangement. With respect to the specific question regarding accounting practices, that is also a matter which is being looked at. Hopefully, it will be resolved satisfactorily.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A few minutes ago the Minister of Supply and Services said, in reply to a question, that if he had to make the decision which was made, in terms of the contract which went to the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance, he would do it again. After that the Prime Minister acknowledged that, perhaps, the Government had made a mistake in this instance. My question to the Prime Minister is simply—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Stick to the truth.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, the Prime Minister did not acknowledge that he made a mistake. I want clarification from the Prime Minister.

In light of what the Minister of Supply and Services said, that the same decision would be made again, will the Prime Minister assure the House that a decision to award a contract to a relative of a Minister of the Crown, without a tender, will not be made again by this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That is like the clarity I heard on the news at noon on the CBC, when the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam said that the NDP is out of NATO, and the NDP Leader said: "We're in". That is the same kind of clarity and reason.

I tried to respond to my hon. friend. We inherited two sets of guidelines, one for Cabinet Ministers, which is being approved. I do not think it is appropriate for me to respond to nor is it appropriate for the Hon. Member to ask a hypothetical question. All I can do is tell him that we are committed to upholding the highest possible standards of human conduct in the exercise of a public trust. We have two sets of guidelines, and in both cases we are tightening up and enhancing them to the credit of the Government and to the credit of the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister was not hypothetical. It was straightforward and clear. I am looking for a policy decision from the Government. Will he assure the House that the newly-elected Conservative Government will not make any decision in the future which will give a contract on an untendered bid to a close relative of a Minister of the Crown? It is very clear. Can we get a yes or no answer?

● (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think there is a contradiction in the Hon. Member's suggestion of an untendered bid. I just want to be absolutely clear. I see the point that the Hon. Member is trying to bring forward, and I agree with him. I agree very much that the conflict of interest regulations should be very severe in regard to all of our associations and all of our families. I accept that, and always have, and said it right from the beginning. What I do not accept, and what I reject with the greatest of vigour, is the implication that any person, including someone sitting in the back benches of the Liberal Party, can have the temerity and impunity to try to slander the integrity of a most honourable Canadian. That I am not going to put up with.

Mr. Deans: We are not doing that.

Mr. Mulroney: In fairness, I will agree with the Hon. Member; I limited my comments to that great Canadian. But I responded fully to your concerns and I think the Member will be well pleased with the severity of the regulations as brought in.

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to ask him whether he feels the conflict of interest guidelines apply to him, and if he can tell us whether immediately upon assuming the Prime Ministership of this country he resigned all of his corporate directorships?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Long before that.

LABSEA INCORPORATED DIRECTORSHIP

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Well, can the Prime Minister tell this House why it took him almost two and a half months after he assumed the Prime Ministership of this country to resign from Labsea Incorporated, a company in which he shared the directorship with his great and good friend Frank Moores?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will be happy to. I resigned from all of the publicly and privately held companies with which I was associated long before becoming Prime Minister. It may be that there were either charitable organizations or universities, or some private companies in which I would have had either a minor interest, or a directorship on a hospital board, or some such thing like that. I will be happy to check the record. My principle, which I set out and which I followed, was to resign absolutely all of my business holdings. If there is an exception to that, I can assure you that, (a), it would have been inadvertent and, (b), it would have been of no profit to me.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

TRANSPORTATION REQUIREMENTS—RATUSHNY REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can he report to the House on the progress being made with respect to the implementation of the Ratushny report which deals with the transportation requirements of handicapped Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the House that the recommendations brought down by Professor Ratushny were excellent recommendations. I should also advise the House that we have been working very closely with the Advisory Committee on the Handicapped. It would be my intention within the next couple of weeks or so to announce a plan for the implementation of the recommendations which have been brought forward by Professor Ratushny, and also the recommendations brought forward by the Advisory Committee on the Handicapped. I should say as well that we will be designating the Minister of State for Transport as responsible Minister for all matters relating to accessibility for handicapped and senior citizens.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

TORONTO RENTAL INCREASES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour, who is also responsible for CMHC. On April 16 I asked him why his Department was planning to increase rents in CMHC controlled apartments by in excess of 10 per cent, including the Main Square apartment complex in Toronto. The Minister replied that the present Government was raising the rent in order to recover from the previous administration's six and five program.

Does the Government not realize that many of the individuals in those buildings were already victimized by the previous administration's six and five program? Why are the Government and the Minister trying to stick it to these people again? How many other groups are going to be victims of this kind of thing?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain to the Hon. Member once again that the rent increases are made subject to the guidelines of the Rent Review Board in the Province of Ontario and can be substantiated before that board. The Hon. Member should also be made aware that in the Main Square project some 25 per cent of the units are rent geared to income, and if by increasing the rents some of those individuals would have difficulty paying, they may apply for rent geared to income.

However, I think the Hon. Member would have to agree that individuals who have the ability to pay should pay, so that we can use scarce dollars to subsidize those who need assistance. I would think that would be something that this Government and he would support.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I wrote to the Minister some weeks ago and I am still waiting for a reply on this issue. However, I have in my hand a letter he sent to the local Progressive Conservative candidate in Beaches-Woodbine in which the Minister says the opposite to what he has just told the House. He knows that CMHC does not have to go before the Rent Review Board in Ontario.

Is the Minister advocating to the Public Service groups, the superannuates, and everyone else who lost income under the six and five program, that they should now come after the Minister to make up their losses?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked a question in the House earlier on Main Square, and I replied in the House. The Hon. Member has applied to bring his question up on the adjournment debate and I hope that debate can come forward. I would reiterate that CMHC rent increases would relate to the very same guidelines, and the Corporation would be in a position to substantiate them if it were called to appear before the Rent Review Board. That is what I said in my first reply and that will be the course that CMHC will follow. I think the Hon. Member should appreciate that because it is not bound by law, as he knows, to appear before or abide by the Board.

Mr. Young: Why don't you do it?

Mr. McKnight: We are substantiating the increases with reference to the same guidelines that the Ontario Rent Review Board would require.

TRANSPORT

CONSTRUCTION OF VIA RAIL MAINTENANCE PLANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he realizes that since last September, several thousand jobs depending either directly or indirectly on the transportation industry have been lost in the Montreal area. Since the Minister will soon be making a speech in Montreal within the next few days I am told will he take advantage of this opportunity to give the go ahead for construction on the VIA Rail maintenance centre that would create some badly needed jobs in the Montreal area?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member for Papineau that we are aware of the economic situation in the City of Montreal. However, I would like to correct the impression the Hon. Member is trying to give the House in claiming that the maintenance centre—our decision is to be taken at a later date, depending, as we have always said, on our financial resources—would necessarily be a centre to create jobs. I may remind the Hon. Member that since maintenance is currently being carried out by Canadian National, transferring all the maintenance now being done by CN to a hypothetical maintenance centre would represent a considerable loss of jobs. So this is a case where it is more a matter of transferring jobs than creating new ones. That is the context in which we are weighing various possibilities. Now I am ready for another question.

TRANSPORT INDUSTRY'S FRAGILITY IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I would like to ask the Minister whether he is aware of the fact that a report by the economic expansion office of the Montreal Urban Community has revealed that the transportation industry in Montreal is showing signs of being considerably weakened, and however the Minister would like to explain this, I would like to know what his Government intends to do to create jobs in the transportation industry in Montreal.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has a marvelous capacity for forgetting that he was in power for 20 years before September 4.

The situation in Montreal today did not come into being on September 4. You had any number of opportunities to prevent what is happening now and you did nothing, absolutely nothing. Mr. Speaker, that is the situation in Montreal and it all happened under the Liberal regime. Instead of creating a debt of $35 billion, you should have had some concern for what was happening in Quebec.

IMMIGRATION

RESIGNATION OF REVIEW COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, today we have been hearing about guidelines. There are guidelines in immigration too. It seems that in immigration the jungle guidelines are often more dangerous than the predators. In fact we read that the chairman of the Minister's review committee for long-term illegal migrants is both guide and predator.

In view of today's Globe and Mail report of Mr. Greenbaum's conflicting role, can we expect the Minister of Employment and Immigration to replace him immediately?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I read The Globe and Mail story this morning. I can tell the Hon. Member, and other Members of the House, that I discussed this matter with Mr. Greenbaum, and he has since submitted his resignation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: While I have received assurances from Mr. Greenbaum that there was no impropriety in any of his actions, he and I nevertheless felt that, because this is a position which is of a quasi-judicial nature and any suggestion or hint of impropriety would undermine the confidence of that process, it would therefore be better if he were to submit his resignation.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

AWARD OF ADVERTISING CONTRACT

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice of an application under Standing Order 30 from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 30 I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), that the House adjourn for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the advertising contract awarded without tender to a company headed by a relative of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the failure of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to enforce conflict of interest guidelines in the aforementioned matter and other circumstances related to this case.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) gave me notice of his intention to request an emergency debate under Standing Order 30. As Members know, there are a number of tests which the Chair is required to apply to an application under Standing Order 30.

First, the matter proposed to be discussed must be a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. As our precedents confirm, not only must the matter be a genuine emergency, there must be an urgent need to debate it with a minimum of delay in the national interest. The Chair must also take into account whether an early opportunity to debate the issue is likely to occur. We are now into the third Supply period and only three of the allotted days have so far been used. The Opposition has the option of choosing this subject as their subject of debate for the next allotted day.

Let me make it clear to the Hon. Member that it is clear to me that the matter is important which is, in my view, why it has loomed so large during the Question Period for the past few days. However, I am not persuaded that it is related to a genuine emergency as contemplated by Standing Order 30. I am therefore unable to find that the request fulfils the requirements of Standing Order 30.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend on Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other Acts and to make other consequential amendments, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are two items I would like to raise in terms of the business of the House this afternoon dealing with the particular Bill which has now been called for consideration by the House. First, there have been consultations between the Parties and I believe there will be a disposition to deal with report stage and third reading of this Bill today by unanimous consent.

The second point is to address the question of admissibility, if I might, with respect to some of the motions put forward at report stage.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not the only Member with that interest. There are 16 motions on the Notice Paper at the report stage in amendment to Bill C-18, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1985. I intend to hear procedural arguments in a minute.

Motions Nos. 1 to 4 are identical. These motions present some procedural difficulty to the Chair in that they seem to go beyond the scope of the Bill and appear to amend the parent Act.

Motions Nos. 5 to 8 are also identical. These motions will be debated together and a vote on any one of these motions will dispose of the other three.

Motions Nos. 9 to 12 are identical and again give the Chair some procedural difficulty in that they also appear to go beyond the scope of the Bill and attempt to amend other statutes not included in Bill C-18.

Motions Nos. 13 to 16 are identical and should be debated together. Again, a vote on any of these motions will dispose of the other three motions.

I am prepared to hear procedural arguments from Hon. Members on the acceptability of Motions Nos. 1 to 4 and 9 to 12, should they wish to do so. Perhaps, for the sake of convenience, I could hear them in the order in which I was given notice of their intention to proceed. I will therefore start with the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

• (1510)

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, before making arguments on the motions perhaps I could indicate our agreement with the Government House Leader as to our willingness to debate all stages this afternoon.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party I am also pleased to indicate that we are prepared to debate both report stage and third reading this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should indicate for the record that there is agreement by unanimous consent that the matter will proceed through all stages today.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) on a procedural issue.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I might indicate at this time that I will make my arguments relating to all of the motions that you have referred to, which I think will be of assistance to the Chair.

These are a set of amendments which would make it possible for war criminals residing in Canada to be prosecuted under Canadian law, within Canada, for crimes to be defined by the amendments that were committed in other countries, particularly during the Second World War, according to some of the submissions we have had.

I submit that this motion and the others are within the scope of and relevant to the subject matter of subclause 5(3), and therefore of Clause 5 and therefore of the Bill, and is therefore admissible.

Bill C-18 deals with over 200 subject matters which include not only drunk driving, computer crime, and telewarrants, but murder, perjury, lotteries, threats, forcible entry, weapons, wiretaps and a host of other topics. It is a very heterogeneous Bill. It does not deal with the entire criminal law but with a great part of the criminal law.

The effect of Clause 5 of Bill C-18 is narrower. It amends Section 6 of the Criminal Code which sets out and deals with a number of specified crimes committed outside Canada which can be tried in Canada, although they are extraterritorial. In particular, these include air piracy and the murder of diplomats.

Subclause 5(3) of Bill C-18 does yet a narrower set of things. It amends Section 6 of the Code to add to it two new extraterritorial offences—hostage taking and the diversion of nuclear material—to those which can be tried in Canada by virtue of Section 6.

The present motion seeks to amend subclause 5(3) to add two more crimes abroad to those to be added to Section 6—namely war crimes and crimes against humanity, including but not limited to those of the Second World War—with the amendment being closely modelled on the hostage taking and nuclear material provisions, and also drawing wording and concepts from the Charter of Rights and the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal.

The scope and subject matter of a clause or subclause is not the same thing as the text of the clause or subclause. If it were, no amendment would ever be possible.

There are at least five precedents for these motions being admissible. First, in 1977, in Bill C-51, the Bill proposed to add additional crimes to the list of crimes that were contained in Section 178.1 of the Criminal Code, which sets out the crimes whose investigation can justify an application to wire tap.

In the committee, amendments were accepted and adopted to add additional crimes to the list of crimes being added to that list. The reference is Justice Committee proceedings, 1977, issue 23.

Second, in 1976, in Bill C-84, the Bill to abolish capital punishment, the Bill set out which murders would be considered first degree murders. At report stage a motion by the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) was ruled to be in order and was adopted, to add an additional item to the list of crimes which are first degree murder, namely a murder committed by a person already convicted of a murder. The reference is House of Commons Debates, 1976, pages 15091-15093 and 15195-15196.

Third, in 1954, at the adoption of what is basically our present Criminal Code, in Bill C-7, the Bill contained a provision, Clause 400, which is now subsection 415(1) of the Code, sidenoted "Printing circulars, etc., in likeness of notes", bank notes. In the Senate, at Government request, subsections (2) and (3) were added, creating and limiting a separate but not dissimilar offence sidenoted "Printing anything in likeness of bank note, etc." The reference is House of Commons Debates, 1953-54, pages 3918-3920.

Fourth, in the very committee proceedings which dealt with the present Bill, Bill C-18, Clause 10 proposed to amend Section 73 of the Criminal Code which deals with forcible entry and forcible detainer of real property. In the Code, Section 73 defines forcible entry and forcible detainer and Section 74 makes them each an indictable offence subject to two years imprisonment.

The committee, no doubt correctly, considered Clause 10 to open up the law of forcible entry and detainer to amendment and further amendment, to the point where our committee adopted a new Clause 11, changing them from purely indictable offences to offences punishable either on indictment or on summary conviction. In other words, hybrid offences. That is a provision that was not contained in the original Bill. The reference to that is our meeting of April 15, 1985, at page 461.

Fifth, again in the present Bill C-18, Clause 137 amends Section 605 of the Code to provide a Crown appeal against, among other things, a stay of proceedings in a case by indictment. Our committee adopted a new Clause 181 to amend Section 748 of the Code which was not amended by the original Bill, to provide a similar Crown appeal against a stay of proceedings in summary conviction cases. Again, a whole area of law, Crown appeals against stays of proceedings, was open to amendment. The reference there is Bill C-18, first reading version, and Votes and Proceedings, April 15, 1985, at page 465.

I submit that all of the foregoing precedents argue that the war crime amendments presently before us should be admissible.

Subclause 5(3) does not simply add hostage taking and nuclear material diversion to Section 6. Rather, it opens Section 6 to amendments by the addition of whatever additional crimes, outside Canada, Parliament may choose to now make triable inside Canada by adding them to that list. It does not create new crimes; it just alters the consequences of existing crimes and that is the proposal of this motion.

I submit that in cases of doubt, motions ought to be ruled in order rather than out of order, to permit debate.

Finally, if you do not agree with these submissions, I would ask that you seek unanimous consent, as was done in some of the cases I have referred to, to make it possible that these important amendments be added to the Criminal Code at this time.

Mr. Speyer: Point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will begin and I know the Parliamentary Secretary wishes to make a contribution.

Mr. Speaker: Would you prefer that I hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) first?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is fine.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because many of the points I was going to make with respect to admissibility have been made by my hon. friend, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). I would only underscore the fact that the motions which we are now dealing with, which are four identical motions, would not change the essential thrust of Clause 5, the relevant clause. Clause 5 already makes reference within the four corners of the clause to a number of crimes which did not in fact occur within Canada. This includes the whole question of hostage taking and the diversion of nuclear materials. These are being added for the first time.

If the purpose of the amendment was to add to Clause 5 a matter which was not considered criminal in Canada, then certainly I would agree that we would be going beyond the scope of Clause 5. Instead, what is being proposed here in these amendments is that a provision be added dealing with the subject of war crimes.

There is no question that war crimes are recognized in this country as being crimes and as always having been crimes. The Constitution Committee, of which I had the honour to be a member, and I know the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was a member as well, unanimously supported an amendment to Section 11 of the Charter of Rights which makes it very clear that should Parliament wish to act to make provision for trials in Canada of war crimes, that would not in any way offend the provisions of the Charter of Rights with respect to retroactivity.

I want to remind the House that on this question of trials within Canada for individuals who are suspected of having committed crimes against humanity, war crimes, this is not the first time that this issue has been raised either in the House or in committee. I recall vividly questioning the Liberal Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for Shawinigan (Mr. Chrétien), and questioning the former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), on this very point and being told in no uncertain terms that it was the policy of the Liberal Government not to permit trials in Canada of suspected war criminals. I might say that I find it passing strange to find the Member for York Centre in his new manisfestation standing up before the House and suggesting that we supported an amendment which would permit such trials.

Dealing specifically with the question of admissibility of this motion, I want to underscore the fact that once again it is within the broad framework of Clause 5. It does not make a change that is fundamentally different. My colleague from York Centre has already cited one particular precedent on this matter. I would urge Parliament to move forward in order that those individuals who for one reason or another cannot be extradited to other countries be tried in Canada.

The admissibility of this motion, which is the matter to which I am addressing my remarks at this point, while it may be open to some debate and some discussion, Your Honour might very well agree having heard the persuasive arguments on this point and subject to what my ditinguished colleague, the Government House Leader, will say, there does exist sufficient doubt that this matter should be put to the House for substantive debate. In the unlikely possibility that the Government House Leader is not prepared to support that particular suggestion, I urge the Speaker—and I know it is not up to the House Leader—to be persuaded by what will hopefully be unanimous sentiments in the House to reconsider. But if that is not the case, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to move a motion seeking unanimous consent to permit this particular matter to be debated.

Mr. Speaker: Further procedural arguments? The President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): With great difficulty I will attempt to deal exclusively with the procedural part of the matter. Some elements of policy have entered into these arguments but I will deal with the procedure exclusively. I think that is precisely what we are required to do at this time.

As you have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, Motions Nos. 1 to 4 in my humble submission seek to introduce a new class of offences into the Criminal Code which class is clearly not referred to in the long title of the Bill as passed at second reading stage. The Bill as passed did not deal with "war crimes" and hence these proposed motions, all of which are identical, clearly are contrary to our practices as set forth in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1), which reads:

An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the Bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived.

And this was given ample support by Erskine May's Twentieth Edition at page 555, which reads:

An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the Bill or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I think there are serious grounds for doubting whether these amendments are relevant to the clause which they seek to amend.

Motions 9 through 12 appear to be attempting to amend the Fugitive Offenders Act and the Extradition Act which are not now before the House. Such amendments in my submission, are out of order inasmuch as they are contrary to the provisions of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citation 773(8)(a), which reads:

An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee.

You will, of course, be aware that the rules which apply to the admissibility of an amendment in committee apply equally at the report stage, Mr. Speaker. I would refer you to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 792, which reads:

The moving of motions in amendment to a public Bill at the report stage is governed by the practice or tradition which has developed whereby only the same class of amendments which were moved at the committee stage may be moved at the report stage.

I may say that I make this argument on the basis of the procedural argument. It has nothing whatsoever to do with a question of policy. Allusion has been made by both the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), whose constituency I have visited on a number of occasions—

Mr. Robinson: You are welcome back.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —in support of the Hon. Member to make sure that he returns. I simply say, Mr. Speaker, that, as you know, if unanimous consent is sought this Government has taken early and strong initiatives in terms of this whole question of resolving the matter of war criminals in Canada and war criminals. We have set up a commission headed by the distinguished jurist, Mr. Justice Deschenes. I think from that point of view you will understand why we think that excellent work which has already commenced must be carried on. Accordingly, it would not only be inappropriate but presumptuous of us to make a decision on this basis with respect to a most important issue. I share the recollection of the Hon. Member for Burnaby in questioning the Hon. Member for York Centre when he was Solicitor General and I recall very clearly the position he took as part of the three-person committee of Cabinet with respect to this issue in which he indicated that retroactivity was not acceptable to him at that time. I say that with the greatest respect to the Hon. Member and I think we want to have this matter dealt with by the commission. Accordingly I do not think that unanimous consent would be forthcoming.

Mr. Speyer: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) first.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, reference has been made to decisions in which the Members who have spoken indicated that I participated. I want to indicate to them that there was a considerable development of policy during the period I was Solicitor General and that development of policy was in the direction of taking over firmer action against war criminals in Canada.

I recall earlier opinions to the effect that nothing could be done, including extradition, issued by former Governments. These were changed in the early years by bringing arguments to the attention of law officers of the Crown. I feel at this time that there is a sufficient development of legal opinion to justify—

Mr. Speaker: I have allowed the Hon. Member to speak for an obvious reason, which was that somehow matters of debate entered into a matter of procedural argument. I cannot imagine how that would be possible here in this sort of Chamber.

Further procedural argument? The Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer).

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of your remarks you seemed to indicate a distinction between the different groupings. Indeed, arguments were made by the official critic for the Liberal Party and for the New Democratic Party. All of these groupings were dealt with together. My friend, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), spoke with respect to the first grouping of four. That was really the core of the amendments dealing with war crimes.

The other following three groupings are derivatives of the first one. No individual argument has been made yet to the points that you raise, indirectly or by implication, with respect to the second grouping, namely Motions 5 through 8 and also Motions Nos. 12 to 15. I would like to have an opportunity to debate those particular motions at the appropriate time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's argument to some degree is well founded. I indicated that I was prepared to hear the admissibility issues with regard to Motions Nos. 1 to 4 and Motions Nos. 9 to 12 at the same time. As far as I am concerned, I have heard the arguments with regard to the matters I have raised and I am now prepared to rule.

• (1530)

I have sympathy to some degree for the arguments being made by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). The question the Speaker has to consider—and I am now indulging in a minor obiter dictum—is: When is an amendment an amendment and when is it a subamendment? In my judgment, from what I have seen, having read the matter, I think it is clear that the citation to which the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) referred in terms of Beauchesne does apply. What in fact is being attempted here is to introduce measures, however legitimate they are in the minds of many Members, which go beyond the original scope of the Bill and therefore must be ruled out of order.

If I may make one small comment on the references the Hon. Member made, particularly the references to what was already done by the committee itself, the Chair has not been asked to comment, will not comment and does not comment on decisions by the committee. However, I think the Hon. Member knows that such a decision by the committee would not represent a precedent or anything that would bind the Chair. I understand the purpose of the introduction of those points, but it is certainly not clear that what the committee did would bind the House or should bind me. If anything, in precedent terms, it would go the other way around. I think the Hon. Member knows that. Therefore, I will rule out Motions Nos. 1 to 4 and Motions Nos. 9 to 12 as being, in my view, out of order.

I must also deal with the question of the request for unanimous consent. As the Hon. Member knows, we do many things here by unanimous consent. They are those things that we cannot otherwise do, and we do them by unanimous consent here in order to be more expeditious. Normally, for instance, we may, as we have indicated today, notwithstanding the general rules about when things may be done, choose by unanimous consent to go through all three readings. However, what is out of order is out of order. The Speaker is in a difficult situation, appreciating what the Hon. Member wants and understanding the seriousness of his concern. The Chair must say that a request to try to make something which is out of order in order by unanimous consent cannot be accepted by the Chair on the simple basis that it is either in order or it is out of order. Something cannot be made to be in order by a decision of the House.

The argument has always been that the House thinks it has the right to waive all its rules by unanimous consent at any time. It does have the right to do some things by unanimous consent which it would not otherwise do. It can decide to do a Bill in one day as opposed to in three sittings, but I cannot accept the request for unanimous consent. I say that notwithstanding that the Hon. President of the Privy Council has already indicated that consent would not be forthcoming.

I am not by this comment changing what the practical effect would be. I am really wanting to give notice for future attempts to use unanimous consent. It is reasonable to do things we otherwise cannot do and to expedite them through the procedure of unanimous consent, but clearly it would be an offence to the House to ask, in a sense by unanimous consent, to do something which cannot be done because the Chair must find it out of order.

If I may be perhaps a little more explicit, it comes close to suggesting that the House have a procedure to overturn a ruling of the Chair. If that is what the House wishes to have, if it wishes to have that power, the House has a different method, that is, amending its Standing Orders through the reform committee. Those are my views on both the amendment and the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am not in any way questioning the Speaker's ruling with respect to the question of seeking unanimous consent. I would just, however, seek clarification of the Speaker's ruling in light of its serious implications. I think the Speaker recognizes that the House has certainly traditionally understood that effectively we can take a decision on just about any question as long as we do it by unanimous consent. I wonder if the Speaker would elaborate or clarify whether the Speaker is in fact suggesting that it is only in matters of time, where there are requirements with respect to time—and the Speaker spoke about expediting certain matters—as opposed to matters of substance and substantial questions of order. Is it that distinction which the Speaker is making, that the House can in fact give unanimous consent to in effect not observe procedural requirements with respect to time? Perhaps the Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: No, the Hon. Member will know why I cannot stand here and indulge in a long clarification at this point. He must also understand that what I am trying to say is that what the House cannot do, it cannot do by unanimous consent. In other words, the request for the amendment is out of order, as I have said and I have ruled. It is out of order whether it is moved by the President of the Privy Council personally. It is out of order if it is moved. It therefore cannot be introduced by unanimous consent because it is ab initio out of order and cannot be made in order by a decision to make it in order. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point to indicate that I understand what you have said. I think there is probably a sense, as I understand it, in the House that one does not try to do what is illegal by unanimous consent. I think that principle would be accepted by everyone here. On the other hand, when the House of Commons operates by unanimous consent, in many instances it has the effect of setting aside a Standing Order. I just did not want to get ourselves into a position where we were tying our hands with respect to doing something which has the unanimous consent of all Members of the House and is in the interests of not only this institution but of our country. I do not want to put Your Honour in a position of having to explain your ruling, by any means. However, I simply thought it would be appropriate at this time for me to ensure that we in the House understood each other and that there was in fact a clear understanding that unanimous consent very often is a matter whereby Standing Orders are set aside by virtue of that act.

Mr. Speaker: The point I am trying to make to the House is that the House must also know there are matters which cannot simply be done by consent. I think logic makes that clear. I just wanted to use this opportunity, since it was clear that there would not be consent anyway, to put that on the record; it seemed like a good time.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, with respect, it is not clear to me at all. Is the Speaker saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Then the Hon. Member might come to see me in chambers and I will try to explain it.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a consequence of your ruling, the substance of the war crimes amendments which are being proposed in the different groupings is derivative and makes no sense.

Mr. Speaker: Could the Hon. Member please tell me to what amendments he is referring?

Mr. Speyer: The other motions—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is aware that Motions Nos. 1 to 4 and Motions Nos. 9 to 12 have been ruled out or order.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, you have ruled Motions Nos. 1 to 4 out of order, if I understood your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: And the other four.

Mr. Speyer: And the other four.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member is now making a case that Motions Nos. 5 to 8 ought to be ruled out of order as well?

Mr. Speyer: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty. Shall we move back to Motions Nos. 5 to 8? I have already ruled them in.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have the opportunity of making my argument. I asked for the opportunity to make an argument. I understood that what we were doing initially was debating in groups Motions No. 1 to 4, Nos. 5 to 8, Nos. 9 to 12 and Nos. 13 to 15 and there were different considerations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What I indicated in the beginning was that I had procedural difficulties with Nos. 1 through 4 and Nos. 9 through 12, that I found Nos. 5 to 8 in order. I indicated I would hear procedural argument on the matters that I thought were out of order. Is the Hon. Member now asking me to go back and hear the admissibility question on Nos. 5 to 8, because if he is doing that, I will be happy—

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I asked for it initially. I had understood that you were going to—

Mr. Speaker: With respect, I did indicate that I thought Nos. 5 to 8 were in order. I saw the Member rise to deal with the question that I asked on Nos. 9 to 12. The "blues" will bear me out. If the Member is now wanting to revert to Nos. 5 to 8, I will be perfectly happy to hear him on Nos. 5 to 8. Can I now hear him on Nos. 5 to 8?

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order I asked for the opportunity, and I thought that it was given, to debate all procedural matters that were relevant to the motions that are on hand. My understanding was that pursuant to my request, I was going to have that opportunity to debate Nos. 5 to 8.

I make the first point, the threshold point that the core of Motions Nos. 1 to 4 goes to setting up a new offence that deals with the prosecution of Nazi war criminals retrospectively. Your Honour has ruled that to be out of order. That is Motions Nos. 1 to 4.

From Motions Nos. 5 through to the end of the motions, No. 15, they are totally derivative of the first four and make no sense whatsoever. I think probably the critic for the Liberal Party would agree with that. In other words, having ruled out of order Nos. 1 to 4, the rest of the motions make absolutely no sense on their face. Second, even if we can deal specifically with respect to Motions Nos. 5 through 8, Motions Nos. 5 through 8 say:

> That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 2 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:
> "Canada.
> (4.1) For greater certainty, it is hereby declared that a person who has been found guilty in absentia outside Canada, but who has not yet been punished, shall not be entitled to plead autrefois convict on account of that finding of guilt."

That is what Motions Nos. 5 through 8 say. In terms of the Bill itself, I am at page 8, line 36, and I quote:

> Where a person is alleged to have committed an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of this section—

I ask that you pay particular attention to the restricting clause in this subsection:

> Where a person is alleged to have committed an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of this section and that person has been tried and dealt with outside Canada in respect of the offence in such a manner that, if he had been tried and dealt with in Canada, he would be able to plead autrefois acquit, autrefois convict or pardon, he shall be deemed to have been so tried and dealt with in Canada."

The point I am making is this. Autrefois acquit and autrefois convict are special pleas. They are pleas like guilty or not guilty, but they really in essense form the thrust of the law as it deals with double jeopardy. These go through all of the Criminal Code. If you notice the amendment that is submitted in Motions Nos. 5 through 8, there is absolutely no limitation with respect to the pleas of autrefois. In other words, Motions Nos. 5 through 8, and each one is similar, contain absolutely no restriction whatsoever, whereas the clause itself only applies to matters that are within Clause 5. The amendments that are being made or the motions being brought before you on Clauses 5 to 8 are absolutely unlimited in their scope. They would apply to any Sections of the Criminal Code whereas the actual amendment in the Bill itself on page 8, commencing at line 36, states that the limitation of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict only applies by virtue of this Section. We are dealing with international terrorism and hijacking. In my view, it is clear on the face of it that there is a conflict between the motions and the Bill. The one is far broader than the other, and inconsistent.

Finally, if I could deal just with common sense, Clause 5 deals with extraterritorial jurisdiction. You have made certain rulings with respect to war crimes dealing with extraterritorial jurisdiction. The rest of the motions make absolutely no sense because they are totally derivative of your finding on the first four.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his argument. My ruling remains, the motions are in order. The Hon. Member is asking the Speaker to do something that any Speaker might like to do, which is to go beyond the procedural admissibility of an amendment and have some concern for the quality of the amendment, if you will. No Speaker can do that. The only thing the Speaker is asked to do is determine the procedural admissibility of an amendment.

There is nothing in Amendments Nos. 5 to 8 on their face that is derivative in the sense that the Hon. Member means. The Member means that their effect may be derivative to another motion. That cannot make the amendment itself out of order in terms of the putting of an amendment. As someone once said, it does not have to make sense to move it. I am left with a dilemma. I think the Hon. Member has made a profoundly interesting argument with regard to the amendment, but not the procedural admissibility of the amendment.

I apologize to the Hon. Member if I misunderstood his earlier intervention and its purpose and if I caused him any trouble, but certainly I find that Motions Nos. 5 through 8 remain procedurally in order.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would simply observe that based on your earlier ruling that you would not find it acceptable, as you did not find it acceptable, to consider what was out of order to be in order by unanimous consent, neither would you be prepared to accept unanimous consent that something which you have found in order is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member knows that he has a way of achieving unanimous consent by not moving them, if that were to be his intention. May I therefore proceed.

Mr. John Nunziata (for Mrs. Finestone) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 2 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canada.

(4.1) For greater certainty, it is hereby declared that a person who has been found guilty in absentia outside Canada, but who has not yet been punished, shall not be entitled to plead autrefois convict on account of that finding of guilt."

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 2 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canada.

(4.1) For greater certainty, it is hereby declared that a person who has been found guilty in absentia outside Canada, but who has not yet been punished, shall not be entitled to plead autrefois convict on account of that finding of guilt."

● (1550)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 2 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canada.

(4.1) For greater certainty, it is hereby declared that a person who has been found guilty, in absentia outside Canada, but who has not yet been punished, shall not be entitled to plead autrefois convict on account of that finding of guilt."

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 2 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canada.

(4.1) For greater certainty, it is hereby declared that a person who has been found guilty in absentia outside Canada, but who has not yet been punished, shall not be entitled to plead autrefois convict on account of that finding of guilt."

On Motion No. 8—

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want briefly to indicate the intent of this particular amendment. I recognize the concern that has been addressed by the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) but the intent of the amendment is to ensure that in a case in which an individual has in fact been found guilty in another jurisdiction or in absentia but despite the finding of guilt has never been punished for the offence for which he has been found guilty, he should not be able to claim in Canada that he has been found guilty and convicted and therefore not be put on trial for the offence here in Canada.

It has been argued that this particular amendment is irretrievably linked to the earlier amendments with respect to war crimes which were ruled out of order. In fact, that is not the case. Certainly the argument would be more compelling if the provisions with respect to trials of alleged war crimes in Canada had in fact been part of this Bill and ultimately part of the Criminal Code of Canada. We can only hope that following the report of the Deschenes Commission, such provisions will in fact be enacted by this Government which has not slammed the door shut to the possibility of trials in Canada as did the previous Government. That possibility does exist.

It is essential, particularly in the case of an individual who may have been found guilty in a jurisdiction with which Canada does not have an extradition treaty, that that individual should not be able to come forward and claim that he has already been convicted so he should not face trial. Certainly a significant amount of time has passed since the occurrence of war crimes but the passage of time can surely in no way diminish the gravity of these crimes. If indeed there are individuals in Canada against whom evidence exists of implication in war crimes and if in fact Parliament recognizes that they should not escape their day of reckoning and makes provision for trials in Canada with all of the legal safeguards inherent in our system of criminal justice, then I would submit that this amendment which is very much in line with Section 11(h) of the Charter of Rights is most important.

In the absence of this amendment, it might very well be possible for such individuals to claim that they were found guilty in another jurisdiction even though they were not punished and thus successfully evade the possibility of being brought to justice. That would be doing a very grave injustice to the victims of these crimes and to their families, many of whom are still alive and living in Canada and elsewhere.

With respect, I would suggest that it is most important that this amendment be adopted in order to ensure that these people do not avoid the possibility of prosecution and ultimate conviction. Hopefully this amendment will be adopted and in the near future, following the report of the Deschenes Commission, hopefully a system will be put in place in this country that will permit trials in Canada with proper Canadian judicial safeguards of those individuals against whom evidence exists of possible participation in crimes against humanity.

On Motion No. 7—

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to address Clause 5. I agree with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). These amendments in Motions 5 through 8 were introduced primarily because of their relevance to the war crimes amendments with which my Party agrees and which we were hoping would be made part of the Criminal Code amendment package at this time.

Although that portion has been ruled out of order and Government Members have denied unanimous consent to make it possible for the Criminal Code to be amended at this time so that war crimes could be dealt with by domestic procedures under criminal law, the amendments in Motions 5 to 8 are still relevant and valuable. They apply to other extraterritorial crimes and, as my colleague has indicated and as I on behalf of my Party support, these amendments are here to remind the country that there is unfinished business and that our Party is in favour of adding war crimes to the catalogue of crimes within the Criminal Code for domestic prosecution.

I hope that members of the Government will support these amendments. Not only will they be relevant to war crimes if the Government decides to proceed by amending the law, but in connection with nuclear material crimes and diplomatic crimes, the issues addressed in Motions 5 through 8 may still be relevant.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. As I said in my argument to Mr. Speaker on the procedural matters, these particular motions are totally derivative of the main question which is whether or not there is going to be in this legislation the prosecution of war criminals in a retrospective sense. The determination of that issue will be made after the report of the Deschenes Commission. The derivative amendments which are Motions 5 through 8 will be considered at that time. We are not ruling them out out of hand but they are totally inappropriate at this point in time, so the Government will be voting against those amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 5. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motions Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next grouping is Motions Nos. 13 through 16.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques) (for Mrs. Finestone) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 212 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 152 the following new subclause:

"(6) Section 5, subsection 40(1), sections 41, 56 and 59 and Schedule I of this Act shall come into force on the day this Act is assented to."

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques) (for Mr. Nunziata) moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 212 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 152 the following new subclause:

"(6) Section 5, subsection 40(1), sections 41, 56 and 59 and Schedule I of this Act shall come into force on the day this Act is assented to."

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved:

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 212 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 152 the following new subclause:

"(6) Section 5, subsection 40(1), sections 41, 56 and 59 and Schedule I of this Act shall come into force on the day this Act is assented to."

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that it can clearly be said that the next amendment is consequential to Motions 1 through 4 which were ruled out of order. In view of that, I am prepared to withdraw Motion No. 16 with the consent of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 16 withdrawn.

• (1600)

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) on a point of order.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I was out of the House for a few moments during the time at which amendments were put forward on behalf of my colleagues and myself by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). In our view, those motions have fallen in logic, if not pursuant to the Standing Orders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to speak?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member wants to withdraw the motions, he may do so by unanimous consent.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent, I would seek to withdraw Motions Nos. 13, 14 and 15, on behalf of myself and my colleagues.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 13, 14 and 15 withdrawn.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Speyer) on a point of order.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, having concluded the debate with respect to the motions that were on the Order Paper, I have spoken to the official critics of both the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party with respect to further amendments. There is one amendment to Clause 36 for which I think you will find unanimous consent. The amendment is as a result of incorrect translations from English to French. The errors were caught by the editors. I have given copies of the amendment to the official critics and I think, Mr. Speaker, that you will find that there is unanimous consent for the amendment to be adopted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to give notice?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

That Clause 36 of Bill C-18 be amended:

(a) by striking out lines 13 and 14 of the French version on page 26 and substituting the following:

"lyste par le procureur général pour l'application de l'article";

(b) by striking out line 21 of the French version on page 27 and substituting the following:

"à l'article 237, peut lui ordonner immédiatement ou dès que possible de lui";

(c) by striking out lines 40 and 41 on page 29 and substituting the following:

"(2), un juge de paix qui est convaincu, à la suite".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) on a point of order.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I understood that we were going to proceed with the third reading debate on Bill C-18 at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member for York Centre that we have just passed the Bill.

CUSTOMS ACT
SPECIAL IMPORT MEASURES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill C-40, an Act to confirm certain acts or things done on behalf of the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise and to amend the Customs Act and the Special Import Measures Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will try to make my remarks shorter than the title of the Bill, which is rather lengthy.

The Bill before us today has an important bearing on the capacity of my Department to carry out its responsibilities effectively in respect of the Customs Act. Timely adoption of the Bill will be of benefit both to the efficient operation of the Department and also to the public which the Department serves, particularly Canadian importers.

Essentially, Bill C-40 deals with the authority of people authorized by the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise to exercise or perform any of his powers, duties or functions under the Customs Act and the Special Import Measures Act.

Specifically, Subsection 46(4) of the Customs Act authorizes the Deputy Minister to re-determine the tariff classification or to re-appraise the value for duty of goods imported into Canada. This is an important function of the Department, both to ensure that legitimate duties are collected and to ensure that importers are fairly dealt with.

The present Customs Act does not specifically authorize other people to perform the Deputy Minister's functions to make decisions under Subsection 46(4). In practice, over the years, as the volume of such decisions has grown, the Deputy Minister has directed the appropriate Assistant Deputy Minister and officials working under his supervision to make such decisions in his name. With the current volume of cases—an estimated 5,700 in the fiscal year which just ended—it would be utterly impossible to conduct our affairs in any other way.

However, we have reached an impasse as a result of a decision which was handed down by the Federal Court of Appeal in February. In the fall of 1984, the Tariff Board, which hears appeals against decisions made under Subsection 46(4) of the Customs Act, questioned whether it could legally hear appeals when the decisions appealed from were not made personally by the Deputy Minister. The Board referred the matter to the Federal Court of Appeal which, in its February 22 judgment, agreed that the Board lacked such jurisdiction and, further, that the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise had no legal right to delegate his authority. The Department is, of course, respecting the Court's decision and currently, aside from some cases of critical importance which are being made personally by the Deputy Minister, no action is being taken under Subsection 46(4).

The situation cannot be allowed to continue. Cases which require a decision are continuing to pile up. It is unfair to Canadian taxpayers and unsatisfactory to Canadian importers to allow it to continue.

I might point out that the situation which was created by the Court's decision clearly points to the need for a completely revised and modernized Customs Act which is geared to the realities of business conditions in the 1980s. The present Act is more than 100 years old. While it has been amended many times, it is simply not geared, in many of its provisions, to the volume and complexity of administering customs matters today. Very shortly, I hope to bring before the House a Bill for a totally revamped and modernized Customs Act which will deal with many of the archaic and outdated provisions of the current Act, including the one before us today. In the meantime we have to take action on Bill C-40 to restore the capability of the Department to administer its responsibilities effectively.

● (1610)

The recent ruling of the Federal Court of Appeal also has implications for decisions made under the former Anti-dumping Act. Although this Act was repealed in December of 1984 and replaced by the Special Import Measures Act, many of the Deputy Minister's functions and duties under the former Act, including making decisions appealable to the Tariff Board, were carried out on his behalf by other officials. By implication, the Federal Court's judgment also invalidates such decisions made under the Anti-dumping Act. It is important that we now validate the functions and duties performed by subordinate officers in the past or in the future with regard to this Act as well.

I should point out to the House that the Special Import Measures Act, which is now the instrument for dealing with the anti-dumping matters, has also been amended to clarify the authority of people authorized by the Deputy Minister to exercise or perform his powers, duties and functions. Essentially the Bill accomplishes the following things. First, it recognizes that the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise may authorize other people to exercise or perform any of his powers, duties or functions under the Customs Act and the Special Import Measures Act. Secondly, it validates acts of the Deputy Minister in exercising his powers or performing his functions or duties under the Special Import Measures Act and the Customs Act. Third, it validates acts done in the past and in the future by people authorized by the Deputy Minister to exercise his powers or perform his duties or functions under the Anti-dumping Act.

The job of ruling effectively and fairly on the thousands of complex tariff cases which come before the Department each year requires many highly trained specialists supporting the Deputy Minister. The provisions authorizing people to carry out the Deputy Minister's powers, duties and functions will be dealt with clearly in the new Customs Act when it comes before the House in the near future.

In the meantime, in the interests of getting on with the job, I would ask for the support of Members on all sides of the House in giving speedy passage to this legislation. I understand there have been discussions among the Parties and there is an agreement that we would have one speaker per Party on this Bill, and that we should consider all three stages today. I want to publicly express may thanks to my colleagues on the other side of the House for their co-operation which has been extremely helpful to us in allowing us to bring the Bill forward and resolve it on a speedy basis. I see that my friend from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) is coming in and I believe he may be the spokesman for his caucus on this matter. Let me simply reiterate to him my appreciation of the co-operation extended by Members on his side of the House to the Government in accomplishing this matter. We come under criticism from time to time for not passing substantive, pithy legislation; surely with the passage of this Bill today we will be able to set to rest any such claims in the future. I want again to thank Hon. Members for their co-operation.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, just very briefly, the legislation before us today is simply a housekeeping Bill and will certainly facilitate matters for the Deputy Minister and all those people who expect the Deputy Minister to sign thousands and thousands and thousands of documents. The intent of the original legislation was questioned, as I understand it, in the courts and I think this legislation is necessary. Any obstruction to it would be seen by a great many Canadians who are so affected to be an obstructionist tactic and the legislation therefore should proceed as quickly as possible.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to rise in support of this Bill. We recognize it is of a housekeeping nature, but I wonder if I can ask the Minister to advise us what the impact is, particularly the retroactivity section—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. This is debate and there are no questions or answers. The Hon. Member has the floor for his Party in debate.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I knew that and I was sort of rhetorically asking if the Minister could provide us with some information on the impact the retroactivity clause will have on any pending litigation. We would just like to have an understanding of what will happen. Secondly, we have a couple of minor modifications to propose to the Bill at the appropriate time.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I am of course in favour of the Bill and its necessary housekeeping and administrative changes. I just wanted to bootleg in a vote of thanks to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) for the establishment of a customs office in Yellowknife, the capital of the Northwest Territories. The people wanted this for a long time; it has now been established. I have personally inspected it and find it working very well. Thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows: Mr. Beatty, seconded by Mr. Andre, moves that Bill C-40, an Act to confirm certain acts or things done on behalf of the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise and to amend the Customs Act and the Special Import Measures Act, be now read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-40, an Act to confirm certain acts or things done on behalf of the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise and to amend the Customs Act and the Special Import Measures Act. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, on Clause 1 I would like to move:

That immediately prior to the words "Deputy Minister" the words "Minister and/or" be added.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Hon. Member could clarify which line that is since the Deputy Minister is mentioned three times in Clause 1.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I assume that would actually be each of the references to "Deputy Minister".

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if that is admissible. I am just wondering why the Member is suggesting this. If I understand his amendment correctly, I certainly would not agree, with every action taken by the Minister in the exercise of a power or the performance of a duty or function purported to be done on behalf of the Minister. I do not think we should agree to an act purported to have been done by the Minister but assigned to somebody else as being agreed to in Clause 1. Is that the intention, because we are talking about the Deputy Minister here?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, I might be able to clarify this for my colleagues. Let me just give some background. The Deputy Minister has some authority given to him under the Customs Act and other statutes which is unique and distinct from my responsibility as Minister. Usually when the Deputy Minister acts, he acts in my name on authority delegated from me. In some instances he has specific authority given to him by the Act which allows him to operate in his own name. What happened was that the decision made by the courts found that a decision by the Deputy Minister, because of the volume of requests made of him, to delegate that authority to his subordinates was not permitted; it was ultra vires. None of the actions that we are talking about here is delegation of my authority. Consequently, any reference to the Minister of National Revenue here would be irrelevant in that all we are doing is seeking to validate actions of the Deputy Minister of National Revenue and his subordinates. The effect of including reference to the Minister of National Revenue does not pose a particular problem for me; it is just that it is irrelevant in this context.

I imagine that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, might have some concern that inadvertently a reference to the Minister of National Revenue in this context might allow the validation of some action which is not contemplated by Parliament at the time we are passing this Bill. If we are to protect the rights, powers and prerogatives of Parliament, we should be very careful to confine the scope of the Bill to keep it as narrow as possible.

As I said, it poses no particular problems for me if my colleague wants to make reference to the Minister of National Revenue. However, the effect of doing that would be to substantially broaden the scope of the Bill and presumably to cover all sorts of areas which were not anticipated at the time we had the discussion between Parties. They would be areas in which the court has expressed no difficulty at all. The concern expressed by the court was strictly with regard to powers which are specifically assigned to the Deputy Minister and which were delegated by him to subordinates.

If, on reflection, my hon. colleague feels, as I do, that it should be confined to validating those actions of the Deputy Minister, I certainly think he would find consent on this side of the House to withdraw the amendment because it would ensure that Parliament knew what it was voting on at the time.

Mr. Chairman, since some bootlegging has already gone on, perhaps the House would allow me to bootleg a response to the rhetorical question. I will give a rhetorical answer to the question asked by my colleague. The effect of this Act would be to retroactively validate decisions that were made in delegating authority. The understanding of both importers and the Department head was that the actions of the Deputy Minister in delegating his authority, which was a practical necessity, were both necessary and proper. On a technicality the courts found that he did not have the authority, under the statute, to delegate his powers as Deputy Minister. This would regularize that procedure for the future and retroactively validate decisions made on that basis in the past. This poses no problem, to the best of my knowledge, to the private sector or others. It simply assures us that practices which have been followed for years, and were accepted to be appropriate, are brought into conformity with the law.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: I would like to rule. Do you have another question?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I would like you to rule as to the admissibility of the word "Minister", keeping in mind that we certainly do not want to extend any more powers to the Minister of this particular Department.

The Deputy Chairman: It goes beyond the scope of the clause. Unless you have any further arguments in regard to this, I must rule. First, there is a difficulty with regard to the way in which the Member proposed this particular motion. Second, it goes beyond the scope of the clause. It is not acceptable and it is redundant. Therefore, I must rule it out of order.

Mr. Nickerson: I would like to follow up on the question of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan and the response given by the Minister of National Revenue. We were given the assurance that nothing untoward would happen as a result of the passage of this Act. The specific question as to whether there is any legislation pending right now that would be affected by the passage of this Act was not answered. Could we have an answer to that direct and specific question? Is there any legislation pending which would be influenced by the passage of this legislation?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, if I correctly undertand the question, the answer would be no. There is no legislation that I am aware of which is before the House at the present time that would be affected by this—

Mr. Nickerson: I am sorry. Maybe I should have said "litigation pending or in process".

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, off the top of my head, the answer would be that I am not aware of any. The difficulty is that if the Bill did not pass we would have a complete gridlock in terms of the ability of the Department to make these determinations. Over 5,700 a year would have to be personally made by the Deputy Minister of National Revenue. We are essentially amending the law to ensure that the procedures which have been followed on a routine basis in the past are allowed to continue.

Mr. Nickerson: I would like to thank the Minister for that partial assurance. I will give an example of the reason I ask this question. Some months ago, when the previous Government was in office, a Bill was introduced to make minor changes to the Yukon Quartz Mining Act. We were told that it was a simple administrative matter and that it was necessary that this be done. It certainly appeared that way on the face of it. The House passed that Bill very quickly and afterwards we found out that one of the reasons for the introduction of the Bill was that there was a court case pending. Through the passage of that legislation we cut the ground out from beneath the litigant. We did a disservice to someone who had a legitimate case before the courts.

I want the assurance that we will not be doing that to any other person as a result of the passage of this legislation this afternoon. I quite agree with the Minister that it is a necessary thing to do and that probably 99 times out of 100 cases we would be acting in favour of the people involved. However, I would like to have the assurance that we are not cutting the ground out from underneath any litigant's feet.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, I can indicate that to the best of my knowledge that is the case. I can also indicate that if the amendment does not pass today, the effect would be to declare null and void all of the decisions which have been made by officials in the name of the Deputy Minister. I can pretty well guarantee that those people who were unhappy with the decision made, even if it was soundly made, would use that legal basis to try to undo the decision that was made.

The purpose of the amendement before us today is to try to establish due process to allow a method of appeal and to allow determinations to take place. The effect of not allowing that to proceed would be to create a serious inequity for many people.

I cannot give the Hon. Member the assurance that nowhere before the courts at the present time is there any case which relates to this. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that there is no hidden agenda here. There is no intention to try to frustrate the ability of an individual to protect his rights. Indeed, it is just the opposite. The effect of striking down many of these decisions would cause great inequity and unfairness. It would hamstring the ability of the Department to carry out very essential functions.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, the effect of not passing this particular piece of legislation would be to render null and void the appeal procedure. In fact, it could operate in reverse for a great many cases that have been satisfied on behalf of the citizenry of the country. It was with that information that I recommended that our caucus accept this particular Bill and this particular clause.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 23, consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 1 (Mr. Axworthy) and 2 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4001).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, could you clarify where we are as far as the amendments are concerned and whether we are dealing with Motions Nos. 1 and 2 as a package? I would like that clarification and to know whether or not I am permitted to speak?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motions Nos. 1 and 2 are grouped for debate with a separate vote on each motion. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate has the floor (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we have heard many opinions expressed as far as these amendments are concerned. If one reviewed the record in order to read what Members of the Official Opposition have said about these amendments, one would see that the amendments themselves are absolutely necessary if the intent of the legislation is to be followed within the legislation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I know that the Hon. Member realizes why I am rising since he spoke initially in this regard, and I regret that I was not in the Chair then because I would have enjoyed listening to the Hon. Member, but I am afraid that he is not entitled to speak. Therefore, I must recognize another Hon. Member for debate.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You are very good in French and I congratulate you. You are almost as proficient as the President of the Privy Council, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

[English]

That being said, I want to say a few words about Motion No. 2 that is before the House. Motion No. 2, which is in the name of the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), reads:

"The technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the government, would benefit Canada, the pur-"

This is an important motion because it deals with the whole question of technological change, science and technology and research and development which are so important in society today.

I have had a good look at the industrial set-up of our country and ownership in our country. One of our greatest problems is that very little research is done in our country compared to that in other countries around the world. In fact, I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, as a Member from Edmonton are as dismayed as I am that so little research is done in Canada and that there are so few jobs for young people in research and development compared to jobs in the United States, Japan, western European countries and most other industrialized states.

If I remember correctly, the percentage of our Gross National Product that is spent on research and development is approximately that of countries like Egypt or Ireland. I suggest that says a lot in terms of some basic faults in our economy.

One reason for the small amount of research and development in this country is the fact that much of our economy is foreign owned and controlled. Therefore, it is only natural that when decisions are made about where to conduct research and development, those companies do it at their patent plants in the United States, Japan or elsewhere. Of course, that is no surprise because if you or I were in control of a company and were going to conduct research and development, I think we would do it in our own country in order to provide jobs for our young people here rather than somewhere else in the world.

I am concerned that Bill C-15 will open the door further to foreign control and ownership of our economy, resulting in a loss of jobs in this country. I urge the House to accept Motion No. 2 because we cannot assume that foreign investment and technology will automatically benefit this country. A company often injects new capital to modernize and install new technology such as robotics and computers, which actually results in a loss of jobs. For example, approximately 80 per cent of the corporate tax breaks in Canada go to the largest corporations, which make up about one per cent of Canadian corporations. If one reviews the number of jobs being created as a result of those tax breaks in this country, it can be seen that in many cases large companies will eliminate jobs rather than create them as a result of tax breaks, new capital injection and modernization. They bring in new equipment that takes the place of human beings. I am not saying that we put in blindfolds and pretend that a new world of technology is not there. Of course I am not saying that, nor is the motion. The motion is saying that we should have enough power to make sure that if the new technology and capital are not going to help Canadians and be of benefit to Canadians then we should have the power to say no on behalf of the people of Canada and on behalf of the young people of this country whose futures are at stake.

The other point in arguing for the motion before us that I think we should acknowledge is that the Government must be playing a leading role in setting the terms and conditions under which capital and technology enter this country. We hear so much talk today about the private sector, free enterprise and the big companies. The Conservatives tell us, how great Ronald Reagan is in the United States and they tell us about the wonders that the American administration will do for us. We are opening up our Canadian house and saying to these big companies, "Come in. Do whatever you want. You are welcome". It is like having neighbours come into your house and saying to them: "Take over my house. Take over my kitchen and bedrooms. I will move out". That is the kind of situation the Conservative Party is establishing for us.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) says that inviting in your neighbours means you live in the dog house or the garage. Where is our independence and where is our national pride? Where is that assertion of what is right for Canadians that other countries take for granted? I often criticize some countries for being too nationalistic. It is something like saying "You are Americans, you are American right or wrong, or you are Japanese, or you are French and that is all there is". But we are on the other extreme where we do not assert any kind of Canadian nationalism. It is a case of: whatever the foreign investor wants, the foreign investor will get. Even before these amendments to the Foreign Investment Review Act which abolish the Act and the agency are passed, the Act of the previous Government is basically defanged or the watchdog will be defanged or have its teeth pulled. It will be very weak. What is being done now is rendering the agency almost totally useless in terms of making sure that what is happening is for the significant benefit of Canadians.

I think there is so much more we can do in terms of a better standard of living, in terms of well-paying jobs for Canadian citizens and for our young people. A very good example is right in our own province of Saskatchewan. I see in the House the Hon. Member for Regina West, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) and the Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) and I think of the Potash Corporation and the potash industry in our province.

A few years ago we had eight or nine potash companies in our province. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is here and he knows the story. The Blakeney Government, back in the mid-seventies, because of lack of control over the potash industry by the people of Saskatchewan and because so many profits were being sent out of Saskatchewan and out of Canada with no Canadian or Saskatchewan control, decided the time had come to establish in Canada, in Saskatchewan, the largest potash company in the world outside of the Soviet Union. This company is owned publicly by the people of Saskatchewan having its head office in Saskatoon with a Canadian president, Canadian staff, research and development done by Canadians and decisions made by Canadians. If that can be done in a small province like Saskatchewan with one million people, we can use that kind of determination and do that time and time again at the national level from one end of Canada to the other.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are an Albertan and that you are a very independent man. I am sure it makes you angry, as it makes me angry, to see so many of these decisions left in the hands of foreigners who make decisions that take jobs away from us. It is not just research and development or export and trade and jobs that we now have in Saskatchewan because we control the potash industry, but the fact is that many of these foreign firms restrict the export of goods of their subsidiaries located here in Canada. They want to export from the head office located in the States, Japan or Europe and restrict the exports of firms here in Canada.

Our colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), did a major study a number of years ago in the early 1970s. If I remember correctly, he said in his report that the propensity to export among Canadian-owned firms in the same field was about four to one over that of subsidiaries of multinationals of foreign plants. In other words, if a company is Canadian-owned the odds are about four times as great that it will export compared to a plant controlled offshore. That is another reason why Motion No. 2 must be supported by this House so we can have more control and say over the capital and technology introduced in this country by a foreign company or by foreign investors.

Here we are not saying that all foreign capital and technology is bad. Of course not. We are saying that it is our house; it is our country. We have developed this country. We are going to keep it and it is ours. We want legislation to make sure it stays that way. I am sure that you yourself, Mr. Speaker, if you were not in the Chair would be standing up in this House thundering about the terrible weakening of the foreign investment legislation by this Government that sits across the way. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you are lucky to be in the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I am. I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House at this time to speak in support of Motion No. 1 which asks that Bill C-15 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 6 to 14 on page 1 and substituting the following words:

(2) Recognizing that increased capital investment and innovative technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities, and to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians.

We believe that the amendment that I have just read would be the most appropriate statement of purpose of the Bill before us because, unlike the words in the draft Bill, the words in the amendment set out in a more clear-cut and realistic manner what it is that we as a Government should be looking at on behalf of the Canadian economy and Canadian workers.

If you look at Clause 2 of Bill C-15, Mr. Speaker, you will note that it says:

Recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities and to provide for the review of significant investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure such benefit to Canada.

This wording on the surface may sound useful and positive but I suggest that these words contain a number of important flaws and omissions.

First, the paragraph in the Bill as proposed to the House talks of significant investments. What does the Government mean by significant investments? If the Government is talking only about investment above a certain size, then the Government is making a serious error in that it is overlooking the fact that investments from abroad that could well be of importance to Canada could be important irrespective of size. When it comes to the high-tech sector, most of the companies are very small. If we have arbitrary restrictions based on size, and if we look upon only investments above a certain level as being significant, then we are putting on the books a Bill which overlooks the reality of how a number of important sectors in Canada are constructed.

Also, the emphasis in the words of the Bill before us, which we want to replace with the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), is on significant investment rather than on beneficial investments. This raises another important concern about the words of the Bill as presented to the House. The evidence accumulated over the years is very clear, that investment from other countries is not necessarily beneficial to the Canadian public interest. For example, the evidence is very clear that many companies in this country that are owned and controlled by people outside the country have restrictions on what they can do. They have restrictions on the kinds of exports they can carry out. In fact, they have restrictions on whether they can export at all.

• (1650)

Just a few days ago there was an important meeting of the board of directors of the Automotive Industries Association of Canada. This association represents those companies making parts for what is known as the automotive after market, that is to say, parts needed to repair or tune up cars once they have been sold in their initial new form and once they get beyond the initial warranty period. The president of the Automotive Industries Association, after that important board meeting, held a press conference in which he confirmed that many of the companies comprising the membership of his association have limitations of one kind or another about the extent to which they can export their products to other countries. Most of these companies are subsidiaries of American parent companies, and they are prevented from exporting in any way, shape or form to the United States. Others which may be prevented from exporting to the United States may well have some limited authority to export to third countries, and some cannot even do that. This has nothing to do with their ability to produce goods in a competitive fashion, in a way which represents a high level of technology, efficiency and productivity. These limitations may be good for the American or other foreign parent companies, but they are not good for the Canadian public interest.

Also, in the last two or three years there have been studies conducted by Statistics Canada which show that Canadian companies that are subsidiaries of foreign companies have a propensity to import raw materials and components from outside Canada which is higher than is the case for companies which are owned and controlled in our country. This means that there is not enough attention paid by very large numbers of firms in this country to the opportunity to source here or to get components or raw materials here which may be equally if not more competitive when it comes to cost and quality than what they are bringing in from other countries.

There is all sorts of evidence confirming the extent to which subsidiaries of foreign parents are limited in the degree to which they can carry out research and development in Canada. A few months ago a report was presented to the Ontario Legislature. It was the result of a study carried out by Mr. Bovey at the request of the Ontario Government into the plight of post-secondary education in this province. Mr. Bovey made some recommendations in his report to which I cannot give my agreement. There were suggestions that there had to be very large increases in fees for people who want to attend post-secondary educational institutions in Ontario. I fear this is something that would be implemented by a Conservative Government if it should be re-elected in the Province of Ontario. The possibility that this will happen would be a very good reason not to have that Government re-elected in the Ontario provincial election of May 2.

However, the point I want to make is that the Bovey report on post-secondary education in Ontario says something which is very relevant to the Bill and the amendment before us, and I want to put it on the record. Mr. Bovey and his commission found that foreign subsidiaries in this country have a propensity to support research and development in our universities to a much lesser degree than their parent companies are willing to support research and development in other post-secondary educational institutions, particularly in the United States. Also the Bovey report confirmed that foreign subsidiaries, particularly American ones, generally carry out research and development in our country to a lesser degree than is the case for their parents. This approach may well serve the interests of the parent companies, but this approach does not serve the Canadian public interest.

If there are subjects on which there could be some agreement by Hon. Members on all sides of the House, one is that we have to do more research and development in this country. The Government says that it expects more of this needed research and development to be carried out in the private sector. However, this expectation is only an empty and barren hope so long as the present situation which I have been describing continues, one in which subsidiaries of foreign parent firms are prevented from carrying out research and development activities to the extent that would be logical and practical if they had the full scope to carry out activities along the lines of their opportunities and potential.

A problem with the clause of the Bill in question is that it does not recognize these realities of the Canadian industrial and economic structure. Instead, in some kind of fanciful, unrealistic fashion, it seems to suggest that any degree of foreign investment here would necessarily be beneficial.

That is why—and I conclude—I strongly urge the House to accept the amendment offered on behalf of the Official Opposition by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. It will put into this Bill a much more realistic and honest statement of purpose, indicating that this kind of legislation has to serve the Canadian public interest and ensure that foreign investment is beneficial to Canada when it comes to jobs, research and development, exports, sourcing and all the things which count in this country. The words in the Bill now do not do this, and that is why I say the amendment has to be adopted by the House in the interests of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Motion No. 2 for a number of reasons. In earlier years in my experience in this Chamber we went through the exercise of the foreign investment review legislation. I might say in passing that because it was a minority Parliament, we compelled the Liberals to do something about the ownership of our economy.

This matter concerns our sovereignty and our economic independence. This matter concerns our nationhood. If we do not learn from history, we are condemned to repeat it. Throughout the entire history of our country, our experience with foreigned-owned corporations was that they seldom, if ever, did any significant research and development but, if they did, it went back to the head office of the parent company, usually the United States and sometimes Europe. Those investors do not invest in Canada just because they think we are such nice people or just because they want to help us out. They do not look upon those investments as if we were some kind of charitable case which needs help. We are not another Ethiopa. However, they invest in order to make a return on the investment and to protect the interests of the parent company, even when in the course of protecting the interest of the parent company they do harm to Canadian jobs, Canadian entrepreneurs and the Canadian ability to export and sell, even to the country of the parent company.

● (1700)

In the case of research and development and technological developments, we have that lesson in spades from foreign-owned corporations in this country. Most nations want and accept foreign investment. The question is not whether we have foreign investment, but what kind of foreign investment. There are two kinds. The first is ownership investment, ownership capital, in which the foreign investor comes into our country and acquires ownership, either by starting up a new corporation or buying out one. It owns it. It has ownership. That is equity investment.

The alternative in terms of foreign investment is loan capital. It has happened all these years. Hundreds of million of dollars of foreign capital have come into Canada as loan capital. You pay back the loans and you end up, whether a private corporation, a co-operative or a public corporation, owning it. You have paid back the foreign investors their loan capital. You have paid them with a good return on their loan capital. That is the route that our country should be taking.

The legislation is an admission by the Conservative Government of failure. It says that Canadians cannot generate sufficient capital within our borders. If that is true or partly true that Canadians cannot obtain Canadian capital to go into a Canadian-owned corporation, it is a betrayal of our sovereignty and our nationhood.

There is still a law in the Criminal Code against soliciting or living off the avails of prostitution. The Government is soliciting. I mean just that. It is soliciting, as it is worded in the Criminal Code, by prostitution our sovereignty and our nationhood. It is soliciting. It is working both sides of the street to get foreign investment. Then it wants to do a little pimping, which is also illegal under the Criminal Code. You cannot live off the avails of prostitution. The Government expects all Canadians to be party to that and live off the avails of that prostituting of our nationhood and our sovereignty.

In the area of research and development and technological developments by foreign-owned companies, the history of foreign-owned corporations in this country has been dismal and abysmal. Let me give an illustration. In the early 1960s, 1960, 1961 and 1962—the Ford Motor Company of Canada did some research and development in terms of putting out trucks that would do well in a tropical climate. It made a deal with Cuba. These trucks were to be produced by Canadian workers in a Canadian automobile plant at Windsor, Ontario. The deal was consummated. Cuba was going to buy so many trucks. What happened? Our great friends and allies south of the 49th parallel said no to the Ford Motor Company in the United States. It in turn had to say to the Ford Motor company of Canada, its subsidiary and branch plant, that it could not sell those trucks to Cuba because this would violate the United States' Trading with the Enemy Act. That was a foreign corporation interfering with our sovereignty, the production of our workers. That has occurred on countless occasions.

If anyone here is under any delusion that somehow or other these foreign investors are going to invest in research and technological developments which could be sold from the branch plant in Canada in competition with the parent company in the United States or anywhere else in the world, they are dreaming in Technicolor. In no way will a parent company allow that. It never has, and I do not blame it for that. Why should it cut its own throat in its own local market?

This admission of failure appears throughout this legislation. FIRA was weak enough as it was. This legislation throws out the baby with the bath water. We welcome foreign investments in terms of loan capital or, if any of it is equity capital, it has to be minority ownership. Why do we keep underestimating ourselves and our capacity? Billions of dollars cross our borders every year which could be invested in Canada. Tens of millions of dollars will cross the border overnight. That is because some financial institutions, pension fund or speculators feel they can make an extra one-tenth of 1 per cent in interest on the U.S. dollar market or the gold market. They should be told to be good corporate citizens and invest here because there is so much to be invested here and so much to be done. This supine acquiescence, this blind, hypnotic following of a premise has been proven wrong all the way back to the 1880s. It has been proven wrong every time.

It did not take the United States long to reduce the foreign ownership holdings in that nation. They recovered them through, for example, British war debts from the First and Second World Wars. A lot of that lend-lease and assistance was paid for by giving up those investments to the United States. That was the price the British had to pay for their investments in a foreign economy. That is why it should be loan capital.

I think Motion No. 2 is deserving of support and inclusion in the Bill. From a quick reading I do not have any particular difficulty with Motion No. 1 of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It tries to strengthen something that should not be there in the first place, but that is all we can do in the Opposition. I hope that those who sit on the government side will remember our bitter experience with foreign investors who owned a major portion of our entire economy. It tied the hands of our national Government and provincial Governments and tied the hands of Canadian corporations in terms of decisions that we can make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. I have given him an extra 30 seconds.

Mr. Benjamin: If you gave me permission until now, could I go on for a while longer?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I'm afraid not. I will recognize the next speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I also have a few words to say about Bill C-15. I would point out that we on this side of the House are aware of the Government's intentions as indicated by the words of the Prime Minister: Canada is open for business.

First of all, we think that Canada never did stop doing business with foreign countries, it has always been open. That is why we would not want Bill C-15 now before the House to be nothing more than a cosmetic job to create the impression that this Government is more friendly and more open towards foreign countries than the previous administration was.

My leader adequately summed up our concern about this Bill when he said: Fair enough, Canada is open to foreign investors, but it is not up for sale. Our concern is that we want to make sure that, regardless of the Government's intention to ease the rules and the foreign investment review process, the national interest is adequately protected and that foreign investments really benefit Canada's economy, promote research, create jobs, and bring about a climate conducive to the growth of Canadian society. This is why my colleague representing the riding of Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) deemed advisable to introduce an amendment aimed at clarifying our point of view, the purpose or objective of the Bill. We on this side of the House have little use for unnecessary investments—take-over investments, for instance, which do not create jobs.

The fact that a foreign corporation comes here to buy out a prosperous and profitable Canadian company might simply prove that, in the long run, that corporation will skim off all profits and leave us in a precarious situation where those profits will be taken right out of the country for the benefit of the parent corporation shareholders, without one single job having been created here. In our opinion, that should not be the ultimate purpose of legislation to promote foreign investment. Quite the contrary! We have absolutely nothing against a foreign company from any country whatsoever coming here to open a new plant, create jobs, and perhaps give us an opportunity to do research in its field of operations.

The proposed amendment to change the purpose of the Bill seems extremely important to me. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would briefly compare the wording of both purposes so as to make their extent quite clear. First, let us consider the original purpose as indicated in Bill C-15. I skip the first two lines to get to the part which is of more interest to us. From the end of line 2, Clause 2:

—the purpose of this Act is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities and—

The rest almost sounds like an afterthought:

—to provide for the review of significant investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure such benefits to Canada.

First, we see that the Clause refers to significant investments, and it seems to imply that the Government does not see any point in reviewing and scrutinizing all investments, as has been the practice so far.

However, the amendment standing in the name of my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry reads as follows:

(2) Recognizing that increased capital investment and innovative technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure—

And here is the important part:

—that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities, and to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians.

What is important in the amendment moved by my colleague, Mr. Speaker, is that emphasis is put on the notification. We believe that every investor who wants to bring capital into Canada should at least, regardless of the size of the proposed investment give notification of his intention to a government agency which will review the investment and determine whether, in its opinion, it can be of benefit to Canadians. In fact, the amendment moved by my colleague also emphasizes the review process.

The Bill introduced by the Government does not specify which projects will be subject to review. First, the Government suggested that the previous administration was too restrictive and that the review agency had kept foreign capital out of Canada. This is completely false. If we look at the record of FIRA, we find that 3 per cent at the most of all investment applications made by non-Canadians and involving foreign capital were turned down. This means that the great majority of these investments, or 97 per cent, were consistently being approved. No one can therefore suggest that the avowed purpose of the previous administration was to prevent foreign capital from entering Canada. What concerned the previous Government and what should still concern this Government was to guarantee first of all that foreign capital did not enter Canada needlessly to purchase sound businesses, while creating no additional jobs and simply allowing profits and dividends to leave our country and go somewhere else. That is what we should monitor.

In addition, we must ensure that capital invested in Canada will, on the one hand, contribute to our economic growth, and on the other, create jobs because, in view of the present situation in Canada, this should be the main concern of the Government, as 1.5 million unemployed looking for work will tell you. We should therefore make sure, on the one hand, that foreign capital will create as many jobs as possible for Canadians and, on the other, that these will be attractive jobs and that the companies locating in our country will produce economic fallout by generating other small service industries. This is what we want. That is why my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has moved an amendment to specify the purpose of the Bill so that we could be certain that this legislation aims at maximizing job creation, at ensuring quality jobs and at providing economic fallout for the community where these jobs will be created.

In our opinion, it is just as important—I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are telling me that my time is running out, but I would not want to close without saying that our Party believes it to be extremely important for the Government to review foreign investment plans to ensure that they will create businesses which will also benefit Canada in the field of research and development.

We know quite well that the general tendency of foreign parent companies is to carry out research and development at their headquarters either in Europe, in the United States, in Japan or elsewhere. We want to make sure that those who invest in Canada do not solely do so to make profits, which is perfectly normal, but we do not want that to be their only purpose. We do not want them to come here to find qualified labour and pay them as low as possible, although that is a legitimate attitude in any businessman. We do not want them to come to Canada merely because our country is rich in low-priced raw material while we realize that a foreign company could rightfully take that into account. We do not want a foreign company to come to Canada merely because there is a market. We think that those four legitimate aims will surely motivate the foreign company which would like to operate in Canada, but we think that at the same time, the Government should make sure that in trying to attain those legitimate goals, the company will also at least give minimum attention to the national interests of Canadians. That is why I support the amendment introduced by my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Speech!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As much as I would love to speak on this wonderful Bill, I will restrain myself as I know opposition Members will want a full opportunity to compliment the Government for this initiative.

I have spoken with the Opposition House Leaders about the business for this week. If we are not able to squeeze report stage of this Bill through before six o'clock today, we will carry on tomorrow with report stage of Bill C-15. I want to designate this Friday as an allotted day and I rise for that purpose.

• (1720)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to assure the Government House Leader, as he can tell from his advantageous position, that we are working extremely hard to try to get this Bill through, but it looks very much as if it will be a task which is beyond even the best efforts of the Opposition.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development, and Motions No. 1 (Mr. Axworthy) and No. 2 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4001).

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, in fact it is not a pleasure to rise to speak on Bill C-15. As the House Leader for the Conservative Party indicated to the House, Bill C-15 is a complete disaster. Clearly, he recognizes that one of the most important amendments to the Bill is the one which will change the title to "Take-over Canada" or "The Sell-out of Canada". I am looking forward to debating that amendment well into next year, if the House continues to have a conscience and does not permit passage of the Bill.

I believe it is the opinion of most Members of the House that the Bill really does open the gates to foreign investors in Canada, which will lead the way to foreign control. It is an interesting statement by the Conservative Party that Canadians cannot do the job and are prepared to roll over and let someone else do the job which must be done. It is absolutely astounding that a group of people who profess to be Canadians and who profess to have confidence in the country and in the entrepreneurial skill of Canadian business, would permit the floodgates to be opened to foreign control of the Canadian economy.

The Government lacks the courage to take a leadership position, pull the country up by it bootstraps and assist people who want to invest in Canada. The Government lacks foresight. It cannot see the potential of Canada. I believe that will bode badly for the next four years.

With the moves which have already been made, including the "sell-out of Canada Bill", I would suspect that the Government is not looking at a second term. It certainly does not deserve a second term if this is the kind of imagination and leadership which it is capable of providing.

I believe the most sorry thing is the lack of confidence in the country. In fact, this country has the capital and the human resources. Given the opportunity, I believe that Canadian investment in the appropriate industrial and economic activities could create tremendous employment and put Canada back on the road to recovery.

As a passing note I might say that perhaps one should not examine the antecedents of the Bill. The present Leader of the Conservative Party, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), has shown us the limited nature of his thinking. One has to note that in his previous incarnation he was the President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am the President.

Mr. Skelly: Well, the Government House Leader claims to be the President, but he was not the President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. I know that he is a gentleman of integrity and would never have let that resource slip through the fingers of Canada at the whim of the American corporation which owned it. The gentleman was not just the President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, he sat on the board of directors of the American corporation which owned the outfit. That is an interesting conflict. Whom does he really represent? Does he represent the interests of Canada, or does he represent the interests of American owners in Canada? I am wondering if this Bill does not in some way reflect the disposition of the Prime Minister of Canada. At the time when he was President of the company, I think that many Canadians would have felt that he had a serious conflict of interest, that in fact he did not have the interests of Canada at heart when he presided over the demolition of the iron ore industry.

It also appears that the mine was not closed because there was no iron ore in the region—and some people have argued that it was not productive—but that not enough further developments were made in Canada. It was more expedient for the American owners to open up new mines and import iron ore from Brazil rather than to continue the process in Canada. It is also interesting that the company did not try to derive benefits from resource exploitation in Canada. Maybe it should not surprise us that the Government lacks imagination and the courage to pull Canada together and take control of the economy.

The NDP over the years has put forward many propositions which would lead to greater benefits to Canada in terms of taking control of its national economy, deriving more from the production of resources, the creating of secondary industries, and ensuring that tax benefits accrue in Canada.

Canadian banks have been a bad example. They tend to have a conservative leaning. Canadian banks have been one of the worst players in the role of foreign investment in Canada. There was a time, which will continue as long as the Conservatives are in Government, when Americans did not have to invest in Canada. The Americans were able to come to Canada, using their U.S. assets as collateral, and borrow Canadian money to buy Canadian businesses. They could control the Canadian economy without in fact investing in it. That is the history.

This Parliament has not fulfilled its responsibility to Canadian people because it has not implemented a Bank Act which would benefit Canadians instead of the bankers and a very exclusive level of society. The banks have been allowed a free hand to play the Canadian economy and to assist in the selling out of the Canadian economy. Under the present Conservative Government, I believe that the pace of the sell-out will accelerate, especially under this legislation.

Another disgusting institution in Canada is an offshoot of the banking system which is called the Federal Business Development Bank. The Conservatives want to shut down that institution for all the wrong reasons. I suppose Conservatives want the Bank of Tokyo and other foreign banks in Canada that they supported in the last Parliament to begin the process of lending. But the FBDB could be reshaped to become a valuable organization in encouraging and enhancing entrepreneurial capability in Canada. However, it seems that the federal Government, for a philosophical reason, will put a torpedo into that organization instead of cleaning it up.

Finally, we should revamp the tax system to ensure that penalties are given to the companies which come into Canada strictly to control and exploit the economy rather than to make a contribution. There should be benefits for appropriate investment which will enhance the economy and create further jobs. Our tax system should favour Canadians, rather than those who would take over.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that just a few moments ago the Government House Leader designated Friday next as an Opposition Day. I have had an opportunity to discuss the matter with him and the Deputy House Leader for the Official Opposition. You will know, Sir, that Standing Order 62(4)(b) says:

> If an opposition motion pursuant to section (9) of this Standing Order is to be proposed on a Friday, forty-eight hours' written notice shall be given that the recorded division on the motion, if demanded, is not to be deferred.

I have no knowledge at this point as to whether or not a division might be demanded and I do not want to raise problems with regard to what may happen on Friday. But I wonder if, for the purposes of allowing that such a thing could occur, the House might give unanimous consent to consider that the requirements of Standing Order 62(4)(b) would be met if notice were given by 2 p.m. tomorrow, Thursday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it is one of those situations where I think there is a misunderstanding between the Hon. Member and myself. I had not understood the Hon. Member to say that he wanted to leave the option open for a vote on Friday. I understood he wanted to leave the option open, if he could have a vote, which I understood would be deferred until Monday.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: So I think under the circumstances it might be convenient for us to have a further discussion about this matter. I have no objection to a vote being called and being taken on Monday, but I had not understood he wanted to leave the option open to have a vote on Friday at the end of the debate. Maybe we can sit down and have a discussion with respect to what agreement we can reach. I am prepared now to agree that if a vote is attached to the motion, we would have the debate on Friday and there could be a vote at the end of the day, pursuant to the rules. That is satisfactory. But I do not necessarily want at this point in time to agree to the possibility of a vote on Friday on short notice.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would of course be quite willing to sit down with the Government House Leader and discuss the matter. The problem arises out of the Standing Orders because of the fact that we do not have a lot of notice for this Opposition Day. I think the Government House Leader has in the past attempted to give notice in sufficient time to allow for adequate preparation. But by giving notice at 5.20, on what I think might have been a Wednesday afternoon, this effectively precludes the Opposition from being able to utilize Section 62(4)(b), which of course is a Standing Order but is supposed to be able to be utilized.

I just want you to understand that the dilemma is that although the Opposition Day has been designated in time, and I concede that, there is of course the necessity for negotiation, or discussion at least, between the two Opposition Parties before a decision can be arrived at as to which of the two Parties will utilize the Opposition Day. It would be my hope, for example, because it might appear to be our turn, that we would have it. Nevertheless, that is not always the case.

The only reason I am asking for the opportunity to utilize Standing Order 62(4)(b) is that unless I ask for that now, and agree, therefore, to Friday right now, we would have to file a motion right now, which does not give us adequate time to discuss it, prepare it or decide upon it. We are caught in a very serious dilemma because it would then be possible for the Government at any time to announce Opposition days for Fridays and not give adequate time and, in so doing, preclude the opportunity for the utilization of Standing Order 62(4)(b). I am not suggesting that happened, but it could happen.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The point is, Mr. Speaker, that what the Hon. Member is really asking for is the option to call a vote on a Friday, which is not the normal process. It is available to the Hon. Member and the Opposition Parties if they want to force a vote at the end of the day on Friday. I am saying that he can have a vote on any motion but we will have that vote deferred to Monday for the convenience of Members. I am not speaking only on behalf of my colleagues or myself, but on behalf of all Members. I think that is appropriate.

The second point I should make is that I gave the Hon. Member verbal notice, the usual courtesy, at the end of Question Period. He asked me to announce it on the floor of the House, which I was quite happy to do. Both Parties received notice from me shortly after Question Period. If all we are doing is saying that there could be a vote attached to this and we will have a vote deferred to Monday, we can deal with that right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will tell you what we should do, if I may. I think you should pursue it behind the curtains, or do you want to make a final statement now?

Mr. Deans: If I may, Mr. Speaker, it is important to clear up what may be left as a misconception. It is true that the Government House Leader indicated to me earlier in the day that he would call an Opposition Day on Friday. But it was only a very short while ago that he indicated to me that he had had discussions with the House Leader of the Official Opposition and that that indeed was going to happen.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I talked to both Parties.

Mr. Deans: I am saying it was only a short while ago that I was informed, after discussions, that indeed it would happen. That is when I asked that it be announced today. It is not as though I knew hours ago that it was actually going to happen. I only knew a few minutes before the House Leader rose that in fact it was going to be called.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I told the Hon. Member that earlier in the day, and I am not going to be fooling around on the floor of the House debating this matter now. I have tried to be as courteous as I can.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, all I would like to say is that even if we were informed of the intentions of the Government, it has to be realized that the formal announcement that it was going to happen was made just a few minutes ago. The Government House Leader has to realize that, first of all, we have to determine between the two Parties who is going to have the Opposition Day. Then, if a motion has to be written, if it has to be a votable motion, we have to sit down and write it. Now, I understand that the Government House Leader thinks of us as speedy, intelligent and efficient people, but to do all of this in 20 minutes I submit is forcing it on us. I thought that the one thing the Government House Leader would agree to is that the requirement that the motion be submitted by six o'clock be at least put off until tomorrow so that we have time to write something down if we have to. I think that is the minimum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We still have a few minutes for debate, and if there are any further negotiations I would appreciate it if the House Leaders for the respective Parties would please negotiate behind the curtains.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 1 (Mr. Axworthy) and 2 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4001).

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part once again in the debate on Bill C-15. Since the beginning of this exercise, I think it must be the fourth time I have had an opportunity to speak to this Bill and especially to draw the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif), to possible amendments and especially to the dangerous aspects of the Bill she is steering through the House of Commons and which she steered through committee.

● (1740)

Mr. Speaker, there have already been a number of speakers on the amendment, and I am referring to Motion No. 1 by my hon. friend from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and frankly this baffles me, because when I read the motion I did not think a debate would be necessary. I fail to see how a Member of this House could be opposed to the letter and intent of this motion. I can see some of our hon. friends opposite, and I would like hear them say why they are opposed to the fact that the Bill respecting investment in Canada is aimed at recognizing that increased capital investment and innovative technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act being to provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities, and to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, it is like virtue and motherhood. I fail to see how the Parliamentary Secretary can object to having the amendment included in the Bill. I honestly thought her party was pursuing exactly the same goal. Does she really mean that her party is not interested in reviewing proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians? Does she mean to say she does not think ensuring that such investments contribute to economic growth is a worthy objective? Mr. Speaker, I think it should be the core of this legislation. Who can object to the fact that investments contribute to employment opportunities? Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are not against creating jobs, and that like me, you fail to understand why our friends opposite are not rising to tell us: We agree. We are all for creating jobs. And who could object to encouraging beneficial investment in Canada? I am sure there is not a single Member in this House who would dare to rise and say that he is against the objectives we want to add to Bill C-15.

Mr. Speaker, we are taking up this debate again to try and convince our friends opposite that they have done enough for the Americans. They have gone down on their knees and given the Americans everything they wanted, but they have not been very good negotiators. Sure, when President Reagan came they had a nice party. They even had the pleasure of hearing their leader sing. This reminds me, and those who read the biographical notes written by Ian MacDonald, that very objective journalist, will remember the story about young Brian who sang for Colonel McCormick. I am sure the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) will be very interested to hear this story, because there is a connection with the deuce of spades. The Hon. Member for Champlain should know that when his leader was a boy, and the big boss from the States came up to the North Shore, after a couple of scotches Colonel McCormick would say to little Brian: Get up on the table and sing me an Irish song . . . And Mr. MacDonald reports that if Brian did a good job, Colonel McCormick automatically gave him a couple of bucks, probably in American dollars. Mr. Speaker, 40 years later, history repeats itself, the only difference being that this time, not Colonel McCormick but you and I are paying the piper! Canadians paid for the song that was sung for the President of the United States.

The Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard), who I am sure is listening, will now realize, after sipping all this Irish coffee with his organizers in Quebec City, after having applauded, that all that was a sham. He will now realize that with his tax dollars and those of his constituents, all they did was enjoy a good party among Conservatives, and have loads of fun. But except for that Canada has been lured, evidence of which they get every day, every week. I challenge any Progressive Conservative Member in this House to rise and tell me what they got from the American Government. We have until six o'clock, there are still 15 minutes left, if they have examples of anything their leader got from the Americans . . .

We know what he gave up, starting with Canada's pride and independence. We know what he gave up, and this legislation is proof enough. We know he has even further endangered our environment for another year, and I hope that Members representing rural constituencies do realize what that means for their communities. Those who have maple bushes simply have to look around their constituency. The Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) knows what is happening in those areas. But to the Prime Minister this is no cause for concern. Does he want to wait until the economy of those rural areas is completely down before responding to the acid rain problem? No sir, he decided to hire Bill Davis for a dollar a year. As my leader suggested recently in one of his speeches, certainly one dollar a year is still too much. Because if you look at what has happened since that appointment, all they had was a courtesy meeting. There probably is an emergency but all they managed to do was to meet in some "Maple Leaf" room in some airport to shake hands. Nothing has been accomplished, no progress has been made.

With respect to trade, which is of concern to all of us, Mr. Speaker, there also has been that kind of study group. The announcement was made in Quebec City with much fanfare, although the Governor General was absent. But we know this was intended, and as my colleague has just said, politeness is not necessarily one of our new Prime Minister's virtues any more than humility. They reached an agreement on trade, and with a lot of publicity, they appointed the Minister for International Trade and Mr. Brock. This was official, they were their personal attachés. What happened then? Even before they had time to ingest their Irish coffee, the President was back in the United States telling Brock: "That was just for the Quebec show, you have another job." So we wake up with the Minister of International Trade negotiating all by himself. There was nobody facing him, and this was supposedly the committee of two who had the absolute confidence of the two—as you would have me say—heads of state. This again was a sham. So we are stuck with that legislation which really is a flagrant example of subservience. More subservient than that is not possible! Just think of it! We allow American multinationals to come here, to take control of Canadian companies, to even shut them down if they happen to be too competitive, while we simply look on. It has come to a point where we say to the Americans, among others: "Do not worry, this country is for sale". This is exactly what the Prime Minister is doing. Despite the reference to those big investments that would allegedly create tens of thousands of jobs, we have all witnessed yesterday, those of us who are from Quebec, who pay taxes to Quebec, we have seen the budget tabled by the Quebec Finance Minister. He does not believe in your gamble, for he said the unemployment rate in Quebec would increase next year. This should be a cause of serious concern for these people who believe that this bill will create hundreds of thousands of jobs, who had made job creation a major part of their party platform during the last election campaign, and whose only contribution so far has been their decision to contribute to the arm race. I am quite worried about this.

I hope, therefore, that during this debate our hon. friends opposite will ponder the consequences of the summit, will realize that it was a jolly good show, that it was a major success for the organizers, that everybody had his fun at the expense of the taxpayers, but now that the euphoria of their victory has somewhat subsided, I hope they will realize that governing a country such as Canada is more difficult than bowing left and right once in a while. Mr. Speaker, you signal that my time has elapsed. There is still so much I have to say, but I will certainly have the opportunity to continue and share with you my feelings, as there are 14 other amendments to consider.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words about this clause of the Bill because we believe that it is important that investment by the Canadian Government in the form of tax concessions to foreign and Canadian companies be made under terms and conditions that will benefit Canadians as a whole. Frequently, Canadian and non-Canadian companies have been able to get substantial grants to help the company and benefit the shareholder but which have been detrimental to the interest of Canadians.

I include in those companies some very important and progressive research and development-oriented Canadian companies in Canada. For example, one such company has one of the best records for investing in the research and development of new products and is at the forefront of the technological revolution. That company is Northern Telecom. It is a star among Canadian corporations, and deservedly so. Its sales in 1984 probably topped $4 billion. In 1983, its net profits were more than $1 million a day. The profits were up 92 per cent over the previous year. Stock, which had been worth $13 a share in 1982, is now selling at approximately $50.

Northern Telecom has invested very heavily in the research and development of digital technology. That investment has paid off handsomely for the company and its shareholders, as it should. Between 1976 and 1980, the number of the Northern Telecom workforce declined in Canada although its sales doubled. That is the sort of problem which I think we must face.

In the United States, however, the company's workforce increased from approximately 2,900 in 1976 to almost 19,000 at the present time. Therefore, if we are going to help companies in research and development through government grants or tax concessions, surely we should expect that the benefit will not go just to the company's shareholders but will go to Canadians as well.

More important to Canada is that not only has the number of Northern Telecom's workforce increased in the United States, the problem is that there are now 600 Northern Telecom employees in the United States who are scientists, engineers and other highly skilled people.

A Northern Telecom affiliate, Bell Northern Research, is jointly owned by Bell Canada and Northern Telecom. It now does product research and development in plants in Atlanta, Georgia; Mountain View, California; Durham County Park, North Carolina; Richardson, Texas and Ann Arbor, Michigan. This is an industry in which the company's research and development gives a very clear indication of the future direction in which that corporation is moving.

The question we must ask ourselves, therefore, is whether the company's future development and expansion is to be in the United States rather than Canada. If so, we must ask ourselves whether we are justified in giving the kinds of grants and tax concessions it has been given.

The company now has 14 plants in the United States. George Takoch, the author of an article which appeared in Saturday Night, asked "Are we witnessing the deCanadianization of Northern Telecom?" That is a crucial question because Northern Telecom is one of Canada's best companies. Bell Canada and Northern Telecom jointly own Bell Northern Research. They employ 2,500 scientists, engineers and other highly trained people in five laboratories in Canada.

Last year, the company announced a $20 million expansion in Ottawa, which will create 200 new jobs in research and development. While that sounds great, in 1983 Northern Telecom spent $900 million in research and development and capital investment. Approximately one-third of the research and development investment and about one-half of the capital investment was made outside of Canada.

The development of the company's electronic offices systems products has been allocated to the company's subsidiary in the United States. Northern Telecom's DMS-100 switch, one of its most important products, which was once produced only in Canada is now produced in Canada and in the United States. Recently, when the demand for that product increased, 1,000 new workers were hired in the United States but none in Canada. A similar situation occurred with the company's SL-1 digital business and communications system. In 1983, when demand increased, the Santa Clara plant in the United States was expanded. The Belleville, Ontario, plant was not.

I put this information on the record because Northern Telecom's growth is due to a large extent to substantial help which it has received from the Canadian Government. In 1968, Northern Telecom received a $6 million grant to bring its SP-1 telephone switching system on stream. Between 1976 and 1983, the Canadian Government supported that company in the form of tax relief to the tune of $26 million.

I believe that if we are to help companies like Northern Telecom, which is one of the best, we have a right to expect that the benefits will not only go to the stockholders but will go to all Canadians. That is the reason for our amendment.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 24, consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions No. 1 (Mr. Axworthy) and No. 2 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4001).

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated to the House on Tuesday last in my preliminary statement on the motions standing on the Notice Paper at the report stage of this Bill, I am now prepared to hear Hon. Members on any procedural arguments that they may wish to make with regard to those motions that I indicated gave the Chair some procedural concern.

May I ask Hon. Members when they present their arguments on any one motion or group of motions that they indicate by the motion number or numbers to which motions they are speaking. Hopefully this will make for a more orderly presentation. I recognize the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on Motion No. 3.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, had you intended to consider these motion by motion or for us to comment on your set of rulings as a whole?

Mr. Speaker: I had intended to recognize all Members who wish to comment on all of the procedural issues. It is my hope that every Member who does so will indicate to which motion their comments apply. I was only beginning with the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor because his motion is first on the list of those that cause a procedural problem.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, since it would affect the way in which we proceed, perhaps you could clarify whether you want us to proceed by the rulings that you have made on motions or whether we speak to it as a whole. If so, I suggest that if we are to speak to the entire set of rulings, as the Official Opposition we should be given the opportunity to present our case first.

Mr. Speaker: I suspect that that is acceptable. I am in the hands of the House on this matter. I thought it might be easier to let all those who wish to speak do so rather than go through it seriatim. However, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on the procedural question.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at the beginning of debate at report stage, we appreciate very much the time that the Speaker and the Clerk's Table have taken to try to organize some of these very complex amendments that were presented. We want to express our view that in large part we agree with many of the groupings that you have presented to the House. However, we would like to state that the amendments which we presented were in no way attempting substantially to alter or redefine the Bill but were presented in a spirit of constructive assessment and interest in improving a Bill which is a very critical piece of economic legislation and perhaps the most critical that has appeared before this Chamber during this session.

While we were pleased with many of the rulings, we would like to take issue with some of the comments on admissibility because we feel that the amendments we have presented fully meet the spirit that is contained in the Bill and the spirit by which the Speaker has tried to redefine the way in which the debate during report stage would proceed.

Although Motion No. 3 is an NDP motion, in the interest of good debate perhaps I may comment that I believe there is a way in which the admissibility of that motion could be honoured. I simply mention it because I know that the critic for the NDP will be speaking to procedural matters. I would only suggest that if an amendment to their motion would read something like as follows, "To seek the most positive performance in the interest of Canadians of past investment by non-Canadians", I think it would meet the test of admissibility very clearly. Therefore we would be able to debate what I believe would be a very useful area of discussion in the House. I only offer that as a comment, perhaps more for registry by the critic for the NDP and you, Mr. Speaker.

We have some serious concerns with respect to Motion No. 26. The inclusion of this item under the exemptions is really in keeping with a number of other parts of the Bill and already accepted in principle.

● (1110)

The purpose of the amendment is simply to add a further exemption which we would call industries of strategic importance. I would simply point out that the Bill itself, particularly if you go to Clause 48, contains references to the Bank Act which prohibits investment beyond a certain point in the banking area. Similarly, Clause 10(h) of Bill C-15 exempts from review any transaction to which Section 307 of the Bank

Act applies. In other words, the Bill has already accepted the definition that there can be exemptions to the Bill. Similarly, the present Bill, as approved in principle on second reading, exempts from review insurance businesses already regulated under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act; that is Section 10(k).

What we would argue is that this is simply a recognition that the principle of recognizing that certain exemptions from review are acceptable is already contained in the Bill. They are already registered in the Bill. We are simply introducing a further area by which exemptions can take place.

Let me give you a practical area, Mr. Speaker. Let us say, for example, that the Cabinet decides there is an industry of strategic importance and that it wants to exempt all foreign investment from being introduced. Let us say it is in a strategic mineral area, molybdenum or uranium. If there is not a clause such as this contained in the Act, then there would be a contradiction between that Act and the Investment Canada Act. We are simply putting forward a way of dealing with what we consider perhaps to be a lack of awareness in the drafting of the Bill. In fact, the Government might want to reserve for itself the power to make that kind of exemption. It is a reserve clause or a basket clause that would allow it, which sometimes may be the case, to prohibit any form of investment. That, however, should be done under another policy or another piece of legislation and not be subject to the review matters under the legislation now before us. That is the reason for Motion No. 26. I would ask your consideration, Mr. Speaker, because it is done obviously in the spirit of trying to help the Government out of what might be a potential problem down the road.

On Motions 28 and 29 we will make no comments.

In Motion No. 33 there is this interesting wording contained in your findings, that something about it is going beyond the four corners of the Bill. We have laboured long and hard to determine the exact meaning of "the four corners of the Bill". I thought for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that you were referring to some sort of shopping centre on Merivale Road.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I think you would find the amendment we are presenting to Clause 15 of the Bill does not go beyond the principle already accepted that certain matters should be reviewed by Cabinet. I would ask you to refer to the testimony and statements by the Minister himself at committee where he indicated that he intended to consult with colleagues in Cabinet to deal with such matters. We are simply saying that that should be formalized in legislation, going back to the basic principles that Parliament should clearly enunciate the procedures that are to take place for the clarity of those who would be affected by the Bill and so not leave us with some amorphous or ambiguous form. If that consultation is to take place, it should be so stated. There is no draw upon a Royal Recommendation. It is simply a fact that the Minister has stated in questioning in the committee that he believes he would be following these practices anyway. We are saying that if that is going to be the case anyway, why do we not have it in the Bill?

That is the reason we think it is worthwhile to introduce an amendment which does not alter in any way the intent, purpose, or objective of the Bill but simply recognizes that it is something the Minister says he intends to do. We are simply thinking that from a parliamentary point of view it is important to have Parliament register that and have it written in the statute as opposed to leaving it in a way which could or might cause confusion in the minds of those citizens and businesses affected by the Bill.

On Motions Nos. 38 to 40 I will make no comment, but I will speak on Motions Nos. 42 to 49 which were declared out of order. The importance here goes back to the fundamental starting point of the clause, that is, the question of Canada's cultural heritage or national identity. I would ask Your Honour to refer to the second reading debate wherein the Minister specifically requested in his opening speech that this Parliament bring forward recommendations and amendments relating to the meaning of cultural heritage or national identity. We took the Minister at face value, at his word. I know that may be a dangerous practice, particularly with that Minister, but the fact of the matter is that we on this side of the House like to work on good faith. Therefore, we laboured long and hard in committee to provide for a very intensive examination. Also I suggest that Your Honour read the testimony before the committee in that area, which commanded or demanded the most attention by way of the questioning of witnesses and by way of testimony from witnesses. The proposed Motions Nos. 42 to 49 are ways in which cultural heritage or national identity would be defined in the Bill, not left to some kind of regulation which would run against all the basic practices that Parliament should decide, nor left in delegated instruments.

A very clear example of this is Motion No. 44. In effect, it deals with what is a new form of publication. It deals with data processing, software and all kinds of information which is now put on computer tapes. That is not only a question of cultural heritage or national identity; in a sense it is a modern day, 1980s version of the book, the recording or the transcript. This is the new way by which a modern society contains and holds information. We were particularly cognizant as a result of testimony of the fact that, by defining the whole area of data processing and software as part of a reviewable matter under the Act, we would then be allowing that incredible amount of information, which is very much part of our identity, to be wilfully taken by foreign owners and distributed and disseminated without any control or review whatsoever. That simply makes no sense.

I would argue strenuously that Motion No. 44 in particular is a form of the kind of cultural question and national identity which the Minister asked to be defined. We are saying that this is a new definition of what is contained in that area.

Similarly I would argue in terms of Motion No. 43 wherein we say that matters or investments in the area of defence production are very much part of our national identity. Mr. Speaker, you have been in the chair during numerous Question Periods in the past three or four months when there were major debates in the House about the whole question of star wars development and its economic implications relating back to Canada's sovereignty. What could be more at the heart of Canada's national identity as defined in the Bill than the question of our defence industry? Surely it is subject to the same kind of review.

Similarly we make the case for Motions Nos. 42, 45, 47 and 49. In effect, they all relate to the social impact of investment in one resource town communities, for example, in the high technology industry. All those areas were identified by witnesses who appeared before the committee as being very much a part of the way to protect our "national identity". If we lose control in those areas we would no longer have a national identity. This is why we recommend very strenuously that these articles be contained within the orbit of the Act.

Mr. Speaker: If I could interrupt the Hon. Member for just one second. With respect, we are supposed to be listening now to arguments as to the procedural admissibility of an amendment. The Hon. Member is making a very interesting and important argument about the substance of the amendments. May I suggest to the Hon. Member that if it is possible, it would be helpful if he would stick with the procedural admissibility question. May I also say to him that by indicating as clearly as he is that they are matters that are not in the Bill and not contained in the scope of the Bill that need to be introduced in his view to the Bill, he is making the procedural argument that they are beyond the scope of the Bill as introduced and therefore out of order. I take it he is trying to make a procedural admissibility argument at the moment. I suggest that he might want to restrict himself to that, both for his own sake and for the sake of the points we are supposed to be considering.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I take note of your comments. I believe from the original submission that you brought forward to the House that you are asking for arguments as to why certain matters should be admissible. I thought I was speaking directly to the procedural point that the Minister had indicated, in this area particularly, that Parliament should help define, because as it now stands under Clause 15, the question of Canada's cultural heritage and national identity is not defined. It is left simply in those words. We are simply adding amendments which would further define the meaning of those two key phrases. That would be my basic argument for Clauses 42 to 49.

I should as well make the case of admissibility on Motion No. 48 because it is a special case. I would simply make the argument that I believe it is an oversight on the part of the Government because it will set up a conflict within the Bill. Later in the Bill, Clause 45, for example, says that any commitments made under the present FIRA Act would be held in force. However, there is nothing in the Bill to say that investors coming into the same area in which undertakings have already been made would also be required to make the same undertakings. Therefore, it would place them in a kind of grandfathering clause under Clause 45. A new competitor, a new foreign investor coming into the same area would be free of that kind of undertaking made under FIRA and therefore have an incredible competitive advantage.

We think that that should be a part of the reviewable area to make sure that those foreign investors who have already invested in certain areas of the economy and are held to those undertakings under FIRA are not held to disadvantage by new investors coming into the same area. Motion No. 48 is simply a way of dealing with that glitch in the Bill. I would ask you to take that into consideration.

I might now refer to Motion No. 64. The question that was offered again was whether this provided for a new definition under the Act. All we are saying in this case is that it is a way of calculating the question of additional cost. It is simply giving additional direction under this clause. To my mind, it does not constitute a new definition but is simply adding a way of calculating cost or rules for calculation. These are similar to those provisions already incorporated in Clauses 26 and 28 for calculating Canadian status and control. No new principles are introduced. Nothing new is added. These are items that incorporate in Clause 21 undertakings that are already in Clause 20. In order to develop the symmetry and the level of harmony between those two, we think that that should be considered for debate at report stage.

On Motions Nos. 70 and 72, Mr. Speaker, you argue that one vote on Motion No. 70 would be consequential on Motion No. 72. I would suggest that Motions Nos. 70 and 72 are quite different and I would ask that you separate the two for voting purposes. Motion No. 70 is designed clearly to indicate that the lack of ministerial action means the investment may proceed. Motion No. 72 is to specify that a notice rejecting an application is to contain reasons for rejection, as called for by many business groups. They have two quite different meanings and therefore I think there should be separate votes on those two motions.

● (1125)

On Motions Nos. 78 and 79, Mr. Speaker, you asked for a clarification of our position. Again I would simply say that our amendment in no way attempts to expand the scope of the agency. These motions simply seek to modify the rules for determining what has been acquired in Clause 28(3) of the Bill, a clause already approved in principle. These motions do not suggest new rules.

The Government has already defined Canadian control as being ownership of one-third of all shares. We are simply changing the fraction. That does not change the meaning of the Bill. There is a very old story about Mr. Churchill and Lady Marlborough which I will not repeat in this House, but I think we are simply haggling over the price. This particular motion tends to haggle over which fraction of share control constitutes Canadian control. We make the submission to you, Sir, that what constitutes control is a proper point of debate. We have put a number of submissions during committee that make that case. We are simply incorporating that in the amendment and not changing the principle of the Bill. We feel that the level of what constitutes control may be a debatable item.

Mr. Speaker: Was I to understand that that comment with regard to Motion No. 78 also applies to Motion No. 79?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, Sir. I am sorry, I should have made that clear. Those comments apply to both motions.

Again, we would provide no comment on Motions Nos. 80 to 88.

Finally, on Motions Nos. 90 and 91, Clause 44 of the Bill already provides for the Minister to make reports for operations under the Act. Motions Nos. 90 and 91 simply define more clearly what those reports should contain. Again, I would submit, Sir, that discussions during committee were very clear on this point. There were representations that there should be some ability to assess and determine the impacts of various investments.

In no way are we infringing upon the Royal Recommendation. It is already provided that the Minister must make a report. These motions simply further define what that report may contain so we may answer some of the questions raised by many of the interest and industrial groups which appeared before us.

I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for hearing my arguments. I know you will take them under your kind and wise consideration.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that we find perfectly acceptable a good many of the decisions and suggestions you have made. Let me, if I may, make comments on a few of them. I have tried to order my comments on the basis of your particular numbering system.

If we begin with your No. 4, this may confuse us because No. 4 deals with Motion No. 5, but I hope it will in fact work out for the better. You have suggested, Mr. Speaker, that Motion No. 5 restricts the Minister's assistance to Canadian-owned businesses to exploit opportunities for investments and technological advances and thereby violates the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading. As I understand the principle of the Bill, it does two things. First, it provides support for investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians. Second, it provides for different categories into which different businesses fall. Certain businesses have no responsibilities whatsoever with respect to this Act. Those are Canadian-controlled businesses and established foreign-controlled businesses. With respect to those businesses which are new businesses being established by non-Canadians, they are required by the Act to make notification of their investments. They are treated in a specific and separate way.

Third, there is a group of firms which consists of non-Canadian firms taking over Canadian firms. Again, they are treated in a separate way because they are subject to review if they are above a certain threshold. Again, that is a slightly different category. Finally, there are non-Canadian firms which are active in the area of cultural heritage or national identity, and they are also treated in a separate way.

Therefore, I think that the purpose of the Bill provides for discrimination with respect to the different categories of enterprise. It is that reflection in the purpose clause, and the subsequent reflection in the details of the Bill, which has led us, in a number of the motions which we have put forward, to suggest slightly different ways in which this discrimination could be precisely demarcated. It seems to us that the discrimination is evident in the purpose of the Bill.

With respect to Motion No. 5, we are suggesting that the discrimination which is evident in the purpose clause of the Bill could also be reflected in discussing the obligations and responsibilities of the Minister; not with respect to all of the activities of the Minister, but with respect to the seven different responsibilities which are set out in Clause 5. In this motion we are suggesting that one of the responsibilities should be aimed at Canadian-owned businesses. We are not suggesting that with respect to all the activities, because we agree that that would run counter to the purpose of the Bill. But we believe that since the Bill allows for discrimination it should be possible to reflect that discrimination to some degree in the activity of the Minister.

With respect to decision No. 9, which deals with motion No. 13, again we are talking about Clause 5 of the Bill which sets out the responsibilities of the Minister. It strikes me that that clause is a rather unusual clause to have within a Bill. It includes a great many activities of the Minister which are actually quite separate from the activities of the review agency. One of the activities which has traditionally been the responsibility of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has been to promulgate certain codes of conduct for foreign-controlled enterprises within Canada.

For example, in 1975 the then Minister tabled new principles for international business conduct. That dealt with quite a number of the points which we have included in Motion No. 13. We felt that since Clause 5 was attempting to summarize the responsibilities of the Minister with respect to the different categories of enterprise, it was, indeed, proper to include within that a recognition of the Minister's responsibility which has been traditional and which the Minister has exercised to establish and monitor such codes of conduct. In fact, if that were excluded from the points which "the Minister shall" do, it could be taken as a step backward from previous policy, which has included the establishment of the codes of conduct. Again, without entering into the substance of it, our point is that this has traditionally been an area of activity for the Minister, with respect to foreign investment, and it seems to us that it is procedurally correct to raise the point as to whether it should be included in the Bill.

Decision No. 13 dealt with Motion No. 22. It suggested that the motion went beyond the scope of the clause and would infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown. Motion No. 22 seeks to effect the set-up, the structure and format, of the review agency, which is what Clause 7 of the Bill does. Again, it would seem that there is room for differences of opinion as to whether this particular agency should be simply headed by a president or whether it should be headed by a president and a board of directors. As to whether that has potential implications, when the question was raised in committee my answer was that the present Bill, by establishing a president, implies a certain financial commitment to the salary of that president. We are making this amendment with the suggestion that a specific allocation of money should be divided between a full-time president and a seven-person board of directors which would be part-time. Therefore, it would not lead to an extra charge on the Crown.

I would like to speak on decision No. 23 which deals with grouping. It is, perhaps, the most important decision with respect to grouping about which I would like to raise some questions. I do so because Motions Nos. 34, 35, 36 and 38 all deal with the specific threshold levels within the Bill. They are attempts to raise the question of whether we should be talking about lower or higher threshold levels. Motion No. 38(a) does not deal with that. It deals with what we see as a problem within the Bill, that the asset level, which plays a crucial part in setting the categories which are important for the purposes of the Bill, is not effectively defined. Frankly, the problem is that there are different ways to approach an understanding of assets.

Assets can be determined either on an historical basis with depreciation included, or they can be determined on the basis of current market value. With this amendment we are attempting to make it quite clear that it is the current market value of the assets which should establish those levels. It is quite a different point from the point which has been addressed by the other motions.

The next decision with which I would like to deal is decision No. 24. That decision deals with Motion No. 37. In that decision, Mr. Speaker, you suggest that the motion would cause the agency to review the assets of non-Canadians, thereby discriminating against them, which is contrary to the purpose of the Bill. Again, I would make the general point that the purpose of the Bill, in fact, is discriminatory. The nature of the discrimination varies depending on the category, but there is certainly discrimination which exists with respect to non-Canadian controlled firms. It is not a blanket discrimination but the categories differ. Moreover, this motion does not attempt to discriminate against all non-Canadian firms. It simply focuses, as does the Bill itself, on those non-Canadian firms entering the country or establishing new businesses. The new point of concern is that as well as the size of the assets to be taken over, one should be interested in the size of the company doing the taking over. This does not require a review of those assets abroad but it does require that those assets abroad be reported to the Canadian Government, if the company were accepted, in the process of the review procedure.

The next one of your points with which I would like to deal is No. 29, which refers not to my motions but to the motions of my colleague. Those are Motions Nos. 42 to 49. I simply want to make the point that it does seem to me that the Minister has asked for guidance with respect to what is meant by "cultural heritage" and "national identity". These motions attempt to provide that guidance. Again, without entering into the substance, I think that an attempt to do that in the Bill is consistent with the purposes of the Bill and, in fact, was foreseen when the Bill was agreed to at second reading. The Minister in his opening statement to the Standing Committee in fact asked us to be particularly concerned, to raise questions with witnesses, and to provide some advice with respect to these points. Whether these particular motions reflect the advice or not is something that we can debate if they are acceptable. However, it does seem to me that it is consistent with the Bill itself.

The next point I wanted to deal with is No. 32 with respect to Motions Nos. 55 to 61. You suggested, Mr. Speaker, that this appears to introduce new factors into Clause 20 which will affect how net benefits are determined and are, therefore, beyond the scope of the clause. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that clause sets out factors to be taken into account where relevant, and the factors which are presently identified are extremely vague, very broad and cover a wide set of the particular concerns which our proposed amendments themselves attempt to make slightly more specific and pointed.

For instance, the present factors which are to be taken into account note the effect of the investment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada, including the effect on employment. What we attempt to do with, for instance, Motion No. 60 is to make somewhat more specific the way in which that impact on employment is to be taken as a factor for consideration. In that particular case we suggest that we, as Hon. Members of the House, have recognized in a number of the considerations which have taken place in the last six months that one of the important factors in considering the effect of an investment on economic activity affecting employment is the employment equity aspects of that particular impact. So that particular clause is simply expanding on what is already recognized as the concern with employment effects, which is noted in sub-clause (a) of Clause 20.

I could make the same point with respect to each of Motions Nos. 55 through 61. They are attempts not to move beyond the scope of the Bill, not to introduce new factors, but to pinpoint more precisely the particulars of the factors which should be considered where they are relevant, as the opening statement within the clause makes clear. It seems to us particularly important to do this in part because we received representation in the committee from the foreign investment sub-committee of the Canadian Bar Association. It is not substance with which I am seeking to deal here, Mr. Speaker, but the particular factors and the nature of those factors because the Bar Association pointed out to us that there was a vagueness within those factors which seemed to it to not reflect past practice of FIRA. It therefore felt it was important to try to offer somewhat greater clarity. Whether or not our motions do offer that clarity is, of course, a matter for debate, but that is the point. There is an attempt to be more specific, for example, with respect to considering the financial condition of companies which are initiating a take-over bid as one of the factors which will help to determine the likely impact on employment and other activities within the country.

I should perhaps make the point, Mr. Speaker, that this particular ruling is for us especially sensitive because we do feel that this was a case where in committee no questions were raised about the particular motions which were presented, whereas in other cases questions were raised. So I was particularly surprised by the rulings here and have attempted, at somewhat greater length than usual, perhaps, to make quite crystal clear the point we are attempting to make with these motions.

I have just three final points, Mr. Speaker. With respect to your ruling No. 44, you suggest that Motion No. 80 attempts to provide regulatory power which is not contemplated in the Bill, is novel and new to the Bill and, therefore, should not be proposed to the House. I was interested to see you identifying such ambitious purposes behind this motion. In fact, it was quite a minor, almost housekeeping matter, and I will attempt, if I can, to make clear why that is the case.

Clause 35 at this stage includes within it a suggestion that the regulations dealing with cultural heritage and national identity be tabled in front of the House of Commons in terms of this time formula. Our purpose is simply to suggest that it should not just be the regulations which deal with the cultural heritage and national identity part of the Bill but all regulations which deal with the Bill. The point is not, therefore, to include new regulatory powers but simply to see to it that, as with the specific regulations which deal with cultural heritage or a national identity, all regulations dealing with whatever aspects of the putting into effect of this Bill should go before the House, not for approval but simply to provide notice.

The next point I would like to comment on is No. 46, in which you make certain points with respect to Motions Nos. 82 and 83. I do not wish to raise questions about your ruling with respect to those motions, but I would suggest with respect that Motions Nos. 85 to 88 are not consequential on Motions Nos. 82, 83 and 84, but are simply attempts, as with some of the other points we have presented as motions and which you have accepted, to introduce greater public accountability and greater public access to what is taking place with respect to this important subject. So I would appreciate it if you could review those particular points again and see if they are indeed consequential.

Finally, and I appreciate your patience on these matters, with respect to your decision No. 50 dealing with Motion No. 94, you have suggested that motion is inconsistent with the interpretation clause and goes against the principle of the Bill as agreed to by the House at second reading stage. I would simply make the point that it is quite possible to have the purposes of this Bill put into effect with the Minister having basic responsibility, or the Governor in Council having over-all responsibility, for what is taking place with respect to the purpose. The motion attempts to raise that question for debate.

In that sense I do not think it runs against the principle of the Bill, although it is certainly something which the Government has indicated its disagreement with in committee. The motion involved was accepted in committee for debate and it was felt proper at least to have the debate on whether, as some witnesses have suggested, it makes more sense to put it under the Minister or more sense to have some Cabinet responsibility with respect to this important area. We feel it is appropriate to debate this at report stage even though it is not perhaps something on which we would make quite as strong a case as we have with respect to some of the other points I have been bringing before you today.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be as brief as possible but I want first of all to thank you and the House officials for your excellent and very comprehensive ruling. Given the large number of motions before us, it is obvious that many hours of work went into preparing this ruling and I, for one, found it very useful in considering what procedural arguments would be appropriate.

I want first of all to deal with those motions about which you have expressed some reservations and then deal with another motion which raised some doubts in my mind and which you may also want to consider with respect to admissibility at the conclusion. Since my colleagues in the opposition have dealt with all of the motions, I think I will just run down the motions about which you have raised some reservations in your preliminary ruling and give you my views with respect to the acceptability or otherwise of the motions.

Dealing first with Motion No. 3, the reservations you brought forward at the time were that this motion violates the principle of the Bill and is argumentative. I support you in that inasmuch as the principle of the Bill is violated because it proposes to change the purpose of the Bill in which the principle is clearly explained. I refer, of course, to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5), and Citation 423 which says:

> A motion should be neither argumentative, nor in the style of a speech, nor contain unnecessary provisions or objectionable words. It is usually expressed in the affirmative, even where its purpose and effect are negative.

Dealing with Motion No. 5, I would remind you again that in committee all these amendments were ruled inadmissible because one of the principles of the Bill is that the Minister should encourage investment in Canada both by Canadians and non-Canadians, whereas this motion would restrict assistance to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement to Canadians only. This I submit, Sir, is clearly contrary to the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading stage. Again I refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5).

With respect to Motion No. 21, it proposes a new agency whose purpose is entirely at variance with the intent of the Bill and I suggest to you, Sir, it is clearly out of order. The authority for that is Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1).

Motion No. 22 suggests the appointment of a board of directors. Clearly no board was contemplated by the Bill. With respect to the financial implications, the directors would incur expenses which would necessitate a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, which violates the principle of the prerogative of financial initiative on the part of the Crown. The authority is Citation 514(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

With respect to Motion No. 29, by virtue of this motion the agency's role and function would be greatly expanded over those contemplated in the Bill, hence it is beyond the principle contained in the Bill. I cite Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1). It is doubtful that the amendment is offered at the right place since the rest of the clause concerns itself with the kinds of investments to be subject to notification and does not concern itself with the role and function of the agency. The authority I quote is Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, 773(3). Clearly the expanded functions of the agency would impose a fresh charge on the Treasury and as such would require a Royal Recommendation.

Moving on to Motion No. 33, it is highly questionable whether Parliament has the right or indeed jurisdiction to create a Cabinet committee by Act of Parliament. Clearly I suggest this goes well beyond the scope of the Bill. I think you had indicated the consequential amendments were found irregular on the above ground, namely Motions Nos. 54, 62, 65, 66, 71, 92 and 93.

Motion No. 39, as on Motion No. 5, I suggest—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt? I noted particularly that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) did not mention Motion No. 73 as being consequential. Was there some reason for that? The original indication was that we had found Motion No. 73 as consequential. I take it that he is not making a case that it is not consequential?

• (1200)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is consequential.

Mr. Speaker: The case is not being made that it is not consequential?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No. With respect to Motion No. 39, as with Motion No. 5, this is contrary to the purpose of the Act and out of order.

With respect to Motion No. 40, this proposal was clearly not contemplated in the Bill and would be contrary to the purpose of encouraging investment in Canada as agreed to at second reading. Again, the authority is Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5).

With respect to Motions No. 42 to 49, all these types of investment, notwithstanding the representations made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), are entirely new to the Bill and completely beyond its scope. Motion No. 51, being a consequential amendment to the preceding motion, is also out of order.

Dealing with Motion No. 64, the amendment would add a definition to the Act which was not contained in the Bill itself, namely a definition of "net benefit". I suggest that this is clearly beyond the scope of the Bill. The authority is Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1).

Motions Nos. 78 and 79 seek to impose a definition of "acquisition of control" which is much different from the Bill as agreed to. In the Bill, one-third of voting shares of publicly traded companies if acquired is considered "acquisition of control", whereas the amendment would reduce that level to 5 per cent, thus expanding the jurisdiction of the agency well beyond that which was agreed to at second reading.

This expansion of jurisdiction of the agency seems to be beyond the scope of the Bill. Again, the authority is Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1). Dealing with Motion No. 82 in the name of the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), the committee has not been given the power to approve regulations emanating from the Bill as agreed to at the second reading stage, whereas this amendment would grant this power which is beyond the scope of the Bill. Again, the authority is Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1).

Motion No. 83 which was put forward by the Member for Essex-Windsor would see all information gathered under the Act made public whereas the Bill as agreed to at second reading calls for the information to remain privileged. Clearly this is contrary to the principle of the Bill. I refer you to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5). Motions Nos. 84 through 88 are all consequential to Motion No. 83 and should be ruled out of order for the same reasons.

Let us move on to Motions No. 90 and 91. These proposed motions seek to require that the agency undertake to compile and prepare many reports not foreseen when the House agreed to the Bill at second reading. As well, the preparation of such reports would require expenditures not contemplated in the Royal Recommendation. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 540, would apply in this case. Citation 540 states:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the Royal Recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of the charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

Motion No. 94 in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor clearly is contrary to the principle of ministerial direction which is contained in the Bill as agreed to at second reading. Again, the authority is Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5).

I would now like to turn to Motion No. 14 which seems to go beyond the scope of the Bill as well. The amendment, if adopted, would in my view, greatly expand the powers of the Minister well beyond those contemplated in the Bill. If accepted, this amendment would in my submission, call on the Minister to exercise powers which do not fall within his jurisdiction and may indeed infringe upon provincial labour jurisdictions. Furthermore, this motion is redundant inasmuch as it calls for the Minister to ensure that employers respect bargaining rights of workers whose rights are at present amply protected by the Charter of Rights, the Canadian Labour Code and provincial labour legislation.

I submit that Motion No. 14 is irrelevant to the Bill and beyond its scope and ought to be inadmissible if we are to continue the practice amply outlined in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1), which reads:

An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived.

Therein ends the lesson, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: First, may I thank Hon. Members for their enlightened arguments. May I also get myself into deep trouble by congratulating all three intervenors on the quality of their arguments and suggest that procedural arguments are perhaps the most limiting and difficult arguments to make in the House and I was very impressed.

Obviously, the Chair will take the time to examine these arguments and come back to the House at a later date with a definitive ruling. For the moment, debate will resume on Motions Nos. 1 and 2 now before the House.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I would note with some satisfaction that this Bill has received the usual attention given to a Bill at committee stage. I want to make it perfectly clear at the onset of my intervention that we as an opposition are not opposing this Bill for the sake of opposing. We feel very strongly that some important measures are not in this Bill. We hope that the Government will listen carefully to the debate that will take place at this stage of the Bill and will agree to the inclusion of some amendments prior to its receiving Royal Assent.

The reason for my concern is that I represent an area of this country which has been adversely affected in past years by companies that have invested in Sudbury and small one-industry towns throughout northern Ontario simply from the standpoint of making a profit and without regard to any benefits to Canadians who live in those one-industry towns.

That is why our Party is greatly concerned about the wording of this clause of the Bill with respect to the very wide and unusual definition of "benefit". It is unusual in the sense that it does not specifically include what the Government of the day means by a benefit to Canadians.

The previous Liberal Government had in place the Foreign Investment Review Act which established the Foreign Investment Review Agency. That agency, by its name, implied that there would always be a review of any application by a foreign multinational or foreign investor before buying out a Canadian enterprise. We made it very clear in that review that we wished to have a definition of what benefits that company's take-over would have on the affected companies and their employees.

I think it is important to note for Canadians, despite the rhetoric by the Conservative Party and the Government about the adverse effect of FIRA on foreign investment in this country, that from 1975 to 1984, with the exception of 1981 when the implementation of the National Energy Program dictated that many Canadian dollars would flow outside Canada for the purchase of Petrofina, there was a steady increase in the number of dollars invested in Canada. In other words, the perception that FIRA was responsible for a decline in foreign investment in Canada is simply that. It is not fact. It is a perception that was held by the Opposition at that time and I think it was used to put forward the case that FIRA was not beneficial to Canadians and had to be overhauled.

The Tories have replaced FIRA with Investment Canada. I do not want Canadians to go away once this Bill is passed through Parliament with the impression that Investment Canada is not going to have any review function. There will be a review made by the Government under Investment Canada. What is disturbing is that there is no definition of what that review should entail. There is no definition of what the Conservative Government means by a benefit to Canadians.

As I said at the outset of my remarks today, I come from an area of our country that we call a one-industry area. It is not unusual. We have outside of the major urban centres of Canada, Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver and I suppose to some extent, Mr. Speaker, from that great city you represent of Edmonton and one other to the south, the very distinguished city by the name of Calgary, a large percentage of our population living in one-industry towns. That is why the previous Liberal Government placed importance on having a Department of Regional Economic Expansion so we could at least, by use of proper tax incentives and tax grants, entice certain companies to locate in those areas of the country economically deprived in relation to other urban centres of Canada. Having grown up in an area of the country so dependent on a one-industry town, I am more than aware of the requirements that a Government at least have a proper review done of any take-over by companies that operate in one-industry towns.

Under the previous Bill, the Foreign Investment Review Act, we did give a definition of what "benefit" meant. We wanted to make sure that it was quite specific that technological transfer would be prevented by a take-over of a company in Canada. By that benefit we wanted to know what it meant in terms of job opportunities for Canadians who lived in these one-industry towns of which I speak. We wanted to protect job opportunities not only for the workers who are presently operating in those firms but for the next generation of Canadians. If we are going to have a viable economic base in these areas of Canada that depend so much on one industry, there has to be some degree of Government intervention to be sure those job opportunities will exist for the next generation.

I have a great deal of concern about the direction this Government is now taking on the disposal of Crown corporations. Concerning the idea of transfer of technology, let us contemplate the possible sale of the Crown corporations de Havilland and Canadair. There is no question in my mind that Canadians should be proud of the technology that has been developed in the aviation field. That technology has led to the production of aircraft that will be used in world-wide markets, namely, the Dash-7, Dash-8 and the Challenger jet. These products will have the majority of their sales outside the national boundaries of Canada. Once you have products that can be sold on a world market basis with a world mandate as a result of technology developed here in Canada, you have the guarantee that Canadians can benefit in terms of job security and job creation because of the technology acquired in our country.

This section of the Bill gives me a great deal of concern. It does not require the possible purchaser of one of those two Crown corporations, as an example, to guarantee that the technologies developed at Canadair and de Havilland will not simply be taken up as a sponge with water, removing the assets of those Crown corporations and transferring them to a foreign country. There is nothing in the Bill to prevent that. I think you would agree with me, being the impartial man that you are, Mr. Speaker, that the kind of technology developed by those particular industries that benefit in this case not particularly the hinterland region of our country but mainly Montreal and Toronto would be adversely affected if we did not define in this Bill what a benefit meant. As far as I am concerned, a Bill worth anything with respect to Investment Canada has to guarantee that in the event that we are going to have foreign companies buy out these national companies such as Canadair and de Havilland, that they guarantee there shall not be a transfer of that technology which we as Canadians have paid for in research and development grants, in dollars from this Government, over the past few years.

With respect to the definition of "benefit" in this Investment Canada Bill, there is no guarantee that the jobs presently held by people living in Toronto and Montreal will be retained. I think Canadians would expect that if we are going to have a wholesale change in our Crown corporation structure, at least the Investment Canada Bill should spell out in detail what is meant by benefits and not leave it to some commission or board of bureaucrats to define. I think the fact that we want to protect that technology should not be in the control of bureaucrats but under the control of the political masters of this country who know how so important technology is to their constituents.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as you know, during the recently put arguments by my colleague on the admissibility of certain of our amendments we indicated that our intentions have been to make more clear the intent of the legislation. We would like to establish some guidelines that can be more easily understood and to set out in the Bill some reference to terms and conditions that might be deemed to be appropriate by the Government of Canada in the interests of Canada when dealing with questions of foreign investment in our country.

I think it is fair to say that we have benefited over the years from foreign investment. I do not think anyone would deny that. There have been areas where the investment itself, though beneficial in the first instance, turned out to be less than beneficial in the long run. The Government has the responsibility now, as it has had in the past, to make sure that the benefit we derive from investment is not simply immediate. The view being expressed at the moment tends to be that whatever we can get now, let us get it and hope that it works well in the future. We should be looking at assuring ourselves, when we do permit investors to enter Canada, whether to purchase an existing company or to set up a new one, that there is a clear understanding of their obligations to Canada and the benefits we will derive will be more than simply a handful of jobs that may or may not have any lasting benefit either to the employees or to the communities in which they locate.

I say that because I have had experience over the last few years in dealing with a number of companies that have come into Canada with great fanfare under the legislation still in effect, namely the Foreign Investment Review Act. At the time companies were establishing their claims before the Foreign Investment Review Act, they often promised all manner of wonderful things. It was not uncommon when reviewing the permission sheet setting out the conditions that had to be met under the various categories to draw the conclusion that this was to be a long-term investment resulting not only in jobs immediately but in development of new technology from which Canada would derive immediate and long-term benefit. We were to begin to see develop within that operation engineering and scientific developments which would cause sort of a mushrooming effect within that segment of the economy. Out of all that Canada was to have opportunities for university graduates and the universities themselves to undertake new courses. There were to be all kinds of useful and probably desirable side effects. However, the promises having been made were about as much value as the paper on which they were written.

Quite frequently, after a relatively short period of time the company failed to live up to its obligations. It failed to provide jobs. It failed to provide new technology. It failed to provide new research and development. We asked the Government at the time, as did you, Mr. Speaker, to require that the company live up to its obligations. Inevitably the answer came back that economic conditions had changed, that the company, after all, knew more about its operations than we did and that, therefore, if it chose not to abide by the terms and conditions established at the onset of its locating in Canada, it was really too bad, that was all that could be said.

We are trying to make clear what we expect in terms of performance. For example, at one time in Canada there was an operation known as Otis Elevators. At that time it was called Otis-Fenson, but it became Otis Elevators and was in the forefront of conveying people automatically whether by escalator or by elevator. It was on the leading edge of the new technology. It employed substantially large numbers of people. It built all around the world. In fact, there was hardly a building in Canada of any size which did not have an Otis product.

Then along came United Technologies. United Technologies is a company which is well known in its home state of New Jersey for its harsh treatment of communities and for not living up to its obligations. At the time United Technologies applied for permission to take over Otis I personally objected, along with many other Members. I pointed out that its record of performance was one of which we could not be proud, that its record would not stand any kind of test with regard to good corporate behaviour. I suggested that it would be inappropriate for the review agency of the day to approve the take-over. It was approved anyway. We were to get more jobs, new technology, new engineering and all kinds of wonderful world mandates. We were to grow by leaps and bounds. The new Otis was to be in the forefront of world technology and, by God, Canada was to be a recipient of all the benefits.

Well, Otis is almost closed now. A handful of people now work there. All the viable parts of the operation have been shipped away to other parts of the world. All that is left is a very tiny operation. Where once there were hundreds of employees, there are now less than a hundred. By all statements and indications, within the next very short period of time the company will cease to exist in Canada in any meaningful or worth-while way. This angers me, but there is no point in getting angry any longer about it. It distresses me that the Government did not pursue with sufficient vigour and diligence its responsibilities to Canada when it gave permission to United Technologies to take over that vibrant and large employer.

I sense that the new Conservative Government, unless we are able to get certain kinds of amendments incorporated into this Bill, is even less willing to extract from those who would be prepared to invest the kinds of commitments which would ensure that Canada would receive lasting benefit. Also I sense that there is a feeling in the Government that any investment is good investment and that any technology is good technology, notwithstanding the fact that our experience shows that that is frequently not the case. I could refer to a whole list of them, but I chose that one because it is a larger one.

I notice Mr. Speaker indicating that I have only a minute remaining, but experience shows it is not true that just because some major corporation or some investor some place else happens to have money to invest, it will necessarily benefit Canada. Therefore, we have to be absolutely clear in the legislation that not only do we hope to see new investment—and we do—but that there will be appropriate terms and conditions established by the Government with regard to the kind of technology and the commitment to future growth any potential investor must undertake. We have to be absolutely clear right from the outset that the United Technologies of the world—and there are many of them; I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) will remember the United Technologies take-over of Otis—no matter how much money they are prepared to put in, no matter how much they are prepared to commit themselves on paper, are of no long-term value to Canada. The only thing which can save us from the manipulation which that kind of corporation undertakes is firm guidelines established in law.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is very kind of you to recognize a Conservative. I notice that there are not as many of us jumping up and down as there are members of the Opposition. There is a very good reason for this. The debate so far on this Bill has flogged it to death. The same old arguments are being rehashed time and time again by members of the Opposition. It is a stated fact that we on this side of the House do not rise to engage in that type of activity. We only rise when we have something sensible to say. That is precisely what I will do right now.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Nickerson: I hope that I will not be the exception to the rule. What I am about to do will utterly confound you, Mr. Speaker, because I intend to speak to Motion Nos. 1 and 2 that are before us. No other speaker has done that as yet.

Motions Nos. 1 and 2 deal with the preamble or the statement of purpose of the Bill. I do not really like the idea of writing down preambles or statements of purpose in Bills. Perhaps it would be better to have a bunch of "whereas" clauses prefacing a Bill. In my opinion one should be able to determine the intent of a Bill by reading it. One does not need to have a statement of purpose at the front of it. It serves no useful objective in statute law. That is certainly the position I take. It lends itself to all kinds of flowery language, all kinds of motherhood statements.

• (1230)

That is precisely what we have in the three versions of the preamble from which we have to choose today. We talk about increasing capital, increasing technology, encouraging investment and all this type of thing. I do not think that adds anything to the actual law that is contained in the Bill before us. In statute law or in legislation we should try to confine ourselves to giving directions to people to do something or to writing down prohibitions, that people are not allowed to do something else, together with the necessary definitions and a list of penalties. If we can avoid political statements and flowery language which is rather meaningless in law, we should certainly avoid that.

What we have before us is a choice of three statements of purpose. To be quite frank, I do not really like any of them. At the end of my presentation I will make a proposal, not in the form of a motion but just as a suggestion, as to what I think the statement of purpose would be which would most accurately reflect that which is contained in the Bill. Each of the choices before us is kind of coloured with the ideology of the Party that is proposing it.

The NDP proposal is the one that I would write off almost immediately. What they want to do is to impose their view of life and the way that society should be ordered by saying that terms and conditions established by the Government would govern any type of investment in Canada. In fact, they say it is the Government that can determine better than people in private industry what is good for business in Canada. I certainly would not subscribe to that point of view. I would therefore write off the NDP suggestion.

Let us look at the proposal of the Liberals. If we had to make a choice among the three proposals, I suspect that theirs might most accurately reflect what is actually in the Bill. It is not that good, but it is not that bad either. All you would have to do to make it acceptable would be to change the wording a little in the fourth line to say in the third and fourth lines, "The purpose of this Act is to provide for the notification and review of certain proposed investments in Canada". They say "all proposed investments in Canada", but that is not the purpose of the Bill. The purpose of the Bill is only to bring the provisions of the Act into effect on certain investments, not all investments.

The whole idea behind the Bill is to get away from the existing law of FIRA, which has to review every application and, therefore, clogs up the whole machinery of Government. If we look at the original wording in the Bill, that proposed by the Government, we can see a few faults with it. I suspect that an expert grammarian might well find that there are some mistakes with grammar, especially in the English version. The French version does not quite say the same thing. It appears to be a little better.

In that preamble we talk about encouraging investment in Canada by Canadians. That is a good political objective. I am sure everybody in this House wants that to happen. It is a very good statement of purpose, but it ain't the purpose of this Bill. If you read this Bill, Mr. Speaker, it does not deal with that aspect of investment whatsoever. The statement of purpose of the supposed Bill is much wider than the Bill itself. It is a good political objective, a good objective for all Canadians, but it does not really refer to what is in the Bill.

In concluding my short presentation on this business, I would propose the following preamble or statement of purpose, if we need to have one at all. I would make this refer to exactly what is in the Bill. My statement, my purpose of the Act, my Clause 2 would read simply as follows: "The purpose of this Act is to provide for the review of significant investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure benefit to Canada". That, in my opinion, is a very simple statement. It is accurate. It reflects precisely what is in that Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to oppose the views of the Government, which is responsible for introducing Bills. However, we must be very careful and examine Bills very thoroughly, as my colleagues did on committee, to ensure that they are in the interests of our country and in the interests of the people of that country. What worries us is the general philosophy of this Bill. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who moved an amendment to Clause 2, was very careful to make sure this Bill would not be an open invitation to anyone outside Canada, an invitation indicating that, to quote the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney): "We are open for business". I may add that I agree it has been the custom of this country to welcome foreign investment, and that our current prosperity and standard of living are at least partly due to the fact that we have had foreign investment in this country, but we must make sure such investment is not uncontrolled.

There must be some control on foreign investment in this country. Just because someone tells us: I have a couple of million or billion to invest, does not mean we have to roll out the welcome mat right away. For instance—I see two of my colleagues from the Province of Quebec and two from the Maritime Provinces—I do not think it would promote regional development to ask investors to come and set up shop in this country, because we believe that if foreign investment in this country is not regulated, it will go where? To Southern Ontario, to add to the wealth of an area of this country that is already wealthy enough. I am not saying it should not be any wealthier than it is, but it should not get economically fatter at the expense of the Maritime Provinces or the Province of Quebec or even certain areas in the Western Provinces. I think we have a duty to act this way.

Mr. Speaker, some people say that FIRA was a disaster. However, if I remember correctly, and I hope my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry will correct me if I am wrong, that in spite of that disastrous institution called FIRA, last year we had more than $4 billion worth of investment in Canada. I want someone to correct me if I am wrong, because I would not wish to mislead the House, but I understand that these investments were approved because they were in the best interests of the Canadian people. When this Bill was introduced in the House, I said that one of my main concerns and I am reminded of this when I see the young people who work for us in the House of Commons was to ensure that Canadian jobs would be protected. What assurance do we have that the jobs of our young Canadians will be protected by this Bill? What assurance do we have that it will protect small businesses, which have far fewer resources to protect themselves against massive investment? In my view, one of the problems we should consider is the definition of cultural identity in Canada. How can we be sure, when we look at the problems throughout our cultural industries which are faced with a giant competitor, and I am not even talking about the Francophone community—

● (1240)

[English]

I am not particularly worried about the cultural identity of the Francophone community at this time, but I am extremely concerned about the cultural industries of English-Canada that have much more competition from our southern neighbour which tells us there will be protection. We are not against the Government having the right to legislate. We are only calling upon government Members to reflect on the matter and see that it is essential that we protect Canadian industries.

I am not for "Canada first, Canada only". We live in a competitive world and we must accept outside investment. Outside investment has been good for Canada; there is no doubt about that. However, I challenge government Members to show me a country in this world that is not careful about outside investment. Why should Canada be different from any other country in the world?

We are not being anti-American. The United States is our best market. If my memory serves me correctly, 72.6 per cent of our trade is with the United States. Does being careful about our Canadian institutions and industries mean that we are being anti-American? Are we being anti-American when we ask questions like how much assurance we have that we will have our fair share of research and development? Research and development is very important to Canada. It is very important to the young generation that is now being educated at immense cost.

Think of the money that is being invested in the universities in Newfoundland, for instance, in order to give the best education to the young people of Newfoundland. This is being done at immense cost. Often young people graduating from this university cannot find jobs in their home province and have to go to other provinces and in particular Ontario. Think of all the young people in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island where there is no development whatsoever. These young people have to immigrate within Canada in order to find jobs because there are not enough jobs in their home provinces.

If it were the policy of my Party to be anti-American, I would denounce that policy. It is not anti-American to be careful and to protect our institutions and investments. It is not anti-American to have certain rules, rules which are not stupid but exist for the protection of our Canadian industries, our researchers and those who wish to develop and invest in Canada in the best interests of Canadians.

We are not being unfair. We are not unfairly taking up the time of the House collectively to reflect on the need for care. I listened to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who spoke a few moments ago. Some Members of this House listen to each other. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic himself is not totally satisfied with the actual definition of the purpose of the Bill. If I understood the Hon. Member correctly, he is not making an amendment but he would like to make a suggestion for a different definition of the purpose.

My hon. colleague who put forward this amendment has a suggestion as well. It may not be the same suggestion the Hon. Member for Western Arctic has in mind, but even the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, a government Member—and I am not trying to divide the Government—has at heart, as do other Members, the best interests of Canada. This is not a partisan matter. The Hon. Member has told us that he would like to see a purpose for this Bill that differs from the one put forward by the Government.

I do not wish to take all of the time that is at my disposal. However, I would like to say that it is the right of all Members to reflect on this matter. We are told that under the new Government we are living in a new era. If this is so, and if some amendments put forward by the Opposition seem to improve the Bill, why would the Government not accept these amendments in good faith having in mind the interests of Canada?

I am sure the Hon. Member for Western Arctic will support me wholeheartedly in suggesting that the Government listen attentively to all the speeches that will be made and to all the amendments that will be put forward, whether they come from NDP Members with whom I disagree from time to time, from Members of the Official Opposition or from Members of the Government. If these amendments are in the best interests of Canada, I do not see why the Government should not accept them.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to follow the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and to hear his very thoughtful words. As well, it is always a pleasure to hear once again from the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and his always interesting perspective on the discussion at hand.

As we discuss this very important Bill and as we discuss at the moment the purpose of this particular Bill, I would like to recognize that what we are discussing today is the importance and extent of foreign ownership in our country. When looking at foreign investment in any western industrialized nation and the subsequent amount of foreign control, I challenge Members opposite to identify one single country which comes even near to having the same amount of foreign control as we have here in Canada.

It is important that we as parliamentarians recognize that we are discussing a matter of profound importance that reflects upon the foreign control of our economy. We must recognize that there is more foreign control over our economy than any other western industrialized nation. As a matter of fact, there is more foreign control over our economy than there is over the economies of most nations of the world, industrialized or non-industrialized. In rather simplistic terms, that means that future economic development decisions for Canada are being made not in offices in Kamloops, Vancouver, Toronto or Montreal but in offices in Houston, New York, Tokyo, Hamburg and London. I do not think anyone would suggest that a parent company located in Tokyo would make corporate decisions with their first priority being jobs and the development of technology and new markets in Canada.

At this time 1.5 million Canadians are out of work and a great many young Canadians are about to leave universities, colleges and high schools. These graduates will be seeking employment for the first time. The futures of the plants, mines and offices in which they would like to work are being determined not in Canada but in other countries. There is no other country that tolerates this kind of situation.

Let us assume that this discussion was taking place today in the American Congress. I think we would all agree that the manufacturing sector of an economy is the most critical sector in terms of dynamic growth and expansion. If the American economy's manufacturing sector was 48 per cent owned and controlled by outside interests, Congress would be in an absolute uproar. Congress would find it completely and utterly intolerable.

The manufacturing sector of the American economy is owned 3 per cent by outside interests. Many Congressmen are concerned about the level of foreign influence over their economy. Yet our manufacturing sector is 48 per cent foreign controlled. If we were to look at other sectors, it would be much higher. What I am saying is that no other country would tolerate this situation. But what is the new Government doing? It is saying that we should have more foreign investment in Canada. In fact, Canada has more foreign ownership than any other western industrialized nation. The Government is saying that there should be more foreign investment and control over the economy and that there should be fewer regulations and controls, and less monitoring.

• (1250)

Other industrialized nations, such as Norway, Austria and Japan, have their own versions of FIRA. They have their own versions of a government body which reflects the views of the people of those nations. After all, that is what a government does. We should not be hesitant about having government guidelines, directions or regulations, because the government which determines them is a reflection of the people of the country. This Government reflects the economy, corporate and labour interests of Canada. What we are talking about is simply a reflection of what the people of Canada want. When no other country in the world leaves its borders wide open to foreign investment and foreign involvement in its economy, why should we be taking steps to open our borders even wider to foreign involvement? The logic escapes me.

I come from a constituency in which single-industry towns play a very important role in the economy. Entire communities are based on a single plant or mine. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic also has a number of those settlements and communities in his constituency.

Mr. Nickerson: I have no-industry towns.

Mr. Riis: He has no-industry towns. Well, I suppose that is an interesting point, although I suspect the fur trappers might disagree. But Kamloops-Shuswap, which is a one-industry town, has developed as a result of foreign investment and control over the local economy. In the case of that sawmill, the decisions are not made in Vavenby, Savona, or in the town in which it is located. Nor are the decisions made in Kamloops, which is the central urban centre for that region, Vancouver or Toronto. They are made in Florida because that is where the head office is located. The company wanted to expand into new areas and needed some cash to develop in those areas, so it decided that it was in the best interests of the corporation to close down a major mill and put about 600 people out of work. The mill was closed not because it was not profitable, or because of any difficulties in local affairs, but because it was part of the corporate planning to close down that operation. If the parent company had been located in Canada, I am not certain that the same decision would have been made. I use that as an example of the general assumption which has been made with this Bill, that any kind of foreign investment and foreign involvement in Canada is good.

Mr. Nickerson: You have not read the Bill.

Mr. Riis: My hon. colleague from Western Arctic has suggested that I have not read the Bill. I have read every clause of the Bill. I have made notes on every clause of the Bill, and I plan to speak to about 150 motions over the next two months if that is what is necessary. I will do that to try to convince Members opposite that there are better ways in which to approach this matter. The Hon. Member who suggested that I have not read the Bill will be encouraged by my remarks, stage by stage, as we go through the Investment Canada Bill.

I come from a part of Canada which has large cattle ranches. The cattle industry is a major industry. Because there are no restrictions or regulations governing investment in that industry, a number of major Europeans have invested in it. A number of Europeans have purchased large cattle ranches. They are all absentee landowners. They do not plan to use the investment as a major base of operations. In a sense, it is a way in which they can diversify their capital outside Europe. The kind of agricultural activity which results is very different. It is not in the best interests of the local economy, nor is it in the best interests of the local towns and villages which service the cattle industry. It is for this and many other reasons that I am concerned about the purpose of the Bill, as outlined in Clause 2.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill C-15, but considering the late hour I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to call it one o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreeable to that?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that there is not unanimous consent for the proposal.

[Translation]

Mrs. Killens: Very well, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking today to the first amendment to Bill C-15 because, if the amendments now under consideration were to be rejected, I would be concerned.

Mr. Speaker, reading the amendment ought to be enough to see that it makes sense. It is only normal that we in the Official Opposition try to protect Canadian investors while at the same time extending fair welcome to foreign investors. I suggest that the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary take a closer look at the Canadian situation. The United States is not the only country with which we could do business; other nations are interested as well in participating as investors to create employment in Canada, an issue which has been the subject of many debates.

Throughout the last election campaign the Conservative Party promised the moon, but you know that, as in the case of last summer's rallying of the great sailships in Quebec City, Canadian men and women do not always believe what they see or hear. We might have a repeat performance with this piece of legislation should the House fail to adopt the proposed amendments.

If we intent to promote equity in foreign investment, it stands to reason that we would seek to protect and attract investments beneficial to Canada and, consequently, to all Canadians. We want to use this measure to help Canadian investors, but it would be regrettable if they were to be discouraged and give up as a result of overly generous treatment of foreign investors by the Government.

The Government has to keep the upper hand with this Bill by leaving the door open to some form of control over investment projects of non-Canadians. It might very well welcome the participation of those investors in the creation of jobs in Canada, but under certain conditions. Proof would be required that such investments would spur Canada's economic growth. The wording of the first amendment is so clear that we simply fail to understand why Hon. Members across the aisle do not realize what it would do for investment in Canada. Our first concern is to promote job creation, fair enough. Nobody can possibly be against job creation in this country.

In one of my earlier intervention on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I drew the attention of Hon. Members to the significant role of women in Canada's economic sector.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ADMIRATION INSPIRED BY ARMENIAN PEOPLE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we marked the tragic anniversary of the atrocious massacre seventy years ago of thousands of Armenians. Armenia, land of princes and cradle of civilization, had often suffered the horrors of war and persecution, but its blackest day was on April 24, 1915, when hundreds of thousands of Armenians, men, women and children, were killed. The world was aghast. People could hardly believe what had happened.

Today, we remember, and we sympathize with the vast majority of Armanians who commemorate this day as law-abiding and peace-loving citizens. We remember their tragic history, not in order to revive feelings of hate but to instill in ourselves a horror of what hate can do. We shall never let the horror of this act be forgotten. At the same time, we admire the Armenian people who survived the terrible suffering inflicted on them.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, a great number of federal pensioners with the Public Service of Canada are expressing concern over the announcement made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) last week which talks about an end to pension indexing for public service pensions.

That announcement came in the course of a generally positive agreement with the Public Service unions relating to master contract bargaining. However, there is no agreement with respect to the elimination of indexation provisions for the Public Service pension plan. That kind of an agreement has not been reached, and it is wrong for the Minister to suggest that federal superannuates may have lost their current form of indexing in favour of a vague and unspecified system of inflation protection.

What is happening is that there will be joint management of the federal Public Service plan, and that joint management will include new means by which inflation protection will be administered, but it should be made very clear, however, that indexing is not being taken away.

The President of the Treasury Board should know that his remarks have inspired fear and panic in the minds of many federal superannuates, both in my riding of Ottawa Centre and across Canada. The Federal Superannuates' National Association reports that it has been besieged by calls and correspondence from its membership asking for clarification of the Government's announcement.

I don't think what happened was fair, and I suggest that the President of the Treasury Board should make a statement to clarify that no deal has been struck to end pension indexing and, further, to reassure these senior citizens, who have contributed so long to the Government of Canada, that the Government does not entertain any such plans in its negotiations—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE ADMINISTRATION

SAVINGS ACHIEVED THROUGH CONTRACT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on September 4 last the people of Canada in every province and territory of our country spoke loudly and clearly in giving the Progressive Conservative Party, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, a mandate to govern Canada, to cut costs, and to get full value for every dollar spent. The Progressive Conservative Government is doing this and yet, in spite of the mandate, the Liberals and New Democrats daily obstruct and oppose in order to prevent the Government from carrying out its mandate. Many instances can be quoted, but look at the last one.

The Government let a contract which will save the people of Canada at least a half a million dollars, and just because the company has a relative in the Cabinet, the Opposition cry loud and long. Had the contract been given to friends of the Liberals or the New Democratic Party at twice the price, the way the last Government worked, not a word would have been heard.

Our Government and the Ministers involved should be applauded for saving $500,000 of the people's money, but the Opposition doesn't say a word about the savings. It wallows in the garbage pit of character assassination. Go ahead, Mike and Harvie, keep saving money and getting full value for every dollar spent. Ignore the obstructionists. The Canadian people are right behind you.

APPOINTMENTS—CRITERIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, for several weeks, in fact for over six months, the Opposition parties in this House have been attacking every single appointment made by this Government since it was elected. The Liberals are doing this quite shamelessly and take a moralizing tone that is hardly appropriate in their case. As for the New Democratic Party, it is green with envy, since it knows perfectly well it will never have this privilege.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals who held sway over this country for 75 years were never very fussy about practising nepotism and acting as if they owned the country.

On September 4, Mr. Speaker, Canadians voted for sweeping changes, and it therefore makes perfect sense for a new Government to proceed with a large number of appointments at all levels of government administration. This Government was elected with a clear mandate to govern this country and make decisions, and it is therefore imperative that it should seek out competent and trustworthy people to carry out the policies it has formulated.

Mr. Speaker, Monday evening I was listening to an open-line program on the French CBC network, and the vast majority of callers agreed with and supported without reservation the appointments made by this Government. It is important to listen to public opinion, and I am convinced that the majority of Canadians agree with the attitude taken by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in this matter and the choices he has made. What Canadians want above all, Mr. Speaker, is competence, and they trust the judgment of our Prime Minister.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PERTINENCE OF STATEMENTS MADE UNDER S.O. 21

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that Conservative Members are still under the impression that the 15-minute statement period is designed for self-congratulory messages. Mr. Speaker, it has reached the point where Progressive Conservative Members take the floor to pat themselves on the back for all those patronage appointments. Just about the only thing they can do, Mr. Speaker, is to rise to congratulate one another and rejoice about the "Smiling Brian of Baie-Comeau Fan Club" where people pay $100 for the privilege of attending benefit luncheons to fill Party coffers. And yet, Mr. Speaker, that same Party is opposed to any amendment in the interest of 80,000 elderly Canadians who feel deprived. The behaviour of Progressive Conservative Members is scandalous.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER CORPORATION—WINDSOR ENGINE PLANT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, Chrysler Corporation has just announced a major new joint venture with Samsung Corporation in Korea to produce auto parts. This direction will lead over the years ahead to severe pressures on Canadian parts producers who will be placed in direct competition with a country where trade union rights are far less respected than here in Canada.

Since Chrysler clearly has many funds available for investment now—this project is suggested to cost over $350 million—I call upon Chrysler to come through on the promise it made when it received loan guarantees from the Canadian Government. Chrysler promised to reactivate its engine plant in Windsor, which would add several thousand jobs in parts production here in Canada. The previous Government did not make Chrysler keep its promise. I call upon this Government to make Chrysler do what it promised.

If Chrysler has money for Korea, it should also have money for Canada, to meet its past commitments.

NATIONAL ANIMAL HEALTH WEEK

PROMOTION BY VETERINARIANS

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to advise the House about Canada's first National Animal Health Week, starting on April 28. This is a public information program sponsored by the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association, whose president is in the gallery today. It was established to increase public awareness of the important role of animals in society, and to promote improvements in animal health care.

Animals play several important roles in Canada today; as a source of food, in recreation entertainment, in many scientific and medical advances, and in improving levels of mental and physical health of mankind through human-animal bonding.

Across the country veterinarians will distribute special animal health newspapers, buttons, posters, and colouring books. They will have open houses and tours of veterinary clinics, and they will give public lectures. Animal health technicians will begin a project of pet visitations in senior citizen homes.

Just as we believe people in our society are entitled to proper housing, food, sanitation, and health care, veterinarians, including myself, believe that animals are entitled to no less. Promoting public awareness of the advances of animal science, veterinary medicine, and the psychology of human-animal bonding, is a laudable goal. I ask the House to join me in supporting the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association in this fine undertaking.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

LORD'S DAY LEGISLATION STRUCK DOWN

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a weekly "pause day" is part of the Canadian way of life. It is not so much a religious right as a social right. It is the right to be free from work for a day, free to do whatever one chooses; to go fishing, sleep in, watch the Toronto Blue Jays march to the pennant, even to go to church, but to spend a day however one likes and enjoy one's family and friends. This social right and freedom may now be threatened by the Charter which was designed to protect rights and freedoms. It behooves Parliament therefore to consider what can be done to guarantee our traditional "pause day".

Only a minority of Canadians are protected by collective bargaining agreements. For the majority, protection probably must come from Parliament. Parliament can pass laws which will not discriminate against minorities but it can give assurance to a majority. It should not threaten the right of anyone to work on Sunday if he wishes, but it should protect the right of all those who wish just the opposite, to pause from work on Sunday so that they can work better on Monday.

THE ECONOMY

CONTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the development of our national parks ought to have priority because they make a significant contribution to the Canadian economy.

[English]

Ninety per cent of the millions spent by park visitors is concentrated in the transportation, retail, restaurant, and accommodation industries. Every dollar spent by a visitor generates $3.73, and every dollar spent by Parks Canada increases total domestic output of goods and services by $3.10. Parks Canada generates, directly and through visitor spending, $1.98 in labour income for every dollar it spends. For every dollar spent by Parks Canada and park visitors, 98 cents are recovered at one time or another by the various levels of government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is about time the Minister realized that, instead of slashing national parks budgets, she should promote the development of that great natural wealth.

THE ECONOMY

RESULTS OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, spearheaded by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the new Progressive Conservative policy of economic revitalization is gathering strength as it rolls across the country, creating jobs and bringing prosperity in its wake. Since September 4, 112,000 new jobs have been created, and the number of unemployed has fallen by 50,000. Interest rates have fallen drastically as a result of the Conservative low interest rate policy. The bank rate has dropped 2 per cent in the last 6 weeks alone. The prime rate stands at 10.75 per cent, its lowest level since October, 1978. Mortgage rates are at a 13 month low, and construction cranes again dot the skyline.

Confidence and economic growth have returned to Canada under a PC Government. Our dollar is stabilizing, and inflation is under control. In fact, after a decade of Liberal-Socialist darkness, the light of opportunity again shines across our fair land. Sir, Canada welcomes the return of Conservative prosperity and economic well-being.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—REFUSAL OF ENTRY TO EMINENT CANADIAN AUTHOR

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, a plot has been revealed. Americans and Canadians can now sleep safely in their beds knowing that Farley Mowat has finally been exposed.

What red-blooded Canadian did not feel there was some nefarious threat or hidden meaning behind books called The Boat Who Wouldn't Float, or The Dog Who Wouldn't Be? The man who wrote those books has been seen talking to unsuspecting school children. He has had courses named after him which is certainly reminiscent of Maoism and Marxism. He has been seen sneaking into Government House. He has been known to prowl our northern frontiers. But now, thanks to the superior work of the U.S. immigration officials, we are no longer fooled. The kilt is again recognized as a sign of subversion.

After reading Never Cry Wolf, we know that the Wolf Cub movement is certainly a subversive organization. Thousands of innocent young men are now identified as suspected terrorists. The son of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the son of Marc Garneau, are now suspicious characters in Canada. Speaking of Marc Garneau, why would anyone go to space except to talk to Russians?

This House owes a vote of thanks to the officials of the U.S. Immigration Department and the rules they enforce. Without their efforts, Farley Mowat would walk around this country pretending to be a well respected Canadian artist.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Each day we learn that more and more facts are coming to light in the Wilson affair. The brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance received a contract worth $234,000, and it was untendered. Not only that, the vice-president of the same company had been employed in the office of the Minister for some weeks just before the contract was awarded. Yesterday we learned that the Minister's brother-in-law and former assistant received a second contract without bidding.

Also, yesterday this House was advised by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, in a conflict of interest case involving Mr. Greenbaum, the chairman of the immigration review committee, that there was nothing wrong in Mr. Greenbaum's action, but nevertheless:

> —any suggestion or hint or impropriety would undermine the confidence of that process, it would therefore be better if he were to submit his resignation.

Is the Prime Minister in agreement with the words and action of the Minister of Employment and Immigration? If so, why is he not applying the same criteria to the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am in full agreement with the attitudes as expressed by the Minister of Immigration. I am not applying them to the Minister of Finance because the situation is completely inapplicable. It is entirely different. There is a completely different set of circumstances and I think my hon. friend, who has both friends and relatives here and elsewhere, and who has served as a Minister of the Crown, is aware of that. He served as the Minister of Finance, and he would be the first to acknowledge that there is no comparison whatsoever between the situation which gave rise to the action taken by the Minister of Immigration and that of the Minister of Finance.

The case of the Minister of Finance, and I think we have been through it reasonably thoroughly, was handled quite properly according to objective criteria, by the Minister of Supply and Services, who rendered an objective judgment, in which decision public servants played the major role.

It happens that the integrity of the people involved was such, and I think it is important that my hon. friend acknowledge this, that they immediately wrote thereafter to the Government saying that "this kind of business is not good for the Canadian taxpayer and we suggest that you cancel it". This is a practice which had been going on for years and years, and so we cancelled it and saved the taxpayers in excess of $500,000 each year. I think that is a tribute to them, and we should salute them for that.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST—MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. We made it quite clear yesterday that the Minister of Finance should have put an end to it the minute he heard about this contract. He did not and the contract was awarded by his Department through the Department of Supply and Services. Will the Prime Minister admit that in a similar case in this province, then Ontario Treasurer Darcy McKeough, a man of outstanding integrity, immediately handed in his resignation rather than raising doubts about a conflict of interest when, unknown to him, a family company had been given a permit? Does the Prime Minister not think that, in this case, he should ask for the resignation of his Minister of Finance so that there be no doubt left about the Minister's integrity and even his judgment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that, inadvertantly I am sure, my colleague made a serious mistake when he said in his preliminary remarks that the contract has been awarded by the Minister of Finance. On the contrary, this was a Bank of Canada contract awarded by a different Minister altogether. I am being asked a hypothetical question concerning a Minister and an incident that occurred in Ontario. Well, here is a question for you: When the Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, revealed a basic budgetary secret and dismissed the whole incident two minutes later by adding an extra $200 million, should he have resigned? I, for one, think he should have.

CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING CONTRACT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that it is a proper example at all. The Prime Minister referred to the Bank of Canada. The Prime Minister should know that the spokesman for the Bank of Canada in the House of Commons for all of the Bank's actions is the Minister of Finance. He should know that the Minister of Finance must meet with the Governor of the Bank of Canada every week. He should know that the assistant to the Minister had access to the communications between the Bank of Canada and his Minister. That very assistant to the Minister was at that time the vice-president of the company that got a contract without bidding. Does the Prime Minister not believe that all these facts require the resignation of the Minister of Finance so that we may have a Minister of Finance who will not be under a cloud when preparing the next Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): If ever there was a series of facts that called for the resignation of a Minister of Finance, it was when Mr. Lalonde got caught showing his Budget and it cost the Canadian people $200 million to falsify the facts. You defended Mr. Lalonde then, and I can tell you that you had no reason then. That is when a Minister of Finance should have resigned.

When a Minister of Finance should not resign is when he does nothing improper and nothing illegal, who in no way violates, directly or indirectly, the guidelines. That is the case of the present Minister of Finance whom I will defend in this House with pride, as will all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister mistakes the applause of his backbenchers for the approval of all Canadians. I can assure him that they are quite different.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, in responding to questions about the appropriateness of the resignation of his Minister of National Defence some time ago, the Prime Minister told the Ottawa Citizen:

> Canadians quite properly, even though they know we are less than perfect, quite properly are entitled to ask the highest possible standards of their public servants and of their elected officials.

Is the Prime Minister telling Members of the House, and through Members, all Canadians, that he believes that Canadians believe it is appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive an untendered contract to do work for that Minister's Department?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member quoted the statement that I gave the Ottawa Citizen because I think it is one with which we would all agree.

When the question arose in the House—indeed before—which involved the Minister of National Defence, I can tell you with great personal sadness that I advised the Minister of National Defence that, because of those particular circumstances, indeed his resignation would be appropriate. I think it was an honourable day. He did nothing wrong, but it was an honourable day for Parliament. It was a rare day, given what has happened in the past here, when a man stood up and did precisely that.

We recognize our obligations and I think we followed through, I can tell you not without considerable sadness, obviously because we owed the obligation of the highest possible standards to the Canadian people.

There is no relationship between the very unfortunate personal situation which involved the Minister of National Defence at the time and the awarding of a contract by the Minister of Supply and Services. I would hope that my hon. friend would be able to see that distinction because it appears to me to be quite obvious to all Members of the House.

Mr. Tobin: The Prime Minister says that there is no relationship, but the striking resemblance that I cannot help but note is that the Prime Minister just said seconds ago, "He did nothing wrong", referring to his Minister of Finance, but for the first time he has told the House of Commons that he solicited the resignation of the Minister of Defence. He did nothing wrong, but the Prime Minister solicited his resignation.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is telling us now that the Minister of Finance has done nothing wrong but he would not accept his resignation if it was offered. To that I say, behold the death of a well meaning Dr. Jekyll and the birth of Mr. Hyde.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Shame!

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I have warned him that honour is like an island—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Is this Question Period or the Gong Show?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps early in the Question Period the Chair could indicate that it would be appropriate once again if questioners and those responding were listened to.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I warn the Minister that honour is like an island, rugged and without a beach, and once we have left it we can never return. If he is to avoid the political perpetual purgatory that is the lot in life of the Solicitor General, will he now not do the honourable thing and resign forthwith his position as Minister of Finance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

WITHDRAWAL OF NOMINATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On Monday a very distinguished Canadian scientist, Dr. Ursula Franklin, who has a reputation not only nationally but internationally for her competence, received a letter from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources confirming that she has been appointed to the Atomic Energy Control Board for two years.

She responded immediately with a letter seeking clarification of her responsibilities. I have obtained a copy of that letter. Within three hours of her conveying the contents of this letter to Ottawa, she received a phone call from the Minister's office, telling her that her appointment had been cancelled, that it did not exist, and that it was a non event. Would he explain this extraordinary sequence of events?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it was very extraordinary. The Hon. Member quite properly referred to the good reputation of the person involved. I do not think that there is any disagreement about that.

My information is that the person in question was indeed considered for appointment to the Atomic Energy Control Board. She expressed concerns about accepting this appointment because it would require her to take an oath of secrecy. In light of her concerns, the Government and the Minister were forced to reconsider the matter, and the appointment was never proceeded with.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Dr. Franklin has categorically denied the reason quoted in the Press, that she said that she would not accept it if she had to take the oath of secrecy. She is publicly quoted as denying that. I spoke to Dr. Franklin on the telephone this morning in that regard, and she repeated to me in private that she at no time said that was the case.

She wrote a very serious letter to the Minister after being told that she had the appointment for two years. She simply wanted clarification of what was required as part of her responsibility. Therefore, will the Prime Minister say to the House, in light of what he has just said, and this new information that I am giving to him, that the Government will reconsider its decision in this case and fulfil its obligation to a very distinguished Canadian scientist?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will faithfully report my hon. friend's concern to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources upon her return. I do not personally know this distinguished individual. I have been informed that Section 18(1) of the Atomic Energy Control Act makes the taking of such an oath mandatory. I was also informed that there was some reluctance on her part to subscribe to that. If that is not the case, I will discuss it with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the earliest possible moment, and I will be happy to report to my hon. friend.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF APPOINTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care, as I always do, to what the Prime Minister had to say. Her letter in terms of its content is exactly what I said it was, namely, a letter of a responsible Canadian scientist who has been told she has been appointed to something, and wants clarification.

Considering what the Prime Minister has just said that he will investigate, given her eminent qualifications will the Prime Minister go further than that and tell the House that since she had already been offered the appointment, and if he checks into his own briefing notes or checks with the Minister of Energy and finds out the reason for taking back the offer that he gave to the House turned out to be false, will he assure the House that she will be offered that job once again?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to assure the House. My understanding was that Dr. Franklin's concerns related directly to the issue of those to whom she could or could not impart confidential information—

Mr. Deans: That is exactly right.

Mr. Broadbent: She was seeking clarification.

Mr. Mulroney: —which I supposed raised concern on behalf of those who are bringing her name forward. I have heard nothing but eulogistic comments in regard to the individual. As soon as the Minister of Energy returns, I will be happy to take the matter up with her again.

It was my understanding this was Dr. Franklin's position and therefore clearly at variance with the requirements of the statutes. Should that turn out not to be the case, I will be happy to discuss it with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, I also understand, holds her in high regard.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

PRIME MINISTER'S DIRECTORSHIPS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As of this morning the Prime Minister was listed with the Corporations Branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as a director of the following five companies which do not appear on the conflict of interest disclosure declaration which he signed on January 9, 1985. The companies include: Canadian Insurance and Investment Incorporated, Common Cents Canada Incorporated, Common Cents Incorporated, Nommoc Incorporated, and Showcraft Publications Incorporated. Will the Prime Minister tell the House and the people of Canada why he failed to disclose these directorships as required by the conflict of interest guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a response to that. I would like to read it into the record, and I must read it into the record, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chrétien: Table it.

Mr. Mulroney: No, it is not a document. It is my response to the Member's question. It confirms:

> —the following companies, Canadian Insurance and Investment Inc., Showcraft Publications Inc., Common Cents Inc., Common Cents Canada Inc., Nommoc Inc. These are all privately owned companies, none of which have assets of more than $2,000. Mr. Mulroney became associated with these companies more than ten years ago as a director of these companies at my request and relinquished his directorships when he became Leader of the Opposition in June 1983 and has not received any remuneration or fees since then. Mr. Mulroney has not been associated directly or indirectly with any of these companies since June 1983.
> If any returns filed anywhere suggest or indicate anything different than what is stated above, they are incorrect and amended returns will be filed accordingly. Showcraft Publications Inc. and Canadian Insurance and Investment Inc. are in the course of being wound up.

This communication is signed by Frank B. Common Jr., Q.C.

These were companies of Mr. Common and his family, who was one of my law partners, and any lawyer in the House, including my hon. friend from Saint-Henri-Westmount, knows these arrangements are made from time to time. I did it to convenience a friend and partner. I received no benefits.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FILING OF RESIGNATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Prime Minister, a supplementary question. This is sloppy management of the worst kind.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister has an obligation to the people of Canada to ensure—

Mr. Andre: Apologize.

Mr. Stevens: Apologize.

Ms. Copps: —that the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not include his name as a director.

I want to know when he filed his resignation, if he filed his resignation before he became the Prime Minister and, if he did not, why not, because he is clearly in violation of the conflict of interest guidelines—

Some Hon. Members: Louder.

Ms. Copps: —which require him to file all of the corporate directorships which he held within the two years prior to him becoming the Prime Minister. I think that the Prime Minister owes the people of Canada an explanation.

An Hon. Member: Only the rat pack is applauding.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend missed a sentence that I read which stated that Mr. Mulroney became "a director of these companies at my request and relinquished his directorships when he became Leader of the Opposition in June 1983."

I also had to resign from the Canadian Red Cross, la Fondation Robert Cliche, the John Diefenbaker Foundation, the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation, the National Ballet of Canada, and the Ottawa Civil Service Recreational Association.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Go back to Ontario. Peterson needs you.

HEALTH

HAULAGE OF BEEF OVER TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last Tuesday the Minister received a report informing him that an Alberta truck driver had hauled a load of beef through northern Ontario over the PCB route to Asbestos, Quebec, dropping off carcasses in Sudbury and Brockville, and depositing the remainder of his load for distribution in Quebec. By now many consumers will have purchased and perhaps eaten some of this beef.

Since people in these communities will be very anxious about the potential health risks from the exposure to PCBs, will the Minister undertake a full national inquiry into this matter and report to the House so that people can be assured that every precaution is being taken to deal with this incident and to prevent similar incidents in the future?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the points which the Hon. Member makes are essentially correct. It is true that hanging meat from Brooks, Alberta, was transported to Asbestos, Quebec. We became aware of that on Tuesday night. Yesterday investigations were launched, both at the two locations in Ontario and primarily in Asbestos, Quebec, including the wholesaler who is handling the meat. As of today—and I am not trying to compromise the Hon. Member in any way, but I have given her some private information as well—we have been able to look at six samples, six sides, or six carcasses out of the 57 that were in the truck. Of those most of them—that is the outside fat content—seem to be negative on PCBs, but there are two samples that have been found to be positive. The levels are very low. Despite that, all the technological information that I have received indicates there would not be a health risk. Despite that, we have indicated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this answer is getting a little long. The Minister may have a statement on motions to make? A supplementary question for the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

REQUEST THAT NATIONAL SURVEILLANCE PROGRAM BE ESTABLISHED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I asked the Minister whether he would conduct an immediate national inquiry which should involve both his Department and the Department of the Environment. I know he is very concerned about this, but the people involved are even more concerned. We want more than just assurance that there have been six samples tested.

Is it true that in his Department at the present time there is no national surveillance program available to determine health risk factors from environmental situations such as this? If it is true, will he immediately institute such a surveillance program which will conduct long-term research and will also involve people who may not even be aware that they were subjected to exposure?

● (1440)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to abuse the time of the House. I was trying to give information to ensure that panic, which can so easily be raised in these kinds of questions, does not in fact happen. That was my point.

I say to the Hon. Member that the Department is capable of handling the issue. We have looked at whatever carcasses we could. We have said—and I was going to give this information to her and to the House—that anyone who is concerned because of quantities, especially those with sides of beef in their freezers, can get in touch with the Sherbrooke office of HPB. I want to say to her—and I have also spoken to the Hon. Member from Asbestos—that we are willing to give whatever service we can, but I do not intend, because of the low levels, to create any fear or panic where it does not exist.

AGRICULTURE

IRISH BEEF IMPORTS

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. During the last week I have spoken with many beef farmers in my area about a possible increase in the quota for Irish beef and the detrimental effect of such a decision. They fear the decimation of the beef industry, the bankruptcy of many farmers, a loss of over a hundred jobs for every million pounds of imports, and disruption of our traditional export markets. Could the Minister tell the farmers of Canada and this House the status of the negotiations over Irish beef imports?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern about the subject, as I do that of many colleagues in all quarters of the House who, I expect, have received many representations on the subject. I must make it very clear that despite what has been said from time to time by various people, both within and outside the industry, and despite what certain people have read, the fact of the matter is that the negotiations continue. As of this date no final decision has been reached.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

EMPLOYMENT OF DOUGLAS ROBSON

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, like most Canadians, I am amazed, astonished, and in fact deeply offended, as I am sure is everyone in the House, by the incredible series of events which have taken place in the office of the Minister of Finance. I have reviewed the record. I would like the Minister to confirm or deny in the House the following statements, to clear the record: first, that Douglas Robson worked in the Minister's office under an oath of secrecy in September and October, 1984; that Douglas Robson had access to information in that office, classified as secret, and had private meetings with the Deputy Minister of Finance, Marshall "Mickey" Cohen; that Douglas Robson did not sign the conflict of interest guidelines required of exempt staff; that there was a verbal agreement—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order Paper!

Mr. Johnston: This is all for the record, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, the Hon. Member has asked three questions. Perhaps we could deal with the first three.

Mr. Johnston: Well, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: This is the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fact, for the record, the Government has taken 50 per cent of the time of the questions to answer today. I have kept the clock for those who make points to me on the side. I think the Hon. Member has put his question. I invite the Hon. Minister to answer it.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes, the answer to the second question is no, and the answer to the third question is no. The reason Mr. Robson did not sign the conflict of interest guidelines was that at that time he didn't have any need to; there wasn't a requirement. In 1979, he didn't. The reason he didn't was because there was a technicality in the conflict of guidelines which would have required him to resign a directorship on a charitable organization that had very close family ties to him. He was trying to negotiate with the Registrar General to avoid signing the conflict of interest guidelines, or to take those out of the conflict of interest guidelines. The election came and that was never resolved.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, he took the oath of secrecy but apparently he was not given access to any secrets. That is curious.

My second question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Within a month after his leaving the Department of Finance, a contract for $234,000 was awarded to Lawson Murray. When was Lawson Murray first contacted with respect to that advertising contract?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it was the end of October, October 31, that the Bank of Canada—not the Minister of Finance—a separate institution, a separate board of directors, a separate administration—

Ms. Copps: But the same Minister.

Mr. Andre: —following Treasury Board guidelines, Chapter 485, approached the advertising management group for an agency to undertake the management of its marketable bonds program. We selected Lawson Murray on the basis of its expertise and experience in handling financial institutions. The wisdom of our choice in that regard is demonstrated by the fact that by letter of February 11 it was pointed out that we could save $500,000 per year by not carrying on the program which had been unnecessarily carried on by the previous administration for years and years. I repeat again, I am proud of the contract, and I am proud of the fact that we selected Lawson Murray.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

UNTENDERED CONTRACT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is the question I asked yesterday to which I did not receive a reply. Does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefit from an untendered contract with the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the Member yesterday—

Mr. Deans: You didn't answer me yesterday.

Mr. Mulroney: If not to the Hon. Member, then to one of his colleagues, surely. I indicated that at the earliest possible moment—and they are in the process of being completed now—in both instances, with regard to the conduct of Cabinet Ministers as Ministers of the Crown, and with regard to tendering procedures and granting of contracts, we would bring in new guidelines with new degrees of severity. I think those guidelines will be of service to the House and will be very, very frugal in regard to taxpayers' dollars.

RECEIPT OF BENEFIT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear that, but it is not the answer to my question. My question is quite simple. Does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive the benefit of an untendered contract with the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, you have a situation where a Canadian citizen tenders to the Government or—

Some Hon. Members: Untendered.

Mr. Mulroney: —services are made available to the Government of Canada—

Ms. Copps: It is a tender situation but there was no tender.

Mr. Mulroney: —and public servants, pursuant to objective criteria, make a determination. I suppose that you may have a question as to whether the relatives of anyone in this House at any time can have any association with the Government, and it is a question which will be considered in the guidelines. But I think my hon. friend, in asking the question, which perhaps inadvertently casts aspersions on an agency—

Mr. Deans: I want an answer.

Mr. Mulroney: —should recognize that a half a million dollars a year of the taxpayers' money has been saved because of that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Fair is fair.

Mr. Mulroney: —and I think Canadian taxpayers are delighted.

Mr. Deans: Your baloney does not sell any more. Why don't you answer the question? Are you afraid of the answer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRIME MINISTER'S STAFF

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to ask him whether any relatives of his staff have been awarded any untendered government contracts.

● (1450)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, some members of the Liberal Party were not here prior to September 4 and are perhaps not aware that the Department of Supply and Services does all of the purchasing of goods and services on behalf of the Government. We process some 350,000 contracts a year. The ones above $1 million come to my desk. The ones below that are handled by public servants. I will have to ask the public servants to go through that list of 350,000 to find out if any of the companies involved had any relatives associated with anybody in this House. I'm sure the Hon. Member realizes that it will take several years before we can get back to him.

BIOLINK MANAGEMENT LTD.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can be more specific. With the greatest of respect I would appreciate an answer from the Prime Minister, because Canadians want to hear from the Prime Minister. Rather than taking several years to answer, he can answer in a few moments. Can the Prime Minister confirm that Biolink Management Ltd. was given a $220,000 untendered government contract, that the president of the company is a former aide to the Minister of Justice and married to an assistant in his office, the PMO? Does the Prime Minister consider this situation to be a conflict of interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have heard of guilt by association, but this gives a brand new meaning to it. What I do know is this. It is perhaps a little less nefarious than the manner just set out. Indeed, a very reputable distinguished man in Ottawa by the name of Chester Burtt, who is widely known, rendered distinguished services, for example, to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice when he was a Liberal leadership candidate. He worked for him. That is one of the reasons we retained him, his credentials were so high. Apparently he formed an association with another very distinguished Canadian of whom everyone speaks highly, the former executive assistant to the Hon. Member for Windsor West. They formed a company and made an offer of services to the Government which involved the public service, and we took advantage of it, I think to the advantage of the taxpayers of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSED DUMP FOR RADIOACTIVE WASTES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns the dump for radioactive wastes which the American Government is thinking of locating at Holland Pond in Vermont, on the Canadian border next to the Eastern Townships.

The Americans are considering the site because there are very few people living in the area on their side of the border, but they are ignoring—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have now come to the point where I cannot hear the Hon. Member. Is it possible for the House to allow the Hon. Member to put his question?

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will repeat my question for the benefit of the Minister.

My question concerns the dump for radioactive wastes which the Americans are thinking of locating at Holland Pond in Vermont, on the Canadian border next to the Eastern Townships; the Americans are considering this site because there are very few people living in the area on their side of the border. However, they are ignoring the fact that there are 200,000 Canadians living in the area on the Canadian side. In view of the potential risk to Canadians which would continue to exist for thousands of years, will the Canadian Government make it clear to the Americans that the dump is unacceptable to Canadians?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, our embassy immediately informed the Department of State of our interest in this matter. Our officials are working actively on this case and are monitoring developments very closely. For the information of Hon. Members, I would like to point out that a meeting was called yesterday, where we were represented by the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest)—I wonder where the Opposition was since we might have had some common interests—and we intend to pursue the matter and to take steps in order to—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Government has announced that Canadians have an interest in this matter. Could the Minister inform the House quite frankly that this plan to locate a dump site for radioactive wastes on the border is unacceptable to Canada?

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, I said that we were monitoring developments very closely, and we will report on assessments of the situation as they are made.

FORESTRY

CANADA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT—DATE OF SIGNATURE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Forestry). Since the forestry industry is very important to Quebec, especially in my riding of Témiscamingue, could the Minister inform the House when he intends to sign the Canada-Quebec agreement on upgrading forestry resources?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the continued interest of the Hon. Member. It is not the first time he has asked a question on that. In the last two days we concluded another amendment to an agreement with the Province of Quebec. Hopefully that will be the last and we will be able to sign the agreement on Tuesday next in Quebec City. This $300 million agreement is an excellent one which will go a long way to create the kind of programs for silviculture and forest management that Quebec and Canada need.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON KENORA INCIDENT

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and relates to the Kenora incident, of course, but more specifically to the truck transporting many beef carcasses, most of which to be delivered in Asbestos in my riding. I appreciate that the Minister reassured the residents of the region by telling them he would take every step necessary to warn them and set them at ease, but can he tell us when and how many carcasses were recovered?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe the number of carcasses in the truck was 57. As I said, there were two sides that were delivered to two points in Ontario. The best information I can give on the number of carcasses that we have recovered is the number that we have recovered and on which tests were done. That in total was six, five I believe in the Asbestos area. The situation is that there are those residents who might have bought a side of freezer beef. That can be fairly easily traced. In the case where individual butcher shops received the meat and sold it, we obviously cannot trace that. That is why I offered the services of the Department at Sherbrooke. If they want to have any contact or help along those lines, we are willing to give it.

DELAY IN INTERVENTIONS BY DEPARTMENT AND BY PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Considering the fact that the Kenora incident occurred on April 13 and that, as far as I know, the remaining carcasses were in fact recovered only yesterday or the day before, I would like to know—and understand—why and how your Government and the Government of Ontario waited so long before intervening?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that the situation in Kenora is now under full control. Yesterday I called a conference of provincial Ministers and we have decided to have an emergency meeting to see to it that in the future the provinces will accept their responsibilities in connection with PCB waste disposal.

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST—UNINSURED INVESTMENT CERTIFICATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance in the absence of his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the collapse of Pioneer Trust last February in Regina. I have in my hand a copy of an application form for an income averaging certificate, from a Saskatchewan farmer. It states on this application form that his application was insured by the CDIC. The seal is here. It says "application for a six-year annuity". I also have an application for a seven-year annuity with the same insurance stamp of approval. This man later found that he was not insured because CDIC does not insure these kinds of investments for more than five years.

● (1500)

Since I already gave this information to the Government over three weeks ago, can the Minister explain why the Government has not acted to reimburse the hundreds and perhaps thousands of innocent depositors like this man in Saskatchewan, who put a considerable amount of savings into these certificates, thought they were insured, but found later on that they were not? Why has the Government not reimbursed these people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Minister of State for Finance has been dealing with this matter and has had discussions with certain members of the Hon. Member's own Party as well as with people from the Government of Saskatchewan. When the Minister returns to the House I will bring the matter to her attention. I am sure she will be dealing with the matter forthwith.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) on Wednesday, April 24, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

REPLY OF MR. MULRONEY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in an answer he gave during the Question Period which just ended, said that an associate of Chester Burtt in the firm of Biolink was a former executive assistant of mine. If the Prime Minister will check, he will find that he was in serious error because the individual in question was never my executive assistant. He was a departmental assistant and served in that capacity as a public servant. Therefore, he was not an exempt staff member. That is a very different matter. In this particular matter I think the Prime Minister has made a serious error for which he should return to the House to apologize.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has a fact he wishes to present to the House. However, it is clearly not a question of privilege, and I think he knows that.

I now recognize the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park on a question of privilege, of which he has given me notice.

ADVERTISEMENT IN UKRAINIAN NEWSPAPER BY FORMER MEMBER

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This is the first opportunity I have had to bring to your attention an advertisement which appeared in the April 6 to 13, 1985 issue of the newspaper Vilne Slovo, a paper circulated in Toronto. The advertisement was placed on behalf of the former Member of Parliament for my constituency, Parkdale-High Park. In the advertisement, Mr. Jesse Flis is identified as the Member of Parliament for Parkdale-High Park and a constituency office address and telephone number are listed. The advertisement is in Ukrainian and the English translation is as follows:

> Christ has risen—With the Holy Holiday of the resurrection of Christ, sincere best wishes to all Ukrainians in Canada and specially to the readers of the "Free Word" from: Jesse P. Flis, (Member of Parliament for Parkdale-High Park).

Referring to Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, pages 21 and 22, I found the following:

> A person ceases to be a Member of the House of Commons when the Speaker addresses his warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the Issue of a Writ for the Election of a new Member.

By the same token, Maingot states on page 20 and 21:

> In Parliamentary Practice, the entry in the special edition of the Canada Gazette by the Chief Electoral Officer of the name of the person set out in the return commences the official existence of the member.

Under these definitions, Mr. Flis ceased to be a Member of Parliament once the Speaker had addressed his warrant for the last election and I commenced my duties as a Member of Parliament when my name was entered in the special edition of the Gazette. In fact, I think it can be argued that Mr. Flis ceased to be a Member at the dissolution of the last Parliament and since he did not succeed in being re-elected, there can be no doubt that Mr. Flis is no longer entitled to the use of the title "Member of Parliament".

Maingot describes the subordinate nature of privilege on page 13 by stating:

> In order to perform its functions as a legislative body, a legislature requires absolutely certain privileges, rights or immunities; that is to say, it cannot carry on unless it has them.

In order to establish a definition of privilege, I looked to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 16, which defines privilege as the following:

> —the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House, individually, without which they could not discharge their functions—
> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members—

I believe that usage of the title "Member of Parliament" is one of the rights required to carry out the responsibilities of such office and unless use of the title is restricted to individuals recognized as legally entitled to such a designation, a Member of Parliament cannot hope to execute his duties and responsibilities to his constituents. How can a constituent approach a Member of Parliament for the assistance to which he is entitled from his elected representative when he is being misled as to the identity of the Member? If the title of Member of Parliament is not restricted to Members of the present Parliament, then the reputation of the House is at risk and may fall into disrespect when any like-minded individual may lay claim to the title.

A similar instance arose in March of 1972 when the Hon. George McIlraith brought to the attention of the House the plan of a local hotel to use the name "Parliament Hill" to designate its property. At that time a Private Member's Bill was introduced to prevent the commercial use of the name. In that instance the House saw fit to act to protect its prerogative use of the name, and I believe the decision a wise one.

Finally, I should like to quote from page 158 of the Twentieth Edition of Erskine May which states as follows:

> Conduct not amounting to a direct attempt to influence a Member in the discharge of his duties, but having a tendency to impair his independence in the future performance of his duty, will also be treated as a breach of privilege.

I wish to ensure that the privilege of use of the title of Member of Parliament is protected and so, should you find that I have presented evidence of a prima facie case of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to move that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for examination. I submit here a copy of the newspaper in question. The advertisement complained of appears on page 10.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the former Member for Parkdale-High Park was such a popular Member that the media cannot forget his great contribution to this House.

Mr. Speaker: May I encourage the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to stick to the question of privilege at the present time.

Mr. Gauthier: Exactly. However, I must set the tone, as did the Hon. Member, prior to discussing the subject at hand.

The speech made today by the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Witer) was an interesting one and probably put him on the map because it is the first one he has made in the House. I would like to state that—

Mr. Thacker: Withdraw!

Mr. Gauthier: Withdraw what? There is nothing to withdraw. I simply said he has put himself on the map by making the point that he indeed follows a very good and hardworking Member of Parliament, Mr. Jesse Flis.

I am sure Mr. Flis did not do this intentionally. It could be that the media has such a good memory of Mr. Flis that it forgot to put the word "former" before the name. The press forgets to print things correctly all the time. Mr. Flis will be paying the bill for this advertisement. If he was in any way trying to usurp the privileges of the Hon. Member, I am sure he will apologize to him. I know Mr. Flis to be a reasonable and very good man—

Mrs. Killens: A gentleman.

Mr. Gauthier: And a gentleman as well. I do not think he wanted to take away any of the privileges of the Hon. Member.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Speaker is fully aware of the issue. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) has a point to make on the question of privilege which, I think, he will make very briefly.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I paid close attention to the arguments of our colleague and, to my mind, there is one omission in the advertisement—the word "future". I think that if you could—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the points have been made with regard to the question of privilege.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I would like to make a brief intervention, Mr. Speaker. I think it is a serious question which the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Witer) has raised, and I do not think it is incumbent upon Liberal Members to trivialize a paid advertisement which was placed in the Ukrainian-Canadian newspaper.

Mr. Gauthier: Is he Ukrainian?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Flis is Canadian. I am a Canadian and I am very proud to be a Canadian of Ukrainian descent.

This is not a case of editorializing by the newspaper; it is the case of a paid advertisement on the part of an individual who is not now a Member of Parliament. The Member of Parliament, who has served with such distinction, is now in the House and has raised the question of privilege. It is a question which affects the rights and abilities of Members in carrying out their responsibilities in the House. We must have a set of rules which, in fact, protect Members of Parliament from not being able to carry out their responsibilities. Indeed, in this particular instance there is a prima facie case, as Mr. Flis has held himself out as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Deans: We don't know that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the point has been made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that there is not a prima facie case. However, the Hon. Member who made the case presented the paper with the authority of Jesse Flis holding himself out as a Member of Parliament for Parkdale-High Park and as having a constituency office.

I think a legitimate matter of concern has been raised by the Member of Parliament. I would ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain: If one, two or more people were holding themselves out as the Member of Parliament for his riding, would he not be the first to rise in the House and say that his abilities to carry out his responsibilities as a Member of Parliament were being impeded? It is not a laughing matter, as the Liberals seem to think it is. It is an attempt by the Hon. Member to bring forward a prima facie case with respect to this issue. It is legitimate. People cannot go out and call themselves Mr. Speaker, or the Member of Parliament for Hamilton Mountain. I support the Hon. Member and I think he has done the right thing. If someone else has done this on Mr. Flis' behalf, then Mr. Flis can, in fact, come forward.

Mr. Gauthier: If.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The "if" part is that we know there is an advertisement. It is under the authority of Mr. Flis and there is no question that there is a prima facie case.

Mr. Gauthier: Shoot first and ask questions after.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will hear the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and then the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I will restrict the argument to that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Not me?

Mr. Speaker: No, that will be it. I have heard two Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Clearly, this is now becoming something other than a question of privilege in terms of the reasons for which Members are rising.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have no axe to grind here. I think, perhaps, that we are losing our perspective in this matter. Surely, a former Member of Parliament, in his normal actions, would not advertise himself as being a Member of Parliament. It does not sound reasonable. The ad may have been placed without his knowledge. I believe we should postpone the matter for a couple of weeks, and that the Member or the Speaker should write to Mr. Flis and await his response.

I was once called a nobody by the previous Government and I have been called "an insignificant" by this Government, so I am not worried about what Members of Parliament are called or how they advertise. But I think we should keep the matter in perspective.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have heard all that I need to hear on the question of privilege. I fully intend to reserve on the question. However, I would like to say that the Hon. Member's point is a very important one. It is important to me and to all Members; it has to be. So I am proposing to reserve a final judgment on this matter, do a little thinking and, perhaps, a little investigation. That is my intention. I also intend to allow some time for any additional appropriate information to come to my attention. Then I will return to the House with a final ruling on the matter.

POINT OF ORDER

APPLAUSE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek your assistance in resolving what I believe to be a developing situation.

Over the course of the last few weeks we have seen, on a number of occasions, government Members rising during Question Period with loud and lengthy applause. I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you would be kind enough at some point to draw to the attention of all Members, Opposition and Government, that it is inappropriate to take the time to rise and disrupt Question Period with lengthy applause and demonstrations of solidarity. It is not necessary. There are times when it is appropriate, but it cannot be appropriate on a daily basis.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that you as Speaker conduct yourself with distinction. You have a sensitivity toward the House and, in fact, you have intervened from time to time—very often on our side, but that is your function. I appreciate and respect the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), but I believe he is suggesting that somehow you might not have been intervening at the appropriate times.

Mr. Deans: Not at all.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I believe you have been an excellent Speaker, Mr. Speaker, and that you bring the House to order at the appropriate times. I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain should apologize.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to make a point to all Members of the House, in all Parties. Effectively during each Question Period we are now losing between three and five minutes a day out of a 45-minute period to what can only be described as manifestations. Sometimes it is in the form of applause by one side or the other. Sometimes it is in the form of comments or commentaries that go beyond what would traditionally be understood as heckling. Sometimes Members keep on speaking when the Speaker is trying to say something.

I believe that the point which was made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is important, but it is not simply an issue of applause. If we observe what is happening to Question Period, we will notice that there are fewer and fewer questions and answers. I made the point when I took the chair that I do not think that is what the House wants. Therefore, I would encourage all Members, all Ministers, all questioners and all responders to please do what they can to bring the House back to what we all want—shorter questions, shorter answers and respect by everybody for everybody else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): It is Thursday, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member who usually asks me the question is here now. I thought it would be appropriate to announce the business of the House for the next week, Mr. Speaker.

As I announced yesterday, tomorrow will be the fourth allotted day in the current period of Supply and there will be a vote at the end of the day. We will be considering a motion by the New Democratic Party so that there will be a vote tomorrow at 4.45 p.m.

We will resume consideration of the report stage of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada on Monday. Following Bill C-15, the House will begin consideration of the report stage of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Act. In the event that Bill C-24 is passed, the next Bill we will deal with will be Bill C-30, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act which is also at report stage.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, should the House complete its consideration of Bill C-30, we will move on to Bill C-25, an Act to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, Monday's order of business will also apply to Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. As always, Mr. Speaker, the order of business for the House remains subject to change. The Government will continue to monitor the progress made with respect to these Bills and may announce such changes to business as may be required.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he intends to have the House stay on Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Bill, until its study is concluded by the House, if that does not happen on Monday?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my hope is that we will make progress. As the Hon. Member knows, this Bill received very extensive consideration in the House of Commons before the Christmas break and very extensive consideration in committee. I know the Hon. Member will want to sit down with me at an early date, with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), to talk about the disposition of this Bill. I would be interested in hearing helpful suggestions about how soon we can get this Bill through. I think the people of Canada have spoken. They want this Bill to proceed and I know the Hon. Member and his Party will want to co-operate in the spirit of getting important legislation through the House. I assure the Hon. Member that he will be consulted and I hope we can work out a specific time frame so we can get this Bill through.

I am interested in getting this Bill through. Canadians are interested in action. They don't want to have us talk on this matter indefinitely. There has been too much talk now. We should get on with it and get Canada moving again.

PETITIONS

PARI MUTUEL BETTING

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the members and friends of the Canadian Greyhound Association. It is a petition signed by in excess of 1,000 people and concerns the legalization of pari mutuel betting on greyhound races in Canada.

CONTROL OF PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from 32 constituents in my riding calling upon Parliament to act as quickly as possible to establish clear obscenity legislation and to enforce stricter control of pornography.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the seasonal fruit industry employees in the Okanagan Valley who rely on unemployment insurance, as do their employers, to keep a trained work force available to process the product which is so vital to the economy of the valley. The seasonal fruit industry employees wish to register their opposition to any changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will affect their livelihood and the economy of the Okanagan Valley.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-236, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (non-listed electors).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill to amend the Canada Elections Act which would do three things. First, it would allow urban voters to swear in on election day. At present only rural voters can do this and so some urban voters are disenfranchised. This is similar to a provision in the British Columbia Elections Act.

Second, the Bill would permit individuals travelling abroad to vote overseas in a manner similar to Canadian Forces and Public Service electors who are posted outside of Canada. Some people were disenfranchised last summer from voting in the election. That is the reason for this provision.

Third, the Bill would give canvassers the right to enter hotels to canvass in an election campaign. There are no provincial laws on the books at present which give canvassers the right to enter hotels in order to canvass, nor has there been anything in the federal Act which gives them this right. This was a big problem—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Those are all important points but the Hon. Member knows that there is a very short time limit.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I just want to conclude by saying that the third part of the Bill was simply to give canvassers access to hotels, which they were unable to do during the last election campaign.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 1 (Mr. Axworthy) and 2 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4001).

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned earlier today, I was saying that in a previous speech on this Bill, I drew the attention of the House to the importance of the role of women in Canada's economy. I repeat today that it is vital to protect the rights of women, especially in the small- and medium-sized business sector.

In recent years, more and more women have realized the importance of investment in Canada. They are getting involved in business and increasingly, we are finding women at the decision-making level in Canadian business. Their presence can no longer go unnoticed, and in the first amendment moved by my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) I see a desire to protect all Canadian investors, both men and women. By stressing our intention to maintain investment quality and to introduce Canadian controls, we are telling investors: Do not worry, we will continue to appreciate your participation in Canada's economy. I think that should not be too difficult to understand. And that is why I want to ask the following question: Why do our colleagues opposite not support this amendment? Why are the Progressive Conservatives placing such a blind trust in non-Canadians?

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you must have asked yourself the same questions. However, this amendment does not oppose the concept of investment in Canada. It is merely an attempt to provide for a better relationship with our businessmen and women and our potential non-Canadian investors. It is especially seeking to safeguard our jobs not only for the present generation, but more significantly for future generations of Canadian workers.

We must look closely into the consequences of this amendment. A few months ago, one could read almost everywhere that "Canada is open again to investments". Well, Mr. Speaker, Canada may well be open for business and investments, but it is certainly not for sale. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the first to say so: Canada is not for sale.

We are all in favour of job creation. Nobody in the House could deny that. Bill C-15 has a number of very definite and praiseworthy objectives. There is not a single member of the House who would dare question the merits of Bill C-15. I merely wish to emphasize that the proposed amendment would strengthen the general purpose of this bill.

Hon. Members will certainly agree with me when I say that Canadian businessmen and businesswomen have every right to expect their government to protect them and guarantee them a privileged position within the Canadian economy. For the past several years, these Canadian men and women who operate small and medium size businesses have been trying to put back the Canadian economy on the right track. They have realized the need to get involved and many of them have done so by investing very courageously their own savings in Canadian businesses. It would be unfortunate if, failing to take into account the quality and value of investment proposals made by non-Canadians, we broke their momentum. We must put into this act some ways and means to protect our own Canadian ventures. That is exactly the purpose of our amendment.

We welcome the capital of foreign investors. We have as much to learn from them as they from us. The purpose of the amendment is to give Canada better control over foreign investments and create a better economic climate for all Canadians. It is a well known fact that new technologies are progressing by leaps and bounds. Canada has always been proud to participate in research and development in several areas. Over the past few years, we have taken part in a number of major research projects and our reputation in this regard is second to none. That is why the first amendment moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry is so significant.

One of the aims of his amendment is to protect our know-how in the area of high technology, and if the House should fail to adopt this amendment, we would run the risk of seeing our technological heritage leave the country and be lost forever.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that we should not try to stop foreign investments for the sake of doing so, but simply determine that they are consistent with the over-all objectives of our country and that they will benefit all Canadians. I repeat that we are seeking first of all to protect Canadian jobs, secondly to protect Canadian investors, and finally to ensure the quality of foreign investments. Therefore, I support the amendment moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

[English]

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address some comments to the debate this afternoon with respect to the amendments to Bill C-15. The amendments, as proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) would change the explanatory section of the Bill and quite distinctly redefine its thrust. The purpose of this Bill at present reads as follows:

Recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities and to provide for the review of significant investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure such benefit to Canada.

That contains the distinction that we as a Government acknowledge that investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians will be one of the vital engines of economic growth. It also acknowledges that there is a significant review process in place for certain investments by Canadians and non-Canadians. Both motions try to alter fundamentally the nature of this Bill. They make the review function the most important feature, relegating to second place the function of encouragement. Also, the first motion confines the very small positive role solely to investment by Canadians, a position which is not very deserving. Under the present regulations of FIRA we saw what happens when a Government tries to over-regulate investment; it simply goes elsewhere and fosters a very unhealthy climate in Canada.

These motions are entirely opposed to the spirit and philosophy of the Bill. All they do is simply to bring FIRA back, and that is not something we want. The aim of this Bill is to signal that the Government welcomes foreign investment because it recognizes that it is generally to the benefit of Canada and all Canadians. For that reason, the Bill would encourage investment by non-Canadians as well as Canadians. It also provides for a review of significant investment, and I point out to those who would like to amend this Bill that in Clause 14 there are very reasonable limits spelled out. Concern is sometimes generated by those who would fearmonger, if I can use such a strong term, that by simply encouraging investment we are somehow selling off our sovereignty. Some people would say that, but Clause 14 of this Bill contains very reasonable limitations.

I often think of the very important philosophical and psychological tendencies which investment brings to a country. When a Government has in place an agency like FIRA, which is more prohibitive than encouraging, that is a psychological thing which tells people inside and outside the country that perhaps they should be wary, perhaps they should avoid Canada as a place to spend their money, take their risk, make their investment and create so many thousands of jobs.

That very vital psychological sign has been seen in this country many times before. I think of my native Province of Saskatchewan where an NDP Government nationalized the potash industry. Literally overnight there were many calls from investors inside and outside of Canada who were concerned that the Government was simply going to start regulating to a great extent the lives and livelihood of the people of my province. One also looks at developments in your Province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, in recent years, where the investment climate was threatened and often challenged, and many investors began to approach investing in Quebec with considerable concern. We saw this as well with FIRA.

All that the provision stating the purpose of this Bill does is to put the positive emphasis first. It is for that reason that these amendments, while trying to recreate FIRA, would be highly unacceptable. These amendments, beyond this very important area of investment psychology, I think give a message as to how the Government approaches people who want to come and invest. It is a view of trust versus distrust. It is a view of a Government that believes in growth versus the view of those who would amend this Bill so as to somehow have the Government managing the economy. Many of us have seen for far too long the negative effects of a Government that simply tries to regulate the economy.

Mr. Waddell: When have they ever done that since the Second World War?

• (1540)

Mr. Gormley: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) asks when they have ever done that since the Second World War. FIRA drove billions of dollars of investment capital away from this country, and it was supported by the NDP. The New Democratic Party is always all too willing to put its finger wherever it can in controlling the lives of people. FIRA is an example of the investment control we have experienced.

The NDP amendment states, "—under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the government . . ." At least the amendment by the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry spoke of notification. However, only the NDP would say that the Government knows what is "appropriate" and what terms are best for the good of people's lives.

As one who has lived for a long time in the Province of Saskatchewan where a New Democratic provincial Government has caused those difficulties, I believe, as I think most Members do, that people know what is best for their families. They know how they want to express themselves as Canadians in our society.

We acknowledge that the Government must play a significant role in major cases, as provided for by Clause 14 of our Bill. However, in the NDP amendment can be seen the almost laughable disregard that that Party has for the fundamental rights and freedoms of human beings. I believe that most Members of the House will deal with the NDP amendment as it should appropriately be dealt with, that is, of course, with the understanding that the Government should not establish or deem what is appropriate.

I believe that Canada wants to progress and if Canadians and the others who want to invest in that spirit of investment and growth are given the ability to do so within the regulatory aspect that must be present in a Bill such as this, we will see the positive economic growth for which Canada has been waiting for so long.

Our Government has adopted a positive role and we will naturally put a lot of effort into encouraging investment by Canadians. However, to derive the technological benefits, the research and development and other benefits we will be seeking, will require joint ventures between Canadians and foreigners particularly with investments that increase world product mandates.

Our mandate is to integrate Canadians and non-Canadians in developing an economy that looks forward rather than back to the 1950s or 1960s when the reaction was toward excessive government regulations.

I believe Bill C-15 is a fair and equitable proposal. Therefore, the two amendments that would result in Investment Canada being very much regulated by Government are amendments that I as a Member of Parliament cannot accept. I would ask that other Members do likewise.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It would have the effect of requiring that proposed investments in Canada be reviewed to ensure that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities. Without that amendment, this Bill will allow, without review, takeovers and very extensive involvement in the Canadian economy.

The Government seems to be proceeding on the assumption that all investments by foreigners will be good for Canada. While we are prepared to agree that most foreign investment can be expected to be beneficial, it simply does not seem prudent to throw the doors open as wide as the Government is proposing.

There is no question that the foreign Investment Review Act, which was in place since 1970, was due for updating. The Canadian economy and the world economy had changed since 1974. However, the Government has gone much further than is sensible or prudent with the introduction of this Bill.

Every industrial country in the world has some limits and controls on foreign investment. I have before me a list of 21 laws in the United States, which I do not claim to be exhaustive, which have the effect of either prohibiting or limiting non-American investment in the United States.

If one looks at the areas involved in the United States, there are limits on foreign investment in coastal and freshwater fishing, aviation, nuclear and hydro generating, communications, financial industries, real estate, fishing, some mineral leases, dredging and salvaging operations and defence industries. We are all aware of the width of the umbrella of defence industries. Those involve 21 pieces of legislation that either limit or prohibit investment in all those areas of the U.S. economy.

One can add to that the use of securities and anti-trust laws and the operations of congressional committees and monitoring by Government to see that it is a rather tightly controlled situation. Moreover, while this is taking place in what is basically a very open economy, it is an economy where the legislators have deemed it prudent to protect their own national interests.

Let us consider Australia, which is a Commonwealth country like Canada. It states officially that it welcomes foreign investment. That country also has a foreign investment review board. It sets limits on the acquisition of an Australian business by the purchase of assets. It specifies particular areas of the economy where all new business must be reviewed if it is financed from outside the country. Those areas include finance, insurance, media, civil aviation, uranium, direct investment by foreign Governments or their agencies, real estate valued at $350,000 or more, and so on.

Mexico is a country which has great need for capital investment but which also has very considerable restrictions. Therefore, one must ask why the federal Government is prepared to throw out review or examination to the extent that it has. The assumption seems to be that all investment will be beneficial. This has been the tone of the speeches by government Members who have taken part in this debate.

Is it correct to make that assumption? When I spoke on this Bill earlier, I mentioned a situation that I encountered in my home riding. A man had worked for 30 years with a firm that was established in Canada by an American parent company. It was established before the Foreign Investment Review Agency. That firm did some very simple assembly work and when it decided that its interests would be better served by moving to one of the states which had non-unionized labour and below minimum wages, it simply moved out lock, stock and barrel, on the weekend. This man and several other employees found that everything was gone on Monday morning. They received no severance pay and they had no particular skills that were marketable. A similar situation arose in Ontario, and that was one reason why the Foreign Investment Review Agency was established. I do not see anything in the new Bill that would prevent that kind of situation from arising again.

Let us look at some possibilities of what might happen when you have no review. In the case of takeovers, for example, does a takeover usually create new jobs? Not necessarily. What if following a takeover the new facility employs fewer Canadians because it is no longer manufacturing in Canada but merely assembling or warehousing in Canada? To take perhaps a more extreme example, what if a takeover occurs by a foreign company of a Canadian company which has had some innovative technology, a Canadian company that has been marketing overseas? What if the reason for the takeover is that a foreign investor simply wanted to suppress the Canadian technology so as to reduce competition in overseas markets?

I see nothing in the Bill to protect against this kind of situation. Granted, most investment can be accepted as being productive and useful, but surely it is not prudent to have a Bill as totally open as this one, a Bill that is without the basic safeguards that exist in countries such as the United States and Australia, not to mention the European countries that have many more safeguards.

I really hope the Government will take another look instead of telling us, as the previous speaker did, that we are fearmongers because we raise these situations that we have seen. If the Government is not prepared to accept the amendments put forward by opposition Members, then I hope the Government will bring in some of its own that would give the Minister, or preferably Cabinet—because I am not sure that this kind of decision should be made only by one Minister—the power to require a review in certain cases where there appears to be a risk of harm being done to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this amendment for the New Democratic Party. I listened with some interest to the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and also to the speaker before her, the Conservative Member from Saskatchewan. I am not sure of his riding but he is one of the new Conservatives from Saskatchewan.

Mr. McKnight: One of the many.

Mr. Waddell: It seems to me that the Member was speaking out of both sides of his mouth. He was talking about the Government not controlling our lives, having no control, and then said there has to be some control. Which is it, Mr. Speaker? Are you going to have no control, or are you going to have some control? It seems to me that there is always going to be some control. We are governed in Canada, whether it is by our federal Government, our provincial Government, a municipality, or by large corporate interests. In the oil industry, some of the large American oil companies "govern" us because they control so much of the market. In business, Mr. Conrad Black of Argus and Mr. Paul Desmarais of Power Corporation "govern" us because they make decisions that affect the lives of Canadians.

It is naive to say we are not governed. We are always governed by someone. The trick is to be governed by people who know what they are doing and listen to you and are plugged into the Government. That is what we in the NDP are seeking to do.

The Hon. Member talked about Saskatchewan. He badmouthed the NDP Government in Saskatchewan. I found that absolutely incredible. This pertains to this particular Bill because in Saskatchewan after the depression, the people literally picked themselves up and said, "Never again". After the war, the NDP, or the CCF Government as it was then called, headed by T. C. Douglas, was prepared to get control of Saskatchewan's destiny, not relying on foreign farm interest, foreign grain interests, or speculators and so on. The people were prepared to seize control of their own lives through the co-operative movement and through the Government. They turned that province into a prosperous, dynamic place. That Government in Saskatchewan brought in medicare and got some control of its own resources, namely, potash. Would the Hon. Member from Saskatchewan throw those out? He speaks in myths like most of the Conservatives have done in this debate.

We are talking about the Foreign Investment Review Agency, Mr. Speaker, this myth which the Conservatives created, the agency that scared away foreign investment and brought recession to Canada. If the Conservatives look into that they will find it is really a myth. Ninety per cent of the applications for foreign investment were passed. There was not really a lot of restriction of foreign investment. The reason investment did not come to Canada and went down somewhat is that there was a recession in parts of the world. We also had high interest rates. Money flowed into the United States where people could get high interest rates. That was an instrument of government policy. If the Member wants to get Government out of our lives, I wish he would get government interest rates out of our lives because the Government kept interest rates high in order to fight inflation. It was a matter of government policy. Government squeezed that high inflation by way of high interest rates and squeezed the economy to a stop. That is why we had a recession. In economics that is called a monetarist theory. People were out of work. That is why money did not come into Canada. I was not because of FIRA. All FIRA sought to do was to try to get some control over our destiny as a country so we would not be completely controlled by forces outside.

The Hon. Member for Trinity put it well when she said that all industrial countries have some way of controlling foreign investment. The United States has FIRA. It is called the United States Congress. The U.S. Congress puts some controls on foreign investment when it wants to do so and when it finds it is not in the interest of the United States.

Clause 2 states:

(2) Recognizing that increased capital investment and innovative technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities, and to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians."

We in the NDP are not against foreign investment. We are for foreign investment. We want to make sure that investment is put into creating jobs in Canada and that the jobs do not go south of the border. We want to make sure that companies that come here purchase in Canada, use Canadian companies to buy goods and put Canadians to work. We want to make sure they do not go to their head offices in the United States to purchase goods and put Americans to work. We think the money should stay in Canada and we should not let interests and investments repatriate south of the border. That contributes to our dollar dropping to the low level at which it is now. We want to make sure the technology that comes in is for the benefit of Canada. We want to make sure that Canadians know and can use the technology that is learned in Canada. That is why we proposed this particular amendment, especially as it concerns technology.

The New Democratic Party amendment reads:

—substituting the following therefor: "technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the government, would benefit Canada—"

It cannot be assumed that all capital and technology automatically benefit Canada. There has to be a role of the Government to try to establish terms and conditions under which that capital and technology can enter the country.

Tommy Douglas used to say: "We have an equal relationship with the United States. As the elephant said when he danced among the chickens, everyone for himself". We are next to a huge elephant, and we are the smaller chickens. We have to ensure that we protect ourselves. That is the purpose of this particular amendment. If this is not acknowledged, then why would we have a review process at all? The Government is not completely getting rid of FIRA. It has included a review process in the Bill. We are saying that the process is too limited, and we are trying to amend it by making the review process a little more worth-while and effective.

• (1600)

In conclusion I want to say that Sir John A. Macdonald, the first Conservative Prime Minister, would roll over in his grave if he saw what the Government was doing. We moved from colony to nation as a result of Sir John A. Macdonald's great vision of the national dream and the railway. Now we are moving back to colony. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is Ronald Reagan's poodle. When Mr. Reagan wants to take the Prime Minister out for a walk, he just puts the dog on a leash and takes it out. We have literally opened ourselves up completely in defence, in culture, in foreign affairs and now in economics. If we were to benefit from this, we would say, fine, but I think history will show that we have been open for foreign investment and will continue to play second fiddle. We have consistent high unemployment and it will not go away, particularly by doing this to FIRA. It is a hope and a prayer. As a matter of fact, I am not sure we will receive all that much foreign investment. We have to offer foreign investors something. We have to have something on the shelves for them to come in to deal with. I do not think it is in Canada.

I think there is an alternative economic policy. We in the NDP set it out in our task force on jobs. It is the old Quebecois expression, if I can simplify it, maitres chez nous,he to be masters in our own house and to use our own Canadian investment. We do not have to use the technology or the money of others. We have them here. It means upgrading our educational system, protecting our own technology and encouraging the industries which we are very good at.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The 10-minute period for the Hon. Member's speech is over.

Mr. Waddell: May I conclude, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): No. May I respectfully suggest to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) that I previously signalled to him that the 10-minute period allotted to him was terminating.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 1 (Mr. Axworthy) and 2 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4001).

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in moving Motion No. 1, I think we should go back to what has been a continual demand for clarity by all those who appeared before the committee. Even in the statements by the Minister himself there was the admission that in dealing with an investment community it was particularly important for the Parliament of Canada to make its intentions clearly known and not confused with any form of ambiguity.

The reason we moved Motion No. 1 is to attain that objective. First is to demonstrate clearly that the major focus of this legislation is a review procedure for foreign investment. It is a weak review procedure, it is an ineffective review procedure, it is a review procedure that will have limited impact but nevertheless it is a review procedure. To try to camouflage that somehow in the Bill runs against the signalling that is required for us to show the investment community, Canadian and otherwise, what the purpose of this legislation is.

What we are trying to point out is that the investment should be clearly targeted at having a benefit for Canada. One of the over-riding concerns that we have raised during the course of the second reading debate and during the committee hearings, which was underlined time and time again by witnesses who appeared before us, is that foreign investment by itself is not an untrammelled virtue. It must be measured and judged by the impact it has on jobs, new technology and direct economic benefits. A number of cases were brought forward to cite how in fact foreign investment could be used to reduce employment, to reduce technological development and to reduce economic performance in Canada and, that foreign investment itself could be used to strip down emerging industries in the high-tech field. It could put newer Canadian businesses out of business.

It could be used to crowd out the market-place by the superior market power of the large foreign-owned corporations. The reason for having a review is at least to try to ensure that the ability of this country to protect its own investment community is one that is a clear purpose of this legislation.

It is important to set forward that purpose in a very obvious and unmistakable fashion so that we know there is a purpose here now. Our Party intends to introduce a number of amendments that we hope will be incorporated in the Bill to ensure that that review procedure is improved and we are able more effectively to judge investment applications that will have an impact on Canada in a beneficial way and not in a negative way.

We recognize that there is a different philosophy at work, which is simply to say on the part of the Minister and his Government that all foreign investment regardless is good. But the Minister does not follow the logic of his and his own Government's rhetoric because if that was the point they would have no review procedure whatever. As it is, they maintain a review procedure but the review procedure itself if not a particularly effective, worthwhile or important one because it does not deal with the kind of problems clearly identified during the course of our committee hearings. There can be serious damage or negative results affecting resource communities, smaller businesses in Canada and the investment community dealing in high technology.

Those are the areas where we have a high level of vulnerability in our business community. Most other countries do provide some protection. You have only to look at the Japanese market as an example of that. We have a review procedure without teeth. We have a review procedure that only because of the thresholds established and the vagueness of its terms will simply allow most of the investment that has a potential for some problems in our economy to be unreviewed and not judged as to whether it will protect Canadian workers, communities and Canadian jobs.

We have no quarrel with the other purpose of the Bill which is to promote Canadian investment. It has long been a major responsibility of the federal Government that the powers incorporated in this Act are powers which the Minister now virtually has as the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion. If it is there to be included in the Bill, there is no argument with that. We will be presenting amendments that will be used to identify clearly how the Minister might go about promoting Canadian investment in a more active, aggressive way. However, I do not think it would be proper for us to be presenting to the Canadian community on behalf of the Parliament of Canada a statement of purpose which tries to indicate that the primary rationale for this legislation is the promotion of Canadian investment.

When we actually look at the substance of the Bill, parts of it deal mainly with setting out who is Canadian, who is non-Canadian, what the review procedures will be, and what the exemptions are to that area.

We think it is important. The Minister should agree with the logic of our position because he has been a proponent of the view that clarity is important and that we must eliminate uncertainty in the investment community. In the administration of an Act, as he well knows from his own experience, public servants, the legal community and others who must deal with the Bill—all those players who are involved with the administration of this Act—start out by reading its objectives as set out in Clause 2. The present Clause 2 is so vague, general and ambiguous that it is difficult to determine what in fact the Government is trying to achieve other than the general global interest of better investment. Legislation of that kind should not be passed; in itself it should relate to what are the prescriptions within the Bill. Therefore, we believe the amendments we have brought forward in no way deny the purpose of the Bill, in no way contradict the objectives set forward by the Government, but clarify, make more cohesive and more coherent and therefore make for a better piece of legislation. They wold also establish more clearly what would be the operating principles by which the Bill would be administered and by which the applications would be made.

That is the purpose of the motion we are presenting today. We hope the Government will give it due consideration. We feel that we are presenting, as will always be the case at report stage of a Bill, amendments with the most constructive and positive point of view; that is, to have legislation which in fact will be more effective and more workable and for the general well-being of the Canadian economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

• (1610)

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the amendment to Bill C-15 moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). The objectives of the Foreign Investment Review Act deserve much attention and support. The purpose is not to block foreign investments in Canada, but to make sure that they benefit Canada. Canada remains one of the developed countries which tolerates the highest rate of foreign presence in its economy. That is the reason why FIRA was created and why its effectiveness must be maintained. It is a fine instrument which seeks to ensure that all foreign investments significantly benefit Canada.

No matter what this government may claim, FIRA has never discouraged foreign investments. Businesspeople are looking for profits, and they will go where they are likely to make profits. Far from discouraging foreign investments, FIRA encouraged those which would benefit Canada and Canadians. Members from the Progressive Conservative Party have always tried to blame all economic ills from which Canada has been suffering on this review mechanism of foreign investments. As a matter of fact, an American banker stated recently, and I quote:

[English]

FIRA itself was not the bogeyman that kept away foreign investment. You woundn't want to make too much of it because there were real effects at play.

[Translation]

The truth is that there has been a drastic change in investment patterns throughout the world. We have witnessed a global reorganization of both capital and labour. For instance, the production of steel, automobiles, ships, electronics, textiles and ores is increasingly shifting to recently industrialized countries such as South Korea, Brazil and the Philippines where labour costs and tax rates are lower than here, and where the protection of the environment is not the major concern it is here, thus requiring less initial investments. The Southern United States is also a major area of attraction, because its labour force is for the most part non unionized. This, in addition to the 1982 recession and the technological revolution we are still going through are some of the reasons for our economic distress. That is the truth, as emphasized by a number of American bankers who stated, and I quote:

[English]

The problem is simple: foreign capitalists can make more money elsewhere, no matter what action Mr. Mulroney's Government takes.

[Translation]

Under these circumstances, why is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) going to the United States to sell out to the Americans what we still own? That is what he is doing.

I should like to emphasize some of the possible consequences of Investment Canada on the Atlantic provinces where I hail from. In this area, the major sources of income are the fisheries, forestries, as well as the development of natural resources and the operation of small- and medium-sized businesses.

This new federal legislation could have a devastating impact on the regional economy. For instance, take the fishing industry in New Brunswick where nearly all processing plants belong to Canadians who face unrelenting competition from New England plants. If this Bill is adopted, our fishing industry would become vulnerable overnight. Foreign interests would have a free hand to buy those plants, particularly independent processors, so as to eliminate competitors for the primary products of fishermen. The only Government control left will be fishing licences, and there would be none whatsoever on the plants. How much will our fishing licences be worth if we no longer have plants to buy our fish, or if they are owned by foreigners whose commanding interest will be to keep the price of our fish as low as possible? All communities along the Gulf of St. Lawrence and in the Atlantic region which do not depend on major fishing companies and where there are no longer any of those small independent businesses would be facing a slump practically never experienced before. That could happen because foreigners have been trying to set up shop on the east coast since the 200-mile zone was established. Until today, we had the mechanism and the political will to thwart their projects if they did not serve our interests. It is quite clear that the Government opposite does not have the political will to protect our regions against free capital markets and it wants to take apart the mechanism that protects us.

Regions where unemployment is highest would lose even more jobs. The irony of it is that the same Government is about to undertake an across-the-board review of unemployment insurance eligibility standards—to tighten them up, undoubtedly. I will not go into that debate now, this is not the appropriate time, but I am sure I will have opportunities to do so later.

If we are justified to claim that Investment Canada can be the death warrant of Canada's fishing industry, the same thing probably goes for the very competitive forest industry whose main markets are foreign; foreign multinationals could easily afford to buy our smaller plants and close them with a view to grabbing our raw primary products and gaining control over our traditional markets. One can imagine the disastrous social consequences of a loss of thousands of jobs in the Atlantic Provinces.

Another industry which might stand to be harmed by Investment Canada is undoubtedly the peat industry, again because it has to rely on international markets. Peat companies in New Brunswick's Kent, Northumberland and Gloucester Townships could easily be bought by foreigners—no questions asked—who would control the whole operation and fill peat orders through companies others than ours.

Practically all the fishing, forest and peat plants as well as the small and medium-size businesses I mentioned are worth less than the $5 million limit set by the Government, which means that they will not be subject to review when prospective foreign buyers come knocking at the door.

I am definitely against this new $5 million limit set by the Government, for I think it is too high. I am also against the idea of amending the existing Act to exempt indirect purchases under $50 million. Nor can I agree at all with the suggestion that only one Minister will have the authority to approve or reject investments. Such decisions must be made by the Cabinet where Ministers from different regions can have their say and make sure that the interests of the various provinces are protected.

I am very ill at ease, as a New Brunswicker, to have to rely on the goodwill of a Minister such as the one we now have to protect our interests in New Brunswick. I do not see how we could have so much confidence in a Minister as to let him alone decide on foreign investment all across Canada, when it is already difficult to trust this Progressive Conservative Government that slashes everywhere and has very little concern about regional development.

Listen, fellows! Listen closely!

Instead of having positive effects, which I feel is at least the Government's intention, I am afraid that Investment Canada will rather have a negative impact on this country's economy. I for one am more concerned about the disastrous effects this Bill could have on the Atlantic Provinces.

An Hon. Member: Why all the hurry?

Mr. Robichaud: I am in no hurry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please!

Mr. Robichaud: To go on, Mr. Speaker—

• (1620)

[English]

The Government says it is leaving it to the private sector to develop the economy and create jobs. Where this is possible, that is fine, but we as elected representatives have a duty and an obligation to ensure that there are mechanisms in place whereby we can observe, regulate and at times control certain investments so as to ensure that they are in the best interests of the people of the country. This is precisely the purpose of this proposed amendment. Therefore I support it, Mr. Speaker.

This Conservative Government is very much like all Conservative Governments. It is afraid to lead; it is afraid to protect the public interest. The Liberal Party is not and has never been afraid to do so. Once again, we want to do what is best for Canada and Canadians.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Bill. As my colleagues have said repeatedly, we are concerned that this Bill changes so drastically the whole direction of the review of foreign investment in Canada. I think all of us would acknowledge that FIRA had weaknesses and that it could have been improved upon, but generally speaking it was going in the right direction. Its purpose was to protect the interests of Canadian industries, investments and jobs.

We believe very strongly that Canadians want control over their own destinies and their own economic development. They want government supervision that will assist and facilitate Canadian development, will promote Canadian enterprises and will encourage Canadian investment as much as possible. This is not to say that we do not need and welcome foreign investment as well, but it certainly should not be with a complete open door policy, which in effect would make us even more of a branch plant economy than we are already.

Bill C-15 would remove new businesses from the requirement of any review and it would provide only for the review of takeovers of very large businesses worth $5 million or more. This means that small Canadian businesses such as a small Canadian innovative high-tech industry could very easily be taken over by a foreign multi-national, integrated into that multi-national and eventually disappear within the large monster. The Canadian company would be removed from Canada altogether, and of course this would remove Canadian jobs as well.

I was very interested in the action group for jobs which crossed Canada. I participated in one of its hearing in British Columbia. One of the things I can recall is that a consultant from the mining industry said: "We have learned in our industry that Canada needs to build on what we do best, that we should be developing our own technology". Other briefs were presented on the question of technological change and people were saying that they do not want a complete open door policy so that highly sophisticated new technologies from the United States, Japan or other parts of the world can automatically establish themselves in Canada.

People feel that we should be developing our own brain power because we have lots of it here. They feel that we should have more R and D and that we should be developing our own technologies related to the resource and communication industries and the kinds of economic projects that Canadians need, do best, and in which we have long experience. The purpose of Bill C-15 is to undermine that kind of development and not to help Canadians develop their own resources, enterprises and investments in a creative way.

At the moment, we are debating the purpose of the Bill, which reads as follows:

> Recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities and to provide for the review of significant investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure such benefit to Canada.

Those are nice words, but how will we be sure that this will happen with no regulations whatsoever? Our amendment proposes the following:

> That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 7 at page 1 and substituting the following therefore:
> "technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the government, would benefit Canada . . ."

In other words, we feel that there are times when we need the help of foreign technologies, but this help should be appropriate and there must be some kind of government review to establish what is in the best interests of our country, our workers and our businesses. We hope that we will have support for that amendment.

In the time allotted to me, I would like to mention that I have a very particular concern about the invasion of foreign companies and investors in the field of health and social services. There is an insidious movement that is beginning in Canada and has already begun in the Province of Ontario. I fear for my own Province of British Columbia and for other provinces if this precedent is established. There is a trend toward big private commercial companies entering the field of personal care homes, health care for the aged and the entire field of health care. These companies are entering Canada almost as multinational corporations and are taking over and establishing private institutions which are "care for profit" institutions. This is one thing in particular into which I would want the Government to look and over which I would like it to have some control. We are very proud of our health care and social services programs in Canada because they care for all the people. I do not think many of us see the American system as being a model for Canada.

I have a reference here to an example of this which has taken place in Ontario. Beverly Enterprises of Pasadena, California, was attempting to take over some 1,000 publicly subsidized nursing homes beds in Ontario. The Ontario Minister was apparently condoning and encouraging this action and was not looking at the whole question of quality of care or even at the financial issues. How can there be adequate care if the main motive is profit? Certainly we want well run institutions that are responsive to human needs, provide good care and are financially efficient. I do not really think competitive private enterprise in the field of health care institutions will be appropriate for Canada.

In the case to which I have just referred, apparently no representations were made by Ontario to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, the agency which approved the sale on November 30, 1984. We feel that there must be effective control by Governments over institutions in the nursing home industry which cares for people who are no longer self-sufficient and independent because of their age or infirmity. It is very easy for private companies to take over the care which is really the responsibility of the communities and families.

I mentioned the concern with respect to daycare. I hope that when the report from the daycare study group, which was established by the Liberal Government, and the report of the parliamentary task force on child care are completed we will look seriously at the question of the invasion of child care by profit-making companies, in particular those which are established in the United States.

I see that the Minister is in the House and I hope he will agree that it is very important for us to have adequate standards and staffing facilities, particularly for young children and older people. The first priority must be good care. Those institutions must be responsive to the community. The community should be involved in the planning of daycare centre services. As well, parents should be involved, hopefully, in a co-operative manner. The institutions should be accountable to the communities. I hope that this will be given special consideration. I do not believe that the proposals which are made in this legislation will be good in the health care field or in other fields of endeavour for Canada.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the debate this afternoon with respect to an amendment that was proposed by the Liberal Party.

As the official critic pointed out, we have serious concerns with respect to Bill C-15. In a previous debate I indicated that Bill C-15 was a sell-out and that the effect of the provisions of the Bill would be the sell-out of Canadian industries. It would be the sell-out of what FIRA has been able to do over the last number of years.

When the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) announced Bill C-15, he stated that the legislation would herald a new day for Canada. I beg to differ with the Minister. In my view, Bill C-15 marks a very sad day for Canadians. Bill C-15 dashes any hope of Canadians getting control over the economy. It dashes any hope of Canadians becoming masters in their own home. In effect, Bill C-15 is a betrayal of Canada's hope for economic independence and cultural identity.

The Minister stated, and his comments were echoed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that Canada was open for business. As my leader said, he never thought Canada was closed for business. Canada has always been open for business and, as my leader has pointed out, Canada is certainly not for sale. But Bill C-15 will sell out Canada.

Indeed, it is regressive legislation. It is a tremendous step backward. But it is no surprise to us on this side of the House that the Conservative Government has introduced this Bill. It is sad, because after years of slowly and methodically gaining control over the economy, the Conservative Government is prepared to sell Canada to foreign interests. I am advised that under this legislation 90 per cent of foreign takeovers will go ahead without review. That is the subject matter of this particular amendment.

With FIRA we had some control over the type of investment which would be allowed. There had to be a significant benefit to Canadians. All foreign investment is not good investment. As the official critic for the Liberal Party said in the House on April 23:

> —foreign investment by itself is not an untrammelled virtue. It must be measured and judged by the impact it has on jobs, new technology and direct economic benefits.

He went on to say that a number of cases were brought forward to cite how in fact foreign investment could be used to reduce employment, to reduce technological development and to reduce economic performance in Canada.

The purpose of the Bill is outlined in Clause 2, which reads as follows:

> Recognizing that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contributes to economic growth and employment opportunities—

What does that mean? What is the benefit to Canada? It is not defined. The Government is dreaming. How can we ensure that with this legislation there will indeed be a benefit to Canada?

An editorial appeared in The Toronto Star on December 9, 1984, which was entitled: "Steven's Short-Sighted Gamble". In a nutshell, that expresses my very serious concerns with respect to Bill C-15. It is a gamble. We have everything to lose but very little to gain by this legislation.

The Foreign Investment Review Agency had some control over the type of investment which was coming into Canada. We could say no to investment which did not bring a significant benefit to Canadians. We could say no to investment which, for example, would result in foreign multi-nationals coming into Canada, taking over a competitor and then closing down the industry and returning to the United States. That would be a conceivable situation under Bill C-15. With FIRA, in order to obtain approval, the investor had to satisfy the Government that the investment would be of significant benefit to Canada. That significant benefit was determined on the basis of five factors which were specified in the legislation. However, Bill C-15 does not specify, articulate, undertake or give us any sense of direction with respect to what benefit means. FIRA provided an explanation for significant benefit. It outlined five factors. Foreign corporations which wished to come into Canada, to take over Canadians businesses or to establish new businesses, had to adhere to the five factors which would ensure that there would be significant benefit to Canada. Those factors ensured that there would be jobs and that the investment would be good for Canada.

I would like to outline the five factors. They are as follows:

(1) the effect of the investment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada, including employment, resource processing and exports;

FIRA had here the requirement for a significant benefit in that area. The second criterion was:

(2) the degree and significance of Canadian participation in the business enterprise and in the industry sector to which the enterprise belongs;

(3) the effect on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, innovation and product variety in Canada;

(4) the effect on competition in Canada; and

(5) the compatibility of the investment with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration the industrial and economic policy objectives of the province(s) likely to be significantly affected by the investment.

FIRA articulated what was meant by significant investment. And who would argue, except perhaps Hon. Members opposite, that there should be significant benefit to Canadians and Canada as a result of that foreign investment?

● (1640)

It seems that the Conservative Party is simply bent on selling out our industries to other countries. FIRA was good legislation precisely because there was that review mechanism in the legislation so that we could ensure that any foreign investment was of significant benefit to Canadians. My hon. friends opposite would argue that it was bad legislation because it was an impediment to foreign investment. That argument is intellectually dishonest, Mr. Speaker, because, if Hon. Members opposite will check the record, they will find that the record clearly indicates that FIRA indeed was not an impediment to foreign investment. In fact, as Hon. Members opposite will know, the approval rate with respect to applications was fairly high. Since the inception of FIRA in 1974, there were approximately 6,000 applications, and 92.2 per cent of the applications received were approved. Between 1977 and 1982—and if you recall, Mr. Speaker, in 1982 there were changes to the FIRA legislation to streamline the review procedures—there was a greater percentage of applications. In fact, from 1982 to the present, 97 per cent of all applications were approved by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. That is a pretty damn good track record.

In closing, I would ask Hon. Members opposite to give this legislation second thought; at the very least, give some very serious consideration to the very good amendments which have been proposed by the Liberal Party. I was advised, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding that the Liberal Opposition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry but the 10-minute period is over. We will resume debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, one of the observations which I believe should be made about this Investment Canada Bill, which should really be named "sell out Canada" or "give away Canada", is that this Government muzzled this Bill at second reading. When the Bill went into committee, it did exactly the same thing. This Government was not prepared to entertain any amendments—and there were over 50 amendments presented in the committee—to try to improve and tighten up this Bill because it is extremely "loosey-goosey". But in fact, Mr. Speaker, the Government is dedicated to not allowing any amendment whatsoever to this particular Bill. This Government, when it was in opposition and the Liberals pulled that sort of stunt, shouted and screamed. Those Hon. Members used all sorts of tactics, ringing bells, walking out, calling for votes, and so on. All sorts of games were played when the Conservatives felt very strongly about a particular piece of legislation. Of course, when the guillotine was imposed by the then Liberal Government, they all screamed blue murder.

Mr. Nystrom: Tory murder.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, blue murder, Tory murder. Now that we have a Conservative Government—

Mr. Taylor: Baloney!

Mr. Rodriguez: I would like to point out that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is dressed in a red jacket.

Mr. Taylor: It hasn't got a hammer and sickle on it.

Mr. Rodriguez: I don't know what the lapel pins on his jacket are for, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what they are saying, but at least one looks to me like a sickle.

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I don't mind being called anything but a communist or a socialist. The buttons I wear represent the Canadian Legion. If the Hon. Member doesn't know what that is, it is for those who offered their lives for our country. The other is for the Triple E Senate. That means we want an elected Senate with equal representation. The other is a pin for the 4-H Club, which is an excellent farm organization. So the Hon. Member shouldn't make fun of some of the groups of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: It has to be the tie clip, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the House that the Hon. Member opposite is using points of order wasting the precious time allowed to the Hon. Member who has the floor. I therefore suggest this should not be taken out of his time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Speaking of precious time, I recognize the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: I hope that this time has not come off my ten minutes, Mr. Speaker. I wish the Hon. Member would get up and make his own speech instead of taking time out of my speech.

Now that the Conservatives are the Government, they are doing exactly the same thing for which they criticized the previous Government.

Mr. Taylor: Baloney!

Mr. Rodriguez: If the Hon. Member wants to make a speech, I don't mind. I will sit down if he wants to make a speech.

Mr. Taylor: Go ahead.

Mr. Rodriguez: I see that we have the Gong Show going on over there today.

What the Conservatives have done, Mr. Speaker, is exactly the same thing that they criticized the former Government for doing. They have suffocated debate. They have refused to accept even one reasoned amendment in committee. I think that is totally shameless. And those Hon. Members are barefaced enough to come and sit in this House of Commons and say, "Yes, that's what we intend to do". Might is right. That is the attitude they have taken, Mr. Speaker. What have those Hon. Members talked about in this House? They say they want to encourage Canadian investment. I want to cite one example of our not even being able to make those companies which operate in this country invest the money they earn from the resources of this country right here in Canada. I give the example of Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd.

Mr. Nunziata: Where is it?

Mr. Rodriguez: It is in Nickel Belt. Falconbridge Nickel Mines in the last few years has laid off 800 workers because Falconbridge claimed it was poor, that it was not doing very well and it had to lay off workers. Ever since that company came into the Sudbury basin, it has always sent its nickel matte to Norway to be refined. Indeed, I was talking to the former Member of Parliament, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, and he told me that the very first question he asked in this House of Commons in 1939 was put to Mackenzie King—

Mr. Prud'homme: It was 1940. He didn't come in in 1939.

Mr. Rodriguez: In 1940 the Hon. Stanley Knowles asked Mackenzie King about Falconbridge selling its nickel plate from its Norway plant to Nazi Germany at a time when we Canadians were at war with Nazi Germany. Here was a company who was mining its ore in Canada, refining it in Norway and selling the plate nickel to the Nazi navy. In fact, many Canadians lost their lives on the oceans of the world possibly because of ships armed with Canadian nickel plate.

I am happy to see the Hon. Member wearing a Legion pin in his lapel. But here is a company which strikes its breast and says, "We are good Canadians", yet it never established a refinery in the Sudbury basin. Now lo and behold it has an opportunity to go to Botswana to buy nickel, and it is going to ship that nickel matte to Norway to be refined. To do that it has to expand the capacity of the Norwegian plant and it wants to spend $41.5 million to do so. In the mining Act of Ontario there is a law that says Ontario resources must be refined in Canada. Section 104 of that Act says "except Falconbridge". That corporation was exempted because all the time Falconbridge had good friends in the Tory Party. It had some sort of leverage with the Conservative regime in Ontario and, lo and behold, Falconbridge got its way. It has found $41.5 million to expand a refinery in Norway to refine Canadian nickel, but is that in the best interests of Canada? Is that creating jobs for Canadians? I suggest to you that it had better learn how to invest in this country, and you do not need an Investment Canada Bill to get the corporation to do it. Not at all. What you need is simply to set out the goals and ground rules and the fact that since it has earned that $41.5 million on the backs of Canadian workers and from Canadian resources, therefore it should put that $41.5 million as a down-payment on building a refinery in the Sudbury basin. It is estimated that a new refinery for the Falconbridge operation in the Sudbury basin would cost around $125 million and the $41.5 million is a good down-payment.

● (1650)

We Canadians have an investment in Falconbridge. We allowed it to defer over the last two years some $150 million in taxes. That means it will never pay those taxes. It paid not a penny of corporate income tax last year and it will pay not a penny of corporate income tax this year, yet it has this $41.5 million.

I am glad to see Members opposite agree with what I am pointing out, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to see they have finally come to their senses, and if I am allowed an extension of time we can perhaps persuade all of them to come on board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Rodriguez: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): No, no. With my deepest regrets, the 10-minute period is now over.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure indeed to address the proposed amendments to Bill C-15. Hon. Members from the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party did realize as soon as the Minister introduced the Bill in this House and especially during consideration in committee, that the Minister had given little consideration to the representations made by the Official Opposition concerning the Bill now before us.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment brought forth by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), would introduce control provisions, with the very important purpose in my view of protecting the jobs of all Canadians.

An Hon. Member: Have you read it?

Mr. Rossi: I would like—Why don't you first shup up, you smart guy over there! That's enough! See that you defend Quebec when the time comes!

Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest—if the fellow opposite will stop vomiting over there—that I find quite ridiculous the Minister bragging about job creation, when his Department accepted $200 million cuts, on orders from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière.

Mr. Speaker, the only programs he did cut in his Department were those which had an actual impact in areas of high unemployment, even though this same Minister keeps repeating in this House that his Government will create jobs, jobs, more jobs.

Mrs. Mailly: Jobs!

Mr. Rossi: Jobs, jobs!

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I think the first one who should set an example in this House by listening now is the Government Assistant Whip (Mrs. Mailly) whether she agrees or not with the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi). I agree his comments are debatable, but I would hope that she herself might see to it that the troops she is leading this afternoon have the courtesy of listening to the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), as we did some moments ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Assistant Whip (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, firstly, I think it is out of order to refer to the fact that any particular Member is present or absent from the House. Secondly, I would like to point out that I am not the Assistant Whip but the Government Deputy Whip.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): No, no.

Mr. Prud'homme: I apologize to the Assistant Whip. I did not refer to her absence. I only expressed the wish she would ask her troops to shut up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) has the floor.

Mr. Rossi: She is easy to spot, Mr. Speaker, because she does not behave like a deputy whip but rather like a whip.

An Hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, nonetheless, this same Minister should understand that jobs are actually created in Canada by those businesses that have survived numerous difficulties through the years, and he should also realize they are family businesses operating in the resource sector.

[English]

I think the Minister should reconsider proposals made by the Official Opposition in committee which were rejected by the Chairman of said committee. The Liberal proposals rejected by the Minister were to develop comprehensive information based on all sources of investment in Canada and on the differing factors which affect investment; work with the relevant federal and provincial Departments and agencies to develop a favourable climate for private investment; seek to co-ordinate public sector and private sector investment planning through consultation. Members opposite are always talking about consultation in this House. Another proposal was to act as a clearing house for information on investment incentives offered by all jurisdictions in Canada; promote by all manner of means the expansion of equity investment by individual Canadians.

[Translation]

Proposal (f), Mr. Speaker . . . I am sorry, I had so much more to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to item No. 30?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved that Bill C-215, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-215 would establish a parity price for five different farm products that humans consume domestically in this country: wheat, oats and barley, pork and beef.

Parity price is defined in this Bill as a price based on the cost of production and a decent profit for the work that a farmer puts into producing his or her product. In the case of wheat, this would cover 8 per cent to 10 per cent of our production of wheat since that is what we consume domestically. A parity price might be $10 or $11 a bushel because that is what many farm economists estimate it would cost to produce a bushel of wheat for a decent return to the farmers of Canada.

This Bill would not impose anything on anyone. It indicates that before there is a parity price, there must be a democratic vote by the producers, whether hog producers or beef producers. If it is decided they do not want to follow this direction, there would not be a parity price, an agency or commission established in that particular field. The Bill is democratic and would give a guarantee to the farmers of this land for at least some of the products that they are producing.

Many groups in our society have guarantees. Trade unions are organized and often have cost of living allowances each year. Members of Parliament have a clause which provides an adjustment every year according to the cost of living. Many other people often have increases due to the cost of living increases. Doctors' fees, lawyers' fees and architects' fees are based on what it costs to run their offices, pay their staff and provide a good standard of living for themselves and their families in accordance with the work they do to provide their particular service.

My argument for this Bill is that farmers are no different. They need those guarantees for the products they produce, and if the farmers get that kind of guarantee it will not only be useful to farmers but indeed to all Canadians. The fact that a farmer will be able to spend more means that there will be jobs for young people in our towns and cities. The fact that he has more money to spend will stimulate the economy in places like Brantford where White Farm equipment is in trouble and Massey Ferguson produces their combines and other implements for use by all Canadian farmers.

My argument today is that this Bill is not only an agricultural Bill but is an economic Bill that will create jobs for many Canadians. It will also give farmers greater control over their destiny by providing a means of intervening in the market-place and having some direction over the price they will get for a particular commodity.

I want particularly to thank farmers for their support of this concept of parity pricing. I want to thank members of the Conservative and the Liberal Parties for the support they have given to the idea of parity pricing. Perhaps there can be an understanding later this afternoon to refer the subject matter of this Bill to the Agriculture Committee for study and public hearings so that the farmers of this country may give their input.

I am not wedded to all the details of this Bill. It is important to refer this Bill to the Agriculture Committee so that we may go through it clause by clause and consult the farmers of this country in order to have their opinion of parity pricing. What better way is there to consult the farmers of Canada than to have public hearings? The farm union, the Wheat Pool, the Canadian agricultural movement and all the other farm organizations and commodity groups, including UPA and others, can have some input into how they want to develop.

I say to Hon. Members who are not in favour of subsidies that the farmers who support this Bill have adopted a slogan which states "parity, not charity". They are not asking for charity or hand-outs.

This Bill does not provide for Government subsidies or spending. It merely stipulates that farmers should be getting a fair price from the market-place for the wheat, the oats, the barley, the hog or whatever commodity is involved. It is the market-place that will pay the farmer for that commodity.

Let me give some examples of parity pricing. Let us consider wheat that goes to the millers to make Canadian bread. If the price of wheat were increased by $5 a bushel, there would be a corresponding increase of only eight cents a loaf in the price of bread. I suggest that the extra eight cents a loaf for bread is a small price to pay to give farmers an extra $5 a bushel for the grain they are producing that goes into making that bread.

Another example concerns beer. There might be one or two Members in the House who drink beer once in a while. If the price of beer increased by 40 cents a dozen bottles, and that increase were passed on directly to the farmers, the price of malting barley would rise by $10 a bushel. Therefore, the farmer would get an extra $10 a bushel for malting barley as a result of a 40-cent increase per dozen bottles of beer. I could cite many other examples. The cost of processing and advertising the coupons that appear on cornflakes boxes is more than the farmer receives for the corn that goes into those cornflakes boxes. This indicates that the farmer receives a very small part of the food dollar in this country.

I suggest that these examples show that a decent return and profit on the farmers' labour can be obtained without a great impact on food prices at the other end of the scale.

I urge the House to send this Bill to committee so that we may have a chance to consider this concept that is supported by an increasing number of farmers from all over Canada. According to the press, approximately three weeks ago over 500 farmers met in Essex County in Windsor in a meeting to support the idea of parity pricing. Last Monday, I was invited by a farm group to a meeting of over 200 farmers. At least 150 farmers showed up in the City of London in support of the idea of parity pricing.

This concept is gaining support because Canadian farmers need these guarantees in order to stay in business. Since so many others in our society have guarantees, farmers are asking why they as well should not get their fair share from the market-place. They are saying that if they get their fair share, therefore more money and a guaranteed product, they will be able to keep more young people on the farm, thereby expanding our rural communities and creating jobs in the cities for the people of Canada as well.

[Translation]

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I only hope that all Hon. Members in this House will support this Bill this afternoon. It is a legislation that is very important for Canadian farmers and for the Canadian people as a whole. It is about parity prices based on production costs plus a return for the work put in by Canadian farmers. This Bill deals with five farm products, that is: wheat, barley, oats, pork and beef.

Mr. Speaker, let us keep in mind that as the situation of Canadian farmers improves, things get better for everyone of us across the country, because the basis of our economy, the backbone of our economy is the agricultural sector which provides food for the Canadian people and peoples all over the world.

[English]

I urge the House not talk out this Bill. I understand that we can probably come to an agreement, and for that I sincerely thank my colleagues.

• (1710)

I thank the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Member from Alberta who is about to rise and I thank my colleagues from the Liberal Party. I look forward to having public hearings on this so the farmers of Canada—and it is a farm Bill—can be consulted and can have their say over the direction in which they want this economy to go for themselves and for their children.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating my hon. friend from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on raising the issue of price increases for farm producers in the House. I particularly appreciate what he said at the end of his speech, namely that if our farmers are in good shape, the rest of the economy is in pretty good shape too. It was refreshing to hear these words, especially from a Member of the Opposition. Before, we used to say: As long as housing starts are up, the economy is O.K. Now we can say the same about agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, this is a concern that I share with many Members of this House, and having a forward-looking agricultural industry and providing a decent return on the work and skills invested by farmers is essential to the vigour of our Canadian economy. I think all Members concerned about agriculture are aware of this.

However, although I agree with my hon. friend that his objective is a good one, the Bill he introduced today may not be the right answer at this time. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all Members of this House will realize the serious impact this Bill could have on the agricultural sector and the possibly unfortunate consequences it might have for our farmers and our external trade.

However, I think that the concept of guaranteeing farmers a decent return on their investment is certainly deserving of closer scrutiny. My friend the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) will move later on to have the subject matter of this Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. In fact, I think when my hon. friend spoke earlier he seemed to be agreeable to having the subject discussed in the agriculture committee.

The parity pricing concept seems an excellent idea. Its purpose is altogether admirable, namely to enable farmers to cover their production costs and make a decent profit. It is the very essence of our economic system. Would it not be marvelous if by adopting a Bill, we could make this dream come true? However, in the present context, things may not be as straightforward as all that.

[English]

I might add here that it was at the time when the European Economic Community moved to a system with very high domestic prices for its farmers similar to what is proposed in this Bill that its headaches with surpluses and subsidies began.

The United States has had a variety of experiences with parity pricing, some of it bad, some of it good. Yet even there, Mr. Speaker, the system is very different from the idea suggested in this legislation. The U.S. system attempts to affect farm prices so as to give producers the same purchasing power as against a certain historical period rather than relating them to costs of production.

I am particularly concerned, Mr. Speaker, about trying to make a cost-of-production pricing system work in Canada where we are so heavily dependent upon export markets. Exports account for nearly half of the Canadian net farm income. It would be disastrous to try to isolate ourselves from world market conditions.

Only a very small percentage of our grain production is used domestically. The large bulk of it goes into world markets. We can all take off our hats to the success of the Canadian Wheat Board in penetrating those markets.

Export markets are also a significant factor in the red meat industry, although a more important factor in setting policies for beef and pork is the continental nature of those industries. Cattle particularly move back and forth across the border with the United States in response to market conditions, and any cattleman will tell you that it would be foolish to try to price cattle artificially without reference to the total North American market.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the pork industry is a particularly good example of the potential impact of world markets. I am referring to a recent decision by the U.S. Government to levy temporary countervailing duties on our exports of live hogs and carcasses, because our American colleagues judge that the meager support enjoyed by Canadians under the Agricultural Stabilization Act gives them an undue advantage. We are all aware of this problem, which has been a serious concern for some weeks.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today concerns parity pricing for both cereal grains and livestock. One of my colleagues will elaborate further on the potential impact of parity pricing on the cereal grains sector, and meanwhile I intend to concentrate on the potential repercussions of this Bill on the red meat sector.

I think everyone will agree that marketing practices in the red meat sector could be improved. However, we must not forget that the majority of beef and pork producers have rejected outright any mechanisms for marketing stabilization. It is a very sensitive sector and we are all concerned about it, but the Government cannot afford to intervene in this sector every other day.

I am afraid the wording of the Bill might lead to some confusion. For instance, Clause 10(a) gives the impression that participation by producers in a parity pricing system like the one being proposed would be optional. Mr. Speaker, how can anyone seriously consider introducing a central beef or pork marketing system if producers can opt out or refuse to accept the provisions of this Bill? I do not see how that would work.

There is also a passage describing how the future beef marketing commission and pork marketing commission are supposed to operate. I think the powers and terms of reference of the members are too vague. I also fail to understand why farmers should have to wait five years before they are given the opportunity to express their views on the system through a vote. There should be a more flexible procedure and a more flexible system.

The basic principle of our agricultural policy in Canada has always been supply and demand. That principle, Mr. Speaker, is the keystone of our economy. You cannot ignore it without endangering and disrupting every sector of our economy. Even the national supply management bodies that were set up with respect to dairy products and farm products among others, at the urgent request of producers themselves and taking into account the unique conditions prevailing in those areas, are aware of the fluctuating nature of the food products markets and have therefore been provided with enough flexibility to protect the interests of the producers as well as the consumers. A recent example was the dairy sector where producers voluntarily agreed to reduce quotas. We must have a certain amount of flexibility every year, we cannot have everything planned several years ahead as it might have been possible in the past; that is no longer possible.

The idea of parity pricing, Mr. Speaker, seems to ignore market conditions and productivity variations. It assumes that identical conditions from one product to another, from one region to another, from one country to another, and between the agricultural and other economic sectors. We know, Mr. Speaker, that there is no such immutability. The tremendous development of the pork industry in Quebec and the increase in dairy production in spite of a reduction in the national dairy livestock are two examples showing how buoyant as well as unpredictable the agricultural sector has become.

Such unpredictability and instability are serious problems for the producers. But it would be most unfair for farmers to expect problems of that kind to be eliminated by implementing a rigid bureaucratic mechanism to bring prices in line with production costs. As a matter of fact, which production costs would serve as reference in such cases? Would it be those of the average producer, of the efficient producer? One could agree with production cost adjustment, but determination of such costs is by no means an easy endeavour. I suggest that all hon. members are aware of it.

The best government approach to any sector is to allow it to operate efficiently and productively within a sound policy. That is the kind of context this government is offering Canadian farmers.

The best guarantee that farmers will recover their production costs is to provide them with a dynamic economy that will instill in businessmen the confidence needed for them to achieve what they can do best. Since September 4th, we have been inspiring that kind of dynamism in our farming industry as well as in every other sector of the Canadian economy.

Bill C-215 could easily become a bureaucratic nightmare, limiting the freedom of action the agricultural community needs to develop, creating eventual headaches, and even disrupting our external trade.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-215 and to join with the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) who will also comment upon it. At the outset I should like to say that we agree with the intention of the proposer of this Bill that it should go forward to committee for study. It is a novel idea, one which certainly deserves examination by a parliamentary committee.

I remind the House that last June a similar Bill with many of the same ingredients was, by accord, sent to committee. For reasons and events upon which we no longer have to dwell, namely a federal election, it was not given proper examination. I regret that more time was not allowed for this Bill to be examined, in that the previous Government might have had time to present its case. In any event, that is history. The position we took when in government is the same one we adopt as the Official Opposition. It is an idea which is worth examining. We welcome the recommendations and representations of a number of agricultural groups in the country. They have presented this idea and have helped the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) to put the concept together. I think this is a fine time for Parliament to have this opportunity.

Mr. Nystrom: It is exactly the same Bill.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, I think it is the same Bill. However, I want to emphasize that no one should begin to believe that it is a panacea. Probably the mover of the Bill would be the first to agree that it is only a part of trying to deal with the real sense of panic which is developing in farm communities. It is reaching a point where it is no longer a matter of interest group politics or of people trying to gain some advantage for themselves. There is a deep fear in many farm communities that unless something is done to deal with the income problems they face, agriculture will be undermined. In part, that is what this Bill is designed to address.

What really is needed—and perhaps the initiative in this regard is more on the government side—is a companion piece of legislation to deal with what is happening in the international arena. There is no question in our mind that the breakdown of the international wheat agreement and the very strong threat posed by the United States and its new marketing practices will create even further developments that will force prices down. If that is the case, the cost price squeeze we have seen over the last decade will become even more extreme and the opportunity for farmers dealing in these basic commodities to find some way out of the morass will be absolutely damaged beyond repair.

I urge Hon. Members opposite to talk to their Ministers. Hopefully they will read the comments on this Bill and will see that it is a number one priority. Frankly, I was dismayed when I read the trade paper presented by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and found virtually no reference to commodities. They are not part of the "trade consultations" which seem to be going on in Canada. It did not make reference to the fundamental issue of commodities, nor were they the subject of any debate or dialogue at the Quebec City Summit between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan. In fact, agricultural problems were not on the agenda. However, we know about the major change which is going on in the United States Department of Agriculture. It seems to me that if we are trying to establish a special relationship, certainly coming to some kind of meeting of minds with the U.S. administration on this issue is of prime importance. Without its support obviously no form of parity pricing or guaranteed pricing in the international arena will be possible.

We know the limitations of a Bill like this. It really only applies to domestic consumption, which represents a very small part of the actual production of farmers. I am not downgrading the importance of the Bill because of that, but when we consider how much of our commodities is in the export market, it is obviously time for a companion initiative to deal with the international agreement. I do not in any way deny the difficulty in that regard. We all know how difficult it would be. Agriculture being one of our primary exporting sector, we have to recognize that the pricing mechanism across the world, the so-called market system, is faltering. With new-found competition from many countries in Latin America, Southeast Asia and the European Common Market, it will be even more difficult for us to compete and sell. This matter really requires the attention of all Hon. Members of the House.

Obviously many other things could be said on this subject, but I wanted to leave some time so that my colleague could address the issue. He has a particular interest in that there are many pork and beef farmers in his area. On behalf of that vast array of Liberals in western Canada, we would certainly support the initiative of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville. We are quite prepared to second any motion to refer the subject matter to committee.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to take part in this debate and like my colleague, I support Bill C-215 aimed at providing and seeking justice which is so much needed in the agricultural industry.

Let me point out by the way that agriculture is quite important in my constituency. There are 2,000 farms, 51 per cent of which are dairy farms. They have gross revenues of some $100 million and their average size is 225 acres.

One cannot help but notice a number of vague points in Bill C-215. The drafting of the Bill should be improved and adjusted, but the proposal in itself seems quite good to me because it seeks to provide justice and a fair distribution in what I think is probably the most important industry, agriculture.

We must understand that agriculture is a very important industry, but it is basically entirely different from small businesses. We are often inclined, as the Hon. Members opposite are, to compare agriculture to a small business where productivity and competition are very important concepts.

I have to admit that as far as agriculture is concerned, both concepts are a basic aspect, except that we should never forget that our farmers are faced with entirely unpredictable restraints, the vagaries of nature being the first example that comes to mind. A farmer could very well be productive and adequately equipped, but if nature is not kind to him, his production will be seriously affected. Now if his production is reduced, a scarcity is created and the market reacts according to the law of supply and demand and this remains completely beyond the control of the farmer. That example shows that agriculture as such is quite different from small businesses.

Agriculture is also an industry where the rules of the game are not the same for everyone. Let me refer, for example, to the production of pork in Quebec. We produce an impressive volume of pork in Quebec according to a process probably unparalleled in other provinces. In fact, there is what is called an integrated system. Of course, integrators are usually large corporations which achieve their production through small businesses. It seems to me that something is rather unfair in that process, because integrators very often also sell grain or other products which the producer needs. Therefore, the hog producer and who pays his primary products at specified prices is treated unfairly compared to his neighbour who is free to buy his own products at a substantially lower price. This is another example of obvious unfairness.

There is as well the matter of international markets. How can our small farmers gain access to the world markets? We have had a good example recently when the American Government unilaterally decided to overtax or to tax in a totally unacceptable way the whole Quebec hog production. There again, all these factors contribute to the unfair treatment of farmers compared with almost all the other industries.

In addition, the agricultural producer is at the mercy of consumers and of markets, which are very uncertain. When a food product is too expensive to buy, there is an immediate shift to another product, with the resulting decline in the market and all the effects you can think of.

In the dairy sector, producers need to know in what direction they are going, they need to know the long term policy which the Department has developed and that the Minister has promised for August 1st next. All in all, agriculture is an industry of vital and crucial importance. Let me just illustrate that fact by saying that in a small riding like mine, more than 3,500 people are directly dependent on agriculture.

Agriculture is also important because all Canadians need a lively, dynamic and future-oriented agricultural sector. It is important for our foreign markets and, considering these elements, I think we all agree on the strategic importance of that industry. I believe that as a Parliament and as a Government, we must allow our farmers to operate under laws and regulations which give them an equal opportunity to gain access to those markets they need so much. Leaving the farmer to fight for himself seems dangerous to me because of all the obstacles he has to overcome.

I could go on like this for quite a while, but let me just ask you to consider the fact that it is impossible to compare a farm operation to a small business operation. The rules of the game are entirely different, farmers need rules they understand and which allow them to plan their crops in the best interest of the industry which, I repeat, is of strategic importance for the economy of my riding and the whole of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I join this debate for two reasons. The first is a strong sense of concern which has come to me this past winter. Farmer after farmer in my constituency has come to speak about the extreme pressures, the crisis of credit, and the difficulty of making ends meet in one of the most productive agricultural constituencies in Canada. I speak too because I think, certainly in my constituency and in other parts of Canada as well, there is a sense of grass roots excitement and grass roots commitment to change, an approach to try to somehow give farming back the fair share which it deserves in our economy. It is a dynamism which has taken dramatic form in my constituency with the formation of a powerful and exciting group called Concerned Farmers of Essex County. It has brought hundreds of people together for a series of meetings to explore this concept of parity and to draw into a commitment to that concept not just those who are part of the organization itself, but those who are part of the broader Essex County Federation of Agriculture.

There is a sense that farmers in my constituency feel that we are finally asking the right questions when we ask how we can put a system of parity into place. They do not believe there is a simple answer to that question. They know that before succeeding in getting a price that covers their cost of production with a fair rate of return they will face serious problems because of the nature of the international economy and the difficulties of backlogs of credit with which many farmers now live. However, they have a sense that with this kind of concept and a commitment to the concept, it is possible that farmers may finally begin to get some optimism about the future. It is possible that the sons and daughters of our present farm families will finally have a sense of optimism with which they can look forward to the future.

There is a sense that in focusing on price, we are finally getting to the heart of the matter. In talking about the prices that commodities can earn, we are finally getting to the key side of the equation that affects farm households. It is important to deal with credit and the cost of credit. It is important to look at agri-bonds and tax issues, as has been done recently by the Committee on Finance, but it is even more crucial to focus on price.

The farmers in my constituency do not want something for nothing. They want the chance to earn a fair return for their work. That is why the system of parity pricing is something that they find exciting. It gives them a sense of optimism about the future.

The Bill in front of us introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), sets forth the concept. It does it in the context of western Canadian agriculture, quite frankly. People in my constituency have said that there are commodities which need to be dealt with, such as soybeans and corn which are covered by this Bill. That is a case for getting this Bill to committee and getting the committee to travel across the country to hear representations from farmers in eastern Canada as well as in western Canada. We can give those farmers a chance to grapple with this question themselves, the question of how to get the fair pricing or parity pricing that will give those farmers a future.

I support the concerned farmers of Essex County as strongly as I possibly can and I will continue to do so. I stress the point I made to them in a speech I gave a few weeks ago, and that is that this is not a partisan issue, it is an issue of justice for our farming community. This Bill will take us one step further in the right direction and I hope we can take that step here today.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure for me to intercede in a debate on agriculture. I do not believe there is anyone in the House who does not recognize the importance to a country of a strong basis in agriculture. I do not believe there is anyone in the House who does not recognize that in many areas of our agricultural industries today there are serious problems. That is why when Members put their minds to looking for ways to assist agriculture, no one should rise in the House and say that those ideas should not be explored.

On that basis, I commend the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for bringing forward a Bill that gives us an idea as to how we can address the difficulties that face farmers in our country today. I do not happen to agree with everything that is in the piece of legislation brought forward by the Hon. Member, but I am sure Hon. Members of the House will not happen to agree with all of the ideas I may put forward as to how we ought to progress in order to assist agriculture.

The point that ought to be made is that we as private Members—and we are dealing with Private Members' Hour—have the right and the duty to put ideas forward to Parliament for consideration. If those ideas are right and we can convince the Cabinet that they are right, then the Cabinet ought to put them into law so they can assist the farmers. But how can we do that?

The best method that is available to us as private Members is the committee system. Committees have the ability to seek the best advice in the country on a subject matter and committees are not limited to getting ideas from within 10 miles of Ottawa. All too often we forget that all the ideas for solving a problem are not to be found within this institution and its hallowed halls or glass towers. We must seek the advice of the people who elect us. In this case, we must seek the advice of the farmers of the nation and of those who work with the farmers' produce. We must work with them to see whether or not the ideas put forward in this legislation are the right ones. If they are not the right ideas, we must have compromises and other ideas put forward for the committee to review and put before the House.

In my opinion, the Government has been helpful to the agricultural industry from the time of its election to this point. Agriculture has been given a great deal of attention by this House. When the cost of production is higher than the price received for that produce, cutting the cost of production is a simple idea and one the Government can move quickly to address. We have seen such things as the fuel price subsidy and the quick movement on the Western Grain Stabilization Act which gave farmers an interim payment. I phoned my brother today to see whether or not we got our interim payment. We did, and it is a welcome surprise. Those kinds of things will assist farmers and will assist them quickly.

As mentioned by my colleagues in the House, there are other problems to be faced. There are international problems of tariffs and duties that are put on products when we get involved in internal subsidies in an attempt to solve problems. There is also a difficulty in accessing markets for our produce.

Something that has always concerned me is that there are so many people in this world who need the food we produce in this country but do not have the money to buy it. As a result, we are in competition with two or three other nations which have the same capacity to produce food but have access to the same few countries in the world that can afford to buy our products. Therefore we find such things as those in which the European Community is now involved, such as high subsidies for exports for products and production, or those in which the Americans are involved, such as extensive credit to gain access to markets for their products. They are all in competition with us and we here in Canada with our small Treasury must use our goodwill or the tremendous capacity of our farmers to become more and more efficient and to be price competitive in order to gain access to world markets.

I would now like to deal with the Bill that is before us. As was mentioned by a number of Members, parity is not a new idea. I can remember when the price of oil started to rise. A suggestion was made to me that it had always seemed to be that the price of a bushel of wheat was equal to the price of a barrel of oil. There was a feeling that we should raise the price of a bushel of wheat to the same price that was being paid for a barrel of oil. Of course, that got to be ridiculous as oil prices rose to $36 a barrel. However, the feeling existed that the two commodities should be worth the same.

We are trying to determine in our own mind what a bushel of wheat, a steer or a hog should be worth. When a commission is put in place to make that determination, problems arise immediately. There are difficulties with those farmers who are more efficient than others or who just happen to get up earlier in the morning and work harder. That is the case in a number of industries and not just in agriculture. There is the difficulty of how to reward those who take advantage of everything that is available to them and those who work hard.

Mr. Nystrom: Just like politics, too.

Mr. Schellenberger: Exactly. Second, how do we put into this formula the use or development of new technology? Third, how do we set this price when we are attempting to gain access to international markets in the area of red meats and grain, something which must be done?

The Bill suggests that we set up commissions in two or three areas in order to do these things. Basically, the only way to do that is to control production. We have done that in a number of industries and it has worked. The dairy industry and the various feather industries have been able to control production and keep their prices at such a level that they receive adequate return for their work. By creating those boards, we are giving other people in the country who wish to farm fewer options regarding what they can produce. If we now begin to control production of hogs and cattle without getting into subsidies, then we offer the rest of the farmers fewer options. They are then locked into the production of horticultural products or grain. That is one difficulty we must recognize.

Instead of having the consumer pay the difference, we can have the Government pay the difference through the concept of subsidies. We all know the difficulties and what can happen in that case.

● (1750)

For a bushel of barley, a farmer in the European community now receives more from the Government than I receive from the Canadian Wheat Board when I deliver a bushel of barley. The European farmer receives more at the beginning from the Government. Canadian farmers must compete with that farmer to access international markets. The same is true in the production of other grain commodities. If we look at the European community and the commodities, by subsidization, which they are compelled to store because they have no market for them, we find warehouse after warehouse of butter and skim milk powder. We now have 850,000 metric tons of surplus beef in storage in the European community. That is a whole year's production in Canada, and it is growing. Is it any wonder that this community, with export subsidies, has attempted to access more and more markets in the world to get rid of the problem? There is a problem, no one can argue that. In 1980 and in previous years, they had no access to our market. In 1981, we bought 2.7 million pounds, in 1982 we bought 7.7 million pounds, in 1983 we bought 14.8 million pounds, and last year we bought 50 million pounds.

The European community is moving into the market through price. That has dropped the price which our farmers receive for their animals in Canada. Obviously, if a restaurant owner can buy cheaper meat, he will do that because it will mean more profit to him. He is not necessarily concerned about where he gets that meat.

Canada has been lax in past years in dealing with the problem of access to our market. Other countries would never have accepted what we have accepted. Other countries utilized GATT arrangements, tariffs and non-tariff barriers to protect their producers. But Canada as a trading nation tries to be as fair as possible so that other countries can take advantage of the products which we push into their market. The European community is now saying that if we do not give access to their beef they will put tariffs on our blueberries, honey, rye whiskey and other commodities. It is almost blackmail that we are experiencing.

Members of the House have ideas. Those ideas must fit into Canada's need to produce sufficient food for our own needs and those of the markets which we supply around the world. No one can argue that there is a need in Canada for the large amount of foreign capital which is gained because of the sale of our agricultural commodities. It is in the billions of dollars. In the grain industry alone it is $6 billion. Then there is the access to all the other commodities which we have in the world.

I have put forward the suggestion that we might reach out to the consumers of Canada to assist them in our domestic consumption. It is not a new idea. We could have a two-price wheat program in which we would ask the people who purchase flour products—breads, muffins, cakes and cookies—to pay more for the price of wheat which goes into the domestic production. That money could go to the wheat farmers. The difficulty with that is the bread which comes across the border. But I think we could deal with that, and I do not think our competitors in the United States would argue if such a program were brought in. Instead of putting a tariff on flour or wheat, we would put the tariff on breads, muffins and cakes. Instead of placing the tariff at the beginning, it would be placed at the end. It would be a retail tariff which would go directly to the farmers. A tariff of two cents on a loaf of bread would mean 40 cents a bushel to farmers on the Prairies. With the amount which we in Canada consume, 40 cents a bushel could mean the difference between bankruptcy and continuing production for a lot of farmers in western Canada.

If that concept could work for bread, why could we not implement it for beef, pork, soya beans, vegetables and fruits which are consumed domestically? I do not think it is beyond our imagination for such a program to be implemented. I have expressed that thought, and I assume that there are problems with it, as there are problems with Bill C-215, but when the subject of how we can get more money into the hands of farmers is put before the Standing Committee on Agriculture for study, then we might also put forward ideas such as these. Perhaps we would not accept everything which is put forward in this Bill, but there are some good ideas in it. I would like the committee to pursue my idea about a retail tariff which would go directly to the farmer. We might deal also with better stabilization programs for farmers, or bilateral arrangements with competitors. We know that approximately five countries in the world have 75 per cent or 80 per cent of the world's suprlus in food, particularly grains. Why do those countries compete so well with the countries which must buy the grains—such as the communist countries and certain others—when we are selling our grains below the Canadian farmers' cost of production? It is no different in the United States, Argentina or Australia than it is in Canada. As well, I believe that the old international wheat agreements should not be discounted. Perhaps we as Members should pursue that with Members of Parliament from other countries or with U.S. Congressmen to find out if there are answers.

Various provinces are attempting to assist through subsidies, which has created some difficulty with pork in the U.S. market. Perhaps we might attempt to deal with better stabilization on a national basis which would not interfere with export markets.

It is very easy to get wound up when talking about agriculture. I come from a rural riding and my family has farmed for over 100 years. I know the difficulties, but it is not my intention to talk out this motion. It is my intention to move the following motion:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-215, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture."

I believe that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) indicated that he was prepared to second the motion.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Accordingly, the Order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

MINES AND MINING—EXPANSION OF FALCONBRIDGE REFINERY IN NORWAY. (B) GRANTING OF EXPORT LICENCES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on April 3. I raised a question with the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) having to do with Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. building a refinery in the Sudbury Basin. I asked the Minister if he was aware that Falconbridge had announced that it was going to spend $41.5 million to expand its refinery in Norway because it was buying Botswana nickel matte and it had to expand the refinery to process this new nickel matte from Botswana.

Since Falconbridge began operations in the Sudbury Basin in the early 1940s, it has always refined its nickel matte in Norway. We in the Sudbury Basin have always demanded that Falconbridge should build a refinery to refine Canadian ore where it is mined. We felt that was a good principle. If one mines ore in Canada then it should be refined in Canada.

Eventually, Mr. Speaker, in 1975, after we started to experience all sorts of downturns in the mining industry in the Sudbury Basin, the Ontario Conservative Government belatedly attempted to save face in the matter and amended its mining act. That mining act said that Ontario resources should be refined in Canada. We would have liked it to specify Ontario but we agreed that the ore should at least be refined in Canada.

Section 104 of the mining act was then passed which exempted Falconbridge from that rule. Falconbridge in Ontario, therefore, is the only mining company which is allowed to ship its resources in a semi-processed state offshore to have it refined.

In the last two years Falconbridge has reduced its work force from 2700 workers to 1900 workers. We have lost 800 jobs in that company alone. The company itself has not been doing any development of new mines in the Sudbury Basin. In fact, it has been importing from abroad a lot of scrap metal and has been smelting out the nickel from that scrap metal. This does not create any employment for our people.

Falconbridge has now announced that because Amex has pulled out of its consortium in Botswana, it is moving in to buy the nickel matte from Botswana and is going to ship that nickel matte to Norway for refining. To do that it has to spend $41.5 million to expand the refinery in Norway. It seems to me the logical and the kind of patriotic thing Falconbridge would want to do, if they have $41.5 million, is use that money as a down payment in order to finally build a refinery in the Sudbury Basin to refine Canadian ore. Let the Norwegian plant refine the Botswana ore.

To me, Mr. Speaker, this decision flies in the face of what we have been discussing in committee and in this House with respect to Bill C-15. Surely the surplus earned through the labour of Canadian workers and Canadian resources should be plowed back into Canada. Falconbridge should build a refinery and at least hire back the employees who lost their jobs. Not only do we Canadians have a vested interest in that we lose employment opportunities when we ship out the semi-processed ore, but we have allowed Falconbridge to defer $150 million of federal corporate tax in the last two years. Last year it paid no corporate income tax at all and it paid none the year before. I have nothing against that, but at some point in time we have to receive a benefit from that company. Where is that benefit?

We have said that Falconbridge should build a refinery in the Sudbury Basin. Falconbridge made the decision to expand the refinery in Norway. They have been saying they are going to spend $70 million in the Sudbury Basin next year. Well, that includes the payroll. They have not spent any money on development of new mines in the last two years and here is an opportunity for the Government. I asked the Minister to do that. I asked him to contact the leadership of Falconbridge to impress upon them that now is the time to put the $41.5 million toward the building of a new refinery. We understand it will cost in the vicinity of $125 million to $147 million, and $41.5 million as a good down payment to make. We could look at participation by the federal and provincial Governments in building that refinery in the Sudbury Basin. I asked the Minister to do that and he said he would look into the matter and report later.

• (1805)

Mr. F. Oberle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He raises a very interesting matter, one which is of concern to all Canadians, that we are from time to time shipping semi-processed raw materials to other parts of the world for further refinement. That is not something engaged in solely by Falconbridge or the mineral industry. Our forest industry and many other parts of the primary resource sector are often accused of the same sin.

One should ask immediately why a company like Falconbridge, which has such an exemplary record, would build a refinery in Norway in the first place. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt may not know it, but the reason was that Inco had developed a refining process that was then state of the art, still is for that matter, and had the North American patents. In order for Falconbridge to get its ore refined, they would either have to make a deal with Inco or go somewhere else to build a refinery. That is why the refinery was built in Norway in 1928 to 1930, and they have been refining ore there ever since.

It is quite true that this patent protection just recently expired and it would now be possible for Falconbridge to build a refinery in Canada. However, the Hon. Member is from the Socialist Party and I want to just put to him this proposition. It is one thing to impose on or intrude in corporate decision-making in the manner which the NDP would prescribe. To impose export limits on natural resources would be one way of doing that. Indeed, we are doing it where the Canadian interest is involved, for reasons of security of supply. In the oil sector there are very strict Government rules concerning exports. But surely the Hon. Member knows that there is no shortage of nickel in Canada; nor are there any security reasons for which the Government would in any way feel justified in imposing such restrictions. It is, as I said, one thing to do that, but it is quite another thing when you have to sell these materials.

Let me just tell the Hon. Member that Canada purchases only 5.1 per cent of the total production of Falconbridge, including some product from the Dominican Republic. The rest is sold all over the world. Only 7.1 per cent of the Norway refined product finds its way back to Canada. As well, there are some very significant trade advantages to Falconbridge because the Norway refinery's product goes into the markets of the European Economic Community without trade restrictions. That is a very distinct advantage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

RAILWAYS (A) CN LAYOFFS. (B) TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR CN EMPLOYEES TRANSFERABLE TO VIA RAIL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on February 26 last, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to pay particular attention to the fact that CN workers would be transferred to VIA Rail, and that the decision which had just been announced by the Progressive Conservative Government to allow VIA Rail to do its own car repair and maintainance was likely to be a source of great concern for some 3,000 rail workers in Canada. I asked the Minister to assure the House that no Canadian National worker who had been working for several years, seven, eight years, for VIA Rail, would be affected by this new decision of the Government. The Minister of Transport told me at that time that a deal between the parties would be made about those CN workers who would be transferred to VIA Rail, and that negotiations were under way, and I quote:

—I understand they are proceeding very smoothly and satisfactorily.

However, reminding him of the responsibility of the Government in this decision, I asked the Minister, to take a closer look to ensure that the whole thing would be done without any layoffs. I quote him again as he told me:

—as I previously indicated, the negotiations are taking place very smoothly between VIA Rail and the respective unions. I can assure the Hon. Member that a deal will be resolved which will be satisfactory to both parties concerned.

On March 21, I had to repeat my question to the Minister of Transport reminding him of what he had said on February 26 and to tell him that unfortunately some 474 CN workers had just been laid off in spite of the assurances the Minister of Transport had tried to give us previously. However, the answer of the Minister of Transport was completely unsatisfactory. He said this, and I quote:

—I remind him that it is not the Government which has laid off 474 workers; it is the management of CN—

As if those layoffs were not the responsibility of the Minister of Transport who decided to allow VIA Rail to do its own rolling stock maintenance whereas it had been done since 1977 either by Canadian National workers, or in some cases by Canadian Pacific workers, which ensured stable employment.

The Minister goes even a little further in his answer; he said the following, taking into consideration however the representations I was making, and I quote:

I have asked the President of CN to ensure that all matters relating to labour adjustment, early retirement, and all such things will be taken into consideration so that the impact is not severe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I must say that today, in April, not only do the layoffs still stand but there are threats of more layoffs and no hope of job creation at either the CN or VIA Rail to hire back laid-off employees.

In other words, the decision by the Progressive Conservative Government had planned the construction of four maintenance has destabilized employment which had become permanent and an important source of income for many years for hundreds of rail workers.

I understand that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister is the one who will answer me in a few moments. He comes from Halifax himself. He will know that in order to create jobs in every part of this country and in order to help CN or CP employees to get another job with VIA Rail, the previous Government had planned the construction of four maitenance centres: one in Halifax, home of the parliamentary secretary, one in Montreal, one in Toronto and one in Winnipeg. Yet the Government went ahead with the Toronto project only, and the Progressive Conservatives have told us that the three other maintenance centres that would create employment and allow those laid-off employees to get a job either in Halifax, Montreal or Winnipeg have not been accepted by their Government. I hope that in his answer the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to give good news to at least those laid-off workers in Montreal and maybe to some others in his riding of Halifax.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the distinguished former Minister employs a touch of sophistry in his argument, and I will forgive him for that. The former Minister's own Party was part and parcel of ready acceptance of an amendment moved by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) with respect to Crown corporations acting in contemplation of good business practices.

Canadian National has been experiencing a decline in freight since last November. Let me advise the Hon. Member, because I am sure he is concerned and I know he is very serious in his comments, that Canadian National, which last year posted a record $51 million profit in the first quarter, has now posted a net loss of $23.6 million for the same period in 1985. The rate of decline has reached 5 per cent and is worsening. That is not good news. Coal traffic has fallen 12 per cent. Grain traffic which, as the Hon. Member knows, represents more than 20 per cent of Canadian National's workload is down 18 per cent from the volume moved in the same period last year. The company is now forecasting that grain traffic will decline as much as 30 per cent.

It should come, therefore, as no surprise that the company responding to directives of this Parliament and to a measure that was part of the policy and programs of the previous Government is making adjustments to offset the decline in revenues and to prevent the outlook for net income from deteriorating still further during the coming year. That is a direct result of our direction to them, to act in contemplation of profit, to act in a sense of good business practices. Essentially, Mr. Speaker, these cutbacks in manpower are a result of not simply layoffs following the declining traffic but the result of productivity gains obtained through technological change and rearrangement or deferment of some planned programs, all of which was done in consultation with the unions and management involved.

The layoffs announced by CN in its Atlantic, St. Lawrence, Prairie and Great Lakes regions which total 474 persons were made in specific accordance with agreements between the company and the unions affected. These agreements allow full advantage to be taken of transfers, complete with relocation assistance and the exercise of seniority. Job security provisions when combined with unemployment insurance benefits enable employees affected to retain up to 80 per cent of their salary.

The number of weeks during which an employee might enjoy these benefits is affected by the number of years of employment with the railway, but it does ease the adverse affects of this very very serious decline in railway traffic, a decline that we hope the economy will be able to adjust to and reverse in the months ahead under the leadership that we now have.

HEALTH

SEIZURE OF PRODUCTS FROM HEALTH FOOD STORES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, like other Hon. Members, in the past few weeks I have received over 150 letters protesting the heavy-handed actions by the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare in seizing, without warning, a number of products from the shelves of health food stores.

Some years ago the Health and Welfare Ministry learned about the falsification of tests on a variety of toxic pesticides at the IDT laboratories in the United States. These products, approved for use in Canada before the truth was learned, were allowed to remain in use while new tests were conducted. As a result, some chemicals found their way into the Canadian ecosystem. At least any harm from the use of botanical products accrues solely to the individual choosing to use them.

My constituents protest the loss, not only of access to products they find effective, but also of their freedom of action. Many question whether the move was initiated by members of the medical and pharmaceutical professions who see the health food industry as cutting in on their profits. Surely all of us can agree that health food products must be adequately labelled showing recommended quantity and duration of use. Careful labelling is a better answer than removal of the product from the shelves.

TRADE

SURPLUS WITH UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is reported that the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. James Baker, said that at the next economic summit to be held in Bonn from May 2 to May 4—in other words, very shortly—the U.S. Government will pressure Canada to reduce its annual trade surplus with the United States. How can the Minister reconcile these comments by his U.S. counterpart with the joint statement made by the United States and Canada at the Quebec summit a few weeks ago, according to which there would be a movement towards freer exchanges between both countries?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I could try to interpret the statement by the Secretary of the Treasury, I think he is saying that Canada has a very major trade surplus with the United States which he would like to see reduced, for obvious reasons. What I have pointed out to the Secretary is that we have a very heavy deficit on the service account, interest dividends, transportation and tourism, and that that almost offsets the other. He has said that he would like to see some change in that. We will be discussing that again in Bonn.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONTINUE EDUCATION PROCESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that of course does not jibe with the movement toward freer trade, if that is the position of this Government and the United States.

The Minister of Finance was apparently reported yesterday as saying that for the Bonn Summit, the Canadian Government is in complete harmony with the American position, yet the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury is looking toward a reduction in our surplus. He knows as well as I do that balancing the service and the trade account is a complicated matter, particularly if it is going to be controlled rather than by moving in a freer fashion. Any reduction in that trade surplus will hit automobiles, the forest sector, and our steel sector. When the Minister of Finance accompanies the Prime Minister to Bonn, will he continue the education process with his colleague, the Secretary of the Treasury, so that he understands the composition a little more clearly than he appears to at present?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that I do not see that there is a connection between what Mr. Baker said and the discussions that we had in Quebec City on the question of U.S.-Canada trade into the future. He is referring to a specific situation in 1984 and continuing into 1985. The other point that I would like to make is that there is no suggestion in what Mr. Baker said that he is looking for us to try to control in any hands-on way the trade flows between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hope the Minister bears that in mind when he meets Mr. Baker in Bonn.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—INVITATION TO PARTICIPATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my third question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is reported to have said that Canada will not be asking the United States for any further information at Bonn on the star wars research program. Would the Deputy Prime Minister consult with the Prime Minister to ask him why we would not use—I see I am not going to get an answer from the Deputy Prime Minister in any event. However, why would he not use this occasion to seek a clarification from the American Government on what participation it seeks from Canada in the $26-billion research program known as the Strategic Defence Initiative?

● (1120)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this seems to be the day for the Leader of the Oppositon to go fishing. The answer today, as it was yesterday, is that we see no reason at all to duplicate the work of a public servant. When we give someone a job to do, we let that person do it. When the information returns to Cabinet, Cabinet will make the policy decisions and communicate them to the House of Commons.

TRADE

IMPACT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, Canada's Minister for International Trade and the Ontario Industry Minister both admitted that studies had yet to be made or completed with respect to the potential impact on Canadian industry of a free trade agreement with the United States. My question is as follows: Could the Minister of Finance explain to the House why the Minister for International Trade and the Government support the idea of signing a free trade agreement with the United States without first obtaining a study of the impact on industry and the jobs that might be affected, and also the impact on our exports, such as pork, sugar and possibly lumber and public transit equipment? Why is this kind of agreement being suggested without a study being made?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the question of the Hon. Member. He uses the term "free trade". I want to assure him that there has not been any suggestion of signing any agreement or working out an agreement for free trade such as he is suggesting. We have, of course, indicated that we would like to work toward securing and enhancing our trading relationship with the United States.

[Translation]

EUROPEAN STANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion read what the Minister of International Trade said yesterday in Toronto.

I would like to get back to the Minister of Finance on trade with the United States. One of the major causes of our trade surplus is, of course, the strong American dollar. Since the Minister is going to Bonn with the Prime Minister, could he inform the House whether the Canadian Government intends to support the European position that only a drop in interest rates in the United States will restore some measure of balance to the monetary situation and thus remove the pressure on trade surpluses as well as the pressure being brought to bear by a number of American industries to have their Government impose barriers that would restric international trade with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be favourable to the Canadian economy, and to all economies, if interest rates were to come down. One thing which has resulted in some distortions in trade flows as they affect Canada has been the strength of the U.S. dollar. We would welcome some decline in the level of the U.S. dollar, as the Secretary of the Treasury himself said yesterday. I do not see any inconsistencies in the positions taken by the European countries and the position taken by Canada.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

BOARD NOMINEE—OATH OF SECRECY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Perhaps he could inform the House how it was possible for the Government to decide late last week that Dr. Ursula Franklin's appointment to the Atomic Energy Control Board should not be proceeded with on the grounds that she was questioning the implications of the oath of secrecy, when the information with regard to her questions about the oath of secrecy was not available until Tuesday of this week?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, by the calendar, today is April 26. The letter which was received from Dr. Franklin is dated April 22 and was not received until April 24. That, coupled with the reservation which she raises herself in her letter, as explained by the Prime Minister yesterday, should sufficiently answer the Hon. Member's question.

● (1125)

TIMING OF DECISION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it might sufficiently answer a question, but it has nothing to do with my question.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister again. It has been reported, both by PMO officials and by Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources officials, from the Ministers' offices, that the decision not to appoint Dr. Franklin was made late last week on the grounds that she had indicated that she wanted further clarification with regard to the implication of the oath of secrecy. However, she wrote to the Government on Monday of this week seeking the clarification. In her letter she wrote:

> May I stress that I am not looking for private dispensation from the secrecy provisions but for a clarification of the relationship of the Board to the public.

How could the Cabinet make the decision last week, based on her questioning of the oath, when the Cabinet was not aware that she was questioning the oath until Tuesday of this week?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is quite simple. In the first place the Hon. Member's question infers that a decision has been made. It has not. Second, we are not going to be holding up an appointment because of the existence of the statutory requirement with respect to the oath of secrecy and the possible need for a review of that. But our original information came to the Government from someone who was personally known to Dr. Franklin, who expressed those reservations.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Deputy Prime Minister is it normal practice that hearsay from other people would be taken as sufficient evidence not to make an appointment which already had been indicated was about to be made? Is it the position of the Government that it should have taken the word of someone who may have known Dr. Franklin, rather than asking Dr. Franklin herself?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Government operated on the basis of the best information which was available at the time. That best information indicated—which was subsequently borne out by Dr. Franklin's letter—that she had serious reservations with respect to taking the oath of secrecy. That was in the letter itself. Since that time there has been communication with Dr. Franklin with respect to the administrative problem in the appointment, and Dr. Franklin has accepted our apologies for any inconvenience which may have been caused by that.

EMPLOYMENT OF MINISTERIAL AIDE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the Deputy Prime Minister the opportunity to distinguish himself during this Question Period.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Ask the question.

Mr. Johnston: During this debate, his seat-mate, the Minister of Finance, has admitted that he allowed someone who was on the payroll of a Toronto advertising firm to work unsupervised in his office, that he did not sign a conflict of interest statement, and shortly after his departure, within days, an agency of the Department of Finance received an advertising contract worth $234,000. Would the Deputy Prime Minister agree that this is, at best, shabby administrative practice, and that the public expects and is entitled to higher standards from the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what I find shabby, on this side now, is hearing that kind of question from a member of the former Government whose ranks were riddled with conflict of interest throughout his term and well beyond that into the dim recesses of history. That is what I find shabby.

For the Hon. Member to suggest that the gentleman was working unsupervised is unworthy of him. Certainly he was under the very capable guidance of a Minister whose integrity, in the view of all of us, cannot be questioned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DOUGLAS ROBSON—LENGTH OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would like to set the record straight. I do not question the Minister's integrity—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1130)

[Translation]

Mr. Johnston: —that is not how we operate.

[English]

The Minister himself has told the House, I think quite openly and candidly, that he was terribly busy, that he was in Washington and that he did not have time to set up his office, hence he appointed this individual who, presumably, was not supervised; otherwise the Minister would not have needed his help.

The Deputy Prime Minister remembers very well that we have had volunteers before in service. We had $1 a year men.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Johnston: This Government is now introducing volunteers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, it is time for a question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Would you repeat the punch line? It wasn't funny.

Mr. Johnston: Yes, $244,000 a month men. I repeat the punch line for the benefit of the Government House Leader.

Could the Minister of Finance set the record straight by telling us exactly what these administrative functions were which were conducted by Mr. Robson? And what was the period of service? When did he actually begin and when did he leave the office of the Minister?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it clear that my chief of staff was supervising Mr. Robson throughout the whole period during which he was in my office. The two of them were working together to staff the office, to get the office set up in as quick a time as we possibly could, because I had the major responsibility of presenting an economic statement early in the month of November. Mr. Robson was in my office from, I believe, September 17 or September 18, shortly after the swearing in, and he continued roughly until the end of October.

AIR CANADA

EFFECT OF HIRING PART-TIME WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister is aware that there is an impending work stoppage at Air Canada this Sunday morning, and that the basis of the dispute is Air Canada's insistence on increasing the percentage of part-time workers in its work force to 45 per cent of the total. That will have the effect of decreasing the number of full-time jobs, which are basically jobs for women. This is a matter of policy, and I wonder if the Government will direct Air Canada to stop its insistence on drastically increasing the number of part-time workers at the expense of full-time jobs?

Ms. Mitchell: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations between Air Canada and the unions are currently taking place right now. There was a new offer, I understand, put on the table by Air Canada last evening. The negotiations continued up until 12.30 a.m. this morning. They are back at the bargaining table again as of now. I think it would be inappropriate, Mr. Speaker, for me to comment further since it could very well be implied as interfering with the collective bargaining process.

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN—POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The fact is that the union has turned down the latest offer on the grounds that there is no real job security offered in Air Canada's position. Again I ask the Minister, as a matter of government policy and its control over Crown Corporations, is the Government going to allow Air Canada to destroy thousands of full-time jobs? Is it going to be government policy to allow that to happen to women workers?

Ms. Mitchell: What about employment equity?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing with the preamble of the Hon. Member's question, I repeat, Air Canada, I think, has an excellent policy with regard to the employment of women. In fact there has been a substantial increase in the number of women at the management level. I disagree totally with the Hon. Member when he suggests that Air Canada is trying to hire part-time workers at the expense of full-time permanent workers. In fact, I think laid on the table is a very generous offer respecting job security. Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

RESIGNATION OF FORMER DEFENCE MINISTER

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question was to be directed to the Prime Minister but in his absence I will have the pleasure of directing it to the Deputy Prime Minister, and I hope for the best for an answer. Yesterday the Prime Minister informed this House for the first time that he asked for the resignation of the former Minister of National Defence. But on February 13 in this House, in response to a question put by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said: "Mr. Speaker, just so that the facts might be absolutely clear, the resignation of the former Minister of National Defence was offered by that Member of Parliament". Who is telling the truth, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Both.

An Hon. Member: It's a slow day.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): It must be a slow day. I really cannot understand what the Hon. Member is trying to prove. I see no inconsistency with what has been said. I was a witness, and I think the Hon. Member was in the House at that time and he witnessed the resignation, sadly, of the former Minister of National Defence. It was announced in the House by the former Minister.

Mr. Nunziata: Was he or wasn't he fired?

Mr. Nielsen: As far as I am concerned, surely all Hon. Members in the House can take that as compelling evidence of the origination of the resignation by the Minister himself, as sad an occasion as that was.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): So much for clarity.

Mr. Hopkins: So much for clarity. The Deputy Prime Minister knows very well that is normal procedure. It's behind the scenes that we want to know what went on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Come on over, Len.

REASON FOR RESIGNATION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Many Canadians are still asking why the former Minister resigned. The Prime Minister said he did nothing wrong. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said he was not asked for his resignation. The Prime Minister said he was asked for his resignation. The Prime Minister said there was no breach of security, that he is an honourable man—and I agree—and that he did not breach any conflict of interest, and on and on it goes.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hopkins: Why then did he resign? I ask again who is telling the truth, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister? Stop stonewalling.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What nonsense.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I always make the utmost endeavour to answer all questions with that degree of clarity—

Mr. Nunziata: You had better go to confession tomorrow, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: —which the clarity of the question itself requires. As far as the reason for the resignation is concerned, Hon. Members of this House have that reason from the lips of the former Minister himself. Surely the Hon. Member could adopt the longstanding tradition of this House and accept the word of the Minister who resigned on that very regrettable occasion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO GERMANY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the Prime Minister's close ties with President Ronald Reagan, will the Government urge the President to cancel his proposed visit to the cemetery for the SS troops?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Government's regard for the sovereignty and sovereign decisions of other countries, we will leave decisions about United States policy to be taken by the administration of the United States.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, considering Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's recent statement of disagreement with the President's decision, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs suggest to the Prime Minister that it would be an act of friendship if the Prime Minister would telephone President Reagan and urge him to reconsider?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the suggestion comes from the Hon. Member to the Government of the United States, I doubt that it could be interpreted as an act of friendship.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ENFORCEMENT OF YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Solicitor General. The police chief of Metropolitan Toronto, Jack Marks, has recently indicated his great concern about the Young Offenders Act. Among other concerns, he stated that his force's hands are tied in dealing with some 300 cases involving arson, theft, assault, and sexual assault, because the suspects are under 12 years of age. He has asked for a review of the Young Offenders Act. Would the Acting Solicitor General indicate to the House whether he would be prepared to have a review such as is called for by the chief?

● (1140)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I am informed by officials of the Department of the Solicitor General that they are in fact very closely monitoring the operation of the new law. I might point out that the police may deal with the age group referred to by the chief under the provisions of the provincial child welfare legislation and other relevant provincial laws. There are vehicles and devices available to the law enforcement agencies.

I want to reassure the Hon. Member that this is clearly a new departure that has been taken. The Solicitor General and his departmental officials are paying very close attention to the operation of the law.

THE ADMINISTRATION

RESIGNATION OF FORMER DEFENCE MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am all tied up here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: We've known that for years.

Mr. Tobin: Wave the hounds down, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In addressing the question I am reminded of the old mother saying: "Oh, what a tangled web we weave, when first we practise to deceive!"

We just saw the Secretary of State for External Affairs shaking his head, "no", when he heard himself being quoted by my colleague with respect to his comments as to the initiation of the resignation of the Minister of National Defence. We just heard the Deputy Prime Minister contradict the statement the Prime Minister made yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Tobin: I am coming to the question, gentlemen. I advise the Secretary of State for External Affairs to check Hansard of the days he was questioned, February 14 and 15. Was the Minister indicating to the House that the Minister of National Defence had submitted his own resignation, or is he telling us now that he agrees with what the Prime Minister said yesterday, that in fact the resignation was solicited?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was intending to say to the House on those dates what I said to the House on those dates. That is entirely consistent with what the Prime Minister of Canada has said.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, you would need a road-map to follow the logic that is being expressed opposite. You would have to do mental gymnastics to try to stay in touch with the convoluted answers we are getting. We are not sure what the Minister intended to say. I do not think he is sure any more.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. Wednesday becomes Friday this week. A supplementary question, please.

MINISTER'S REPLIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): My question to the Minister of External Affairs could not be any clearer. Two days following the resignation of the Minister of National Defence, on February 14 and 15, in response to specific questions by the Member for Hamilton Mountain, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the Minister had resigned of his own volition, that he jumped rather than being pushed. I am now asking whether the Secretary of State agrees with the Prime Minister that he was pushed. More importantly, as The Globe and Mail says—

An Hon. Member: Tear it up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. I think we have had the question put.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my regretful conclusion that the Hon. Member is beyond help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

TAKEOVER OF WORTHINGTON CANADA BY DRESSER INDUSTRIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Earlier this year the Cabinet approved the takeover of Worthington Canada in Brantford by the huge U.S. multinational, Dresser Industries of Dallas, Texas. Would the Minister tell the House what undertakings were received from Dresser Industries to expand jobs in Brantford as a result of this takeover?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is well aware, it is not customary to reflect on, or certainly to reveal, what undertakings may have been given at the time of a clearance or other approval such as he has referred to.

DRESSER INDUSTRIES' LAY-OFF POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of the corporate policy of Dresser as expressed by its chairman, John James, in 1982, at which time he said:

> Since I came here as chairman we've made an effort to keep our U.S. plants fully loaded, while keeping any necessary lay-offs primarily in foreign plants.

Did the Minister receive undertakings from Dresser that it would not apply this philosophy to the Worthington plant in Brantford? Did he get assurances that the jobs in the plant in Brantford would be protected?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as you will well understand, the answer to the second question is the same as the first.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT—COMPENSATION FOR VANDALISM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Solicitor General. It is with regard to the young offenders legislation. There is considerable public concern that, while the Act devolves total responsibility on the young people, because they are young, particularly in cases of vandalism, they cannot be held accountable. They have no way of making restitution. Would the department consider re-opening an examination of the Bill to allow for joint responsibility between the young people and parents, as opposed to vicarious responsibility? In that way those who suffer damages as a result of vandalism could get restitution.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta has long had an interest in this very important matter. He put forward some amendments in committee with respect to vicarious responsibility by parents.

As the Hon. Member will know, because of the criminal context, the issue of co-responsibility and vicarious responsibility is a complicated subject. I can assure the Hon. Member, by virtue of the fact that he has an interest in this and is making a representation, that the Solicitor General and his officials will give serious consideration to that particular initiative. I appreciate very much the constructive suggestions coming forward from that Member.

THE ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENT OF MR. BUD SHERMAN TO CRTC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Government House Leader. The Prime Minister and his Government had promised to set up a parliamentary committee that would be responsible for reviewing major appointments made by the Government. As so many promises, this one has not been kept, so far. Many Canadians have objected to the appointment of Mr. Bud Sherman, a former Conservative candidate who was defeated in the last election. Mr. Sherman was appointed, as the House is aware, to the CRTC. It is also common knowledge that Mr. Sherman is well known for his comments on federal bilingualism—

[English]

On January 23, 1983, Mr. Sherman spoke in the Manitoba Legislature about "federal style bilingualism". At that time he said that "it has damaged the economy, has damaged the nation's social harmony, has damaged the Armed Forces, has damaged their jobs and their career advancement opportunities, very, very severely in many instances, to ensure the re-election of the Party at hand".

Will the Minister keep his word and his Government's commitment, and ask that Mr. Sherman appear before the Committee on Official Languages to justify his position and to make all Canadians aware of his stand so that we know what kind of people are being appointed?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister has addressed the matter with respect to Mr. Sherman. He has indicated that it is that kind of question which caused the representation of the Liberal Party in Quebec to drop like a stone in the last election, that kind of divisive approach to this whole important issue.

Mr. Sherman was not talking about the issue of bilingualism as a principle but the way in which the Liberal Government introduced it and attempted to implement it in the country. That was a disgrace.

As far as confirmation and other hearings are concerned, as the Hon. Member well knows, this matter is under consideration by the parliamentary task force on reform. We are waiting with great interest for the recommendations of that particular task force to come forward, to provide the guidelines and the method by which important appointments may in fact be made. The Hon. Member will know that this Government will act on those recommendations.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should ask the opinion of his colleagues from Quebec. It might be quite an education for him.

[English]

Will the Minister confirm that indeed his Government has not named the committee to review and assess the nominations of people to important positions basically because up to now the Government has named over 1,200 people and it wants to cater to all the Tory hacks in the country before giving Parliament the responsibility of evaluating nominations?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I must take the premise of the question seriously because it comes from a representative of a Party that is well briefed in terms of hacks and patronage over the course of the last years. All I can say is that the premise is wrong.

The fact of the matter is that the distinguished Member for St. John's East and his committee, consisting of Members from the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, are in fact taking these matters under serious consideration.

We want to make sure that there is a proper role for parliamentarians in the examination of important—

Mr. Gauthier: Do it now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We will be awaiting the recommendations of this committee. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member will be pleased with the results of that particular recommendation.

RAILWAYS

GRAIN AND FLOUR FREIGHT SUBSIDIES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the Government or his Department reviewing the freight rate subsidies on grain and flour to Atlantic ports, namely, the At and East rates, with a view to reducing or removing the subsidies?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the issue to which the Hon. Member refers of course would require a legislative change. A number of suggestions have been made that the At and East rate proposal should be reviewed for the most advantageous cost benefit analysis. Of course that is being done, but at the present time there are no contemplated legislative changes that are currently being considered or drafted.

REQUEST THAT SUBSIDIES BE RETAINED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): I do not particularly like people who say "I told you so", but when we were discussing the Crown rate Bill and I had access to a Cabinet document, and the intention of the Government for the long term was to remove the Government from under any and all transportation subsidies.

In view of the fact that the At and East rates keep ports like Halifax and St. John competitive on the export market, provide millions of dollars of revenue for those ports and hundreds of jobs, and help western grain producers' export sales, will the Minister assure the House that the At and East rates on grain and flour through the Atlantic ports will in fact be retained?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first the Hon. Member refers to Cabinet documents. He is accustomed to having Cabinet documents that are usually two years old, so I really would not comment further on that.

With regard to the importance of the At and East rates, I recognize, as I am sure do all other Hon. Members, the importance of the At and East rates and certainly that will be taken into consideration.

I believe that history will show that this Member and this Party took a very strong stand in support of the retention of the At and East rates, and he should not forget that. He is not the great samaritan on that particular issue.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—SIZE OF RESPONSE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour as Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration. In spite of the fact that NDP and Liberal Members predicted the failure of the Challenge '85 Program, I am swamped with applications in Bow River. Is this same strong endorsement of Challenge '85 apparent in other constituencies?

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer my hon. friend's question, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a hard one.

Mrs. Champagne: Not at all, and I shall be delighted to answer it, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

If we consider the SEED program which aims to develop experience on the job, we expected to create 73,000 jobs but have now received requests for 173,000.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. Order. I think that is enough of an announcement at this time.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—INTERNAL INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to—

An Hon. Member: Squeak it out.

Mr. Nunziata: As a Member of Parliament I have a right to ask questions in the House, and I would appreciate it if Hon. Members would stop insulting me while I am asking my questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Tough.

An Hon. Member: Go get a rattle.

Mr. Nunziata: Hon. Members opposite may throw insults and hum and haw, but the Canadian public wants answers to questions.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the MacKay-Hatfield affair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Sleaze and Slime.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, Canadians are patiently waiting for answers concerning the Solicitor General's inexcusable behaviour in this matter, and the very serious allegations by Premier Hatfield concerning a so-called RCMP conspiracy to overthrow his Government. Why did the RCMP want to investigate my involvement in the MacKay-Hatfield matter when they did not investigate the Solicitor General's involvement, and did not investigate or interview Premier Hatfield? I would like to know whether the Government instructed the RCMP to investigate my involvement?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of any investigation or investigations that the RCMP might be conducting into any particular circumstance or circumstances affecting the Hon. Member.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, we are advised that the internal RCMP report is now in the hands of the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General has steadfastly refused to give us his undertaking to make that report public.

In view of the fact that the Solicitor General's ability to decide objectively whether or not to release the report is impaired by his own implication in the matter, will the Deputy Prime Minister order the Solicitor General to table the report in the House of Commons so that Canadians can have answers to the questions, or is it the intention of the Government to hide the report and keep it secret because it is a source of embarrassment to the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member, and all Members of the House, that we will not be pursuing the kind of practices that were pursued by the previous administration with respect to openness and providing full information to the House of Commons.

With respect to this particular report, I can only repeat the answers I have given in the past in response to that same question which has been repeatedly put to myself, the Solicitor General, and other members of the Government. When the report has been reviewed by the Solicitor General he will bring an objective value judgment to bear on the report.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Unedited?

Mr. Nielsen: The Leader of the Opposition is heckling across the aisle "unedited". Surely he would agree that one of the first responsibilities of the Minister is precisely as I described it, and then to inform the House what the decision is.

MARINE SAFETY

WEST COAST WEATHER REPORTING SERVICE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday afternoon, the Pacific halibut fleet was caught by a sudden storm in Hecate Strait. Winds that had been forecast for 30 miles an hour blew up to 70. Eight boats sent out distress calls. I understand two boats are known to have sunk. Their crews were rescued. Two other boats, I understand, are still missing, along with their crews.

● (1200)

Has the Government increased personnel and weather reporting stations in accordance with a report submitted by her Ministry last fall after five fishermen lost their lives off northern Vancouver Island in a similar storm?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are most certainly concerned about the accident reported on the West Coast, but I have yet to receive all the details.

To answer the Hon. Member's question, we have improved our services, as I said we would, in accordance with the recommendations of the LeBlond Report.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary for the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. Considering the tragic loss of life in this and other situations, will the Minister order a complete, full, and public investigation of all aspects of marine safety on the Pacific Coast, including weather reporting, and the availability and co-ordination of search and rescue facilities?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a representation.

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, April 25, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH PRIVILEGES OF MEMBER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During the Question Period the privileges of the Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) were, in my opinion, interfered with.

An Hon. Member: Can't he speak for himself?

Mr. Gauthier: During the time that he was recognized and was asking questions the Hon. Member was interfered with by the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard), who came behind him and dropped a sheaf of paper over the notes of the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, thereby interfering directly with the train of thought of the Member, directly interfering with his access to his desk which is his seat, his place, and thereby interfering, in my view, with his privilege to put a question to the Government in a way he feels appropriate. I would like to have the Hon. Member apologize at this time or we will have an issue of some consequence regarding his privileges.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I would be happy to apologize to the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). I thought I was helping because I thought he was working up to another instance of throwing paper—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Apologize.

Mr. Nunziata: Damn well apologize.

Mr. Winegard: —in what I call the usual "funny farm hour". If I interfered with him in any way, I am, of course, pleased to apologize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Never try that again.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I have just been threatened by a member of the rat pack—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An Hon. Member: The chief rat.

Mr. Speaker: I have to observe my obligations to all of my duties. Perhaps I should ask that we leave this whole matter right here.

EXPROPRIATION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a group of residents from the Miramichi region which deals with the expropriation of private property at the Nordin rifle range. In the petition they express concern about the Department of National Defence's intention to expand the rifle range. They have asked me to convey to the House, with this petition, their objections to the planned expansion and expropriation of land. I do so and submit this petition on their behalf.

CALL FOR RETENTION OF CANAGREX

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition on behalf of Prince Edward Island farmers who wish to voice their concern over this Government's decision to abolish Canagrex. They ask that Canagrex be reinstated so that it may get on with the job that it was proving it was capable of and designed to do.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the granting of an untendered contract to the brother-in-law of the present Minister of Finance by the Government of Canada is an unacceptable action.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this motion mainly because it was impossible for us during the course of a number of Question Periods and the questioning that went on therein to elicit from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) an indication as to whether he believed the action taken by the now Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) with regard to the granting of a contract to the brother-in-law of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is an action that is acceptable in the eyes of the Prime Minister and, therefore, acceptable in the mind of the Government.

We tried on numerous occasions to have the Prime Minister answer a relatively simple question. The question was this, and I want to put it on the record so that anyone watching, listening, or perhaps at some future date reading the events of the last week will be able to understand what is in fact the question to which we have been trying to get an answer.

On April 24 I rose in my place during the Question Period and said the following; as reported at page 4057 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate for the relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefits from an untendered contract?

On that day the Prime Minister refused even to get to his feet to respond to the question. In fact, the question was answered by the Minister of Supply and Services. Let me put on the record now what his answer was:

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to explain to members of the New Democratic Party on at least five or six occasions the nature of the advertising agency business in this country. I repeat that we selected Lawson Murray because it is known to us. It has our trust because it is an expert in this field. The firm demonstrated the wisdom of our decision by coming up with savings of at least a half million dollars a year, and I repeat, I will always sign those kinds of contracts.

● (1210)

I put that on the record because I think any clear thinking individual would appreciate that that answer, interesting though it is, was not an answer to the question I asked. It bore no relationship to the question I asked. It did not address the question of the appropriateness of the granting of an untendered—and I emphasize and underline untendered—contract to a relative of a Minister of the Crown.

That question is fundamental to the system in which we operate. I therefore rose again and said on that same day, as reported at page 4057 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it the opinion of the Prime Minister that it is appropriate for the relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefit from an untendered contract with the Government?

I sat down and I waited. The Prime Minister twitched but did not quite make it to his feet. The Minister of Supply and Services rose, and between some interjections said: "The guidelines indicate . . .", "Because . . ." and:

> Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Supply and Services I am responsible for contracting for some $7 billion worth of goods and services each year—
> As the Minister responsible, it is up to me to ensure that all guidelines respecting conflict of interest are satisfied. I assured myself that all guidelines were satisfied. I repeat, I think it was a great contract. I would do it again tomorrow if the opportunity came up.

Again I point out that no one was asking whether the firm in question was competent, capable or able to undertake good and valuable work on behalf of the people of Canada. Therefore, the answer given again by the Minister of Supply and Services, since the Prime Minister refused to answer, was not the answer to the question to which we were attempting to get an answer.

I went away and I thought: How can I ask this question so that the Prime Minister will understand it? Maybe there is a barrier between his seat and mine which makes it difficult for him to comprehend fully the nature of the English language that I use. I went back, I sat down and I thought: How will I ask the question? I came to the conclusion from a number of discussions that I held that the way to ask the question was in fact the way I had asked the question, that there could be no simpler way. I had not used very large words. I had tried to get them into some sort of grammatical acceptability. Then I rose on the following day, on April 25, and as reported at page 4108 of Hansard I said to the Prime Minister:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is the question I asked yesterday to which I did not receive a reply. Does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive benefit from an untendered contract with the Government?

This time the Prime Minister heard me. I could tell because his eyes lit up, and he rose ever so slowly to his feet. He looked across the floor with a small smile at the corner of his lip and he said:

> Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the Member yesterday—

Well, that was the first mistake, because the truth of it is that he did not indicate anything to me "yesterday". He had refused to answer the day before. I quietly, as is always my practice, leaned forward in my seat and I said:

> You didn't answer me yesterday.

He looked across, lowered his glasses somewhat in the fashion I am doing now, and he said:

> If not to the Hon. Member, then to one of his colleagues, surely. I indicated that at the earliest possible moment—and they are in the process of being completed now—in both instances, with regard to the conduct of Cabinet Ministers as Ministers of the Crown, and with regard to tendering procedures and granting of contracts, we would bring in new guidelines with new degrees of severity. I think those guidelines will be of service to the House and will be very, very frugal in regard to taxpayers' dollars.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that was a nice answer and no doubt would have been very suitable had there been a question addressed with regard to that particular problem. But that was not the question, as you well know, Sir. The question was quite different. So I said to the Prime Minister:

> —I am delighted to hear that—

And I am. I continued:

> —but it is not the answer to my question. My question is quite simple. Does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive the benefit of an untendered contract with the Government of Canada?

There were certain Hon. Members who, picking up on the nuances, together said: "Untendered", and the Prime Minister responded:

> Mr. Speaker, you have a situation where a Canadian citizen tenders to the Government or—

"Tenders to the Government"; that was his second mistake. There is a problem here in communicating across the floor of the House. He continued:

> —services are made available to the Government of Canada and public servants, pursuant to objective criteria, make a determination. I suppose that you may have a question as to whether the relatives of anyone in this House at any time can have any association with the Government, and it is a question which will be considered in the guidelines. But I think my hon. friend, in asking the question, which perhaps inadvertently casts aspersions on an agency should recognize that a half a million dollars a year of the taxpayers' money has been saved because of that and I think Canadian taxpayers are delighted.

I put that on the record to show that in spite of the simplicity of the question, it seems to be impossible to get an answer from the Prime Minister. It was not a complicated question. It was not even double-barrelled. It had no preamble, neither did it have any reference to anything to do with guidelines. It made no reference to the public service. It made no reference to the benefits which flow to Canadian taxpayers. All it did was ask: Is it appropriate for a relative of a Cabinet Minister to receive the benefit from an untendered contract with the Government of Canada?

I believe the public of Canada has the right to know the answer to that question. I want to make something perfectly clear. I do not object to businesses having a relationship with the Government of Canada, provided that that relationship is arm's length and provided that any benefit which flows from that relationship should come from the proper tendering process. If it so happens that in one of those businesses there happens to be a relative of a government member or a Cabinet Minister, I do not object to that. I do not expect everyone immediately to leave every line of work simply because one of their relatives gets elected to the Government. I do not expect that everyone who happens to have a relative in Cabinet should be refused the opportunity to participate in the business of the nation. I do not suggest that that should be the case. I do suggest, however, that it should only be done in circumstances in which there is an open bidding and tendering arrangement and, if that company with that relative should win the tender, it should do so on the basis of whether it is the lowest price providing the highest service. That is all we are asking; that is all we ever asked. What aggravates me and what aggravates other people outside is that there has been no such response from the Government to deal with that question. That is what is wrong.

The Prime Minister tells us that he is going to bring about new guidelines, but let me put to you, Mr. Speaker, that nobody is asking for new guidelines. I do not mind if they bring in new guidelines. What in effect the Prime Minister is saying is that the old guidelines were not sufficient. I suggest the old guidelines were sufficient. The old guidelines say "avoidance of preferential treatment". That is on page 2, Article III, where it states:

● (1220)

Ministers shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to relatives or friends or to organizations in which their relatives or friends have an interest.

It goes on to say, and this is important:

Ministers must also take care to avoid placing, or appearing to place, themselves under an obligation to any person or organization which might profit from special consideration or favour on their part.

You and I both know, Mr. Speaker, that Ministers do not operate independently. Ministers are part of a collective. That collective is known as the Cabinet. Each Cabinet Minister is responsible as part of the whole for the operations of the political business of Canada. Therefore, it is important, and I think the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) will agree, that in matters such as the granting of the right to do business with the Government, careful checks should be made to ensure that no person appears to be given preferential treatment.

That, of course, is the essence of our argument in this regard. That is why the questions that I put were so carefully phrased. Had this been a tendered contract, had the firm of Lawson Murray submitted bids and had it been the winning company when the tenders were opened, we would not have had even a question, let alone an issue. We would not have asked for the kind of response from the Prime Minister that we have asked for. Neither would we have been put in a position, and we were put in the position, of embarrassing the Minister of Finance. We would have been able to accept that the business of Canada was being conducted according to the highest standards, as the Prime Minister frequently promised would be the case.

The Prime Minister can say, and sometimes does, that he was left with a terrible mess by the outgoing Government and that the practices of the outgoing Government were certainly no better than the practices that he is pursuing. The Prime Minister might say that the practices he intends to implement at some future date will be more severe and the guidelines more stringent and restrictive than the guidelines that were in place under the previous administration. That is fine. I commend him for that. I commend the Minister of Supply and Services, if he has any hand in developing the guidelines, if that be the case; but that of course is in the future and we are talking about the present.

It was the same Prime Minister who with great obvious concern appeared over television in a Leaders' debate during the election of the summer of 1984 when the then embarrassed Prime Minister, now Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), was trying to explain how he was stuck with the job of making appointments that had been promised or announced by his predecessor. I remember well watching television as a clearly upset then Prime Minister, now Leader of the Official Opposition, said: "Look, I had no option. I was told if I didn't do it, the Government might fall, so I had to go ahead and do what I did. I mean I had to do it that way." I remember with all the flair that the Prime Minister is now known for that he leaned forward and said: "Sir, you had an option. You had an option to say no."

That was when this debate started. The Prime Minister then went on to tell the country that under his administration things would be done differently, that the highest degree of concern for the public would be exercised and displayed, that the Government would not allow the kind of actions that had previously been acceptable under the Liberal Government to continue under his Government. The public of Canada had every reason to believe that in all of the matters touching upon patronage and contracts the Government of Canada, this Government, would not pursue the same line pursued by the previous administration.

That has turned out quite different from the reality. The reality has been that this Government has followed in exactly the same way the patronage appointment route that was the order of the day under the previous administration. This Government has, I must say with some dismay, managed to find a place at the trough for almost every Tory bagman and for all defeated candidates. If they did not come to the trough, it was by their own choice because the opportunity was there. They have been able to reach out and find people who were incapable of withstanding the pressure of the availability of public funds for their own use. This Government has in fact betrayed the people of Canada. This Government has failed to do what it promised it would do.

This latest example serves to remind the public that what the Prime Minister says and what the Prime Minister does are frequently quite different. What the Prime Minister says, he expects Canadians to believe. When he does something else, he expects them to understand that he had no option. I suggest it is clear on its face that this action taken by the Minister of Supply and Services on behalf of the Government was wrong. This action undermines public confidence. This action should never have been contemplated. The Minister of Supply and Services should admit that that should not have been done, although perhaps within the guidelines it was not specifically excluded, although I suggest it was, and that the Government in this instance acted improperly and does not enjoy the confidence of the House of Commons in this regard.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, The Toronto Star in an editorial today indicated that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has a hard enough job to do without having to absorb unfair shots against his integrity from the Opposition. Does the Hon. Member agree with the position of The Toronto Star? If so, would he like to withdraw the Opposition motion today?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have heard some pretty silly questions in my time. That one must come close to being the silliest. Let me try to treat it as if it were serious. I have never, not on one single occasion, said a word about the Minister of Finance, not a word, on this matter. I have asked the Prime Minister if, as the head of the Government, he believes that that practice into which the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance fell, and as a result of which the Minister of Finance becomes implicated as a third party, is acceptable in his mind. All I can say to the Hon. Member is if the Prime Minister had responded to my question, perhaps we would not have had a non-confidence motion. The fact of the matter is that the Prime Minister, as he is wont to do, tries to substitute blarney for substance.

• (1230)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, The Toronto Star editorial also indicates that there is absolutely no evidence of impropriety in this case and that it is silly for the NDP to demand that the Minister of Finance step down. I wonder if the Hon. Member agrees with that as well.

Mr. Deans: No, Mr. Speaker. It is clear to me that The Toronto Star misunderstands, but that is not unusual. If The Toronto Star were more cognizant of the way in which Parliament operates and the responsibilities that fall upon Cabinet Ministers individually and collectively, it would come to the conclusion that the impropriety lies in the fact that the Minister of Finance was aware that his brother-in-law had the contract but did nothing about it.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, as we know, there are all sorts of positions at the municipal level that are appointed by municipal Governments and there are positions at the provincial level appointed by provincial Governments. These appointments are made by whichever type of Government is in power, be it Liberal, Conservative or NDP. The same happens at the federal level.

If there were no Crown corporations or none of those enormous agencies and regulatory bodies, there would be far fewer positions to which people would be appointed. To be consistent, the Hon. Member would have to agree that we should have fewer positions.

The second dimension is this: Who should make those appointments? Does the Hon. Member want to take appointment making out of the hands of the Government of the day, a Government that can be turfed out of office, and put it into the hands of the bureaucrats? I would like to have the Hon. Member give me a genuine, constructive solution to the problem.

We either cut back on agencies or we put in a different mechanism for appointing. I would put the argument that I would rather have the responsibility for appointments in the hands of people who, if they abuse the responsibility, cna be turfed out, rather than in the hands of the bureaucrats.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member, I would like to indicate to him that the motion deals with the granting of an untendered contract. It has nothing to do with the makeup of boards and commissions and nothing to do with whether there should be more or less of them. That is not relevant to our discussion today.

I have made it quite clear that what we are saying is that we do not expect that relatives of members of the Cabinet should be excluded from participating in the business of Canada. We say, however, that the only entry they should be allowed is through a tendered contract. They should only be permitted to take part if they bid against others and win. They should not be given or appear to be given preferential treatment. There should therefore not be the option open to give to family members of Cabinet Ministers contracts that others had no opportunity to seek. That is all we are suggesting and that is what is wrong with what happened.

Therefore, I say to the Hon. Member that if at some future time he wishes to deal with the matter of the numbers of boards and commissions and the makeup of boards and commissions, there is a great deal I would like to say about that. However, I do not want to try to do here today what the Prime Minister and others have tried to do over the course of the last few days, which is to try to obscure the only important and relevant question with regard to what happened with Lawson Murray.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on the question of tendering with the Hon. Member. He is probably aware that in the advertising business an advertisement for $100 is paid for at the rate of $85. There is a 15 per cent advertising agency commission. If ten advertising agencies had bid on this untendered contract, they would have all bid $234,000 and would have all netted the same advertising commission which would be 15 per cent of that. In that case, how would the Hon. Member structure his tendering conditions? All agencies would tender the same amount. Would the Hon. Member not admit that the Government of the day is entitled to take into account in that tendering process trust and ability and that the money of which the Hon. Member is making a great deal would be the same to all advertising agencies?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, that is in fact an excellent question. I agree that there are situations in which tendering is not appropriate, but in those situations family members of Ministers of the Crown cannot be given the contract. That is the difference. Yes, there are situations in which it is not necessary to tender because of the size of the contract or for other reasons. However, I am saying that under those circumstances family members of Ministers of the Crown are excluded from participating. That is all I am saying.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just mentioned that there was only one question. There is another question in which the people of Canada are very interested. Every Government has various ways of handling contracts. They are not all done by tender and they are not all done by competition. Some are done by invitation. NDP Governments do that the same as every other Government.

The Hon. Minister looked into the situation and found that he could save half a million dollars for the Canadian people. That is an important consideration. What difference does it make if the contract goes to a relative or not if the Minister can save half a million dollars? What difference would it have made if that firm had bid and had still showed a saving of half a million dollars? The Hon. Member forgets all about that. This matter is an attempt to save money for the people of Canada and the people of Canada could not care less which firm happens to get the contract as long as it does the job efficiently and saves money for the taxpayer.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite wrong, of course. In fact, the Hon. Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), answered his question in part. Any advertising agency would have bid the same amount. As the Hon. Member for Simcoe North pointed out, there is a schedule which advertising agencies follow and therefore they receive x number of dollars in return for doing work under a contract of whatever size. Therefore, the fact of the matter is that the saving is obscure.

Nevertheless, what must be recognized is that the question is about the appearance of preferential treatment. Since any other advertising agency could have undertaken the work on the same basis, it would have been easy for the Government not to have put on the payroll the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance in order to make sure—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that the time for questions and answers has expired.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this is the end of an amazing week in which there has been a spectacle of sanctimony, outrage and indignation. What happened is so outrageous that not only one Opposition Party but both Opposition Parties felt they must move non-confidence in the Government. The Government, horror of all horrors, saved the taxpayers $500,000 per year. For that it deserves to be tossed out.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), that great man of virtue as demonstrated last June with his arrangement with the previous Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, first introduced the motion. I thought we were going to be debating his motion. When I read the Order Paper yesterday, it included a motion from the Leader of the Opposition which read:

> That this House condemns the Government for its serious misuse of its power to make appointments and to let contracts and, in particular, for its disregard of conflict of interest guidelines in this and other matters.—The Leader of the Opposition.

He then withdrew that motion. There is one of two explanations for that, Mr. Speaker. Either he is slow of wit and he realized after he saw it in print how outrageous it would be for him to put something like that on the Order Paper, or he has made another arrangement with Mr. Trudeau.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I could just as easily rise on a question of privilege. The Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party will acknowledge that the motion that is being debated today is, by agreement of the Opposition Parties, the NDP motion. To make that kind of spurious allegation is beneath even the Minister.

● (1240)

Mr. Speaker: There is a point of order relating to relevancy which I hope the Minister will recognize.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, what we are debating today is the agreement which was reached, presumably after the Leader of the Opposition—who incidentally is not here; and because the behaviour of the Government has been so outrageous, only six members of the Opposition are here—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that he cannot refer to the presence or absence of Members in the House. He ought to make a relevant speech. If he has a good defence, then he should make it and cut the rhetoric on this shameful action by the Government.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I assume that I will be allowed to give my speech. I realize that the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has a sensitive nature and a delicate persona and finds this very difficult. I can understand his concern.

The House Leader of the New Democratic Party said that in the opinion of this House the granting of an untendered contract to the brother-in-law of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) by the Government of Canada is an unacceptable action. It was so unacceptable and so terrible that he was forced to introduce a motion of non-confidence in the House. There is nothing so sanctimonious as a socialist, especially a socialist who is out of office. I regret that I do not have the time to talk about the performance of socialist Governments in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

A great deal was made this week of the violation of the guidelines. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) read the guidelines which stated:

> Ministers shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to relatives or friends—

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition raised the same matter. He said that on that basis the Minister of Finance should resign. It was conveniently forgotten that the Minister of Finance had nothing to do with that contract. The contract was let by the Department of Supply and Services. That is my Department. I am the responsible Minister. If I were enriching my relatives in some way, then the Member might well have a substantial question. However, that did not bother the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, and it certainly did not bother a succession of Liberals who stood up in phoney indignation demanding the Minister's resignation.

The wonderful Liberals! The Liberals have short memories. I would like to read into the record a letter of April 28, 1980 from the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau to the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen. In that letter Mr. Trudeau wrote:

I would remind you of our decision not to apply the requirements of these guidelines to our spouses and dependent children.

Note the phrase "spouses and dependent children". That came from the Prime Minister of the Liberal Government of the day. Now they say that if a person happens to be married with dependent children, or if his sister is married with dependent children, then that person has committed an outrageous crime. It is an outrageous crime, the appearance of which is so heinous that there is no choice but to submit to this vote of non-confidence and accept that the people of Canada no longer have confidence in that person.

Aside from the sanctimony and outrageous hypocrisy that that sort of attitude exhibits—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: The Minister knows that he cannot accuse Members of the House of hypocrisy. I know he is familiar with the definition of that word, but he cannot use it and he knows that.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, apparently the Hon. Member cannot listen without his mouth being in motion. That is the problem.

Throughout the outrage, phoney sanctimony and hypocrisy which we have heard all week no one has acknowledged the fact of the performance of Lawson Murray. They have said: "Never mind the performance. Performance does not matter. What matters is appearance, not performance." Thank goodness the public of Canada would never accept the outrageous premise that if good paint is put on and it looks good it does not matter what is underneath and what the real value is. This Government operates on the basis of value for money. We are trustees of the taxpayers' money and that is how we will act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Lawson Murray, which, I repeat, was selected by the Ministry of Supply and Services, was paid the outrageous commission of $26,000 to continue a contract which we inherited from the previous administration. One of the principals of the Liberal agency which had the contract for years said that it was a gravy train and an unnecessary activity. But that agency did not inform the Government of that fact. It collected fees for all those years. Have we heard any outrage from members of the NDP about that fact? It is only taxpayers' money which has been wasted, so why should they get outraged when they can concentrate on appearance? That is so much more important to them than substance. Well, it is not more important than substance. Performance is what counts, not appearance. I repeat, the appearance in this case, if we look at it with fair eyes, is proper. It is my contract with Lawson Murray on behalf of the Bank of Canada which is a Crown corporation. That will stand up to examination by any fair-minded and reasonable Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: For the glorious sum of $26,000, Lawson Murray, which we selected on the basis of having people we know and trust—and they have demonstrated that trust, and principle I might add—and on the basis of that agency having the experience and expertise in the area of representing financial institutions, wrote to the Bank of Canada on February 11. That letter included a list of the newspapers in which the ads were placed. The letter read:

This list provides a great deal of waste circulation and duplication—

The letter went on to say that the effective cutting of the unnecessary activities would save the Government $415,000 a year. The letter continued:

Furthermore, we believe that the placement procedure could be streamlined to save money.

The letter recommended a procedure to the Government in which more money could he saved. I know that it is only taxpayers' money and that that is insignificant to the New Democratic Party, because it only considers appearances to be important. The letter continued:

While I would regret the end of our association and the loss of revenue to Lawson, Murray Limited, I do not feel that we would be responsible were we to advise you differently.

When a Member of Parliament cannot bring himself or herself to recognize what value the taxpayers get from that kind of responsible advice, when they say that it is immaterial and that they do not care about the performance, and instead use spurious and righteous indignation, then that Member of Parliament ought to lose the confidence of the electors because he or she has lost all sense of propriety and responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: In his remarks, the Hon. Member, because he wanted to be fair, said that they do not object to family members participating in Canadian business, provided they are not enriched by the taxpayers. I agree.

Mr. Deans: I did not say that.

Mr. Andre: Well, provided they are not given the preferential accord, or whatever is the language of the guidelines. I do not know if the Hon. Member knows about what he is talking or suggesting. Of course, obviously he is also referring to relatives by marriage. I checked that out, and in the case of my family it represents 20 companies which cannot do business with the Government. My exempt staff are also under the same conditions, as they ought to be, which represents for my office alone 200 companies. Since there are 39 or 40 Ministers, we are talking about several thousand companies which should be excluded from participating in these contracts.

• (1250)

The Hon. Member talks about "tendered" or "untendered".

Mr. Deans: That's the key.

Mr. Andre: What he is suggesting is we would not have been able to negotiate with Spar Aerospace to build the Canadarm if anyone in Spar was related by marriage to anyone—

Mr. Althouse: No, no, untendered contracts.

Mr. Andre: That was non-competitive.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): An exact parallel.

Mr. Andre: The CF-18s which were purchased by the previous Government have a life cycle of 20 or 30 years. We have no choice but to buy the parts for those aircraft on a non-competitive basis because there is only one supplier. The Hon. Member, to take his argument to its logical conclusion, is suggesting that no relative of anyone employed at McDonnell Douglas of Canada Ltd., Canadair, de Havilland, all of the producers of parts for the CF-18—because they are purchased on a non-competitive basis—have any right to participate in Government business. That is what the Hon. Member is saying. Does he have any idea of what he is talking about? I don't think he has thought this through to its logical conclusion.

Mr. Deans: I thought it through.

Mr. Andre: This Government is aware of the potential for abuse. We do not want it to appear—we certainly don't want it in the reality—that we are using taxpayers' money to do anything else but give them the best value for it. That is our responsibility. So what do we do in cases where we are forced to enter into contracts by the circumstances of the business, advertising, by the circumstances of the situation, CF-18s, or by sole source situations because we want to buy Canadian rather than go offshore? Literally tens of thousands of those situations come up each year. What do we do to protect the public and to ensure that it gets full value for its money? We publish it. We operate in a fish bowl. Anyone through the freedom of Information Act can get access to the contracts, and it can only be done under the Freedom of Information Act because we want to protect confidential information. The amount of the contract is published weekly. I sent a copy to the Hon. Member's office free of charge. We charge other people to recover the costs. He can look at that document every week to find out if there is anything unfair or suspicious. If, for example, my brother has a contract with a Government Department—it won't happen because he is not in any business which would affect that but if anything like were to come up—the Hon. Member not only has the right, he has the responsibility to hold me to account in the House of Commons as the Minister responsible for government contracts. He has the right and the responsibility to make me defend the expenditure of those public funds and to ensure that the taxpayer received full value. I have said it before this week, Mr. Speaker, and I will say it again; any time I can make a contract with a firm like Lawson Murray Ltd. which is going to save the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars, I am going to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: That is what happens when you are in a situation where you cannot open a coupon or envelope and give the contract to the low bid. You have to start applying things like trust and experience. If the Hon. Member was hiring a lawyer, an accountant, a physician or any professional service whatsoever, where tendering is just not possible given the nature of the service, is the Hon. Member seriously suggesting that it would make prudent sense for him, or for the Government, who are interested in the outcome and result, to immediately dismiss everyone we know because there might be a conflict?

Mr. Benjamin: No, get off it. Speak to the motion.

Mr. Andre: Does it make sense that we immediately dismiss everyone we trust?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Tell us about Commonwealth Publishing in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Andre: That is absolutely absurd. What you want when you are hiring a lawyer is someone who is going to get you off the charge or win the negotiations with whomever you are negotiating. The Hon. Member knows that. If he is hiring an accountant or a management consulting firm, he wants someone he can trust and who will do a good job. We want exactly the same thing. It's not secret. It's published. We want the Hon. Member to look at it, to examine it and make decisions objectively on the results.

Mr. Benjamin: We just did.

Mr. Andre: I wonder whether one of those Hon. Members opposite will stand up and admit that Lawson Murray, instead of being vilified, ought to be applauded for the responsible actions it took in fulfilling this contract?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Sanctimonious socialists really get to me. I suppose being a socialist, an NDPer, and being totally indifferent to taxpayers' money is one and the same thing. One would certainly think so looking at the performance of the socialists when they are in office. In Saskatchewan, Don Keith, a defeated New Democrat, was appointed general manager of the Saskatchewan Development Fund. I wonder if that was competed for. How about Louis Roy, a defeated New Democrat, who was retained by the Department of Northern Saskatchewan as a $4,000 a month consultant? Consultant contracts are not tendered, and they shouldn't be. Perhaps he's a good guy and I regret, in a sense, having to raise this point. The point must be made to Hon. Members opposite. When the performance is good, when there is a clear saving of taxpayers' money, and when we have complied absolutely with the guidelines in every way, shape and form, how can those Hon. Members have the gall and temerity to suggest that this House has non-confidence in that kind of performance? That is absolutely absurd.

The list of examples from that bunch of Liberals over there, who are not there at the moment, and that bunch of New Democrats over there—

An Hon. Member: And they are not all there either.

Mr. Andre: —who are not there either, is really something to behold.

In the few moments I have left to me, Mr. Speaker, I just want to take advantage of this debate to mention another factor which I hope those Hon. Members opposite will be generous enough to recognize with respect to the performance of this Government. I refer to the area of advertising in general. I have explained in this House—I do not have time to repeat the explanation—the improvements we are making in the situation which inherited. But I also want to say for the benefit of Hon. Members of the House and others that the over-all advertising—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): May I respectfully, for the benefit of the Minister, inform him that he is making his closing remarks. He has a couple of seconds.

Mr. Andre: I thought it was two minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Not only have we done a better job since September 17 of managing advertising, as evidenced by the performance of companies like Lawson Murray, but we are putting in a process which is better. We are reducing the over-all levels very significantly. In the current fiscal year just starting, advertising will be reduced by 30 per cent over that contracted for by the previous administration. There will be no geese flying into the sunset and friends of the Liberal Party collecting ridiculous fees for ridiculous ads needed by no one and serving no taxpayer at any time.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, methinks the Minister doth protest too much today. Surely, the Minister cannot—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, today we have heard two stories from the Government side of the House with regard to the issuing of contracts for media work and advertising. The Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) pointed out that there is a very standard process throughout the industry whereby the various advertising firms simply add 15 per cent on to the bids for their services. He suggested that, had the contract been tendered, the Government would have had 10 identical bids. Yet when the Minister made his speech, he indicated that he had somehow succeeded in saving almost $.5 million, which puts the analysis of the industry by the Member for Simcoe North into some doubt.

Would the Minister please try to clarify the situation? Was he talking about the same kind of savings, that is, savings on the share that the various advertising agencies would have taken for their services? Or was he simply talking about a reduction in the amount of advertising that the Government proposed to do?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, actually I mentioned all three in terms of advertising, the agency fees, how much goes to the advertising agency, and how much goes to the newspapers, television, or media outlet. Standard practice for generations has been that if you or I buy a half page ad in a newspaper for $4,000, that is what it costs. However, when an advertising agency does that it gets a 15 per cent discount. That discount is to pay their costs of composition, creativity, billing and overhead. That 15 per cent is standard. When the Government undertakes an advertising program on behalf of Tourism Canada, for example, it is contracting for so many minutes of television time, so many pages of magazine space, and so on. The commission goes to the advertising agency. There is no opportunity for cost competition. It is a professional service like any other, be it lawyers, physicians, or accountants. You are looking for quality.

I said in the House as early as last January that we are in the process of introducing a new process under which quality assessment for big contracts or departments that have large advertising budgets will be made by a panel of civil servants. With regard to the Lawson Murray contract specifically, that was a small contract. The commission to Lawson Murray was only $26,000, I think. You cannot really have a competition in a situation like that because the cost of pitching, if you brought in three, four, or five bidders, would exceed the total profit available. It would be a terrible waste of funds. You allocate that based on trust, knowledge of the individuals, and their experience.

This firm was experienced in handling financial institutions. They undertook to carry on this program which had been underway for years. They picked it up, carried it on, and said that they could reach 100 per cent of the market that we were trying to reach with these information ads with far less advertising. They showed us a new procedure for doing it. Because that advice was new to the Government, we were able to accept it and save $500,000 a year as a result of that particular judgment.

One might say that somebody else might have made that judgment. Well, it has been going on for years and no one did. I happen to think that if you select someone you know and trust and who has experience, you are likely to get good value. That is the basis I would use for selecting a lawyer, if I needed one, or an accountant. That is the basis we used for selecting this advertising agency. We got good value. We saved $500,000 a year for the taxpayers because they brought this to our attention based on their expertise and knowledge. We have a trust relationship. They are an honourable firm, which we knew, and that is why we hired them.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre). Yesterday, in response to a question by the Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), he mentioned that there are some 350,000 contracts a year that go through his office. That works out to approximately 1,700 every working day. He further elaborated that only the contracts in excess of $1 million go to his desk while the rest are obviously handled through the normal channels. Could he elaborate on how many were and were not tendered and how many were over $1 million?

• (1410)

Let me also ask a hypothetical question. If the Minister were to investigate the brother-in-law of every Member in the House, for instance, how many people would he have to investigate with 350,000 contracts a year?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the figure of 350,000 is about right. Less than a thousand of those contracts would actually come to my desk. Those are contracts that are above $1 million. Those contracts between $250,000 and $1 million are under the authority of my officials at the director general level and officials who work for the director generals are responsible for contracts below $250,000.

Obviously, we cannot investigate the familial relationship of people we do business with in the way suggested by the Opposition. It is impossible. For instance, we frequently buy typewriters and computers from IBM. It would be absurd to ask IBM, with its thousands of employees, if any of its employees are related to someone who has something to do with the Government. That cannot be done.

If the Opposition are really worried about impropriety, they should be concerned about all of these civil servants, director generals and so on, who have relatives, both blood and by marriage, and who have my delegated authority.

The way we try to avoid misuse is as I have explained it. Every week a magazine is published with those contracts that have been let by my Department. We depend on a vigilant opposition and a vigilant media to point out that someone's uncle may have received a contract. We will look at it to see if there is value for money.

I repeat that the mandate of my Department and the mandate I accept wholeheartedly and will not abandon, no matter how much I am pushed by the NDP, is a mandate of value for money. In this contract we got extraordinary value for money.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to the Minister that I agree with him 100 per cent. One of his responsibilities, perhaps his primary responsibility, is to ensure that we get value for money. There has not been any attempt made by me or anyone in this Party to suggest that we did not get value for money. We have no intimate knowledge of whether or not we did.

I am prepared to concede that it may well be true that we got the value. That is not the issue that we are trying to address. We are trying to address the whole question of the appearance of preferential treatment. I thought I made it quite clear, and no matter how often the Minister says it I am sure he knows that no one is suggesting that just because someone works for some company it automatically excludes the company from Government work. We are saying in essence that where principals of a company stand to benefit directly from the contract—not indirectly benefit through wages—that contract should only be given as a result of a tendering process.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, (Mr. Nielsen) was here today. I rise to speak to this motion in order to review objectively the remarkable series of events which have transpired in this dossier, particularly in the office of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

These events apparently began shortly after the Government assumed office in September, 1984. I would like to emphasize at the outset that my interest in rising to talk to this motion is not in any way to question the integrity of the Minister of Finance, as I indicated earlier in the House. My concern is with the judgment of the Minister in the circumstances that have been described and with the competence of the Department, the Minister and the administration.

I would like to underline the disarray into which the public administration is falling if this is indeed to be a precedent of management in offices of various Ministers. I suggest that we cannot ask Canadians to accept a Government that plays fast and loose with systems which have been established and with guidelines and practices that are well known. Those guidelines and practices are not meant to protect the integrity of the Minister but the integrity of the entire system and the Government itself.

I did not rise to talk about patronage per se. We know the view of the Government with respect to patronage. We have learned that there is no public trough wide enough or deep enough to satisfy the aspirations of all the living, breathing Tories who are to participate during the period of the Government. Favouring members of the families of Cabinet Ministers might be challenged as discriminatory by some of the Tories on the back-benches, but I will leave that to them to address.

Again, I do not want to discuss family relationships. The fact that the contract we have heard so much discussion about and which is referred to in the motion was not tendered is not an issue which I intend to address. It seems to me that those facts—the relationships the lack of tender and so on—speak for themselves.

Indeed, they speak eloquently about the attitude of the Government which Canadians elected on September 4 toward patronage and toward rewarding the faithful. I understand from the latest count that the sacred pigs now exceed 1200 in number. That is also not the issue I wish to address this afternoon.

[Translation]

I would like to highlight some of the important facts in this case, to assess the lack of efficiency in administering departments under the Progressive Conservative Government. Mr. Speaker, first of all I may recall that last September, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) retained the services of Mr. Douglas Robson, Vice-President of Lawson Murray Ltd., a Toronto advertising agency. It seems Mr. Robson was retained to help organize the Minister's office. I may also point out, by the way, that Mr. Robson still is President of the Progressive Conservative Riding Association in the riding of the Minister of Finance.

It should also be pointed out that the President of the company, Mr. Douglas Lawson, is a brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and that his wife, the Minister's sister, sits on the board of directors of the company.

Mr. Robson was in the Minister's office, according to what we have heard here in the House of Commons, from September 17 until at least the end of October. It was "approximately" the end of October. That might mean some time in November, the end of the month or a week before or after, we do not really know, and I would like to have clarified. During that time, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Robson was not paid by the Government of Canada, although it seems there was a verbal agreement. In fact the Minister said as much in answer to a question in the House and I quote:

> We had a verbal understanding that he would be paid, and in fact he was not paid.

So he was not paid by the Government during that period.

Mr. Speaker, another fact is that Mr. Robson was sworn in, that is, he was bound by an oath of secrecy, but he never signed the conflict of interest guidelines, which I think should be a basic requirement for people in exceptional employment. And then a few days later, Lawson Murray Limited, the Toronto advertising agency I mentioned at the beginning of my speech and to which Mr. Robson belonged, received a contract worth $234,000. I may add, Mr. Speaker, that during that time Mr. Robson remained employed by this advertising agency, in the private sector. In fact, the contract was for the Bank of Canada, an agency or organization that falls under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance.

I can understand Government spokesmen throughout Question Period this week attempting to defend the facts on the floor of the House of Commons, but any sensible person exercising a modicum of common sense and judgment would recognize that the facts in themselves are indefensible. The concern here has to be surely that this kind of situation not be repeated.

The Ministry of Finance, as all Members know, outside of the Prime Minister's office itself is the most sensitive Ministry in Government. I would say with all due respect to the Deputy Prime Minister, who is also the Minister of National Defence, that it has a level of sensitivity even exceeding that of the Minister's, the major department for which he is responsible.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot have people from the private sector engaged as volunteers to work in the office of Ministers, who are not on the Government payroll, who have not signed the conflict of interest guidelines, and who are sworn. We are told that Mr. Robson did not have access to secret documents. Having been a Minister of a Government myself, I find that quite remarkable because that is precisely why all personnel, exempt staff and others, not only take the oath of office, but are required to sign the conflict of interest guidelines. We cannot leave the perception with the Canadian public that private individuals are retained on such a basis by any Ministry, and in this case the Ministry of Finance, in a position to have access to secret and sensitive information and are not bound to observe the conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Lewis: Naturally you threw money at them.

Mr. Johnston: I am not sure who said that, but I will find out. I will respond in due course.

Mr. Lewis: It was me.

Mr. Johnston: There is the offender. There will be a period of questions afterward, Mr. Speaker. I know that Members of this House will be fair in the assessment of these facts. I know individually and collectively they will applaud the replies given by their Ministers on the front-benches when questions are put to them on this very sensitive and difficult matter; I realize that. I realize that is the reality of a political alliance and solidarity across the floor of the House. But I ask each of them to search deep within their own consciences to determine whether that is the way they expect the Government of this nation to be run. I do not believe they approve of these facts any more than we do on the Opposition benches or any more than the people of Canada do, who have commented on the facts that have been brought to their attention.

Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that not only did Mr. Robson enjoy this rather unique privilege, this probably unprecedented position in a Ministry and as I said, the Ministry of Finance, but these events happened during the period when that very Ministry was preparing its November economic statement which was a mini-Budget. That mini-Budget, that statement, was delivered in this House of Commons on November 8.

Mr. Robson in fact worked for the Ministry of Finance without pay. He had a verbal agreement to be paid which apparently was not honoured for reasons that have not as yet been explained to us. In any event, he was there during that particularly sensitive period, a period no less sensitive, I suggest, than the period we are now in leading up to the presentation, God willing, of a Budget finally, some time in the latter part of May, we are told during the week of May 20. I cannot help note en passant that I had to learn that fact by reading the newspapers rather than hearing it here on the floor of the House of Commons—

Mrs. McDougall: You are never in the House.

Mr. Johnston: —where the announcement should have been made.

In any event, I come back to the point that this kind of shoddy, shabby administrative practice cannot be condoned. I would hope that the Deputy Prime Minister who is here today and who is known for his concern with propriety and with process will see to it that this kind of thing does not repeat itself, that Ministers are brought into line, that we do not have these volunteers who come in but do not sign conflict of interest guidelines, who work in sensitive areas and go back to their firms on whose payrolls they remain.

In this case there is the added question of the contract. The reason I have not mentioned the contract of $234,000 is that excluding the contract, excluding the relationship with the brother-in-law, excluding the relationship with the sister who is on the board of directors—all of that apart—we cannot condone this kind of administrative approach, this kind of management approach, this kind of abuse, if you like, this playing, as I said earlier, fast and loose with the well-established traditions of Government. That cannot be tolerated, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker. I know, the Deputy Prime Minister knows, all the Ministers on the front-bench and all the Members on the back-benches know that it cannot be honestly defended.

We know, those of us who have had the privilege of serving in the Government as Members of the Cabinet, how Ministerial offices work. The Deputy Prime Minister became quite exercised when I suggested that Mr. Robson was not supervised. Let me elaborate on that point.

We have been told that Mr. Robson did not have access to secret information. I cannot say whether he did or did not. What I do know is that the Minister himself has declared on the floor of this House that he was particularly pre-occupied during that period, that it was a very busy period in his life, if I recall his precise words, and that he was obliged to spend a good deal of time in Washington; that he had invited Mr. Robson to organize his office in some kind of administrative capacity which has not been explained in detail. Some information has been offered but very little in detail so as to know exactly what Mr. Robson did. He was not there as a paid employee; hence there was apparently no master and servant relationship. I do not know who was supervising him, if the Minister himself was not. He maintains that he had a chief of staff who was there. Was the chief of staff going to supervise Mr. Robson, this volunteer from the private sector who probably had more experience of working with the Minister, because of his prior experience, than the chief of staff himself? If that is the case, why was so much emphasis placed upon the oath? That in itself troubled me, the fact that this gentleman was working under oath. That must have been in anticipation of the fact that he might have access to secret documentation, but he did not sign a conflict of interest guideline.

• (1430)

Apart from the other issues which we have heard discussed, apart from the brother-in-law, apart from the untendered contract, apart from all of that, we have here a matter of fundamental administration. It is that issue which I have tried to address in these brief comments.

I must say that I am pleased the Deputy Prime Minister is here. This is not the time, I say to him, to resurrect old grievances and to argue about patronage which existed in the past.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: The issue with which I am dealing is: How on earth are the Ministers operating their Departments? He, as the Deputy Prime Minister, has to step in to ensure that it is done and to ensure that there is no recurrence. As I said this morning in the House—and I repeat it because I think it is worth reflecting on for a moment—we have had a tradition of people coming in and rendering service during particular periods in this country. I know the Deputy Prime Minister has been able to gather together a number of very prominent Canadians to serve on a committee designed to try to find cuts in programs. We look forward to having the Deputy Prime Minister table the results of that committee's deliberations. I am sure those people have had access to certain materials, but I am also sure the Deputy Prime Minister has seen to it that they have either not been given access to anything which would put them in conflict or that they will be respecting conflict of interest guidelines.

This morning I mentioned the famous dollar a year men who stepped forward during the unfortunate period of World War II to offer their services to the Canadian Government for a dollar a year. Here we have, as I said, a Mr. Robson who offered his services apparently free, although there was some verbal understanding which was not followed through on, and then immediately subsequent to leaving the office of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), his firm, Lawson Murray, Limited of Toronto received an unsolicited advertising contract in the amount of $234,000. If that does not raise in Hon. Members' minds some questions as to administrative practice in the Ministry of Finance and in other Ministries, if similar events are taking place, I do not know what can.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) referring to Members reading newspapers on the floor of the House of Commons. I would tell him that we are all quite interested in the editorial in today's edition of The Toronto Star which referred to the unfair criticism of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Hon. Member will know that that is not a newspaper which often supports our Party.

I can also understand the Hon. Member's concern when he finds volunteers coming forward to help our Party because, after all, the Liberals paid hacks to do the same thing. During the course of his remarks the Hon. Member asked whether the country could afford this type of Government. I want to ask him specifically which he prefers. Does he prefer a Liberal Government which increased Government advertising expenditures from $47 million in 1982-83 to $67 million in 1983-84 and to $77.5 million in 1984-85, to a Government such as the Conservative Government which contracted with an advertising agency that came up with a recommendation suggesting that we not do it any more and save taxpayers money? Would the Hon. Member tell the House and the country whether he suggests that a Government is responsible if it goes from $47 million in Government advertising to $77.5 million in Government advertising, or is it more responsible to have a Government that contracts with people who come back and say, "Don't do this again; it is a waste of money"? Which does the Hon. Member prefer?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) has raised quite a remarkable red herring. He knows from my own record as President of the Treasury Board and as one who implemented the Lambert Commission report that no one is more concerned with value for money for Canadian taxpayers than I am. On that we have complete agreement.

Mr. Lewis: But you were a minority in the Liberal Government.

Mr. Johnston: That is not the issue, that is not the issue. If the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) is able, in the exercise of his functions, to save money for Canadian taxpayers and still deliver a good service, so be it; that is fine. As far as the editorial in The Toronto Star is concerned, which seems somehow to have found its way into the preamble to that question, all I can say is that I never thought I would see the day when a member of the Conservative Party would cite The Toronto Star as an authority. That must be the progressive part of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Let me ask the Hon. Member a question which I know he is not obliged to answer. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services breaking his arm patting himself on the back for the $500,000 he had saved. I see that he is now in the House. I cannot find it in Hansard, but I heard him say distinctly in the House that he had saved taxpayers a ton of money. He nods his head, perhaps to agree that that was the language he used.

Mr. Andre: $500,000 a year.

Mr. Johnston: He used the term "a ton of money". I would ask the Minister of Supply and Services, if I had the opportunity, whether the increase in the budget of the Office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by $2 million would represent not less than four tons of money. That is as much a red herring as the question posed by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick question for the Hon. Member. As past President of the Treasury Board, could he tell us exactly what were the guidelines or what was the process to examine every untendered contract with in-laws? What system was in place when he was the Minister to look at every contract to see whether an in-law was involved?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the guidelines are printed in the regulations of the administrative policy branch of the Treasury Board. The Minister of Supply and Services has access to them. To be quite honest, I do not recall specifically any guideline which refers to in-laws per se. I do not think that is the issue. It is one of conflict of interest guidelines. The issue is: Why did the firm of Mr. Robson, who worked in the Minister's office and who did not sign those conflict of interest guidelines, receive that contract? Had he signed those conflict of interest guidelines, the Hon. Member knows full well that he would have been bound by them and unable to deal with that particular Department or any agency of that Department for a two-year period. That is the issue here in terms of the guidelines.

Also this particular individual, as I pointed out in my comments, had access to sensitive materials in that office to which he had no business having access. I hope the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) would agree with me that we cannot afford to have offices of Ministers flowing with people from the private sector, and on the payrolls of private corporations assisting Ministers in these sensitive areas, and not being subject to any conflict of interest guidelines. They should not be there anyway, never mind the conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Hawkes: As past President of the Treasury Board, is the Hon. Member providing this Government with the advice that it is practical to have every contract let by every public servant in the country examined for possible involvement of in-laws of Cabinet Ministers? Is that a practical, feasible proposal in his view after all his years of experience?

Mr. Johnston: I am sympathetic to the work-load of the Minister of Supply and Services, but surely the Hon. Member for Calgary West is not trying to excuse the contract given to Lawson Murray which has been described by spokesmen in the Ministry itself as pure patronage. Surely the Hon. Member for Calgary West is not positing before the House and the people of Canada, based on the facts that we have heard, that people were not aware of what Lawson Murray was and what the relationships were.

• (1440)

That surely is not what the Member for Calgary West is trying to put forward to basically create a smokescreen over the facts in this case. I am always prepared to give someone the benefit of the doubt. I said that I am not in any way trying to impeach the integrity, only the judgment, of the Minister of Finance. I know the Hon. Member for Calgary West well enough to know that he is being mischievous in even purporting to offer this House and the people of Canada such an explanation of those events.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member who has just spoken. I want to ask him two things. First, would it not be reasonable to assume that if members of the Cabinet were informed that contracts ought not to be let to the relatives of other members or to relatives of their own, that information could then be imparted to the relatives of various Cabinet Ministers? Second, is the Hon. Member aware, and I am sure he is from his previous role, that the guidelines under which he operated, "Avoidance of Preferential Treatment", state:

Ministers shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matters to relatives or friends—

It goes on.

Mr. Andre: Read it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Read the part about spouses and children.

Mr. Deans: That is at the end. That is a different section altogether dealing with an entirely different matter.

Mr. Andre: No.

Mr. Deans: Yes, it is. It goes on in an entirely different manner to deal with that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It says they don't apply.

Mr. Deans: Unfortunately, we are not talking about spouses or children.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I hate to interrupt a good conversation—

Mr. Deans: As usual, the Government House Leader and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) are wrong. Does the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) agree that a brother-in-law might just fit within the definition of relative, and not necessarily but certainly could fit within the definition of friend?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, my friend from Hamilton Mountain puts his finger on the issue. That is the issue of preferential treatment. That surely is the issue. There are many competent relatives in this world who may come forward and tender, win contracts, provide value for money and there is no preferential treatment and no appearance of preferential treatment. The issue here is the clear appearance of preferential treatment, although I would say to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, and I hope that he will agree with me, that there are many issues involved besides that one. That is why in my comments I wanted to focus on the administrative issues of this particular problem, the fact of having people in office without having signed conflict of interest guidelines, quite apart from the issue of preferential treatment and the patronage issues that are before us in this case.

Mr. Andre: How about if they are living together and not married?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the previous speaker. When he was President of the Treasury Board, I am sure that he would not give contracts to any of his relatives. However, did he authorize contracts for Ed Lumley's relatives?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, as President of the Treasury Board I did not authorize contracts per se. The Minister of Supply and Services handled most of the contracts. There were obviously some contracts in our Department as there were in other Departments at the time. Again, that is not the issue—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Johnston: Do I not have the right to reply?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The time for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) reply to my colleague from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) about the NDP generally being sanctimonious, righteous and pure. I believe those were the words he used. I remind him that it was not the New Democratic Party that laid out and set the high standards that have brought this issue to the attention of the Canadian public, the media and Members of Parliament. It was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It was he who was so unctuous and sanctimonious during the election campaign last summer. We did not lay out the high standards, the purity and sanctimony. It was the Right Hon. Member from Baie Comeau.

Quite honestly, we were glad to hear him set out a new, higher level of standards for people in public life, particularly people in the Government of Canada. This issue is before us now not because of anything that anybody in the Opposition has done or said or anybody else in the media or public of Canada has said, but as a result of what the Prime Minister had to say. To quote the Right Hon. Member when he was Leader of the Opposition, Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, addressing the then Prime Minister, the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), he said: "You had an option, Sir, to say no and you chose to say yes to the old attitudes and the old stories of the Liberal Party". That was on July 25 last year.

At that time the present Prime Minister, then Leader of the Opposition, said: "The vulgarity of the Liberal patronage machine is such that we are going to have to take a second look at our partisanship. I think there is going to have to be coming from us an effort, not only an effort, a determination to get away from it once and for all."

Off the record, he said to the reporters, and was quoted as saying, and this is on the other side of the coin, "Let's face it, there is no whore like an old whore. If I had been in Bryce's position, I would have been right in there with my nose to the public trough with the rest of them." What we are faced with is the Ceasar's wife principle of not only being pure, but being seen to be pure.

We raised this issue in this motion today and no one on the Government side has yet addressed it. The motion is very narrow. It states:

That, in the opinion of this House, the granting of an untendered contract to the brother-in-law of the present Minister of Finance by the Government of Canada is an unacceptable action.

That is all it says. Hon. Members who have spoken up to this point have not addressed that. If one listened to and believed what the Prime Minister had to say last summer, and immediately following the election, that principle that would have been incorporated in guidelines or would have been followed even prior to written guidelines.

I remind the House of the practices of and what is lived up to in the British Parliament. If what occurred in the instance of the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance had occurred in the British House, that Minister would have resigned the next day without even being asked to jump or without having to be pushed. A Minister of the Crown in the British Parliament would have done it of his own volition.

Nobody is questioning the Minister of Finance. He is an honest man, very capable. That is not in question. Even if one assumes, as I am prepared to assume, that the Minister had no knowledge whatsoever of his brother-in-law receiving an untendered contract, he would automatically have resigned. These things can happen to Ministers of the Crown from time to time. It has happened in many jurisdictions and there is nothing unusual about that. Sometimes a Minister may be a victim of the mistakes of those working under him or of the mistakes of a colleague, but in the final analysis he is the only one responsible.

● (1450)

I am sorry the Minister of Supply and Services has stepped out for a moment. If the Minister of Supply and Services failed to inform and consult the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) regarding who would receive the untendered contract, then the Minister of Supply and Services should resign because he failed to carry out his responsibilities and thus made a victim of his colleague the Minister of Finance. If one were to assume that the Minister of Supply and Services did not know that the firm that was to be awarded the untendered contract had in its midst the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance, then obviously his officials failed to tell him, in which case there are some officials whose heads he should have on a platter. Even if these officials failed to tell him, he is still responsible and has only one recourse if he wants to live up to the principles and traditions of the British Parliament, the majority of which we in this Parliament have followed for many decades.

Regarding the entire matter of appointments to government service, whether it be the civil service or a Crown corporation, I have always believed that the question to be asked is not so much what an appointee's political proclivities might be but what competence and abilities might be. Political affiliations or records should be secondary if the first two criteria of competence and capabilities have been met.

I do not expect a Conservative Government to appoint a lot of Liberals and NDPers to various boards, commissions and award them contracts. I would not expect a Liberal Government to appoint a lot of Conservatives and NDPers. I would not expect an NDP Government to appoint a lot of Liberals and Conservatives. When making Order in Council appointments, any Government must gather around it people who have the same political beliefs as the Government of the day. There is nothing wrong with that. One must have competent, capable advisers and employees at the senior levels who believe in the policies for which a Government was elected. Anyone who accepts an Order in Council appointment knows darn well that the odds are 99 to one that if there is a change in Government, he is out. That is one of the hazards of that kind of an appointment. There is nothing wrong with that.

We in Canada have not yet reached the level of sophistication, class and couth that exists in the British public service. In Britain, Deputy Ministers and heads of boards study the policies of all political Parties of that country. When the Government changes from one Party to another, because of the professionalism of the senior public service there is not a wholesale firing of Deputy Ministers and heads of boards. These professional senior civil servants are able to go to a new Cabinet Minister within a matter of weeks after his swearing in to say: "Here is your Party's policy on matters pertaining to this Department. We have researched it and here are several options that you can consider in order to implement your policy". That is what I call a professional public servant. Their own personal political preferences have nothing to do with it at all and it is highly unlikely that any of them would ever tell you what their preferences were in any case. There are senior public servants in the British Isles who have been employed for years and years after having been appointed by the Labour Party or the Conservative Party.

We have not yet reached that level of sophistication and maturity in this country. Until we do, the kinds of standards laid down by the Prime Minister himself, whether or not they are in writing yet, are known to every Member of the House and are certainly known to every member of the Cabinet. I am referring to what the Prime Minister said last summer during the election campaign. There is no use spending time discussing who got appointed to the Senate, as much as I would like to use up another half an hour discussing that. However, we have heard about that before so I will not belabour the point.

Some aspersions were cast by the Prime Minister and one or two other Hon. Members from the government side on the records of NDP Governments in three different provinces. I cannot speak for Manitoba or British Columbia because I am not aware of all that went on there, although I am sure some of my colleagues could elucidate on that. However, having been Provincial Secretary of my Party in my province for seven years, part of which time my Party formed the Government, and having served on the Party executive in council during the years we were in government, I can say that no present or past President of the Saskatchewan NDP has ever been appointed to a position in the NDP Government, whether it be to a Crown corporation or a government department. No member of the Party's provincial executive has been appointed to an Order in Council position or a Crown corporation board since 1944. I challenge anyone to name one person who did.

I have listened to Members opposite as well as the Prime Minister express doubts about that. At the moment there is in the Province of Saskatchewan one Mr. George Hill, past President of the Saskatchewan Progressive Conservative Party, who was first appointed Chairman of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. He has now been appointed to the bench. One Irving Goldenberg, previous President of the provincial Progressive Conservative Party, has now been appointed to the bench. By the way, someone I see frequently and know and like very well is Dr. Barootes, an excellent doctor and an excellent fund raiser for the Conservative Party. He is a very capable and nice man, there is no argument about that. He is, however, a past National President of the Progressive Conservative Party and has been appointed to the Senate. The Prime Minister is entitled to appoint whomever he wishes to the Senate. I am not complaining about that. However, I do not want to hear any Tories about the NDP appointing Party hacks.

One wonders and worries about the direction the Government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) might want to take when it comes to medicare, hospitalization, deterrent fees and funding for hospitalization and medicare. I know that the hon. gentleman who has been appointed to the other place will not object because I have said this to him before in public. But Dr. Barootes is the guy who led the fight against medicare in Saskatchewan. He is the guy who led the "keep our doctors" committee. He is the guy who raised money to prevent medicare from being instituted in that province. There was a doctors' strike. One of the leaders of that strike was Dr. Barootes. Where is Dr. Barootes now? He has been appointed to the Senate by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who set these high standards during the last election campaign. He set those high standards quite rightly. We agreed with him. But when it came to meeting them, he appointed people who totally disagree with medical care which is publicly operated and funded. One has to wonder about the high principles which have been laid down by the Prime Minister.

We did not start this in this Parliament. The Prime Minister started it. The Minister of Supply and Service (Mr. Andre) started it, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) sits by and quietly acquiesces.

The question has still not been answered by the Government as to whether or not, as the motion reads, the Government thinks that it is appropriate for a brother-in-law or any relative to be granted an untendered contract without the Minister concerned offering his resignation. That is what is in question. It has nothing to do with the abilities and capabilities of the Minister of Finance.

I knew about the Minister of Finance long before he entered this House. He once performed some excellent work on contract, for the NDP Government of Saskatchewan. We know he is capable. We knew that years ago, long before many Members opposite were in the House. That is not the question. The question is: Is it or is it not appropriate to allow an untendered contract to go to a close relative? That is the question which has yet to be addressed by anyone on the government side.

No one disagrees with the saving of half a million dollars. But that totally evades the question and the principle which was laid down in the unctuous and sanctimonious words of the Prime Minister during the election campaign of last summer. I would urge members of the Government to rise in their place to answer and to speak to the specific question in the motion. Do they or do they not think it is appropriate for a brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance to receive an untendered contract, regardless of whether or not the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Supply and Services knew anything about it? Do government Members think that is appropriate? Second, should not one or both of those Ministers tender their resignations without having to be asked, pressured or put upon by Members in the Chamber, the media or the public?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to ask the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), having discarded several members of the executive of the Saskatchewan NDP, if he knows Mr. Matsalla who was the former NDP Minister of Resources in Saskatchewan and who was appointed as an advisor on potash to the NDP Government of Manitoba. But I will not do that.

The Hon. Member said that he expected the Progressive Conservatives to govern. He said that he expected us to deal with people whom we know and trust. He also said that he expected us to make competent appointments. Does the Member not admit that the ultimate in competence is when a person or a firm, which is appointed on the same fee—15 per cent—as any person or firm would get under a tendered process, comes back and says that what was requested had been performed according to the contract and makes the recommendation that it should not be done any more? Is it not the ultimate in competence when someone who receives a contract comes back and tells us not to spend the money that way again in order that the taxpayers' money can be saved? Is that not what we are all here for, no matter what Party we belong to?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I think it was very good of that particular firm to do that. That is the kind of thing which any Government would like to hear. But we must return to the point.

I have had dealings with advertising agencies. I have discussed with Cabinet Ministers in the Province of Saskatchewan their dealings with advertising agencies. The onus is on that Cabinet Minister to tell the advertising agencies, no matter what their political stripe, about the program which they want to advertise and sell in order to educate and provide information to the public. The Cabinet Minister asks those advertising agencies to prepare a presentation, and two, five or ten advertising agencies might come forward with a presentation. If the agency about which the hon. gentleman spoke had come forward with a recommendation in its presentation that would save $500,000, and then submitted a tender, that would have been right on track. That would have lived up to the unctuous and sanctimonious conditions which were laid down by the Prime Minister in the election campaign of last summer. Don't give me any gears about that. I have been there. That kind of competent and capable advice is required. But how it is used is another matter. I submit that it was misused in an untendered process with a brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance, no matter how good the firm or how good the advice.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). He spoke quite eloquently about past practice. He said that he did not expect the Liberal Government to appoint Tories or NDP Members, or for a Conservative Government to appoint Liberal or NDP Members. I wonder if he could comment on the fact that this Government has appointed more Members from other Parties than any other Government before it? The Conservative Government has appointed Stephen Lewis as the Ambassador to the United Nations and Lloyd Francis as the Ambassador to Portugal. Indeed, does that not show that the Prime Minister did have an option in the way in which appointments were made?

Finally, indeed, when the Gallup poll indicates that 60 per cent of the people in Canada are proud to call themselves Conservatives, is it hard to find a Conservative to appoint?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, after the Hon. Member mentioned Stephen Lewis, I wish he would send me a list. Every political Party, when it has been in power in Canada, has appointed people from other political parties. There is nothing new about that. I could submit a list of the names of people which the NDP Government of Saskatchewan appointed when it was in power.

Some Hon. Members: Name them.

Mr. Benjamin: Governments have smartened up and recognized that there might be some people in other Parties who have something to offer and who can be of assistance to the Government of the day in a non-partisan manner. All smart political Parties make appointments of people from other Parties.

I would like to say that when the then Premier of Saskatchewan received words about the recommendation of the appointment of a former Liberal candidate, who proved to be an extremely competent and capable person in that field, he made the appointment. The Premier got bawled out by some CCFers for doing that, but he appointed the gentleman. He is still there. That goes back to 1962 and he is still there and is an excellent public servant. But that is not the problem and that is not what is at question. I wish the Hon. Member would read the damn motion. Does he think it is appropriate? If he thinks so, let him get up and say so. That is all we want to know.

• (1510)

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, my good friend across the way was making the comment that every Government has appointed members of other Parties. That is the way it has always been, both provincially and federally in this country.

Mr. Benjamin: Not always. I didn't say always.

Mr. Tobin: Hon. Members opposite said, "Name them". Senator Jack Marshall was a fine and outstanding member of the Progressive Conservative Party from the riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe for a period of 12 or 14 years. He was named to the Senate by the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau. I can think of Senator Duff Roblin who was named to the Senate by the same former Prime Minister. There was also a former Progressive Conservative Premier. Hon. Members opposite are not going to convince Canadians—

Mr. Benjamin: Don't use up all of my ten minutes.

Mr. Tobin: I won't use all of your ten minutes. They will not convince Canadians in the slightest with that kind of silly attack. Because they have named two outstanding people, Stephen Lewis and Lloyd Francis, the Conservatives think that all of a sudden they have filled the quota. If the quota system is one Liberal, one New Democrat and 1,000 Tories, that will not convince anyone. Find more compelling arguments, if you can. That is my only argument. I wonder if my friend would agree.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to say thank you to the Progressive Conservative Government for the appointment of Stephen Lewis. I want to thank the former Liberal Government for appointing Mr. Justice Berger, Mr. Leggatt, John Gilbert, all former Hon. Members of this Chamber.

Mr. Deans: Ed Schreyer.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, Ed Schreyer, the Governor General, and that had nothing to do with Ed Schreyer's politics. So we appreciate that.

Mr. Deans: It's appropriate.

Mr. Benjamin: We are not questioning that, Mr. Speaker. If a Government wants to appoint 20 people to the board of directors of Canadian National or Air Canada, it has a right to do so. It has a right to appoint whomever they want to appoint. The question is not whether or not they are Conservatives. The question is, are they competent? Do they come from a cross-section of the population? If most of them happen to end up being Conservatives, so be it. If there is the odd Liberal or New Democrat there, okay. But the question is the competence. Do they represent a cross-section of the population and are they not just former presidents or former fund raisers of the Party? There must be something more to the appointments than that kind of a criterion.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I come back to the motion. It still has not been answered by those Hon. Members opposite. Do they or do they not think it appropriate to give an untendered contract to the brother-in-law of a Minister of the Crown? Do you or don't you? That's all.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member who just spoke. It is an issue not just of the personalities of individuals we are talking about here but it is an issue of the principles and preferential treatment of relatives, people who happen to be in offices and have access to information to which the ordinary person does not. I think that is the interpretation which should be put on this motion before us today.

But we can get into the other issue of patronage appointments. Just last week I heard that one of the wharfingers in my area, a fisherman who had fished for 27-some years, has been replaced. A wharfinger is a person who looks after the wharves, the ports and harbours, tying up the vessels and that sort of thing. He was replaced by a chicken farmer because the chicken farmer happened to belong to the Progressive Conservative Party.

The whole issue of getting very close to the appearance of preferential treatment is something that this House should take very seriously. All Parties should take it very seriously. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), said today, no one is questioning the integrity of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). What we are questioning is the possibility of this appointment being perceived as preferential treatment. That is the issue about which the Hon. Member is speaking and that is the motion which is before the House here today.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to speak on this ludicrous motion. It is not only sanctimonious, it is pompous. The reason I am here wearing my red dress, Mr. Speaker, is that red is the colour of defiance, and I defy Hon. Members opposite to find anything wrong with the judgment and the integrity of the people from this side of the House.

I know that the motion which was put forward by the New Democratic Party—which it expects us all to take with enormous seriousness—it is a serious topic. I would not deny that conflict of interest is a serious topic to discuss in this Chamber. However, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who spoke just previously, pointed out that there were no contracts, no conflicts of interest, or anything done against the public interest by the New Democratic Party of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Benjamin: I didn't say that.

Mrs. McDougall: Well, let me just point out, Mr. Speaker, that—

Mr. Althouse: No Party officials got appointments.

Mrs. McDougall: No Party officials. Well, there are two advertising agencies, Dunsky Advertising Ltd., and Struthers Associates.

Mr. Benjamin: Not Party officials.

Mrs. McDougall: When the New Democratic Government was elected in Saskatchewan, it fired the old agencies,—

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mrs. McDougall: —and retained two small ad agencies, which had some modest affiliation with the NDP. Struthers was owned by two former executive assistants to NDP Ministers—

Mr. Benjamin: Actually there were three. You missed one.

Mrs. McDougall: —and Cameron Cooper, one of those principals, was the son of Marjorie Cooper, a former CCFMLA. Shucks, golly, gee whiz, isn't that a coincidence?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want the Hon. Minister to know that Cameron Cooper was not Marjorie Cooper's son.

Ms. Mitchell: Get your facts right, Barb.

Mrs. McDougall: Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Cooper and Mr. Eaton, the other principal, had worked in a senior capacity with Elwood Cowley, who just happened to be the provincial campaign manager. Isn't that unusual?

Mr. Benjamin: He was a Cabinet Minister also.

Mrs. McDougall: Let me turn to some other topics, Mr. Speaker. I am here speaking on this motion as someone who has known our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for 30 years. I know something about his judgment and his integrity. We went to university together. He was known then for his judgment and his integrity. The Hon. Minister of Finance, when he was a teenager, would not even sneak a cigarette behind the bicycle shed. He was a person of integrity then and he is a person of integrity now.

An Hon. Member: What a boring guy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I want to add, Mr. Speaker, that also at school with us at the time was the new ambassador to the United Nations, Stephen Lewis, who I am sure would agree that the Minister of Finance is a man of judgment and integrity.

I also knew the Minister of Finance as a competitor in the investment business. There is no one in the investment business in this country who does not know that the Minister of Finance was an honourable competitor and a man of judgment. I might also point out that having been in the investment business for some 20 years myself, I know Doug Lawson and Doug Robson. The reason I know Doug Lawson is that the firm of Lawson Murray is known in the investment business to be the best in the business for the placing of financial advertisements. Through an accident of marriage, Doug Lawson is the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Tobin: Accident?

● (1520)

Mrs. McDougall: It is an accident, Mr. Speaker, one of those unhappy accidents. I suggest to you that if we are to hurt ourselves through an accident of marriage, in terms of our careers or professions, perhaps the NDP is against marriage. Maybe that is what they are telling us.

An Hon. Member: They are against love.

Mrs. McDougall: I don't think they are against love.

Let me turn to the other people who sit across the House from us. My great-grandfather was a Cabinet Minister in the Province of Ontario. He was, unfortunately, a Grit. This simply proves that each generation gets better. I would like to point out that he was a Liberal Cabinet Minister at a time when the Liberal Party in the country was a Party of honour contributing to the future of the nation. My Grit great-grandfather would be ashamed of the baby Grits who populate this House. He was also a man of integrity and honour. I know they are babies because of the shrill rattles that come from the other side.

During the Coalgate debate, the Hon. Allen MacEachen gave the most creative interpretation of the conflict of interest guidelines yet seen. On February 21, 1983 he said:

> These guidelines are self-enforcing. There is no monitoring agency. They are up to the conscience of the individual... It is unfortunate that so much misunderstanding has existed about the effect of these guidelines.

You either know how to spell "integrity" or you do not. I agree with that. I can tell you who does know how to spell it, and that is the Minister of Finance.

Having spent a fair amount of time in the other place I feel I have some knowledge of those people. There is a person in the other place who had something to do with fisheries in this country. He designed the fisheries policy, and after he was appointed to the other place he was appointed director of the government fish organization. Mr. Speaker, if I were a fish I would be insulted. Someone on our side of the House forced him to resign because of a total conflict of interest. That company was in a position to get millions of dollars worth of contracts from the Government.

In that connection there is another example. Mr. David Mann was hired as the lawyer for the amalgamation of the Atlantic fisheries companies following that same task force. I quote the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) from April 3, 1984. He said:

> He is doing all the legal work on the amalgamation and negotiation with shareholders for Fishery Products International Limited, the Newfoundland company in which the Government is a heavy shareholder. He has now been appointed to the Board of Directors of National Sea Products Limited, their prime competitor. The gentleman is also the campaign manager for Mr. John Turner in the Atlantic Provinces. I do not know how he does all this.

We are talking about a very serious matter here today, Mr. Speaker. The challenge to the integrity and judgment of my colleague and our Party is totally without foundation. If we are going to talk about conflicts of interest, maybe we should all stand up and confess our conflicts of interest. Mr. Speaker, my brother-in-law was appointed to be the head of CBC Radio News. I have, therefore, resolved never again to listen to the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: My sister, who by coincidence is married to my brother-in-law, is an editor at Macleans. I have cancelled my subscription.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: My other sister, the one who is not married to the head of CBC Radio News, works for the Canadian Bankers' Association, and so does my sister-in-law. I have, therefore, closed my account and am keeping my overdraft in a sock.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to question the Minister on the most relevant point she made in that entire speech. Where I grew up in Newfoundland we never had bicycle sheds. We had a few wood-sheds. I was happy to hear of the success of the members of her family and how well they have done in their various jobs. In Newfoundland we always say, "Never trust a man who wears a vest or a fellow who won't have a smoke behind the bicycle shed". What has the bicycle shed got to do with the motion introduced by the NDP today?

We enjoyed her speech and liked her style. She has great pizzazz and good humour. We enjoyed all that, but how is that relevant to this motion before us today?

Mrs. McDougall: It is very relevant, Mr. Speaker, and I am really sorry that the Hon. Member does not know how to ride a bicycle. It is important that people's patterns of judgment and integrity follow them through their lives. If they have integrity and judgment when they are young, they normally continue to have them as they proceed through life. I can attest to that, as can other people in this Chamber.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, on February 3, 1984 the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) was quoted in the Ottawa Citizen as saying, "A Progressive Conservative Government would gradually replace everyone of the 3,300 Liberal Cabinet appointees on federal boards, commissions, and Crown corporations with our people". That was her Minister speaking, the Minister who is now in charge of the Department that is the most susceptible to patronage. Does that square with the notion that all is well here and we should not ask questions because the Minister of Finance would not have a smoke behind the bicycle shed? Who are you trying to kid?

Mrs. McDougall: I hope the Hon. Member is not suggesting that anyone who voted for the Conservative Party is not a person of integrity and of service to the community. Every single appointment that we have made is of people with a history of community service, competence, and integrity. We have appointed women and people from a variety of cultural groups. What does the Hon. Member want? Most of the people in the country voted for us.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in the Hon. Member's opening remarks she confirmed what I had said. None of the names she mentioned was that of a Party official. I am not complaining about the Party officials that the Conservatives have appointed to various posts. I am just remarking.

As the Hon. Minister and all of the rest of us know, the Minister of Finance spoke with his brother-in-law, Mr. Lawson, about this matter. As I understand it, he gave approval. I would like to remind the Minister that while my colleagues and I have repeatedly said how capable, honest and good a man the Minister of Finance is, we have yet to use the word "judgment", because we question his judgment in that matter. That may say something for the judgment of the brother-in-law, who at least checked it out, but it does not say much for the judgment of the Minister of Finance, or, for that matter, of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre).

Will the Minister tell us whether, in her personal view, she thinks it is appropriate for the brother-in-law of a Cabinet Minister to receive an untendered contract? That is all we want to know.

• (1530)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the judgment of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) is what determines who gets contracts. I have absolutely no problem with supporting my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, in the awarding of this contract.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I take it from her answer that the Minister agrees it is acceptable for brother-in-laws to do untendered business with the Government. What is the Minister's opinion with respect to brothers and sisters? Could they accept appointments or do untendered business for the Goverment? Is the answer yes or no?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is a Liberal Member who has a brother-in-law in the Department of my hon. colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

How far does the Hon. Member want to go? Is he talking about second cousins, fourth cousins or uncles and aunts? Is he suggesting that a competent person who is the sister or brother of the government Member should be excluded from any participation in the public policy process? If that is the case, he would eliminate many people. I and many of my colleagues have a large extended family.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about Members but about Cabinet Ministers and their brothers and sisters. We will restrict it to the question of brothers and sisters of Cabinet Ministers doing business with the Government of Canada. Does the Minister agree that they should be allowed to do so? Is the answer yes or no?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question. Everyone has brothers and sisters. Surely there is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Minister not agree that many of the problems of the NDP in Saskatchewan were solved by their Liberal brethren who had a marvelous record for making them bureaucrats in the federal service.

There appears to be a wonderful NDP reputation for social engineering. I wonder about the NDP commitment to the family when this resolution would have the effect of outlawing in-laws.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the NDP commitment to the family.

Other allegations have been made in relation to this, one by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston). He indicated that when he was a Minister there were secret government documents all over the office and anyone walking through the office could look at them. I do not think that is at all an appropriate way for a Cabinet Minister to conduct his business.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), for questions or comments.

Mr. Lanthier: Yes, I am rising as the Member for LaSalle. I would like to ask the Minister what I am supposed to do. I am the fourteenth of a family of fifteen. I have 39 nephews and nieces and 27 grand-nephews and grand-nieces.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): There are 25 millions Canadians!

Mr. Lanthier: Seriously, there are quite a few Quebecers who are struck with the same situation. Am I supposed to commit suicide or go home?

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, there are many of us on this side of the House as well as on the other side who have extended families. I know that this includes my hon. colleague.

I think that it is important that we get back to the fact that this Party has committed itself to acting with integrity and judgment, to revising some of these guidelines and always giving them the appropriate review.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it has been very interesting to listen to the speeches and comments this morning and this afternoon from Members opposite. They have talked about everything but the issue and the motion which is on the Order Paper. I know that there are people in the gallery who are wondering what this debate is all about. The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the granting of an untendered contract to the brother-in-law of the present Minister of Finance by the Government of Canada is an unacceptable action.

That is what we are discussing. This motion is not an attack on the family unit. It does not demand that every brother, sister, mother, father or cousin of every Member of Parliament or Minister of the Crown should be locked away in Siberia until they have finished their political life.

The motion clearly states that the brother-in-law of a Minister should not be doing untendered business with that Minister's Department. It is not even with another Department or an agency, but with the Minister's Department. That is what happened in this case.

My colleagues in the NDP and we in the Liberal Party have attempted all week to have the Government answer that question. We have asked if the Government believes it is an acceptable practice, but we have never been able to get a straight answer. We have talked about the Government of Saskatchewan, the Government of Quebec and Governments ad infinitum back through history. But we have not talked about this particular instance, at least that side of the House has not.

I have come to the conclusion that if we cannot get a straight answer, then it is really a reflection of the attitude of Members opposite. Who have been the prime defenders opposite? One is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has risen in the House all week. The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) has risen in the House a great deal this week. Certainly, it has been the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre). He has had a great deal to say. We heard from the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) for the first time today. She talked about bicycles and bicycle sheds and I do not know how that is relevant.

Let us talk about the people who have been the prime defenders. Let me quote a Member of Parliament who spoke in the House on June 21, 1963. He is a very well known Member of Parliament who was talking about patronage and untendered contracts. The Deputy Prime Minister is smiling across the way. What did he say? At page 1434 of Hansard on June 21, 1963, the Deputy Prime Minister said:

> I would say that it is corrupt, because all that it indicates is a pay-off to political friends for assisting a political party. Patronage is being employed once again in the Yukon territory in order to pay off political friends. I say to the government benches, let us get back to the fair practice of calling for tenders for all public works and services and completely eliminate this ugly practice of patronage. There is no reason for it, and in my view every Canadian has an equal right to bid for every public work or service that the government required.

Mr. Gauthier: Who said that?

Mr. Tobin: The Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Gauthier: You're kidding!

Mr. Tobin: I am not kidding. I am serious.

We know what his attitude is—or was. I regret the loss of innocence between 1963 and 1985. It is amazing what 22 years in this place has done to the high principles, the values and views espoused by the Member opposite.

We see here the loss of innocence. In 1961, in a Maclean's magazine article entitled "The Young Canadians", a young promising star on the Canadian political star, the Prime Minister, who was a student at the time, was interviewed as a promising new star in Canada's future. In that 1961 article he was asked what he thought the attitude of a Prime Minister from the new generation of Canadians would be toward patronage. He said:

> I think his attitude is going to be drastically changed from the attitude of those who are in government today.

Of course, Mr. Diefenbaker was in Government in 1961. The Prime Minister was forecasting a change.

In the Saturday Night magazine in 1976, the same promising young student, the Prime Minister, was now a candidate for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. What was he saying? How had he matured and grown from his association with the PC Party? The magazine states:

> Fifteen years later, in his first leadership campaign, he became fond of quoting Senator Allister Grosart, the former Diefenbaker aide: 'What this party wants is its two feet right in the goddamn trough.'

Here we are in 1985 and they have their two feet right in the—I will not use that foul language—trough.

What did the Conservatives say in 1984, just months before they became the Government? The Minister of Supply and Services stood up in the House and told us that his Government would have a clean act. What did he say? Let us quote him, shall we? He said: "A Progressive Conservative Government would gradually—" The Member was in opposition when he said this. The quote continues: "—replace every one of the 3,300 Liberal Cabinet appointees on federal boards, commissions, and Crown corporations with our people."

• (1540)

What did the Prime Minister say when he was told that the Member for Calgary Centre had made that comment? Was he shocked? Did he deny any association with the man who is now the Minister of Supply and Services? I will tell you what he said, Mr. Speaker. He said: "Wait just a moment. Andre can't count. There is not 3,300 Liberal appointees to be replaced with Tories. There are 3,600 Liberals to be replaced with Tories". That is what the Prime Minister of the day said. He also said at a press conference on July 9, 1984: "Brothers and brothers-in-law are appointed to positions all over the place". It is a real scandal.

Why are these people opposite not able to acknowledge within the framework of their life experience, of their attitude, of the values they hold with respect to patronage, that there has been a conflict of interest, at the very least an appearance of a conflict of interest and, therefore, an example of the judgment of the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? They are not able to acknowledge it, Mr. Speaker. The direction from which they come at this matter, the mind-set of this Party in power, reflects the attitude of a bunch of children who for too long have been denied access to the cookie jar. That is the reason they cannot understand that a very serious breach of the conflict of interest guidelines has occurred. That is the reason they cannot understand that it is not appropriate for the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance to receive a contract from the Department of Finance. That is the reason, despite repeated questions, not one single Member opposite has been able to stand in his place with a straight face and answer the questions: Do you agree? Is it appropriate? Not one, Mr. Speaker.

Here is another quote, Mr. Speaker:

> For of those to whom much is given, much is required. And when at some future date the high court of history sits in judgment on each of us, recording whether in our brief span of service we fulfilled our responsibilities to the state, our success or failure, in whatever office we hold, will be measured by the answers to four questions:
>
> First, were we truly men of courage . . .
>
> Second, were we truly men of judgment . . .
>
> Third, were we truly men of integrity . . .
> Finally, were we truly men of dedication?

Those are the words of John F. Kennedy.

The issue in this debate today and the issue during the week has not been whether the Minister of Finance would have a smoke behind the bicycle shed when he was growing up. That is not the issue. The issue is not even whether the Minister of Finance is a man of integrity or honesty, whether he has exemplified throughout his life in his dealings, private and public, standards with which we would all like to associate ourselves. That is not the issue. The issue is that the Minister has shown extremely bad judgment. We on this side of the House with respect to patronage now see that the skids are greased by this Party and we want to put the brakes on. The issue that has caused Members in both Parties on this side to pursue this issue all through the week, perhaps into next week—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You will be down to 14 per cent in the polls if you do not talk about the real issues.

Mr. Tobin: —is not simply the conflict of interest guidelines. What has bothered Members on this side is that we have not once, despite five days of questions, despite the speeches today, had an acknowledgment, even an acknowledgment, from Members opposite that there is something wrong.

We have heard the Minister of Supply and Services—whom I quoted earlier when he was not a Minister but now is a Minister in charge of the most sensitive patronage Department, and if there is the possibility for abuse, it is there—rise and say: "I would do it again". That is the problem. The problem is not just with the Minister of Finance. The problem is that we have given the Prime Minister, the front bench of this Government and the Minister of Finance himself an opportunity to get up and say, "No, it is not acceptable for a brother-in-law of a Minister in charge of a Department to receive a contract from that Department".

Mr. Dick: That is wrong.

Mr. Tobin: We have not even heard in the words of the Prime Minister a little bit of "I am sorry". We have not even heard in the words of the Prime Minister a little bit of "It won't happen again". We have had a Minister of Supply and Services stand and tell us repeatedly over and over during this week: "I would do it again". Who are you trying to fool with this notion? That this company saved us $500,000? That is absolute nonsense, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader should know that the public servant who signed his name on a contract that was given to Lawson Murray to authorize that contract, who is not now employed with the Government and who was interviewed by a reporter this week from The Globe and Mail, was quoted as saying: "I don't care what the Minister of Finance says. It was straight patronage". That is the person who signed the contract.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That was your employee.

Mr. Tobin: No. That is the one who signed the contract. You ought to get your facts, straight, Sir. I warn the Government House Leader that we expect him to come forward quickly with their new conflict of interest guidelines. I will be curious to see how they can possibly make them any stronger than the current guidelines, which state categorically—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I hear a Member shouting. No, they are Mr. Clark's guidelines. There again we all know that the Prime Minister thinks of Mr. Clark. He stood up in Montreal a few years ago and endorsed the leadership of Mr. Clark. He stood up in Montreal and said: "The Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) will remain the Leader of the P.C. Party at the convention and he will do it with my support". That is what the current Prime Minister said. What happened, Mr. Speaker? A little while later the man looked like a porcupine. Of course, the current Prime Minister had no blood on his hands. We know what his word is worth. The Hon. Member for Yellowhead, the former Progressive Conservative Prime Minister, knows what his word is worth. We know what happens when the Prime Minister lowers his voice because we saw him do it on that fateful day in Montreal. He said: "I can assure you that I support the candidacy of the Member for Yellowhead". A little while later he was being hauled out on a bier, rushed into an ambulance and plugged into about four gallons of blood. We know what his word is worth. We are telling you now that the eyes of the people of Canada are upon you. You have tried their patience already much too far and you had better come with some guidelines pretty soon. We shall be vigilant.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise because I want to make some brief comments at this point in time with respect to the topics before us today.

It always amuses me to see the moral outrage demonstrated from time to time by the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party—

Mr. Deans: No moral outrage.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —who come forward with a vote on Friday afternoon, costing the people of Canada $450,000 to have this discussion and this vote, which requires Members to come here from their constituencies on a Friday afternoon. Where are they, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Althouse: Where are they paid to be?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All we see is a corporal's guard on the part of the Opposition. They know they are on a phoney issue. They know that they should be talking about the real issues affecting the people of Canada. They should be talking about the fishermen, the farmers, and the working man. But what are they doing at this time? They indulge themselves in the worst slanderous, sleazy type of character assassination that we have seen in this Parliament for a long time. If this type of thing is carried on by the New Democratic Party and by the Liberal Party, the eyes of Canada will be on this Parliament.

Do you know what is going to happen, Mr. Speaker? These people will slide right out of sight in terms of political support. The people of Canada do not want their time wasted with this kind of discussion which somehow appeals to the base instincts of the people in the Opposition.

Mr. Tobin: You rang the bells for three weeks.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They want constructive discussion on the real issues, the pocket-book issues, on how we can improve our society. People do not want to be listening to all sorts of allegations and a repetition of misstatements of facts.

• (1550)

A statement was made today in the House by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and by a Member from Ottawa as well, suggesting that somehow we had made 1,200 patronage appointments.

Mr. Deans: I didn't say that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was not you; it was the Leader of your Party.

Mr. Deans: He was not here today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Leader of that Party suggested that we had made 1,200 patronage appointments. What are the facts? The fact is that we have made a total of something in excess of 500 Order in Council appointments. We are guilty of making those appointments.

Mr. Deans: That is in seven months.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We made a number of appointments, included in that, which may have had the effect of promoting RCMP staff sergeants to inspectors. These were some of the Order in Council appointments included in that 500. We appointed C. M. Bud Drury. In fact, we appointed a number of judges included in that number, appointments which were approved by the Canadian Bar Association.

Mr. Gauthier: You fired Drury.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are these patronage appointments? In terms of discretionary appointments since we were elected to office, we have made something in the vicinity of 350 of them. Listening to the Opposition, one would think that we spend noon, morning and night doing nothing but filling appointments and jobs. That is the opposite to the truth. That is being fraudulent. They are being unfair. They are attempting to raise false issues.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am just curious to know whether the Hon. Government House Leader is making a comment with regard to the speech or is making a speech. If he is making a speech, perhaps he could try to make it relevant to the motion before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) wish to answer?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was getting to the point, but I think I am entitled to make a brief comment with respect to this matter.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In terms of the statements made—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, this is the time for questions and comments. If the Government House Leader would like to make a speech, he should wait for his turn. I would like to have an opportunity to comment on the comments which are being raised. There is no such thing as a 10-minute question or comment, of which I know. Perhaps the Speaker could enlighten me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to answer. The President of the Privy Council has the floor. I ask him to make his comments relevant to the speech of the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member was sitting silent, mute, as I recall it, on the government side before the last election when the Liberal Government was wallowing in terms of patronage. In terms of the special recovery fund, it was a crass and absolute distribution of public funds to the constituencies of government Members. Where was the Hon. Member then? Where was his outrage at that time? His Government gave a name to patronage which is now history. Where was he? Why was he not speaking up? Why would he not speak up when his Government was indulging in the worst patronage in the history of our country?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, without commenting on the validity of the Hon. Member's statement, it sounded an awful lot like a statement saying that two wrongs make a right.

Mr. Andre: You admit a wrong.

Mr. Tobin: No, no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Listen carefully.

Mr. Darling: You admit a wrong.

Mr. Deans: They were wrong and so were you.

Mr. Tobin: Without commenting on the validity of the Hon. Member's comments, it sounds like a defence to me from somebody who is trying to say "leave us alone; because we think it happened before, it is okay for us to do it". The Government House Leader, an important representative and an important spokesman, did not rise to tell us why there was no wrongdoing.

Mr. Andre: There was no wrongdoing.

Mr. Tobin: He rose and went on a vicious attack. The Prime Minister was questioned, as reported in the May 24, 1983 edition of The Globe and Mail, as follows:

> "Mr. Mulroney, you're going to be Prime Minister", and Mr. Mulroney shouts back, "You're going to be a Senator. But it will all be fair. There will also be jobs for Liberals and New Democrats—after I've been Prime Minister for 15 years and I can't find a living breathing Tory in the country".

The Government House Leader, who was outraged a moment ago—and the cameras cannot see him—is grinning from ear to ear.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are a joke.

Mr. Tobin: He knows that there have been 1,200 patronage appointments made by the Government, not 500. He knows that not all patronage appointments are Order in Council appointments. He knows that. He is not fooling anybody. I invite him now to answer one question. I will not raise the subject ever again, no matter what is his answer, but I ask him to give me a yes or no. Does he think it is appropriate for the brother-in-law of a Cabinet Minister to receive an untendered contract from that Cabinet Minister's Department? Is that appropriate? Yes or no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that the premise is wrong.

Mr. Tobin: Yes or no.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The allegation in terms of the contract in question is completely wrong.

Mr. Tobin: Yes or no.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is wrong because he did not get it from the Minister's Department. It was from the Department of Supply and Services.

Mr. Tobin: Yes or no.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How can I answer yes or no to a question which is wrong in its very premise? I stand up with my colleagues and say that there has been no breach of any guidelines. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is an honourable and decent man. No amount of attempted character assassination on the part of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party will cause one change in the attitude we take with respect to doing the right thing on behalf of the people of Canada.

I say to the Hon. Member that he does himself a disservice. He brings his own credibility into serious question by this kind of muck-raking and this kind of attack on a decent and outstanding Canadian citizen.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the record—and I do not know if the camera can see it—this document is entitled: The Black Paper on Tory Patronage. It was prepared by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), and it lists considerably more than 500 Tory patronage appointments. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell has done a super job watching the kinds of tricks those people have played. I would be glad, on his behalf, to provide a copy of it to any Member who requests it. In case they did not know, they can take credit for a lot more then 500, because there are about 1,200 listed in the document prepared so ably by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) if he believes that every Member making a statement in debate or answering questions should tell the truth to Hon. Members of the House.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think all of us should endeavour, wherever possible, in whatever way possible, in so far as we have the information, to tell the truth to Hon. Members of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, having returned to the House this afternoon to join in the debate on the question before us as to whether in fact it is acceptable for the Government of Canada to grant an untendered contract to the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I have been taken by the comments of the Government House Leader who suggested that this question was not of any great concern to the people of Canada. I very much doubt that. I am always aware of the fact that my constituents—and I expect that the same is true in many other ridings—are watching debates in the House and have a considerable interest in questions which come before us. Sometimes the debates may leave something to be desired, but Canadians have an interest in the questions before us.

Given the confusion that has been reigning in the last few minutes, it may be worth repeating some of the details or some of the information involved in this case in order to sharpen the question. Those who tuned in late and are involved in listening to this stage of the debate, not having read their newspapers faithfully and so on, may wonder whether or not some of the darts being tossed are on target.

The question involves the granting of a contract for advertising savings bonds. It involves the granting of a contract which someone who was involved in this kind of work during the term of the last Government says is very easy. In fact, this kind of work was described as a beautiful hand-out, patronage. It is also clear in looking at the way in which this contract was arrived at that the last Government followed practices very much like this one. Some of the darts being tossed back and forth involve Liberals and Conservatives in the old slanging matches.

● (1600)

The people of Canada are wondering exactly what is going on. In this information about how it was done, is it possible that the Minister of Finance did act with propriety and that there is nothing wrong with the Government? What are the means by which this hand-out to an advertising agency is carried out? It is apparently in the hands of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) rather than the Minister of Finance. A recommendation is made by a committee of the Government. When we examine the personnel of that committee, we get a better sense of how these things are done. We are told that soon after taking office, this Government fired the three Liberals who had been in charge of the federal advertising management group. It put in two Tory activists. When we see that, it becomes clear that this is the basis for this kind of activity. When we are told that one of the people appointed was Robert Byron, a former advertising executive with Case Associates Ltd. of Toronto, who directed constituency services for the Conservative Party in the federal election campaign last year, we may well assume the Mr. Byron had some fair knowledge of who the Tory investors are across this country, particularly those in cities like Toronto, who have significant business positions and who now deserve to benefit from the new Government.

When we are told that the other person, Jean Péloquin, a Montreal advertising executive who was a member of the Tory communications strategy group in Quebec during the last campaign, we say to ourselves that here is someone who would know perfectly well who the advertisers are in that part of the country and probably had some fair awareness of who they are in other areas.

What we have is work that is not very difficult, probably overpaid, given that it is this kind of a plum or hand-out to an agency. The people who are looking at it are former Conservative Party officials who were appointed to this group to manage it for the benefit of their friends. When they look the field over and settle on an agency, which happens to have the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance in it, it presumably does not bother them that this gentleman is in an executive position, that the advertising contract involves the Ministry of Finance. That does not matter. Something over a quarter of a million dollars is going to go to this agency. The fact that it means extra revenue for the firm is just the way these things work.

The people of Canada are interested in these matters, particularly ordinary Canadians who have very little hope of ever benefiting from a Government which likes to cut expenditures wherever possible and to restrain spending, no matter what the consequences may be for them. Those ordinary Canadians have a considerable interest in exactly how this new Government operates. They are not going to be impressed when they realize that this Government, which promised change in various areas, carried on through the fall using guidelines which are clearly inadequate, which the previous Government had used, produced no change except a personnel change.

These Canadians are going to ask themselves whether taxpayers' money is being squandered, is going to the profit of relatives and friends of the new Government at their expense without gaining the country any great advantage. To be told that this is past practice and the President of the Treasury Board need not apologize to anyone for having done these things is outrageous. The people of Canada can only be strengthened in their cynicism that they feel about Government, that the Tories are no better than the Liberals, that the Government is out for the advantage it can get for its friends and relatives, not the people of Canada generally. They can only be convinced that good Government is going to be impossible.

Government falls into disrepute by behaviour of this sort. If there is one thing that I hold against Governments and Parties that do this sort of thing, it is exactly that sense of disreputable Government, the cynicism about Government that it engenders in the minds of ordinary Canadians. When I see Hon. Members shaking their heads and questioning that, I wonder where their moral sense is. Clearly partisanship takes over and people cease to worry about proper behaviour and propriety in these circumstances.

Our motion focuses on the granting of a contract. In the debate this afternoon there has been a failure to answer the question about whether this is acceptable or not acceptable. It is an indication of a certain measure of unease. The curious thing is that there has been some tightening up in the guidelines. That surely suggests that the behaviour last fall was not acceptable, that this sort of thing should not happen. If the head is shaking, it means that the regulations have not been tightened up. One then has only to grieve the fact that there has been no improvement.

There has been some discussion here about patronage in the sense of other appointments. If one looks at those, one gets a sense of why Canadians have reason to be unhappy about what happened last fall and reason to support the motion before us today. If the question is answered as it should be, it will give the Government reason to apologize to the Canadian people.

Government can all too easily become the private property of those who hold the levers of power, those who have the seal of state and those who have the power of appointment. In our parliamentary monarchy, that power resides largely in the hands of the Prime Minister and the Privy Council Office, the Prime Minister acting with the advice of his own office. When we contemplate what occurs in the patronage appointments, whatever number they may be, in these Order in Council appointments, and judgeships have been suggested, and the fact that the federal Cabinet, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, has incredible power in the appointment of justices across the country and within what would seem to any newcomer to be provincial judicial systems, we see that it is only an indication of the large power of appointment which the Government has had from the time of Confederation. It has been used time after time for partisan advantage. It has been used time after time for just the sort of gain for the friends and relatives of Government which we are protesting this afternoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is shameful. Name names.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): The Government uses its power of appointment in order to appoint supporters and friends, even without people having any great amount of qualification.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's McCarthyism. Name names. What judges do you suggest are political hacks?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): The fact that we have this power of appointment without any parliamentary check on it gets us to the heart of the difficulty.

Mr. Andre: Your performance does not give us much confidence in Parliament.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): If we were going to have Government acting properly, we would have the credentials of persons being appointed considered by a committee. That committee would determine whether in fact these persons deserve to exercise the powers that are there.

One need only think of the boards of transportation organizations which have received a good deal of government attention in the last while, most recently the boards of Air Canada, CN, VIA Rail. We have seen persons appointed to those boards whose credentials certainly include friendship with the Prime Minister, support for him in years past and limited knowledge in some cases. One knows quite definitely of the industry that they are going to be responsible for, the company on whose board they sit. In those cases, we have every reason to ask if a parliamentary committee which would consider the credentials of these persons would in fact decide that they deserved the appointments, or would it not in fact refuse to vote for the endorsement of some of those appointments? If we had such a structure, there would be no necessity for anyone to shout at me that I name names or anything of the sort. We would have a parliamentary committee encouraging the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to consider candidates properly and to appoint people with qualifications. When we consider the companies involved, which are large Crown Corporations and commissions of various sorts, and when we know that the responsibilities here are of enormous importance to the nation and to Canadians, we want people with expertise. If it is not necessary to have expertise, then we create sinecures.

● (1610)

In centuries past, the British parliamentary Government offered a great many sinecures. After all, Adam Smith himself spent much of his time writing Wealth of Nations while holding one of those sinecures. A lesser mortal was appointed to do the work and the greater mortal in effect went on a pension. I must say that most of these sinecures were a lot less productive than the one held by Adam Smith.

If boards do not have important work to do and if knowledge of one aspect or another of an industry is not required in order to become a member of the board, then we have, in the most abominable way, another system of pension. Ordinary Canadians are very interested in these matters because they know how very limited their incomes are if they depend on Government. They have suffered at the hands of a past Government which twice brought forward restraint programs designed to reduce incomes, and this happened with the support of Conservative Members.

The people know if they live on pensions how adequate or otherwise those pensions are. If they are forced to live on unemployment insurance benefits or social assistance, again they know exactly how prosperous they will be and they know of the indequacies in the Canada Assistance Plan, a plan which, in co-operation with the provinces, forces people to live at income levels which are open invitations to immorality and crime. In such circumstances, Canadians have a considerable interest in exactly how fat the friends and relatives of Government will become at the public expense.

It is that kind of standard that the Government House Leader might want to contemplate. He can grow very indignant, as he did a few moments ago when he put on a reasonably effective show, but his constituents too would like to know why some people manage to do so well under what can easily become Conservative privilege while ordinary Canadians, who would like to be able to make some contribution to the well-being of their communities, are held back, constrained and driven to desperation by the actions of the Government. In the Province of Ontario, one can cite the provincial Conservative Government's 42 years of damnable governing as much as one can now cite the new Government with its great power.

The larger patronage question and the more specific matter of the abuse of power to enrich some at the expense of the Canadian nation are the kinds of issues that are before us. I think the Canadian people are very interested in these issues. The Canadian people seek a Government that will act responsibly. The Canadian people want the appointments of men and women who have qualifications, who represent the diversity of this country and who have regional experience through the varoius levels of prosperity and lack of prosperity that exist in this country.

The Canadian people want boards to be broadly representative in every way. They do not want boards that are made up simply of friends and relatives of the Government. They do not want boards made up of Conservatives who have been particularly friendly with the Prime Minister in past years. In fact, there are probably many Conservatives who are still waiting for rewards. The Prime Minister has not had 15 years in which to satisfy every Conservative, and he has neglected supporters of other people while taking care of his own friends.

The Canadian people want boards to be properly representative, and when they hear about the Government spending money on advertising contracts, they want to be sure that they are getting good value for their money. The refusal of Members and Ministers opposite to say whether or not this behaviour is acceptable underscores the fact that they too do not want to go on record as saying that it was acceptable. By their refusal to answer, there is a concession that something happened here that should not have happened and that the regulations need to be made tighter.

I call for all of these contracts to be tendered. Surely such a provision can be made. We need a parliamentary committee which can consider appointments and ensure that the people who exercise power on behalf of the Canadian Government and the Canadian people are properly qualified to do so.

Some 10 years ago, President Nixon was involved in trying to change the nature of the Supreme Court of the United States so that it would suit his particular ideological predilections. Many Hon. Members will also remember the number of unfortunate nominations to the Supreme Court he put forward, nominations which Senate committees refused to pass. I will never forget one judge at a lower level who, when attacked for being too mediocre, asserted that the Supreme Court of the United States of America should offer among other things a place for mediocrity to be represented. In this case, what we have is mediocrity that is bearing the Conservative label, or mediocrity that carries PC membership cards in its wallet. That is not a situation which pleases the Canadian people. They applaud us this afternoon for being here where we ought to be doing the nation's business and asserting the principles that should govern.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member. I do not think we have heard such a skilful weaving of sanctimony and hypocrisy in one speech in a long time.

The Member made a lot of suggestions as to how things should be done. I would like to examine those suggestions for a moment. He suggests that he holds the action of appointing one's friends and acquaintances in contempt. He wanted the power of review of appointments to large Crown corporations and boards given to a committee. He did not want these appointees made up of friends of the Government. He made the comment that he did not think these appointees should have the membership cards of the Party in power in their pockets.

When Saul Cherniak, the Manitoba NDP M.L.A., was appointed Chairman of Manitoba Hydro, did he have an NDP membership card in his pocket? Was his appointment reviewed by the parliamentary committee which the Hon. Member so loftily suggests should be put in place? Having dealt with Saul Cherniak, could he enlighten us on Mark Eliesen, the former staff member of the NDP National Party who was appointed the research director to the Chairman of Manitoba Hydro? Did his appointment also go through that very lofty and sanctimonious review procedure? Did he or did he not have an NDP Party membership card in his pocket when he was appointed?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, these are questions of fact to which I cannot answer yes or no. It is quite likely that Mr. Cherniak had a membership card somewhere about and close enough to him that I would be inclined to say yes to that question. As far as Mr. Eliesen's appointment is concerned, I really do not know.

I will cheerfully deal with the point of the question, though, and that is whether or not in fact there should be such procedures. I think there should be. As to whether or not the provincial New Democratic Government of Manitoba should do this or not, in my opinion the answer is clearly yes. That the failure of one provincial Government to provide such a committee in any way excuses the Government of Canada from providing one does not seem to me to be an argument that is at all convincing. I would like this Government to lead. It happens to be the one which I am in, so I will do my part and suggest the directions which I think we should take. After all, these proposals are not entirely novel. Certainly, it is not solely my suggestion that we should have such a committee. Indeed, it was part of my campaign in Thunder Bay-Nipigon to propose such a committee. I believe the Prime Minister has also expressed opinions on this matter which would be well worth examining. I look forward to consideration being given to establishing such a committee and going through with it at an early date. That is what the question is.

• (1620)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment and then I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member.

As I indicated earlier today, there has been some attempt to suggest that thousands of appointments have been made by Order in Council by this Government during the period in which it has been in power. I believe the record should be set straight. On March 27, the Leader of the New Democratic Party stated that over a thousand such appointments had been made, and today the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said that the Government had appointed over 1,200 people. The fact of the matter is that since September 4, 1984, the Government has made 593 appointments by virtue of Order in Council. That information is on public record. Members must understand that those 593 appointments include a number of categories. They include Commissioners for Oaths, honorary consuls for Canada abroad, diplomatic appointments, commissions of inquiry, and the list goes on. I would be surprised if former Staff Sergeant Hendrik Kornelius Morlag and Sergeant Carl Singbeil of the RCMP, who were appointed to the rank of inspector, would consider themselves as being recipients of patronage appointments. I would be surprised if Keith W. MacLellan, who was appointed as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Canada to the Syrian-Arab Republic, could be considered by any decent and fair-thinking Canadian as having received a patronage appointment. Is the appointment of people such as Bud Drury to CN a patronage appointment?

I have lived in Saskatchewan all my life. I have also lived under a New Democratic Government in that province. So I do not have to be lectured by members of that Party with respect to paying off their friends. I understand that once in a while outstanding and decent people were appointed to positions by the New Democratic Government of Saskatchewan. They appointed my mother to the Human Rights Commission. I paid tribute to them for that. That was an exception. I can tell Members that my mother was not in there with a bunch of Tories. However, the people who were appointed to boards and commissions, certainly were not unfriendly to that Government.

I believe that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon is an honourable Member who has a very deep interest in fairness. The motion which was put forward by his Party today is tied to a vote. That has required Members of Parliament to return from their constituencies on a Friday afternoon. The cost to Parliament to run this House for one day is $450,000. Does the Member think that it is more important to talk about the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), who awarded a contract at the outset of our administration to a company in which the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was involved, than it is to consider the plight of the people of this country who are looking for jobs? Does he not think that it would be more important for the Opposition to come forward with a statement of how it thinks it can improve Canada? Does he think that this kind of debate is edifying to the people which he fought so hard to represent? Does he not think that we would be better served in this House of Commons if we debated the issues which affect the well-being of the people of Canada? I ask him those questions in all seriousness.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, given that the Government House Leader said very similar things in a more impassioned sense before I began speaking, I think that I have answered those questions.

I think this is a good use of time. It involves the question of granting untendered contracts to relatives and friends. That is a question which is important. Canadian people are interested in it.

His mention of a $450,000 expenditure strikes me as being contemptible. I do not know what goes into adding that up, but people know, to some extent, how few of us are in the House when we are debating important matters following Question Period. To be told that Members have come back from their ridings will not impress my constituents. What is the $450,000 for? Did the Government House Leader propose to shut down the House and not let us have an Opposition Day in order that we could forward something which was important to us? I trust not. I believe that that kind of contempt for Parliament and for the good sense of the Opposition is not something which the Government House Leader is actually trying to make. But I am not sure what the point of the $450,000 was.

I repeat, this is important business. It was appropriate to raise this matter because the Government refused to answer the question of whether it is acceptable to grant an untendered contract to a relative of the minister of a Department with which that contract is involved. It is a perfectly good question. The refusal of government Members to deal with that and instead to wax indignant about other matters, only confirms my belief that they know what the answer is and they do not dare give it.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to comment and put a question to the Hon. Member opposite. I would suggest that the people of Canada are watching and are interested in seeing this House debate productively. What NDP Members are doing today is very transparent, and they know it. They can sit and grin all they want, but the people of Canada are not so stupid that they cannot see through what the NDP is doing today.

They speak about this momentous motion which is before the House. However, there are no hordes of opposition Members in their seats. It is a vital matter and we do not have a full House. I suppose that I should not direct any of my remarks toward the Liberal benches, because no one is there to hear them. I can understand what the NDP thought it was doing, and so do the people of Canada. They can see through sheer sham, and that is what this debate is all about.

The suggestion was made that no government Member was willing to respond to the question with a yes or no answer. I want to take this opportunity to respond. It is yes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the period for questions and comments has now expired. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on debate.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is Saturday and I will be in the good old City of Calgary for my regular monthly public meeting. The first thing which I will brag about is this contract. I will brag about the fact that we have a Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) who instructed his officials to look around for a firm that for $26,000 would do the work which firms historically have done, and which would go one step further and provide advice to save Canadian taxpayers half a million dollars in the coming year and in future years. I believe that 211 people from one political Party were chosen by the voters of this country to form the Government because the country is in a mess, and we are to go out there and select the most qualified people who will do the best job for the taxpayers of this country and turn this country around. That is what the Minister of Supply and Services did, and I am proud of it.

• (1630)

This is a day on which we can concentrate on the issue of integrity. The issue of integrity is one which is legitimate for debate in this Chamber. It is of concern to Canadians, certainly of concern to me and it is of concern to members of my Party. A day's debate on the issue of integrity is a day for very serious debate. My first introduction to the New Democratic Party's integrity was in the month of December, 1979. That Party, which said, "We stand for the ordinary people of Canada", stood in this Chamber and voted down a Budget which the Canadian Welfare Council said was the fairest Budget to the poor people of this nation in the decade of the 1970s. That was my first encounter with NDP integrity.

My second encounter was in the early days of the great Constitution debate. Most of the New Democratic Party Members who sat in this Chamber were from western Canada. That constitutional proposal would have made second, third and fourth-class citizens out of western Canadians for the rest of our lifetimes, but that Party supported it for political gains. That is the second major chunk of NDP integrity I have encountered in this Chamber.

Today is a day where we are supposed to debate the issue of integrity. Look at the motion, Mr. Speaker, which the Opposition has proposed. It states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the granting of an untendered contract to the brother-in-law of the present Minister of Finance by the Government of Canada is an unacceptable action.

Mr. Althouse: It could have said, "The granting to anyone of any untendered contract".

Mr. Hawkes: Is it a factually correct motion, Mr. Speaker? Let us take one fact which deals with one small piece of integrity. There is no such contract which exists between the Government of Canada and the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). There is a contract which exists between the Government of Canada, under the authority of the Minister of Supply and Services, and a firm, namely, Lawson Murray Ltd. The very name suggests that Lawson is one person and Murray another, and who in this Chamber knows what "Limited" represents? But there was a contract between a firm and the Government of Canada.

Mr. Althouse: And it was untendered.

Mr. Hawkes: It is an untendered contract. The New Democratic Party, when it voted in this Chamber in December, 1979, made victims of the poor people of this country. That is one of the consequences. Today the thrust of its interventions, the thrust of its motion, I suggest, runs counter to the basic attitude which underlies support for the Charter of Rights and for a belief in the individual rights of Canadians. The last speaker of the New Democratic Party broadened the debate somewhat. The motion suggests that brothers-in-law and all of those who are associated with, in partnership, or in company with them, should be discriminated against simply because they went through a marriage ceremony. It says nothing about common-law spouses. It says nothing about first cousins, second cousins, half brothers or half sisters. But it says something about brothers-in-law.

Mr. Althouse: And a lot about untendered contracts.

Mr. Hawkes: The last speaker broadened it to the issue of friends, Mr. Speaker. If we were to buy the logic which underlies this NDP motion, we would have to start with a couple of facts. First of all, let us recognize that about 46 per cent, almost half of the Gross National Product which occurs in this country in a calendar year, occurs because of government expenditures. It is Government at all levels. Almost half the commerce in this country occurs because of government expenditures. That is the first point to recognize, Mr. Speaker. That Party is suggesting that particular classes of people, the friends of politicians and the brothers-in-law of politicians, should be excluded from a portion of that business.

I would like to ask members of the New Democratic Party a question. What would happen if, through some miracle of misinformation, the Canadian public ceased to understand the New Democratic Party and, in a moment of weakness, voted for it and put it in charge of this nation? I have in front of me just one page of Main Estimates. It is called "Figure 19: Distribution of Labour Education Funds by Organization". These are untendered contracts between the Government of Canada and labour organizations to provide educational services to their members. The first was the Canadian Labour Congress, $4,291,000; second, Confederation of National Trade Unions, $398,500; third, Canadian Federation of Labour, $398,500; fourth, Canadian Conference of Teamsters, $171,500; and fifth, Centrale de l'enseignement du Québec, $161,500. These are single source suppliers of educational services. Members of this Party support them. They are in the Main Estimates. Members of this Party believe it is really important that those services be provided to the memberships of those unions. It is the opinion of members of this Party and of our Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), that these are the proper bodies for the delivery of these services. But they are untendered services, Mr. Speaker. Is the New Democratic Party telling this House that if, through some miracle, it became the Government, because these unions had members who supported it in the election, they are going to turf out these contracts, they are not going to have contracts like this with these organizations? That is the logical extension of what those Hon. Members are trying to lay on this Chamber. They are saying that simply because people participate in the democratic process, they should become second-class Canadians. That is a classic example of their logic.

What are you going to do about the technological impact research fund? Because I will tell you, the people who receive eight of 13 grants awarded so far—

Mr. Althouse: That's what they are, grants.

Mr. Hawkes: —eight of the 13 untendered contracts are with unions or employee associations and, in many cases, those people may be related. I do not know who the brothers-in-law sisters-in-law, third cousins and second cousins are. I do know that many of the board members will have supported NDP candidates in the last election. And I ask the members of the New Democratic Party: do you really mean that their participation on behalf of your candidacy in a democracy should exclude them from participating in an area of human activity where they are particularly well suited, are particularly expert, and where we have good reason to believe they will produce the best product for the least cost for the Canadian taxpayers? That is what those groups are and we think they should be funded.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Those Hon. Members sit in some kind of vaporous land, Mr. Speaker, without having their feet on the ground. We have an untendered situation with all of the banking that we do on behalf of the federal Government with the credit unions and major banks. We have an untendered situation with every professional service, whether we are talking about accountants, lawyers, or consultants of one kind or another. How on earth could we have a tendered situation in the area of artists and entertainers?

• (1640)

Mr. Deans: You're being ridiculous.

Mr. Hawkes: We're being ridiculous? The NDP House Leader (Mr. Deans) says that we are being ridiculous. Mr. Speaker, as our House Leader has pointed out, we are spending the better part of $.5 million on this debate today. We are debating a situation in which the Government of Canada picked a provider of goods and services and paid him $26,000. All of the work was done. There are no complaints about it. And we got an extra service which will save the taxpayers $500,000 this year, next year and the year after that. They find that appalling, Mr. Speaker. They want us to spend $.5 million debating the terrible Government that chose the best supplier in the country which did the best job. Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong with their logic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we are running out of time and there is so much more that I would like to say. I have sat in this Chamber for six years. One of the characteristics of legislation brought in by the previous Government, and nine times out of ten supported by the NDP, was the creation of boards, commissions, and mechanisms that would allow Order in Council appointments.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the hon. gentleman said we should stick to the facts, would he admit that his Party supported about twice as many of the Liberal votes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry, that is not a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, Members will remember that spate of appointments just prior to the election. I do not want to bring up the names of all the former Members of Parliament who were apointed to boards and commissions, but there were three appointments to ambassadorial posts, one of them new. There were five appointments to courts, one to the Parole Board, one to the Canadian Radio and Television Commission, one to the Canadian Transport Commission, one to St. Lawrence Seaway, one to the Livestock Feed Board, and one to the Aviation Safety Board. There were other appointments to de Havilland, to the Export Development Corporation, to the Canadian National Railway, to the Canadian Sealing Industry, and to the Farm Credit Corporation. That is just a partial list. I bring that up to remind the House that in the minority Government of 1972 to 1974 the thrust of the NDP public policy was toward the creation of boards and commissions which would operate at arm's length from the Parliament of Canada and would allow the Cabinet to make appointments and spend money without telling the Canadian people very much about them.

That is the thrust of public policy in the country. It grows out of an ideology which says that there are elites designed to rule. At the heart of this motion today is a threat system to Canadians. The threat is that if you happen to have a friend or business partner who happens to marry someone who happens to be related to someone who gets involved in politics, part of your business can go down the drain. Therefore, you had better not get involved as a volunteer, you had better not encourage your family to get involved as volunteers, and you had better not participate in democracy. Let the elite rule. That is the thrust of this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being 5.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of Supply in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 62(9). The question is the following one. Mr. Deans, seconded by Ms. Jewett, moves:

That, in the opinion of this House, the granting of an untendered contrct to the brother-in-law of the present Minister of Finance by the Government of Canada is an unacceptable action.

It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Deans) which was negatived on the following division:

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 25, consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions No. 1 (Mr. Axworthy) and No. 2 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4001).

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with the debate, I had hoped to be in a position to make a ruling today on all the motions, but I will not be able to complete the ruling today. Since there is a chance or it is possible that we might finish the first matters today—I make no judgment as to whether that is likely, just that it is possible—could I therefore indicate to the House what I suggest it do if that should happen.

I have indicated some concerns with Motion No. 3 and I therefore suggest that it cannot be debated. There is in the next grouping one concern raised by the Government House Leader with regard to Motion No. 14. I am not yet in a position to make any comment on Motion No. 14, but I suggest that the House proceed to the grouping which was suggested, that is, Motions Nos. 4 through a series of motions including Motion No. 14, on the understanding that it will be before the House for debate at that time subject to a request for a ruling which I have yet to make. I put it to the House that that is the best way it can continue to debate the matter at the time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, just for the purposes of clarification, I take it that the next grouping will be Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9, and Your Honour included Motions Nos. 14 and 16.

Mr. Speaker: I included Motions No. 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 as per the grouping I originally indicated to the House, with the caveat that I have been asked to make a ruling on Motion No. 14 and I am not yet in a position to make that ruling. Therefore, I suggest the matter be put to the House on the understanding that, as I am coming forward to make a series of rulings on all the requests I have received, I will be making a ruling at that time and that it be before the House on the understanding that a ruling is coming as to its admissibility in that group. Is that clear and understood?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate another opportunity to speak on Bill C-15. Of course, the particular motion before the House now is the one regarding the purpose of the Bill. Our Party has an amendment to that motion, which is presently the subject of this debate.

It is particularly important that we make a strong point on this motion in that we have a number of concerns about the position taken by the Government regarding investment in Canada by offshore organizations. I wish to speak about those concerns this morning.

I suppose I could list a number of decisions which the Government has taken in cosying up to the United States and indicating to that country that Canada is open for sale. That basic relationship, which is being established quickly across the country and around the world by the Government, is being brought to focus in this particular Bill that asks for the opening up of investment in Canada without any rules or regulations, particularly investment in Canada by foreign corporations without any stringent oversight by anyone in Government.

I know that government Members will say that they are changing it slightly but that they will look at the control of investment in Canada. However, that is not the impression they are leaving across the country. It is not the impression government Leaders are leaving with businessmen in other parts of the world or with leaders of other countries. The image they are leaving is that Canada is open for business, that we will allow any kind of investment in Canada from any group or company regardless of whether or not there are benefits to Canada. That is why it is very important that we look at every clause and attempt to ensure that the position in which this Bill puts us with regard to investment in Canada gives us some authority to say, "No, that is not in the interest of Canada and therefore we will turn it down".

The idea that a foreign investor is good under any circumstances, that the U.S. can do no wrong in its relationship with Canada is something that we cannot accept. The idea that foreign control of the economy is not good for Canada should be established in this Bill and should be part of the clause stating its purpose. For example, this Party spent many years questioning the desire of the previous Government to do something about foreign investment because a large portion of the requests for investment were passed without question. Despite FIRA approval being required, over the past two years between 95 per cent and 98 per cent of all requests for foreign take-overs were approved.

In the last year, I assume that approximately 100 per cent of requests were approved and only very few constrictions were put upon those companies when they entered Canada. Most did not require any promise of jobs or new investment. Many of the approvals were of take-overs only and had no real impact upon the number of jobs available or any impact on the growth of industry in Canada. That was under the old FIRA Bill. The situation has changed very little in the last few years. This Bill does not require any assurance that there will be new investment and new jobs created.

Compared to the rest of the world, we have a very high percentage of foreign ownership, ranging as high as the eighties and nineties in the chemical and petroleum industries and around 30 to 50 in the manufacturing industry, depending on how you designate the categories. Foreign ownership in one of the more highly industrialized countries of the world, namely Sweden, went up from just over 7 per cent to almost 7.5 per cent. That increase from just over 7 per cent to a little more than 7.5 per cent was of such great concern in Sweden that the Swedish House considered, discussed and debated the possibility of putting restrictions on foreign investment in Sweden. That was because the foreign ownership in Sweden was getting to be so high, over 7.5 per cent. Compare that with the average amount of foreign investment in Canada, which is probably near 50 per cent. We in Canada recognize that foreign ownership is not good for the country. Therefore, we should be taking some action and we should not be asking for further foreign investment in and control over our economy and our resources.

• (1115)

Many of the countries of the world have spent a great deal of time moving away from what we considered to be political colonialism or control of one country by a foreign country on a political level. It has been a major concern of many of the world's countries, not only Third World countries but countries like ours, to establish ourselves as politically separate from other countries. We have rid ourselves of political colonialism but we have established a new kind of colonialism, which is possibly more devastating than political colonialism. I am speaking of economic colonialism.

If a country gets to the point, as we have in Canada, at which a major portion of the economy is controlled by offshore organizations, then that country must be concerned about becoming colonialized to an unacceptable extent. Therefore, I think it is very important that one of the amendments that should be accepted by Parliament is a change in the definition of the purpose of the Bill.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I note that Clause 2 on page 1 of Bill C-15 provides for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities, and it encourages beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians. The concern of our Party is that the investment which comes to Canada from offshore or from the United States will be beneficial to our country, whether it is investment in the high-technology sectors or other sectors of our economy.

We all know of investment that has come to our country from the United States, and I do not think that this investment has been inhibited in any way during the last three or four years by the fact that there has been a review process. For example, in the pulp and paper industry in northern Ontario, we have been able to encourage foreign companies to come to Canada to adopt new product lines which have benefited our communities. In Sault Ste. Marie, the St. Mary's Paper Company took over from Abitibi a little over a year ago. That company has made a very substantial investment in Canada and has adopted new product lines. This has been very beneficial to the 400 or 500 employees of the plant as well as to those who work in its bush operations.

Certainly the least of the problems associated with that takeover was the review by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The main problem was getting financial assistance from the two senior levels of Government, and in the end assistance was provided in order to see that the plant was modernized, upgraded and overhauled. I do not know what the value is of removing that screening. Although it does not inhibit companies from investing in Canada, certainly we all know of large U.S. companies which have taken over our manufacturing facilities, operated them for a period of six months or a year and then suddenly shut them down. The sales workforce is kept, but the manufacturing is done in the United States. In order to protect Canada, we must maintain a screening mechanism. This Bill does not provide a great incentive for Canadians to invest in their own country. We believe that there should be a provision in the general outline of the benefits and the direction of the Bill to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians.

• (1120)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does a great job when it comes to public relations and talks glowingly about our relationship with the United States. Only a few weeks ago we saw the song and dance routine which was carried out in Quebec City. As that time the Prime Minister and President Reagan met to talk about relations between Canada and the United States. I am sure that all Canadians want to have a very helpful, constructive and positive relationship with the United States. However, immediately after that conference, the President returned to the United States and imposed a countervailing duty of 5.3 cents a pound on Canadian pork, pork products and hogs going into the United States. That immediately reduced the price of hogs going into the United States by about $12. That is having a devastating impact on that sector of the agricultural industry.

No sector has suffered more than the red meat industry, both in beef and pork. The Prime Minister gives us great platitudes in his marvellous television extravaganzas, whether they take place in Ottawa, Regina or Quebec City. He is also trying to hold one in London during the next few days, unfortunately the Queen and the British Government are objecting to it. However, if the conferences and the television extravaganzas which are orchestrated do not have any practical value and do not deal with the practical problems which exist between our nations, then of what value are they? We can watch television shows from Las Vegas, Hollywood and so on, but what we need is a Prime Minister who, when he sits down with the President of the United States, can solve the practical problems of Canadian workers, farmers and investors.

That is what concerns us with this Bill. The Prime Minister can have as many song and dance routines as he wants and talk about wonderful relationships, but if they do not address the problems at a practical level and have an impact on the U.S. Congress or the U.S. Trade Commission in the way in which they deal with day-to-day trade relations, then they do not have much value for Canadians generally. And it is not just the fact that this is happening in one commodity. If we look at a whole raft of commodities and at international relations, we see very serious problems. It is not just the countervailing duty which the United States has imposed on our pork, which is having a devastating impact not only on pork sold to the United States but an equally depressing effect on our beef production. I think that Canadians are a little concerned when they see the three teams of inspectors rifling through the books of federal stabilization programs in the various provinces and deciding whether or not subsidization of the pork industry has been taking place in our country. That will be followed up by further investigations.

• (1125)

Regardless of how the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) portrays the relationship between our two countries, many serious problems exist, and certainly things have deteriorated for many of our producers. It is the same with respect to lumber. Hearings have been started as a result of a Bill brought forward by the United States Congress to reduce our exports of lumber to the United States by some 25 per cent. That will have a devastating impact on Canadian sales to the United States if it is adopted.

So I would support the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It proposes to strengthen the Canadian position with regard to foreign investment in our country, as well as to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to speak in support of Motion No. 2, moved by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), in which he asks that this House should amend the purpose of the Bill by referring to technology under the appropriate terms and conditions established by the Government. One of the important discoveries of the jobs action task force, which was co-chaired, incidentally, by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor, are rediscoveries or reaffirmations of something most of us have known all along. But perhaps some Hon. Members opposite need to be reminded.

One of the important points which was emphasized time after time in the travels of the job action task force is that the Canadian people want to have control over their own lives, their own economies and their communities. One of the basic tasks of Government is to help people have control over their own lives and their own economies. It is not good enough for the Government simply to abdicate that responsibility saying that major decisions are going to be made in the market-place, implying that somehow the market-place is free and neutral and that the decisions which are made there will somehow be ultimately beneficial for everyone concerned. The reality in today's world, Mr. Speaker, is that there is no free, independent or neutral market-place. The market-place is controlled and dominated by a few large corporations. More and more we see that these few large corporations are headquartered in places other than Canada. So it is very important that we hear what the Canadian people are saying about wanting to have control over their own economy. Government should take action to try to make that possible rather than simply abdicate.

• (1130)

One of the things we want to see incorporated in the purpose of this Bill is that technology should be subject to the appropriate terms and conditions established by Government. That is a basic purpose of Government. I want to say a word or two about technology and how important it is. Technology is not neutral; it has a profound effect on the way we live our lives. Let us just think for a moment about why people used to grow beards, for example. It was because shaving was a very painful process. In some early societies it was customary for beards to be plucked hair by hair. Then they invented the straight razor and people generally went to a barber to be shaved. Very few people were actually clean-shaven until World War I when Gillette invented the safety razor. Then, all of a sudden, it became the fashion for everyone to be clean-shaven. Some people are rather slow in catching up with a fashion, and other people believe it is important to be in the forefront of fashion at all times. But the important thing is—and this is a very superficial example—that a very small change in technology such as going from the straight razor to the safety razor can have some fairly major consequences. Technology, then, is never neutral and the control of technology in many cases is equivalent to the control of society.

When European colonists first came to North America, technology in Europe was just beginning to explode in a great many ways. At that time there was a kind of rough equivalence between some of the technology used by the indigenous people here and that which the Europeans brought over. Some of this indigenous technology was essential to the survival of the European colonists. However, gradually, the explosion of technology taking place in Europe at that time completely swamped the native technology. The European colonists made a point of keeping control of that technology and, in certain places in northern Canada today, the Indian people will show you the elongated guns they had to buy from the Hudson's Bay Company, which sold the guns in return for a number of furs piled up to the height of the gun barrel. That is the kind of price Indian people had to pay to gain access to technology. The European trading companies recognized very clearly that the control of technology was equivalent to control of the economy and, indeed, of society as a whole.

We now face a similar explosion of technology, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that there is not a single Member of this House or any legislature in the world with a complete understanding of the implications of all the technological changes taking place in our world today. Things are happening at a very rapid rate and we have trouble just keeping up. The use of new technology in our offices, for example, can help us in many ways, but we have to be trained to use it and it is again a question of who controls technology. Indeed, there are implications in these developments which even the people doing the developing do not understand.

On that basis I think it is very important that this House recognize that Canada should have some control over the way in which new technology is introduced. We should be asking questions when it is brought in. What are the implications for jobs? What are the implications for the environment? All last week and the week before we were very concerned about the question of the PCB spill. This resulted from a technology introduced some years ago, before we had any real understanding of what its implications were. Then, when we began to understand the implications, PCBs came under stricter control. But we still do not have the technology to dispose of them in a way that is satisfactory to everyone.

To conclude, the Canadian people want control over their economy and over their lives. Therefore, it is important for the federal Government to establish basic ground rules for the introduction of new technology, and that is what we seek to do with this amendment.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak again on this Bill in support of the amendment we have put forward. As I said before in addressing this same Bill, it is basically a public relations Bill. It reminds me of the preacher who wrote in the margin of his sermon: "Argument weak, pound the pulpit". The Government is pounding the pulpit, but there is not much in the Bill in terms of effective policy.

The Bill assumes that you need to encourage U.S. investment and that investment was not being made here before. That is not the case. If you have read The Globe and Mail for the last six or seven years, you will see that 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the applications to FIRA were approved. The United States was investing here. I want to say, though, that not all of that investment was to our advantage. For example, we have the case of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, a large multi-national based in the U.S. which had invested in Canada to develop iron ore for shipment to a number of countries but primarily to the U.S. But when times got tough, those operations were closed down. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has personal knowledge of that from what happened in Schefferville, and I have personal knowledge resulting from the 50 per cent reduction of the labour force in Labrador City. I know the pain which resulted for people who thought their jobs were secure, people with homes and cars and so on, but then suddenly the axe fell. That is the down side of American investment.

The point I am making is that we have to be very careful about simply saying willy-nilly that all American investment, or, indeed, investment from any other country, is good for Canada. In my own province, we had investment from Britain in Corner Brook. But when times got tough, Corner Brook was at the end of the Bowater chain; this mill, which they had not bothered to maintain or modernize, was the one that was cut. Again we saw the pain created as a result of foreign investors failing to maintain their investment and failing to modernize. So you have to be very careful of foreign investment; it is not enough simply to change the name of a Canadian administrative body and then assume that all will be well. What protection will be built in for Canadians and Canadian companies? What would happen to small fish companies in Newfoundland if we had American investment such as we had in Labrador City, or if we had British investment such as we had in Corner Brook? What would happen if we had that kind of investment in small Newfoundland fish companies which have been struggling during the period of recession but keeping their heads above the water and doing well when larger companies have been going bankrupt? What protection do those companies have if they are open to investment by American companies? The Government must spell out very clearly what protection there will be for Canadian companies.

The other thing which bothers me about this particular measure is that it does not indicate how the Government will address investment in various regions of Canada. Canada is a country of different parts, not all of which are the same. Some areas of Canada need help a lot more than others. I happen to represent an area which I believe needs financial support at the present time as do all of the Atlantic provinces. There are other areas of Canada which require that particular support as well. There is nothing to say that investment which comes into Canada will be directed to a certain area of the country which needs it more than other areas. There is no policy to set out how foreign companies will be encouraged to invest in certain areas of Canada. I think the Government should address such a policy.

Even in the United States there is difficulty at the present time in encouraging investment in certain parts of the country. It is well known that there are certain areas in the U.S., such as the north-east, which are having great difficulties at the present time. Other areas, such as the south-west, are lucrative boom areas which are enticing investment. In Canada too there are areas with greater needs than others. I would like the Government to indicate how foreign and Canadian investment will be targeted to the areas of the country which need it most.

We are talking basically about job creation. A rule of thumb for judging any measure that the Government puts forward is its effect on job creation in the country. That is the bottom line. What is the measure which is presently before us going to do to create more jobs in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan? What will the outcome of this be? I do not see any indication that there will be more jobs created as a result of the implementation of this measure.

If the Government was really serious about job creation, it would not have been as extreme as it was in the cut-backs that it made. Indeed, many of those have been reversed already, such as the cut-backs in environmental funding. If the policy of the Government was job creation, it would not have embarked willy-nilly across the country with an uneven hand in the cut-backs that it made. That sort of thing affects the areas of the country which are most dependent on government support through programs and policies.

Instead of bringing forward a measure such as this, the Government should not have made the cut-backs. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will take cognizance of that in the upcoming Budget, rather than treating Atlantic Canada to the same kind of disastrous economic measures that we had in the last Budget. The bottom line is job creation, particularly jobs for Canadians by Canadian firms.

That is why I take a great deal of pleasure in supporting the amendment which we have put forward. The amendment says in effect that the present Bill contains no specific means for the Minister to encourage Canadian investment at all. It merely contains generalities. The only specifics are with regard to review and notification. That is a truth which the Government does not want to recognize. We believe that there must be more provision and encouragement for investment by Canadian firms and more protection of existing Canadian firms which are having a difficult time. That is why I take great pleasure in supporting the amendment to this particular Bill that my Party has put before the House.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the amendments we have before us are obviously of such quality and weight that I am afraid ten minutes of debate will not give full justice to the matters raised. I will attempt to give a small overview, and I know my colleagues will be more than anxious to follow and to deal with specific parts of the motions.

Let me say in general terms that the primary purpose of the amendments that we have introduced is, first, to try to clarify in parliamentary terms the clear responsibility of the Minister to take action to benefit Canadian industry, particularly investment in Canadian industry. The present Bill is very vague, general and meaningless when it comes specifically to establishing what the tax roles and functions of a Minister must be in securing a more active set of benefits for Canada by Canadians.

We have been told by many speakers on the government side that this is one of the major ambitions of the Bill. Therefore, it comes as some surprise why government Members opposed amendments in committee that are clearly designed to enhance the ability of the Government to promote those very same objectives, namely to ensure that there are opportunities for Canadians to invest in their own industry. Again, we have to question the motivation and the seriousness with which the Government has adopted the notion of Canadian investment because of its unwillingness to support amendments which are clearly designed to expand that role.

Second, we feel it is very important that the Minister responsible for the operation of Investment Canada be accountable for his or her actions, particularly in cases where there is a wide level of sensitivity toward regional development, where there is a level of sensitivity to the performance and behaviour of foreign investment in this country, and, perhaps most seriously, on the question of who gets approval and who does not.

This Bill as it is presently constructed contains perhaps the most wide-ranging powers ever given to a Minister to make decisions dealing with billions of dollars worth of investment without being accountable to anyone, not to his own Cabinet, not to Parliament. In fact, the Minister is not accountable to anyone. This naturally leads to the suspicion of or concern about favouritism. Who gets the approval? There is no way of determining some other form of judgment, of determining the legitimacy, accuracy or relevancy of that decision, because there is no way of finding out. The Minister does not report back to Parliament. He does not report back to his own Cabinet. He does not report to anybody, and all he consults is his own peculiar and convoluted set of judgments.

Surely we have seen evidence in the past month or two of how dangerous a trend that could be, even for Members on the Government side. May I remind Hon. Members of the problem of Domtar. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) made a decision relating to total cancellation of any support for the Domtar proposal in the Province of Quebec, which affected hundreds of jobs in a very depressed area of the province. It was only through the incredible weight of opposition brought after the fact by local people, by members of this Opposition Party and by others that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who is well known for his sensitivity to heat—in other words, he cannot take it—

Mrs. Mailly: Nonsense.

Mr. Axworthy: —immediately turned to his Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and told him to change his mind.

What we are facing under this kind of Bill is a constant sort of post ad hoc set of responses and reactions against a Minister who has shown he has no sensitivity to regional development. No one has any confidence in his ability to make judgments that will result in effective distribution of economic benefits in different parts of Canada.

The gentleman who was responsible for that wonderful failure of the institution called the Bank of Western Canada—we in the West remember the now Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion's record in western Canada—we know how sensitive to western Canada he was in his previous incarnation. We are giving him incredible powers to make decisions, yet he reports to no one.

• (1200)

The intent of our amendments is clear. We believe the Bill should include a provision in no uncertain terms indicating that the Minister is responsible for seeking out Canadian investors when businesses are up for sale or acquisitions are under way. I point to the example of the major take-over by Chevron, a United States oil and gas company, of Gulf Canada, a $2 billion deal. Under FIRA there was a clear undertaking that that company had to try to sell off Gulf Canada to ensure the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry. The Minister responsible has taken no role whatsoever. He has simply washed his hands of it. We are within two days of meeting the deadline, and there is no Canadian buyer and there seems to be no action on behalf of the Government. Therefore, there seems to be no accountability under that Act on the part of the Minister.

One of our amendments clearly sets out that it is the responsibility of the Minister to seek out Canadian investors for those businesses so that Parliament can judge him by those actions. There is nothing in the Bill which requires him to do that. Although he can say that he will do it, it must be within the legislation. I do not think anyone here can take ministerial statements on faith in that in the short life of this Government we have already seen that it does not live up to its commitments. Such statements are not realizable unless there is clear responsibility within the legislation.

Equally we felt that part of the purpose of this amendment was to ensure that the Minister responsible would consult, when there is a take-over or acquisition bid, with the communities and regions affected by it, to ensure that a foreign buyer will not come into a one-industry town, buy up the industry and strip it of its employment. My colleague from Newfoundland spoke about the danger this morning of having many factories, mines or enterprises closed down and the employees and communities being left holding the bag. Our amendment tries to put forward a clear responsibility and accountability for the Minister to consult with them and to meet regional responsibilities.

Our Government established the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program, which was an attempt to recognize that in the event of industrial change, lay-offs, or change in technology, the federal Government in partnership with local businesses and local communities would negotiate, consult and work out a plan of action to meet the problem. We have no commitment from the Government in this regard. In fact, it is closing down ILAP. It has no interest in or response to the problem of industrial change. When representatives of the Economic Conference Board appeared before the committee, they recognized that one of the major consequences of foreign investment was job loss, job reduction, job change. However, there is nothing in the Bill to provide assurance to the communities affected by the changes that their interests will be taken into account. When it comes time for Parliament to judge the actions of the Minister, he can say that under the Investment Canada Act it was not his responsibility. This is why we feel it is very important to have written into the legislation clear and undeniable responsibility on the part of the Minister to meet regional needs, to consult with the regions and to be responsive to any job change or industrial change encountered as a result of a foreign take-over, so that when it comes time for Parliament to hold up the Minister's record of stewardship we will have a clear basis for judgment.

The amendments we are proposing should also require the Government to provide far more research and analysis of the behaviour and performance of foreign-owned companies. One of the most important findings which emerged from the committee hearings was that there were substantial differences in the behaviour of Canadian-owned and foreign-owned companies. Foreign-owned companies imported much more from abroad. They did not believe in using Canadian products. They conducted far less research and development. They gave far less export opportunities to their subsidiaries. That is a very important matter which should be tested. We need the proper information to ensure that foreign-owned companies perform as well as their Canadian counterparts.

These are the reasons we introduced these amendments. My colleagues in this caucus will be speaking individually to a number of the items. However, I believe they are all put forward in the spirit of making this Bill a better one. I hope the Government will respond in like kind.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is an historic debate because two different approaches to reviving our economy confront each other here in the House of Commons. I see an approach reflected strongly in the Bill to leave the future, the dynamism and the sense of momentum which we desperately need in our economy to others. It is an approach to economic revival by the Government which says that it is not here in Canada from Canadians that the excitement, enthusiasm and investment will come to get our economy moving again. Instead, it is an approach which says that we look to other countries for investment, to the United States, to western Europe and to Japan. The Government thinks that that is where the investment will come from to get us back on our feet. It is taking the same approach to free trade. The Government is looking for answers outside the country. It looks for solutions which lie in the hands of other people.

We say that the solution to our problems is in our hands; it lies in the hands of Canadian entrepreneurs, Canadian communities and Canadian people across the land. That clear direction or solution is there for us to take, and it is something which should be reflected in this Bill. After all, this Bill looks to encourage Canadian investment, or so it says in the clause on its purpose. However, in practice it is a Bill which in its details looks only at encouraging foreign investment. It looks at taking away the strength of the review mechanism and substituting therefor a pious hope, a sense of sitting back and praying for foreign investment to come in and save us. That is simply not good enough. It is not economic leadership. It is not the kind of confidence in our country and in our people that the Government was elected in September to demonstrate.

We have moved a set of amendments which have three basic purposes. Those amendments show in direction what we should be doing to try to encourage and promote Canadian investment, investment by Canadian-controlled firms to produce the jobs which we so desperately need in this country. Also, our set of amendments tell the Government that the Minister who administers this Bill has a responsibility to Canadianize our economy in the area of cultural heritage and national identity.

• (1210)

It is not good enough, as the present Bill does, simply to set out that the Government has a special concern for those companies that are somehow in the category affecting our cultural heritage and national identity. There has to be a clear commitment that a big part of the Minister's responsibility is to see to it that in those crucial sectors, Canadianization takes place through joint ventures and leadership on the part of the Government. It should see to it that our public broadcasting, magazines and books remain controlled by Canadian companies serving the Canadian community.

We have moved an amendment which points out the special responsibility which we as a Party feel any Government has to take to ensure that companies which come into Canada from outside recognize the tradition of labour relations harmony and labour relations peace that we would like to establish in this country.

I want to deal specifically with the question of improving Canadian investment here. That is the challenge. The challenge is not to hope and to pray that the Japanese, Americans, Germans and French will somehow fill the leadership gap that this Government is creating and which was created by the previous Government. This gap has left us with 1.5 million people out of work across this country. It has left our communities with a sense of panic about the future. That sense of panic should not be experienced when people have ideas, proposals and hopes that they could put into effect if Government provided leadershp to them.

We suggest that leadership can be provided by setting forth some investment-guidelines, some suggestions of the key sectors of the economy where we need to have more growth and investment and an expansion of jobs. That leadership can be provided by trying to pull together on a sector by sector basis the kinds of advisory groups that will look at the problems of those particular sectors and give signals to the rest of the country of what is required to improve the Canadian role within those sectors.

That is not some kind of socialist pie in the sky. It is a fact, something which Governments in this country have found make sense. We have had the automobiles task force and the petrochemicals task force. Each made a solid, exciting contribution, setting forth clearly what could be done to put those important sectors of our economy back where they are making a full contribution to this country. In the case of the automobile sector, there was a recommendation for Canadian content laws. There was a recommendation in the petrochemical sector that we change some of the pricing structures so that petrochemical firms are able once more to create the jobs that are so desperately needed in this country.

There should be a recognition in this Bill that part of the Minister's responsibility in trying to promote Canadian investment is to do precisely this, to set up the sector-based advisory groups, to give us guidelines, to exercise the kind of responsibility and leadership that any Government, particularly this Government, has. This Government received a massive vote of confidence from the Canadian people in the 211 Members of Parliament representing that Party. There is a tremendous responsibility which comes with that power. We feel that this Bill is the place to flash some signals across the country that that responsibility will be picked up, that in fact this Government will take the direction that people have asked it to take to encourage Canadian investment, to give them a sense of confidence about their future with a commitment to Canadianization.

We strongly urge the House to accept the amendment that we have moved. It will take us to the commitments for the future that will give us the jobs which we so desperately need.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this debate on Bill C-15, and especially to speak to the amendments before the House today, which you so graciously read from the Chair.

At this time, one of the points that concerns us particularly about Bill C-15 is how the review agency will be managed and directed under the new legislation, and especially the relationships between the public servants that belong to the agency and the Minister and the Minister's office.

First of all, I would like to explain our basic position, which is that we think the Minister should have the responsibility, and be free, to issue guidelines regarding the agency's policy. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will find this position surprising, coming from us. Although we do not always agree with the positions taken by the Minister in this area, we realize that the Minister must be responsible for issuing guidelines on the review agency's major policies. That responsibility is incumbent on all Members of Cabinet, who were elected to provide policy direction to the Government's various agencies.

However, we believe that the Minister should moderate his involvement in day-to-day administration and the various decisions that will be taken by his officials. In other words, we consider that the political role and the administrative role should be kept separate. Unfortunately, the amendment that specifically concerns Clause 4 was voted down in committee by Progressive Conservative Members on the committee. We do not know why, and we find it rather surprising. Are Progressive Conservative Members opposed to the Minister providing policy direction? That would hardly make sense. But then, why did the Progressive Conservative members object? What bothers us, and that is perhaps why the Conservative Members objected to this amendment, is that we feel the Minister should not be involved in the decision-making for each specific case. In other words, the Foreign Investment Review Agency should not be an extension of the Minister's Office and his staff. We would like individual decisions on applications for foreign investment in Canada to be based on objective criteria, on criteria we would like to know and see tabled before the House or before a committee of the House, for consideration by Hon. Members.

We would like to see decisions on each application for foreign investment based on criteria that, first of all, would indicate which areas of Canada's economy should be protected. We are thinking of areas such as culture and the financial sector, where the Government should think twice before letting foreign investors purchase Canadian companies or create new ones in this country with funds brought in from outside.

We would like to see objective criteria describing the areas in which investment should be encouraged, for instance, investments that would directly create jobs. Perhaps such criteria should also include encouraging investment that is likely to create jobs indirectly through spinoffs, and through other industries that would be providing services or raw materials, for instance, to a company that itself will be creating jobs as a result of foreign investment.

● (1220)

We believe that those criteria must attest to the importance of scientific research in Canada and that we must stand squarely behind companies which will be created here through foreign investments and which will be primarily research-oriented. We also want a series of objective criteria based on factors such as those I am referring to. For instance, will a new business set up by foreign investors promote the development of new technologies in Canada?

Those are, in fact, the basic points to be considered with respect to the objective criteria which public servants will be expected to apply without ministerial intervention in every case, for we want public servants to be able to work without unending political interference in each case. We fully agree that the review agency should be given general guidelines by Cabinet and the Minister responsible—how else could it work?—but we do not want each decision to be subject to political input.

What guidelines have been given so far to the screening agency by the Minister? We simply have no idea at all. Not a word has been said about it in the House of Commons, perhaps excepting the only general Canada-is-open-for-business directive to encourage foreign investment. To this day, we still have no idea what course the Government will want the review agency to steer.

Such are the questions we are directing to the Department and, hopefully, the answers will be somewhat more enlightening than what we heard so far. As a matter of fact, the series of amendments under consideration will provide the Cabinet spokesman with an opportunity to come up with the answers to some of our questions.

In addition, I would urge the Government to be more specific and to elaborate on the general guidelines to be given the agency, and to tell us the nature of the objective criteria which agency officials will use in their day-to-day decisions on approval of foreign investments proposed by others.

Well, Mr. Speaker, those are the questions I have in mind, and I hope they will be answered before the conclusion of this debate.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in this debate which is about some of the most important aspects of the Canadian economy. This is a debate about jobs, expansion, our own self-image as a nation, our self-image as Canadian investors and, ultimately, our confidence.

We think that the Government is making a grave error in terms of creating jobs in this country. It is making an error in terms of attempting to expand Canadian business and it is making an error which will result in less rather than more confidence in the Canadian business sector.

We are debating 10 amendments, all of which propose to correct the errors contained within the Bill before us. These motions were moved in an attempt to improve Canadian ownership of Canadian industry so that Canadian jobs and technology will be expanded and given a future.

In the course of my remarks, I would like to deal with three or four points and then deal with the actual amendments that are before us today. First, I would like to point out why it is that we need national legislation to Canadianize Canadian industry and what are the advantages to legislation that will encourage Canadian investment in Canada. I would like to spend a few moments pointing out a few areas in which I think FIRA did succeed in doing its job of increasing Canadian ownership and expanding Canadian economic activity. Last, I have an example or two to give the House showing what happens when we do not have legislation which gives a slight preference to Canadian investment over foreign investment.

It is interesting to go through the record that was produced during the course of the hearings on this Bill. Sometimes this kind of record gets ignored. A second-reading debate deals with the principle of a Bill, and the Government takes its stand at that time. Then the matter ostensibly goes to committee so Members may hear what Canadians have to say about a particular Bill. In this case, Canadians had quite a bit to say about this Bill, and not very much of it was good. What they said seems to have been thoroughly ignored and the Government is continuing with the almost pigheaded approach it showed at second-reading stage. The Government is going ahead with the Bill in spite of what witnesses said in committee and in spite of the consultations that were held.

One of the most succinct reasons for legislation like the Foreign Investment Review Agency that will now be put out of business was presented by Bob Blair, a fairly well-known Canadian businessman and President of NOVA Corporation. He said that we need such investment legislation for Canadians because:

> —surely part of this story is that every national government takes steps to look after its own domestic companies, under some chosen circumstances, to ensure that business is played fairly and that proper industrial benefits do indeed occur or are retained—led in this respect, if you like, by the Congress of the United States of America and the Government of Japan respectively.

As a businessman and an objective analyst, it is quite clear to Mr. Blair that the reason Canada needed FIRA-type legislation that made certain our investments and investors were given some priority is simply that other countries are doing it to the extent that Canadian investors have a very poor chance of investing in those two countries he listed. As an example, the Americans have the Jones Act which provides that any goods moved from one port to another within the United States must occur in U.S. bottoms. We do not have any laws that restrictive in Canada but such laws do exist in the United States. A Canadian ship could not find a job moving goods from one U.S. port to another.

The Japanese as well are very selective and careful about what investments they will allow into their country, and indeed they are even careful about what goods and services from outside may enter that country. Those are examples of two very successful countries that have quite restrictive legislation regarding foreign investment, legislation which is much more restrictive than were our feeble efforts under the old Foreign Investment Review Agency.

When pressed, Mr. Blair, the President of NOVA Corporation, went on to explain some of the advantages to Canada from Canadianization. The following is part of what he had to say in committee:

> For all of their often fine endeavour to be good corporate citizens in Canada, the foreign-controlled companies, first of all, do have other influences on them; they have political influences, legal influences, attitude influences that originate somewhere else. These influences dictate how they behave everywhere, including how they shall behave in Canada. That naturally has to diminish, to some degree, their ability to respond fully and completely to Canadian influences.

● (1230)

He went on to say:

> —Canadian-owned firms had done more to see the business they could afford was developed with Canadian engineering firms, professional firms, small business, Canadian suppliers of goods and services, Canadian employment, than the non-Canadian owned firms. I think this is exactly what a reasonable man would expect.

The witnesses who appeared before the committee pointed out quite clearly that there are definite advantages to the Canadian economy when Canadians invest in Canada. However, the testimonies of those witnesses seem to have been totally ignored by the Government. There has been no attempt to make amendments which would take into account the testimonies of the witnesses who appeared before the committee. The amendments which we have moved attempt to correct and improve the proposed legislation in accordance with those testimonies.

There is no point in having witnesses appear before a committee and in having consultation if no attention will be paid to them. In his testimony, when asked about some of the successes of the Foreign Investment Review Agency for Canadian business, Mr. Blair cited, as one example, his company's acquisition of Husky Oil. He said:

> There was a moment a few years ago where in NOVA we obtained ourselves the ownership of an oil company in Canada called Husky, which we subsequently made into one of the most active oil companies in Canada, one of the most active in the frontiers in heavy oil and in other places, and which has been one of the leaders of new investment in Canada. As it happened, but for FIRA, we would not have had that opportunity. But for FIRA, the persons who controlled Husky were in the process of turning over the ownership control by private agreement to an American oil company that would have assumed that control before we had a chance to do anything about it. The FIRA process did give NOVA a few days' time to get talking to our bankers and get in there and compete. And in the competition we beat the American company and won.

I believe it is very useful to remember that, especially in the case of Canadian Porcelain which was forced into receivership by Lapp Industries because of its dumping into the Canadian market. I say "dumping", because Lapp Industries was convicted on January 9 of this year of dumping procelain into Canada at an unfair price. The employees of Lapp Industries have put together a co-operative approach and have raised $1.3 million as a bid on the company, which has been presented to the trustee, Peat Marwick. Lo and behold, on the same day that the $1.3 million bid was made, the United States company bid for less money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on debate.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that I am pleased to speak on this Bill in support of the Government's position. However, before I speak on the specific clauses which we are debating, I would like to comment on what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said about the Domtar situation. I would like to correct the record. A subsidy was not cancelled. A subsidy was requested by the company which was not granted. There is quite a difference between a request for a subsidy which is not granted and one which is cancelled. The Hon. Member may know something about promises which were made by the previous Government, however, we are not aware of them. The subsidy was not cancelled. It was suggested that if any moneys were requested which were essential to expand or modernize the mill in Windsor, the money would come out of the agreement which was signed by the federal Government and the Government of Quebec. That was the regional expansion agreement which totalled approximately two-thirds of a billion dollars. That agreement works on a fifty-fifty basis. It was signed in December, 1984, after a delay of almost a year during which the previous administration was not able to come to an understanding with the Government of Quebec. But within a few short months, this Government signed the agreement with Quebec. When the subsidy request was received, it was suggested that any money which the Government of Quebec wanted to spend on Domtar could be taken from that fund.

Mr. Lapierre: That's nonsense.

Mrs. Mailly: That is exactly what happened. The funds which were allocated, on a fifty-fifty basis, only cover the payment of interest on the moneys which were borrowed to perform the modernization. So the subsidy was not cancelled; it was not accepted. If it had been accepted, it would have been unfair to other Canadian paper companies as we could not have accepted their requests for subsidies. We could not play favourites, which is something which the previous Government seemed to do with impunity.

I would also like to comment on some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). According to him, the Government gave short shrift to the representations made by Canadians who appeared before the standing committee that considered the Bill. Well, should he care to study the amendments, he will find out that the Government has proposed quite a few amendments in direct response to suggestions made by Canadian citizens who gave evidence before the standing committee. These are important amendments. Besides, the Bill itself goes a long way towards implementing the recommendations we heard from Canadians while we were in Opposition and since the Bill was under consideration before its introduction in the House.

For example, a number of people expressed concern about the tedious process under the old Foreign Investment Review Act. It took so much time that they often missed out on opportunities to buy a company, or even to keep up with technological progress. As you know, Mr. Speaker, anyone anxious to set up new facilities in high technology industry cannot stand still for very long. The best example of that kind of situation is the case of a company in the town of Buckingham in my riding. It only had a few weeks to act on its option on a high technology patent and it had to move very rapidly to be able to buy some facilities, but it finally got discouraged and decided that perhaps it should start from scratch—in the United States instead of Quebec. We did manage to convince management to be patient and that eventually the climate would be more conducive to that type of investment. I am glad to say today that the company came back, an outstanding corporate citizen who had already invested in Canada and who now has the green light to go ahead with the new plant which will create jobs in a region where unemployment is rampant.

Both the NDP and the Liberal Party have a very negative approach, convinced as they seem to be that no foreign corporate citizen can possibly have the same dedication, the same decorum and the same generosity which are supposed to be the hallmark of Canadian corporate citizens. In my view, it amounts to a kind of discrimination that is repugnant to any civilized person, to think that foreign investors will be reluctant to make a going concern of their businesses. The impression is given that foreign investors are not good managers. If a person invests his money in this country, I imagine he would want his business to be viable and make a profit and give him a return on his investment. If this foreign investor were such a poor manager that he should want to penalize his employees and the community where he has his business and penalize this country by preventing it from opening up markets abroad, in no time at all he would have to close down, and he would have lost his initial investment. It is useless to try to camouflage what is, in effect, an ideology and almost a phobia of foreign investment by wrapping it up in a defence of the rights of employees and the rights of regions, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, speaking directly to the motion and the clauses of the Bill concerned, for instance, Motion No. 4 asks that the Bill provide policy direction to the agency established by Section 6; but the Minister's duties already include responsibility for providing policy direction. The purpose of this motion is to make a distinction between administration and management. We found it was very difficult to decide what activities come under management and what activities come under administration, so we felt this amendment did not contribute anything. In fact, it could lead to a very complicated process that would only delay decision-making. Since one of the principal objectives of Bill C-15 is to speed up the review process so that we can take advantage of foreign investment and create jobs as quickly as possible, the proposed amendment would have the opposite effect. That is why we rejected it.

We examined each of these amendments in committee. They were debated, and we explained to Opposition Members why we were rejecting these amendments. They cannot say they did not have a chance to discuss these points. We had very serious reasons for rejecting the amendments. For instance, Mr. Speaker, I am thinking of Clause 5 which is very important and goes to the very core of this legislation, and the amendment in which we are asked to ensure that businesses controlled by non-Canadians respect the rights of workers. As Hon. Members are aware, we have the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which does that equally well, we have the Labour Code, and we have a number of federal-provincial laws that protect the rights of employees. We fail to see why this kind of amendment should be included in legislation that controls investment.

Mr. Speaker, my point is that we did consider the principles the Opposition had in mind in proposing these amendments, and that we concluded that this legislation provides protection, for instance for culture in Canada, our cultural industries and the interests of Canadians while at the same time promoting investment, the investment we need to create jobs and reduce unemployment which is far too high here in Canada.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part once more in the very important debate on a piece of legislation which will certainly have a major impact on the future of Canada. After learning from the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) to what extent she took the views of Opposition Members into account before deciding how to vote in committee, I must tell her that we were not born yesterday. I know quite well that the Hon. Member for Gatineau and the Parliamentary Secretary were simply following the instructions of the minister. The Parliamentary Secretary had his marching orders. In fact, because of the contributions made by Members opposite, we are back in this House today to address not only the few committee members who are under the Minister's orders, but also the rest of the Members opposite, like the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) and his colleagues who might be able to bring pressure to bear on the Minister to make sure that the principles advocated by the Official Opposition and the NDP will be included in this Bill before it is passed by the House.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I was interested in bearing the interpretation of the Member for Gatineau about the Domtar issue. Mr. Speaker, I know that you yourself are not indifferent to this matter, and if the Hon. Member for Gatineau can say that it was all quite simple and that the Regional Economic Development Agreement between Canada and Quebec will take care of everything, it just goes to show that she did not follow that case as closely as you did, Mr. Speaker, since she would have us believe that it will automatically be included in the Quebec Economic Development Agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member for Gatineau is quite wrong regarding both the facts and her version of them. In fact, what happened—

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I believe it is against the rules to involve the Speaker in a debate which would jeopardize his neutrality.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, if one cannot address the Chair, I wonder whom one can address!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): To put an end to this debate, I shall simply remind the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and also the deputy whip that the motions now under consideration still deal with the Investment Canada Bill and the amendments moved by your colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) among others, and that the relation between that matter and your present comments is rather tenuous.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you appreciate my dealing with investment in Canada, the Bill now before us being the Investment Canada Act. Certainly the Domtar issue has to do with investment, and I would like especially to commend the part you took in that issue. Certainly it is not by letting things go, as the Hon. Member for Gatineau is trying to do, that this problem has been solved. It has been solved because there has been efficient and powerful action by the community, and in that sense it is my hope that the Canadian business community also will get in the act and will try to limit the damage now being done by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to Canadian business ownership, the very balance of Canadian investment, and it is along those lines that we are debating that very delicate issue.

Mr. Speaker, concerning labour rights, again the Hon. Member for Gatineau has said: "Don't you worry, they are protected by the Charter of Rights. Well, I would urge her to read the Charter once again and see exactly where labour rights are protected in the Canadian Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms. I appreciate that she was not yet on the political scene, though unwittingly when the Charter of Rights was adopted, but I would remind her that the Labour Code has nothing to do with constitutional law.
