The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) raised some very important points concerning the Minister's role. I think it is important that all of us should know what will be the responsibility of the Minister in charge of the agency. Will he assign political guidelines to the agency, or is the latter some kind of a beast that will be wandering about at the discretion of its officials? The impression now is that the Minister wants to be in charge but he is quite intent not to say so in the Act, and this will prevent the House of Commons from assessing the Minister's performance in the administration of the Act.

I think it is important for us to know what criteria the Minister will use, because we realize—especially considering the Minister responsible for the legislation today—that these criteria are not always necessarily objective, and that is why we want to give him some parameters. We want to give him parameters so that the Minister will not strictly act according to his own discretion, as he is doing in a number of cases that are of concern to us here.

I hope the Minister will be given some parameters, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with a case that is not directly concerned with foreign investment, but I am sure the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) would do well to prepare some parameters for him when he starts dealing with Pétromont, for instance. I really think she should, because, Mr. Speaker, although the Minister is probably acting in good faith, we have noticed that Regional Economic Development, and especially the development of the most disadvantaged regions, is not necessarily a matter on which he is staking his reputation as a politician. That is why, Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that as far as the Investment Canada Bill is concerned, the Minister has a few guidelines so he will know what to do with this legislation. I think it is important to know that the Minister will be giving the main policy direction. We have the conviction that decisions made from Toronto are not necessarily, I say not necessarily, good for the whole country. I am convinced that the Toronto perspective may be useful, but we would like a more pan-Canadian perspective.

I think that when we consider other aspects of my hon. colleague's amendment, it is not so unreasonable to ask the Minister to find other potential buyers who are Canadians. I thought this legislation was called "an Act respecting investment in Canada", and before seeking out foreign investors to, for instance, take over Canadian companies, we want to oblige the Minister to look around and see if any Canadian citizens are interested in buying the company, and that, Mr. Speaker, is the same principle we apply to immigration. Hon. Members are aware that before we can give a non-Canadian a work permit, the job opening is posted, and we make sure that any Canadians qualified for the position are given a chance to apply before the position is opened to a non-Canadian. We want to apply exactly the same principle to investment and ensure that Canadians are considered first. I fail to see why my colleagues opposite would have any objection to such a worthy principle, Mr. Speaker.

Research is another aspect mentioned in the amendments proposed by my hon. colleague. He wants to set guidelines for the Minister responsible for the agency, once and for all, to ensure that research on domestic and international investments is done officially, in accordance with certain criteria, to ensure that the Minister does not just set this aside and decide that as far as he is concerned, the research has been done. For instance, he examines his conscience, and hurrah, we accept our friends from Chevron, and we approve applications by other friends for taking over Canadian companies. Mr. Speaker, as for the requirement to table the results in the House of Commons, I think we all need this research, to find out whether the Minister took the advice he was given.

Mr. Speaker, we have all been gagged in this debate, and unfortunately, I have only ten minutes, otherwise I could have spent all afternoon describing some horrifying cases of foreign investment that were to the disadvantage of Canadians and I am sure that includes some Canadians in the riding of Gatineau and during the next minutes I will be allowed, I will have an opportunity to name a few, despite the fact that this Government, with its tyrannical majority, would keep us from speaking. I have to stop for the time being, but I will be back to this later on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity to speak on this group of amendments because the Bill does not give the Minister the kind of direction he should have. They allow him to approach the whole question of investment without any suggestion that he has some responsibility to Canadian investors. Clause 5 seems to suggest that the Minister has the responsibility of bringing in foreign investment as though it were preferable to Canadian investment. The clause does refer to assisting Canadian businessmen to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement, and they are very good words. But this clause and the whole Bill seem to point in a different direction. Therefore, the series of amendments which the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have put before this House and in committee are an attempt to assist the Government in giving the Minister some direction to make sure that Canadian enterprise, Canadian business, Canadian investment would have a better opportunity for success than investment from outside the country.

The three or four amendments our Party has put before this House in this group are exactly along that line. They indicate that Canadian investment should be encouraged as much as possible. Where investment deals directly with the national identity and cultural heritage areas of the economy, there should be a blockage of investment from outside of Canada, or at least the Canadian investor should be given specific encouragement and some specific responsibility in making that kind of investment.

I think everyone in this House would agree that rather than suggesting we buy foreign-made products, we should produce those products here. The problem seems to be with what is meant by "Canadian-produced". The Government suggests that buying Canadian means buying products made in Canada by a foreign investor and that this is better than buying those made by a Canadian investor. The Bill does not give the Canadian investor the title bit of an edge required because of our smaller market.

A major amendment which we have put forward is that which would require foreign investors to take some responsibility for their treatment of labour in the Canadian tradition. We have had some bad experience with foreign corporations coming into the country and establishing labour-management relationships which are not in the Canadian tradition. An example is that of the Nova Scotia Government over the last few years which did not help that province's labour-management situation. We do not want the creation of a no-man's land in labour-management relations, which is possible if this Bill passes.

One of our amendments deals with that, and when we come back after the lunch break I would like to put before the House the reasons why Canadian investment is more important than foreign investment.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF HOLOCAUST'S ENDING

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, our capital is host this week to a gathering of survivors of the Nazi Holocaust which ended 40 years ago with the Allied victory in Europe. Over 3,000 Canadians are here for the gathering. They include survivors who were liberated as the death camps were discovered, exposing to the world the full horror and inhumanity of the Nazi agenda.

The gathering includes as well the children of survivors, here to commemorate and to try to understand further the experience, the scars of which will never fade from their lives. Many are here today in the galleries of the House. They are welcome.

The scars which they bear are also scars on Canadian and world history. Racism is an evil from which no society is immune. The death camp was the ultimate expression of racisms. As proud as Canada can be of its honourable role in World War II, as we remember those Canadians killed and wounded in that arena we must also remember that it was racism which held Canada back in the 1930s when it might have acted to alleviate the Holocaust by admitting refugees from the Nazi agenda.

As a Canadian and a Jew I call upon the House and Canadians to dedicate themselves to fight all racism. Let us keep the wounds fresh as a warning—never again.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—PRESIDENT'S PROPOSED VISIT TO GERMAN MILITARY CEMETERY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last Friday my colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would, on behalf of the Government of Canada, intervene with the President of the United States and request that he cancel his proposed visit to the cemetery in Germany in which former SS troops are buried. The Secretary of State for External Affairs responded by saying:

> In view of the Government's regard for the sovereignty and sovereign decisions of other countries, we will leave decisions about United States policy to be taken by the administration of the United States.

That answer is totally unacceptable. In the circumstances, to sit by and watch this happen is neglectful. When a Government sees another Government doing something that is totally wrong, it is appropriate to intervene in a friendly way to suggest that it ought not to pursue the policy it is pursuing. In this instance it is an affront to those who died in the concentration camps that our Government refuses to bring to the attention of the Government of the United States that it would be inappropriate for the President of the United States to visit that cemetery.

COMMEMORATION OF HOLOCAUST'S ENDING

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, over 3,000 members of the Canadian Jewish community from coast to coast have gathered to observe the fortieth anniversary of the liberation of the Jews from the Nazi oppression in Europe. I attended the opening plenary session last evening where several Holocaust survivors and their children spoke with emotion and passion about their painful memories.

We cannot let Canadians, nor indeed the world, forget the unspeakable atrocities which were committed. Six million Jews were slaughtered. In memory of those millions of people who were starved, tortured, and killed, we must rededicate ourselves to taking steps to ensure that such wicked atrocities will never occur again.

My Government has appointed the Hon. Justice Jules Deschênes to conduct investigations into the alleged presence of war criminals in Canada. We must also deal more effectively with anti-semitism, other forms of racism, and hate literature. The victims and survivors of the Holocaust must never be put on trial again with the cruel responsibility to prove the existence of the Holocaust.

We can best honour the memories of the millions of Jews who were so mindlessly killed, the survivors, and the children of the survivors, by joining our hands and our hearts in a prayerful commitment to action.

COMMEMORATION OF HOLOCAUST'S ENDING

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for the constituency of Willowdale, which has the largest Jewish population in Canada next to the riding of Mount Royal, and as a person who witnessed first hand the atrocities of World War II in my native Holland, I also wish to inform the House of the Canadian gathering of Jewish Holocaust survivors and their children which is taking place today and tomorrow here in Ottawa, commemorating the fortieth anniversary of that liberation.

The objectives of this gathering are to assemble Holocaust survivors of all faiths and races on the anniversary of their liberation to commemorate the memory of six million Jews, and millions of others, who perished in the Holocaust. The survivors wish to recognize the contribution of the Canadian Armed Forces in the struggle against our common enemy, and to express their appreciation to the people of Canada and their Government for the opportunity to build a new life out of the ashes and despair of that terrible and frightening period of our history.

Sitting in the House are a number of the survivors of this tragic event who have come from all over Canada to attend the commemorative events of this fortieth anniversary of the liberation. We welcome them, and recognize their enormous contributions to Canadian society and culture. We share a common goal with the survivors, that the lesson of the Holocaust is not to be forgotten. Man's inhumanity to man, caused by the perversity of discrimination and racism, is not to be tolerated.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind Members at this point that any reference to the presence of anyone in the galleries of the House is entirely out of order.

COMMEMORATION OF HOLOCAUST'S ENDING

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today is a date of remembrance in commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the liberation of Holocaust survivors. We dedicate this day, not only to the memory of the six million Jews who perished, but also to all of us committed to the principles of justice, freedom, understanding, and peace.

The act of remembering must include awareness, which subsequently must lead to action. Racism and intolerance must be fought now on all levels to help all peoples. In no way may we remain indifferent.

We are reminded today of the violence, both past and present, which is a menace to all societies in which bigotry and hatred are allowed to spread unchecked to the detriment of all. Action must be undertaken in the name of human compassion, justice, and memory, so that no group will be allowed to suffer from racial discrimination.

Today members of the Canadian Jewish community, and others dedicated to peace and tolerance, are gathered in testament to survival and continuity. We will remember and commemorate those who suffered, and celebrate in an expression of solidarity, determination, and hope for all Canadians so that the lesson of the Holocaust will always be remembered. Like second generation survivors, we vow that it shall never happen again.

EXTERNAL AID

UNION'S PAYROLL DEDUCTION PLAN TO HELP FAMINE VICTIMS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my congratulations, and that of the entire New Democratic Party caucus, to Gerard Doquier and the Canadian division of the United Steelworkers of America for their generosity in introducing a permanent payroll deduction plan to raise money for famine relief in the Third World.

S.O. 21

As the procedure authorizing employers to make the deductions must still be negotiated before it can be put into place, I urge the companies involved to facilitate this payroll deduction plan. I also urge the employers to rise to the challenge offered by their employees, by matching their contributions.

I would further suggest that the federal Government follow this initiative by entering into discussions with its employees in order to create a plan which would provide the same possibilities for federal government employees.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

DEFIANCE OF LAW CONDEMNED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, do you know what? Thousands, perhaps millions of Canadians are disillusioned with the Liberals and the NDP. We teach our young people to respect the law and to obey the law and, if they do not agree with the law, to work like blazes to change it, but while it is on the statute books it should be obeyed. Well, here we have Liberals and the NDP standing up in this House and supporting the defiance of the law.

Dr. Morgentaler brags that he is defying the laws of Canada, and that is bad enough, but for a Member of Parliament to support him in his defiance is unbelievable. And the peace campers defy the law and refuse to obey it, and Liberal and NDP Members stand up in this House and justify it, or try to, and one NDP Member is daring the RCMP to arrest him. These Members of Parliament are saying to the people of Canada, including our youth: "If you don't like a law, defy it". The ultimate end of that kind of logic is chaos and civil disobedience.

I have no difficulty with people who disagree with a law and work to change it. That is their democratic right, but to defy the law and to encourage others to defy it and disobey it, are inexcusable acts. Ah, but you say it is for a good cause! Well, when a man is jailed for stealing bread to feed his hungry children it is a good cause, but it is still theft.

Canadians generally would agree with John Galsworthy when he said: "The law is what it is, a majestic edifice sheltering all of us, each stone of which rests on another".

CANADA POST CORPORATION

IMPROVED DOOR-TO-DOOR DELIVERY IN YORK-SCARBOROUGH

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed Hansard for this session of Parliament and could find not one single statement or question complimentary to Canada Post Corporation.

On March 19, 1985, I raised with the Minister responsible for the Post Office the fact that the Post Office appeared to have abandoned its service standard of establishing door-to-door postal delivery when a new subdivision or apartment was more than 75 per cent occupied, and when the streets were paved.

Subsequently the Minister arranged for the President of Canada Post to meet with Members of Parliament who were experiencing difficulty in obtaining new door-to-door delivery. In addition, I was able to meet with Bob McGarry, President of the Letter Carriers Union of Canada. Together we were able to identify some 3,300 residences in York-Scarborough which should qualify for door-to-door service. I am pleased to report today that just over 60 per cent of these residences will receive door-to-door delivery next week, as a result of the reassignment of letter carriers from southern Scarborough to northern Scarborough.

I would like to thank both Michael Warren and Bob McGarry for their co-operation in agreeing to these route changes.

Sixty per cent is a passing grade in high school, but just barely. I look forward to meeting with Mr. Warren personally over the next couple of weeks to discuss extending door-to-door delivery to the remaining residences which meet the service standard, as well as to discuss reversing the dramatic decline in service in several of the small business corridors in my riding.

COMMEMORATION OF HOLOCAUST'S ENDING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as other colleagues have already stated, yesterday several thousand Canadians, mostly Jews, gathered in Ottawa to remember the six million victims murdered in the Nazi Holocaust. These six million murders took place throughout Europe in a large number of camps, the most horrifying at Buchenwald, Dachau, Auschwitz, Birkenau, and Treblinka. They are a terrifying reminder of how low man can sink in his treatment of fellow human beings. When Dachau was liberated forty years ago, it held over 30,000 victims.

The purpose of the meeting taking place in Ottawa and around the world is to remind younger and older generations of exactly what happened, so that it will never happen again. The world must be eternally vigilant so that similar incidents will never be repeated.

The plaque at the exit to the Dachau Museum quoting the philosopher and poet, George Santayana, reads as follows:

Those who cannot remember the past are doomed to repeat it.

DISASTERS

UNION SERVICE TO COMMEMORATE SUDBURY MINERS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the men and women involved in the mining industry in Canada.

You will recall a seismic event measuring 3.5 on the Richter scale on June 20 of last year which killed four men in the Falconbridge Number Five mine shaft in Sudbury. In their memory, and of others who have met similar fates, the Sudbury Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers' Union, Local 598, will hold a special service on June 20.

Country music singer and composer, Janet Moore, is releasing her new song entitled The Rugged Miner, at a press conference Wednesday morning in this building. I urge members of the Press Gallery to support this noble cause by presenting the Union's concerns to the people of Canada.

It is common knowledge that the mining industry is fraught with danger, due to the very nature of the work. Through the efforts of this Union and of Janet Moore, we are reminded of those persons toiling thousands of feet away from the light of day.

We are also reminded of the wives and children who have lost their dear husbands and fathers to the unsettled, shifting earth that was their workplace.

Tribute must also be paid to the miners who have perished from industrial disease. Their demise is less sudden, but no less tragic.

June 20 will be a day of remembrance for all Canadians. It is also a day of celebration in honour of those persons who toil amid danger for the common good.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN MANUFACTURED VEHICLES—ONTARIO PREMIER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last Thursday in Toronto in the company of the Prime Minister, Premier Frank Miller made what I deem to be a disturbing statement. Mr. Miller said that he was going to call upon the Ontario Legislature to pass a resolution, and I use Mr. Miller's words, "stating our resolve to retain quotas" on foreign automobiles.

Given that the Premier met with the Prime Minister and is presumably privy to the Government's intentions in this particular respect, why would he consider it necessary to seek a resolution from the Legislature of Ontario to impress upon the federal Government the need to continue the auto quotas on Japanese imports?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition I would have to assure him, first, that Premier Miller can speak for himself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is debatable.

Mr. Stevens: As far as the Government of Canada is concerned, our actions to date have been exactly what Premier Miller has requested.

We have indicated to the Japanese, as I have stated in this House, that we feel, until suitable arrangements can be made, they should not increase the number of cars coming into Canada. That means they should stay at approximately an 18 per cent level of the Canadian market. We have had negotiations in Tokyo pressing this point last week, and I will be meeting with those negotiators when they return to Canada later this week.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPANESE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister must know how well his negotiators did in Japan, if they did well at all. Did the Minister get the agreement he has just laid out before the House? Is it true that if there is an agreement, it does not meet that standard, and the reason the agreement is not being made public is to avoid upsetting the voters of Ontario, and the publication of that agreement is going to be delayed until after Thursday? Would the Minister tell us whether or not he has an agreement with the Japanese, and give us the substance of that agreement?

● (1420)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Leader of the Opposition, there is no agreement at this point. We feel that the discussions have been very beneficial on both sides. We have been pressing upon the Japanese the need for more sourcing and more investment in Canada. We believe they understand our position. I only remind the Leader of the Opposition that last year it took until June 12 before a satisfactory agreement could be arrived at, in the sense of something which could be put in place. As far as we are concerned, we hope there will be a satisfactory agreement well before June 12, but I am sorry I cannot say that we have that agreement at this time.

EXISTENCE OF QUOTAS—PREMIER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my final question is directed to the same Minister. He will recall that last year those quotas were maintained. Technically they have expired as of March 31, as the Hon. Minister knows. Is the Premier of Ontario privy to information which the rest of us do not have on how those negotiations are going? Why else would he feel constrained to suggest to the voters of Ontario that he would need a vote of the Ontario Legislature to reinforce that province's position, and to impress upon the federal Government the necessity for the maintenance of those quotas?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Leader of the Opposition, I can only say that Premier Miller made a statement which was completely in step with the position of the federal Government with respect to these quotas. We have been pressing the Canadian case. We have indicated that there will be a monitoring of the arrival of imports. If we see any sizeable increase compared with last year, we will draw that to the attention of the Japanese and take what action we feel is necessary.

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC—REPORTED THREAT OF CLOSURE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. At a recent meeting of the Canadian shareholders of Canadian General Electric it was revealed that the parent company made a threat that it would close down CGE, or sell it off, unless that subsidiary returned a much higher dividend to the parent company. That is a very serious problem, or dilemma. Has the Minister looked into that case? In particular, has he determined whether the threat made by the parent company of CGE contravenes the 1975 guidelines for principles of international business behaviour in Canada? Will he tell us whether he intends to take any action against the parent company for contravening those guidelines?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, as he knows that news came out, I guess, about a week ago. We asked for a report from the company on what led to the news story. My own people advised me as of this morning that they have not received a full report back yet, and we have not had an opportunity, accordingly, to review the circumstances, or certainly to check whether there was any breach of some guideline in earlier years.

GUIDELINES GOVERNING FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. As he has said many times in the House, the Government intends to provide a much broader invitation to foreign investment. Taking that into account, does the Minister not think it is now time for the Government to establish more clearly what are the guidelines for the behaviour and performance of foreign-owned companies and their subsidiaries in Canada? Does he not also think that it would be useful for the Government to bring in amendments to the Investment Canada Act to ensure that parent companies cannot intimidate or threaten their Canadian subsidiaries, such as CGE has done?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the short answer to that question is no.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY CONCERNING INTRODUCTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it concerns the forthcoming Budget. All those Canadians who are currently out of work and are looking for some stimulus to create jobs, are looking forward to the Budget. All those additional thousands of Canadians who want some tax fairness are looking forward to the Budget. Considering that the Minister is leaving later this week for an important international meeting on finance, is he now prepared to tell the House the precise date on which he will be bringing down the Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think those Canadians who will be looking for tax fairness, and those Canadians who will be looking for a degree of encouragement for job creation, will be very pleased with the results of the Budget. I have indicated that the date of the Budget will be some time in the week of May 20. I will be announcing that date precisely in the House in due course.

MINIMUM TAX PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope we do not hear it by way of a rumour from Bonn. Considering that those thousands of ordinary families who had to send in cheques to the federal Government on the weekend are paying more than their share, and have been looking forward to tax reform to ensure that those thousands of rich Canadians who are not paying any taxes will be doing so in the future, I have a specific question for the Minister.

Since the election, and according to figures produced by the Government in the past two weeks, the number of rich not paying their share of taxes actually increased by about a third last year. Will the Minister make a promise to all those ordinary Canadians who are paying too much that he will be bringing in a minimum tax on upper income Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can commiserate with those Canadians who are filling out their tax returns. That is what I was doing myself last night. I should say that the matter which the Hon. Member raised has been dealt with by the Prime Minister and by myself in the House. That matter will be dealt with in the Budget.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I asked that question because it has not been dealt with precisely by the Minister. However, the Prime Minister said on November 22 in the House, and I quote: "We will follow through with regard to a minimum tax". After that the Minister indicated that there may be a study of a minimum tax, that he might be looking at it, but he did not indicate clearly that there would be a minimum tax. Since the Prime Minister promised that in the election campaign, and since he reiterated it on November 22 in the House, will the Minister clarify the matter for sure, and tell overburdened, ordinary taxpayers that the rich finally will face a minimum tax in the forthcoming Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this line of questioning can lead us down a path where the Hon. Member will be asking me questions on all sorts of things which might or might not be in the Budget.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister said it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As I indicated, and as the Prime Minister indicated, that matter will be dealt with in the Budget as the Hon. Member has indicated in his question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXTRADITION OF ALLEGED WAR CRIMINALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises out of the fact that during the recent visit to Canada of Prime Minister Shamir, Israel indicated for the first time that it would welcome the opportunity to extradite Nazi war criminals from Canada for trial in Israel. Is the Government prepared to respond positively to Israel to permit such extraditions to occur?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will be following up on representations which might or might not have been made by the Government of Israel. I think the Hon. Member would agree that there is no particular advantage at this point in time, before any formal response has been made, to speculate on the floor of the House of Commons.

POSSIBLE EXISTENCE OF WAR CRIMINALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I gather from that that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is intending to wait on that matter until the Deschênes Commission reports. I want to ask him for an assurance that the Government will continue, while awaiting the report of the Deschênes Commission, to carry out the work begun by the former Government in dealing with war criminals and, if possible, to expand that work in view of additional legal advice and opinions and the findings of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police during recent periods.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the former Government did not, we have established the Deschênes inquiry. We intend to ensure that that inquiry carries out its obligations and its mandate. Where it is appropriate for the Government of Canada to be acting in advance of receipt of the recommendations of that commission, naturally we will continue to do that.

CANADIAN PORCELAIN LIMITED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister is aware that Canadian Porcelain, which manufactures insulators in Hamilton, was recently forced into receivership, primarily because of the dumping of insulators by Lapp Industries of New York State. Will the Minister look into the bizarre circumstances which now appear to have put Canadian Porcelain into the pocket of Lapp Industries Canadian Industries, whereby the receiver has accepted an offer from Lapp Industries to buy that company over a more significant and more substantial offer made by the former employees of Canadian Porcelain?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, who was good enough to mention this problem orally to me, I can assure him that, if the facts are as represented by the Hon. Member, we will be looking into the situation and seeing if something can be done at least to ease what appears to be an inequity.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF TAKEOVER OFFER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister move to inform Peat Marwick that the sale must not be consummated until such time as a review has been undertaken to determine whether (a), on the one hand, Lapp Industries is not simply moving to purchase its competition in order to put it out of business, and (b), to determine whether it is acting in the best interest of the community and the employees of that business by not accepting their $1.3 million offer over the $1.25 million offer of Lapp Industries?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be pleased to learn that I have already asked my officials to check into this matter to see what stage it is at and what might be done to relieve the situation as he described it to me earlier.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—PLIGHT OF SHAREHOLDERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns the Canadian Commercial Bank. People who bought preferred shares in the bank during the week the bail-out was being negotiated have seen the value of their shares plummet. However, when they bought, there was no indication that the bank was in any difficulty at all. Will the Minister tell the House why there was not full and timely disclosure of the bank's financial situation, as is required under Ontario law for shares trading in Ontario?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that there is a possibility of some legal action being taken on that matter, so I do not think it would be appropriate for me to comment on it. I also remind her that there will be a committee of this House looking into the CCB matter. If she has questions, that is probably the most appropriate place to ask them.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR FULL DISCLOSURE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, if the Montreal, Toronto, or Alberta Stock Exchanges did know what was going on between March 14 and 25, they did not say. There were 8,500 preferred shares traded while the bank's fate was being decided. The Government's silence gives an appearance of acquiescence in the bank's failure to present its financial situation accurately. Will the Minister tell the House whether he sees any responsibility on the part of the Government, through the Inspector General, to ensure in general that there is full and timely disclosure?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the rules of the stock exchanges and of the securities commissions under the jurisdiction of the provinces do require a full and timely disclosure. I am sure that the bank has met those. If that has not been the case, we will be able to find that out during the course of the committee hearings when the officers of the bank are in attendance.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE RECEIVE INVESTIGATION RESULTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. It is on the same matter. Now that the Canadian Commercial Bank collapse has been referred to the House of Commons' finance committee, will the Department of Finance, or any of the agencies of the Government, be submitting the results of any investigation by the four organizations, public and private, which examined the bank between December and March and found no sign that the Canadian Commercial Bank would collapse very quickly?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kennett, the Inspector General of Banks, will be appearing before that committee and will be able to provide all the answers to the specific questions of the Hon. Member.

SALE OF SHARES BY VICE-PRESIDENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped the Minister would be shocked by the fact that three of Canada's leading auditing and investment firms, and the Inspector General of Banks, failed to uncover the problems of the Canadian Commercial Bank at a date so close to its collapse. Can the Minister tell the House whether the Government is investigating the activities of one insider who knew something could be wrong? Specifically, is the Government investigating the sale by CCB vice-president Scott McCreath, who sold 2,000 preferred shares in that company in early February for over $20 a share, while the same shares are now trading at less then $5? What action will be taken following the result of any such investigation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of insider trading is primarily the responsibility of the provincial Governments which have jurisdiction over the stock exchanges and the issue of securities. I will bring that matter to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance. I am sure that she will look into it diligently, and get back to the Hon. Member.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

TRANSFER OF EDMONTON BASE COMMANDER

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The Minister will know that in a change of command, Colonel de Tracey over the past weekend turned over his command at Namao Air Base in Edmonton. Has this active officer been sentenced to a desk job in Ottawa without a fair hearing, or was he deemed guilty by virtue of an incident simply having happened? Has Colonel de Tracey's posting to NDC Kingston been cancelled, which would have a real effect on this gentleman's career, and will the Minister intervene?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered a similar question put by the Hon. Member and by the Hon. Member for Pembina two weeks ago or thereabouts. My answer is still the same as it was on that occasion. Colonel de Tracey has been posted to Ottawa effective the end of this month, I believe. He has not been posted to Kingston. The other two premises with respect to a fair hearing and permanent desk job in Ottawa are ill-founded. The investigation, if not complete, is very close to it. Undoubtedly there will be further postings in Colonel de Tracey's career as it moves ahead, as there is with any other officer, or man or woman in the Forces.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. BUD SHERMAN TO CRTC

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader and President of the Privy Council. I want to come back to the Sherman appointment. Given the refusal of the Minister last Friday to allow for a review of Mr. Sherman's appointment to the CRTC, will the Minister and his Government at least do the honourable thing and suspend the appointment of Mr. Sherman until the committee on reform of this House has come up with the recommendations that we are all awaiting, and then proceed with the review, as promised by the Conservatives in the election?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon. Member on Friday, the parliamentary Task Force on Reform of the House of Commons is mandated to make its final and complete report with respect to the reform of this place by the end of June. I can assure the Hon. Member that it will not be an untoward time before we will receive the recommendations concerning the matter of review of appointments and of the guidelines under which we will be dealing with these particular matters. I cannot comment with respect to the other matter because the appointment has been made. It is a matter in the discretion of the appropriate Minister and the Prime Minister.

MINISTER'S CONSULTATION PRIOR TO MR. SHERMAN'S APPOINTMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Communications. Given Mr. Sherman's remarks concerning institutional and Canadian bilingualism and the response of the Leader of the Government in the House, does the Minister agree with the saying that birds of a feather flock together? Will Mr. Sherman really be a commissioner likely to live up to the aspirations of the Minister? Was he consulted about Mr. Sherman's CRTC appointment?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): As provided under the Act, Mr. Speaker, the recommendation was made by the Minister of Communications and endorsed by the Government. I am convinced that the new commissioner will judiciously discharge his responsibilities in accordance with the legislative provisions.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER CORPORATION—WINDSOR ENGINE PLANT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Since the Minister has helped Hamilton, I must ask him if he will help Windsor now. Chrysler Corporation has just announced plans for a large, new investment in parts production in Korea. It has also announced record profits. Will the Minister arrange a meeting with the head of Chrysler, given the dangers to Canada of this transfer of parts production to Korea, in order to request Chrysler to reopen its Windsor-based engine plant as a small return for the $200 million in loan guarantees that Chrysler received from the Government?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I am sure that he knows that we have ongoing discussions with the various car manufacturers, at times together and at times individually. Naturally, in the case of Chrysler, we will raise the point as to whether or not there has been any unfairness to Canada. I can assure the Hon. Member that most of the manufacturers are making a very significant contribution to Canada as far as investment is concerned, and perhaps some day we will be able to get the Japanese to match some of the investment that has been taking place in Canada by other manufacturers.

PRODUCTION OF PARTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the $200 million that Chrysler received from Canada was crucial to its receiving $1.5 billion from the United States Government. Does the Minister believe that Chrysler should say thank you to Canadians in a concrete way by putting some of its new parts production in Canada rather than putting all of it in Korea?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Hon. Member, surely he would agree that the turnaround as far as Chrysler is concerned has been one of the more encouraging things that has occurred. I would only say that if there is a thank you to be given, I have no objection to expressing general satisfaction in a company that has turned around as sensationally as Chrysler.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF LOW SULPHUR CANADIAN COAL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. U.S. coal imported into Canada has a 5 per cent sulphur content, whereas Canadian coal has a sulphur content of only one-half of 1 per cent. Is the Government working toward increasing the volume of Canadian coal used in Canada, thus decreasing acid rain and providing jobs for Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. He will be pleased to know that a few months ago we drafted a commercial evaluation pilot project for transporting low sulphur content coal to meet the needs of Ontario Hydro.

TOURISM

REQUEST THAT GASOLINE PRICES NOT BE INCREASED

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Tourism). Two weeks ago the Minister told me in the House in reply to a comment that a gasoline price increase drives tourists away that—

[English]

We . . . do not believe that factors like gasoline prices, taxes on alcohol . . . should be looked at separately.

[Translation]

As we recall, Mr. Speaker, the Government did raise the price of gasoline last November 8, as it did the alcohol tax, the airport tax, the national parks entrance fee, the fares on ferryboats, just to mention a few. Taken separately, all those services which bear directly on tourism cost more. Can the Minister assure the tourist industry that at least one of those services, namely gasoline, will be spared and that there will be no gasoline price increase in the May Budget?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I find it ironic, if not passing strange, that any Hon. Member in the Liberal Party would, by implication, lecture anyone of the subject of gasoline prices.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: The Hon. Member will recall that his Party won an election in February, 1980, on a firm commitment to keep gasoline prices down. At that time the price of leaded gasoline was 23.9 cent per litre. Within the term of that Government's mandate, because of federal policies, taxes, and programs, the price of leaded gasoline was allowed to increase to 45 cents per litre.

In response to the Hon. Member's question, let me say that I know the Minister of Finance is very sensitive to the interests of the tourism industry and the interests of consumers. Indeed, a few days ago he met with the senior executive of the Tourism Industry Association of Canada. I think that is the first time such a meeting was held between a Minister of Finance and TIAC. The members of that association went away from that meeting very happy indeed.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): All I am doing, Mr. Speaker, is repeating the representations or criticisms of his colleagues when they were in Opposition. Believe me, they never missed an opportunity to mention the price of gasoline. Will the Minister support the CAA's request to the Minister of Finance that he go as far as reducing gasoline prices in his forthcoming Budget? Does the Minister endorse that request?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I have made many representations to the Minister of Finance on behalf of the organization to which the Hon. Member made reference, and on behalf of other large associations within the tourism industry. I know that the Minister of Finance, having previously been a Minister of Tourism, is sensitive to those interests. Even the Hon. Member will be happy with the Budget when it is brought down.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

SPECIAL INITIATIVES FUND

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications and concerns the awarding of a $100,000 grant to the National Theatre School in Montreal. My question does not concern the merits of the proposal but certain possible irregularities in the way it was awarded, and in particular the possibility of political interference from the Prime Minister's Office.

Would the Minister admit frankly that there are no published criteria for his Special Initiatives Fund so that groups that want to apply do not know if they are eligible, or will he come completely clean and admit that the sole criterion for funding is political connection with the Conservative Party?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I will excuse the Hon. Member for being ignorant of the way grants are awarded at the Department of Communications, especially those awarded under the Special Program of Cultural Initiatives. The public knows about the forms, which are completed by the agencies. There are a great many people busy judging these agencies, and the Department is always happy to contribute to the development of Canada's cultural community.

[English]

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the Minister does not know what his own Department is doing. The former criteria expired on March 31 and now there are no criteria under which the Department is working. My office has tried to get hold of such criteria and was told that they are still being discussed.

I wonder if the Minister would check on the facts as they exist within his own Department. As well, I wonder if he would not admit that the Canada Council does things very differently. It does not receive phone calls from the Prime Minister's Office but uses established criteria and a merit system worked by juries. Would the Minister not concede that the arts community wants merit to be the sole criterion when making these awards, and that a Minister's slush fund has no place in the cultural policy of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first of all, as long as the new criteria have not been released, the old ones will continue to apply. Second, the Special program of cultural initiatives is a different program with objectives that differ from those of the programs administered by the Canada Council, and I believe that both programs achieve their objectives fairly and squarely.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REVIEW OF HELSINKI ACCORDS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canada is host to the Human Rights Experts Meeting which will take place at the beginning of May. The agenda of that meeting is to review the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Accords to which we, as well as many other countries, including the Soviet Union, are co-signators, and to which we are mutually bound. As I understand it, the position of the Canadian delegation has been not to use specific names at these meetings, but rather to raise the issue of human rights as a matter of principle.

I have just returned from Russia. I have been witness and can testify to the fact that the prisoners of conscience, those whose crime is to study and practise their religion, and many refusniks who have suffered as a result of asking for exit permits, are prepared and hope that the Minister will raise their cases and name names. Will the Canadian delegation be prepared to raise specific cases at this experts' meeting?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of other Members of the House I would like to pay tribute to the interest which was shown by the Hon. Member, and other Members from other Parties, on the parliamentary delegation which recently returned from the Soviet Union. I know their commitment to the question of Soviet Jewry, and I think she will understand that when I had the opportunity to raise questions of this kind, I also raised them with vigour and with all the force at my command.

With regard to the very important meeting which will be held in Canada, for the first time in North America, officially beginning in May, there are a variety of ways in which these cases can be raised—generally and specifically, in formal sessions and in corridors. I think the Hon. Membker will agree with me, as will her Leader, that it is in the interests of Canada and in the interests of this process that we make some solid progress at the CSCE meeting of experts. I give her my commitment that we will find ways to raise individual cases with the Soviet Union and with others in a manner that will lead to a successful conference which will contribute positively to the CSCE process.

INTERNATIONAL CULTURAL EXCHANGES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with and respect the energy and the efforts of the Minister.

[Translation]

But there is one thing, Mr. Speaker. How can the Minister propose to sign cultural, scientific and academic agreements and expect the Soviets to respect these, when they have never respected such agreements, and especially not the Helsinki Accords? My main concern is: Is détente going to have a human or an economic face? That is the point.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said repeatedly in the Soviet Union, I think the Soviets must accept that if they want trade or economic relations with a country like Canada, they must have a more effective and more acceptable performance in the area of human rights.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—REASON FOR STRIKE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and it relates to the work stoppage at Air Canada. The Acting Prime Minister will realize that the main reason for the work stoppage is the fact that Air Canada is insisting that 45 per cent of its workforce, as far as passenger agents are concerned, must become part-time. In other words, many full-time positions, which are basically women's jobs, will be eliminated. It is certainly a matter for government policy. What is the Government's policy with respect to the taking away of full-time jobs and making 45 per cent of a workforce part-time?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will be one of the first to agree that it is not helpful to debate the elements of any discussions between management and labour, while those discussions are ongoing. It is my understanding that the discussions have been adjourned. That is an entirely normal course for negotiations of this nature to take, in order to allow assessments to be made on both sides, in preparation for hopefully soon getting back to the table. Any debate of the elements involved at this stage would, I suggest, not be helpful to that process.

POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Government saw fit to change the Board of Air Canada with the idea that there must be people in charge of Air Canada who know what the Government wants and who will act favourably with respect to government policies. Would it not be helpful to the management at Air Canada to know what the Government wants in terms of full-time and part-time work and what the relationship should be, especially since it has resulted in a work stoppage at this time? What is the Government's policy?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that we are dealing with a Crown corporation which has the fundamental responsibility of making that kind of decision. But, in any event, I would again suggest to the Hon. Member that it certainly would not be helpful to the process which is now ongoing, and in which the parties are now engaged, to debate the elements which we all hope will be resolved. In the meantime I am informed that Air Canada flights—as far as it has been reported in the media—have been on time and are still flying. Let us all hope that the parties get back to the table in the very near future to resolve their difficulties.

TRADE

BEEF IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and it concerns the Prime Minister's visits to London and Bonn this week. So far those visits seem to be geared mainly toward publicity and public relations. Can the Acting Prime Minister assure Canadian beef producers that the Prime Minister will urge the four heads of Government in the European Economic Community to respect our meat import law and the quotas which we have provided to EEC countries, and to press those four heads of Government to remove the threat of a countervail duty on Canadian agricultural products during the meetings in Bonn?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member that we are still engaged in discussions with the European Community with respect to beef. Approximately an hour before I came into the House I had a personal telephone conversation with Mr. Wyllie de Clercq, the Commissioner of the EEC, with respect to this problem, and he is having a meeting with his deputies to discuss it this afternoon.

PRIME MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister as he is representing the Prime Minister. We heard the same kind of generalities after the Quebec Summit about trade problems. The President then went back to the United States and imposed a massive countervail duty on Canadian pork products, which is destroying that industry.

Why are the Government and the Prime Minister not prepared to use this meeting to solve practical problems, like the dumping of millions of pounds of subsidized beef into the Canadian market, and the threat of a countervail duty? Why is the Prime Minister, who is attending these meetings, not prepared to take advantage of the occasion to solve these practical problems for our agricultural producers?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is one of the worst offenders in this House for smuggling irrelevancies and mistakes of fact into his questions.

I would like to begin by addressing the matter which he raised in his preamble, that being the question of it being a publicity exercise. That already has been discounted. I might say to him, that just as I am answering this question now Prime Minister Thatcher is attending a reception at Canada House which is being given by the Canadian Government. It is the first time upon which any British Prime Minister has attended such an occasion.

• (1500)

Mr. Nielsen: Second, Prime Minister Thatcher herself has requested additional time in her tête-à-tête tomorrow with the Prime Minister to discuss a whole range of matters of concern to the two Governments.

Mr. Foster: What about the trade problem? Why doesn't he discuss that with her?

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to the trade problem, the Minister to whom the question should have been directed has already answered—

Mr. Foster: He has already struck out.

Mr. Nielsen: —and I am sure that the matter will be given the kind of adequate attention which this Government intends to give to all such problems in its discussions with our European allies.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Brant. One question.

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LIMITED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion responsible for DRIE. It has to do with White Farm Equipment in Brantford. Borg-Warner carried the company for several years, and under very depressed market circumstances White Farm has been able to increase its share of the market with its new axial flow combines. There are 600 jobs on the line, and there are several suppliers who may go bankrupt. Could the Minister assure the House that, if all else fails, the Government will very seriously consider loan guarantees to White Farm to keep it operationg until market conditions improve?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is most pleased that discussions continue with respect to White Farm Equipment. Every effort is being made to save the company and, hopefully, there will be a private sector thrust which will ensure that that company can not only be maintained but can expand.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-237, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce today a Private Member's Bill which will provide political rights to federal Government employees. In the present Ontario campaign—

Mr. Dick: Order.

Mr. Murphy: —as is in the case of every campaign—

Mr. Dick: Order.

Mr. Murphy: —I am meeting people who feel that they are second-class citizens because they cannot fully express their political views. I have met people who live in fear of being discovered as supporters of a particular Party.

Mr. Dick: That's a political statement.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is entitled to make his summary to the House—

Mr. Forrestall: He is making a speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order. He is entitled to use his moment to summarize his Bill in any way he wants, but the Hon. Member must be brief.

Mr. Althouse: He is trying to be.

Mr. Murphy: I am certainly trying to be brief, Mr. Speaker, and if the interruptions would stop, I am sure I could finish much faster.

The point I would like to make in introducing my Bill, Mr. Speaker, is that in the campaign which is going on in Ontario, or in any other campaign, there are people in this country who are not treated as full citizens of this nation, and I hope that all Parties in this House will support the Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 9 (Mr. Axworthy), No. 10 (Mr. Langdon), No. 11 (Mr. Axworthy), No. 14 and 15 (Mr. Langdon), No. 16 (Mr. Axworthy) and Nos. 17 and 18 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4183).

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, just before the luncheon adjournment I was approaching the point at which I wanted to indicate to the House the reasons why it is very important that Canadian investment be protected. It is mostly because of the record of foreign corporations in Canada. First, foreign companies do not spend nearly as much on research and development as do Canadian controlled companies. If any Hon. Member of the House wishes to look at the record of that, he will find that Canadian companies will spend three times as much on research and development as do foreign-based companies.

Second, foreign-controlled firms import much more than Canadian-controlled firms, thereby reducing the spinoff effect and their economic impact upon the country. Foreign companies imported 22 per cent of their sales, which is five times as much as Canadian companies. In the manufacturing sector, foreign companies imported 30 per cent of their sales, which is four times as much as Canadian companies.

Third, foreign companies account for a disproportionate share of the non-merchandise items such as interest, profits and other services which they buy and pay for overseas. In other words, they spent a lot more money in remittances to foreign countries. If Hon. Members want to find the basis for that, Statistics Canada will clearly show it.

Multi-national corporations seek to maximize their global profits and they do so in any way they can. Consequently, they shift their funds so as to declare higher profits in countries where the tax burden is lower. This goes on all the time and it is basically just a method of increasing the profits of the large corporations which are based in several countries at the same time.

Fourth, in a study of the computer industry it has been found that there was a $50 million loss in income for the Canadian Government in taxation through this mechanism. Those foreign companies paid approximately 30 per cent less than they should have paid because they transferred the costs to Canada and the profits to other countries.

Fifth, foreign-controlled companies export much less in relation to their sales than do their Canadian competitors. These corporations do not compete with their parent companies. They will not export into countries where the parent company is already exporting. Therefore, we lose that kind of competition and the amount of production which these corporations might be able to give. Ninety per cent of the exports of the Canadian subsidiaries went to the U.S. parent companies in 1978, and 57 per cent of those corporations had their subsidiaries restricted in their exports out of Canada.

Sixth, the high foreign control of Canadian industry contributes to poor productivity performance. Again, the effect of foreign control of the industry reduces competition.

I am attempting to give you, Mr. Speaker, and this House, a large number of reasons why this Government should increase the amount of support it gives to Canadian companies and withhold its support to foreign corporations.

● (1510)

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the group of motions we have before us are all concerned with putting some measurable, quantifiable element into a Bill which, as it stands before us, is really very vague. The Government has apparently decided that all foreign investment will be so beneficial to Canada that it is not necessary to apply any criteria. While I have said before in the course of debate on this Bill that one could clearly make a case for updating FIRA, which is 10 or 11 years old, the Government has really gone too far in throwing out any requirements for the emphasis to be placed on jobs and research and development within Canada. This cluster of amendments, if accepted, would put some of those requirements back into the legislation.

Let us just go back into the recent history of Canada which led up to the establishment of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. In the early 1960s Canadians realized that the surge of post-war capital entering Canada, mainly from the U.S., was resulting in a great proportion of Canadian industry, particularly resource extraction and manufacturing, ending up under the control of foreign owners. There was a small nationalist group which became very concerned about this and very vocal. Most people were not swept along with that feeling; they did not really see that there was a danger, as the present Government does not see a danger. But then look what happened as time went on. We began to see Canadian companies created by foreign owners for the specific purpose of cultivating and serving the Canadian domestic market. That was a legitimate goal of the companies concerned, but from the point of view of Canadians these companies were not interested in developing export markets. They were particularly not interested in developing Canadian resources or moving into secondary processing, so we found our exports limited to primary products and transactions between foreign owner or parent, parent company and subsidiary, and therefore our balance of payments suffered.

Another very serious result of the branch plant economy was that branch plants imported their management from abroad, usually from the U.S., and when it came time for these managers to have a further promotion they went back to the U.S. or to another country, and therefore Canada was not developing a domestic pool of top management talent. We continue to suffer from that handicap. Then, at the time of the Cuban crisis, the U.S. administration interpreted the Trading With The Enemy Act as applying to Canadian subsidiaries of American companies, even though Canada did not identify Cuba as an enemy. This is only one of many examples of extraterritorial application of domestic U.S. policy which we have seen.

Research and development have tended to become concentrated in the home country. This is a logical thing for the parent company to do as it thinks of its interests, but it certainly does not serve Canadian interests. We have also found in the past that even when a Canadian subsidiary developed a new product or new adaptation, the proprietary rights were repatriated to the head office in another country. When the oil crisis struck in 1974, the Canadian Government found that the major oil companies had been giving it exaggerated figures and the reserves they had claimed simply did not exist. There were a dozen other signs that Canada's open door investment policy had gone too far, hence the establishment of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which again gave us some control of our economy and has resulted in some significant shifts.

I am all for updating legislation, for the world has changed since FIRA was established. An updating to ensure that the legislation is still current and applicable would have been in order, but the Government has just thrown the door wide open and would put us back to the 1960s situation and 1960s problems.

May I mention again a situation that I have mentioned before in this House, and that is that we saw situations in Ontario where companies established before FIRA, before there was any requirement that they do research and development or anything other than simple assembly, have in recent years, as the economic climate has become a little more difficult, simply closed their doors and moved to the southern states of the U.S. where there are no minimum wages, energy costs are lower, and so on. In some cases, they have simply closed their doors, moved out lock, stock and barrel on a weekend, leaving Canadian employees high and dry with no particularly marketable skills, no vacation pay and no financial settlement. Worse than that for some of these employees whom I have talked with, painful though the economic impact was, what hurt even more for someone who had served the company loyally for 25 years was to go in on Monday morning and find the doors closed and feel that no one cared enough for him to say, "Thank you for 25 years of loyal work; I am sorry, we are in difficulties".

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in one of his speeches, described as melodrama the comments being made on this side of the House about the risks of unemployment when FIRA is abolished. It is not melodrama. It is a real human situation. I have seen in my own constituency office a proud man in tears because the job he thought was his forever was suddenly gone in one of the circumstances that I have described. This was a man who was educating his children, buying his house and proud of the fact that his wife had not needed to work and could stay home to give their children a good start. Suddenly, 25 years of work was just gone without any recognition. This is not melodrama, this is fact and it has happened to many people in Ontario.

I appeal to the Government again, even if it does not wish to accept the particular amendments in the form in which they have been put here today, to stop and reconsider them before it opens the door wide to these problems which we have experienced before and which can and should be avoided. We can welcome foreign investment, but there is a big difference between foreign investment and foreign ownership. It is not being anti-American to say that an American-owned company will not have the same interest in its Canadian workers and in contributing to the Canadian economy as a Canadian company will. Let us welcome foreign investment, but like every sensible industrialized nation in the world, let us keep some controls over and expectations for performance so that we do not let our ownership and our control of our economy go by default.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate the amendments which are before us. I would like to support the general intent of the amendments. Over the years that I have been in the House of Commons I have found that a lot of the real decision-making has been placed on the head of the Ministry. In other words, it is up to the Minister and his Department to make many decisions which, in the past, would have been made by the House of Commons itself. Since that is the general direction which the nation is taking, I think it is important that when we pass legislation we give instructions as to what the Minister and his Department should be doing in terms of their responsibilities to ensure that the legislation is effective.

That is the line which is being pursued in the amendments before us today. We are saying that there are certain duties and responsibilities that the Minister and his Department would have if this legislation were to pass. That is something that we have not done enough of in the past. Members of all three political Parties in the House of Commons have bemoaned the fact that regulations introduced by the Minister's Department after the legislation has passed are quite often more important than the legislation itself.

When the House of Commons passes a piece of legislation, we have some general idea of what the Government wants to do, but do not know specifically what the Government will do until we see the regulations. When the Conservatives were in opposition, I heard members of that Party bemoan that fact. Now that the Liberals are in opposition, they are recognizing the fact that regulations should be subject to more review by the House of Commons before they come into effect. Of course, we have taken that position for many years now.

I would like to point out a number of areas in which this legislation needs to be strengthened. A number of the amendments which have been grouped for debate basically put more control on the Minister and his Department. We insist that in its decision-making the Department reflect certain ideas, which we have included in the amendments. We say that there must be greater public co-ordination and planning of the investment process. We say that there must be a broader based input into the decision-making process in terms of advisory groups to various industrial sectors comprised of businesses, labour communities, academics, et cetera. We have also said that there must be an emphasis on achieving greater Canadianization of the economy, and that there must be a special responsibility to assist foreign-controlled businesses and to advise those businesses with regard to the Canadian labour-management traditions.

I would like to refer particularly to the area of community advice. One of the great problems Members of the House and communities have found is that when there is a foreign takeover of a local firm which is very important to the economy of the area, there is no mechanism for the mayor, council, workers involved, or Members of the House of Commons to have any real input into the decision-making process. There is an application for foreign investment and FIRA makes a decision based on certain criteria which are in front of it. There is no guarantee that the community itself will have any input.

Many examples of this problem have been pointed out in Question Period. A number of times the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) has spoken in the House about the fact that two or three years after a foreign takeover in his area a plant has closed down and there has been no control over what happens. Earlier today the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) spoke about the same type of situation. He asked questions of the Minister responsible for this piece of legislation in the House of Commons. In that case an American firm is dumping its products in Canada at a cheaper price. As a result of the dumping exercise it is able to buy a Canadian company which is going into bankruptcy. I believe those examples point out the need for the amendments which are before us today.

It is interesting to consider what happened before the committee which studied this legislation. Witnesses appeared who were not New Democrats and where not aligned with the Canadian Labour Congress. They represent other sectors of our nation such as the Science Council of Canada, which is headed by the former Leader of the Liberal Party in Ontario, Dr. Stuart Smith. Dr. Smith spoke to some of the problems of research and development recognized by the Council of this legislation were passed without amendment. The President of NOVA Corporation, Bob Blair, spoke about the history of Canadian-owned corporations versus the history of American and other foreign-owned corporations. That type of testimony points out that there are a number of sectors of the Canadian community which are concerned about how this legislation is going to be put into place.

In a previous speech which I made in the House of Commons I pointed out that Canadian-owned firms basically do twice as much research and development as do American-owned firms. There are studies of the Science Council of Canada which prove that. The study by the Science Council of Canada pointed out that in two different situations it was evident that Canadian firms were more concerned about doing research and development in Canada.

That is important because our young people want to do more than just work in the factories. Some of them want to be involved in research and development. If those opportunities do not exist in Canada, many of our young people will have to look for job opportunities elsewhere. It is also important to know that if we do not do our own research and development in Canada, we will not benefit from the technological advances which take place. In other words, if Canadians do not have a chance to do the R and D and develop the new processes and machinery, short-term as well as long-term jobs will be lost in Canada. It is important to make some requirements of the Minister when we pass this legislation.

As indicated in the presentation of Mr. Blair, the President of NOVA Corporation, he believes that there is a higher level of corporate citizenship from Canadian controlled businesses than there is from foreign-controlled firms. We will have a chance to get into specifics as the various amendments come to the floor of the House of Commons today and over the next two or three weeks.

However, the general theme of what Mr. Blair said to us is very important. Mr. Blair is certainly not known for being a socialist or a supporter of this political Party. He points out that we can expect people who were brought up and educated in this country and whose firms developed within our nation, to have a higher sense of responsibility to the community and nation in which they exist. I think that is logical. Unfortunately, the opposite is true as well. An American firm which originated in Atlanta, or some other community in the south, is going to have a certain loyalty to its own community. It will have a certain loyalty to its own nation. This means, as in the examples I mentioned earlier, that when they acquire property and new technical ideas from buying a Canadian firm, they will take the benefit to their own country. It also means when it comes time, and it usually does come time in some of these firms where they have to have lay-offs or they have to shut a plant, that they are not as likely to shut a plant in their own nation as they are to shut a plant in Hamilton, Winnipeg, Ottawa, or in British Columbia. That is a problem we face. We are not saying that these foreign-owned firms are evil. That is hardly the case. They have by their very nature other interests and other loyalties.

It is important to us when we pass this legislation that we make sure the Minister and his Department see to it that these firms live up to some Canadian guidelines. This House of Commons is the logical place where those guidelines should be made.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, this is the third time I have had the opportunity to speak on this Bill. As I have listened to the debate, there really is nothing I have heard that has made me change my mind that this Bill should be dealt with as an urgent matter. It really is, as I said earlier, a public relations gesture. I do not think there is any meat in the Bill that will create jobs immediately in Canada and certainly not in Atlantic Canada. It is like the old story of the preacher's marginal notes which say "argument weak, pound the pulpit". What the Government is doing here is more pulpit pounding in the absence of firm, cogent, meaningful arguments.

There has been a lot of that recently, particularly aimed at the United States. a debate is starting in Canada now with regard to how close the economic liaison should be. Mr. Hurtig, the Alberta publisher and Canadian nationalist, has said that the recent oil agreement signed between the western provinces and Ottawa is the biggest sell-out to foreign oil companies in history. While he is not specific, he said the new agreement amounts to a give-away of billions of dollars to non-Canadian companies and is also jeopardizing easily accessible Canadian reserves of light oil.

There will be a debate, no doubt, on how close those economic ties should be to the U.S. I look forward to that debate. Specifically, let us talk about foreign investment in Canada with regard to this Bill. I want to focus the attention of the House particularly on our Motion No. 9, which reads:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 29 to 31 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"(e) assist in the development of industrial and economic policies that effect investment in Canada and consult with labour, business and community representatives about the effects of proposals for acquisition and new business establishments by non-Canadians on regional employment and economic growth,"

It is very important we do that. This motion tries to put down more explicitly that there is a need for a consultation process, that there is a need to recognize that Canada is not one country the same all across the continent and we are different in different parts. We have different needs. That difference should be recognized within the context of that legislation.

The province from which I come happens to have, I believe, a greater need for economic development than that, for example, of the province from which the Minister comes. I am not saying that just because the Minister has a great deal of power in this Bill to decide which come in and which stay out without consulting Parliament or the Cabinet. The Minister is given a great deal of powers. I am not saying that just because he comes from Ontario he would decide in favour of a company that wanted to establish in Ontario if at the same time it happened to hurt a company set up in Newfoundland. He might not do that; let us give him the benefit of the doubt. The problem is this. The problem is that an American firm might want to invest in Ontario, which is already heavily industrialized, and at the expense of some manufacturing company in Newfoundland which is under-industrialized. Our need is to have that secondary processing. That is what we need in Newfoundland. We are a resource-based province. Already many of our national resources are being shipped out in their raw state. What we need to create jobs in our province is secondary manufacturing. That is why we need a policy. We need it to say that when applications come from foreign firms they will be screened on the basis of the impact they will have on the various regions of this country.

We need that built in to any proposal. We used to have that in the PIP grants which the previous Government established and which were in effect until very recently. There were clauses in those grants that stated that before you get money for drilling, you must ensure Canadian content, Canadian jobs, a certain degree or precentage of Canadian products used. All of those things were built into the policy. When companies drilled off the east coast of Newfoundland, off the Hibernia area, those things came into play. Before companies got the funds, they had to agree to Canadian content. The PIP grants have gone. We no longer have them. The policy makes industry wide open to competition from anybody. We used to have a focus on an area that needed protection and we do not have it any more. It is the kind of thing we should have in this legislation and which is lacking.

I want to see something in the legislation that says: "Before the Minister says yes, you can come in from the States, you can come in from Britain or wherever and take over a company or invest in Canada, there must be a consideration of regional needs". There must be consideration of how this will impact on a province that has a weak manufacturing sectors. Is it going to hurt? If so, it should not be allowed. That is why we are asking for an amendment that provides that before approval is given there must be consultation with labour, business and community representatives about the effects of proposals for acquisition and new business establishment by non-Canadians on regional development, regional employment and economic growth. That is what we want, Mr. Speaker.

The record of foreign investors leaves a great deal of question in my mind. The company with which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was associated is a large American investor. What is the track record of that investor in Labrador City? Fifty per cent of the workforce is now gone from that particular community because it was an American company. I believe if a Canadian company had been there instead of an American company, we would have seen quite a different policy following. The same thing applied in the City of Corner Brook. We saw a British firm with an old mill in which it had not bothered to reinvest or to modernize. The mill was at the end of the production chain. It was the weakest link. It was let go and was wiped out. As a result, the Government had to take steps to see that the company was taken over. The track record of foreign companies in my own area in certain circumstances leaves a lot to be desired. I do not think we should simply open the doors wide without building in some safeguards.

The model to which I would like to see the Government pay attention is the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program. ILAP operated under the Liberal Government. The present Government intends to wipe it out. We made great use of ILAP in the circumstances to which I have referred. When the Iron Ore Company of Canada laid off its workers, it did not make a financial settlement with them. Instead, it said to them that their contract indicated that if they were laid off temporarily, the company had a three-year recall right, and that if they were laid off under those provisions of the contract, it did not have to pay them severance pay or relocation allowances at any time during those three years, knowing that the iron ore industry would not revitalize that quickly.

I would like to see some consideration being given to taking that kind of approach with foreign companies when foreign companies take decisions which impact adversely upon Canadian companies. This is why I support Motion No. 9 particularly. Unless we do that, it will have a serious effect in my own area.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments about the Bill, in particular about the amendments which we have put forward in the second group. I want to talk about two specific amendments because I think they are very important and that the Bill is weak, if it is intended to do what it says it is intended to do, namely, to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians as well as to encourage investment in Canada by non-Canadians.

There has been a great deal said during the course of this debate and second reading debate about the concerns of our Party that the Bill will simply perpetuate foreign control of our economy. It certainly seems to be an open invitation to bring foreign investment into the country, where previously it was reviewed and there was an attempt to ensure a demonstrable benefit to Canadians.

Part of the purpose of the Bill is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians. In Clause 5, to which we propose amendments, there are a number of duties given to the Minister. It seems to me that it would be very useful to elaborate upon them, if the Government is genuine in its concern for trying to develop investment in Canada by Canadians. We are talking about whether or not the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) will take responsibility for industrial strategy within this country, something the previous Government talked a great deal about but did not implement. It seems that the same is happening under this new Government as well.

I am very much afraid that Clause 4, dealing with the duties of Ministers, and the carrying out of that in Clause 5 about which we are talking right now, is mere window dressing. In fact, they are put in there to try to placate critics of the Bill who say all the Government really wanted to do was to take away the protections of the Foreign Investment Review Act and not put anything in their place.

Our amendment refers to the need and the obligation of the Minister to develop medium-term and long-term public and private industrial sector investment guidelines which would be consistent with an industrial strategy that emphasizes full employment, growth, diversification, autonomy and export competitiveness of the Canadian economy. As a socialist, as a Canadian social democrat, I can say that I think those are good objectives for an industrial strategy. If we were to achieve those more effectively, we would have equity in terms of employment, and the country would look a lot better economically and socially than it does right now. If we set those as objectives of an industrial strategy, we have to worry about how we will get there. I am afraid that the present Minister and his Government are ideologically and temperamentally opposed to actually deciding what an industrial strategy should be and then working out how we will get there.

We recognize that our amendment cannot compel the Minister to do that, but at least it puts more into the legislation than is in it right now in terms of what the Minister's obligations are meant to be. We can then try to hold him accountable through the various means which we have in Parliament and which the people of Canada have at election and other times.

Mr. Thacker: Social democrats respect the law?

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member must have been a member of that Conservative group which set up that "freedom from metric" gas station that consistently broke the law of Canada over two and a half years. I think he should talk to his own Members for a while.

Mr. Gurbin: That is not what the judge said.

Mr. Cassidy: The judge has not said anything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. There is only a 10-minute period for speeches. We should not waste it on heckling.

Mr. Cassidy: I point out to Hon. Members that not only has there been no court ruling; in fact, there is no law to be broken right now because the Public Works Nuisance Act regulations, which were enacted by Cabinet a few days ago, have not been gazetted. They do not have the force of law. The RCMP is being forced to make illegal arrests out there at the direction of the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle). I suggest to members of the government Party that they tell the Minister of Public Works to stop breaking the law and making the RCMP enforce a law which does not exist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Everyone in the House knows very well the concern of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on that issue. We are presently debating another piece of legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but I think you might have brought our colleagues on the government side to order when they chose to introduce those irrelevant remarks.

Another amendment in this group calls upon the Minister to convene industrial sector advisory groups, bringing together business and labour, provincial and local authorities, which would seek to recommend on investment policies and priorities. I cannot over-stress the importance of that approach if we as Canadians are in fact to be successful in implementing an industrial strategy and holding up our own in terms of the world competition with which we are faced right now.

During the course of his comments on the Bill—and I think it was accurate—the Minister said that we have to recognize that there is a changing competitive environment out there. The question which has not been adequately debated in the Chamber, in the Commons Finance Committee or any place else, is what we as Canadians will do about it and how we will respond. Too often, whether it is Ontario or federal Conservatives or whether it is business spokespeople, I hear people saying that the thing to do is to beat down workers, force them to accept minimum wage and impose the standards of Taiwan on Canadian workers rather than use our human resources, brain power and skills to build upon our natural resource base, to maintain a decent standard of living and to maintain the kind of economy we have known over the course of years.

Everyone knows that the key to industries in the future will be the best use of human resources. It will not be working more, but working smarter. If we want to work smarter, this means learning how the different elements in a society or in a business enterprise, or for that matter between Government and business, can in effect work together. If we are to have effective industrial strategies, it will require having business, labour, local communities, regions and voluntary groups working together to devise the strategies which they will then buy into and be prepared to co-operate in implementing.

That is extremely important and is largely ignored in the present law which says that the Minister, if he feels like it, may consult and organize conferences of representatives of industry and labour or provincial and local authorities in exercising his powers and in performing his duties under the Act. Any Minister can have conferences. That is done all the time. We have seen a few economic conferences under the new Government. They do not need legislative authority to do that. However, I would suggest that this be a requirement. The Government of Canada, through this particular Minister, should not only be implementing an industrial strategy, coming full blown from the brow of the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion. It should be developed at the base, at the grass roots, community by community, industry by industry. Working people should be involved as well as managers. That is the way to begin to turn around the economy of this province and of this country.

Just the other day I spoke to a conference on industrial strategy at York University. The title of the conference was Competitiveness Through Technology. It was extremely interesting to hear the approaches of experts from Britain, the United States and Canada. They considered me one. I was glad to be there. Some of them were discouraged in terms of their efforts to implement an industrial strategy. However, some of them reflected the sense of optimism which we in our task force on jobs found across the country. They said again and again that it was not one vast strategy, that it was a lot of specific measures taken in order to become more competitive, in order to adopt technology more rapidly and see it diffused more quickly within a particular industry, in order to co-operate in terms of marketing in difficult areas of the world, and in order that some of our industries in Canada which compete against each other on the Canadian stage can co-operate with each other in competing against very large industrial players from Japan, the United States and the European Common Market when they go out on the international stage. All of these things require co-operation. You will not get co-operation unless you get the Parties to sit down together. You must get them working together to determine the needs, the kinds of investments that have to be done. They must start to lean on those participants in the industry that are not doing the job in order to encourage investment by Canadians in Canada. You must get a means by which, for example, you can ensure that multinational companies that have not become Canadianized at least provide world product mandates for companies which have been operating in this country for a substantial period of time.

These are the kinds of things that we see as the central element in an industrial strategy for Canada. This is what we would see flowing from the kind of amendments which we have put forward to the Investment Canada Bill. I am perhaps a bit naive in saying that what we have done is try to take the investment in Canada portion of the Bill and make it real rather than simply turning this Bill into a watered-down version of the Foreign Investment Review Act, designed by the Progressive Conservatives to pander to those elements in business which want to see all control over foreign investments simply removed from this country.

I know that it is a tall order in one Bill to try and devise how it is you can work. However, from my reflection, I have come to feel with increasing intensity that we have to find some new ways of doing things in this country. We have to find new ways by which we can learn about export competitiveness, foreign markets and how we can expand and grow and build our industry. We are not going to do that by simply saying a few pious words to the Minister. Specific measures are needed to ensure that the Minister does carry out an industrial strategy for Canada. That is the purpose of this group of amendments coming from the New Democratic Party.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the second group of amendments proposed by my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), we cannot speak to all those amendments, there are too many. So perhaps I will restrict my comments to the two main motions, namely Motions Nos. 4 and 6.

[English]

This constructive amendment was, of course, rejected by the Tories in committee. The Liberals propose that the separation of the Minister and the public servants who serve Investment Canada be clearly indicated in the Bill. Investment Canada is not intended as a personal staff for the Minister. That is why Motion No. 4 specifically excludes the word "management" from the Bill and replaces it with "provision of policy direction to the agency".

That is a situation which, in my view, is as clear and concise as anything political I have heard. I have been in politics a long time. One of the greatest difficulties with understanding things political is to be able to differentiate between what is political and what is rules and regulations, the why of the issues and the how to best put into action these objectives. Why should we have a review process? Why should we have a Minister who is interested in seeing that investments in Canada are for the benefit of all Canadians? That is something which any of us in this House could make a speech on for one or possibly two hours.

How best do we do that? How to better implement these objectives that are reached by all of us, as determined by law, is the work of public servants. That is known as the how issues. They are the professionals who best know how to advise the Minister and who best know how to go about doing these things, and should remain in that position.

In this Bill we see that the Minister is going to be charged with management and direction of the agency. We say that the Minister should be charged with providing policy direction, but should not be charged with management. That is the prerogative of the public servants and rightly so.

We have a different view from the Government on this question. I think Canadians understand that we justifiably hold that view since we believe there should be a division between the Minister's staff and his policies as he sees them and as his Party enunciates them and how public servants would carry out the directives. Otherwise the Minister leaves himself open to accusations of being friendly to the big contributors, to his personal friends and so on, and very narrow in his outlook, some would say Toronto-based and not nationally-based.

Mr. Boudria: To be Tory-like.

Mr. Gauthier: To be Tory-like, but not be Canadian-like. What direction is indicated by the Minister's actions to date? What kinds of proposals would he consider rejecting, for example, as not being of benefit under this new legislation?

As I said, this constructive amendment leads me in the short time that I have to try and address the second point, which is Motion No. 6. In my view, and in the view of this Party, the Minister should be responsible to assist Canadians to invest in Canada. To do that, the Minister has to be aware and he has to examine the potential of Canadian interests in investment.

I want to relate something which happened in my riding which I also related at second reading. It is rather important. It deals with something that I am sure everyone will understand. The University of Ottawa is the biggest employer in my riding. There are 3,000 people who work there and there are some 18,000 students. It has a bookstore. The bookstore was having certain difficulties, mainly because of a lack of proper expertise and management. Capital outflows were not sufficient. The university was thinking of getting some outside help to administer this important contribution to university life. A company called Brennan College said that it had the expertise. It operates in the United States. It said that it thought it could take the bookstore over and make it a paying proposition.

The University of Ottawa was forced to lease its operations to a foreign company. FIRA was in on this, of course, since a foreign company was going to take over a Canadian organization. The review done by the federal Government agency revealed that it was not to the benefit of Canadians, that Canadians did not stand to gain significant benefit if Brennan College were to take full control over the bookstore. Negotiations were held, and I imagine the Minister took interest in the matter even though the whole deal was secret. Some cooperative companies were invited to consider the possibility of coming to Ottawa and keeping the bookstore in operation. None could meet the requirements.

Finally, after further negotiations, Brennan College reached an agreement with the University: Brennan College would provide the required expertise, the University would retain a 51 per cent ownership, Brennan College would have the remaining 49 per cent. A new application featuring the conditions I have just mentioned was submitted to and approved by FIRA. Everything is going just fine, and that is what we mean by a role of examiner, a role of reviewer, a role of promoter, a role of defender of Canadian interests.

The University still holds a major interest—49 per cent in Brennan College Service Inc.—the bookstore is operating normally, the students are satisfied, everybody is happy, and we have kept here a bookstore which is being run on a profitable basis. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, without FIRA, the Ottawa University bookstore would now be wholly owned by U.S. interests, and I think it is pretty obvious what would have happened to other universities which like Ottawa were having problems managing their university bookstores. Demand varies constantly, and books do not always sell easily. With an organization like Brennan—with its particular expertise—that is in a position to offer students a system of sales and exchanges, it works a lot better. The fact is that we have here an example of American expertise that was imported and that provides a service, mainly to Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the cultural environment of our young Canadians has been preserved. I do not think Brennan College, the U.S. company, has any expertise in biculturalism or bilingualism, but the university does, and the combination of a Canadian and a U.S. component has strengthened a business in my riding. It has helped it to maintain an essential service, and to maintain the cultural level of that service.

There are many more examples, Mr. Speaker, but I see you are making signs that my time has expired. That is unfortunate, but I will get back to this later on.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—United States sulphur emissions—Chemical pollution of Niagara River; the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin)—Petro-Canada—Sale of Come by Chance oil refinery. (b) Request that sale be halted; the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett)—Railways—Atlantic Limited—Request for restoration of service.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 9 (Mr. Axworthy), No. 10 (Mr. Langdon), No. 11 (Mr. Axworthy), Nos. 14 and 15 (Mr. Langdon), No. 16 (Mr. Axworthy) and Nos. 17 and 18 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4183).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to place a few remarks on the record regarding this particular group of amendments which pertain to Clause 5 relating to the duties and powers of the Minister. At the outset, I would like to say that we in our Party recognize the importance of investment and its necessity to our economy but we believe that investment must be made in accordance with certain guidelines. This motion requires the Minister to develop those guidelines both for the medium and the long term.

It was interesting last December when the Minister first introduced this Bill. At that time, an editorial appeared in The Toronto Star, I believe, that spoke of "Stevens' short-sighted gamble". This Bill takes a very short view, a view that hopes that by opening the door to investment, we will create all kinds of good things for the Canadian people. However, the Bill does not take a medium point of view, much less a long-term point of view.

I believe all of us would agree that today the Canadian economy is badly distorted. If I could use an example from my home Province of British Columbia, I would point out how over the past number of years the entire economy of British Columbia has become more and more oriented toward the export of natural resources and in many cases the export of natural resources in an unfinished form. We do not smelt our own copper. We have seen an increase in the export of round logs. In many cases we export pulp rather than finished paper. We are now into a situation in which there is a depletion of these resources. Many of our mines have been worked out and our forests are in a serious state of crisis.

The Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia have not yet been able to come to an over-all, comprehensive ERDA agreement that would see funding to help our forests. We are having difficulty with our fisheries and the Fisheries Committee is dealing with some of those problems right now. Different user groups are involved in a great battle over who will get what share of this resource.

At the same time as there is difficulty with the basic resources, we are having more and more difficulty with our markets. We are even having difficulty selling the products upon which we have traditionally relied even though those resources are getting more and more scarce.

Although the Government promised that there would be jobs, there are 22,000 fewer people working in British Columbia today than there were last September when the present Government came to power. We have not seen any instant creation of jobs. I do not believe that this Bill will see the creation of jobs unless it is amended very substantially to include the kind of guidelines we wish to see.

The distortions we see in the British Columbia economy today and indeed in the economy of Canada as a whole are distortions that are the result of investment decisions that were made by large corporations that were acting in their own interests. They were acting in the interests of maximizing their power and profits. I do not think there would be any point in our trying to fault large corporations for acting in their own interests. After all, that is what we expect of them. We should not try to fault large corporations for that any more than we should try to fault tigers for being carnivorous. However, we do not allow tigers to roam at will. Just because we do not wish to fault a tiger for acting like a carnivore, there is no reason for opening up the village and allowing it to devour what it will.

The so-called free market to which this Bill looks to develop the Canadian economy is really nothing more than a jungle filled with predators. Unless there are some guidelines to protect our interests, our interests will not be protected.

We believe that investment decisions should be made not only in accordance with the guidelines developed by large corporations for their benefit but also in accordance with guidelines developed for the benefit of the Canadian people. That is the responsibility of the Government and the Minister. That is why we want to see Motion No. 10 incorporated into the Bill.

We in our Party believe that investment should not be haphazard but should fit in with an industrial strategy that will try to guarantee full employment, ensure growth and diversification and ensure Canadian autonomy and export competitiveness. I am sure all Members will agree that these are desirable goals and certainly Hon. Members on the opposite side see these as being desirable goals. However, here is where we find the basic difference between New Democrats and Tories. The Tories believe that somehow these goals will be achieved if only we open the doors to foreign capital. If only we make it possible for foreign investment to enter Canada, they feel that these goals will all fall into place naturally.

The "Gospel According to Sinc" says: "Seek ye first foreign investment and all these things shall be added unto you". We say: "It ain't necessarily so; in fact, it ain't so at all". Studies have indicated very clearly that this is not the way things work.

An Hon. Member: Do you deny God?

• (1610)

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, a Conservative Member asked me if I am denying God. Well, if the Conservatives want to make a god out of the almighty foreign investment dollar, as some of them do, then yes, I am quite prepared to deny that deity.

New Democrats believe that we must plan in order to meet these goals. There is a role for private capital, but that role must be in accordance with public criteria. The federal Government must develop a planning framework. Within that framework there must be a provision for local input. If I could refer again to my constituency, I do not believe that the loggers and the millworkers in the Lake Cowichan area would have seen that area so completely and quickly devastated, and the timber resources sold off so rapidly, if they had done the planning. If they had done the planning there would still be strong milling communities in that area, instead of communities which depend more and more upon tourism and retirees for the basic economy.

I would like to make a few comments on Motion No. 14, which requires that non-Canadian ownership and control, when it comes into Canada, must respect the rights of workers, and particularly the right of workers to collective bargaining. We believe that is essential. As one of my colleagues stated, we do not want to see the labour standards of Taiwan, Singapore or South Korea being imported into Canada and forced upon Canadians as part of the Investment Canada package. Again, it should be a responsibility of the Minister to insist that the foreign companies which come into Canada know what are the rights of the workers of this country.

Motion No. 15 states that one of the duties and powers of the Minister should be to encourage Canadian control in areas relating to our cultural heritage and national identity. We would like to see that as one of the Minister's recognized duties.

Motion No. 17 adds the words "or territory" to Clause 5 of the Bill. It requires that the Minister will not only enter into agreements with the provinces, but also that he must include the territories. I know it is commonly understood that the word "provinces" includes the territories, but we think it should be spelled out in order that the territories will not be ignored, as they are so often.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-15, and the amendments which have been proposed by my colleagues with respect to some of the worries which we have vis-à-vis the legislation as it presently stands.

My colleagues have spoken at some length on these amendments because we are worried about what this Government is trying to do. It wants to change the foreign investment legislation to encourage the investment of foreign capital in Canada.

Everyone is in favour of having more investment and more capital to create jobs, but that is not the issue. I know it is hard for Tories to understand this, but we, as Liberals, want to introduce amendments which will ensure that there will be good economic benefit for Canada. Furthermore, we want to ensure that the decisions which are taken are not taken in a political way by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

It is our view that the staff which will be charged with the policy decisions at Investment Canada should not report directly to the Minister and be in the position in which they will become merely part of the Minister's personal staff. Ministers have a personal staff which is already far too large. We know that just from peeking out the window and seeing the large array of automobiles, limousines, drivers, assistants and political commissars. The last thing this Government should do is set up legislation which will enhance the personal office of the Minister, instead of having unbiased public servants playing their regular administrative roles. We want the administration of such programs to be done in a non-partisan manner.

Why do we want that? Let us recall what happened a few weeks ago in the Domtar issue. At that time, a number of Ministers were contradicting each other. Had it been left to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I am sure that my colleagues opposite, especially those from Quebec, realize that Domtar would not have received anything because the Minister was of the view that nothing should be done to assist Domtar. Luckily, other Cabinet Ministers had different views. Of course, that may now be changing. However, with the advent of this legislation we are giving those kinds of unilateral powers to the Minister and not to Cabinet. The Minister will be able to deny benefits or to encourage investment without restriction. Perhaps, he may do so in a biased manner, or with a purely regional perspective, and those decisions will not have the benefit of assistance from other Members of the House or Cabinet. Our Party wants these amendments to ensure that the legislation will be more accountable to the Government, and that the staff of Investment Canada will be more responsive to the Government, the House of Commons and Canadians.

During the last few months I have become increasingly worried about the situation in the textile industry. My concerns are due, in large part, to the unrestricted imports of various textile products which come into Canada. I am also concerned with the fact that textiles are not properly labelled. Certain products which have quotas imposed on them are coming into Canada under a different label. For instance, a T-shirt is called a shirt, as opposed to something else. Therefore, certain products which are tariff-exempt are entering Canada when tariffs should be imposed on them. Of course, in my constituency a great number of people are employed in the textile industry. The number is less than what it was at one time because of the difficulty in that industry.

The same, of course, applies to the footwear industry. On December 10, 1984, the Minister responsible for international trade wrote a letter to Monsieur l'Abbé Gérard Dion of the Canadian Textiles Labour-Management Committee. He was responding to a letter from l'Abbé Dion. The Minister said in his letter:

> You will realize, of course, that there have been many priorities facing the Government since it took office in September and it is not possible to address them all simultaneously.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) was telling us in December that he did not have the time to look after the textile industry and to protect Canadian jobs, yet,

Mr. Speaker, his colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, who is responsible for the textile industry—perhaps not the import section of it, but for the industry in general—had all the time in the world to introduce an Investment Canada Bill and to send his leader to New York, Washington, and all over the place to tell the Americans what a great thing it would be to have unrestricted investment provisions from here on in. But he failed to protect these jobs allegedly because the Minister for International Trade did not have the time.

It is clear this Government looks at its priorities in a rather unusual way. It has the time to speak to foreign investors in New York, alleging that it wants to create more jobs, but does not have the time to introduce legislation and protective measures to protect the jobs we have already. You can understand, Mr. Speaker, that my constituents who work in the textiles and footwear industries are very concerned.

I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, a letter which was sent by The Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada on April 1, 1985. The letter is addressed to the Minister for International Trade. It says in part:

Dear Mr. Kelleher:

In your letter of October 16, 1984, nearly six months ago, you wrote me that "I hope to be in a position to get together with you, representatives of your association and the unions at an early opportunity". We know that as Minister for International Trade you are travelling very much and that you are very busy but we would appreciate an hour of your time in April.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, eight months after this Government was sworn into office, no representative of Cabinet had the time to meet with people from the shoe industry. But they had all the time in the world to give away the store to large American investors without any protective measures at all for the people of my riding and for others in this country who are involved in that particular industry.

I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a report which was tabled in this House and given to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion on January 14, 1985. This report is entitled, "Trousers, Slacks, Shorts, Jeans, Overalls and Coveralls. A Report to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion". This report describes all of the problems of that industry and what restrictions are necessary in order to protect the jobs we already have. We in our Party are very concerned about the way in which this Government has been proceeding with this legislation as well as other measures. We want protective measures. We want foreign investment but we do not want it at the expense of Canadian jobs. Therefore, the amendments proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), are very necessary and, of course, I support those amendments.

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): This afternoon the House is considering several motions introduced by the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party. The Bill refers to the power of the responsible Minister, Mr. Speaker, and to many other very important powers.

Mr. Boudria: The "irresponsible" Minister.

Mr. Nystrom: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Boudria: The "irresponsible" Minister.

Mr. Nystrom: The "irresponsible" Minister. That comment was made by the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Well, Mr. Speaker, many important duties are mentioned here. For instance, the Minister shall encourage business investment by such means and in such manner as the Minister deems appropriate. Second, he shall assist Canadian business to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement. Third, he shall carry out research and analysis relating to domestic and international investment. Fourth, he shall provide investment information services and other investment services to facilitate economic growth in Canada.

And other important duties, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I believe, despite these kinds of powers which we see given to the Minister in this particular session, there are a number of things missing. I think that the whole thrust of this particular Bill weakens the position of the federal Government in terms of foreign investment, investment which is so important to the future of Canadians as far as jobs are concerned. It is very important that our country assert its sovereignty and independence, in no way any stronger than that of other countries around the world.

One way of doing that is by accepting many of these motions put forward today by the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. These motions will strengthen the role of the Minister and the Government when it comes to foreign investment in our country. We are not asking for anything more than other countries do. We see a positive assertion of economic nationalism in most countries around the world.

We sometimes criticize the Americans for being too nationalistic, "It is my country, right or wrong", or Japan for being too protectionist in the way it organizes its economy or, indeed, many European countries. There was a question in the House today from an Hon. Member of the Liberal Party with respect to the European Common Market. He asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) about the Europeans being too protectionist about some of their farm products. This particular question concerned beef. We had the Reagan-Mulroney summit in Quebec City. Our Prime Minister and the President of the United States talked about free trade and this new cuddly arrangement between these two good friends. But no sooner are the Prime Minister's officials back in Ottawa and President Reagan is back in Washington than the President's people announce this countervailing duty on hogs which hurts this multi-billion dollar Canadian industry.

Other countries around the world assert their independence and their sovereignty. They want control over their own economy and want to exercise their national powers. What we on this side of the House are seeing, and what I know a lot of Conservative back-benchers see but, of course, cannot say publicly because of the kind of system we have, is that we should strengthen as well the rules and regulations which govern foreign investment in our country. I know that these Conservative back-benchers are becoming very frustrated.

An Hon. Member: Show me one.

Mr. Nystrom: There is one across the way who just spoke out. I think he is very frustrated and other Hon. Members are very frustrated. They cannot speak up in the kind of system we have because they are afraid of the Prime Minister. In fact, the Prime Minister is trying to emulate Mr. Reagan. He is becoming more and more of a Republican in the way he governs this country right down to the podium, Mr. Speaker. They are afraid to alienate the Prime Minister's Office for fear they may not get to be a Cabinet Minister or parliamentary secretary or chairman of a committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Member from Quebec would agree with me now. He is not at all pleased about the course taken by the Government of Mr. Mulroney. He does not agree at all because his boss, the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, spent most of the election campaign talking about job creation—jobs, jobs and more jobs—and yet the unemployment rate is now exactly what it was six, eight or nine months ago. There are still 1.5 million unemployed Canadians in this country. The situation is the same as it was when Mr. Trudeau led the Government. I know that my friend over there is very disappointed by this Government and I hope he will speak openly and strongly in the House, Mr. Speaker.

● (1630)

I notice, Mr. Speaker, you are about to call me to order; I was getting a little bit off base there. However, I think it is important for these Members across the way to speak out, to stand up for their country and its sovereignty and say we are going to strengthen these particular clauses which deal with the power of the Minister. We want greater public co-ordination and planning in the investment process. We can get that by accepting this package of amendments.

I know the Canadian people also want broader-based input into decision making. My colleague from Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and others who travelled across this country a few months ago on the issue of jobs found that the main thing people wanted was more participation in the decision-making process at the local level. They wanted more economic democracy, more self direction from their local community, and more direction of the economy in general. There was a lot of criticism of some of the megaprojects which have been directed from Ottawa or by big companies. They also want greater Canadianization of our economy. They want the money made in Canada to stay in Canada. They want to ensure that the research and development which was paid for with money provided, in effect, by the workers of this country will stay in this country. Most research and development is not done in Canada but elsewhere.

These are things that the Canadian people want and all we are saying in this series of amendments and motions is that we should strengthen the hand of the Minister and the federal Government in the decision-making process and not leave it to the so-called open market. I find this all over the place. In my own Province of Saskatchewan we have a small population base. Back in the 1930s the province was in the middle of a great depression. We had drought, a tremendously bad financial rating, a lot of poverty, farmers riding the rails, dust storms, hunger and famine of the 1930s. Our people decided they had to control their own economy and they built the wheat pools and the co-operative movement and fought hard for things like the Wheat Board. They wanted more public direction, control and self-determination, which is probably the best word, over the way the Saskatchewan and Canadian economy worked. They went out and fought for some of those ideas and we now have a Canadian Wheat Board which gives farmers collective clout, and a Minister who has a lot of clout in grain marketing in this country. I am not asking, nor is the Liberal Party, for anything more than some clout, some public input and direction. I know the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), who just came into the House, is one of the best known red Tories in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Gauthier: He was a Liberal at one time.

Mr. Nystrom: One of the best known red Tories in Saskatchewan gets up and fights for things like the Wheat Board, parity pricing and the CBC. He does that because he believes that the Canadian people need to have more say over the future economic direction of their lives. If he were the Minister in charge we would not have a Bill that was as wishy-washy as this one; we would have a Bill that would give the Minister some real clout. So I feel sorry for the Hon. Member who must feel very frustrated that this Government across the way is so conservative. No wonder he is silent, because if he got up he would give a thundering dissertation in this House just like John Diefenbaker would do. John Diefenbaker used to have a national vision; he stood up for Canada and criticized——and you agree with me on that, he often criticized the Liberal Government and the Liberal Party for being overly pro-American, too strong a supporter of the United States.

[English]

He was very, very critical of that and I am sure that if he were in this House he would be extremely upset to see this kind of legislation before the House. We are timid and meek like little kittens. I am sure he would agree with that. We are really afraid to assert our own independence, and that is not what the Conservative Party used to be. Historically it was a nationalist Party and the Liberal Party was a continentalist Party. I think the Hon. Member for Assiniboia agrees with me and I am sure that is why many years ago he left the Liberal Party and joined the Conservatives, because he thought John Diefenbaker stood for Canada. With this kind of legislation we are seeing a Conservative Party which has become more and more like the Republicans. In fact, they have become the Republican Party North, and I am sure that is why you are rising; you do not like that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin where I think my friend from Saskatchewan left off, and that is to indicate my concern that the back-bench Members of the Conservative Government are sitting so quietly and silently through the passage of every one of these amendments before us. As you know, there are several amendments before us and if I were to attempt to speak to each and every one of them on an individual basis I would more than take up my 10 minutes of time. Therefore I am going to focus primarily on two parts of those amendments.

The first one deals with the role of the Minister with respect to policy on investment, the way in which it fails to separate the role of the Minister responsible for the agency and the manner in which the policy is carried out by the bureaucracy. This Bill does not take into consideration a demarcation between the policy direction, namely that taken by Cabinet, and the way in which it is administered, namely by the bureaucracy. Secondly, I want to focus some of my remarks on the motion which deals with the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program.

Before doing so, I want to ask the Conservative back-benchers from Toronto why they are not speaking about this Bill which fails to protect the transfer of technology. Surely they would want to be speaking on this Bill to make sure that in the days ahead when the sale of de Havilland Corporation to European enterprise is imminent, if all reports are true, they represent their constituents and make sure that Investment Canada will protect Canadian jobs in Downsview; will protect workers from facing a situation where a foreign national can come in and purchase de Havilland, withdraw all the technology, and transfer it to its European-based enterprises.

I suppose the best example is that of the latter part of the 1950s and early 1960s when the Conservative Government under John Diefenbaker scrapped the Avro Arrow and allowed a foreign multinational to transfer all the technology to the U.S. we exported all of our scientists who had to go in search of employment in the U.S. rather than in the Canadian environment they were so used to. I ask myself why is it that the Conservative MPs from Toronto are so silent on this issue? I ask myself why there is not one Conservative Member of Parliament from the Montreal region standing up to talk about the motions which can affect the sale of Canadair Corporation. Everyone knows that the Minister responsible for industry is planning to put on the block a number of Crown corporations which in the past have been so instrumental in developing Canadian technology and creating jobs here in Canada. This allowed Canadian firms to compete on a world-wide basis and keep the jobs here in Canada. Why is it that there is not one Conservative Member of Parliament from Montreal standing up to protect his constituents?

In his November 8, 1984 economic statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) outlined for the first time some of the long-term plans he had for DRIE, which included cut-backs. Why is it in the weeks that followed that announcement we did not have one Member of Parliament from the Conservative back-benches who represents those areas of this country which have in the past been aided so well by DRIE get up and speak on this issue? Where were they when these cut-backs were announced on November 8?

I ask myself where are they today when we have under Motion No. 9 a severely limiting effect on the ILAP program? There is a program that I am very familiar with. I represent the constituency of Sudbury which I think most Members in this House would recognize has had a rough economic ride, so to speak, in the last decade. In that decade we witnessed 10,000 of our people emigrate outside the Sudbury region in search of employment elsewhere. That emigration would have been much worse had it not been for the programs put in place by the Liberal Government under DREE and later under the reorganized program called DRIE. The Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was the Minister of Employment and Immigration at the time that those lay-offs occurred in the Sudbury area. He was instrumental, using the provisions of the Industrial Labour Adjustments Program, in minimizing the impact of the loss of those jobs in our community. The people in our community banded together. Labour groups, small business groups and local Government formed committees to help mitigate against the loss of jobs which was going to be incurred in our major industry.

A veil of secrecy and silence permeates this discussion, Mr. Speaker. People who are watching this debate at the present time will note that only Members of the Opposition are rising to debate this Investment Canada Bill clause by clause. One must stretch one's imagination to believe that Conservative Members of Parliament who represent small town Canada will not see their communities severely impacted in the next several years.

The trend lines in our economy dictate that there will be changes in the textiles and shoe manufacturing industries. These are not going to affect the Torontos and Montreals of the world but rather small town Canada. None of the Conservative Members of Parliament who represent those areas have told their Government what changes they want in this Bill to protect the interest of their constituents. That says something about the way in which the Conservatives are putting this Bill through the House of Commons. In order to represent their constituents they should be speaking to ensure that Investment Canada will fulfil the mandates that their constituents require of this legislation.

I spoke earlier about some of the amendments to the main motion. I would like to focus in on one very small area. Under the old Foreign Investment Review Agency the Government could review the multinational take-over of a firm worth considerably less than the $5 million which is being proposed in the present Investment Canada Bill. I think most Members of Parliament would agree with me that in the past the creation of job opportunities has not come from multinationals or large employers such as the International Nickel Company or General Motors. These large companies have had a decrease in the number of people they employ. Most people now recognize that the major engine of growth for job opportunity and job creation in Canada today comes from thousands of small businesses which employ 20 people or less. By and large these firms have less than $5 million of equity. Through their own research and development many of them create niches in the North American markets. They have products which can be marketed on a world-wide basis. They involve technology that has been created in Canada to create jobs for Canadians.

There is nothing in this Bill to prevent a multinational from purchasing a small Canadian firm and transferring the technology that has been created at that place of employment outside the boundaries of our country. The cost will be Canadian jobs. The job opportunities in this country have not been created only in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. They come from the small backwater sections of Maritime Canada and the small communities in rural and northern Ontario. Why are the Members of Parliament who represent those areas of the country not standing up to speak on this Bill?

In the last 15 years in northern Ontario we have witnessed a net migration of our young people. Only through the efforts of the Members of Parliament who represent those areas to get the Government of the day to move on programs which defend their constituents' interest are we able to keep that emigration of our population to a minimum. I think their constituents should be asking where their voices are. They should be standing up to debate this Investment Canada Bill.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I must express my amazement at the complete silence of Members of the Conservative Party. Many of the amendments which have been moved by Members of my Party and of the Official Opposition deserve careful consideration and support. I would like to put on the record one amendment proposed by my colleague the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) which reads as follows:

—develop medium term and long term public and private industrial sector investment guidelines consistent with an industrial strategy that emphasizes full employment, growth, diversification, autonomy and export competitiveness of the Canadian economy;".

Clothing or textile plants which are the only industry in some smaller cities are disappearing every week. The unions representing clothing and textile workers have been calling on Governments of the day to take steps to ensure that the industries can survive and provide jobs. Yet the fact remains that in Canada, as in the United States, plants are closing up every week. Companies which have been in operation for 40 or 50 years are closing, very often due to bankruptcy. Workers who have worked for a company for 10, 20 or 30 years are finding themselves unemployed. That is happening because no company in these fields in North America can compete with the product produced in many of the Third World countries where workers receive less wages per day than workers in Canada get per hour.

I am not suggesting that I am opposed to imports. I am not suggesting that it may not be advantageous to consumers to import clothing or textiles made in other countries. However, if the Government has concern for the people of this country, it should develop policies to provide alternate employment for people employed in the industries which are to be eliminated or are to face a steady decline in employment. There are between 10,000 and 15,000 people in Winnipeg who work in the textile and clothing industries. If the companies which employ those workers cannot compete and get orders, and therefore go out of business, it will be serious. Employment in Winnipeg is diversified. Hopefully those workers who are now in the industry will find jobs in other fields. I am concerned about the people who work in those two industries in Winnipeg. I am even more concerned about the workers who work in those two industries in those cities and towns in Quebec, not just in Montreal, where there is no alternative employment. I have not heard a single Conservative Member of Parliament from Quebec expressing the concerns, which I am sure there are, of their constituents about what will happen to them unless the Government adopts a policy to protect those jobs or at least will see, as the jobs disappear, that there are alternatives.

Let me turn to another problem that I see, namely the desire of the present Conservative Government to privatize Crown corporations. We have never had a social democratic government in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Somebody says hear, hear. We social democrats believe in a substantial amount of publicly owned enterprises. We have never had a social democratic government in this country. All the Crown corporations which we have in Canada—I am talking about the ones that come under the jurisdiction of the federal Government, the federal Parliament, and nearly all of the Crown corporations established in the provinces—have been established by Liberal, Conservative, Social Credit, Union Nationale, or PQ Governments. Why were they established? They were established because the Government, federal or provincial, believed that there was something needed in a province or nationally which was not being done by the private sector and the Government had to step in. The people of Canada, the Government of Canada, now own two very large Crown corporations involved in the aeronautics, aerospace field. I am talking about Canadair and de Havilland. Why are they Crown corporations? They are Crown corporation because when they were originally privately owned there came a point when business was so bad that the private owners said: "We are not going to continue. We cannot continue. We are going to close". The Government of Canada, with the consent of Parliament, said that a modern industrialized country had to have an aeronautics, aerospace industry and that it must not let those companies close. We had an experience with a former Conservative Government which closed the company that developed the Avro Arrow. de Havilland and Canadair are now Crown corporations. They employ thousands of workers in Toronto and Montreal. The Government says that it is going to privatize them.

Let us assume for a moment that there are private investors prepared to pay a fair price for those two companies. I doubt that, but let us assume that for a moment. What happens three, four, or ten years from now if the industry goes into a decline? Will the then Government of Canada let those two companies close if they are not making any money? Will we permit 10,000 workers to be out of jobs? Will we get out of the industry? We won't of course. We have said that we need in this Bill a clause that will protect the interests of the ordinary people of Canada. Unless and until we have that kind of clause in the Bill, Mr. Speaker, I and the other Members of our Party cannot support this Bill. We will continue to oppose it.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is most unfortunate that we have to debate in the House of Commons one by one these motions that ought to have been accepted in committee.

Let me illustrate the point with a brief analysis of three of them which seem to me to be eminently reasonable and which should have been accepted in committee. I will start with Motion No. 6. Clause 5 gives to the Minister the powers to assist Canadian business to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement. All we were asking in committee through the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was to add the words "and find Canadian buyers wherever possible purchase businesses of value to Canada". What is wrong with that, one inevitably has to ask? For the life of me I cannot understand why the Government would find it impossible to accept this amendment which simply puts a greater emphasis on the desirability of "wherever possible", so that as a modification of this trust that is not mandatory in absolute terms, it just says that wherever possible let us try to find Canadian buyers to purchase businesses of value to Canada. What is wrong with that? I really wonder, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you wonder too.

I draw your attention to the next motion, Motion No. 7. In the proposed Bill Clause 5 simply reads:

> The Minister shall—
> (c) carry out research and analysis relating to domestic and international investment;

What we were proposing in committee to the Hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry is an expansion of this thought, namely "including research on means to achieve greater autonomy by non-Canadian controlled businesses in Canada"—and by that we mean subsidiaries of multinationals—"to compete for world markets with their parent firms". Again, this is a motion that I am sure privately every Tory Member from Quebec and Ontario and other industrial centres would be glad to support. It makes sense. It is good politics and good Canadianism. Here again we are facing this kind of indifference which makes it so hard to understand why on earth this kind of motion which is simply an expansion of a concept, which does not modify the sense of the concept but only adds greater emphasis to an orientation toward Canada, would not get acceptance by the Government.

Let me also draw your attention to Motion No. 9 also before us, Mr. Speaker. Here you have a concept whereby in the proposed Bill Clause 5 reads:

> (e) assist in the development of industrial and economic policies that affect investment in Canada;

That is just fine. In the amendment before us, we are adding something which was almost the theology of the Tory Party in the last election. We are actually talking Tory language by saying "and consult with labour, business, and community representatives about the effects of proposals for acquisitions and new business establishments by non-Canadians on regional employment and economic growth". We know this process of consultation has value. It has validity. We have seen in communities the purchase of a plant by a company from abroad. A few months later the plant, once acquired by that foreign interest, is simply closed. The local jobs are gone; they disappear. It could be a cannery of tomatoes in British Columbia or a tannery in Chicoutimi. It could happen in the backyard of the riding of any Member of Parliament. When it happens it is a bit too late and it hurts profoundly. Therefore this concept of local consultation has a certain validity. Mr. Speaker, I note that you are becoming a bit nervous—

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am not nervous. I am just going to call it five o'clock.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 159?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved that Bill C-211, an Act to protect heritage railway stations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to move second reading of this Bill, an Act to protect heritage railway stations, known as Bill C-211. I should like to pay tribute to the former Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park because he actually had the Bill prepared by the legislative counsel. I was in the process of preparing a similar Bill when the former Hon. Member introduced this one. When the Hon. Member was not re-elected, we decided that we might just as well use the same Bill, as they were so similar. I pay tribute to him for preparing this Bill.

I should like to deal with what the Bill really does. If it is passed, it means that no railway company or any other company shall remove, destroy, sell, assign, transfer or otherwise dispose of a heritage railway station owned by it or otherwise under its control, unless authorized by an order of the Governor in Council or, in other words, of Cabinet. Any company which contravenes this Act, once it is passed, is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not less than $50,000 or not more than $1 million.

Another clause of the Bill provides that if a company plans to remove, destroy, sell, assign, transfer or otherwise dispose of a heritage station owned or controlled by it, it must file an application for authorization to do so with the Minister in accordance with the regulations passed by the Governor in Council. After having given public notice of its intention, the company files notice with the Minister. Concurrently with the said filing, the company shall submit to the Minister a profit and loss statement of its estimated annual losses for preserving the said station and of any other expenses the company would likely incur in future years as a result of the application being refused.

Any person who objects to an application for authorization shall within the stipulated time within the Act serve notice on the Minister setting out the reason for the objection and any relevant facts, so that the general public has an opportunity to say why a station should not be destroyed, sold, et cetera. Upon the expiration of the stipulated time, the Minister refers the matter to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board for a hearing and report. The Board then holds a hearing as soon as possible after publishing notice in at least one newspaper in each official language in general circulation in the municipality in which the station is located. The Board must grant all interested persons a reasonable chance to appear before it to make representations. After the representations have been heard, the Board must within 30 days submit a report not only to the Minister in charge of this particular Bill, but also to the Minister of Transport setting out its findings and recommendations together with the reasons for them. I think that is a very excellent point. The report will not rest with one Minister.

Within 30 days after receipt of the report, the two Ministers shall transmit to Cabinet or the Governor in Council their recommendations along with a copy of the said report, the application for authorization, the estimated annual costs and the notice of objection. The two Ministers must reach a decision and then take that decision to Cabinet.

Cabinet may authorize the company to alter the station owned by it, or the company may be authorized to remove, destroy, sell, assign, transfer or otherwise dispose of the station. In other words, if they accept the application, the railway company has authority to go ahead and do what it wanted to do. If they do not accept it, then of course it is given heritage designation. The authorization required by the company is in addition to any and all authorization and any other legislation. There will be nothing slipshod about it. It will be thoroughly reviewed.

That is the gist of the Bill which I thought I should outline to Hon. Members of the House. The Bill will actually provide efficient mechanisms which allow concerned citizens to make timely objections to the destruction, removal or sale of stations of historic or cultural value to ensure their conservation in the public interest.

The reason I was interested in this Bill—and I suppose it is the same reason the former Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park was interested—is that too many of these stations are being destroyed. I can think of a station in my own City of Drumheller, on the banks of the Red Deer River, in the Valley of the Dinosaurs. CNR moved out and without saying a word to city council suddenly one day destroyed the whole station. It was an historic momunent of that city. Thousands of people went through that station. As a matter of fact, the unique part of that station was that if one was going east; one would get on a train going west, and if one was going west, one would get on a train going east, because the line wound through that beautiful valley.

How many other stations have been destroyed? Perhaps we will never know. Scores of stations were built in another era of Canadian history, typical of their period. They tell people what it was like in the early days of the railways. They were built with public money and railway money, but they have become historic monuments. They are relics of a particular era. In my view they should not be destroyed.

I know of another station in the Town of Claresholm. The people of the area want to have it designated a heritage station and used as a museum. They are fixing up the grounds around it. This Bill will be welcomed by them.

Things have happened in terms of a number of stations as a result of co-operation on the part of one of the two railway companies. For example, in the town of Okotoks its station was made into a meeting place and a place for the arts, for drama and painting. The people of that area come there to paint and participate in other cultural activities. Drama is presented on the stage. It is also a meeting place. Recently I attended a meeting of the Big Rock Club. It is named after a large rock in the Okotoks area.

In High River, they made the station into a museum. In the village of Beiseker, they turned the station completely around so that it would face Main Street. It remained in the same location but completely turned around. It was made into the town hall and included the council chamber and village office. They used a little imagination and put in the library. The person who looked after the library was also to look after a small store which sold knitted goods, clothes, fancy dishes and moulded items to tourists. Some splendid things have been done. We want the same to happen in every town and village across the nation.

When I was pursuing this subject I wondered whether this was only an Alberta problem. Therefore, I wrote to some of the Ministers across Canada. I will read a few excerpts from what some of these Ministers said. The Hon. Billy Joe MacLean, Minister of Culture, Recreation and Fitness for the Province of Nova Scotia, after mentioning that his staff is undertaking a study of transportation heritage, wrote:

I mention these activities to make clear my desire that action be taken by legislative and other means to protect and/or recycle railway heritage properties.

The Hon. James Chabot, Minister of Government Services for the Province of British Columbia, said:

The protection of railway stations with heritage significance is a concern of my Ministry.

The Hon. Rick Folk, Minister of Culture and Recreation for the Province of Saskatchewan, stated:

Your proposed Bill to protect railway stations across the country is a most welcome item of legislation, and this Department certainly supports your efforts.

The Hon. Eugene Kostrya, Minister of Culture, Heritage and Recreation for the Province of Manitoba, said:

—this is a current concern of the Province of Manitoba and although we have made significant headway in our efforts, support at the federal level is essential.

The provinces are supporting it. I was very happy to have the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) say that he was interested in supporting the Bill. He is in the House today. Also, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) indicated to me that he would give strong support to this Bill.

The Bill is not complete. I have read quotations from various Ministers. Some Ministers had concern as well. One concern was the matter of land on which the building was sitting and whether that would be looked after. There are concerns and probably some ramifications. Consequently, I would not expect the House simply to pass the Bill as it is and say that's it. Either we pass the Bill and it goes to committee, where it receives a lot of consideration, or we discharge second reading of the Bill, which I hope the House will do, and send the subject matter of the Bill to committee for consideration. Perhaps it could come back here in the form of a government Bill. That is what is important. We need protection for these stations. Therefore, I take great pleasure in moving second reading of Bill C-211, an Act to protect heritage railway stations.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are glad to support this excellent Bill. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for having taken this initiative. I also want to pay homage to the work done, as he mentioned, by the former Member from High Park who was extremely interested in this issue.

We have come to this conclusion because of experiences at the municipal level for many of us as a result of the existence of historical buildings, not necessarily railway buildings, being threatened. Often the feeling was very strong in the community that without the history provided by a building, a nation loses its sense of history. It has to be passed from one generation to the other in order that we can understand lifestyles, ways of communicating and moving people, in the case of railways, for generations preceding the one that still has the benefif of admiring certain buildings.

In north Toronto we had a very sad experience a few years ago. The Canadian Pacific Railway station, despite enormous interest expressed by local community groups and the endorsement of the mayor and some Members of Parliament from that part of the city, was all of a sudden destroyed. That building had character. Alternative future uses had been proposed. That experience left a very bitter taste in the mouths of the citizens. Canadian Pacific displayed a distressing insensitivity to the will of the population there. Many had been born around the station, grew up and had learned to appreciate the presence of that station. It had a beautiful architectural design, was functional, had character and, as I said, a future. That building is gone. Therefore, there is the necessity for taking certain measures such as that proposed by the Hon. Member for Bow River. We are glad to see his initiative. We congratulate and applaud him. We hope this initiative will go to committee for further study and improvement.

The federal Government does not necessarily have the final word in this matter. It is mainly a provincial and municipal power to be exerted. Nevertheless, it will have an exemplary effect and a symbolic meaning. It will be useful to citizen groups. They will be extremely grateful to the Hon. Member for Bow River if this Bill becomes adopted one day. It will be appreciated by present and future generations of Canadians.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, like probably every other Member in this House, I am delighted every time the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) gets to his feet, particularly on this occasion when he is bringing forward a subject matter and a Bill that deals with an area that all of us from time to time are touched by, namely the heritage of Canada. We are doubly pleased. We congratulate him on his efforts and the excellent remarks that he made in bringing forward this topic and this subject matter.

We can all understand his references to the number of facilities or railway stations in his area that either have been or might be affected if we do not do something constructive and approach this problem, which does not rest only in his constituency but exists right across Canada. We are looking for ways to address this problem and ensure that the natural heritage of Canada is protected.

This Bill is particularly timely now because heritage conservation is much in the minds of Canadians this year. One hundred years ago this November, the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald established Canada's first national park at Banff. That was regarded by all of us as the beginning of the heritage conservation movement in this country.

The National Parks centennial year is an occasion for all of us to celebrate what has been accomplished in the last 100 years and also to chart a course for the future of Canadian heritage conservation. Today there are 31 national parks across the country; at least one in each province and each territory. There are also more than 70 major national historic parks in Canada and nine heritage canals. All of these heritage places are managed by Parks Canada for the benefit and enjoyment of all Canadians.

This year there are centennial celebrations at every national park, site and canal across the country. I am sure the Hon. Member and indeed every Member of the House joins me in wishing great success to these special festivities.

It was a Conservative Government which, 100 years ago, took the first steps to protect our natural environment, and it was a Conservative Government which took the first steps to protect our historic resources. Canada's first national historic park was initiated in 1917 at Fort Anne, Annapolis Royal, Nova Scotia. Two years later, 1919, the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada was created by the Government of the then Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden.

This Bill would propose new responsibilities for the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. I invite Hon. Members to look for a moment at the Board's historic and at its important accomplishments. The Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada was created to identify persons, places and events of national historic significance and to advise the federal Government on appropriate ways to commemorate them.

The first point I would like to make is that the Board's task is enormous. It has a responsibility for the entire country with many specific items to consider. At the time it began its work, there were literally dozens of sites of great historic interest in every province, sites which were unprotected and subject to destruction at any time. Interested Board members were given a $10 per diem allowance to attend Board meetings and in order to discourage unnecessary expense they were instructed to do the bulk of their work by correspondence. I do not know how well that would work today, Mr. Speaker, but at that time perhaps correspondence services were satisfactory.

By 1921, 46 sites had been recommended to the Minister for commemoration as soon as possible. The first bronze commemorative plaque was set in place in 1922 at Port Dover, Ontario, to mark the location at which France laid claim to the Lake Erie region in 1670. For those who do not know where Port Dover is, it is very close to Simcoe. Soon after this more plaques were erected in different provinces.

Today the Historic Sites and Monuments Board consists of 17 members who advise the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) on matters of national historic and architectural significance. Each province and territory is represented by one member except Ontario and Quebec, each of which has two members. Other members of the Board are the Dominion Archivist, a representative of the National Museums and a representative of Parks Canada.

The Board meets twice yearly to review submissions and make recommendations to the Minister of the Environment. Only the Minister can declare a person, place or event to be of national historic significance. The Historic Sites and Monuments board welcomes suggestions from historical societies, heritage groups and other organizations and individuals. Suggestions should be of truly national importance as opposed to regional or local importance.

To determine what constitutes truly national importance, the Board has established general criteria. The first such criterion is persons who have had a significant impact on Canadian history, irrespective of the country in which all or part of their achievement occurred; second, events or movements which have shaped Canadian history or illustrate effectively the broad cultural, social, political, economic or military themes of Canadian history; and third, places which shed light on or illustrate effectively the culture of a prehistoric people or are associated with important archaeological discoveries. That is very reminiscent of the comments made by the Hon. Member who spoke previously about the great archaeological items in his own constituency. The fourth such criterion is structures which embody the distinguising characteristics of an architectural or engineering type, are exceptionally valuable for the style or method of construction of their periods or are examples of the work of a master builder, designer, engineer or architect.

The Board very specifically does not consider for commemoration cemeteries and graves except those of the Fathers of Confederation and those having archaeological significance; structures that have been moved from their original location; places outside Canada; and people who are still alive or who have died within the past five years. If the Board determines that a person, place or event is of national historic significance, it so recommends to the Minister, advising an appropriate means of formal recognition.

In most cases a bilingual Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada bronze plaque of standard design is erected. The site where the plaque is located need not be owned by the federal Government. Today there are more than 900 plaques across the country, many of them located on privately owned property.

In special cases, the Board may recommend that a distinctive monument be built. The Marie Madeleine de Verchères monument at Verchères, Quebec, and the Stefanson memorial at Arnes, Manitoba, are examples of this. The Board may recommend that the Minister enter into a cost-sharing agreement with a non-profit organization. The independent organization owns and manages the historic location and ensures that the site is open to the public for a specified number of days each year. This gives the public an opportunity to visit these special sites and locations. The Trestler House near Montreal and Craigflower Manor on Vancouver Island are good examples of cost-sharing agreements.

Places of extraordinary importance to Canadian history are acquired and developed by Parks Canada as national historic parks. National historic parks range from the Motherwell homestead in Abernethy, Saskatchewan, to Bellevue House in Kingston, Ontario; and as everyone on this side of the House at least knows, Bellevue House was once the home of Sir John A. Macdonald. Fort Langley near Vancouver, Lower Fort Garry near Winnipeg, Artillery Park in Quebec City and the mighty Fortress of Louisbourg near Sydney, Nova Scotia, are among the many other national historic parks across Canada.

A great deal has been accomplished since the Board's first meeting in 1919. In large part this is due to the hard work and dedication of individual Board members. It is also due to the Board's advisory rather than administrative role. The Board does not have a staff or office space. Its members are paid only a small honorarium and an allowance for expenses incurred while travelling on Board business. The Board exists solely to advise the Minister on matters of national historic importance. I am sure all Members of the House would want to join me in thanking the members of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board for the important work they do for all Canadians. Members generously donate their time and experience to help us preserve significant aspects of our history.

The Bill before us proposes that the Board take on an administrative role regarding the future of heritage railway stations. That is the key point, Mr. Speaker. The Bill proposes changing the function of the Board from a simple advisory role to an administrative role. The Bill would require that the Board hold hearings and prepare reports on the future of all heritage railway stations that are in any way threatened or scheduled for renovation, restoration or repair. What a monumental undertaking that would be! In fact, the very limited resources would be quite incapable of responding to this very important work and this great need.

There are thousands of railway stations in this country. All of us have the unfortunate experience of knowing what has happened to the railways in this country and to many railway stations, many of which are close to the hearts of many of us and our constituents. If the Board were assigned the responsibility of looking after the future of these sites, it would change very dramatically its basic role. I would ask Hon. Members if they want the Board to take on this administrative role.

The Historic Sites and Monuments Board is well aware of the heritage value of our early railway stations. The Board has considered many applications concerning railway stations. In fact, 24 stations across the country have already been declared of national historic or architectural significance.

The Board selected for commemoration stations which express the development of our various railway lines. For example, the station at Lévis, Quebec, and Pictou, Nova Scotia, represent the Intercolonial Railway Line. The Canadian Pacific Railway is represented at McAdam, New Brunswick, and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Maritime railways are represented at Kensington, Prince Edward Island, and Rothesay, New Brunswick. The Canadian Northern Line is represented at Kamloops, British Columbia, and Miami, Manitoba.

The fact that these 24 stations are recognized does not preclude other stations from consideration in the future. The Board receives submissions at all times and will judge each railway station on its historic and architectural significance to Canadian history. Our early railway stations are all an irreplaceable part of our heritage. This Bill makes that point very clearly and I agree completely with that sentiment.

While I congratulate the Hon. Member for calling our attention to this important issue, I would ask the House to consider carefully whether the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada should be charged with the new administrative responsibilities which are imposed by this Bill.

In view of the comments which I have made, and in view of what I think we all know are very honest and reasoned intentions on the part of the Hon. Member, I hope that the House will be in a position to receive an amendment. I would like to move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-211, an Act to protect heritage railway stations, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry".

With that, I will conclude my remarks. I would like to thank the Hon. Member again for his contribution and I hope that the House will be prepared to receive the amended motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this Bill has come before us as a result of a number of scandalous incidents which have taken place concerning railway stations, and in particular the flagrant example of CPR destroying an historic railway building, which was contrary to the wishes of the community, after its importance as an historic monument was recognized. It is incidents of that sort which have led the Hon. Member and Members of the Opposition to argue for more vigorous measures to ensure that Canadian heritage properties and, in particular, railway buildings, are protected.

I respect the intent of the Bill. We know the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) supports it. As he is an old railroader himself, he is interested in the railroads and, therefore, is giving moral support to the Bill. I, too, support the Bill. However, I am a little concerned about the amendment to send the Bill to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for study. As the culture critic for the NDP caucus, it seems to me that this is very much a heritage matter, and I am wondering why that committee would be selected to discuss heritage measures.

I would like to look at the broader context of the heritage aspects of the Bill which is before us. It is not just railway stations which are threatened. There is a whole policy on the protection of cultural institutions which must be studied. The fact is that we do not have an adequate heritage policy for Canada, although the arts and culture community has argued for one and various organizations have put forward very constructive proposals.

The recent report of the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee included a major section on heritage. If the recommendations from that report had been implemented, we would not be discussing the Bill which is before us now because the matter would have already been dealt with by government legislation. So often a Private Member is forced to bring in a Bill to deal with a matter which the Government has simply neglected.

The Applebaum-Hébert Committee, the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee, came up with a number of proposals which addressed precisely the problem which is before us. I would like to refer to a couple of the recommendations which I believe are relevant. Recommendation 15 called for the establishment of an arm's length agency which was to be called the Canadian Heritage Council. It was to be a visible champion of heritage interests. If that kind of institution had been created I wonder whether it might be the body which would be referred to rather than the Historic Sites and Monuments Board.

Recommendation 17 of that report is very relevant to this debate. It stated that existing federal legislation relating to the designation of historical sites should be strengthened to compel heritage impact studies to be carried out and reviewed before any site is sold, developed or altered from its present use. That is precisely the problem which we have before us now with regard to railway heritage sites.

What has happened to the very pertinent recommendations from the major and rather expensive Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee? A number of the recommendations were discussed by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and a great deal of progress was made in ranking them in terms of importance and analyzing them. Positive support was given to the recommendations by the Conservative Party when it was in Opposition. The recommendations were discussed further during the course of the federal election campaign to determine what the Conservative Party's position would be if it formed the Government. I would like to report an exchange which took place with the Canadian Museums Association. The Association asked:

> What will you and your Party do to ensure the heritage and other recommendations of the Applebaum-Hébert Report are given thorough consideration and in close consultation with the museum/gallery community?

The answer to that came from the official Progressive Conservative pre-election platform. It stated:

> We will begin immediately to consult with groups and individuals in the cultural sector on all aspects of policy development. The recommendations of the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee will form a substantial part of our consultative agenda, because the issues dealt with in that Report were already of pressing concern when the Committee was struck.

Well, consultations are a good idea. The PC position continued:

> The Standing Committee's consideration of the Applebaum-Hébert Report was suspended temporarily to deal with the taxation issues of artist and writers.

That is true. It continued:

> We would hope that the Standing Committee will seek a renewal of the Applebaum-Hébert reference in the new Parliament.

That has not happened. It continued:

> To ensure that there are no unnecessary delays in implementing those recommendations which the Standing Committee and the cultural sector identify as priorities, we will accelerate the process of consultation between the Department and the sector.

There has been no acceleration of consultation. Indeed, consultation has fallen by the wayside. Arts groups, in great frustration, came to Ottawa to lobby on Parliament Hill. They told parliamentarians about their frustration in getting the Department of Communications and the Minister to listen to them.

The pre-election statement of the Conservative Party continued:

> We would encourage the Standing Committee to examine, as soon as possible, the Report's recommendations on heritage and specifically the idea of a Canadian Heritage Council.

I raised that matter before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture last fall. At that time I asked the Minister very specifically where he stood with regard to the excellent recommendations on heritage which were accepted by the Conservative Party when it was in Opposition. Very specifically, I asked him what he would do about heritage and the Applebaum-Hébert recommendations. The Minister said that all of those reports are not the Bible. He said that they are instruments and we have to use them like that. In short, they are instruments which can be used, but they can also be ignored. There is no sense in honouring commitments which have been made by the Government, especially very specific and well-studied commitments which were made by the Conservative Party when it was in Opposition and during the course of the election campaign. I believe it is a flagrant example of broken election promises.

What is the importance of this heritage policy which we do not have before us, which is somewhere wallowing around in the Department of Communications being studied? It is an important matter. Canada is a young country in the sense of its architecture and its permanent material culture. People may argue that because Canada is a young country it does not have many heritage buildings which need to be preserved. I would regard that as the wrong approach. On the contrary, because we do not have many heritage buildings we have a special obligation to preserve those which we do have. The railways were enormously important historically in uniting Canada. Canadians are nostalgic about their railways. We remember the good old days when they worked a great deal better. We like the old railway buildings. They are a part of our history, a very important and unifying part. So these railway stations above all should be part of our cultural preservation concerns.

Heritage concerns have to be a major part of our cultural policy. We have to preserve the achievements of previous generations. It is not enough just to go after what artists have to contribute at the present time. What hope will they have that their works are going to be respected in the future if we do not show respect for the contributions of past generations? I very much support this Bill in principle, but I feel that we need to have a mechanism with which to deal with the preservation of railway buildings.

As to the specific amendment before us, I do have some queries as to whether the Bill should go to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and not be considered a heritage matter. While supportive of the intent of the Bill, I have to be critical of the Government's failure to bring forward a heritage policy as part of a general cultural policy for Canada. That is really the approach we should be following. We should not be dealing with the question of railway properties in isolation from other heritage matters. We need a comprehensive strategy and adequate funding. It is an important matter for Canadians and that is where our priorities should lie.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to make a few remarks on Bill C-211, an Act to protect heritage railway stations. I want to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), for bringing forward this Bill today. I would be hesitant in referring the Bill to committee for discussion if I did not know that the Hon. Member for Bow River would be watching with his usual tenacity to ensure that it gets through that committee and back into the House with the objectives of this Bill met.

I have known the Hon. Member for Bow River for a number of years. I know he will understand when I point out to the House that all areas of my riding are affected by this Bill. As recently as last week the CNR, the Crown-owned company, applied to the Town of Lac La Biche to take down the old railway station which is now not being used. A number of people in the community got together and were hoping to convert it into a senior citizens' drop-in centre such as is presently in the Town of Athabasca. Within a matter of 12 to 14 hours, however, the CNR gave the order to demolish the railway station and that was done. That old building which sat in the middle of the Town of Lac La Biche is lost forever. People can remember going to the station when the train came through two times or maybe three times a week to watch the people getting on and off, to watch the unloading of the milk cans, and so on. The milk can stands were still there. All of those things were very much a part of the development of this country and that is why I salute my friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River, for bringing this Bill forward.

I would like to point out some of the things which can happen. The way the Town of Athabasca is situated, the railroad station is a focal point at the end of Main Street. At one time it was going to be torn down but the people in the community got together and took over. They made an agreement with the Northern Alberta Railways, which was jointly run by CPR and CNR, and converted it to a senior citizens' drop-in centre. Any afternoon of the week one can drop in and not only live heritage but one can talk heritage to all of the senior citizens who make it a point to be there.

Again, I would like to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River. He has indeed performed a service to our communities. With his usual tenacity, I hope he will ensure that this Bill comes back to the House and is passed quickly so that we can protect our railway stations.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I also join with the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) in complimenting the very distinguished senior member of this Chamber, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), on his initiative. It is certainly agreed that efforts should be made to preserve these buildings as cultural and social focal points for our communities, indeed for our provinces and our nation. I am sorry that the last speaker for the New Democratic Party has left the Chamber, but for the record I might explain that the reference of the subject matter of this Bill should be to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry simply because that standing committee is the committee responsible for dealing with matters arising out of subject matters such as this.

Efforts towards the protection of buildings of heritage or historical significance should be guided, I believe, by four principles. The four significant principles I think we should touch on is, first, that all heritage buildings under federal jurisdiction, whether belonging to the railways, government departments, or Crown Corporations such as Air Canada and CBC, in fact should fall under one umbrella legislation and be the result of one policy. Treatment of each type of building by itself—for example, the railway stations—could lend itself to difficulties with other heritage sites. In theory we could have conflicting legislation which could make almost intractable, certainly very difficult, the enactment of legislation in other areas of equal importance.

Second, the responsibility for making decisions as to the heritage or historical significance of specific buildings should be assigned to an agency which is competent and qualified in the area of heritage and our history.

Third, the costs and liabilities of preservation of a building, after it is no longer required for its owner's purposes, should not be borne by its owner. Rather, the legislation might identify an appropriate agency which would be responsible for all costs and liabilities after the building had ceased to perform its primary or historical function. This agency may logically be the one which makes application for designation of the building as having heritage or historical significance.

Fourth, the legislation should prescribe time limits for each step of the entire process beginning with application for designation of heritage or historical significance, and proceeding all the way through the appeal process to the negotiation of sale, lease or other arrangements for the building. Unless such time limits are set, the process is vulnerable to sabotage, whether wilful or unintentional, through inordinate delays in action on the part of one or more parties to the process.

Bill C-211 is in fact on the "right track" and I make the following suggestions which Hon. Members or the committee may wish to consider. First, other buildings under federal jurisdiction perhaps should be considered. Indeed, it would be my hope that they would be.

Second, responsibility for heritage designation should be assigned to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. Under its current set-up the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada is not equipped to fulfil the responsibility of heritage designation. Perhaps the Government might be persuaded to consider the reconstitution of the Board to allow for this.

Third, Mr. Speaker, identification of an appropriate agency that would pay the cost of preservation of such heritage buildings after they are no longer required for their primary purpose, such as railway stations in the case of the Hon. Member for Bow River's Private Member's Bill. Again, we may want to suggest time limits or conditions for the negotiation of sale, lease or other transfer of the building to a preserving agency.

Fourth, the Bill requires the Historic Sites and Monuments Board to hold a hearing for every application. I might suggest that, if written evidence submitted to the designated agency suffices, we could dispense with hearings for every single application and rely upon the history built up by the designating agency, and allow them to make the primary determination.

Having said what I have said, I am sure Hon. Members will agree that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) would not be an appropriate designated authority for heritage matters even as they may pertain to railway stations. Although railways fall under his jurisdiction, it has been found to be both efficient and prudent that certain aspects of the railway business, such as taxation and the environment, be governed by legislation under the jurisdiction of other Ministers. We in Transport believe that heritage is one such aspect which perhaps could be better dealt with by another agency.

I have outlined some of our concerns over the Hon. Member's proposed Bill. These are concerns generated within the Department. I know that were the Minister here he would commend as highly as all others have the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on bringing this matter to our attention. I am confident the House would want to see the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee and I repeat for his edification what I said a few moments ago, that the reason it is going to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry is that is the appropriate committee to deal with matters of the environment, within which this issue falls. The Bill commends itself. We have been chastized in the House today for having given undertakings during the election campaign, indeed in the months and, for some of us, in the years prior to that, but for not having moved immediately. This is one area that is important to Canada, a matter of great importance to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Cabinet generally. There are priorities, I suggest to the Hon. Member. We have only been in government for seven or eight months; give us a little while and we will do it because there is genuine concern on this side of the House about matters such as this. Thank you for allowing me to participate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Parproski): It has been moved by Mr. Gurbin, seconded by Mr. Fretz:

That Bill C-211 be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry; and that accordingly the Bill be withdrawn.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gurbin) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—UNITED STATES SULPHUR EMISSIONS—CHEMICAL POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in raising this matter today, and it was touched upon in November in this House in Question Period, I would like to preface my remarks by saying that we have already seen a Government which has failed to convince the United States' administration at the Quebec City Meeting that there is an urgent need to act on smokestack industries, and that we should jointly proceed with the U.S. in a clean-up operation. As you know, at this stage an increasing number of nations are recognizing the importance of reducing smokestack emissions, and increasingly the U.S. finds itself isolated in denying a policy which would allow it to reduce emissions which, as you know, amount to some 26 million tons a year. We are downwind of these emissions. This policy does not permit us to proceed jointly in the clean-up operation which we set on its way so well by policies initiated a number of years ago.

Today I would like to bring to your attention the question of attempting to convince the U.S. administration that there is an urgent need to halt the flow of toxic chemicals into the Niagara River from leaking dumpsites, industrial emissions, and from municipalities. Here again we may be facing a similar failure. It should be noted by way of background that the report released this month by the federal water policy inquiry during the public hearings which were held across Canada indicated that probably the single most widespread anxiety Canadians have about their water resource is the deterioration of its quality. The report stated that pollution, if we define the term broadly to include toxic contamination, disruption of fish and wildlife habitat, acidification and sewage discharge, attracted more testimony at the hearings than any other issue. That, I submit, should be enough to convince the Canadian Government that urgent action is required to remedy the Niagara River problem.

Again, as I did in November, I would like to ask the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) when she will pursue the recommendations contained in this October, 1984 report published by the Niagara River Toxic Committee.

Let me briefly outline some of the recommendations to refresh everyone's memory: For example, that the Niagara Falls waste water treatment plant be made operative as originally designed and as early as possible. Of course, to obtain that we have to exert pressure on our American friends and neighbours. Secondly, it recommended that the clean-up of the problem dumpsites should be undertaken by the fastest means available and not allowed to be entangled in litigation in the court system south of the border. Techniques should be developed such as recycling, or phasing out the use of many toxic substances and the development of less toxic substitutes, and incineration or chemical fixation to deal with existing and future waste. Finally, the control of persistent toxic substances should be implemented as called for by the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978.

These are key recommendations. But I would like to refer the Minister to two specific recommendations, Nos. 23 and 24, on which the United States members of the committee took a different position, a fact which we all must regret very much. Although the U.S. position is in agreement with the need for bi-national management of toxic input into the Lake Ontario basin, they believe that the first step in the implementation of such a plan is the review of all sources of toxic substances in Lake Ontario. The review is a delaying tactic against the knowledge that the presence of toxic substances is now on the increase, rather than the decrease as claimed by the U.S. members of the commission.

I would like to ask the Minister whether she is aware of this position. Has she met with the International Joint Commission to discuss the U.S. position? Has she taken a position on these two particular U.S. recommendations? It seems to me that the Minister must move on the information already obtained and on the content of the report of last October.

Has the Minister met with the EPA to work out a joint Canada-U.S. plan of action for cleaning up the Niagara River? What were the results of the meeting. I ask these questions because the Niagara River is an urgent priority. The communities on that peninsula are extremely worried. We know from the Niagara River Toxic Committee report that there are 61 sites on the U.S. side and five on the Canadian side that have been designated as having significant potential for contaminant migration into the Niagara River.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we know that these sites have been identified. Most of the recommendations have been agreed upon, but two are outstanding and they are very serious in their long-term implications. Urgent action is needed. If we wait, the cost of cleaning up the problem will continue to rise for both Canada and the United States. More importantly, we stand to jeopardize the quality of water in Lake Ontario for decades to come. Hence, the urgency of this issue, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) will recall that it was anticipated that there would be a meeting with Mr. Ruckelshaus within a week of his asking that question last fall. In fact Mr. Ruckelshaus resigned one week after the question was asked. Following that, even though a meeting had been arranged between the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and Mr. Ruckelshaus, it was necessary to delay that meeting.

Since the appointment of the new EPA administrator, Mr. Lee Thomas, there has already been one meeting and there will be another meeting in the very near future, on May 9 I believe.

The questions which were posed originally by the Member centered around two issues; one was the toxic substances in the Niagara River and the Great Lakes, and the second was acid rain. I noticed that the Member did not spend much time on the acid rain issue, although I think he would be quite amenable to the idea that it continues to be an important part of our bilateral discussions. I would like to assure the Member that those two major points will be subjects for discussion between the Minister of the Environment and Mr. Lee Thomas.

With regard to the toxic wastes in the Niagara River, the Minister has in fact spent a good deal of time on that both in consequence of the report that the Member mentioned, and in looking for constructive actions that we as Canadians can take. We must recognize, as the Member did, that the vast percentage of the contamination has continued to come, and has been identified as coming, from the American side. It is necessary to work out acceptable and constructive agreements as soon as possible.

The urgency factor which the Member has identified is clearly in the mind of the Minister. It in fact accounts for the reason for the second of two meetings and any further meetings that might be necessary in order to deal as effectively and quickly as possible with this problem. The answer to the Member's question is, very simply, yes. When he receives the detailed response from the Minister I hope he will be satisfied with the details.

PETRO-CANADA SALE OF COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY. (B) REQUEST THAT SALE BE HALTED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place to take advantage of the proceedings on the adjournment motion this evening to make some comments with respect to questions I asked of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) in this House on March 12 and on subsequent occasions regarding the sale of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery in Newfoundland.

Members will recall that Petro-Canada bought the Come-by-Chance oil refinery from receivers approximately two years ago for a price of $17 million. At the time Petro-Canada bought the refinery there was some hope that Petro-Canada in doing an analysis and undertaking some studies would determine whether it was possible for that refinery to operate as a refinery once again. In fact, the refinery was put into mothballs for some years. A number of months ago Petro-Canada announced that the continuing cost of mothballing the refinery and maintaining it was more than it wanted to bear at this time. In fact, it was putting the refinery up for sale.

In the early days quite a few companies expressed an interest in the refinery. Six posted bonds of $100,000. Most of the groups that came forward were primarily interested in the possibility of scrapping the refinery; that is taking it apart piece-meal, taking those parts of the refinery that could be rehabilitated and used elsewhere in an industrial complex and selling them to that industrial complex and basically taking the rest of the refinery and breaking it down into scrap metal.

The cost of building a similar type facility today, a new facility, is in the range of a billion dollars. It has been estimated but never in any study carried out by this Government that the cost of rehabilitating the refinery would be in the range of some $200 million.

Despite earlier anticipation that we were going to see only a number of bids from people interested in scrapping that refinery or selling it off piece-meal, it has been brought to my attention by some very excellent sources that we are going to see within the envelope of bids to be opened in a few days, on May 2, by Petro-Canada, bids that will do something more than simply scrap that refinery. These bids would propose to operate the refinery at a much reduced level from what its total operating capacity is, but nevertheless operate the refinery. That means jobs for Newfoundlanders and it means holding on to a facility, keeping it functioning for the day when perhaps a petro-chemical industry will be more promising in Newfoundland.

I asked the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources in this House what was going to be the criteria under which Petro-Canada would sell the refinery. Was the criteria simply going to be that Petro-Canada would simply attempt to get the best possible price? Is that the criteria? Is it that Petro-Canada would try and realize the maximum return on its investment, both the price that it paid for the refinery of $17 million and the cost subsequently of maintaining it? Or was the criteria going to take into consideration what in fact would be the best long-term economic interests of Newfoundland?

My concern is that we may have a series of bids, and when they are opened we may see that the highest bid comes from somebody who wants to scrap the refinery. Let us take an arbitrary figure of $50 million and that a lower bid comes from somebody who wants to put money back into the refinery, that is to spend money in retooling the refinery. Let us take an arbitrary figure of $25 million. If the criteria is simply the best return on its investments, Petro-Canada will take the $50 million bid. It has been estimated that by scrapping the refinery one can generate $90 million. Why would you not pay $50 million for a $40 million profit? My information is there are bids coming forward that will not meet a $50 million price tag, but will see Petro-Canada getting its money back, with the people making those bids saving their capital to reinvest in that refinery in order to make it work, to give the people of Come-by-Chance jobs with the opportunity and the dignity of work.

It is important when I stand here on behalf of Newfoundlanders asking for the criteria that the Minister say something more than, "that is not my business; that is Petro-Canada's". What we are talking about with this facility, and what we are talking about when Petro-Canada has a sale is not just how many cents on the dollar Petro-Canada will realize when the bids are opened. We are talking about future employment possibilities, the prosperity and dignity of people in a province where unemployment is in excess of 30 per cent.

What are the criteria? Will the Parliamentary Secretary on behalf of the Minister assure the House and, through the House, the people of Newfoundland that more than Petro-Canada's realized profit or benefit from the time it has held the refinery will be at stake when those bids are assessed? Will he assure the House that the long-term economic benefit of Newfoundlanders and their province will be the guiding criteria in assessing who should get that refinery?

If those kinds of criteria are not in place, we shall see the possibility of opportunities lost, the ability to create jobs lost, and an even stronger sense on the part of Newfoundlanders, who live far away from the centre but nevertheless are as proud Canadians as anyone, that this country does not work for them when it can and when it should.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to strike a small deal with the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). I would like to help him with his anxiety attack, as long as I get from him an assurance that he will not raise unnecessary anxiety in the people who live in his Province of Newfoundland.

I give him the assurance which he asked of the Minister. There has been no deal struck. There has been no limitation of any option as to what might happen in terms of the future of that refinery. All options are open. The Hon. Member should recognize very clearly, being the astute representative he is, that it would be very untimely to start talking about specific details of any one option. Those matters rest in the hands of those who must make the final decision. All options are open. There is no limitation.

For the second half of our deal, the Hon. Member should look back at his question and realize that he tried to indicate that somehow the future of the refinery will determine the future of Newfoundland's relationship to the Hibernia oil fields. I would like to make very clear, in accordance with statements the Minister has made many times, that that in no way has there been any implication, and there will in no way be any reflection on the ability of Newfoundland to have its options in terms of Hibernia. In fact, as the Minister has stated, there is a very clear ability on the part of Newfoundland to have an option of first refusal for offshore supplies, as provided in the Atlantic Accord. The Atlantic Accord in itself assures that the interests of Newfoundland are and always will be protected.

I know the Hon. Member would want to fulfil his margin of the small deal which we have just struck by ensuring that his constituents know that Newfoundland is well looked after by its many representatives in the House of Commons, and that there will be no deals struck which are not in their long-term best interests.

RAILWAYS—ATLANTIC LIMITED—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to deal with the Government's commitment to return the service of the Atlantic Limited to the Maritimes and Upper Canada. Prior to the last election the Conservative Party committed itself to restoring that service. I am absolutely delighted and extremely proud the Government has done just that. The service will be restored as of June 1. It is certainly an indication of the sincerity of the Government in terms of fulfilling its commitments. This is one of many pledges the Progressive Conservative Party undertook prior to the last election, prior to forming the Government, which it has honoured throughout its early term of office. They certainly are to be congratulated for doing just that.

There are a number of concerns that have been expressed by numerous constituents of the maritime region who will once again be able to enjoy the use of this train from Halifax via Saint John on its way to Montreal. It is important that we ensure that the restoration of this train is in such a fashion that it will be utilized to its fullest extent. I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister, through the Parliamentary Secretary, just a few of those concerns, two specific and one general.

The specific concern I refer to is the apparent intention of VIA rail at the beginning to have only three agents at the VIA rail station in the city of Saint John. When the rail service was discontinued there were seven passenger agents, some of whom doubled as baggage assistants. The concern is quite obvious. If the service is to be utilized to its fullest extent and to its best opportunity, obviously the service people must be in place to ensure that the train runs on time. People must not be inconvenienced by poor service at the ticket counter. Tickets should be readily available. There should not be an opinion formed of VIA rail that the service is less than first class and, therefore, a disincentive to people to use the line. This is basically what my entire address is about this evening. I ask the Minister to look at the staffing positions in the City of Saint John at the VIA rail station to ensure that sufficient people are in place to service the needs.

Second, apparently the baggage car is not going to be manned between several stations along the way, for example, between Saint John and Moncton. This means that people who get on the train at Sussex, which is a focal point in Fundy-Royal, are not going to be able to check their luggage. Their luggage will have to be placed in the car in which their accommodation is, whether it be the day coach, sleeping car or whatever. This will be a terrible inconvenience to a great number of people.

It is extremely important that the baggage car be accessible at all points at which this train will make stops along the route so that people will not be inconvenienced, with another disincentive to people to use that line. After all, if ridership is down, there will be those who will point and say that the service is not good, that it should never have been restored. Therefore, we must make every effort to ensure that the service is there.

Another matter of concern is that there must be some attention paid to restoring the equipment. For the most part, the equipment is 30 years old. When it was announced that the service would be reinstated there was a commitment on the part of the Government to put a fair amount of money into the kitty for restoring the old cars and replacing the old engines. For example, more than $3 million will be spent to refurbish coaches and locomotives serving the Atlantic line, and another $6 million to $7 million for upgrading tracks and stations. The equipment needs to be replaced.

I would like to read into the record what the rail passenger action force recommended. It recommended that VIA rail "replace at the earliest opportunity its outdated rolling stock with modern state of the art high capacity proven technology cars and locomotives to the highest degree possible with labour components and engineering obtained from across Canada." I support that. I urge the Minister to get on with the program of replacing and updating the equipment. That will take three years if those orders are placed now. We will then have new equipment. The old steam heated outdated equipment of 30 years ago will be gone. People will be further encouraged to use this very valuable and vital service to Atlantic Canada. Again, my congratulations.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I share in enthusiasm for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) of this country as much as the Hon. Member. Indeed, on January 15 of this year the Minister of Transport announced the reinstitution and restoration of some six rail passenger services in Canada; three of them of a national nature and three of them of a regional nature. We are, of course, speaking of the Super Continental line going from Winnipeg to Edmonton to Vancouver and the Canadian line going from Montreal to Ottawa to Sudbury. The three regional services are the Montreal to Sherbrooke line, the Toronto to Peterborough to Havelock line and the Mont-Joli to Montreal line. Last but certainly not least, and dear to the hearts of all of us in the Maritimes, is the Atlantic line.

The Atlantic line will be a full-service passenger train with dining cars and a complete range of sleeper and day-nighter coaches. Trains will leave Montreal in the early evening arriving in Halifax the next afternoon with the return trip leaving Halifax in the early afternoon and arriving in Montreal the next morning. Stops along the way will include such major cities as Sherbrooke, Saint John and Moncton, as well as numerous smaller towns in both Canada and, I am proud to say, the State of Maine.

To answer in part another question raised by the distinguished Hon. Member, funds allocated to restore the services will be approximately $40 million and some 2,000 jobs will be created both directly and indirectly. I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure we all agree, that the restoration of these services goes a mighty long way toward emphasizing this Government's intention to keep its commitments.

With respect to the other two questions raised by the distinguished Hon. Member, there are worthy questions and I will take them as representations. I will solicit the Minister's support in ensuring that adequate agents are on station in Saint John and that the baggage car, if at all possible, will be manned. The Hon. Member has made a good point.

The House resumed from Monday, April 29, consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 9 (Mr. Axworthy), No. 10 (Mr. Langdon), No. 11 (Mr. Axworthy), Nos. 14 and 15 (Mr. Langdon), No. 16 (Mr. Axworthy) and Nos. 17 and 18 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4183).

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding, I have some comments to make with regard to the Bill. I am waiting for distribution to the House Leaders and those involved. I am ready to rule on the amendments, but as Hon. Members can imagine, the ruling is almost as long as the original document. If it is all right with the House, I think it would be courteous if I waited two seconds while the pages distributed copies to the House officers.

Before proceeding, I am now in a position to rule on those motions about which the Chair expressed reservations on Tuesday, April 23.

The procedural contributions made by Hon. Members on Thursday last were of great assistance to the Chair in preparing this ruling.

1. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) did not argue the admissibility of Motion No. 3 but offered new wording in an attempt to make it procedurally acceptable. On the surface, the suggested amendment by the Hon. Member appears to render the motion less argumentative. However, the Chair is still faced with the fact that the motion seeks to alter the purpose of the Bill by focusing the thrust of attention on past foreign investment. This was never contemplated in the Bill. I must agree with the remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and rule that the motion goes beyond the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading. In this regard, I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5).

2. On Motion No. 5, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) went to great lengths in analyzing the principle of the Bill and focused his remarks on what he considers to be the discriminatory aspects reflected in the purpose clause and in subsequent details of the Bill. I thank the Hon. Member for his valuable contribution in this respect as it has facilitated the Chair's understanding of this piece of complex legislation.

In that the purpose clause differentiates between Canadian and non-Canadian investors and insofar as significant investments in Canada by non-Canadians are reviewable in order to ensure such benefit to Canada, then the Hon. Member is correct, that there is "discrimination". However, that discrimination is limited in its scope. These limitations are defined in subsequent clauses of the Bill.

The House is still faced with the fact that Motion No. 5 would bring in a discriminatory element by limiting the Minister's assistance to Canadian investors only. Such a restriction towards non-Canadians goes beyond the limited form of discrimination specified in the Bill. Thus the Chair has no alternative but to rule Motion No. 5 out of order.

3. In Motion No. 13, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor seeks to introduce new conditions of conduct for Canadian businesses owned and controlled by non-Canadians. This is clearly discriminatory towards non-Canadians and again contradicts the purpose of the Bill as agreed to at second reading. It further proposes new provisions to be included in the Bill and thus goes beyond its scope. I must therefore rule that this motion cannot be proposed to the House.

4. The Chair had not seen any problem with Motion No. 14 and had grouped it for debate with other motions. The Hon. the President of the Privy Council argued, however, on Thursday last, that the motion was out of order on the grounds that it went beyond the scope of the Bill, and was irrelevant and redundant, in that it gave to the Minister the exercise of powers which would infringe upon provincial labour jurisdiction. Upon reflection, after listening to the arguments of the Minister, I will in no way rule as to whether or not the motion would infringe upon provincial jurisdiction, as that is a legal question and not one of procedure. However, the motion is irrelevant to the clause it attempts to amend. As stated in Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the Bill—

For this reason, I have no alternative but to rule that Motion No. 14 is out of order.

5. As the Chair indicated in its preliminary statement on Tuesday last, Motion No. 21 goes against the principle of the Bill and is therefore out of order.

6. With reference to Motion No. 22, I indicated this motion infringed on the financial initiative of the Crown. The Hon.

Member for Essex-Windsor proposes in his motion that a board of directors be established, including a full-time president, and that the specific allocation of money for the president would be divided among the part-time directors and the president, thus leading to no extra charge on the Treasury. I must congratulate the Hon. Member on such an original approach. That a president would be willing to share his salary with his board of directors, thereby leading to no charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, is quite novel. However, the Bill does not provide for the establishment of any board of directors. The Chair must rule that Motion No. 22 infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown. In this connection, I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 540.

7. Motion No. 26, as I have already indicated, adds a new exemption to the particular clause it seeks to amend. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry argued that the principle of recognizing certain exemptions has already been accepted in the Bill and this motion merely offers a further exemption. That may well be so; however, I cannot ignore the fact that the motion, while adding this exemption, discriminates against non-Canadians. As I indicated earlier in this ruling, such discrimination was not envisaged in the Bill when it was given second reading. Consequently, I must rule that this motion goes beyond the principle of the Bill and is therefore out of order.

8. Motions Nos. 28 and 29 clearly go beyond the principle of the Bill and, in one case, infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown. They are out of order.

9. The Chair had indicated that Motion No. 33 sought to establish a committee not contemplated in the Bill, was a new proposition and went beyond the four corners of the Bill. As well, Motions Nos. 54, 62, 65, 66, 71, 73, 92 and 93 were consequential on this motion. The Hon. President of the Privy Council, in his remarks, thought it highly questionable that a Cabinet committee could be created by an Act of Parliament, a doubt which also exists in my mind. However, I will not comment further on this. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry pointed out that the Minister in committee had indicated that he intended to consult with colleagues in Cabinet on matters pertaining to this legislation. While the Hon. Member's proposal to formalize such consultation may be laudable, the creation of such a committee was not contemplated in the Bill. Therefore, it is the opinion of the Chair that Motion No. 33 goes beyond the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading. The motion also offers a new proposition and should not be put to the House. Similarly, Motions Nos. 54, 62, 65, 66, 71, 73, 92 and 93 also will not be proposed.

10. With respect to Motion No. 38A, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor stated that this motion should not have been grouped with Motions Nos. 34, 35, 36 and 38. After taking a closer look, the Chair agrees with the Hon. Member and Motion No. 38A will be proposed to the House separately and, if necessary, voted on separately.

11. Motion No. 37 raises once again the matter of discrimination against non-Canadians and goes against the purpose of the Bill. Based on my earlier remarks when dealing with Motion No. 3, concerning the nature of discrimination, I must disagree with the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor. I therefore rule Motion No. 37 out of order. These remarks apply to Motion No. 39, which is also out of order.

12. As I indicated in my preliminary statement on Tuesday of last week, Motion No. 40 contains a new proposal not contemplated in the Bill and is therefore out of order.

13. With regard to Motions Nos. 42 to 49 inclusive, I must, respectfully and with regret, inform the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry and the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor that they were not successful in persuading the Chair that these motions are procedurally acceptable. These motions are all similar efforts to introduce into the Bill types of investments that would require review which were not foreseen in the Bill as adopted by the House at second reading. Therefore, these motions will not be proposed to the House. As Motion No. 51 is consequential on these motions, it falls into the same category.

14. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor argued that Motions Nos. 55 to 61 attempt to clarify and make more specific the factors set out in Clause 20 of the Bill. The Chair agrees with the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member. In attempting to do so, however, the Chair must point out to the Hon. Member that the motions introduce new proposals into the Bill, proposals which are outside the scope of the Clause. While I fully understand the Hon. Member's intention, the Chair is bound by the procedural rules and precedents, as stated in May's Twentieth Edition at page 555:

> An amendment is out of order if it is . . . beyond the scope of the clause under consideration—

Therefore, I have no alternative but to rule Motions No. 55 to 61 out of order.

15. In relation to Motion No. 64, I must disagree with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. This motion seeks to introduce into the Bill indirectly what cannot be done directly, namely, a definition of the term "net benefit". Further, it goes beyond the purpose and scope of the Bill. With regret, this motion cannot be proposed to the House.

16. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry indicated that Motions Nos. 70 and 72 have different objectives and should be voted on separately. I agree with the Hon. Member, therefore, Motions Nos. 70 and 72 will be voted on separately, but shall remain grouped with Motion No. 68 for the purposes of debate.

17. In my statement to the House on Tuesday last, I had indicated some doubt in the mind of the Chair in relation to Motions Nos. 78 and 79 and had asked the Hon. Member to explain their purpose. After taking his remarks into consideration, the Chair is of the opinion that these motions, which seek to reduce the necessary minimum of one-third voting shares to 5 per cent or less in order to obtain control of a corporation, are simply modifying the conditions of acquisition of control.

The Hon. President of the Privy Council argued that to reduce the level to 5 per cent expanded the jurisdiction of the Agency. In the opinion of the Chair the Agency, as defined in the Bill, already has the authority to review acquisition of control. Therefore, these motions are in order and will be proposed to the House together for debate and vote on Motion No. 78 will dispose of Motion No. 79.

18. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor argued quite eloquently in favour of Motion No. 80 and has convinced the Chair to allow this motion to be proposed to the House. Motion No. 80 will be debated and voted on separately.

19. Motion No. 82 gives to a committee of the House the power to approve regulations. This clearly was not contemplated in the Bill which gives such power to the Governor-in-Council. Therefore, this motion is out of order.

20. Motion No. 83, as indicated by the Chair on Tuesday last, goes beyond the scope of the clause it is attempting to amend and is therefore out of order. As Motion No. 84 is consequential on this motion, it also is out of order.

21. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor asked the Chair to consider further whether Motions Nos. 85 to 88 were consequential to Motions Nos. 83 to 84. Upon reflection, Motions Nos. 86, 87 and 88 are consequential on Motion No. 83 and cannot be put to the House. As Motion No. 85 deals with the disclosure of information in connection with legal proceedings, its subject matter allows the motion to stand by itself. It is my intention to put the motion to the House separately and have it voted on separately.

22. In relation to Motions Nos. 90 and 91, I regret that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry has not convinced the Chair to change its first impression of these two motions. As I previously stated, Motion No. 91 infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown and is therefore out of order. As Motion No. 90 is consequential on this motion, it is also out of order.

23. Finally, for the reasons given by the Chair in its preliminary statement, Motion No. 94 is out of order and will not be proposed to the House.

This concludes the remarks I have to make in relation to the procedural acceptability of certain motions. For the benefit of Hon. Members, I will enumerate those motions ruled out of order. They are Motions Nos. 3, 5, 13, 14, 21, 22, 26, 28, 29, 33, 37, 39, 40, 42 to 49 inclusive, 51, 54 to 62 inclusive, 64 to 66 inclusive, 71, 73, 82 to 84 inclusive, 86 to 88 inclusive and 90 to 94 inclusive.

I must apologize to the House for the length of this ruling, but I am sure Hon. Members will understand that, with the number of motions proposed, the complexity of the legislation and the high calibre of the procedural arguments made, the Chair was obligated to weigh carefully and to answer fully the procedural concerns of Hon. Members.

Debate will now continue on the group of motions now before the House, with the exception of Motion No. 14 as ruled on previously by the Chair.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I never cease to be amazed at your capacity to make these magnificent rulings. It is the capacity to read them, I suppose, which amazes me more than the making of them. Maybe some day we will be in the position in which we will not have to do this.

First, on behalf of my colleague, I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the kind words which you expressed during your ruling. I am not really talking about that, however, but with regard to the presentations of the arguments which I think everyone in the House felt were extremely well done by all Hon. Members who made representations during the submissions which were made to your preliminary ruling.

Let me talk for two or three moments about the reasons we are attempting to make these subsequent changes to the legislation. The experience we have had over the years with respect to the degree of power which the Minister has is an experience which has led most of us to come to the conclusion that many of the areas we would define on an ongoing basis as "problem areas" seem to be outside the scope of the Minister to resolve. I have on numerous occasions, as have other Hon. Members of the House, come across situations where companies operating in Canada, or seeking to operate in Canada, were prepared to make substantial commitment on paper guaranteeing such things as long-term employment, investment in areas of research and development, and assuring the Government through FIRA—and I now imagine through this legislation—that their intentions were of the highest order and that they were committed to Canada, as we would expect them to be.

Unfortunately—and I want to stress that word—the experience in many instances has not been in keeping with the commitment. All too frequently we have found that after permission was given to either purchase an existing operation or to establish a new operation in Canada, the performance level, when measured against the commitment made, fell substantially short of realizing the goals. So what we are asking is that the powers of the Minister be more clearly defined and that the Minister in fact have the necessary power to deal with some of the problems which, quite frankly, not only did exist in the last few years but continue to exist. We are dealing with basically the same people and with the same corporate entities, in most instances, and if they were not prepared to live up to their commitments voluntarily in the past, then one would have reason to doubt that their attitudes would have now changed significantly. And it would not be unreasonable to think that they would not be prepared to live up to their commitments in the future.

We would very much like to have the powers of the Minister more clearly understood when these circumstances arise. One example which I raised yesterday in Question Period is the take-over of Canadian Porcelain Limited by, I believe, Lapp Industries from New York State. That is an example of a situation which cries out for investigation. It is not unique. It is not the first time it has happened. But the fact that it has happened again demands that we make some provision in the law to permit the Minister to step in and terminate, if need be, a proposal such as the one we now see before the receiver on behalf of the Royal Bank which is handling the problems of Canadian Porcelain.

Just so Hon. Members understand the dilemma which confronts me and the workers at Canadian Porcelain, Canadian Porcelain is in receivership not totally but primarily because of the actions of a number of foreign-based companies, including Lapp Industries which dumped its product into the Canadian market and, therefore, undermined the viability of this Canadian company which had been in existence for 80 years or more. Canadian Porcelain had been producing insulators for electrical use of a quality which had met the demands of the market-place throughout that entire period, but Lapp Industries, together with others, sold into the Canadian market at below their own cost price. It was found by a tribunal to have dumped. The effect of that action by that company and others was to undermine the viability of Canadian Porcelain and therefore make it impossible for Canadian Porcelain to maintain its position in the market-place. The ultimate result was that the company went into receivership.

Subsequently the employees, 85 of them or thereabouts, decided that this was a good plant with a future potential and they got together with a number of community and church groups in Hamilton. They had the support of the Labour Council, City Council and I think of every Member of Parliament from the area in seeking out another way to continue to operate the plant located in the west end of Hamilton. After undertaking a viability study, they were able to convince the credit union and CUNA that this would be a useful thing for them to become involved in.

They began a process of providing the basic funding for the purchase of the assets which would have permitted the plant to continue to operate. About a week or 10 days ago they made an offer of $1.1 million to the receiver, Peat Marwick. What they were not told when their offer was refused was that there was another offer to be considered. They asked Peat Marwick to give them an idea of what they needed in the way of financing in order to get acceptance of their proposal. They were led to believe that an offer in the neighbourhood of $1.3 million would be satisfactory. They went back to their financial principals and renegotiated and got agreement for $1.3 million. They took that to their co-operative board made up of employees and some others, and got approval for an offer of $1.3 million on Friday last. They then instructed the offer to be drawn up for presentation on Monday last to the receiver in Toronto. But in the meantime the receiver sold the company. Although I am not absolutely clear on how much, we are told that the receiver sold it for an amount in the neighbourhood of $1.25 million, and they sold it to LAPP Industries. Without having the decency to discuss the potential sale with those who were working in the plant, those who would put together the co-operative, without even giving them a chance to enter another offer, the receiver sold the plant to the very company which had been a part of the group which had undermined the operation in the first place.

It strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that there is something dreadfully wrong with that. There is something dreadfully wrong with a situation which will permit a foreign company to undermine its Canadian competitor, force it into receivership and then purchase it from the receiver to the detriment of the workers and in spite of the fact that there was an offer of something close to equal value already on the table from a group of Canadians. I think that is why we have to extend the powers of the Minister.

As you know, I have asked the Minister to step in now and stop it but I know he is going to tell me that he does not have the power. Well, I am going to tell him that we will give him the power. Bring in an amendment to any piece of legislation and we will give him the power to stop what is going on in this case. But more importantly, we will give him the power to deal with these kinds of situations as and when they arise in the future. That is what we are talking about. That is protecting Canada. That is giving Canadians a chance. That is ensuring that they are not undermined by the might and financial strength of their competitors elsewhere. That ensures that we do not see a further deterioration of Canada's position with regard to domestic involvement in our economy as opposed to foreign investment and involvement in our economy. I think it is absolutely and vitally important that amendments such as those which are before us now become part of this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a certain apprehension, having to follow the eloquent words of my colleague. I would like to speak in support of the group of amendments that have been moved on this particular aspect of the Bill. I will focus my comments on the impact which the main Bill will have if the amendments are not accepted. Before I do that, I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), for giving up his position on the schedule to allow me to speak so that I can return to committee.

In the last six months since I became a member of the House I have heard members of the Government talk about investment and about how they perceive the world. The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) is here today. I urge him to consider these words. I am getting the impression that the Government feels that the only way to create jobs and improve our economy is to throw money at it. In the past we in the New Democratic Party have been accused of wanting to throw taxpayers' money at things to make them go away. That label was also applied to the Liberal Government in years past. Through this Bill all the Government wants to do is bring money in from outside our boundaries to solve everything. They believe that will end all of our economic woes.

In committee as well I am hearing that there is a need to bring in entrepreneurs. However, the definition of entrepreneurs is those with bucks, not necessarily those with ideas. In committee we have heard about the reality of Canada. I would like to quote from a presentation of an old seatmate of mine, Dr. Stuart Smith, the head of the Science Council of Canada. He stated:

> The missing link is that as individual Canadians and as Canadian institutions we have developed habits of investment which are not appropriate to the rapidly changing international picture. We have developed, over the years, a reliance upon our resource sector to carry us through and a feeling that we could basically ignore the export markets for knowledge-intensive goods, high value-added goods. We have left those either to foreign companies who have not entered the export market because they basically did that from their home enterprise, or we have just ignored them completely and continued to produce very standard products in textiles, furniture and gloves. Generally speaking, we have not been in precision machinery or advanced robotics or any of these things. Now if you say, does that mean we have enough Canadian capital? Well, yes and no; yes, we have enough Canadian savings, but it is not being turned into capital in the sense that it is capital in a given industry.

Investment Canada is a fine name for this Bill. We should be using this Bill as a tool to convince Canadians to invest their savings in new growth industries such as software, electronics and robotics. We should not be spending our time trying to drag in money from outside our borders. Investment Canada should be required to study all proposals to sell existing Canadian companies to foreigners and then to go on a search for capital.

When a company wants to hire someone from outside our borders, they are first required to do a job search. They must go through Canada Employment and Immigration and search from sea to sea to discover if there is a Canadian who is qualified to do that job. In the majority of cases they find a Canadian who is qualified and prepared to relocate for the purpose of achieving gainful employment.

I suggest that Investment Canada should do the same thing. Canadian companies which wish to obtain foreign capital should be required to do a capital search from sea to sea to discover if there is money which is currently sitting in a bank account that could be better used in the production of new wealth and new jobs. That is the approach which the Government should be taking.

There will be times when it will be necessary to bring money in from beyond our borders. We must do that in a very controlled way. We must ensure that that capital is used for the benefit of Canadians. It does not do our society any good when someone buys a plant, perhaps using our money to finance it, and does not create any new wealth or new jobs. Rather, they set the plant up for the day when the parent company, in the time of recession, pulls back its horns and circles the wagons, so to speak. The plant in Canada is the first victim. We saw very clear examples of that in the mid to late 1970s throughout this land, particularly in Ontario. This Bill is trying to turn the clock back instead of trying to develop a mechanism that will allow Canadians to invest in Canada to bring about growth and development of new jobs and new wealth.

Another concern which is addressed by one of the amendments is that all Canadian businesses which are owned and controlled by non-Canadians must respect the rights of the workers for collective bargaining. In the pulp and paper industry in Canada we are now facing very harsh competition from the southern United States. In those southern United States they have so-called "right to work" laws which basically means the right to have an unorganized, non-union facility which pays bottom of the barrel dollars. We have such companies investing in the pulp and paper industry in northwestern Ontario and their record is very dismal. If these companies are going to invest in Canada they must work by our rules. They must follow the accepted approach to worker-owner operations that we have built up over the years in Canada. Unless we put those rules in place, not only will we allow non-Canadians to buy us out, but they will severely lower our standards of living and the rights of workers on the job.

I believe the amendments before us are extremely important because they attempt to make a bad Bill slightly better. Although we would like to see this Bill withdrawn completely, we urge the Government to consider these motions seriously and incorporate them into the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, we are now in the last stages of the debate on Bill C-15, the legislation being proposed to replace the former Foreign Investment Review Act. Throughout the debate on this Bill, at the second reading stage and in committee, we have been urging the Government to reconsider its approach to establishing a form of control over foreign investment in Canada.

Despite their efforts both at the second reading stage and in committee, up to now the Official Opposition and the opposition represented by the New Democratic Party have been unable to persuade the Government to modify its general approach.

Now, at the report stage, we have a chance to modify the content of certain clauses of the Bill. Among the proposals that were made, Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, consider three of the motions, namely, Motions Nos. 4, 6 and 16. I intend to deal simultaneously with Motions 4 and 16 which concern the powers granted the Minister under the proposed legislation.

The attitude taken by the Government, and especially by the Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is, I think, an extremely arrogant one. The Minister is empire building. He wants to keep the decision-making power to himself. However, we believe, and that is the objective of Motion No. 4, that a distinction must be made between setting policy and policy implementation.

If Bill C-15 . . . Government Members will realize later on, when they are facing specific problems related to take-overs in their own ridings, they will see how what I am going to say will affect them and maybe, in a couple of years, they will say: Maybe we should have listened a bit more: it might have been a good idea.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, when Sinclair Stevens says no!

Mr. Garneau: In fact, there is more to it than that, because in the Bill, in Part VI, the Government decided to create an agency. Why create an agency? They could have simply—and actually that would have made perfect sense, considering the content of Clause 4—they could have simply entrusted the administration of this legislation, as is customary in other cases, to regular public servants, to an assistant deputy minister or the department's administrative services. However, they decided to establish an agency. The only reason I can see is in order to impose a certain degree of objectivity on the administration of this Act, and to maintain a certain distance between political decisions and administrative decisions. Otherwise, they would not have bothered establishing the agency. I do not see why the present agency is being set up under the conditions set forth in the proposed legislation. If we look at the CRTC, for instance, which operates more or less like other government agencies, the Government, having received a mandate from the general public, sets policy but entrusts policy administration to a group of professionals who implement the policy.

If the Government is establishing this agency, I wonder why, in Clause 4, the minister is not only responsible for setting policy but also for managing and administering the Act. I think this is an abuse of power which is going to create problems, not just for the businessmen who want to buy or sell companies, but for the Minister and the Government, and there will probably be situations that are far more serious than the Government has foreseen, and the result will also be that most decisions on foreign take-overs will become political decisions.

We all know it is not particularly pleasant to have to consider the political side of a case that should be analyzed only on the basis of content and merit. That is why we suggested that Clauses 4 be amended to separate the functions that are really the Government's, that are really the Minister's, functions whose purpose is to establish the policy for the agency created under Clause 6, I believe, of the Bill before the House, from the policies that form the framework for the agency's decision-making role. We therefore propose, in Motion No. 4, that these two be separated.

Mr. Speaker, I must stress that unless the administrative function is kept separate from the political function, there will be abuse of power, and this will put the Minister and the Government in some very difficult situations. I maintain that the agency, by its very existence, becomes a kind of administrative tribunal. Has there ever been an administrative tribunal that had to examine a case, render a decision and subsequently, submit a decision, that could be quasi-judicial, to a minister for approval? This is tantamount to putting political, administrative and quasi-judicial functions all in the same bag, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, with due respect, that this amendment should be given serious consideration.

If the Government is not prepared to separate setting policy from administering such policy, if it refuses to realize the risks it is taking in so doing, at least it should accept our motion concerning the setting up of a departmental committee so that one minister will not have sole responsibility for making such an important decision, otherwise we will get situations—

Mr. Boudria: Like Domtar.

Mr. Garneau: Like Domtar, for instance, where we were told by the Minister's colleagues—that is what the papers told us, and the Minister of Public Works said so publicly—that it was a departmental decision, that he knew nothing about it, and we all know the uproar that caused. They finally found a solution to the problem: Quebec money is going to pay for the Domtar project, since the funds for Domtar were funds already allocated under the regional development agreement and would normally have been used for other purposes. Here they tried to get around the problem and they more or less wanted to reverse a decision made by the Minister. However, the proposed legislation will make it possible for one person, and today that is the Minister we know, tomorrow it may be somebody else, but the fact remains that that person will have the power to make decisions involving thousands and millions of dollars and affecting hundreds of employees. One single person will, as it were, have the right to decide in matters of life or death. That is why I submit that if the Government is not prepared to accept the amendment proposed in Motion No. 4, it should at least consider the proposal contained in Motion No. 16, which is aimed at setting up a departmental committee to review departmental decisions and consider certain regional aspects. I could take Domtar as an example or the Pêcheries Cartier, for instance, and there are many other examples and other industries that have a considerable impact on employment and on the lives of hundreds of Canadian workers. By including the possibility of appealing either to the entire Cabinet or at least to a Cabinet committee, I think this would have a balancing effect on these important decisions. I would like to get back to the point I stressed previously: I think the Progressive Conservative Members, the backbenchers, may be very pleased to find—

Mr. Boudria: Even some Ministers may be.

Mr. Garneau: Perhaps some Ministers as well, who are not aware of decisions when they are made at the departmental level only, and it would give them a chance to ask questions and respond to requests from their ridings or regions.

Mr. Speaker, my time is about to expire. How much time do I have left?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Less than a minute.

Some Hon. Members: Proceed!

Mr. Garneau: Less than a minute! The last amendment I wanted to discuss concerns the possibility of giving the agency the authority to seek out actively Canadian buyers across the country. I think this is a suggestion that could appropriately be included in the legislation, because if an offer is made for a company . . . We know that often, businessmen whose children are not interested in taking over the business and who want to dispose of their investment when they reach retirement age, often have to and would like to sell, and if the agency were empowered to help the owner of a company to sell to Canadians rather than to non-Canadians, I think it would be an important adjunct to the legislation. I hope that this House and especially Members on the Government side will at least want to consider these very serious proposals.

● (1150)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words on the Investment Canada Bill. It is a very fundamental piece of legislation. It really separates the Government's view as to how we should proceed in terms of investment from the United States and from other countries from the view of the Official Opposition.

Motion No. 4 proposes that the Minister be responsible for the administration of the Act and the management and direction of the agency established by Section 6. Our position is that the public servants who will be working in Investment Canada should receive their policy direction from the Minister and from Cabinet. Of course, under this Bill the Minister will have the power to approve applications which exceed the limit of $5 million. Fundamentally we disagree with that, in that there will be hundreds of applications under that limit. This could have an adverse effect upon small companies. A foreign investor could come into the country, buy out a small company and shut down the manufacturing part of the plant. Hopefully the company would at least retain the Canadian sales force, but in some cases such companies may lay off the sales force and run the entire operation from the United States. We think that Canadians will lose control if the limit is raised to $5 million.

At one time the City of Sault Ste. Marie had three independent dairies. Now it is controlled by Beatrice Foods, a large multinational company. That is happening all over the country. It is not that all foreign investment is bad. It certainly is not, and we want to encourage it. Large companies from the United States could come in here, not necessarily with adverse or negative thoughts about Canadian employment. In many cases that does not even occur to them. Companies are in business to make a profit. No one would deny them that. To some extent FIRA was a bargaining tool; so long as a company did not indicate that it would shut down its manufacturing operations in Canada, move all its research and development to the United States and not give Canada a portion of international markets, its application would probably be approved. Sometimes, if the companies were dishonest enough, these things occurred.

When responsible companies appear before a government agency for approval or review, it should be pointed out to them that we are a country with 1.5 million unemployed, that we would like to see their manufacturing plants here, that we would like to see them try to shoot for a share of the international market, that we would like to see them committed to the long-term expansion and development of manufacturing facilities and plants, and that we would like to see a good portion of the research and development being carried out in Canada. In that event most companies would say that it is not unreasonable for Canadians to make those requests, in that we have higher unemployment than has the United States and we have smaller markets and want to see a portion of them retained.

The Minister has shown that his concern is just how many bucks are involved, regardless of from where they come or what the long-term future will be. I do not think we could give all that power to a worse Minister. He will sit in his ivory tower on the thirty-third floor of Place de Ville and make unilateral decisions. Cabinet Ministers from P.E.I., British Columbia and Quebec, just to name a few, will not have a say because the Minister will unilaterally make decisions.

Last week I heard an interview on the CBC concerning large companies and reverse take-overs which will take place when there is no FIRA to review them. The Minister being able to make unilateral decisions—and if an application is below the $5 million limit, there will be no review at all—is not good for the country.

The Tories are rather embarrassed about the tremendous increase in Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry during the first three or four years of the National Energy Program. Canadian ownership has increased dramatically, from some 28 per cent to around 40 per cent. If this Bill ultimately passes, everything is abandoned and the percentage of Canadian ownership starts to slide, it will be interesting to see just how proud the Tories will be of that loss of Canadian ownership for which we fought very hard during the 1970s. Instead of dividends being distributed to Canadian owners, they will be sent across the border to the United States. The ultimate disadvantage will be to Canadians generally.

It is rather interesting that in the whole scenario of Canadian ownership the Tories said that if we tried to have more Canadian ownership, oil and gas exploration would be drastically reduced.

Mrs. Mailly: That's false.

Mr. Foster: The Tories spend hours opposing that. If we look at our energy-petroleum situation in this country today, we see that we have about a 33 year horizon of reserves and shut-in natural gas. So much natural gas has been discovered that it is not profitable at this stage to explore for more. If we look at oil reserves, we can see that the projections of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources show energy self-sufficiency on a net basis for oil through to the end of the century. This shows that Canadian ownership is not adverse either in the petroleum industry or in other industries of this country. I hope that these amendments by our Party will be accepted by the House.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased once again to rise to take part in this debate which is about the fundamental direction that this country will be taking with respect to basic decisions on our economic future. This is an historic debate, a debate which profoundly affects the lives of not just our own constituents, particularly in areas in which there is a significant amount of foreign-owned industry, but the lives of all Canadians, their children and their children's children. Ultimately we are talking about the future direction of this country and whether that direction and our objective as a nation is going to be shaped here in Canada by Canadians, subject to the priority of Canadians, or whether instead, as has been advocated in this Bill by the Government, those fundamental priorities will be decided outside Canada in foreign corporate boardrooms, based not on Canadian priorities but on the global international priorities of multinational corporations, whose only concern is for the global bottom line. That is the essence of what this debate is all about.

Many witnesses appeared before the committee which gave this Bill careful study until the Government cut off debate in that committee. What we deeply regret in the context of these amendments and of our proposals generally on this Bill is that it would appear that the Government has fundamentally ignored the thrust of the representations that were made by the witnesses who appeared before that committee on this important Bill.

The amendments of my colleague from Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), who has been doing such an outstanding job in leading the debate on behalf of the New Democratic Party on this vital legislation, fall into several broad categories. All of them deal with the underlying thrust of the Bill and the duties and powers of the Minister who has the obligation to implement this Bill on behalf of the Government. Perhaps nowhere else than in this grouping of amendments is the distinction more clear between the approach of the Government, which effectively is to throw the door wide open to foreign capital without any restrictions whatsoever, and the approach of the New Democratic Party, which is to say that we are prepared to accept that foreign investment can be beneficial to the people of Canada, but that investment must be made on terms and conditions which are ultimately decided by the people of Canada.

Let us look at the amendment set out in Motion No. 10. The Government's recommendation with respect to the duties and powers of the Minister states that the Minister shall assist in the development of industrial and economic policies that affect investment in Canada. The amendment of my colleague from Essex-Windsor goes far beyond that in its scope. It does not just call upon the Minister to assist in the development of these policies which will ultimately result in the demise of Canadian economic sovereignty, but to, and I quote:

> —develop medium term and long term public and private industrial sector investment guidelines consistent with an industrial strategy that emphasizes full employment, growth, diversification, autonomy and export competitiveness of the Canadian economy;

What a profound contrast between the Government's approach, which basically says that the Minister may assist in the development of certain policies, and that of the New Democratic Party, which states that there is an obligation on the Minister to develop policies, not just short-term, fly by the seat of your pants policies, which has been the response of this Government to date, but to look at medium and long-term policies. Those policies should involve priorities both for the public sector and the private sector. We in this Party, unlike those on the government benches and in many ways unlike those in the Official Opposition, believe that there is an important role to be played by the public sector in this country.

The jobs task force, which was chaired so ably by my colleagues from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and Essex-Windsor, held hearings across this country. That task force was told in no uncertain terms that the people of Canada accept an important role for the public sector, not some monolithic, bureaucratic, centralized public sector, but a public sector which is responsive to local community needs, responsive to the concerns and priorities of people who live in communities across this land.

There is a role for both the public and the private sector. There is an emphasis on an industrial strategy which has as its heart the promotion of full employment. Nowhere in this Bill is there a commitment by the Government of Canada to the most fundamental and basic priority that must affect all Canadians, and that is the commitment to full employment.

Each of us has seen daily in our constituency offices the effects of the personal and economic devastation that is caused by unemployment in this country, whether it be young people finishing university or high school, out in the job market and desperately trying to find any job, short term, long term, part-time, full-time, or whether it be the insecurity, even of those people who have jobs now, afraid that they may lose their employment. This Bill turns over those basic decisions about the direction of the Canadian economy to faceless men in foreign boardrooms. It is that which we are fundamentally opposed to and that which we will fight right down the line in this Bill until the Government comes to its senses and recognizes that it must change its direction. Full employment, therefore, is a fundamental priority.

Our amendment also suggests diversification in the economy. Autonomy, as I have indicated, lies at the heart of our recommendations so that it is Canadians who are making the decisions about our economy. With regard to export competitiveness, the situation is going to increasingly become the case in Canada of foreign companies deciding that because they do not want to compete with their American head offices, they are not going to be aggressive in the export market. We say that many new jobs lie in the export area. If foreign companies are not prepared aggressively to promote those opportunities, then they indeed are not welcome because ultimately their strategy will result in the loss of Canadian jobs.

There are many other important amendments in this grouping, including the motion which would encourage and facilitate the acquisition and control of Canadian businesses by Canadians in areas pertaining to our cultural heritage and national identity. In this motion we speak of a variety of very sensible techniques to promote that important objective. We proposed a motion which would ensure that Canadian business enterprises owned and controlled by non-Canadians respect the rights of workers including the right to collective bargaining.

I will pursue these and other important questions in the course of ongoing debate on this fundamental motion and on this Bill. I hope that the Government will come to its senses and withdraw this odious and regressive piece of legislation.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker I rise to take part in today's debate on these amendments with the same conviction I had when Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, first came up for debate on second reading.

This Bill is the first measure introduced by the Conservative Government to convince its friends south of the border that not only is Canada open for business as before, but that now, under a Conservative administration, it is up for sale!

Mr. Speaker, we must create hundreds and thousands of jobs right now to avoid wasting a whole generation. The Conservatives promised that tens of thousands of jobs would materialize the minute they were sworn into office. And now, eight months later, they want to do away with a piece of legislation designed to protect Canadian investors, and throw the doors wide open to just about anybody—no questions asked—thus leaving Canada's small businesses and high technology industries to fall prey to foreign competitors.

Mr. Speaker, most jobs in this country are created by small businesses. As if this Bill in itself was not enough to destroy so many years of efforts by Canadians to control their own economy, it even provides that one person alone, a Minister, can decide what our economic future will be. This will not be a Cabinet decision, and the agency created under this measure will not be given political guidelines. Indeed, the agency will be given its marching orders.

Mr. Speaker, we are not questioning the integrity of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). On the contrary, the amendment we are advocating will enable him to answer to the people of Canada for his decisions, thus preventing the Minister from leaving himself open to charges of partisanship.

We all know that the Minister comes from Bay Street and so, without judging him, we simply have to see where he stands concerning such issues as Melcher's, Wabasso, Sherbrooke's cartography institute, Domtar and what have you.

You would think that the Minister is not attuned to the needs of Quebec, yet the facts are there, I am not making this up. The Conservative Government has been in office for eight months, but people still have to demonstrate, and the Pêcheries Cartier people even have to stage a hunger strike, Mr. Speaker.

Our amendment is constructive. The Investment Canada Agency must not be part of the Minister's staff. The Government and the Minister must give general guidelines to the Agency and let management apply the Act and the regulations.

Ours is a democratic society, Mr. Speaker, and our institutions have to be beyond reproach. We cannot leave Canadian taxpayers with the impression that outright patronage is the hallmark of this Government, that it can hardly wait for the end of the board of directors' mandate to find cushy jobs for its friends.

They are being asked to hand in their resignation to make room for the Government's friends, Mr. Speaker. They even went as far as awarding untendered contracts to the relatives of a Minister. That is the kind of example we get from the Government. With this legislation, Mr. Speaker, who will make the decisions? One man, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). And where will decisions originate from? From Bay Street, Mr. Speaker. How can the Government establish credibility with Canadians if it fails to follow its own guidelines and puts itself in a conflict of interests situation every day?

Mr. Speaker, the promises made in the fall of 1984 were just that, worthless election promises, and the Progressive Conservatives had no intention of living up to them after taking over. The only way Canadians will regain confidence in parliamentarians and our institutions is to dissociate political power and administrative structures from Government institutions, as an example to the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by urging my colleagues on Government benches to support our amendment so that democracy will prevail in our institutions.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, one of the most important principles which has been respected over the years by Canadian Governments of whatever political stripe has been that the people who are affected by decisions which are absolutely crucial to their lives should have the chance to have input into those decisions and should have a clear communication when decisions have taken place as to what the outcome of those decisions will be. This whole package of amendments which we moved before you this morning attempts to respect that tradition of Canadian history and Canadian law.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, one of the concerns we have had with the existing approach within this country to the review of foreign investment is that it is far too secretive and closed a process. We have seen cases in which very important decisions were being contemplated by FIRA, and in those cases, often on an informal basis, FIRA has turned to the interested parties, to communities, trade unions and potential competitors, and asked those people what they thought about a particular take-over being proposed. They were asked how they felt about this new business which was coming into the country. It has been possible on an informal basis for people to make representations. It was, however, Mr. Speaker, not possible for those same people to have communicated to them the outcome of the decision which was subsequently recommended by FIRA and taken by the Cabinet. For instance, in the case of the Black & Decker workers in Barrie, about whom the House has heard a good deal during these debates, it was not thought somehow fitting that the community of Barrie itself, and the workers who worked in that factory, should have public knowledge of the undertakings which had been accepted by the Black & Decker Manufacturing Co. Limited when it took over the Canadian General Electric subsidiary in Barrie. The result of that was to leave that community in a situation where, when the possibility arose of Black & Decker shutting that subsidiary down, the community itself, the workers themselves, did not know what the undertakings were by Black & Decker despite the fact that those undertakings were going to critically and crucially shape the lives of that community and those workers.

We see at this stage in fact, as the month of April draws to a close, that the 600 workers in that plant in Barrie have lost their jobs. They have lost their jobs in part because they simply did not know what the undertakings were that had been accepted by Black & Decker in taking over that plant. They thought that the undertakings were that the plant would continue to be open so long as the plant was profitable. So they made a commitment to try to keep the plant as profitable as possible. Productivity increased significantly as a result of that commitment. The community felt that that plant had made a long-term commitment to the community of Barrie, but they had no way of knowing specifically and exactly the basis on which that plant would stay in that community. So when it came down to the crunch and the plant announced its closure, the workers who were faced with that decision turned to the Government and said: "Our understanding of the undertaking established by the company was that so long as the firm remains viable, the plant would remain open. What's going on?" The Government had to communicate back to those workers, and we have quotations from the Minister to this effect: "As we look into it, we have found that the undertakings in fact were different from what you thought. The undertakings were not as clear cut as you had been led to believe". As a consequence, the Member of Parliament who happens to be a Conservative from Barrie was not able to stand up and fight with sufficient force to save those jobs despite the fact that he recognized, and the Minister recognized, that this case showed up gaps and problems in the procedure of FIRA.

What we say, Mr. Speaker, is that now is the time to see to it that these gaps and problems do not emerge in the case of the new Bill. It is very simple to make sure of that. It does not require a commitment to social democratic ideology. We don't even have to endorse liberalism. All the Hon. Members of this House have to do is endorse a commitment to openness in the decision-making process. I think it is a principle we have accepted as a House of Commons. It is a principle which makes perfect common sense. It is a principle which has associated with it absolutely no problems for the Government with respect to this Bill.

I will be frank with you, Mr. Speaker, and say that some of the amendments we move, I quite concede, are attempts to frustrate what the Government would like to do with Investment Canada as a Bill, because we find that there are parts of the Bill with which we disagree very strongly. However, this set of amendments is not designed to offer frustration. It is not designed to be provocative. Instead, Mr. Speaker, it is an attempt to fill a gap which Hon. Members of the Government themselves will come to recognize if the gap is not corrected now.

I can see what will happen in the years ahead, Mr. Speaker, if these amendments are not accepted. Hon. Members from different constituencies will stand in this House of Commons and say to their own Minister: "A decision has been taken to permit the take-over of this particular factory in my constituency. What undertakings have been established to protect my community?" The Minister will get up, as he has in recent weeks, and say: "We regret that the Act does not permit us to communicate to you as Members of Parliament, to your communities or the workers in those plants, what this company has committed itself to in this take-over". So it is absolutely crucial—not for us because, frankly, our Party will continue to fight on these issues and make political gains based on these issues—for Government members to see the logic of what is a non-provocative argument, a reasonable, rational and constructive suggestion that we open up the decision-making process and make it possible for all those small communities and workers who face problems with the future to have some sense of reassurance because they have some sense of what is actually being done on their behalf by the Government of this country.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the Hon. Member who just spoke for having put to the House Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75. We support these amendments; indeed, we agree with the common thread that can be seen in this grouping. The fact that the Bill as proposed by the Government does absolutely nothing to open up foreign investment review decision processes bothers us, and I think in the interests of greater parliamentary and, possibly more importantly, public scrutiny, that these amendments should receive some attention and support by the Government.

They should especially interest Government members because they are the ones who are going to go to the Minister when they are affected by decisions taken by that Minister and ask him what happened to the jobs, the research and development and the investment. He will say he does not have to tell them because the Act gives him total discretion. He does not have to tell them anything. That is what the back-benches of the Tories will be facing because what I just said is what is in this Bill; secrecy, power, and one person controlling what? Controlling information, which is as vital to me and this House as it is to all Canadians.

The argument that is put to us by this Government that they must remain secret holds no more water than StatsCan when it asks the people in my riding their name, address, income and their general state of affairs. We are not interested in the balance sheet of the company or in knowing from the Minister whether we have a paying proposition or not; what we are asking the Minister by these amendments is to come clean with the Canadian public and tell us if there is in the take-over some significant advantage to Canadians. If so, make it public. Tell us. Tell us openly what they see in this thing. Tell the Members, tell the back-benchers, tell the book-ends, tell all those nice seals with their flippers going yes, yes, yes. Tell them the truth once in a while what is happening in their ridings. Tell them what is going on.

Mr. Foster: He never does.

Mr. Gauthier: He never does. Why should he? The law says he does not have to. What we are trying to do is open up this legislation. As I said, the common thread is information. Information for whom? For back-benchers and the public of Canada. I hear the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) say this is acceptable. I invite her to get up and say so.

Mrs. Mailly: Accessible.

Mr. Gauthier: If you believe that is acceptable, for God's sake get up and say it.

Mrs. Mailly: Accessible!

Mr. Gauthier: How can it be accessible to the Hon. Member for Gatineau unless she has a particular way into the Government, which I doubt very much. How can she access that information if the Minister is given the right to say no? What is going to happen to that pulp and paper mill of hers? What is going to happen to all those industrial commitments she made in the last election? What is going to happen to those jobs she said she would create? She will never know what happened to them because the Minister will say he does not have to tell her. That is what is going to happen.

Mrs. Mailly: Nonsense and you know it.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not nonsense. I wager that within the next few years that Member will be up saying the Minister has been unfair to the riding of Gatineau because he did not tell us what he was doing regarding investment, job creation and good, sound research and development which creates jobs.

Mrs. Mailly: You do not know what goes on in my riding but I do.

Mr. Gauthier: I invite the Hon. Member to get up and make public her views on this most important subject. We want to know from the Minister how the Government performs. We do not want to know what the profits are, we do not want to know what the situation of a specific company is. We are not interested in that. We want to know about the undertakings. What undertakings did the Minister give to a foreign company wanting to come into Canada, and what significant benefits were in that deal for Canadians? The concentration of effort on much larger investments means that more attention should be devoted to each one. But information can be presented and I said before and I repeat that information can be packaged in such a way that it would be informative to us, yet still preserve and protect those interests which have nothing to do with my interests in terms of profits. I do not want to know whether the company is making profits, I want to know if it is operating as a benefit to Canadians.

Mrs. Mailly: Well then, you are interested in profits.

Mr. Gauthier: The thread through this whole series of amendments, and unfortunately I cannot speak to all of them, is that of information, openness with Members of Parliament and the public, and I commend to Government Members the motions presented and hope they support or at least speak to them today.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, just a few words on the amendments before us. I would like to appeal specifically to my new friends, all these new Conservative back-benchers from Ontario, Quebec and the rest of the country, on the issue and principle behind these amendments; that is, the question of secrecy. Some of them perhaps used to be Liberals in the olden days, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: Be nice.

Mr. Nystrom: But if they followed this Parliament a number of years ago they would know that one of the things the Conservative Party crusaded on for years and years was that of openness in Government. There was too much secrecy in government. Why was the Trudeau Government so secretive?

Why was so much confidential? Why do we not have more openness in the way we administer our affairs? That was always the common theme of the Conservative Party. I am sure you remember many years ago a very distinguished Conservative House Leader named Ged Baldwin from Peace River. He had a Private Member's Bill before this House for many years concerning opening up the affairs of government. He made this a pretty big issue and carried on a one-man crusade, and he was very good on that issue.

I remember also when the former Prime Minster, Mr. Joe Clark, took office, that one thing he made important during his short administration was greater openness in government, accessibility to information, less secrecy. He appointed a special Government task force and Mr. Baldwin was—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): And he was defeated.

Mr. Nystrom: Joe Clark was defeated? He was defeated by the guy who is now Prime Minister of this country. I suppose the majority of you people across the way voted for the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) over our good friend from Alberta. That is not my fault; you people made that decision, not me. The Conservative Party has historically had that kind of thrust. Mr. Walter Baker, who was the House Leader of the Conservative Party for a number of years, made this a very important issue. When the Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was Prime Minister, Mr. Baker was the Government House Leader. He made openness and less secrecy in government a very important issue for his Party. He had a lot of support for that from back-benchers on all sides of the House. When there is a large majority Government there is less access to information. The Cabinet has too much power. There is too much power in the PMO, the PCO, and the offices of the various Cabinet Ministers. One thing I like in politics is consistency. We have not had that from the present Prime Minister and his Government. We had a lot of talk about a large deficit—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I am wondering about the relevance of the speech, Mr. Speaker. I thought the subject being discussed was the kind of information which should be accessible to the public. The Hon. Member in my view is indulging in a political discourse, rather than dealing with information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I think that if they were to look at the amendments, the Hon. Member and all other Members in this House would see that they have one thing in common. The reason why they are grouped together is because they deal with making information more accessible to the public. In that light, the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) are quite relevant to the amendments.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) was first elected on September 4, but the principle I just referred to is very important in her party's history. Under the leadership of Mr. Diefenbaker, Mr. Stanfield, and Mr. Clark, it was very important, and there were many Conservative Members who spoke strongly on the matter for quite some time in this House. We also introduced numerous motions along the lines held by this party, and so did the Liberal Party.

[English]

Maybe I am sounding a little too Conservative. Maybe that is what upsets her. I will refrain from wearing blue from now on.

The Government is moving in the opposite direction. We have concern about the large deficit. We cannot do a lot of things for ordinary Canadians. Yet the Minister's staffs have expanded and the chiefs of staff receive high salaries. That will only result in more and more secrecy and more and more power being concentrated in the hands of the Ministers. I predict that in a couple of years the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) will become a very frustrated Member of the House.

Mr. Langdon: She is already frustrated.

Mr. Nystrom: The Member for Essex-Windsor says she is already frustrated. I would not be that nasty. I think she will become very frustrated because she will not have access to information and to the tools she needs to fight for her constituents. All you need do is ask people who have been in the House for a long time, particularly when there was a large Liberal majority, or people on the back-benches of provincial legislatures which do not have freedom of information legislation which they should have. Ask how frustrating it is for those back-benchers to get information to fight for their constituents.

I just cannot figure out what is happening, Mr. Speaker. For so many years this issue was so important to the Conservative Party and its leadership. A year ago when the Conservatives chose their present leader they chose someone who was a fairly radical departure from the Diefenbaker-Stanfield-Clark line. He shared a lot of the ideas of the previous Trudeau Government. In fact there is an old expression in French:

[Translation]

The more it changes, the more it remains the same.

[English]

I think that is exactly what is happening. I see a Member from Quebec who is agreeing with me. Many of the things we are seeing today in terms of secrecy—

Mrs. Mailly: From you.

Mr. Nystrom: The Member for Gatineau is interjecting once again. I would like to see her get up and defend this lack of availability of information and this curtain of secrecy which the Government is trying to throw around the legislation in the House. It is certainly not the tradition of her Party. I wonder where she has been during the last number of years.

This is an important issue. I think there should be a back-bench revolt on this principle. When the Conservatives were in Opposition we heard in speech after speech that there should be a back-bench revolt. Members are elected here to represent their constituents. We are elected to do what we can for our constituents. We are not elected to be dictated to by the executive, the PMO, or the PCO. We are elected to hold them accountable. We are elected to represent our constituents. We need the tools to do that job. We are not going to get those tools if we have a cloak of secrecy around all the legislation which comes before the House. I am very disappointed. After September 4 we have many new Members, including the Member for Gatineau.

There are many others in Quebec.

[English]

There are lots of Members from Ontario and other provinces as well. I thought we would see a new chapter in Canadian political life. I thought we would have more openness in Government, less secrecy, and serious reform of this institution to enable us to become legislators in the real sense as Members of Parliament. I am not seeing that. We have a Government with a large majority and a Prime Minister who is extremely concerned about his image and who governs by polls. We have back-benchers who are nothing but trained seals. I think they should rebel. They should have the courage of their convictions. They should stand up for what their Party represents in the House and the country with regard to issues such as secrecy which are so important.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, how is that relevant to the Bill being considered? The Hon. Member is discussing structure, administration, policy, back-benchers in a non-complimentary fashion, but this has no relevance to the issue at hand.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has a chance to speak if she wants to attack what the Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is saying. She should not raise spurious points of order which suggest that he is not dealing with the Bill, when in fact he is dealing with secrecy which is what this whole set of amendments focuses on. That is simply not acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): As a general principle, may I remind all Members of Parliament that they must speak to the motions themselves rather than generally to the Bill. The Chair groups these motions according to a certain number of common denominators. In the very specific case which is before us the common denominator is the fact of public accounting as far as the Bill is concerned. In that respect may I remind the Hon. Member for Gatineau that the speech of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is in order because of that common denominator.

Mr. Nystrom: I wish I had more time, Mr. Speaker. I would read all of the motions to the Member for Gatineau. They all deal with secrecy, openness, availability and accessibility. That is a very important principle which, obviously, a lot of the Conservative back-benchers have thrown out.

In conclusion I would like to quote a former commissioner of FIRA, Mr. Howarth. He said: "Certainly the most telling criticism as far as I was concerned was that the whole process was conducted in secrecy". In other words, the big problem that he had as commissioner of FIRA was that it was conducted in secrecy. "People use words like 'Star Chamber' and this, that and the other. And, of course, it was imputed that the Government wanted to do it in that way and the agency wanted to do it in that way to cover up their own misdeeds and so on. The whole truth of the matter is that Parliament wrote the law and that Government and the agency had no choice but to keep everything concealed and hidden."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The 10 minute period is over. Shall we call it one o'clock?

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, following the results of the polls which show their popularity decreasing on a daily basis, the Ontario Progressive Conservatives were able to count on the assistance of "Mr. Personality" himself, who flew to the rescue.

They had television shows, pictures, and all kinds of other photo opportunities with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Premier, and the ambassador of acid rain himself, with his dollar a year salary. I wonder if the Prime Minister suggested to the Ontario Premier that the same theme as was used in last summer's election campaign, "It's time for a change, too long in power corrupts", would be appropriate.

Did the Prime Minister show Mr. Miller how to make promises by the hundreds and not keep them, or how to tell people all about ending patronage appointments, or how to award advertising contracts, in other words, how to use "Bulroney" on the people of Ontario.

He may want to advise Frank Miller that it may not be a good idea to hide from the people during an election campaign and that he should go out there all day long, and watch himself on TV all night long, as the Prime Minister does. Brian loves Frank, Frank loves Brian but, most important, Brian loves Brian.

This mutual admiration will not win an election in Ontario, and the Prime Minister's performance so far has certainly not been too impressive to the voters of Ontario. Neither has Mr. Miller's performance been too impressive in this campaign. We will see a Liberal Government come Thursday.

BROADCASTING

APPOINTMENT OF POLICY TASK FORCE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) announced the establishment of a task force on broadcasting policy, appointments to which he will be announcing shortly. The terms of reference of the review are themselves seriously deficient. They violate the spirit and the letter of earlier Conservative promises of consultation with the arts and culture community.

First, public broadcasting will be severely limited. There will not be public hearings, and groups and concerned individuals who are not invited to private hearings will have to wait until next year for public discussion, after the publication of a white paper and its reference to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. For a Government that promised consultation with the arts community, this is shoddy treatment indeed.

Second, the terms of reference themselves prejudge the conclusions. Despite the expressed concerns of Canadians and the arts community for a strong role for public broadcasting, the task force is geared right from the beginning to a further weakening of the CBC in favour of the private networks. Yet it is well known that significant Canadian content has never been achieved by the private networks and stations, so that a stronger role for the CBC is essential to any increase in Canadian television broadcasting.

The Minister has shown a marked proclivity for putting Conservative connections above professional standing in the field and support from the arts community in his arts appointments to date. Thus we have reason to be apprehensive about these next appointments. Was the arts and culture community consulted—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EQUALITY PROVISIONS—TRIBUTE TO WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in recognizing the coming into effect of the equality Section of the Charter of Rights, it is important to remember those who laid the groundwork for this historic event. I am speaking of the members of various organizations who fought for decades for greater recognition of women's rights.

One such organization is the Women's Institute which has a network of branches across Canada, and about 2,000 members in my home Province of Manitoba. In recent years the Women's Institute has worked to promote homemakers' pensions and better programs for the victims of wife abuse and family violence. It has made valuable contributions to the Family Law Reform Commission and the Fraser Committee on Pornography and Prostitution. This organization also works with affiliated international groups to promote nutrition education, and to provide clean water.

Farm women have always identified with the Women's Institute; indeed, it is an organization strongly rooted in rural Canada. The theme of the Manitoba Women's Institute this year is "Horizons Unlimited", and I am pleased that the Manitoba branch has chosen to celebrate its 75th anniversary by having its conference at Brandon.

Parliament can take some credit for the equality section and for other steps which promote equality, but it was organizations such as the Women's Institute which continued to deliver their message year after year until we were ready to listen.

IMMIGRATION

ERNST ZUNDEL—REMOVAL OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, April 29, an independent adjudicator appointed by the Immigration Department ordered that Ernst Zundel be stripped of his landed immigrant status and be deported. I applaud this decision which follows his conviction on February 28 of wilfully spreading hate propaganda which declared that the Nazi murder of six million Jews was a Jewish hoax. He was sentenced to 15 months in jail on March 25, making his deportation under current law almost mandatory.

It is interesting to note that the West German Parliament recently passed a law making it a crime to deny that the Nazis murdered millions of innocent people in the Second World War.

Canada has a generous open door policy for many people from all parts of the world who choose to live here. However, we must slam the door shut on the Ernst Zundels of this world. We cannot become a haven for heretics who knowingly spew forth lies meant to inflict pain and anguish on a certain community. This man is not even welcome in his own native Germany. He is clearly not welcome here in Canada.

RAILWAYS

CEILING PLACED ON GRAIN FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Western Grain transportation act tabled on Friday show just how naive the Government seems to think the people of western Canada are. The Government has placed a ceiling on freight rates for two years. It did this one week before the CTC is to report on the new rates scheduled for the 1985-86 crop year.

It is well known in the West that the new rates will be significantly lower due to a decrease in volume shipped. It is highly unlikely that the 1986-87 rates will rise to this year's level. The freeze is smoke and mirrors. It will not save producers one cent.

During the election the Tories promised to freeze the rates at last year's lower levels. That would have helped farmers. Clearly, this freeze is meaningless.

The Western Grain transportation act was a very complex piece of legislation. However, the Government has chosen to make very minimal amendments to it. Clearly it now realizes that this was a well thought out Bill. It is also interesting to note that the Minister has chosen to bring in these amendments prior to tabling the Hall Report. He has chosen not to deal with the difficult method of payment issue. It will be interesting to hear how the Minister feels about the method of payment now that he will finally have to take a stand.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE PROPOSAL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) continue to press for a position in support of tariff free trade with the United States. I suggest the consequence of this could and would be disastrous for our farmers in every area of Canada.

Price support measures to aid both farmers and consumers would almost certainly be placed in jeopardy. Marketing boards would be questionable under such free trade arrangements.

The United States has historically been the one to have placed obstacles in the way of a relatively free trade position between Canada and the United States. What the United States wants is for Canada to operate by U.S. law. To the benefit of whom? Not Canada, I suggest.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that, after a few months of work and efforts, the gas price situation has considerably improved in Quebec. Motorists in the Portneuf and Montreal areas including Laval, can now fill up their tanks at a discount. The price of regular gas, which was previously 59.9 cents a litre, now varies between 49 and 51 cents a litre in constituencies such as Portneuf and Champlain, and between 51 and 56 cents a litre in the Montreal area.

Mr. Speaker, I have always believed this to be realistic. I had promised to keep on fighting against any abusive increase, and the present situation is proving me right. I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who have worked to improve the situation for Quebec and Canadian consumers, namely the media, consumer associations and the consumers themselves.

I urge my colleagues of the three Parties represented in this House to join their efforts in support of the new policy of our Government. All the efforts made until now are bearing fruit because we are letting market forces interact as they should, as I have personally been advocating for the last 20 years.

INCOME TAX ACT

LEGISLATION'S COMPLEXITY

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, today is April 30 and, as midnight looms, countless Canadians toil to complete and mail their tax returns in an annual ritual which tells us something both about the value of deadlines and about the complexity of our tax laws.

A basic principle in a democratic country is that citizens understand a law which takes their property from them. Yet our income Tax Act, as enacted and re-enacted, amended and re-amended here in Parliament for over 60 years, has become incomprehensible legislation. People really do not understand our tax laws. What people understand, however, are the results of this cumbersome, wonder-wielding tax calliope. When small- and medium-sized businesses pay tax and many large corporations pay none, and when the man pumping gas pays tax but the fellow in the Cadillac he is filling pays none, people understand that reform is needed.

I applaud our new Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) for humanizing tax collection and proclaiming a taxpayer's bill of rights. I recognize, too, that our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wants no major changes in tax structures so that tax predictability will help investment planning and aid economic recovery. Yet, ultimately, taming and civilizing the present tax system will not be enough.

The time is coming when an enlightened form of the flat rate tax will be the order of the day. With a well designed flat rate tax, Canadian taxpayers will understand the system, and Canada will be closer to the democratic ideal of a country with—

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ELECTION OF LIBERAL CANDIDATE HUBERT SEAMANS IN NEW BRUNSWICK BY-ELECTION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, Monday, April 29 will remain forever a memorable date for the people and especially the government of New Brunswick. Indeed, the people in Riverview elected yesterday with a crushing majority the Liberal candidate, Hubert Seamans—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robichaud: —who won the riding which had up to now been considered a Conservative stronghold with over twice the number of votes of his opponent. It should be emphasized that this constituency had been a Conservative riding for 33 years.

Mr. Speaker, this is the beginning of the end for the Hatfield administration. The people of New Brunswick have sent a very clear and unequivocal message by rejecting the attitude and conduct of its provincial government. They have also sent a very clear message of dissatisfaction to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. MacKay) for the way they mishandled the recent case involving the Premier of New Brunswick.

In view of the increasing dissatisfaction expressed by the people of New Brunswick, does the Prime Minister not feel it is imperative and necessary to order a public inquiry—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that the time allotted to him has now expired.

REVENUE CANADA

DEPARTMENT'S IMPROVED APPROACH TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, today, April 30, is the deadline for the filing of personal income tax returns.

Canadians note with satisfaction a number of significant improvements to the taxation system initiated by a Minister of National Revenue who is genuinely concerned. These include an elimination of the old reverse onus which presumed taxpayers guilty until they proved their innocence; an assurance that taxpayers are not required to pay disputed taxes until they have had a fair hearing; an extension of hours for telephone inquiry service; a directive that departmental officials contact taxpayers who are in arrears before legal action is taken; the rewording of collection letters and assessment notices to provide clear, courteous, and complete information; and an elimination of oppressive quotas.

Gone are the old days of contempt, scorn, arrogance, quotas, and high-handed collection procedures. The new approach has been embodied in the declaration of taxpayers' rights, which affirms basic rights taxpayers can count on as a matter of government policy—the right to privacy and confidentiality, the right to independent review, and the right to an impartial review before payment.

Under the new system, which presumes their honesty and entitles them to courteous treatment and timely information, Canadians for the first time can rest assured that they will receive fair treatment in all dealings with Revenue Canada.

IMMIGRATION

ADMITTANCE OF ALLEGED WAR CRIMINAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, for the last two days some 3,000 victims of the Nazi holocaust and their families have been meeting here in Ottawa. This morning it was with a sense of shock and outrage that these victims and their families read the story from Washington which indicated that the Office of Special Investigations in the United States, established in 1978 to track alleged Nazis hiding in that country, had found that an individual in the United States was guilty of war crimes and that that individual in question had chosen to come to Canada.

A Mr. Juozas Kisielaitis of Massachusetts came to Canada to escape his day of reckoning in the United States, following the investigation by the Office of Special Investigations. Government evidence showed clearly that this individual assisted the Nazis in persecuting Jews while he served in the Schutzmannschaft, a military battalion in his native Lithuania. Apparently this individual concealed his service in the Schutzmannschaft when he entered the United States and when he entered Canada.

I would hope that our Government would recognize that Canada should not be a haven or a refuge for Nazi war criminals from other parts of the world, and I would hope that our Government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) would take the necessary steps to bring—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

FINANCE

CONTENTS OF FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I recall when he once said in the House that he planned the Budget for the month of April. Then a man called Frank Miller was elected Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario, and he called an election. What is it in the forthcoming Budget of the Minister of Finance which he feels will so disturb the voters of Ontario that he has postponed it until the week of May 20?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is really going fishing today. The reason the Budget will be brought down in the third week of May is quite clear. Some excellent ideas came out of the National Economic Conference which we wanted reflected in the Budget. As I am sure all Hon. Members are aware, we also had a very extensive consultation process involving people right across the country, in all walks of life and all areas of the economy. These views must be taken into account for the Budget. That is the reason for the delay.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I am on a fishing expedition, that answer was a throw-back.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Careful, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Well, the Deputy Prime Minister will understand what I mean. In his part of the country the ice has not left the lakes at the moment.

The Premier of Ontario came to Ottawa, in deep concern, to talk with the Prime Minister about the continuation of Japanese import quotas on automobiles and about a potential tax at the pumps on gasoline to compensate for the energy deal, and he came away with nothing.

How much more would the Minister of Finance estimate that Canadian consumers will have to pay at the gas pump as a result of his forthcoming Budget? How many jobs does his Department estimate in its calculations will be lost by such a gas tax increase? To be more specific, would he be able to confirm that a 22-cent per gallon increase at the pumps would mean the loss of 55,000 jobs in Ontario alone?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition must be drawing from the past some of the statistics which are representative of the era from 1980 to 1983 when the price of gasoline in Ontario went up by about $1 per gallon. Many thousands of jobs were lost because of the National Energy Program which he himself criticized. We have indicated that the result of the Western Accord, which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced about a month ago, will be very positive for the economy in creating jobs from coast to coast, not the least of which will be in the Province of Ontario.

AUTOMOBILE IMPORT QUOTAS—IMPACT OF POSSIBLE REMOVAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister was really confident about that statement, he would not have delayed his Budget. Yesterday I asked, without success, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion what would happen to negotiations with Japan on the extension of the automobile quotas on Japanese imports. We got a convoluted answer. I was not surprised. I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether his Department has estimated how many jobs would be lost if the auto quotas on Japanese imports were not extended. Would the figure be in the range of 20,000 to 25,000 jobs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition must be aware that 122,000 jobs have been created since the first part of September.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How many were lost?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Since those statistics were put out, there have been further indications of progress on the part of the Canadian economy. I draw his attention today to the Conference Board's new figures on the level of business confidence in Canada. It is up to a new level over the past three or four years. It is an indication of the confidence that Canadians have in the direction that the country is going under the new Government. I am sure that the decisions that we will be taking on the import arrangements for Japanese automobiles will be further supportive of that direction.

EXTERNAL AID

DEFENCE OF THIRD WORLD INTERESTS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In the light of the statement made by the Prime Minister last night in London, when he said that he intended to speak on behalf of the Third World in Bonn this week, could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether the Government intends to revise the drastic cutbacks it made in CIDA programs last fall, so that international observers will realize that the Prime Minister of Canada practises what he preaches, and could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether the Prime Minister of Canada intends to ask President Reagan to change his monetary policy and let interest rates drop, so that Third World countries can meet financial obligations which are putting very severe pressures on their economies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge, and I expect the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice is also aware, that the really serious cutbacks in CIDA's budget were imposed by the Liberal Government last summer.

As far as Canada's obligation as stated by the Prime Minister is concerned, it is an obligation our Government has accepted. The Prime Minister intends to continue to play an important role in ensuring that Third World interests are represented at the Bonn Summit.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO BRITAIN

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised at the answer of the Right Hon. Minister. He himself admitted that the goal we have to attain, .7 per cent of GNP, will never be met as it was predicted to be met by us.

I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of what is going on in London at this time, where again style is more important than substance, and where every election promise is quietly forgotten by the Government, will the Deputy Prime Minister inform the Prime Minister that Canadians do not like him to play games with institutions, such as he did in Quebec City when he snubbed the Governor General in order to look like a president, and what he is now doing in England where he is trying to use the monarchy in order to get some publicity? Is it not time that the Prime Minister of Canada stopped his show business and started to do real business rather than show business?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been with respect to watching the coverage that the visit of the Canadian Prime Minister is receiving in England, but it all sounds pretty positive to me and to most reasonable Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: To hear the business comment coming out of London from business leaders, as encouraging as it is, seems to indicate an entirely different change of direction in the thinking of business people in Great Britain, and that is a positive change. At least we can all be thankful that the Prime Minister of Canada did not slide down the banisters of Buckingham Palace and do pirouettes while he was over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SATELLITE RADAR SYSTEMS CONTRACTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the news that his Department has signed two contracts for satellite-based radar systems and the related fact that an official from his Department has indicated that these contracts have no relationship whatsoever to the modernization of the DEW Line. If they are not related to the modernization of the DEW Line, what are they all about?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we just had a meeting of the standing committee in which the defence critic entirely divorced himself from legitimate questions along the lines of the one that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has just asked. I reaffirm to him that the two contracts of which we are speaking, which were not signed by the Department of National Defence but by the Department of Supply and Services, have nothing whatsoever to do with NWS. They are within the jurisdiction of the chief of research and development within the Department, and are really asking the two contractors involved, Spar Aerospace, and I believe the other is Canadian Astronautics Limited, to think through the whole concept of what might be involved by a space-based surveillance system. That's all they are, contracts in the way of exploration of what is involved with respect to space-based surveillance.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON SPACE CONTRACTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling us that the Government has hired someone to do its policy thinking? Before any more contracts are let for space related radar systems or any further militarization of space, will the Minister give the following undertaking to the House: that there will be no more contracts let until we get a policy decision made by the Government, and we have said that should be a negative decision, concerning the star wars project, or until we get the green paper on foreign policy from the Secretary of State for External Affairs which has been promised for months? In short, will the Government stop taking us step-by-step into an involvement in outer space, especially the militarization of space, to which Canadians in particular, and many other nations of the world, are opposed?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this has nothing whatsoever to do with the militarization of space. This has nothing whatsoever to do with whatever the hon. gentleman means by star wars. This has nothing whatsoever to do with NWS. To follow his suggestions and not let out any other contract involving research and development would be bringing to a shuddering halt any initiative that this Government may wish to take in the research area.

I can assure him once again, despite the repeated attempts to enter into this area of fear tactics, scare tactics, and linking, as did the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry in an article I read today, that the objective of these research projects is to develop the architecture of a space-based radar system, and that does not mean any structures in space, capable of providing surveillance of Canada's air space and Canada's coastal waters. We are doing that now through other means. Another objective is to identify the technologies critical to the development of such a system needing immediate research funding. That is what these inquiries of an exploratory nature are all about.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to what the Minister had to say. Considering that at least through these contracts we are involved in spending considerable sums of money for research in space, research that is connected in some way with our radar system and which has potential connections with the modernization of our DEW line, and perhaps with the star wars system, will the Minister produce to the House of Commons, very soon a policy statement concerning the Government of Canada's attitude toward space development in the military field? Second, as Deputy Prime Minister, will he undertake, after consultation with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to produce the foreign policy review paper that was promised, and in the meantime not have any contracts that could have any future connection to the United States or any other power, involving the militarization of space?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is quite long.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member to try to find a question in the question he just asked that is any different from his previous two attempts, for his own political purposes, to link these two research oriented contracts to star wars and to the militarization of outer space. That is totally untrue and totally false. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is deliberately distorting the issue.

With respect to holding up any other contracts of this nature which have no linkage at all with that to which he is trying to link it, the answer is a simple no.

With respect to the green paper on foreign policy, I will leave the answer to that question to the Minister of State for External Affairs as it is properly within his jurisdiction.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

FUTURE OF DE HAVILLAND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. During the last election the Minister of Finance spoke of an aerospace strategy which would amalgamate Canadair and de Havilland in order to produce a healthy company which would be sold and privatized at some future date. After the election, it seems that that Minister has been overruled and, with no strategy for the future, both these companies have been put on the block either for sale or as bait for a possible government contractor. Sales by these companies have slumped because of this tactic, as possible aeroplane purchasers are afraid of being stuck with orphans, as I think the Hon. Minister knows.

In connection with de Havilland, what steps has the Minister taken to ensure that the company will have a future? What has he done to authorize continued research and development? What proportion, if any, of the $150 million allocated to de Havilland in the current Estimates will in fact be used for research and development?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that if he takes the time later today to read the annual reports of both of those companies, he will be very pleased to see that they are in fact doing better than they did in previous years, and that there is no suggestion of any withdrawal of assistance such as that at which he is hinting. In short, we are maintaining the companies and are at the same time talking to interested possible purchasers, with a view to having them privatized and continued within Canada.

GOVERNMENT STRATEGY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister gives us these vague assurances that talks are under way about possible sales, and bearing in mind that thousands of jobs at de Havilland and its sub-trades are at stake, does he not think that the Canadian people are entitled to have more details about the aerospace strategy of the Government and about what assurances there are that jobs will be continued and that the company will have a future?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Again I think the spokesperson for the Official Opposition should bear in mind that it was members of his Party who spent 10 years getting Canada into the trouble in which it is now with respect to these two Crown corporations. Surely we can take a few months to try to reinstate them to a viable and profitable condition and hopefully find suitable buyers to take them back into the private sector.

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY—SALE OF UNITED STATES ASSETS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. He has been talking about patience in regard to White Farm Equipment in Brantford. In fact Borg-Warner has now announced that it will auction off some of the U.S. assets of White Farm Equipment on May 29, thus putting the final nail in the coffin for the 370 Canadian workers. Will the Minister finally intervene urgently, telling Borg-Warner he opposes a sale like that, and publicly committing himself to loan guarantees that will permit the survival of this company in Canada, controlled by Canadians?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we have here an example of a socialist getting into an extra-territorial, long-arm grab. The assets to which he has referred are all assets which are within the United States of America. The debt that will hopefully be liquidated by Borg-Warner as a result of those asset sales is an entirely American debt and there is no direct connection whatsoever with the Canadian company.

REQUEST FOR LOAN GUARANTEES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact the Minister had previously indicated his intention of getting in touch with Borg-Warner. Borg-Warner is proceeding, and that is why this report is so important. It sees a very urgent need to realize its assets. Will the Minister now join his Ontario colleagues who have said that they will put up $10 million as loan guarantees for this plant, by similarly making a commitment on the part of this Government, so that the workers in Brantford may have a sense of security for the future?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, at least the Hon. Member has gone back into Canada for his supplementary question. The answer is that discussions are continuing. Hopefully we will be able to facilitate the working out of a private sector arrangement with respect to the continuance of this company, but there is nothing to announce at this point.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF CANADIAN PORCELAIN COMPANY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and concerns the proposed takeover of the Canadian Porcelain Company in Hamilton by the Lapp Company of New York. This proposed takeover has a great many of the workers in Hamilton worried about their job security. Will the Minister exercise the power he has under the Foreign Investment Review Act to prevent that takeover which will be of no benefit to Hamilton or its workers?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that question is very similar to the one that was put to me yesterday. Since that time we have gotten in touch with the Peat Marwick people who are the main receivers. We have told them of our concern and asked for a full explanation of their exact position with respect to the trusteeship. That information should be available to us later today, or certainly tomorrow.

REQUEST THAT INVESTMENT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not now agree with members of the opposition Party who have been saying in committee for days that the Investment Canada Bill, Bill C-15, does not have in its proposed legislation the kind of teeth necessary to prevent this kind of thing from happening in the future? Will he bring forward amendments to that legislation so that Canadian workers can be protected?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as so often happens with members of this Official Opposition, they are jumping to conclusions in a too hasty manner.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SPRING SEEDING—REQUEST FOR CASH ADVANCES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister will know that by this time many farmers have received an initial payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, but he will also be aware of the fact that only about one-quarter of western farmers were eligible to receive those payments, leaving one-quarter of the farmers with no other source of loan guarantees to allow them to put in their crops. Four weeks ago the Minister advised the House that it was the intention of the Government to examine the possibility of getting a spring cash advance into the hands of farmers for seeding purposes based upon this year's seeded acreage. Would he tell us what are the results of those decisions? Will he, in fact, offer such an advance for those farmers who did not get anything under the Western Grain Stabilization Act?

• (1440)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the Hon. Member's preamble he should have said that three-quarters of the producers were eligible, instead of one quarter. In fact about 77 per cent or 78 per cent of western farmers are eligible for their share of the $450 million which we got out prior to spring seeding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: When I replied to the same question from his colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, I said that I did not want to raise hopes because there were some administrative problems. In consultation with the Canadian Wheat Board, which presently administers the Prairie Grain Advanced Payments Act, and several other officials, we have decided that that is something in which we will not be participating this spring.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, do I understand that it is quite clear there will not be any form of cash advance to spring-seeded crops and that these farmers can now find someone else to take over their farms?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is correct.

FINANCE

BULK FUEL DEALERS—REIMBURSEMENT OF SALES TAX

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and concerns Bill C-17, and the procedure for the reimbursement of sales tax to bulk fuel dealers.

The cost of financing the time period between the date of payment of that tax by the dealer and the date of reimbursement of that tax by the Government is placing a burden on many dealers. Will the Minister examine the possibility of providing a cash advance or a cash float to these dealers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the Hon. Member's concerns on this particular issue. While I will take his suggestion into consideration, my initial reaction is that the proposal which he has made is one that would be somewhat difficult to control and one which could become quite complex in the arrangements which would have to be made between the Government and the people involved. But we will have a good hard look at it.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—TICKET AGENTS' STRIKE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Now that the federal mediator in the dispute involving Air Canada and its ticket agents has failed in his attempts to bring the parties together, will the Acting Prime Minister tell the House what the Government intends to do next?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday, it having been raised by a member of the New Democratic Party. The sessions between labour and management have been adjourned to give the parties an opportunity to step back and reassess their positions. It is normal for that to occur with these kinds of negotiations. Hopefully, they will get back together soon with positive results.

AIR CANADA

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON STRIKE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the Government does not know what to do. Does the Deputy Prime Minister realize how lengthy and costly such a strike could be for Air Canada and how it could affect the holiday plans of thousands of Canadian travellers? I should like to ask the minister whose government has been quick to appoint its supporters to the board of Air Canada why it takes so long to settle that strike?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Acting Prime Minister): Again, Mr. Speaker, the question was raised yesterday—and I imagine that the Hon. Member is not unaware of that—in almost precisely the same terms, by a member of the New Democratic Party. We are fully aware of the seriousness of the situation, as is he. No one has a corner on that. I would point out to him, as I did yesterday, that we are dealing with a Crown corporation which is negotiating with labour within that corporation. I am sure he would be the last to suggest that we should be debating the elements of those negotiations on the floor of the House of Commons. It would do nothing to help and everything to hurt the bargaining process by doing that.

EMPLOYMENT

MILAP PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Employment and Immigration confirm that she has approved $4.84 million under MILAP for the B.C.

coast? Would she confirm that the $4.84 million program has been placed in the hands of three prominent Conservative organizers, Mr. Thor Petersen of Campbell River, Mr. Jim Lornie of Campbell River, and Mr. Stan Hagen of Courtenay? Would she further confirm that these individuals could pocket up to one-third of MILAP moneys as administrative costs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, members of the NDP always like to be able to downplay any help which is being given to people who are unemployed and who very much need the work which is being sponsored through MILAP. I would hope the Hon. Member would welcome any assistance which is being given through MILAP. I can tell him that the expenditures through MILAP primarily go to people who are unemployed.

USE OF FUNDS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister further confirm that these individuals are paying themselves between $150 and $250 per day on this two-year program, and that they are continuing to pay themselves per diem expenses? Would she also confirm that Mr. Thor Petersen is using MILAP dollars to pay rent for program operations to be carried out in an office building which he owns in Campbell River? Would she not agree that this is probably the grossest government pork-barrelling that this House has seen to date, the pinnacle of patronage which even the Liberals did not have the guts to try?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is taking it one step too far. There is nothing that can beat what happened during the time of the Liberal regime.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I want to assure the Hon. Member that I will look into the details which he has raised to determine how the contract was awarded.

PARLIAMENT

BARGAINING RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, an article on page 2 of the Ottawa newspaper The Citizen, indicates that today the President of the Privy Council will be introducing a Bill respecting the collective bargaining rights of parliamentary employees. As usual The Citizen has the details wrong, but some of us have been working on this Bill for two or three years and I would like some answers. When will the Bill be introduced? Will it differ significantly from that which was prepared by myself and my colleagues two or three years ago? Will it be treated as a priority item? Finally, to what committee will it be referred?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest which the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings has with respect to this important legislation which affects employees on the Hill. He has had a long and distinguished service on the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. I can confirm that later today I will be introducing this legislation, which deals with the matter of parliament staff relations. Also, I will be tabling a document which will outline the salient features for Members and employees of the House.

It is an important, new and, I believe, progressive measure with respect to labour relations on the Hill. I have discussed the matter with the opposition House Leaders and I know that I can count on the support of the opposition Parties to have this matter dealt with in an expeditious manner.

GULF CANADA—PROPOSED SALE BY CHEVRON

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. When Mr. Thornton Savage, the vice-president of Chevron Corporation, announced that the corporation would be extending the deadline to May 31 for a Canadian offer on its shares in Gulf Canada, Mr. Savage said: "I cannot put any odds" on Chevron actually selling its interest in Gulf Canada. Yet one Canadian company has already put in a bid, and a second is about to do so. Will the Minister guarantee that Gulf Canada will be sold to Canadian interests?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I cannot guarantee that Gulf Canada will be sold, but I can indicate to him that the bid which is in hand and the bid which is likely to be tendered are both from Canadian concerns. I am very, very pleased that there is such interest on the part of Canadians to acquire 60 per cent of the working control of Gulf Canada.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC BE INFORMED OF DETAILS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the sale of Gulf Canada to Canadian interests is very important in order to maintain the principle of Canadianization in the energy sector. Chevron Corporation has already increased the asking price of Gulf Canada by $500 million since last February, courtesy of the gift from the federal Government increasing the price of old oil in its agreement with the western producing provinces. Are the Canadian people going to be informed about the facts of this sale?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member again, let me say that when the deal is consummated, if there is a firm transaction between the two parties, I can only assume that they will want to give the relevant details to the public. But I would want to reassure the Hon. Member that his suggestion that the price has gone up $500 million as a result of some action on the part of this Government is absolutely untrue. When Chevron embarked, at our request, on offering its 60 per cent block to Canadians, it told us of a price that it would accept. It has not changed that price one nickel, and I hope the Hon. Member understands that.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

PLAN TO ESTABLISH TELEVISION YOUTH CHANNEL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who, no doubt, will be aware that the National Film Board has applied for $5 million of start up funding to develop plans for a national youth channel on television, in both official languages. The Minister, I hope, is aware that so far this is the only possibility which has come forward for a genuinely Canadian channel. The other alternatives have been for massive American importation, as opposed to the quality of the NFB, and its work which is well known throughout the world. Would the Minister, with that in mind, undertake to provide the funding so that we can have the development of a genuinely Canadian youth channel on television?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the applications will be filed with the CRTC in a few days, and the Hon. Member who is so concerned with that aspect, will then be in a position to assess this Government's actions.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, that was not really an answer to the question. I understand—and if I am wrong I would be interested to hear it—that an application was made to the Minister for funding to develop these plans, not to the CRTC. It is up to him to reply to it. He has a responsibility for the development of Canadian culture in Canadian broadcasting. From the hearings which have gone on, of which I am sure he is aware, and from submissions which have been made across the country, it is clear there is a need for a genuinely Canadian channel. This would seem to be the only chance we are going to get. Some action or intervention is needed now, and it is needed from the Minister's Department.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer the same way, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that within a few days a number of applications, including probably that from the National Film Board, will be filed with the CRTC, and she will then be in a position to assess this Government's actions in regard to that matter.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister appeared before the Committee on Communications and Culture and attempted to justify an unacceptable appointment, that of Mr. Bud Sherman who is well-known among Quebecers as a francophobe, with the CRTC. The Minister told us, and I am quoting him to be fair: "This Government's approach, would be—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that any reference to the proceedings of committees is out of order. He is perfectly welcome to ask a question but I cannot accept quotations from committee meetings in the Chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: So the Minister tells us the Government has developed a national reconciliation approach. Could former Mayor Jones expect to be appointed on the task force that will soon undertake an in depth review of the Broadcasting Act? Would the Minister tell this House whether former Mayor Jones can expect to be called upon to play an important role with respect to official language matters?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the suggestions made by the Hon. Member are his own, the Government will assess their merit in due course.

APPOINTMENT OF CRTC COMMISSIONER—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

What French-speaking Canadians and well meaning English-speaking Canadians would like to know following that appointment is this: Who has become reconciled with whom?

Mr. Nystrom: That is a good question!

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC Commissioner referred to by the Hon. Member has had a long experience in broadcasting. The Government was satisfied that his experience made him valuable, capable of making judgments, and we are sure that, within the CRTC's mandate as set out in the Act, this commissioner like the others will meet the requirements of the Act.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF ALLEGED WAR CRIMINAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday in Washington the United States Justice Department announced that Mr. Juozas Kisielaitis, who was a member of a Nazi battalion, the Schutzmannschaft, which murdered and persecuted Jews in Lithuania, has sought refuge in Canada and, indeed, has returned to Canada. Will the Minister confirm that Juozas Kisielaitis originally entered Canada in 1948 after World War II without disclosing his involvement in the Schutzmannschaft? And what action will the Minister take to ensure that this war criminal is not allowed to use Canada as a haven from prosecution for his crimes against humanity?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a search of the records has determined that Mr. Kisielaitis and his family arrived in Canada in November of 1948 and subsequently were granted Canadian citizenship. Since that time he has been living in the United States but as a Canadian citizen. Under the terms of the Immigration Act, 1978, he is permitted to come back into Canada.

As the Hon. Member will know, this Government has established the Deschênes Royal Commission to look into the activities of alleged Nazi war ciminals. I am very pleased that at this particular time this commission is in place to investigate such cases.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Deschênes Commission must not be used as an excuse for inaction with respect to these individuals. In view of Canada's shameful record of denying Jews entry to Canada, and in fact acting as a haven for alleged Nazi war criminals, will the Minister assure the House that if Kisielaitis cannot in fact be stripped of his citizenship for not telling the truth in 1948, and deported, she will speedily take the necessary steps to ensure that he will be brought to justice here in Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be responsible for the activities of a Government back in 1948 or in the years following. What we have done as a Government is to move for the first time on this very critical issue. Since the whole issue was brought into public play after the end of the Second World War, this is the first Government which has taken steps to do something about it. We will see that cases such as this are indeed brought to justice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HUMAN RIGHTS

ISRAEL—TREATMENT OF PALESTINIAN ARABS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday this House and the country were delighted to hear the Minister respond to the representations from the Hon. Member for Mount Royal with reference to the injustices to the Jews living in the Soviet Union who want to leave that country. Will the Minister also take up the case before the upcoming human rights experts meeting of those Palestinian Arabs living in the illegally occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza Strip? They are victims of human rights violations of the worst kind, including murder, kidnapping, torture, bulldozing of homes, denial of water, and denial of health care and education, to name just a few.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the conference which is opening formally in Ottawa later in May is under the general aegis of the CSCE process. Question of human rights violations which fall within the concerns of countries represented at that conference will be pursued by Canada, as I said yesterday, either in a general nature in the plenary sessions or specifically in private corridor representations.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. BUD SHERMAN TO CRTC

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. The Minister said yesterday that he had recommended to Cabinet that Mr. Bud Sherman be appointed CRTC commissioner. Does that mean that the Minister endorses remarks made by Mr. Sherman to the effect that bilingualism has been harmful to the economy and to national harmony, that it has jeopardized careers in the Armed Forces? Can the Minister tell us today whether he agrees with Mr. Sherman's views and how he can possibly explain such an appointment to Canadians?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Unlike the previous Government, Mr. Speaker, we do not exact confessions before making public appointments.

Secondly, what I know happens to be public knowledge. During the last election campaign, Mr. Sherman committed himself to support strongly in his riding the program of the Progressive Conservative Party, which was the same I supported in my riding of Frontenac. I would suggest that the Liberal Party would be well advised to draw inspiration from that program.

Mr. Gauthier: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Earlier today, in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, the Minister said that Mr. Sherman had a lengthy experience in bilingualism. I would say that he also has a lengthy experience in issues which frighten many Canadians and make them deeply concerned about the appointment. Why is he so adamant in his refusal to let Mr. Sherman speak for himself before the committee?

An Hon. Member: What has he got to hide?

Mr. Masse: When it comes to frightening people, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Liberal Party is second to none.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

CASH ADVANCES TO PRODUCTS

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which arises out of Question Period. I understand that at the very end of the question from the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) he made a statement that I did not hear. Had I heard it, I would have responded differently.

Mr. Broadbent: I'll bet.

Mr. Mayer: There you have the proof, Mr. Speaker. He asked if cash advances would be available and then very quietly, at least I did not hear him, said that the producers who did not get them would very quietly have to go out of business. Had I heard that I certainly would have responded differently. The policy of this Government is not to let the farmers go out of business, and I think our record to date speaks to that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if we can have some guidance from you. I thought I had made the intervention as loudly as I usually speak in this House. However, if we can have follow-up answers in the House, then can we have follow-up questions?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not what happened; another NDP abuse.

Mr. Althouse: The initial answer is still correct; there will be no action taken for these farmers and they will be forced out of business.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose I do not really need to remind anyone that we have not yet had a point of order raised. Perhaps that would encourage everyone to remember that during Question Period it is helpful if everyone can hear everyone when they are asking and answering. That might be helpful.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH THE NETHERLANDS

Question No. 276—Mr. Kaplan:

Is the Government negotiating an extradition treaty with the Netherlands and, if so, is it prepared to include in the catagories of extraditable offences, that of collaborating with the enemy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canada is in the process of negotiating a new extradition treaty with the Netherlands. We are not prepared to include "collaborating with the enemy" as an extraditable offence in the treaty as it is an offence of a political nature and historically excluded under international law.

TRANSCRIPTS OF NEWS ITEMS

Question No. 286—Mr. Boudria:

1. During the period February 18 to February 24, 1985, was the Prime Minister, while in Florida, provided with videotape and other transcripts of news items on a daily basis and, if so, at what cost to the taxpayer?

2. What was the cost of (a) preparation (b) air shipping (c) production (d) taxis (e) other auxiliary fees for such items?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1 and 2. Yes. The only additional costs incurred were those for taxis and long distance charges for the use of facsimile transmissions. The respective costs are $270 and $600.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4242).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate concerning Motion No. 32 and the others we are discussing this afternoon in the House of Commons in relation to Bill C-15. The motion proposed this morning by the Hon. Member from the NDP is quite similar to our Motion No. 7 in its effect. We support the motion because it would lead to greater openness in government. We all know how the Conservatives spent a considerable amount of time during the last election campaign telling us how they wanted to be a more open government. As a matter of fact, they even made a campaign promise to that effect, as unbelievable as that may seem. The Conservative Party said they would ensure that access to information would be implemented in spirit and in fact. They wanted a more open government.

I see my colleague across the way from Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) and I am sure he wants a more open government in Canada.

Mr. Dick: We are doing it.

Mr. Boudria: If this motion is not adopted there could very well be a back-bench revolt among Conservatives in this House. We could perhaps even see the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton walk across the floor and join us if he does not get his way in this motion.

Mr. Dick: Never!

Mr. Nystrom: You can have him.

Mr. Dick: I have been there.

Mr. Nystrom: Liberal?

Mr. Dick: On that side.

Mr. Boudria: We know how committed he is towards this principle. Surely, if he is sincere, and I believe he is—

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order. Just to clarify the record, the Member from the Liberal Party was inviting the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton to cross the floor and join the Liberal Party. My understanding is that the Hon. Member said "I have already been there". I did not know he was a member of the Liberal Party and I just want to make sure that was clear on the record.

Mr. Dick: That is irrelevant.

Mr. Boudria: I am sure you recognize that is not a point of order but it is an interesting point nevertheless. The Hon. Member admitted to being a member of a party on this side but I thought he had been a member of the NDP, not the Liberals. Be that as it may, I was discussing the fact that this motion talks about having a more open government. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), I know, wants a more open government. She has often spoken about various issues in the past which made me believe that she wants a more open government. It seems that perhaps she traded her opinion on this issue for a bridge or something to be constructed in her riding. Perhaps we will find out later when the Member returns.

● (1510)

I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that in the past the Conservative Party has spoken on the Foreign Investment Review Agency in conflicting ways. That is not to say, of course, that they have been two-faced on the issue. As an example, on the issue of the take-over of Black & Decker it was interesting to see that the Conservative Member for that area was, on one hand, telling the people of his riding that he was helpless in the issue of the take-over of Black & Decker by GE and in protecting the jobs because, in his view, the FIRA legislation was not strong enough. Hearing a Conservative advocating stronger foreign investment legislation is enough to make the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) want to stand in his place and immediately withdraw the Bill. Perhaps the Hon. Member for that riding, who raised that issue, should demand the Minister's resignation on this issue. However, we do not see that happening.

Conservative Members are not even permitted to speak. Their Party Whip, House Leader, and others, have seemingly tied them to their seats and rendered them unable to speak. The Hon. Member from Simcoe has said in the past that we need stronger foreign investment legislation. We can only assume that that was a Conservative view stated by a Conservative Member of Parliament. I am sure that when the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion reads Hansard to find out what was said in the House of Commons today, he will suddenly discover what a great mistake he has made in introducing this legislation. Hopefully he will withdraw the Bill. Failing that, perhaps he could approve the amendment that was presented just now by our colleague.

We know, of course, Mr. Speaker, where the Government stands on foreign investment. In the past they have said in the House that they want Canada to be open for business. Everyone wants Canada to be open for business, mainly because it was never closed. We all know that. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, being the non-partisan person that you are, will recall that Canada has always been open for business. Somehow the Conservatives have been dreaming in technicolour that Canada was closed for business, even though FIRA approved 97 per cent of the applications it received, and even though some Conservative Members, especially from the Simcoe area, said that FIRA had to be strengthened in order to protect jobs at Black & Decker.

Notwithstanding those very strong views and those important issues, the Government is going right ahead with this regressive legislation. Hopefully there will be some salvation in that they will now at least approve of the amendments which we are discussing at the present time.

Foreign investment must be done in such a way as to ensure protection for jobs in the country. It is not that foreign investment is not wanted by all of us.

I would like to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that we do not seem to have a quorum at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will ask the Deputy Clerk to count the Members present.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is no quorum so I ask that the bells be rung.

And the bells having been rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is now a quorum so we will proceed with the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to see the Conservative Members back in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Where are the Liberals?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Member has been in the House long enough to know that he is not supposed to refer to the presence or absence of Members, or to the fact that all the Liberals walked out of the house to create the quorum call in the first place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I think that perhaps several points were made, including the one by the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). If everyone agrees, we can hear the conclusion of the speech by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I, of course, never referred to any individual Member being absent from the House. I am just glad to see that collectively there is more participation in this Chamber this afternoon.

For the benefit of those who have not heard, we were discussing the issue of the amendments proposed in group No. 8 in relation to Bill C-15. The issue is openness in government. You really cannot discuss openness in government without referring to the appointments made in secret by the Government. An example of that is the appointment of Mr. Bud Sherman, apparently made by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). One can sense the secretive attitude and offensive procedures that are being used by some members of Cabinet to intimidate the rest of the Conservative Members, not to mention Opposition Members as well.

We in the Liberal Party are in favour of the motion that we are discussing this afternoon. We want the Government to be more responsive. I am sure the Conservative back-benchers agree with that. We want the Government to live up to its campaign commitment of open government.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to speak against the amendment. The amendment deals with public disclosure of foreign companies. Under the amendment all undertakings would be made public. Earlier we heard from the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He said that he was not interested in the financial statements of foreign companies or the profits. He only wanted to be in on the decision-making process of the foreign companies. How can you be part of decision making without knowing the financial status of a company? Perhaps that is why the Government is in the disastrous state it is in today. Perhaps the previous Government made decisions but never took a look at the dollars and cents. They were great at spending money but simply did not budget.

I must oppose this amendment. My Government does not discriminate. We do not set up two sets of rules. We welcome foreign investment and Canadian investment.

This country has changed for the better. We will provide fair and equal treatment for all. Canada now has a stable, secure Government that will welcome all foreign investment. We will increase productivity and we will create more jobs. We will get the people back to work and off UIC. We will get people off welfare. Canadians are proud and honest and they want to work. We will attract foreign investment and get them back to work.

Let me talk a bit about the Foreign Investment Review Act and what has happened since its inception. Since 1981 over $17 billion has left this country because we had two sets of rules. We discriminated against foreign investors. Not even Canadians wanted to invest in a country which they could not trust.

I come from a region of Canada that not only lost companies, but our unemployment rate absolutely tripled, if not quadrupled.

Mr. Lapierre: We will see what you do.

Mrs. Sparrow: We will welcome foreign investment because it is a benefit to Canada. We will get technology and encourage joint ventures so that Canadians will be working for and with foreigners. We want to increase the supply of world products. Therefore we will oppose the amendments.

Our Government believes in fair play, democracy, free enterprise, the market system, supply and demand. All investment will be welcomed here in Canada. All companies, be they Canadian or foreign, will comply with the regulations.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think one is required to address the motions on the floor and not the Bill as a whole, which means that one should be debating the principle of openness, not the points with which the Member is trying to deal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow).

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I believe that my remarks are directed specifically at openness. All investment will be welcomed here. All companies, Canadian or foreign, will comply with the regulations that guide operations here in Canada.

Last September the people of Canada spoke out. They said they wanted the Government to get out of the boardrooms. Government has left the boardrooms. We are a Government of the people which will work for and with the people. We have communicated with the people and we support Bill C-15. I must oppose these amendments.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise again to debate the specifics of these amendments. Unfortunately, I believe the Hon. Member who just spoke believed everything she said. She sounds like a charter member of the junior achievers of Canada.

The purpose of the amendments before us are to give Canadians in those communities where foreign interests either take over or create new facilities some input into their development. These amendments would permit those communities to understand what is happening and at least be given information with respect to the rules and conditions that are placed upon companies.

The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) suggested that our Party wants one rule for foreign investors and another rule for Canadian investors. I can assure the House that our Party, and I believe the Official Opposition, believes that information should be freely available to the community which has an investment of its labour, utilities and infrastructure in a particular company that is foreign or Canadian owned. Any decision that is made by a major corporation in such a community can have a major impact on that community.

I recently visited a community which was prosperous. The company in that community was predicting a great future, saying that it would be there until the year 2000. However, a board decision was made which pulled the rug from underneath the people of Ear Falls in northwestern Ontario. Although there was enough ore in the mine that the company could extract for a reasonable profit, it was not in its corporate interest to do so. It will close the mine and therefore close the town.

If the people of that town, whether it is the business people, the Chamber of Commerce, the union or its citizens, had been privy to the information about the status of the mine throughout that decision-making process, and if they could have participated and influenced the corporate decisions, they would not be experiencing the frustration and anguish they suffer now and will suffer for much longer.

Another Member of this House said it much better than I. Let me quote from Hansard, June 22, 1978, page 6686, in a debate about freedom of information. Freedom of information is really what we are talking about here. The Hon. Member was the late Hon. Walter Baker. He said:

> We need freedom of information legislation for more than the reason commonly given, namely, that people are entitled to information gathered by public servants at public expense. That in itself is not sufficient reason, in my mind, to justify the complications which we may create as a result of such a bill. The real reason lies behind the basic theory and purpose of democratic government. Democracy thrives on the competition of ideas, argument, criticism and visions of the future. It depends not only on the electoral and parliamentary competition of political parties, but on the contribution of other voices in society acting from altruistic or selfish motives. As a parliamentary democracy we encourage organized probing of government actions through the formal structures of the House of Commons. As a pluralistic society we believe in the value of those organizations referred to as pressure groups.

This not only applies to government, it applies to companies which, by their very nature, can positively or negatively develop a community, can give life to a community or destroy it. People who live in communities in which there is foreign investment have a right to know what is going on. They have a right to know if certain rules have been established in terms of job creation or environmental controls. Perhaps there was an agreement to allow for a decline in permanent job positions in those communities over a certain number of years.

Individuals in those communities have a right to know what is happening. This may mean the disclosure of financial statements and minutes of the board of directors. It may mean that the community should have one of its citizens sitting on the board to help participate in those decisions. I am amazed that the Government does not want to accept the philosophy of access to information. Clearly it is desperately needed and should be supported. I urge Hon. Members to change their minds and support it.

In my final moment I should like to offer a personal comment to the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). I see that he is in the House, and I want to assure him that we are coming back, even though the Thunder Bay Twins are down three to one.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I just want to let the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) know—and following the rule of relevancy—that one thing about the people of Newfoundland is that we believe in being very impressive in making a point. Of course the Corner Brook Royals are being impressive in making a point. We do not believe in slaughtering the opposition; we let them have a game, at least. The people of Thunder Bay and the people of Corner Brook are hanging on to every word which my colleague and I utter. The hockey teams in his riding and mine are having it out over the Allen Cup right now.

I rise in support of Motion No. 8 because it goes to the heart of Bill C-15. This Bill takes the Foreign Investment Review Agency and turns it into something called, for propaganda purposes, Investment Canada. Hon. Members opposite stand in the House and say that they believe in free enterprise, the free market, supply and demand, and capitalism, but no one has asked them whether they believe in the people of Canada, the communities in which they live or the way in which they live. With a bill which allows foreign capital to come into the country and any investment under $5 million to be made without any scrutiny, without any assessment or without any thought as to whether or not the investment is good or bad, we open up a very dangerous can of worms.

There are three fishermen sitting in the visitors' gallery today from the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland. They are here trying to get the Government of Canada to assist them in maximizing the potential of the fishery on the great northern peninsula. Right now there is a shotgun, splinter approach to the development of that fishery. They come from an area where unemployment in the best of times is 35 per cent to 40 per cent and where during the off-season it is 60 per cent to 70 per cent. They have a rich resource—cod, scallops, shrimp, herring and all kinds of roe. They want a development plan to make that region the prosperous area it can be. Why isn't it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Because you guys were in power for the last 20 years, that is why.

Mr. Tobin: It is not for that reason. It is because in the northern region unbridled free enterprise does not deal with the reality of northern conditions. That is why. It is not prosperous because companies have come to the North with its rich resource to cherry pick. They have taken the very best resources or the very best stocks for themselves and shipped them off the north coast for processing in Boston or somewhere and have left the rest for the Government to run. That is unbridled free enterprise in that kind of environment.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order please. The Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. B. Tardif), on a point of order.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Chair to examine the relevance of what the Hon. Member is saying.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: I do not know what she said, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): For the information of the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. Tardif) said that the Hon. Member's speech was not relevant to the subject matter of the amendments brought forward on Bill C-15. The common denominator with which we are confronted here is public accountabilities on the amendments.

Mr. Tobin: I assure the Hon. Member that the people of the northern peninsula are relevant. When we talk about the possibility of foreign investors coming in and picking up piecemeal the fish plants and the operations on that northern peninsula, and consigning them forever to the life of a serf to a foreign master in a foreign boardroom, they are relevant. That is the bloody problem with those people across the way; they see everything in the urban context of the boardrooms and the free enterprise speech that they are born and bred with. They forget about the people of Canada who live in resource sensitive areas. They are relevant. I reject any notion that the people of the northern peninsula are not as relevant to this speech as the people of Toronto, Calgary or Vancouver. You are damn right they are relevant, and that is the bloody problem, Mr. Speaker.

There are a number of resource industries in the country, whether it is the fishery, the forestry or primary production, that we do not see in the cities. They are out there doing a day's work. They are very susceptible to a Bill which will allow foreign investment to come in and cherry pick, to take the very best fish plants and forestry operations, and to leave the rest for the Government of Canada to subsidize.

We want a consolidated resource development policy which recognizes the long-term best interests of the people in the communities where they live. If we have a Bill which allows foreign investment to come in for under $5 million and make a purchase with no scrutiny, of course these people are relevant. Not only that, when there is an assessment, it is kept secret so that no one knows whether it is good or bad. Of course they are relevant. That is why they came to Ottawa. They had to come all the way here to be heard because the Minister of Fisheries and Qceans (Mr. Fraser) would not go to the great northern peninsula. That is the problem, that kind of narrow-minded attitude or that kind of boardroom mentality which says that profits at any cost are more important than people. I reject that philosophy.

I support the NDP motion. We are not so partisan that we do not support a good motion when we see one. This motion simply asks that when an assessment is made, the people affected have the right to see that assessment and have a chance to determine for themselves whether a particular foreign investment is good or bad.

In the case of communities as great, as wonderful and as historic as New Ferolle, Green Island Brook and St. Anthony on the great northern peninsula, Bill C-15, which gives unbridled authority to foreign investment to come in and take the best of what is offered and leave the people with the rest, is unacceptable.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill C-15. The present Government when in opposition made unending pleas for openness in Government and for the opportunity for Members of the House to criticize what the Government was putting before the people. Therefore, it is surprising that the Government now in power is not willing to support the openness or freedom of information which is involved in the series of motions presently before the House.

While in opposition the late Hon. Walter Baker, whom my colleague quoted a few minutes ago, made probably one of the strongest pleas in the House for openness in government. I should like to quote a paragraph from that speech. He stated:

> —if the people of the country are to be able to judge in a knowledgeable way, then some of the tools of power must be shared. One of the great tools of power is not only the ability to probe all the structures within this place, but also to have the knowledge by which that probing, that investigation, that calling to account of a government, can be done effectively based on information and knowledge rather than instinct.

The late Hon. Walter Baker hit the nail on the head. The people of Canada need information to be available. The economy of the country is dependent upon that information, and a judgment can be made with the tools available to the people.

During the committee hearings, a number of witnesses made reference to the need for openness in this Bill. The one who made the most telling plea for openness was a former commissioner of FIRA, Mr. Gorse Howarth. He had a great deal of experience working with the need to control investment in Canada. When he appeared before the committee he criticized the past FIRA Bill, which I also want to put before this House. He said, and I quote:

> The most telling criticism, certainly the most telling criticism as far as I was concerned, was that the whole process was conducted in secrecy.—The truth of the matter is that the way Parliament wrote that law, the Government and the agency had no choice but to keep virtually everything concealed and hidden.
> As far as I can see, that is going to happen under the proposed new law, as it is now written. The requirements for confidentiality are no less stringent. Virtually all the information which was classified by Parliament under the Foreign Investment Review Act as privileged is classified as privileged under the proposed new Act. And if that is indeed to be the pattern, then Parliament and the Government and the agency and everyone can expect, sooner or later, after the first blush of happiness and so on has gone, that there will be the same kind of criticism that this whole process is being conducted in a secretive manner. There will be more criticism, perhaps, because this Government, as I understand it, is committed to making things more open to the public.

The previous Minister, the Hon. Walter Baker, would have appreciated that statement. He probably would have said that that is exactly what his Government intends to do, but he would have been wrong. The Government has put into this Bill the same kind of secrecy as was in the former Bill, not giving the people of Canada an opportunity to look at the factors which go into the making of a decision.

This series of amendments is aimed at the increase in the amount of openness in Government. Motion No. 8 asks to be made available to the people of Canada any studies that are made regarding decisions to allow investments in Canada. In the past the Minister and this Government have suggested that we take on faith that every bit of investment in Canada will be good for Canada. These amendments suggest that that is not necessarily so and that what should be available is a process by which decisions which are made and which go into the making up of an investment are available to the Parliament of Canada and the people of Canada so that they can decide whether that kind of investment is good for Canada. They should do that rather than foreign investors being told to buy what they have to, take the profits and run. This would require that their decisions be open for criticism. If that kind of information were available on investments made in Canada, Canadians would quickly join us in saying that unlimited and uncontrolled investment in Canada is not necessarily good for Canada.

Motion No. 12, the second of the motions before us, attempts to strengthen the information base available to policy makers and Canadians generally. It is an attempt to put before the people of Canada information which will allow them to better understand the behaviour of foreign businesses on the whole and their specific behaviour, particularly if this kind of analysis has been done.

If we had before the Government and the people of Canada the reasons for acquisitions before those acquisitions were allowed, we could make some kind of judgment. We would not have the kind of situation which came before this House previously where Black & Decker in Barrie was taken over and almost immediately closed, resulting in the loss of several hundred jobs. Those kinds of decisions would be open to scrutiny. They likely would not be allowed to go ahead. If they were, there would be rebellion among the people in communities such as Barrie when such suggestions are made.

Motion No. 32 deals with making public information relating to the investment which the companies must file under the notification section. That would allow the people of Canada to make judgments, which would suggest that the amount of investment by foreign corporations would be limited only to those areas where we could be sure it would go to the creation of jobs and that the investment would be for the benefit of Canada rather than, as the previous speaker said, just a method of picking cherries and getting out.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to one of the amendments, and I think most Canadians will not understand why Progressive Conservative Members are opposed to this information being released. How are Members of this House to know that a company in their riding has been taken over by foreign investors, if no information with respect to safeguards for employees are to be communicated officially, if there is to be no information regarding the cost of investment, research or manpower training, if none of the obligations of a new foreign company that buys a local company in one of our ridings . . . why are Progressive Conservative Members opposed to all this information being made public? And why are Opposition Members demanding that the Minister be obliged to release such information? First of all, to ensure that jobs are protected; second, to ensure that in the region where the company is established, that particular industry will continue to operate and contribute to the development of the region in question; and third, to ensure that the new company will be able to continue investing as much money in research.

If the Progressive Conservatives are opposed to this amendment and maintain their ridiculous decision to adopt this Bill, two years from now, they will wake up to reality and say: In my riding, such and such a company was operating quite satisfactorily. There were 200 employees. A foreign investor took over the company and shut it down. Members will wonder: How can that happen? Mr. Speaker, the answer will be: It is too late now. You should have been wide awake two years ago.

Mr. Speaker, that is the threat that awaits us. We have already had a sample of secret decision-making by the Minister of Regional Industrial Development. Remember the Domtar case. The Minister said no. Progressive Conservative Members were not even informed. Not even the Minister of Public Works, the Minister responsible for Quebec affairs in Cabinet, was informed, Mr. Speaker.

Had it not been for the role played by the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) in this matter, nothing would have come out of it, Mr. Speaker. I must commend the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who had the courage to take up the cudgels for Quebec in that case. But I keep thinking about all the others who are asleep today and feel that everything will be fine, never mind the unilateral decisions concerning equalization payments to Quebec, another unilateral decision without consultation irrespective of what the province was asking for. The same thing goes for housing programs such as RRAP, Mr. Speaker—cutbacks, unilateral decisions, nary a word from the Government. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, and more particularly the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté), should stop fooling around and sleeping in the House and make sure that the Government is forced to deal openly and see to it that any foreign interests taking over a Canadian business are required to guarantee jobs, develop the region involved, and promote research. That is easy enough to understand and I am sure that some Conservative Members agree with me on that score, Mr. Speaker. It is an important consideration before we proceed to the final stage of this Bill. I would ask the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary to ensure that workers are protected. This is not a question of selling out to the Americans, to foreign investors, or to anyone else. What matters is guaranteed employment protection in every region of the country and in every municipality. There are 1.5 million unemployed, Mr. Speaker, and without even trying to do anything else, the Government is throwing our doors open and saying: Come and invest in Canada, buy anything you want, do whatever you want, we do not really care. It is unthinkable that Members of Parliament should think like this and allow such a thing to happen, Mr. Speaker. I believe that it is very important for people to require the Minister and the Government to disclose the commitments made by investors about job security, research activities and regional development.

Another major point that this Bill should deal with is the possibility that in a given area, for instance Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean or Rimouski, which have terrible unemployment rates, or elsewhere in Quebec or Canada, a new company will be set up and then compete with a local business which is already struggling, and no one will do anything to prevent it. What will happen is that a multinational will set up a plant in that region and destroy a local or family business, and then that multinational will close down its plan and use it strictly as a warehouse to sell and export its own product.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and my other colleague who speaks on these matters are to be commended as well as the Members of the NDP for prodding the Government relentlessly. It was quite understandable that our "Camera Kid", our Prime Minister, went kowtowing to the President of the United States. However, Mr. Speaker, we have been elected by Canadian men and women and we are here to protect their interests. We, from Quebec, have been elected to protect the interests of Quebec men and women in each of our constituencies. We have not been elected to defend the multinationals, because if only multinationals could vote, there would not be many Members of Parliament. There are many more workers than business leaders in Canada, Mr. Speaker. In all your constituencies, there are many more workers than business leaders. Who elected you? They voted for you to protect their interests. We have 1.5 million unemployed in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and if the Government leaves Bill C-15 as is, there will be more arbitrary and stupid decisions like those this Government has been making since September 4, such as cut-backs in the RRAP program for residential rehabilitation without consulting mayors and municipalities. The Hon. Members are not even aware of it. In Rimouski, the mayors of the regional municipality of Rimouski are complaining about the 60 per cent cut-backs in the RRAP program, Mr. Speaker, and the local Member of Parliament is not even aware of it. The Minister did not even inform his colleague about the decisions he will be making on these matters, Mr. Speaker. The Domtar case is the best example; the map-making institute is another example of this government's unilateral decisions. Ironically, they used to claim: "We are going to do things differently! We are going to consult the people." But when the time comes to legislate and to enlighten the public, the Minister says that he prefers to keep everything to himself. The Parliamentary Secretary has every reason to hide behind the curtains. If I were she, I should be ashamed and would refuse to take my seat. Here she comes, Mr. Speaker. I feel it is important . . . and I rely on the Parliamentary Secretary whom I have successfully provoked and awakened.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary (Mrs. Tardif) rises on a point of order.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I should like the Chair to consider the relevance of these remarks. So far, whenever opposition members from the NDP have risen, they have dealt at least with the amendments under consideration. On the other hand, when members of the Official Opposition have risen, only a few of them have dealt with these amendments. I should like, therefore, the Chair to look into the relevance of their remarks. Also, I should like the Chair to remind hon. members that they should not mention whether their colleagues are present in or absent from the House, something they have done on several occasions today.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member should realize that there are rules of relevancy. I am sure he is coming to the relevant point right at this time. He only has about a minute or so left.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to argue with the Parliamentary Secretary, but I was referring to the amendment and the fact that the necessary information should be disclosed to the members of each area . . . I think that the Hon. Member was absentminded and did not quite grasp my comments, but I was sticking closely to the issue under consideration. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary, who should play her role, to try and influence the minister in order to protect jobs in Canada. If she does not want to do so, she will pay the political price later. If the Tory members do not want to do their job and merely go on travelling, they will pay the political price later. The Opposition maintains that it is essential for the government to make amendments and accept the amendment suggested by the NDP to make public the information on the following three critical points: guaranteed jobs, regional development and research.

[English]

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): I was just sitting here in the House reading a speech made by the Hon. Walter Baker on freedom of information. I am sure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has read some of his many speeches on that subject. I was reading a speech from June 22, 1978, on freedom of information, and I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary. That is the subject of these amendments. I hope I will not be called to task if I stray even slightly from the subject matter of the amendments.

The Hon. Walter Baker and another very prominent Conservative whom many of us remember with great pleasure, Mr. Ged Baldwin, made probably the most powerful arguments in this Chamber outside of those made by members of the New Democratic Party for the need to be fully informed and to have full information flow to the Canadian public on a very great variety of matters.

I can remember their making an argument we have often made, which is that everything should be made public unless there is an absolute specification that it should not be made public. That follows the Swedish rule which provides that information, and indeed information of the kind that is available to the new board that will be created under the Investment Canada Act, should be made public unless there is a specific order that a particular piece of information should not be made public. As I have said, even Conservative Members have made very eloquent speeches on that subject. At that time, the Liberal Government was closing the door to freedom of information.

Indeed, a few years ago, I remember sitting in on the hearings of the decennial review of the Bank Act. One of the things for which we were pushing very strongly was a public disclosure section in that Act which would provide that Canadians would have some idea in larger terms about the actual amount of capital that was flowing in and out of this country.

Almost every country has public disclosure legislation of that kind, except Canada. I believe when the Conservatives were in opposition they supported us on our public disclosure amendment, but we were not able to get it through the Liberal Government. Now, of course, when the Liberals are in opposition, they are like Ged Baldwin and the Hon. Walter Baker when they were in opposition, and are calling for public disclosure. The Liberals are supporting our amendments, which basically ask for the information which is gathered and analysed by Investment Canada to be made public.

As other speakers have pointed out, a substantial amount of the information has been kept secret. I do not know why it is that when a Party ceases to be in opposition and becomes the Government it changes its mind completely about the importance of public knowledge, public awareness and public information. I do not know why, when that Party is in government, it becomes extremely secretive in areas where there seems to be very little ground for such secretiveness. Indeed, the whole state of society can be jeopardized by that secretiveness.

Again, the amendments only ask for certain information to be made public, for example, the studies of foreign investment patterns and behaviour. They ask for information to be made public which relates to the performance of foreign business in Canada. As well, they also ask that undertakings which are made to the agency by a foreign business in exchange for approval be made public. Requests for systematic and public monitoring of approved takeovers to ensure compliance with undertakings should also be made public. Those kinds of proposals are absolutely fundamental for a public understanding and discussion, and indeed a parliamentary understanding and discussion, of the consequences, both good and bad, of the legislation.

I cannot help but wonder if the reason that the Government is being so recalcitrant in accepting these amendments is that it has very serious doubts about whether there will be any new investment of a major proportion under this Bill. Indeed, the Government may have been listening to Wall Street and know that major, fresh foreign investment which would create jobs is simply not in the cards.

Undoubtedly, there will be some new investment, particularly in the under $5 million range in direct acquisitions, which will gobble up much of Canada's small operations, particularly in the high-tech area. The Government is afraid that that will be attractive either to the foreign-owned companies which are already operating in Canada, or to new companies. They will be straight takeovers. New investment and new jobs will not be involved. In fact, there may even be fewer jobs. The Government must be afraid that the "new" investment which we may see will not be "new" money coming into Canada, but that it will be—as has so often been the case in the past—money which is being borrowed from Canadian banks. The Government may know that that will be the consequence and, therefore, does not want to have any information disclosed on investment patterns, foreign investment behaviour and on the performance of foreign business in Canada. It wants to continue with that secretiveness because there will not be new money, jobs and opportunities. There will only be takeovers, probably of smaller Canadian entrepreneurial-type firms, or, if they are larger companies, they will likely be taken over and funded almost entirely by Canadian banks.

I remember a gentleman who owned a small manufacturing business which produced electrical components in Vancouver. The business was doing very well. He went to the bank for a loan to increase the operation, but the bank thought it too risky. Shortly thereafter, he sold the business to an American. The American took over the business and within days received a loan from the same bank which had turned him down. The American was part of a large conglomerate, so he received the loan. In Canada we learn that sort of thing by experience. There is no public disclosure anywhere. People simply have to hear about it from persons who have been involved. In my riding, a firm was bought by a foreign company which began to lay off people. It did not fulfil its obligations with respect to creating new jobs. We hear about them, but there is no public information available to us. Even Mrs. Thatcher allowed a public disclosure Act to be passed in the United Kingdom.

If the Government is saying that it knows we will not get genuine foreign investment which will create real new jobs and that we will get only takeovers, in particular in small high-tech operations, then I suppose I have to say that I understand why the Government will not provide public information and public disclosure.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Human Rights—U.S.S.R. Representations on behalf of Jewish population; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Health—Testing of toxic hormone to control cockroaches; and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)—Transport—Construction of VIA Rail maintenance plant. Government position. (b) Transport industry's fragility in Montreal—Government position.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4242).

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, before speaking to Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a problem arising from the translation of Motion No. 12 from English into French. I would invite my Francophone colleagues on the other side of the House to try and understand what I am going to read to them. The text reads as follows, and I quote:

g) de recueillir périodiquement des renseignements sur le rendement des entreprises canadiennes lorsque ce n'est pas contrôlé par des non-Canadiens et de les rendre publics appartenant à des non-Canadiens et expressément interdit par la législation fédérale;».

And this is what it is supposed to say, in English:

[English]

(g) regularly compile and make public information, where not expressly prohibited by federal legislation, pertaining to the performance of Canadian businesses owned and controlled by non-Canadians;".

• (1610)

I wanted to bring this error to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, because it is unacceptable, and I hope it will not happen too often.

To go back to the matter at issue, in proposing Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is asking, first of all, that the Government make public the results of research and analysis with respect to investment applications. Second, in Motion No. 63, the Hon. Member is asking that the Government also make public its ruling, including all undertakings made in connection with the investment. Third, in Motion No. 74, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor asks that the Governor-in-Council make public all reasons for disallowing applications. That, Mr. Speaker, is the essence of the amendments we are now considering.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. Tardif) has taken note that I am indeed speaking to the amendments.

Members on the other side of the House seem to think that we in the Opposition take a special delight in nit-picking. That is certainly not the case. However, we do want to defend the interests of our fellow citizens, and it is the Opposition's role to ensure that the Government does not cause grave injustice to be done.

In my riding, Mr. Speaker, a young man under 30 is trying to succeed with his company which makes tofu, a protein-substitute cheese for meat widely used in hospitals and prisons. So one day he came to my riding office to tell me about the difficulty he was having to find out from the federal Government whether a competitor plant in another city in Canada had received a federal Government grant, which he thought was unfair. I had a hard time myself and it was weeks before I finally got the information. Information is the current buzz word. This is legislation on information. We are trying to make it easier for our fellow citizens and Canadian entrepreneurs to invest their savings wisely.

The administrative machinery is complicated enough as it is. I had hopes, but now I am rather doubtful because nobody on the other side of the House appears anxious to rise and debate our proposals. The logic of those motions is crystal clear, we want to make sure that there is no possibility of conflict of interest. Canadian and foreign investors must be able to rely on the vigilance of this Government. This series of motions introduced by our New Democratic Party colleagues touch upon a rather delicate aspect of the federal administration—openness and ready access to information. No Government can operate properly unless it is quite prepared to report to the public and its representatives on the situation of the federal administration.

How unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) does not seem to grasp the significance of the proposed amendments. As the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor suggested this morning, she ought to take part in the debate. Indeed, we are wondering why Hon. Members opposite are so quiet in this debate. I am on duty today, Mr. Speaker, I have been here since this morning and I have heard only one speaker from the Government side.

This morning the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) made an important point in his remarks. We are not interested in knowing how much money such or such company is making or losing. We want to know how the Government is doing. It is a matter of information and sound operation.

The Progressive Conservative Party has always been a staunch advocate of more open administration, more readily accessible Government, as the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) pointed out this morning. I fail to understand why Members opposite cannot manage to agree on their political principles of yesteryear.

It is unacceptable that the Progressive Conservative Members be forced to remain silent. After all, there are enough of them and I know that a good many are dying to tell us what they think, not least of whom the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

[English]

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), tells me that Erik gave an order.

[Translation]

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it seems Members opposite have been instructed to keep quiet. So, we are led to believe that Conservative backbenchers are prevented from playing their role as Members of Parliament. After all, if the Government does not want to hear the views of its own Members, it is high time the Canadian people learned about it. To report on information gathered by the agency would not break any Government secret. On the contrary, it would make for openness and acquaint Members of Parliament and potential investors with investment trends, especially at the planning level, and future prospects. It would avoid a duplication of efforts both for Canadian and foreign investors and for the officers of the agency. For instance, let us imagine that a Canadian investor decides to set up a new business. By consulting the list of existing or future investment projects, he would know readily whether he can go ahead with his plan. By following the investment situation, he would be in a position to save his capital if he finds that a similar operation already exists.

I shall conclude in a minute, Mr. Speaker.

The same applies to non-Canadian future investors. The reputation of Canada is at stake. I believe that by providing wide-ranging and sound information, we would help both Canadians and non-Canadians to serve Canada better. If the Government will not accept these amendments, it will miss a great opportunity to show the Canadian people that it believes in open government, because, until now, Canadians have been disappointed in this respect.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to take part in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-15 and, in particular, on a number of amendments brought forward by the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party in this area. All of these amendments are designed to make the process of review a more open one. The amendments are all very clear. We have a situation where it is still the case that Canadians often have to go to the United States to get information on American corporations acting in Canada. Canada seems to be a place where secrecy reigns, a practice permitted to go on far too long by the previous Government, and I am afraid that the legislation before us now repeats all of the mistakes in the approach of past Governments. It is time that we saw some opportunity for Canadians to get the information they need in order to make representations and for the public to know what is going on. If takeovers are not in the Canadian interest, this should be made very clear.

Of course, our whole thrust with respect to this legislation is that it is going in the wrong direction. We would like to see FIRA strengthened and we would like to have better assurances that foreign investment in Canada will suit Canadian needs and generally create jobs. Because we have this objective, we are disturbed by the whole tenor of this legislation and, certainly, its secrecy provisions are such as to cause a great deal of concern. It is even harder to fight bad legislation and bad takeovers when you do not have the information you need.

Let me speak about the specific amendments at this point. There are five amendments we are considering this afternoon. Motion No. 8 is an amendment to Clause 5 in the Bill. Our amendment would add to that clause the words:

—and make public, where not expressly prohibited by federal legislation, the results of this research and analysis.

This is an eminently reasonable and sensible motion. When the Canadian public pay a government Department to make investigations as to the wisdom of certain investments, this information should be available to the Canadian public which has an interest in seeing that the right economic decisions are made.

The second motion is Motion No. 12, and this is again to amend Clause 5 and would add to the part dealing with performance of corporations the following:

(g) regularly compile and make public information, where not expressly prohibited by federal legislation, pertaining to the performance of Canadian businesses owned and controlled by non-Canadians.

This is absolutely crucial to having any sensible economic policies whatsoever. We need to have information as to performance in order to make judgments and if we do not have the information, then bad decisions can be made and not found out about or objected to.

The third motion before us is Motion No. 32 and it deals with Clause 13. The intent of this motion is that the agency will make public within a reasonable time period all new businesses and acquisitions dealt with in this part of the legislation, and make public within a period not exceeding 14 days after notification is given all proposed investments subject to review. This is an obvious and constructive resolution to a long-standing problem.

The fourth motion we have before us is Motion No. 63 in amendment to Clause 21. It deals with net benefits, an absolutely crucial question as well. The Minister shall, within 45 days after the certified date, et cetera, send a notice having taken into account any information, undertakings and representations referred to the Minister by the agency pursuant to the section and be satisfied that the investment is likely to be of net benefit to Canada. This is absolutely the key question in the decision about whether the investment should be allowed at all; is there going to be a net benefit to Canadians? Our proposal here is to add the words:

—and shall make public his ruling including all undertakings made in connection with the investment.

A most reasonable expectation.

The fifth motion is Motion No. 69 in amendment to Clause 22. It says:

"notice to that effect to the applicant and shall make public its decision including all undertakings made by the applicant."

Again, that is absolutely essential. It is obviously beyond dispute that any undertaking should be made public and the public, who are the people most concerned because they are going to lose jobs when unwise decisions are made, should have this pertinent information.

Well, why is this not happening? The Conservative Party certainly had people who have spoken in the past in favour of openness in government. We have had references made to the late Walter Baker and he certainly was a leader in this respect. He made very strong speeches in this House in his last years of service about the requirements for full disclosure, requirements for a working democratic system, requirements that there not be cover-ups, that the public get the information it needs. These were all very sensible recommendations and we wonder why the Government is not listening to its leaders and respecting those kinds of proposals which have been made in the past.

At the time this Bill was in committee there was testimony from a number of people pleading the cause of openness in deliberations. I would like to quote in particular Gorse Howarth, a former FIRA commissioner who appeared before the committee. He said:

The most telling criticism, certainly the most telling criticism as far as I was concerned, was that the whole process was conducted in secrecy. People used words like "Star Chamber" and this, that, and the other.

Why did they use these words? Because in the consideration of this commissioner, the agency, FIRA, had to operate secretly. It was not that it is necessarily covering up any particular point, but to quote him again, he said:

The truth of the matter is that the way Parliament wrote that law, the government and the agency had no choice but to keep virtually everything concealed and hidden.

What he was concerned about was the current wording of the legislation. He said:

As far as I can see, that is going to happen under the proposed new law, as it is now written. The requirements for confidentiality are no less stringent. Virtually all the information which was classified by Parliament under the Foreign Investment Review Act as priviliged is classified as privileged under the proposed new act. And if that is indeed to be the pattern, then Parliament and the government and the agency and everyone can expect, sooner or later, after the first blush of happiness and so on has gone, that there will be the same kind of criticism that this whole process is being conducted in a secretive manner. There will be more criticism, perhaps, because this government, as I understand it, is committed to making things more open to the public.

Here is someone who listens to election talk and listens to Conservatives in opposition. Indeed, we were treated to many a lecture about openness and civility and other high-minded principles while these people were in opposition, and one wishes they would read their own speeches and put them in action when they are drawing up their legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) should know better than to walk between the speaker and the Chair. He has done that twice and I would just like to bring it to his attention.

Mr. Axworthy: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, previous speakers for the Conservatives, one just a very short time ago, opened up the debate on some of the wider issues, and I feel compelled to make a few closing remarks at least about some of these issues. We heard a spirited Conservative plea for more foreign investment. We heard statements that foreign investment and Canadian investment were equal. Certainly as a New Democrat how can I be against equality? Well, I would like to remind the House that there is no such equality. Foreign investment and Canadian investment have played very different roles in Canada. It would be very nice if foreign investment had the same effect that Canadian investment had. If foreign investment really had the job potential being claimed for it by the Conservatives right now, we would probably have the lowest unemployment rate in the world. We have had growing foreign investment over the past few decades in Canada and we have had extremely high unemployment. We have more unemployment than many, many other countries which are much more careful about permitting foreign investment. If job creation were the rich reward of foreign investment, we would have more job creation than we can stand.

I do want to point to the great sense of frustration that people across Canada have experienced. The jobs action group which the NDP caucus consulted recently was very worried about foreign investment. They felt decisions were being made behind closed doors, that companies would come into their communities, make their profits and leave, that they would leave them with nothing. In short, these were investments which were not to the benefit of the community and they felt powerless.

It is important that communities not be powerless, and in order for that to happen they have to have the information, the public has to have it, we in Parliament have to have it so we can fight unwise takeovers and see that economic decisions are made for the benefit of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, this morning we considered a series of amendments relating to Bill C-15, and we tried to persuade the Government, through the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, to consider accepting certain amendments to the Bill which were aimed at removing what we see as the inordinate discretion allowed the Minister, powers that we find excessive, but it is obvious, although no vote will be taken on these motions since there will be a recorded vote, that the Government has been unwilling to accept any amendments whatsoever.

Despite our warnings and the proposals that were made, the Government says no, and will use its vast majority, although that majority is not apparent at this moment in the House, to set aside any constructive proposals by Hon. Members, and especially from the Opposition.

We are now considering another set of amendments we are proposing to Bill C-15, to make the legislation more acceptable and to make it and those who will have administrative and political responsibility more responsible to public opinion.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why Government Members are not willing to consider Motion No. 8 to amend Clause 5 of the Bill. Clause 5(c) says, and I quote:

(c) carry out research and analysis relating to domestic and international investment;

The amendment being proposed in Motion No. 8 is as follows: to add, following the word "investment", and I quote:

—and make public, where not expressly prohibited by federal legislation, the results of this research and analysis;".

Mr. Speaker, can anyone tell me why a perfectly normal suggestion, a suggestion that is entirely in line with open government, with the kind of government that wants to give the general public the information that in many cases is required by businessmen, why this amendment which would, in fact, oblige the Minister to make public the results of this research cannot be accepted? We all know this research is carried with taxpayers' money. The public is paying. Why not accept this simple amendment that is merely aimed at releasing information compiled as a result of research paid for with public funds?

Mr. Speaker, the Opposition, whether it is the New Democratic Party or the Liberals, can certainly not be accused of wanting to introduce sweeping changes in this legislation. It seems to me the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) could not do otherwise but rise in the House and say that it makes very good sense to have research carried out by public servants or by the agency, at the request of the Minister, studies on external trade, the situation of foreign or Canadian investments, paid for with public funds. We are just asking for the right to know, when there is nothing in the Act that prohibits the release of information, because of course such studies might contain confidential data. The amendment even includes the reservation that an exception would be made if publication were expressly prohibited by federal legislation, in cases where special considerations might—

Mr. La Salle: If necessary, certainly, that is in the legislation.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister has read the Bill. I do not think he has read Clause 5(c). We just want the Minister, provided there is no conflict in the case of confidential matters relating to a specific company, to release the results of such research for the benefit of Hon. Members and also for the benefit of business people who may need the information to make decisions. If the studies were not paid for with public funds, I would not mind, but this comes out of the public purse, and the Government is refusing to accept an amendment of this nature. At least, we have yet to hear any Government Members or the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary tell us why they are opposed to research that is carried out by the Government, at the expense of the taxpayer, being made available on a mandatory basis, provided there are no data in the study that should remain confidential pursuant to existing legislation.

Mr. Speaker, that was Motion No. 8. I am going to skip motion No. 12 and proceed with Motion No. 63. Motion No. 63 has the same objective, which is to make decisions public. The purpose of Motion No. 69 is to amend Clause 22 of Bill C-15.

There again, when we consider the text of the Bill and we analyze Clause 22, we see that the Minister is supposed to examine certain applications for foreign investment.

What we suggest should be done is simply adding the requirement to make public the decision by specifying among other things all the investor's undertakings. We are simply asking that this be made public. Why? Let us take for instance the constituency of Joliette. Let us assume the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Stevens)—and perhaps this could also occur in your constituency, Mr. Speaker—has agreed to an investment, and the company that has just taken over a Canadian business in the constituency of Joliette has decided, shall we say, to increase turnover and research investment, to maintain jobs at the existing level over a period of say five years, and has undertaken to buy 25, 30, 40 or 50 per cent of its raw materials in Quebec or in Canada, depending on the area where it is located, and if it was on the basis of such commitments that the Minister has agreed to the foreign investment, why not accept that such undertakings be made public so that the Hon. Member for Joliette—he is now in Government and may have special connections with the Minister, but even then the Minister is under no obligation to tell him about it or even to discuss it in Cabinet or in Cabinet committee, more or less like in the Domtar case—does not learn about it from the newspaper reports. All we are asking is: Why not make that public? Failing that, how can we, Members of Parliament, even Progressive Conservative Members, how can we all at some point answer questions from the public? How are we to know whether the undertakings are honored?

But that Government is so sure it is in possession of the one and only truth that it cannot or will not accept any amendment. We will find out later on, with other series of amendments, to what extent we are going to be prevented from monitoring foreign investment, to what extent we are going to be prevented from knowing whether the goals have been reached, whether the terms and conditions have been met because, as we are going to find out, and I will probably speak on that, when the Minister sets terms and conditions and foreign investment is agreed upon on that basis in Canada, reports will be submitted only after the Minister has asked for them.

We feel that those reports by the investor who made the commitments should be submitted automatically, and made public. Therefore, to monitor, to be sure, to be in a position to discharge our responsibility in this House, we have to determine whether there was an administrative decision that was perhaps—without ever suggesting for a moment that the Minister who took the decision was ill-intentioned, since at times he makes dozens and dozens of such decisions and if he does not make them public, he alone later on will be in a position to know whether or not he has forgotten to ask the company to produce reports, because they will only be provided upon request. If that were made public, there would be something like 280 people in this House, and especially Members from the areas concerned who are interested in the economic development of their communities, their constituencies, who could see whether the company after two years, assuming there were originally 200 employees, after having undertaken to increase the number of employees to 250 over the next five years, whether two years later, one finds out there are only 175 employees left and is in a position to sound the alarm, and the Minister will then say: We must ask for a report because otherwise, that company is not complying with the terms and conditions that I myself have set for accepting the sale of that Canadian firm to foreign interests.

The whole issue, the whole approach revolve around those amendments. I have addressed Motions No. 8 and No. 63. The others have more or less the same thrust. I would like to hear, if the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has had to leave the House—this is possible for he may have commitments elsewhere—I would like to know from the Parliamentary Secretary why, on which basis, and what the Government has to hide. Why not accept amendments that to me look quite natural and in line with the wishes expressed most of the time by all Members of this House, to be informed and to be in a position to clearly answer before their constituents for the Government?

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I would have other comments but my time is up.

• ¢(1640)

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this group of amendments which have been put forward by my colleague. I want to concentrate particularly on Motion No. 74.

The purpose of this motion is to ensure that information gathered on matters of great importance to the Canadian people be made public. Clause 23(3) currently states:

> On the expiration of the period referred to in subsection (1) for making representations and submitting undertakings, the Minister shall, in the light of any such representations and undertakings and having regard to the matters to be taken into account under subsection 21(1), forthwith send a notice to the applicant.

In other words, the application has been studied and now he has to send a notice to the applicant:

> (a) that the Minister is satisfied that the investment is likely to be of net benefit to Canada; or
> (b) confirming that the Minister is not satisfied that the investment is likely to be of net benefit to Canada.

While there are other matters on which I am dissatisfied, I simply want to talk about this one matter. When the proposed legislation stops at that point, it loses one of the principal values of any such review. Therefore, I support the inclusion of the amendment, which reads:

> (c) the Governor-in-Council shall make public decisions described in subsection (a) or (b), including in respect to (a) all undertakings made by the applicant and in respect to (b) the reasons for its disallowal.

In other words, Canadians, including workers and owners of Canadian industries related to the proposed takeover or investment, shall have the right to know what their Government is doing on their behalf. They shall have the right to know why the Government saw fit to allow a certain investment and what were the undertakings made by the investor, or why it saw fit to disallow a certain investment.

The old legislation under FIRA failed on this point. That legislation was intended to protect Canadian industry by government review and, where necessary, government control. However, it failed to publish this sort of information.

The present legislation fails in the same way. It perpetuates the secrecy of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. It allows, in some cases, some slight discretion to the Minister, but on the basis of the Minister's performance in the last six months when we have asked him repeatedly to explain the undertakings of a company such as Black & Decker, he totally refused. There is no indication that he would change that policy under the new legislation. Therefore, there is need for a requirement that that information be published and also that information about the conditions upon which approval was given or the grounds upon which approval was refused be published.

I am particularly concerned about the effect of this clause on Canada's garment manufacturing industry. There are 150,000 jobs at stake, approximately 30,000 of which are in Metropolitan Toronto. Many of those are in Spadina. This is an industry which is presently more than 80 per cent owned and controlled by Canadians. Many small business people and many individuals who are not small business people have pioneered for generations the businesses that have been an important part of Spadina and many other areas of Canada such as Montreal and Guelph. We cannot take for granted that this industry will continue to be four-fifths Canadian owned.

The industry is becoming concentrated. It is bringing in more expensive electronically-controlled equipment, and foreign investors are indeed beginning to buy holdings in the Spadina garment industry, whether taking over existing industries or establishing new ones with extremely predatory competitive rates.

In particular, there is now a rush of capital from Hong Kong into the Spadina garment industry. That is why this kind of review is needed urgently and should be incorporated into this legislation, as we have asked in our amendment.

Included in the information we want is to know a great deal about the operation of the company and its habits; its employment practices, and the research and development that it conducts either in the home country or in Canada, if already operating here. The information should include what it proposes to do in research and development.

We want to know about its export policy and between factory pricing policies—whether it will try to evade Canadian taxes by rigging its prices between factories. We would like to know its policies for remittances of fees and services or for dividends and interest.

We would like to know what it does with its undistributed profits. Is it investing profits from Canadian operations into Canada or is it milking Canada of these profits?

Many of these investors may well be multi-nationals. We would like to know the details of their world product mandate system. We have heard of this in the automobile industry but we also know that new technological development in the garment industry make this a very real possibility in the not too distant future. Those industries in Canada could be shut down, if not totally then to a large extent, for the sake of industries in countries that pay perhaps 10 per cent of Canadian wage rates.

We would also like to know how parent companies operate at home with respect to such matters as financial contributions to the cultural and educational life of the subsidiary's country. For example, do they intend to give equal treatment to Canada in that respect?

We also would like to know the functions of Canadian banks in takeovers. We have heard of many cases of Canadian companies being bought out with Canadian money from Canadian banks in the hands of a foreign investor. In that case, no new money is brought into Canada. Contrary to the belief of the Government, Canadian takeovers have taken place with very little new money but simply with Canadian money being used to buy out a Canadian industry in the interest of a foreign company which can then shut it down.

Statistics Canada could also provide relevant information with respect to undistributed profits of the Canadian businesses that are already owned and controlled by non-Canadian owners, and indicate whether those profits are reinvested in Canada.

Before a major assault begins on Canada's garment industry, this legislation should be in place so that we can monitor it closely and provide the Government with the power to take what action is necessary. The owners, workers and neighbours of our garment industry will be able to monitor what the Government does by having access to the information which the Government has gathered. The public—particularly the 150,000 Canadians whose livelihood is concerned here—should have access to the vital information that the Government can require by regulation.

All that vital information should be required by government regulations and should be made public in the interests of the people whose jobs, business holdings and shares are being put in jeopardy by foreign takeovers in many cases. In the interests of those Canadian citizens or Canadian residents, that information should be obtained by the Government and made public. If it is a new business, under this legislation it would not be reviewable for conditions under Investment Canada. I am not satisfied with that, but other Hon. Members will be speaking to that matter.

At least notification is required. We should know whether 5, 50 or 100 garment factories in Spadina have been taken over. We should know who has taken them over. We should have a good deal of information along the lines I have just described, even though there are no conditions. We should know what sort of operation is moving into the country, perhaps setting up a parallel operation which is perhaps funded so as to destroy the Canadian operation. If it is a takeover, the law requires that minimum conditions be determined by the Minister, and those conditions should be published. I ask that Motion No. 74 be given serious consideration by the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should follow the suggestion made by my colleague on my right and speak about the by-election held in New Brunswick. I must say it was a heartening outcome. It was a resounding success.

Mr. Speaker, to come back to Bill C-15 and especially the amendments which I want to support, that is Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74, I would like to point out that this is the first opportunity I have had to speak on this legislation and I am still wondering why this government is giving up a policy which is undoubtedly important and vital for the interests of Canada. Now, as I said, FIRA did not prevent foreign investors from doing business in Canada. Its role was rather to ensure that foreign investments were made in the best interests of Canadians and created jobs for Canadians while not being harmful to Canadian businesses. That review process which was a safeguard should have been maintained. Canada is obviously one of the industrialized countries which allows the most substantial foreign investments in its economy. This is one of the reasons why we should not remove that safeguard provided by FIRA.

If Bill C-15 were passed without the proposed amendments, anyone could come and set up a business and take out of this country without any kind of accountability. That is the problem. It is useless to say that if the bill is passed in its present form, all kinds of foreign interests will want to do business in this country. And if those foreign interests take over some industries or some concerns, as far as the Atlantic area is concerned, Mr. Speaker, such control on our businesses could have serious consequences on our resources.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall deal solely with our resource, that is to say our fish. This resource is currently protected by the 200-mile limit, and we know that some people have worked very hard to establish this 200-mile zone to protect our resources. If the Bill were to be adopted in its presents form, there would be nothing to prevent foreign interests from setting up shop along our shores. While they could not use ships to lay their hands on our off-shore resources, they could seize these resources by taking over businesses on the coast. Under these circumstances, what sort of control would we have over these resources which are of paramount importance to the Atlantic provinces? None whatsoever, for these foreign interests would not be answerable either to the people or the communities along the Atlantic shores, not even to the federal or provincial governments. How would we go about protecting our jobs, if these foreign interests decided to have the fish processed elsewhere? How could we protect these jobs? Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that, perhaps in New Brunswick more than anywhere else, jobs are extremely important. Today, the overall unemployment rate in New Brunswick is 17 per cent, and it reaches 21 per cent in my own region, which is unacceptably high. How could we protect these jobs? And how important do the Atlantic people feel these jobs are?

Mr. Speaker, you have certainly read in the papers recently that there were riots which caused considerable damage. They occurred in the Acadian peninsula in Northeastern New Brunswick. Some trucks and pieces of machinery were destroyed, and a plant was damaged to such an extent that it will not be able to operate this summer. Some people have lost their jobs. What is the reason behind these riots? Because workers suddenly realized that a firm intended to install machines to replace manual labour. Should I go on, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but—

[English]

Before calling it five o'clock and proceeding to Private Members' Business, I call to the attention of the House Standing Orders 15(2), 15(3) and 15(4), since I have had to reprimand a couple of Hon. Members today. Standing Order 15(2) reads:

When the Speaker is putting a question, no Member shall enter, walk out of or across the House, or make any noise or disturbance.

Standing Order 15(3) reads:

When a Member is speaking, no Member shall pass between that Member and the Chair, nor interrupt him or her, except to raise a point of order.

• (1700)

I would hope that we can have a little decorum. At the same time, while I am reading this Standing Order, and I know Hon. Members have read it, it states also:

No Member may pass between the Chair and the Table, nor between the Chair and the Mace when the Mace has been taken off the Table by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

When the House adjourns, Members shall keep their seats until the Speaker has left the Chair.

Thank you.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 138?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moved that Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Railway Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on my Bill C-229 which reflects the concern of a number of my constituents. I am sure it will find echoes in the concerns of constituents of all Hon. Members. I hope the House will see fit to refer the subject matter of this Bill to the appropriate committee.

The purpose of the Bill is to require all railways, particularly Canadian National, to comply with provincial legislation regarding health and environment. I just want to sketch a little of the background that led me to introduce this Bill. Last August, Canadian National Railways was involved in spraying Spike 80-W, a defoliant, in the Cowichan subdivision of Vancouver Island. This spraying took place at the very time when blackberries were just beginning to come into fruit. For those who do not know, blackberries on Vancouver Island grow to be very ripe, delicious and luscious. People love to pick them. Blackberry bushes grow profusely. They sprawl all over the place. In fact, I have seen places where abandoned buildings have been completely surrounded and covered by blackberry bushes after just a few years.

Here is where we have the problem. People, particularly children, like to walk along the right-of-way where there are blackberry bushes, pick the blackberries and eat them. On the other hand, the railroad is concerned about keeping its right-of-way clear, so it sprays.

Last year when the spraying was done in the villages of Lake Cowichan and Youbou, no notification was given to the local residents that spraying would take place. Even the village council was not notified in advance. When it did find out, it had to go to its own expense to put out a circular letting people know that the spraying was taking place. Later parents were horrified to find that their children were eating blackberries that had been sprayed in this manner. When the village protested to CN Rail, Mr. G. Fowler, the planning engineer for the Mountain Region, wrote back and pointed out:

> Signs were posted on our right-of-way in the City of Victoria and at Deerholme but unfortunately the Village of Cowichan was not forewarned. This was likely due to the short notice given Environment Canada. CN Rail, being a Crown corporation, is not required to obtain provincial pesticide permits for work done on our right-of-way, however, through Environment Canada, the provincial agencies are informed of our intentions.
> Our vegetation control program on Vancouver Island was discussed with Mr. Doug Wilson, Senior Program Officer Contaminants Control, Environment Canada, Vancouver, and he was well satisfied with the job and felt CN Rail had complied with all regulations.

CN Rail might have complied with all the regulations, but the people of Lake Cowichan and Youbou were far from satisfied with the way this happened. There are no regulations that apply to protect the health of people or the environment from this kind of spraying.

When I wrote to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), she replied:

> Environment Canada provides general environmental advice to the Pesticide Control Act Administrator and specific advice on restrictions to protect the anadromous fishery resource from pesticides. . . .
> As you noted in your letter, CNR does not participate in the formal review process of the province. . . .
> With regard to CN's participation in the provincial Pesticide Control Act review process, we have been advised that the British Columbia Ministry of Environment has sent a letter to the president of CN Rail requesting that the railway obtain provincial pesticide use permits. We are not aware of CN's position at this time, but I agree that it would be desirable for CN to participate in the same way as do all other railways operating in British Columbia.

I am not completely happy with the environmental protection legislation in British Columbia, but at least when there is going to be commercial spraying of herbicides on a commercial scale, a permit is required. In order to get this permit, there is an opportunity for public input. People can say where and how this spraying would have negative impact upon them, their communities or their environment. For example, on a 1983 application by CPR for permission to spray a right-of-way on Vancouver Island, the Environment Appeal Board ruled that there were certain areas where the spraying could not take place because it would impact in a negative manner upon some private homes and gardens. Even this minimal protection given by the Pesticide Control Act is British Columbia is not available when the CNR decides to spray.

I have received further correspondence from the Vice-President for the Mountain Region, Mr. R. A. Walker, dated December 12. He said, and I quote:

> —we are reviewing the legal implications of obtaining provincial permits as a goodwill gesture on future vegetation control programs.

Goodwill gestures are fine, but the people of my constituency and constituencies right across Canada would like more assurance than just a goodwill gesture. They would like some assurance that they are protected, that the railway does have to conform with at least the minimum standards established by the province.

Voluntary participation is another phrase that has been used. Verbal agreements have been reached regarding better notification. That is not good enough. When we are dealing with health and environmental matters, it is not good enough to depend upon goodwill. Goodwill is often subject to the whims of the person who is in charge. Goodwill can find itself victim to the constraints of a timetable. That is not good enough.

It has been pointed out that the problem of spraying on CNR rights-of-way is only part of a larger problem regarding the federal government properties and the provincial environmental regulations. There is also concern about environmental regulations as they would relate to airports, federal prisons and Department of National Defence establishments. The railways are very definitely the chief culprits, however.

● (1710)

One of the objections that might be made to my Bill which would require that all railways be subject to provincial health and environmental regulations is that the CNR would find itself subject to 11 different jurisdictions. I do not think that is an objection that can stand up. Interprovincial trucking concerns must already deal with different jurisdictions. Certainly the battery of lawyers maintained by Canadian National should be able to figure out what the different jurisdictions require in the way of environmental controls and make sure that the railway complies with those regulations.

A second possible objection to my Bill was suggested by the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in a letter to me on December 5, 1984. He wrote:

> The question of amending the Railway Act with respect to provincial spraying regulations could involve the whole matter of federal-provincial jurisdiction and precedents for as yet unidentified areas.

It may be true that there is a question of federal-provincial jurisdiction here. I would suggest that the health of the people of Canada is more important than federal-provincial jurisdictional squabbling. I would urge federal and provincial authorities to get together to make sure that this area is covered because it is not covered at present.

A couple of weeks ago, we saw the sorry spectacle in this House of the buck being passed from the federal Government to the provincial authorities when we were dealing with the PCB spill which occurred in northern Ontario. Very luckily, as far as we know, no one was harmed by the spraying that took place last summer in the Cowichan area. We are not aware of any harm that was done to any specific individual, but must someone suffer to the extent that it becomes a national scandal before we are willing to take action?

The basic question I wish to leave before the House this afternoon is, do we have to wait until there is an emergency before we put in place the kind of regulations that will give basic protection to people? On that basis, I would urge Hon. Members to consider the Bill. I think it makes sense that railways operating in a province should be required to conform to the environmental and health regulations established by that province for its citizens and its companies. I urge compliance by all Members of the House.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some interest to the Hon. Member. The subject with which he is dealing, as you will know, Mr. Speaker, being a senior and distinguished Member of the Chamber, is one that has been of interest to Members from all sides of the House for a number of years.

The Hon. Member is to be commended for bringing the matter forward at this particular point in time. Our concern in a topical sense with respect to dangerous products has been heightened in recent weeks by a near disastrous incident which occurred in northwestern Ontario. It is therefore appropriate that we are now speaking in a broad and general way of a measure which would indeed require the railways to take some cognizance and be aware of the environmental and other concerns as they relate to the provincial authorities in this country. I know from the Hon. Member's past participation in matters in this Chamber that his interest is perhaps broader than that which is defined specifically by his proposed amendment to the Railway Act.

> Every company shall cause thistles and all noxious weeds growing on the right-of-way and upon the land of the Company adjoining the railway, to be cut down or to be rooted out and destroyed each year, before such thistles or weeds have sufficiently natured to seed.

Earlier today during the meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport, we dealt with a piece of legislation that was introduced and passed by this Chamber in 1919. The fact that that piece of legislation has lasted for 66 years remains something of a testimony to the drafters of that legislation. Here I am referring to the Aeronautics Act. Surely the section I have just read needs the attention of this Chamber that has been occasioned by the Hon. Member's amendment.

Further to that, Section 220 reads:

> The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right-of-way free from dead or dry grass, weeds and other unnecessary combustible matter.

We must recognize that the Railway Act has been in force for a number of years. The historical concern regarding that section was related to fires caused on the right-of-way by sparks falling into the underbrush from hot boxes, seized wheels and so on. The philosophy behind the section was one of weed control, and in past years that has been dealt with in a labour-intensive fashion, specifically by digging up and burning the offending bush.

In the last three decades, there has been a growing use of chemicals by the railway companies to meet the requirements of Section 219 of the Act. During the same period of time, there has been an increased awareness of the effects of chemicals on the environment and on the health of people and animals in areas where these chemicals are used. There are no provisions in the present Act to regulate the use of chemicals and it seems valid that the Act should be amended accordingly.

I do not mean to presume on what the Hon. Member has specifically put forward in his amendment, but implicit in it and clear to all of us is that his intention is much broader. The railways operate in all provinces and if, as this amendment proposes, they are to be required to comply with the statutes of the provinces in which the chemicals are being used, then there must be a mechanism whereby the railways can be exempted from particular portions of the provincial legislation which is unnecessary, unreasonable or inconsistent with the Railway Act. This mechanism should be embodied in the amendment.

We must have an appreciation of the existing pertinent federal and provincial legislation which impacts on this issue and we must examine this with some care and thought. Any amendments to the Railway Act with respect to this matter should be made in the light of the details of all such legislation. If it is proposed by the Hon. Member to amend Section 2 of the Railway Act which, incidentally, covers the definitions of words and terms used throughout the Act, I would suggest that the proposed amendments are ill-suited to Section 2 and would be better dealt with elsewhere in the Act.

In the fall of 1984, the Hon. Member wrote to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), in some detail and with some thoughtfulness, with respect to this issue. The Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) replied that the subject would be taken under advisement in the context of the national transportation policy and legislative review that was being conducted by the Department.

The Minister of the Environment informed the Hon. Member that the CNR does not participate in a formal provincial review process. However, CN Rail does submit a summary of all herbicide spray proposals to the Environmental Protection Service.

Further, Mr. R. A. Walker, Senior Vice-President of CN Rail, informed the Hon. Member on December 12, 1984, that there would be a review of the matter of vegetation control and that a resolution would be arrived at prior to the 1985 program being initiated. Once again, I am drawing the attention of Members to the pertinent information which has been conveyed with respect to the subject matter of the proposed amendment. As recently as today, Mr. Walker informed the Minister's office that CN is voluntarily complying with the appropriate provincial legislation. I understand that contracts for such work are issued and that they stipulate compliance with provincial legislation.

There is another point which I would like to discuss, given this rare and very welcome opportunity. Perhaps it is not intended within the scope of the Hon. Member's motion, but I think it should be on the record. If the intent, or partial intent, of the amendment is to impact on employees under, for example, Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, I would dare to caution the House that that could have a detrimental effect on the Government's objective of ensuring uniformity in the protection of the safety and health of all employees working in undertakings which are within federal jurisdiction. The amendment which is proposed by the Hon. Member could have legal ramifications far beyond the area of clearance of the right-of-way. That is, it would obviously affect the question of the health of employees, for example, those employees involved in the construction and maintenance of rail lines, or in the removal of stations and facilities which are no longer in use. If the intent is only to apply provincial laws to the use of chemicals for clearing the right-of-way, it would be more appropriate to amend Section 219 of the Railway Act—which refers specifically to the question which is implicit in the proposed amendment—using Section 210 of the Railway Act as a mode. The latter section has been in existence for many years and provides a mechanism by which provincial drainage laws can be applied to railways. It would seem that the concern of the Hon. Member is very analogous to this situation, and an amendment to Section 219, along the lines of what is already contained in Section 210, would be appropriate. As I do not believe that that is the intent of the Hon. Member, I shall not dwell on that point further.

On the whole, the Government recognizes the merit of the Hon. Member's suggested amendment. It is certainly well-intentioned and it seeks to enact a greater common good. It is the philosophy of this Government to recognize such Private Members' Bills, whether they be from government or opposition benches. Indeed, it gives me pleasure, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, to be in the position in which I can co-operate with the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has taken the step and moved this amendment. For many years when I was a back-bencher in the Opposition I was not able to do that because of the intractability of the then Government. Very seldom in my experience in this Chamber have opposition Members been able to have the subject matter of their private Bills referred to the appropriate standing committee for review and consideration. Indeed, with respect to transport, some Members of the Chamber will be aware that for 15 years I attempted to take the regulatory branches of transport away from the responsibility of having to investigate accidents and incidents which occur within the ambit of that regulatory body. There is a conflict if one judges one's own work. I put forward a great idea. A series of Ministers of Transport agreed to it over a period of years. Indeed, I was successful in having the Bill discharged and the subject matter referred to the standing committee. But what happened? It died.

That is not the attitude of this Government. The subject matter of the proposed amendment to the Railway Act is serious. It requires consideration and action by the Standing Committee on Transport. With some pleasure, if it meets the approval of the Hon. Member, I will move an amendment. Accordingly, I move:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Railway Act, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport."

I do so in the hope that it will have the support of the House.

In closing I would like to commend the Hon. Member for his thoughtfulness and concern. It is a concern which, I believe, is shared by all Members of the Chamber. I hope the standing committee will give its full consideration to it and report back to the House in due course.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

• (1730)

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the House has seen fit to adopt the amendment proposed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) and that the Bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport for a consideration of the subject matter of the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We are not debating the amendment. Does the Hon. Member want to speak on the amendment? It has not been adopted as yet. It has been proposed.

Mr. Crosby: I understood it had been adopted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane).

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have a chance to address the legislation which has been proposed by the Hon. Member. It is also refreshing to see that Hon. Members in this House feel encouraged to prevent their Private Member's Bill and that the Government takes it very seriously when a private Member has a concern he would like to bring to the attention of the Parliament of this country. It is nice to see that our past performance in this regard has encouraged this Hon. Member to put forward his ideas in the form of Bill C-229. All too often in the past, the initiatives of back-bench Members of Parliament have been relegated to a secondary status in such a way that it has not encouraged people to put forward their ideas, so I am pleased to be part of a Government which does encourage back-bench Members and private Members to draw their concerns to the attention of the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has proposed in Bill C-229 to make all railway companies under the jurisdiction of Parliament comply with provincial laws in respect of health and environment. This could be accomplished by amending Section 2 of the Railway Act.

From what I understand of the background of this situation, the Hon. Member is concerned with the defoliant spray program conducted by the railways on their tracks. This is evident from the correspondence received from the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), the vice-president of the mountain region of CN, and also from the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to which the Hon. Member referred. The purpose of the amendment, I believe, is to require the railways to seek provincial authority for any spraying which takes place on rights-of-way and to comply with the environmental and safety standards of our provinces.

I represent a constituency which for many years has relied a great deal upon the existence of the railway and its compatibility with the surrounding community. I can very much endorse the principles of Bill C-229 and also express my concern about the use of defoliants along the railway tracks and the effect that that may have upon adjacent communities.

Certainly, as a member of the Standing Committee on Transport who had an opportunity recently to visit western Canada and to follow the railway through the Rocky Mountains as it went beside the Fraser River and the Thompson River, I do share the concern of western Canada that the defoliant spray should be used with prescribed guidelines so that we do not put into jeopardy the vegetation which exists along these tracks. Certainly, with the close proximity of the railway tracks to rivers in the western part of the country, we must all be concerned with the effect of chemicals upon our river systems and the areas they service.

Section 219 of the Railway Act requires railways—as the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) mentioned earlier—to eliminate on an annual basis thistles and noxious weeds on its right-of-way and upon lands of the company adjoining the railway. Chemicals have been utilized by the railways on an increasing basis over the last 30 years to meet the requirements of Section 219. During the same time, the public has become increasingly aware and concerned about the effects of chemicals upon the environment. There is no question but that the public has every right to be concerned as we look at a number of incidents which have happened in our country where perhaps there was not due care exercised or attention paid to existing legislation with regard to chemicals and their effects upon our environment. There are no provisions in the Railway Act at present to control the use of these chemicals. I would concur with the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands that appropriate amendments are necessary and possibly long overdue.

There is, however, Mr. Speaker, a serious concern with the drafting of this legislation. While it seems clear that the Bill is aimed at limiting environmental impairment, the reference to the protection of health in Bill C-229 would require compliance by the railways with provincial occupational safety and health statutes. While the Bill appears very basic and straightforward in its drafted form, there are a number of ramifications with which we must concern ourselves. However, I do not believe that is the desired result of the Hon. Member's Bill. In fact, from listening to his address I believe that he is primarily concerned with the effect that the kind of spray used by the railways would have upon the adjacent areas and the people who would be in contact with it. I think his concern is to make sure that existing provincial legislation, as it applies to these defoliant sprays, is applied to the railways as they attempt to conform with the provisions of Section 219.

The field of occupation safety and health relative to the rail industry is covered by federal statutes, and the danger of the proposed legislation is that it would unintentionally permit the entrance of provincial legislation which may or may not be compatible. I think all Hon. Members would agree that it would be chaotic to have ten different provincial safety and health statutes incorporated into the Railway Act. By the very virtue of our railway system in Canada, particularly as it applies to Canadian National—which, of course, travels right across the country—it would be extremely difficult for those attempting to maintain the railway tracks to be cognizant of each and every borderline between the provinces and the various regulations which would apply with regard to the operation of the railway in that particular area.

I respectfully suggest to my colleagues on both sides of the House, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed amendment to Section 2 of the Railway Act does not meet the legislative goals of the Hon. Member. If my colleague is specifically seeking to protect the public and the employees of the railway against the residual effects of weed spraying on the railway right-of-way—which I believe is what he is intending to do—then I believe the course of action should be to amend those sections of the Railway Act which address this position.

Rather than take a position today by which the Bill would be set aside, I would concur with the amendment proposed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport that it be set aside and the subject matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. The present Section 219 of the Railway Act which deals with the control of thistles and noxious weeds was written long before chemical control of weeds was practical and before the intense public awareness of the difficulties which may arise as a result of not having proper legislation with regard to the application of these chemicals.

I do agree that because of the length of time that Section 219 has gone unamended, it may be the right time now for a revision of Section 219. The best way for us to deal with that and, hopefully, zero in upon the issue brought forward by the Hon. Member, is to endorse the amendment so that the material could be forwarded to the Standing Committee on Transport, which would take a look at the intent of the Hon. Member's Bill as well as at the ramifications which might result if Bill C-229 were forwarded in its present state.

I would be pleased as a member of the Standing Committee on Transport to have an opportunity to look this material over and to attempt to recommend some adjustments which could be made with regard to the legislation so that the true intent of Bill C-229, as put forward by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, can be adopted and put into effect. In that way, the desired effect of his concerns would be handled through the Standing Committee on Transport for eventual report to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe there was a little misunderstanding between the Chair and the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). I am sure he has a few words to contribute to this debate. I recognize the Hon. Member for Halifax West.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there was a kind of misunderstanding. So to put the matter in perspective, may I precede my remarks by reviewing the technical process and procedure which we experienced in the House of Commons today, as I understand it.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has moved by way of motion the second reading of his Private Member's Bill, Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Railway Act. In response, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall), the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, proposed an amendment the result of which is to refer the subject-matter of the Bill, namely, the health hazards involved in railway rights-of-way and related matters, to the Standing Committee on Transport. I think that that is the eventual appropriate disposition of this matter. I realize that Your Honour has called the motion put forward by my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary, but it has not yet been put to the House so we are in the discussion stage. I merely want to make a few remarks by way of discussion of both Bill C-229 and the proposal made by the Parliamentary Secretary.

Let me begin by saying in a sort of personal way that I have no difficulty in recalling Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands. In case I say anything that the Member may not find acceptable, I want him to know that there is nothing personal in it; I have visited his riding and I know from whence the name comes because in travelling along the highways of Vancouver Island—he can correct me if I'm wrong—I encountered an old sign post that had three pieces in the form of arrows, one of which said Cowichan, one of which said Malahat, and the third of which said The Islands. So if you happen to be in Vancouver Island and see that sign post, you will know where Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands is located. So I was proud to be in that constituency and I know it is a very important part of the Province of British Columbia, which brings me to my first point, and that is that in the Bill before the House the Member proposes that the Parliament of Canada ought to incorporate by references health and environmental protection laws of the provinces of Canada, including the Province of British Columbia. But I point out to the Member and to other Members of the House that this is a risky proposition because across this country, if there is one thing we lack it is uniformity in provincial laws. And if the Member wants an example, or any Member wants an example, let me talk about the spruce bud worm which is involved as a plague in some areas and apparently as an animal to be carefully protected in other areas of Canada notwithstanding the damage that it wreaks on our forest.

So if you consider the laws of the Province of Nova Scotia that under certain circumstances allow spraying for spruce bud worm in order to protect our important forest resource, and compare them to the laws of some other provinces like the Province of New Brunswick that exclude any kind of infliction of death or other serious damage on our friend the spruce bud worm, you can get that kind of serious difference. So, to use an old expression, you're buying a pig in a poke when you make provincial environmental and health laws applicable to a matter under federal jurisdiction.

So I would say to the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, with no malice intended, that if there is an evil that exists and you want to protect the public against that evil, then you should take the time and the trouble to enact a law that will accomplish that end, and not simply grasp at straws by making provincial laws of unknown and uncertain origin and content applicable. So while I think that the Member's motives are surely honourable and intended to be a protection to the public and to those who may come in contact with the dangers that exist on railway rights-of-way and other railway property, I think that if you are going to accomplish the desired end you have to be more careful in the means and methods that you choose to reach that end.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, let me say that incorporation of laws by reference is always a dangerous course to follow. When you are talking about an evolving and developing field like health and protection, health protection and environmental laws, you are on an even more uncertain course of action. So I do not think this is the course of legal action that is acceptable to the House of Commons. It is not an acceptable method of legislative enactment, and I think that the much wiser course is the one proposed by the Parliamentary Secretary, that is, a reference of the subject matter to the standing committee. I hope that disposition will be acceptable to the Member.

In his presentation to the House of Commons, the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands made specific reference to the dangers that exist on the railway rights-of-way and spoke of the exposure of young children especially to toxics and poisons that might have been used in controlling foliage on rights-of-way. I would like to address some remarks very briefly to the continuing danger that exists with respect to railway rights-of-way. I would put higher on the list of priorities for actions not the toxics and poisons that might be used but the every-day danger of railway crossings, level crossings, that still exist across Canada. We have not changed for decades the law that controls railway level crossings and every day, in fact this very week unfortunately, there are tragic accidents. In the constituency of my colleague from New Brunswick, in Fundy-Royal, just the other day there was a tragic accident that involved a young boy who was walking along the railway tracks while listening to a Walkman. And of course this use of a Walkman interfered with his hearing. He was apparently unable to hear an approaching train, and even though the engineer responsible for the train saw the boy, knew that he had a Walkman in place and that his hearing was obscured, he could only react by blowing the whistle and attempting to apply the brakes unsuccessfully. The collision occurred and, unfortunately the boy was killed.

I could recite many other similarly tragic incidents. Just this summer, during July and August of this year, we had a tragic accident in my constituency in the village of Kinsac where young children at play after a while take the rail level crossing for granted, so to speak. That is, it becomes so much a part of their playground that they fail to realize that from time to time trains pass. They take no precautions because of the lack of traffic and then fail to notice the approach of a train, with tragic results as in that case in the village of Kinsac this summer. I am sure other Members could recite similar tragedies, and they will occur today, tomorrow and in the months hereafter unless some specific action is taken.

Certainly it is a costly matter to provide a solution to this kind of problem, but how do you measure that kind of cost against the tragic loss of life that we have experienced in all provinces, in all parts of Canada, as a result of railway crossing accidents? So if the Parliament of Canada is going to address the problem of safety on railway rights-of-way, if that ought to be and it is properly the concern of the House of Commons, then let us get at the big problems, let us not just get at the esoteric problems that may or may not occur, and particularly may occur at only parts of times of the year, but let us get at that day-to-day problem right across this country, the dangers that exist on railway crossings.

I say to the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands that I do not mention that by way of criticism. I just mention that by way of the fact that there is a big job to be done, so that perhaps when the Transport Committee accepts the reference, which I hope the House of Commons will make today, it will consider the broader problem of safety on railway rights-of-way right across the board, not simply with respect to health hazards but with respect to all aspects of safety.

Let me just talk for a minute about the progress of the Canadian railway companies, that is to say those institutions that are in business for Canada, as the Canadian National Railways ad said, and just what they are doing, because I think the Member has accomplished one purpose in presenting this Bill C-229, and that is, to focus attention on what the railway companies are doing across Canada, what progress they have made. I will give you a good example, Mr. Speaker. The Saturday newspaper in the City of Halifax always carries a column "Thirty Years Ago Today". This past Saturday that column referred to a remarkable event that took place 30 years ago, and that was the institution of the Ocean Limited travelling between the City of Montreal and the City of Halifax. It was described as a hotel on wheels that only took 21 hours to transverse the distance from Halifax to Montreal. Do you know what the Ocean Limited takes today, 30 years later, in 1985, to transport itself from Halifax to Montreal? The same 21 hours, and on bad days, much longer. That is progress in the railway business in Canada. That is a company that is in business for Canada. It took 21 hours for this hotel on wheels to travel 700 miles in 1955 and in 1985 it takes a little longer, accounting for more and longer stops along the way. That is railway progress. It is present in the trains and in the situations which exist on the railway rights-of-way. We still have the dangers that exist on level crossings and other places.

If the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands is reminding the House that Canadian railways, and in particular the Canadian National Railways, have not progressed a great deal in the last three decades, then his point is well taken. We have certainly seen a lack of progress. The same old trains are chugging back and forth between Halifax and Montreal. I know that efforts have been make to improve the rolling stock, but the fact is that the methods have been substantially unsuccessful. The result is that Canadians no longer use the train, which is one of the most important and effective means of transportation everywhere in the world except Canada. This is a progressive country. We have all kinds of technology. We are participating in outer space activity. We are very proud of the Canadarm attached to satellites, but it still takes 21 hours to get from Halifax to Montreal by train. The progress which we have made has certainly not been reflected in railway activity.

Members of Parliament who are interested in transportation generally ought to take a closer look at the Canadian National Railway and other railways operating in Canada. I hope the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Transport, will be the beginning of a re-examination of the very practical aspects of the operation of railways in Canada, particularly the Canadian National Railways.

I know that other Members want to make some remarks. I will not take up any more of the time of the House of Commons. Thank you again for recognizing me the second time around. I do not mind. It is all in the interest of progress in the House. I hope the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands will take the proposed amendment in good faith and that we can proceed and progress from here.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish that the subject matter of this Bill were not constrained to the Transportation Act. Unfortunately, man has had to depend upon science for a great many purposes, one of which is to eat. We sometimes lose track of the fact that without chemistry, physics, and science we would not be able to produce enough food on this continent to eat. We are therefore dependent upon the scientists of mankind to deliver to us the ways and means of effecting a lot of services, including the production of our food. We need it in the forest protection program, as has been mentioned by my friend from Halifax. We need it in agriculture and we need it very badly in the processes which are discussed in this Bill, namely, keeping the right-of-way clear of debris, weeds, et cetera. We need it in the home if we do not wish to live with flies. We need it throughout our entire life.

It is unfortunate that very often we have been deprived of the use of certain scientific inventions and creations by virtue of the objections of some extremists in this world who have the proper motives. That motive is, of course, the better safety of mankind. When one responds to an extremist—and I am not referring to the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands at all—we do lose something which we need very badly. We have made a great deal of progress in the application of pesticide. What we still need in the worst way is a proper testing method which will establish the fact that a particular chemical is indeed safe if applied in a particular fashion and in particular concentrations.

When this subject matter goes to the Transport Committee, I would hope that all those in favour of that move would broaden their thought, not only as it applies to the right-of-way, but as it applies to household, farm, and forest use of pesticides. We have lost the use of chemicals which might have been very profitable for us to use. In some instances, we have lost the use of a pesticide due to a single accident by an applicator of pesticides who did not read the label or prepare the proper concentration. He may have sacrificed his own life through his carelessness. I agree that that is not good. However, we do not know what method we should be using for application. At the scientific forestry level we do not know what droplet size is safe and practical for the application of a pesticide. Today we have mechanical means by which we can apply pesticides with virtually no possible drift. However, these methods are not generally in use. If they were in use with most of the pesticides presently being used, we would not be concerned about the drift to other areas.

The cost of manpower to eliminate the pests in various rights-of-way is prohibitive. We must, therefore, look at a safe method by which this can be done through pesticide use. I would appeal to the Member to have that subject matter expanded to study the chemical, the diluent and the mechanical method of application. Can we bring to the conscience of Government the fact that we just do not have the knowledge that we need for safe pesticide use in Canada for the betterment of the entire human race?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has been moved by Mr. Forrestall, seconded by Mr. Crosby:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Railway Act, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

HUMAN RIGHTS—U.S.S.R. REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF JEWISH POPULATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 45. On March 26 in the House I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) if he intended to have the tragic plight facing many Jews living in Russia on his agenda when he visited Russia. I was assured by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that, yes, he did intend to raise this important issue. Further, he had the benefit of consultations and briefings with many leading members of the Canadian Jewish community.

There are now approximately 1.8 million Jews living in Russia, some 350,000 less than in 1970. However, only 896 Jews were able to emigrate in 1984, the fewest in number since 1970. So far this year the emigration rate is almost non existent. In 1979, 51,320 Jews emigrated from the Soviet Union. Clearly there has been a deliberate reduction in the number of Jews allowed to emigrate since 1980.

The Jewish community in Russia undergoes many forms of merciless harassment. This harassment impacts on their daily lives physically, culturally, mentally and spiritually. Many Jews have been denied family reunification. Some 20,000 "refuseniks" who have applied for exit have had their visas denied. After a "refusenik" applies to leave, it seems that he often is routinely dismissed from his job. Some have had their children expelled from college, some have been arbitrarily arrested and some have had their personal property confiscated.

What can we do about this situation as Canadians and Members of Parliament? I suggest that we can organize. Certain steps have already been taken, one being the formation of the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry. I recently had the honour to be nominated to serve on the executive of that committee. There are a total of 273 Members of the House of Commons and the Senate who are a part of that group.

Some of the activities which have occurred recently include a delegation a few weeks ago to visit the Russian Embassy here in Ottawa. Not too long ago, the President of our group, the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), and several other Members of Parliament visited Russia to see and hear first hand some of the actions that have been taken there and to investigate this widespread harassment.

Another step that we can take is to communicate with individual "refuseniks." I have personally adopted a "refusenik". His name is Simon Shnirman. He is 28 years old and is a metallurgist. He was arrested on October 1, 1983, when he refused a call up to the army because he was intending to emigrate. I recently wrote to his wife, Leah Shnirman, to introduce myself. They have a young daughter and are very concerned that Simon's sentence of three years could be increased due to alleged "breaches of camp regulations". I do not believe that Simon has even seen their young daughter. Many concerned Canadians have also adopted "refuseniks". Representatives of 35 countries are holding a human rights conference here in Ottawa, beginning on May 7. They are planning a six or seven week conference. This meeting, which includes Russian representation, is the first meeting devoted exclusively to human rights.

These countries signed the 1975 Helsinki Accord in which it was stated, "Participating states will deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family". The Soviets are clearly not abiding by this agreement.

The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs recently said in the House of Commons that Canadian officials would pursue the issue of discrimination against Jews in Soviet bloc countries at the conference. He went on to say that there were a variety of ways in which cases could be raised, both generally and specifically, in formal sessions and in the corridors. He also stressed that he would give his commitment to find ways to raise individual cases with the Soviet Union and with others in a way which would lead to a successful conference.

We know that anti-Jewish propaganda has been increasing recently in Russia. There exists an anti-Zionist committee which uses its title to spread anti-Semitism. As well, an hour long documentary has been shown on Leningrad television which equates "refuseniks" with anti-Soviet behaviour. The anti-Zionist committee has been given widespread media coverage in its claims that Hebrew teachers and cultural activists are spies, criminals and traitors.

In closing, I stress that Canada has a unique role to play in dealing with this type of harassment and lack of basic freedoms. I applaud the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs for his leadership in this regard. I believe many of us, both in the House and in the Senate, have a real job to do and indeed a real obligation in this respect.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) for his concern and for his dedication to a cause which is dear to almost all of us. I had the pleasure of sitting at the same table as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and Mr. Gromyko when the discussion took place. All of us would have been proud of the dynamism and force with which the Secretary of State for External Affairs raised the issue of human rights, Jewish human rights, and family reunification. Even when he was told that it was a domestic matter, he continued to pursue it. He said how it would affect the perception of Canadians in terms of how they feel about the Soviets. We just kept pursuing the issue. The cases of people like Shcharansky and Sakharov were raised on three different occasions that day. The Secretary of State for External Affairs told them how much we wanted Mr. Shcharansky freed.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs went to the Soviet Union in the first week of April with a number of objectives in mind. Among them was his desire to develop lines of communication with the new Soviet leadership in order to discuss the full range of Canada's bilateral interests with the Soviet Union. High among those interests are our humanitarian concerns. In this context, the Secretary of State for External Affairs raised the issue of Soviet Jewry.

This Government views the situation of Jews in the Soviet Union in light of the commitments undertaken by the Soviet Union as a signatory to various international agreements on human rights, including the Helsinki Final Act. The Government has also sought to reflect democratic values of the Canadian people. It is for this reason that Canada considers respect for human rights as an important factor in our relations with the Soviet Union.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs raised the issue of Soviet Jewry during his meetings with Soviet leaders. He informed them of the importance Canadians attach to the respective human rights. He urged the Soviet authorities to allow the emigration of Soviet Jews. He stressed, in particular, Canada's hope for the release of Anatoly Shcharansky, and he raised the case of Mr. Sakharov as well.

This Government will follow up by promoting respect for human rights already guaranteed in international instruments bilaterally with the Soviet Union and other countries, and multilaterally through the United Nations and the Helsinki process, notably at the meeting of CSCE Experts on Human Rights, now taking place in Ottawa, the first CSCE meeting to take place outside Europe and the first devoted to human rights.

HEALTH—TESTING OF TOXIC HORMONE TO CONTROL COCKROACHES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, on April 19, I directed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in connection with what steps the Department was taking to test a low toxic hormone called hydroprene, which is being used very effectively in the United States for the control of cockroaches. At that time the Minister indicated he was aware of the fact that the Department was testing hydroprene, but he had no up-to-date information as to when those tests would be completed or when it was likely that hydroprene would be accepted for sale in Canada.

This particular subject, while it may appear somewhat peculiar and unusual to be debated in the House of Commons, is certainly a subject that is of high interest to the people of this country, particularly to apartment dwellers. Anyone who has served on a municipal council is well aware of the problem that roaches cause for the people who live in apartment buildings. In the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, where I am from, approximately 50 per cent of the people who reside in the city live in apartments. In my constituency, something in the neighbourhood of 61 per cent of the people live in apartment buildings. This subject is of particular concern to apartment dwellers.

The problem is that cockroaches are great disease carriers and a health hazard to all Canadians, in fact, to all people around the world. Roaches are terrific breeders. One female roach produces something like 500 eggs in the space of one year and, therefore, multiplies exceedingly quickly. This means that these little bugs are carrying a great many diseases to all of us. It does not matter whether or not we are good housekeepers, they are transmitted very easily.

In Metropolitan Toronto it is claimed that most cockroaches are transmitted by people riding the transportation system. If you sit on a bus or subway train, you may well come in contact with an insect of this variety. It attaches to the clothing, you carry it home and infect the entire household.

This sort of problem is particularly acute in apartments where there are so many people and so many units. This kind of insect is transmitted very easily through all of the cracks and crannies that develop in an apartment building, or any residence for that matter. In the past and at the present time we have tried to control this by the use of pesticides.

I was interested to hear the discussion in Private Members' hour relating to pesticides and the problems in testing them. The two pesticides that have been used extensively in controlling cockroaches is dursban and diazinon. Both are used extensively in spraying to kill roaches, but unfortunately the roaches have become immune to this kind of spraying. They seem to thrive on it, whereas it has bad effects on human beings. Another method that is used, because they come through cracks and nooks and crannies, is caulking materials and the use of fossilized shavings in order to block the cracks to prevent their transmission.

All of these things having been said, nothing seems to be working. The problem becomes more and more acute all the time. It is wonderful to learn that in the United States there is a hormone, hydroprene, that is being used, not as a killer, but as a method of birth control for the male cockroach. It has the effect of very substantially reducing the number of fertilized eggs that are laid by any female cockroach. In that respect, it controls the population and should be a very effective method in solving this problem, not only in the United States but in Canada as well.

The people of this country, particularly apartment dwellers, are looking forward to the introduction of hydroprene on the Canadian market. So far, I understand it is still being tested by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and we look forward to the completion of those tests. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to tell us today when we can expect those tests to be completed so that the people of Canada as well as the people of the United States will have the benefit of the use of this hormone in controlling this very, very terrible pest that has been plaguing us for so many years.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), but I do so with some trepidation—treading where angels fear to rush in.

If I could respond to the Hon. Member, let me advise him that National Health and Welfare does not in fact carry out the mandatory safety tests in order for pesticides to be registered in Canada under the federal Pest Control Products Act. Notwithstanding that, upon request by Agriculture Canada, the Department had for many years evaluated the potential health hazards of pesticides based on results of safety tests carried out by the manufacturer. These mandatory safety tests normally apply to all pest-control products to be registered for use here in Canada.

In October 1984, Health and Welfare received from Agriculture Canada a data package on hydroprene which lacked several important safety tests normally required for pesticides. In November 1984, the Department advised Agriculture Canada that the applicant should submit the full complement of safety tests normally requested for pesticides. I regret to advise the Hon. Member of this, but so far the Department of National Health and Welfare has received no response to this request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to inform the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that his time has expired.

TRANSPORT—(A) CONSTRUCTION OF VIA RAIL MAINTENANCE PLANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) TRANSPORT INDUSTRY'S FRAGILITY IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me this evening. On April 24 last, I asked the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) a question on the report that was made public very recently by the Office de l'expansion économique de la Communauté urbaine de Montréal, which revealed that the transport industry was showing signs of fragility in the Montreal area. I wanted to know the Minister's views on this subject and what the Conservative Government intended to do precisely to solve this problem. The minister's answer was rather odd. In fact, the Minister began to accuse the previous Liberal government of being the source of all the problems faced presently by Montreal. I would say that in other circumstances such totally unfounded claims would be funny. But considering the difficult economic situation in Montreal, the high unemployment rate in the transport industry, I think the Minister should look at his files and make a much bigger effort to help the Montreal area.

I would remind him that the transport industry is absolutely essential to the economic health of Montreal, according to the chairman of the executive committee of the City of Montreal. As a matter of fact, the report I mentioned earlier says that in the area of labour, of employment alone, maritime, railway and air transport companies produce what amounts to 69,411 person years in terms of global impact.

The Minister of State seems to think that the previous administration did not do much in the area of transport in Montreal. I will remind him very briefly that a Liberal administration equipped the Port of Montreal with the adequate and modern facilities it has presently, which enable it to be the most important container port in Canada, if not in North America. It was also a Liberal administration which a few years ago purchased Canadair from the American company General Dynamics for some $46 million at the time, which was a fairly large amount of money and which enabled that company to remain in business. That move enabled thousands of workers of the Montreal area to continue to earn a decent living at Canadair. It also enabled the company to develop, in the Montreal area, water bombers which are used not only in Canada but all over the world, and to develop a very sophisticated and very important airplane, the Challenger.

I could mention the efforts made by our government to help the Bombardier company to purchase the required technology to sign substantial contracts for the construction of the New York and Mexico subways. It is our government which helped some companies such as Pratt & Whitney, Paramax, CAE in the Montreal area to get important contracts in the aeronautic and aerospace fields. Moreover, it was the Liberal government which supported the research of SPAR Aerospace which developed, as you know, the arm used on the American space shuttles. That is a great honour for Canadian technology.

This a series of achievements of the former government which the Minister of State seems to forget.

Finally, I would like to remind the Minister of State that his record is far from wonderful as far as Montreal is concerned. He was the one who announced that the Air Security Board would be moved from Montreal to the National Capital region. He was the one who told us that the construction of a maintenance centre for VIA Rail in Montreal would be indefinitely postponed. He was the one who told us that the trains needed by VIA Rail would not be purchased from Bombardier but from General Motors. And finally, he was the one who announced that the construction of frigates by Marine Industries in Sorel, in the Montreal area, was cancelled.

Now I respectfully submit to the Parliamentary Secretary who will answer me to convey those comments to the Minister of State so that he may become a little more considerate of the aspirations of Montreal.

Finally, I will quote journalist François Roberge who said:

> With respect to another issue, that of Mirabel and Air Canada, the Minister of State for Transport, Mr. Benoît Bouchard, has also raised misleading if not vicious arguments to justify his future inefficiency to keep in Montreal the remains of the important air transport industry of Quebec—
> It is inexcusable of the Minister to show his ignorance of matters under his responsability while giving up on the issue of the Quebec aeronautic industry which, at first, he attempted to defend—

Mr. Speaker, such is the subject matter of my comments. I appeal to the Minister of State to listen a little more carefully to the demands of transport workers in the Montreal area.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, sometimes I have to wonder just where it is that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is coming from. He well knows that the Government is faced with a $35 billion deficit, accumulated as a result of the wasteful spending, mismanagement and a total disregard of the taxpayers of the country by the previous Government. Economic recovery in Canada will be achieved evenly, from one end of the country to the other.

The distinguished former Minister knows very well what is going on in Montreal. He knows the role which is being played by Crown corporations. Air Canada, for example, has 40 per cent of its total workforce in Quebec, mostly in Montreal, and it injects close to $800 million in salaries.

The Government's intention is well known. It has no concept whatsoever of interfering with the very prominent role which is played by large active Crown corporations in the continuing development of the City of Montreal.

Montreal is one of the world's great ports. Last year it set records and this year it will set more records. What supports that? What are we doing to make the Hon. Member so upset? The Hon. Member is very much aware of the former Government's intention to remove Transport Canada's Transportation Development Centre. That was kept in Montreal by the actions of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the former Government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Joe Clark. They kept it there because we are concerned about Montreal.

With respect to the Hon. Member's very specific question, he knows that the development centre will not create new jobs. It will simply be a method of transferring jobs from one centre to another. It will not have the thrust that the Hon. Member is seeking. There is no intention, Mr. Speaker, on the part of this Government to be other than most attentive to the aspirations and hopes of the cities of Montreal, Halifax, Toronto and Vancouver.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the voters of Ontario are shocked to learn that the Premier of their province is using intimidation and threats to win support in tomorrow's provincial election. He told the residents of Simcoe that only by electing Progressive Conservatives would they be assured of getting fair treatment from the Tory Government, if it is to be re-elected, and God forbid it should.

The Premier said that the area which elected two Liberal Members in the last election would continue to be neglected unless it was painted blue. This is inexcusable behaviour for a man who calls himself Premier. It is blatant discrimination and shows the desperate attempts of a candidate who, in the final days of a campaign, has gone from promising to bullying. It brings to mind the behaviour of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he warned that there would be jobs for Liberals only after there was not a single, living, breathing Tory left in the land.

Canadians are in fact protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms against such threats and overt discrimination as we have seen practised not only by the Prime Minister but by the Premier of Ontario. In light of all this, I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) should review these extraordinary threats, and advise Parliament how the constitutional rights which have been given to Canadians, and which the Minister is sworn to uphold, can be fully protected against such threats.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SALE OF MALVERN LAND CONTAMINATED BY RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada owes some home owners in Malvern, Scarborough, the price of their homes which they were sold under false pretences. In 1972 CMHC sold land in Malvern, Scarborough, to the Ontario Housing Corporation, land which it knew was seriously contaminated by radioactive waste. CMHC knew that Ontario Housing Corporation would sell the land for housing purposes, and it did so under a program with the cynical name of "Home Ownership Made Easy".

Unsuspecting families bought these houses and only later learned that they were the owners of a radioactive waste dump. Their children play on contaminated soil, and noxious fumes leak into their basements. Home prices have dropped disastrously. These home owners appealed to their Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), last fall, but it seems that he has done nothing about this mess.

The previous federal Government cheated these home owners, with or without the connivance of the Conservative Government of Ontario, by concealing the fact that the land was poisoned before it was purchased. I call on the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), who is responsible for housing, to buy out those homes at a fair market price.

REVENUE CANADA

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a situation that has existed for a number of years, and which I find deplorable. I am referring to the tax discounters. The number of Canadians who avail themselves of the services of these discounters has almost doubled in two years. In 1983, 118,000 people used the services of these companies, while in 1984, their number rose to 274,000.

The customers of these discounters are poor people, mothers of single-parent families and welfare recipients. In fact, 64.5 per cent of these customers who must give part of their tax refund to the discounter have a gross income of less than $8,000 per year. We can safely say that the victims of this system are among the neediest in our society.

Furthermore, the 15 per cent interest that may be charged by tax discounters works out to an exhorbitant rate when calculated on an annual basis. In fact, it means that on an annual basis, these organizations may charge up to 90 per cent interest. This should not be tolerated, since Section 305 of the Criminal Code protects Canadians by prohibiting interest rates over 60 per cent, and even that is excessive.

According to the Association coopérative d'économie familiale du Québec, people go to these companies because they cannot wait until they get the money through the usual channels.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the two solutions proposed by this association, which are to abolish this type of service and to repeal the legislation that allows the existence—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

PROTECTION URGED FOR PARTS MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the question of Japanese automobile import quotas is far from simple, particularly in the auto parts industry. This problem cannot be solved by a simple percentage formula of letting in just so many Japanese cars each year.

As we all know today, what looks like an American, German, Swedish, French, or Japanese car may contain a variety of parts made in a half a dozen countries. Appearance and name-plate may mean nothing at all so far as origin is concerned. Components for a Renault may be made in Mexico; General Motors products are now manufactured in South America and Japan; Volkswagen is manufacturing parts in Japan as well as Pennsylvania; and Australian Mazda is marketed under the Ford label. This is just a sample of what has become universal practice in the auto industry today.

Because of this, it is somewhat futile to be over-concerned with Japanese auto imports per se. What is really needed is protection for Canadian auto parts manufacturers with a firm policy such as that recommended in the 1983 report of the auto industry task force. Quite simply, exporters of foreign cars to Canada must either buy all of their parts and repair parts in Canada, or they must invest in the assembly of vehicles in Canada. In other words, reduced to the simplest formula, there should be no sale of foreign cars here that do not make available Canadian-made parts. For our own best interests, this is the only possible solution.

HOUSING

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on behalf of the mayors of Quebec's regional and rural municipalities, who like all... Mr. Speaker, there are some people here who are barking, and I wonder if you could ask them to go and bark outside.

An Hon. Member: They are not barking, they are caterwauling.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on behalf of the mayors of municipalities who are unhappy about the Government's decision to make cuts in the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. The Regional Municipality of Arthabaska is complaining about the Government's cutbacks in the RRAP program—its budget for $412,000 has been reduced to $183,000. The Mayor of Bécancour is facing a reduction of 69 per cent. In the Municipality of Bellechasse, they had $540,000, now reduced by $240,000. In Noranda, cutbacks from $140,000 to $81,000, and in the City of Sherbrooke, a reduction of $225,000 on the original $724,000 requested; in Rimouski, a budget of $6.5 million has been cut back by $3.4 million.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all Members of this House, especially the Members from Quebec and from the regions concerned, to ask the Minister for additional funding to remedy the injustice caused by the new formula introduced by the Minister, which is making Quebec lose $17 million from the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, a program that is very important to improve the quality of our housing—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RHINOCEROS PARTY, R.I.P.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would hope all Members of the House would join me in lamenting the tragic passing of the Rhinoceros Party of Canada from Canadian politics.

• (1410)

Mr. Blaikie: This incarnation of cynicism about politics and politicians, a cynicism so often justified by past and present political events, provided our elections with a source of humour that many appreciated, with the exception, in my experience, of Marxist-Leninists and Tories, who share the same psychic inability to laugh at themselves.

Perhaps the greatest legacy of the Rhinocerous Party will be its very useful suggestions on reform of the Senate. By turning the Senate into a general lottery, available to all Canadians and not just to Liberal and Conservative political hacks, the Rhinocerous Party showed a true commitment to the democratization of the Senate, albeit in an unusual way, and a true understanding of just how farcical is the current situation.

I am sure the late Leader of the Rhinocerous Party, Dr. Ferron, would understand if we all agreed to appoint him to the Senate posthumously, on the easily met condition that his activity therein not exceed that of the average Senator.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

ENCOURAGEMENT OF LAND OWNERSHIP ADVOCATED

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the Northwest Territories there are some one and a third million square miles of land, over 99 per cent of which is owned and controlled by the Government of Canada. With a population of less than 50,000 one would assume that there would be enough land to go around. However, as a result of years of restrictive policy, this is not the case.

Territorial residents find it prohibitively difficult to obtain land for residential, commercial, recreational or agricultural purposes. Oft-times they are forced to leave the North in order to obtain real property, the right to which southern Canadians take for granted.

Although the federal authorities are not solely to blame for this deplorable situation, they must change the left-over policy of the previous Liberal Government.

A new land policy ought to encourage land ownership, not discourage it. It should facilitate land ownership, and not place impediment after impediment in the way of Canadians who want to own a small piece of their own country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DELIVERY OF LETTERS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, April 25 last, my riding office staff mailed about 1,000 letters to addressees within Québec-Est. The letters were picked up at 4.30 p.m. the same day. The morning after, Friday, April 26, five of those letters were returned to the sender with the 9.30 a.m. mail delivery and, on Tuesday, April 30, 125 of those letters came back to me. In most cases, they mention "Left, no forwarding address" stamped on the envelopes. That does not make sense to me and, as an example, Transport Couture, a moving company, has been at the same address for many years and would surely not move without leaving a forwarding address.

Some of the letters came back exactly as they were mailed, that is without any indication. I cannot understand how this could happen, or that a letter sent to South Dakota ended up at the newspaper Le Soleil, a fact I can prove.

All taxpayers, individuals and businesses alike, and Governments must be able to rely on postal services. Mr. Speaker, why should so many efforts to communicate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

OCCUPATION OF OFFICES IN PROTEST AGAINST DEPARTMENTAL GUIDELINES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, here is what one could read last week in Quebec City's newspaper Le Soleil:

Farmers chase public employees out of their office.

I quote:

On April 15, 1985, about twenty farmers led by the Agricultural Producers' Union president chased Sherbrooke's Farm Credit Corporation employees out of their office to protest against the new Government guidelines concerning the choice of notaries. They intend to keep the employees out until the Government rescinds the guidelines.

The APU farmers are furious and they have every right to protest against such shameful patronage on the part of the Conservatives.

An Hon. Member: Scandalous!

Mrs. Killens: On their behalf, I urge the Government to reconsider its decision and to treat Canadians with the respect they deserve. The Government ought to review its decision, drop its presidential approach, and stop interfering with the daily life of Canadians while pretending, Mr. Speaker, that it is seeking more favourable interest rates for the agricultural community.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED MAIL RATE INCREASES

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the proposed rate increase by Canada Post came as a blow to Canada's small business sector. In addition to raising the cost of domestic mail, Canada Post proposes to increase the cost of many business-related services. For example, second class advertising rates are to jump 4 cents, large volume rates will go up 4 cents per kilogram, and third class mail will increase between 2 and 3 cents.

If Mr. Warren truly wants to see a more competitive and customer driven Post Office, I suggest he is going about it the wrong way. Instead of placing the burden of past mismanagement on the backs of Canadians, Canada Post should sort out its own problems within the corporation. Mr. Warren should take strong and effective measures to increase productivity and cut costs. The proposed rate increases will hurt Canadians, and Canadians have been paying for the costly mistakes of the Post Office for far too long.

HEALTH CARE

EXTRA BILLING—ONTARIO ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The federal Government has been burying every issue it can which might publicly embarrass the provincial Conservative Party in Ontario. We have received no straight answers for the delay in the presentation of the Budget by the Minister of Finance, for the potential gas tax increases, or for the situation regarding the import quotas on Japanese automobiles.

This morning, from a letter written by Premier Frank Miller to the doctors of Ontario, we learned that we do not have the straight story in this House about secret negotiations between the Province of Ontario and the federal Government on extra billing by doctors. Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the Government is denying this Parliament the reasons and the facts? Is it to protect the very shaky position of the Progressive Conservative Party in Ontario?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Prime Minister—the Leader of the Opposition that—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That might be the best forecast the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to hear, but his future is probably behind him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I want to tell the Leader of the Opposition that he is wrong when he says that there are secret negotiations. He is absolutely wrong. There are negotiations on this basis: after the election of this Government I met with all the Health Ministers and subsequently we have been meeting on the issue of the interpretation of the Canada Health Act, which had not been completed, and the regulations, and we have been meeting on the future of the health care system. I believe that is a responsibility I have.

For too long, I think, health care in Canada has been a battle zone rather than a co-operative area between the provinces and the federal Government. So I say to the right hon. gentleman that there are no secret negotiations, but there is very much an approach of co-operation between all provinces and this Government.

POSITION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Premier Miller has told the voters in the Province of Ontario that he has not made up his mind about extra billing. But in a letter he wrote to the doctors of Ontario he said that the right to extra bill is a "symbolic principle"—those are his words for "sacred trust"—even for doctors who choose to take part in OHIP. Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell us what the Premier of Ontario has said to him in private about his intentions with respect to extra billing? And would he reveal to this House the position of the federal Government with respect to any initiatives which Mr. Miller might take to further extra billing?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do so. First, I have had no negotiations with Premier Miller, nor has he asked me to have any negotiations with him. As I said to the right hon. gentleman in my first answer, I have been meeting with the Minister of Health for Ontario, as I have been meeting with all other Ministers of Health, both in the provinces and the Territories, on the issues which I have already explained.

I want to inform the right hon. gentleman that the Canada Health Act, which was supported by this Party when we were in opposition, and which is the policy of this Government today, does not outlaw extra billing. What it allows for is a withholding of funds if extra billing is continued in the province, or if there are user fees.

AGENDA FOR MEETING OF MINISTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I, of course, accept the word of the Hon. Minister. However, the Premier of Ontario has been telling audiences that he has been hopefully negotiating the province out of extra billing penalties. He has been saying that quite consistently across the province. He has been writing to doctors that he intends to allow extra billing. Therefore, my question is: why has the topic of extra billing been eliminated from the agenda of federal and provincial Health Ministers for the next meeting of those Ministers on May 16 and May 17?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to ask questions, but it would be much more helpful if those questions were not based totally on speculation, or involved a fishing expedition. May I tell the right hon. gentleman that the issue of extra billing and user fees is an integral part of the Canada Health Act, and that is the first item on our agenda on May 16 and May 17.

REQUEST THAT CORRESPONDENCE BE TABLED

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed as well to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We have had the revelation that the Premier of Ontario is telling the people of Ontario one thing publicly, tells the doctors of Ontario something different in a letter, and is failing to protect the interests of the people of Ontario who are very worried about extra billing. Therefore, will the Minister do the honourable thing and at least table the correspondence between his Department and the Premier of Ontario's office so the people of Ontario can see what exactly is in store for them after the election tomorrow?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Official Opposition critic that there is no letter to table because no letter has been sent. I cannot table something which has not been sent. I do have a copy of the letter from the Premier to the doctors, and what the Premier says in this letter—and this has been the position of the Ontario Government and was the position of the former Government as well—is that doctors negotiate with their provincial Government or through the hospital service if that is the system the province has established. I do not know if he has it, but if he checks the letter the Hon. Member will find clearly that the Premier gives the doctors the right to opt out of OHIP, a position that was accepted by all Parties in the Canada Health Act. So there is no letter to table because there was none received.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Ontario, Mr. Miller, has indicated that he is in the process of negotiating a lesser penalty than that which was stipulated under the Canada Health Act. Why is the Minister now going to back off the principle that he and his Party agreed to under the Canada Health Act when they were in opposition? Will he live up to those responsibilities and protect the interests of Ontario, because we can clearly see that the Premier of Ontario is going to allow extra billing in that province?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again my hon. friend should take a look at what he is asking and what has happened. If he looks at extra billing in Ontario at the end of the first year, which was April 1, he will find that the amount of extra billing today compared with that of a year ago, without any legislation in Ontario, has dropped. The amount withheld per month was based on that first year's calculation of extra billing. Obviously, if there is a reduction in extra billing, as we hope there will be, whether it be in Ontario or other provinces where the same trend is occurring, then the amount withheld would have to be less. That is the discussion we are having, and I say to the Hon. Member that I intend to continue those discussions on Friday with a newly elected majority Progressive Conservative Government of Ontario.

PREMIER'S LETTER TO DOCTORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I do not know what the Minister has been smoking, but I have a question for him on the same subject.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Ontario has said that the extra billing fine the people of Ontario are paying, which is costing the ordinary people of Ontario about $1 million a week, is not harmful to the medical health system of Ontario. Those are Premier Miller's words. Does the Minister not agree that the system now in place in Ontario, which costs the average person, cumulatively, about $1 million a week, is harmful to that province?

• (1425)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know what I have not been smoking. I do not know whether it is the Jamaican cigars or the Cuban cigars that he is smoking that are making him ask that kind of question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member may have a bent for a centralized system for everything. Under the Canada Health Act and health care in Saskatchewan, the fundamental principle is for the provinces to have the right of delivery of the system.

The Hon. Member has asked me to express an opinion, but I will not do that. It is the responsibility of the provinces to deal with their doctors and to deliver the system. That is the principle on which I function and the manner in which I will continue.

COST TO PROVINCE OF EXTRA BILLING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a Bill which was brought before the previous Parliament was supported by all Parties precisely because we saw that national leadership was required to deal with certain provinces if we were to maintain a universal system of medicare.

In light of the concern that was expressed in Parliament on the need to maintain a universal system at reasonable cost for the people of Canada, would the Minister consider the outrageous statement made by the Premier of Ontario that $1 million a week is nothing to the people of Ontario? If he thinks it is significant, will he take steps to introduce an escalating system of punishment for a province that does not maintain a low cost and universal system of medicare?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Leader of the NDP probably does not understand this, or chooses not to understand it the day before the election.

Mr. Gauthier: Don't be arrogant.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I mean that. I am sure that he would like to get an answer from a federal Minister which would be seen as interference in a provincial system. I will not do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Government would like to see the elimination of extra billing. There is no change in that. During the days of the Diefenbaker Government, when Mr. Douglas was Premier of Saskatchewan, there was a similar plan. The only difference then was that you had to withhold all the funds.

If there is going to be a change in Ontario or in Manitoba, where there is also extra billing, let the provinces decide that. We have a Canada Health Act which we supported. The clause which the Member is referring to in his question was rejected by the House when he introduced it last time.

REQUEST FOR DIFFERENT SYSTEM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely true that the clause that I am talking about was rejected before. However, when it was rejected before there was a hope expressed by the Minister himself, when he was on this side of the House, if I remember correctly, that no additional penalty system would be required. Since then the Premier of the Province of Ontario has said that they can go on paying indefinitely without providing the kind of system we think is necessary.

Will the Government now reconsider its position? If the Government of Ontario continues with its process, which is costing the people of Ontario $1 million a week, will the Government of Canada show national leadership by introducing a different system to encourage the Government of Ontario to do the right thing through financial incentives?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring the Leader of the NDP up to the present status. The assertion he makes is not correct. In fact, just the opposite has happened. There has now been a move in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick to reduce or eliminate extra billing, depending on the provincial case. In Ontario the percentage is going down. In Alberta the percentage is going down. Therefore the very assertion he makes that it is going up is wrong. I say to him that it might be an issue he would like to raise today, but it does not bear out in truth what has happened in the last year.

PETRO-CANADA

DISPOSAL OF CANADA LANDS ACREAGE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Petro-Canada is seeking to farm out vast amounts of acreage it holds in the Canada Lands to other oil and gas companies, regardless of whether these other companies are Canadian or foreign owned. Bill C-15 is doing away with the protection that we had for Canadianization under the Foreign Investment Review Act. Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that the principle of 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990 is still a principle of the Government?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in earlier statements, has been quite clear on the 50 per cent ownership question which the Hon. Member has raised. If he wants to explore that question more fully, perhaps he could do so with the Minister of Energy, upon her return.

CANADIANIZATION OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is reported to have said on only one occasion that she favours 50 per cent Canadianization by 1990. At the same time as she was reported as having said that, she also said: "I am not an intervenor; the oil and gas companies know the policy of the 50 per cent requirement of Canadianization". In view of the Government's hands off policy on Canadianization, how can the objective of 50 per cent Canadianization by 1990 be achieved?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member feels that he is confused about any statements issued by the Minister of Energy, he should take my suggestion and talk directly to her upon her return.

As far as the Canadianization goals in Canada are concerned, I think we are making great progress. I would invite the Hon. Member to read some of the stories that are coming out about Gulf Canada. He may find that there will be news very shortly concerning a move with respect to that company that, hopefully, will increase Canadianization quite dramatically.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

HALL COMMITTEE REPORT—METHOD OF MAKING PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and it concerns the committee of inquiry on Crow benefit payments. The Hall Committee has admitted that it made its recommendation for payment to the producer in spite of the lack of a consensus position among the groups who made submissions and, since this detracts considerably from the credibility of the recommendation, will the Minister assure the House that he will not proceed with legislation implementing this report without looking into the detrimental effects of the recommendation on producers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I said in my press release yesterday that we intended to seek the views and the opinions of all producer groups and organizations throughout the country. This is a recommendation that has been advanced by the special committee of inquiry that was established under the auspices of the Act. It is a unanimous report. It brings forth a specific recommendation and it should be given serious consideration. But what we really are expecting here is a full, comprehensive debate on the issue.

COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has referred the report to the Transport Committee. If the Minister expects the Transport Committee to make a judgment on the recommendations in this report, will he ensure that the Transport Committee is provided with all of the studies that were carried out in relation to that recommendation? Will he provide for further study into the detrimental effects of the recommendations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that will certainly depend upon the decision of the committee about what information they want to seek. In addition to the valuable input of the standing committee, I will be asking the members of the Hall Committee to make themselves available to any group, Members of Parliament, or whoever may want to consult them to get a full briefing, so that there is a clear understanding of the background and recommendations that have been advanced—I might repeat, advanced in a unanimous manner.

FORESTRY

BUDWORM INFESTATION IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. It concerns the budworm infestation which is ravaging millions of acres of our forest stands in northern Ontario. It is approaching the proportion of a national disaster for many communities in northern Ontario.

So far, the Ontario Conservative Government is refusing to make a commitment to save the forests of northern Ontario from this infestation, and establish a proper control program. Can the Minister, who, I assume, is in daily contact with his provincial counterpart, explain why no action is being taken to control this infestation which threatens the very existence of hundreds of communities and thousands of jobs in northern Ontario?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that the whole question of spraying and protection of the forests is a matter of provincial concern. They have undertaken in no uncertain terms to deal with that on a public basis. They have had tours and displays, and meetings with the public, in order to deal with that particular issue.

The Minister has stated publicly that the Government will be dealing with that policy and will put it before the public within the next few weeks.

Mr. Foster: Surely the Minister cannot wash his hands of this matter as easily as that. He was a provincial Minister.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister knows that the time is running out for a decision to be made on this matter. There must be a 30-day lead time for environmental considerations. Surely the Minister would not want to be party to some kind of secret deal in which no decision is made by the Ontario Government.

Will the Minister make a commitment to the House right now, and to the people of northern Ontario, to phone Premier Frank Miller this afternoon and point out the gravity of this matter to him, and urge him to make a commitment today that he will bring in a proper program to control this infestation?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to call the Premier of Ontario on a matter like this. He is certainly aware of the importance of forestry, and he is aware of the importance of spraying in that operation. The Premier and the Minister will make that decision in due course.

HALL COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. When the Justice Hall Committee process was set in place some time ago, one of the basic economic assumptions was that a change in our Canadian farm policy that would be assisted by changes to the Crow rate would permit beef and pork producers to export products into the United States, Japan, and Korea. This assumption was disputed at the time by some of the leading meat packing industries spokesmen, including Mr. Childs and Mr. Kaumeyer. Since then we have seen the United States implement a tariff of 5.3 cents per pound on hogs, on the assumption that we are subsidizing hogs with the stabilization program.

Given that the assumptions have changed, will the Minister reject both the assumptions and the recommendations from that report and start over from square one?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I would remind all Hon. Members that this was a government inquiry that was established under Part I of the Inquiries Act. There were two very important criteria included in the terms of reference which I believe should bear some consideration. One was that the method of payment should be established in such a way as to be the most conducive toward the growth and development of agriculture throughout Canada.

I believe that the other important term of reference is that the method of payment should not provide for an unfair or disproportionate advantage to sectors of western agriculture relative to other regions of agriculture in Canada. I think it is within that framework that the recommendations have been put forth.

● (1440)

The Hon. Member may want to engage in debate on certain aspects or elements of this very important report and this very important issue, but I would remind him that what we are asking and seeking is a full comprehensive discussion on the pros and cons of this issue. I think, because it was put in the context it was under the Inquiries Act, it merits worthy consideration.

DIRECT PAYMENTS TO FARMERS—UNITED STATES REACTION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister recognize that direct payment to farmers could only be construed by the United States as a subsidy to agriculture? The payment to the railways was at least defensible in that they, the Americans also subsidize their canal and river systems and we could be doing similar things. How do we defend ourselves when we are doing this, given the action that the U.S. has taken?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this particular proposal would apply both to domestic and export grain, and again, as I said, this is one element of the debate. I am sure the Hon. Member will have lots of opportunity to put forth his views and those of his Party. He certainly is entitled to his opinion. I welcome the fact that he is expressing his opinion, as I will welcome all other people who have a view and an opinion on this very important and sensitive issue.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—REPORTED BURNING OF FAMINE RELIEF CAMP

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of External Relations. According to a report in the Washington Post, the Ethiopian army, equipped with Soviet made helicopters, burned and evacuated by force a large Ethiopian famine relief camp which was operated by reputable organizations, including World Vision and the International Red Cross.

What representations will the Canadian Government make to ensure that the hapless 52,500 refugees left without water or medical treatment, and forced to walk hundreds of miles, although thousands of them are under five years of age, will receive adequate care and that Canadian assisted centres will not suddenly be closed down in the same ruthless manner? Irish relief workers at the camp fear that one-half of the walking refugees will perish.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, we have contacted our ambassador in Addis Ababa and, apparently, the reports are probably accurate. We have asked the ambassador to do whatever is necessary to meet with Ethiopian authorities, but it was impossible because May 1 is a statutory holiday in Ethiopia.

As soon as we get more information, we will be in a position to confirm to the House that we continue to help the people involved.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

FREEDOM OF POLITICAL ASSOCIATION IN ONTARIO

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Wow!

Mr. Hopkins: We all know by now the practice of deceit and of broken promises on the part of the federal Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hopkins: We now have a provincial Tory Government resorting to threats and intimidation of the Ontario electorate. I refer you to the statement by the Premier of Ontario that only Tory held seats will be favoured by that Government if elected, God forbid.

In the light of such a statement will the Deputy Prime Minister instruct federal government lawyers to investigate whether such a practice does contravene our Charter of Rights which allows all Canadians, including the Ontario electorate, the fundamental freedom of political association without fear of discrimination? This certainly shows how worn out the Tory organization is in the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, obviously it will be polling day tomorrow in the Province of Ontario judging from the allegations that are being made by the Liberal Party across the way. When the Hon. Member speaks of deceit of a political Party, he certainly should know what he is talking about, sitting where he is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I do not accept his allegations for a moment. Indeed, I think the people of Ontario can expect more of the honest, forthright, good management government that has been given to them by the Conservative Party in Ontario for over 40 years, after the polls have closed tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What have you been smoking?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, that attitude just shows that this Government is worn out after a few months.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MEMBERS' INVOLVEMENT IN ELECTION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the Deputy Prime Minister's response, it is public knowledge that many federal Conservatives, strangely enough, are heavily involved in the Ontario election.

Mr. Dick: Where were you last Friday?

Mr. Hopkins: I am just trying to be kind to them, Mr. Speaker. Let them just settle down a bit. They are a little excited today.

Mr. Nystrom: Erik looks scared.

Mr. Hopkins: In order to eliminate any suspicion of guilt by association, will the Deputy Prime Minister instruct members of his federal caucus to dissociate themselves totally from the provincial Tories who are practising such blatant political threats, or do they, too, not believe in freedom of political association?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the political health of the country is very important. In response to a question of that nature, I would urge the Ontario members of the Liberal Party to get involved in the election campaign that is going on in their province.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Like last Friday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I really find it exceedingly strange when they speak today and when they did last week about the practices they are so familiar with and that all of a sudden they now find so evil and of sufficient degree to have brought forward a non-confidence motion last Friday at which their own Leader was absent, the Leader of the New Democratic Party was absent—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: —and only nine of their 40 Members were here to vote on their own motion.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Such hypocrisy, Sir, will be seen not only by the people of Ontario but by the entire population of the country.

Mr. Gauthier: You should know. You are the expert.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PARLIAMENT

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS—UNION MEMBERSHIPS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. Prior to the introduction yesterday of a Bill respecting employer-employee relations in the Senate and the House of Commons, an application supported by over a thousand signed union cards had been made under the Canada Labour Code for certification of those self-same employees. Will the Government consider those signed cards as valid under the new Act which the Government proposes to have passed by Parliament?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I know the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain was at my press conference and was standing there with the rest of the journalists giving a standing ovation after I outlined the provisions of the new Bill to him.

This legislation provides a framework and does away with the confusion that now exists in terms of the legalities with respect to the rights of employees. For the first time it gives to employees on the Hill the ability to organize and bargain collectively. This is a progressive and modern piece of legislation, which I hope will be supported by the Hon. member and his Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is one that was based upon an all-Party draft brought down last year. I hope the Hon. Member will be able to support this legislation because it is important to employees on the Hill.

Mr. Deans: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you noticed the answer to my question. I certainly didn't.

SIGNING OF CARDS BY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council a supplementary question. The employees to whom the Minister intends to give bargaining rights have already chosen a representative. That representative has made representation under the Canada Labour Code on the right to represent these employees. Over 1,000 of them have already signed cards. Will they have to go back through the process of getting those same people to re-sign in order to comply with this somewhat undermining piece of legislation which the Government has brought forward?

● (1450)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the position taken by the House Leader for the New Democratic Party because this is based upon draft legislation which is put forward by representatives of his own Party. All I can say to him is that in the present context I am sure the Public Service Staff Relations Board will not be oblivious of what has transpired over the past months.

The reality is that we have to put this into context. We have to move forward to allow these people to take their legal rights and to understand these legal rights. I urge the Hon. Member to assist in doing that by supporting quick passage of this legislation. It is for the good of the employees on the Hill, and for the good of the people of Canada that this institution have progressive labour legislation.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and concerns the closing of textile mills.

Last week's newspapers announced that one of the companies whose machinery I installed more than 25 years ago was on the auction block. Three months ago, Tricot Majestic of Saint-Hyacinthe closed its doors, as did the Wabasso Company in Trois-Rivières. The textile industry is falling off because of a failure on the part of the former Government to provide assistance. Can the Minister tell the House whether he will recommend short-term measures to get that industry back on an even keel?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member from Drummond I want to assure him that the textile industry has been meeting with us as an association, and as well we have met with representatives of the companies within that industry. We are currently working on a plan that we hope will be acceptable to the industry and to the Government, to ensure that some of these problems they have been living with be lessened, if not eliminated completely, in future.

PRESENTATION DATE INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the fact that it is May 1 and we still do not have a date for the Budget. My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. There is a rumour I have heard to the effect that the difficulty of coming up with a date is the risk of conflict with a Stanley Cup play-off date, if you can believe that, which could occur on either the Tuesday or the Thursday. We have had enough skating on this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I see I have the approval of the House Leader. Will the Deputy Prime Minister do the Members of this House a courtesy, and others who have to travel and arrange their plans accordingly, and provide us with a date not later than the end of next week of when the Budget will be handed down?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the Hon. Member's prowess at hockey, he is not one of those about whom the late Foster Hewitt could say "He shoots, he scores!"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: He knows as well as I do that traditionally in this House the date of the Budget is announced by the Minister of Finance. The Minister said earlier this week that he will be announcing the date of that Budget in the House of Commons. As Hon. Members know, the Minister of Finance is in Bonn with the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. No doubt if the Hon. Member puts his question on the return of the Minister of Finance, he will have the appropriate response.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PROGRAM REVIEW COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is a pretty good skater as well. The Deputy Prime Minister has also been accused of slashing, if we can continue the analogy. He is the chairman of a committee of members of the private sector charged with producing cuts in programs, appropriately known as the Nielsen committee. Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure us that the full conclusions of that committee, not sanitized, but the full conclusions, which have been paid for by the Canadian taxpayer, will be tabled or made public here in the House, preferably at or prior to the budget date?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I take that as a compliment from the Hon. Member in the sense that he expects the task force on program review to produce a conclusion this month, which amounts to about eight months' time, a conclusion that it took Glassco three years to reach, to perform the work of examining well over a thousand programs. That is simply not possible. I should think the Hon. Member would be very encouraging about the approach we are taking to inject more management and order into the affairs of the country, a task which will take until toward the end of the year to complete in a preliminary way. Certainly he should not be disappointed as we proceed. As I have been doing thus far, we will be making announcements about the results of the task force on program review when they are ready.

SMALL BUSINESS

REQUEST THAT PLANT BE REOPENED IN DESBIENS, P.Q.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. At the pulp and paper plant in Desbiens, a town in the Lac-Saint-Jean area, 125 employees are still waiting for the Prime Minister to keep his election promise to settle the problems besetting this plant, which has been closed for nearly four years. Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows: Two months ago, I asked whether the Government would grant the financial assistance requested by the company and the employees, and today, I ask the Minister to inform the House when he is going to make a decision and whether the decision will be a positive one for these unemployed workers.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, the Desbiens plant submitted a proposal not long ago. It is now being examined, and as is the case for all proposals received by the Government, we take the time to analyze them, especially those coming from the pulp and paper sector. We are looking at all the implications, and we will make a decision as soon as possible.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister said the same thing two months ago in the House. His party and his boss made an election promise last July. Could the minister inform the House today when he is going to take action and do something about this problem, or does the minister intend to break another election promise?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to break any election promises. We are considering the matter, and as the House is aware—

Mr. Nystrom: Considering, always considering—

Mr. Bissonnette: —as you know, the Prime Minister made no formal commitment to start up the plant again—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bissonnette: —but asked the plant to submit a project. We are looking at this case, and one thing is certain, namely that all job creation projects are considered very carefully, and that this Government intends to create jobs in Quebec the same as anywhere else in Canada.

FISHERIES

CODFISH—SIZE OF WEST GERMAN CATCH

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, an international agreement between Canada and the EEC is being blatantly violated by a member country of the EEC. My question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. There are 9,500 tonnes of codfish allocated to the EEC in Area 2J3KL, recognized by international agreement as Canadian jurisdiction, a Canadian resource within and without the 200-mile limit. The West German fleet has already caught three times that quota, and it is still fishing today. What is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans doing about that?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the matter raised by the Hon. Member is serious. I have now received some preliminary information concerning it. I will take very careful notice of the representations of the Hon. Member. I hope I will be able to give him a response by at least this time tomorrow.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling that action is being muzzled by those who are staging the Prime Minister's Hollywood production in West Germany today.

Could the Minister verify to the Chamber that he could, if he wanted to, close ports, impose sanctions, or terminate the entire agreement with the EEC? Does the "old pal" attitude take precedence over the fishery of the country?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I could do all of the things the Hon. Member wishes me to do, but until we have a much better and more complete understanding of the facts, it would be completely irresponsible. I told the Hon. Member that I have now received notice of the problem and that I hope that I will be able to respond effectively and in a reasonable way by this time tomorrow.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East

(Mr. Ravis) on Tuesday, April 30, 1985, does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

I received notice earlier from the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) of an attempt to raise a question of privilege at three o'clock.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have indicated that I am trying to hear the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River on a question of privilege of which he has given me notice.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SKELLY—MILAP PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House I raised a matter with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). The matter I raised now appears to have been confirmed. She had not confirmed the matter yesterday.

The individuals in the program of which she was speaking have in fact admitted that they are receiving substantial amounts of money from the program. It was my opinion that the Minister completely misled the House yesterday and that some definite action should be taken—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There may be a difference of opinion as to the facts but it is clearly not a question of privilege.

MR. McCROSSAN—STATEMENT BY MR. HEAP UNDER STANDING ORDER 21

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In a statement made before Question Period the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) appears to have misinformed the House concerning my actions on the issue of the removal of the radio-active soil on McClure Crescent in Malvern.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is clearly a dispute as to facts. Is it a question of privilege or a point of order?

Mr. McCrossan: It is—

Mr. Speaker: It is neither a point of order nor a question of privilege. The Hon. Member has the right to rise tomorrow under Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21 to make a statement of his own, if he chooses. Does the Hon. Member have a point of order or a question of privilege?

Mr. McCrossan: Is it a question of privilege? I am not a lawyer. However, the Hon. Member has misstated my actions without attempting to verify the facts with me.

Mr. Speaker: Order. All Members of Parliament have the right to say what they wish in the House of Commons. That is the privilege of free speech. If the Hon. Member believes that there is a dispute or that a correction to the record needs to be made, he has the right to rise tomorrow under Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21 to make his own statement. That is the way it works in a free debating environment.

MR. CASSIDY—ACTION OF RCMP—REMOVAL OF TABLE FROM PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. At 2.30 this afternoon, the RCMP removed from Parliament Hill a table at which my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and myself had been distributing literature about peace yesterday and today. This unusual kind of privilege which allows Members of Parliament to distribute material but not citizens would—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows full well that matters that do not occur in the House during Question Period may not be raised in the House as questions of privilege without giving the Speaker proper notice in writing at least one hour in advance. I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest but the Hon. Member is an experienced Member and he knows that he must abide by the rules.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4242).

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I had a few minutes left yesterday when the House was debating the Bill, and particularly the amendments. I was saying how important employment is back home and that we must ensure that this Bill and these amendments do protect our jobs. I was referring to recent riots in our region because people thought or expected that their jobs would be taken away from them. Why riots? Quite simply because there had been no consultation, because the people, the contractors had failed to talk to the workers and discuss the issue with them. Unions and workers were cornered and it was indeed the only means left to them to protest against disappearing jobs. Because machinery was taking jobs away from manual labour, those people reacted violently. I can tell the House that with 2,000-odd people involved, it was not a pretty sight.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is something we might witness again if the House rejects the proposed amendments, with the result that new companies setting up shop in our regions might not have to answer to the people, the Government or even the workers.

Mr. Speaker, those are the reasons why I support the amendments. Needless to say, my very first consideration is the protection of jobs in this country, particularly in the Atlantic region with which I am more directly concerned.

● (1510)

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75 which have been grouped for discussion. All of the motions deal with making information available to the public and potential business investors in Canada as it applies to foreign investment.

The amendments were put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). They are designed to assure the public's right to know about the activities of foreign investors. As well, we hope to accomplish four or five very basic things which we believe are necessary for business to operate in a proper manner in Canada, in order that all Canadians can feel confident that the investment will in fact be beneficial to the country. The method by which we could determine whether the provisions are being met is through the availability of information. That is the intention of most of the amendments.

In order to ensure that foreign investment is providing a benefit to Canada, we believe it is necessary to be able to perform studies on foreign investment patterns and behaviours. We should be able to research such questions as: What is the nature of the investment? Is it coming from outside Canada, or is the investor using Canadian funds to take over a Canadian company? Is the benefit to the country one of combining existing technology or marketing expertise with an outsider? There are many instances in which combinations could be beneficial both to workers and investors in Canada by establishing a joint venture in new technology or marketing expertise with a company from outside Canada. All Members of the House are aware of instances in which the combining of forces has been beneficial to Canadians.

However, the point which is at issue in these amendments is the question of how to monitor the decisions. How do Canadians or potential investors get information to determine whether the benefits which were espoused in fact accrue to Canadians. We believe that more information should be made available which relates to the performance of foreign business in Canada. That is not something which is beyond dispute. It is a question which many people in business and in Government have wrestled within their own minds.

We all know that Americans have far more access to information concerning investors and business than we do in Canada. Some of the amendments attempt to give Canadians, who are interested in what is happening in Canadian business, a similar kind of access to basic information about the companies. That information is available to interested persons if they go to the United States and research the companies which have branches in Canada. If a Canadian wants to find out what a particular chief executive officer of a company in Canada is paid, he is more likely to find that information by going to sources in the United States than to sources in Canada. The information is simply not available in Canada. It is basic information and should be made more available to the public.

During the course of this debate we will also be proposing amendments which set out the types of reviewable investment, that is, investments which have resulted in take-overs of Canadian companies. We believe that the rules and the requirements for the company which is taking over should be made more explicit and that the requirements for the provision of information should be made stronger.

In addition, one of the amendments attempts to have undertakings made by the foreign investor to the Agency in exchange for approval. The Agency would then have some bargaining power to extract basic information from the investing company in exchange for permission to invest in Canada. Along with that permission would come certain requirements and undertakings with which the investing company would have to live.

The last set of amendments which are proposed would have the effect of providing a more systematic and public monitoring of approved take-overs to ensure compliance with the undertakings which the investor had given.

The question of secrecy in business is one which is much discussed in Canada. The question of public disclosure and freedom of information has been a very favourable topic in this Chamber. Over the past number of years I have listened with interest to members of the Conservative Party, when they were the Official Opposition, spell out in very clear and concise terms why it is that Canadians should be entitled to more information on government activities, cabinet decisions and decisions which are made by Crown corporations. We submit that decisions which are made by private corporations should also be made available.

That question was put to witnesses who appeared before the standing committee. One witness, Mr. Gorse Howarth, a former Commissioner of FIRA, gave some interesting testimony on the issue. He said:

I recognize as well as anybody does that every business has its secrets and that it would be exceedingly bad for some of those secrets to become known to its competitors, perhaps even to its workers; and, I have even heard it suggested, to its shareholders. But not everything should be secret. Not everything should be placed under this cloak of secrecy. Or, if you do, then there will be the same criticism and there will be the same sense of unfairness.

So it is to correct this potential for unfairness, or sense of unfairness that we are supporting the amendments to the Bill before the House at this time. Former Commissioner Gorse Howarth went on when questioned to say:

—we should encourage, for instance, workers and their unions to come forward and say what they thought about this and how they saw it developing. I do not know whether we were right to do that or not, but we did. I suppose you could rationalize it by saying that anybody is entitled to speak to the Government of Canada—any Canadian certainly.

So that at least one of the individuals, one of the commissioners for FIRA, had some second thoughts about the amount of secrecy which existed under the first legislation. Since the Government has chosen to open up the legislation to some extent; to dramatically reduce the mandate of the old FIRA legislation, and to loosen things up in the Investment Canada Bill we have before us, it is still very important, and I think consistent with the many speeches and protestations from the former Opposition, now Government, that we have introduced into this Bill the kinds of access to freedom of information and extra information which these amendments propose. We would assume that government members would, therefore, support it.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this further opportunity to take part in a debate that is vital to the future of Canada's economic well-being. I see a group of young people here in our visitors gallery, and I imagine that, like me, they must realize that we have here in front of us a Government that is losing its grip. We are considering a very important Bill, and out of a majority of 211 Members, only a handful of Members are here in the House to listen to what the Opposition has to say about this important legislation. They have 40 Ministers, the biggest Cabinet in this country's history, Mr. Speaker, and—

[English]

Mr. Gormley: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member may be belabouring the Bill unnecessarily, but I believe he is also belabouring the Standing Order which would prohibit reference to the presence or absence of other Hon. Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I have to agree with the Hon. Member. I would hope that the Hon. Member, who has been in the chamber for a few years, would realize that he should not talk about Hon. Members being present or absent from the chamber. I am sure that he will now get back to the amendment.

The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Chair will consider the time taken by our hon. friend on the Government side and will add it to ours.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Mr. Lapierre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of getting upset, I think our hon. neighbour should count how many of his colleagues are present, because sometimes they cannot even keep a full quorum in this House. Instead of getting upset about the fact that I was commenting on absences, the Hon. Member ought to make sure there are at least enough Members present to make a quorum. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see the Minister who just woke up, because I hope he is going to listen and realize that the Bill definitely needs the amendments proposed by Opposition Members.

Mr. Speaker, we are asking to have the information made public. That is not unreasonable. In fact, we are asking this for the sake of our Progressive Conservative colleagues, because we know that when decisions are made, as was the case recently, and they do not have to look so smug, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) was never consulted when the time came to appoint Mr. Sherman to the CRTC, because otherwise he would have objected, just as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) was never consulted, and just as the president of the Quebec caucus was never consulted. So it is quite obvious that they are unhappy about having things imposed on them, and I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault), for instance, would like to be notified if a company in his riding was about to be sold to foreign interests. I think it would be important for the Hon. Member for Drummond to know whether the change in ownership could affect employment in that particular plant in his riding, and whether it was going to bring in new technology, or would the Hon. Member prefer to let the Minister responsible for the agency organize it all in secret?

Mr. Speaker, to the other Members of this House I have this to say: for once, they have a chance to demand that the Government be accountable, and that is why these amendments are before the House. The point is that Members would know that, if feasibility studies are made, for instance, on take-over proposals, the results of those studies would be available to them, as they would be to all Canadians. A person would have to be trusting in the extreme to leave the fate of our constituents in the hands of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Cassidy: You have secrets about the Liberals and we have secrets about the Conservatives.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, if Donald Duck over there could keep quiet . . . Our NDP friend would be better off canvassing in his riding next door instead of talking nonsense here in the House.

One point I want to make is that the amendments before the House will make it possible for Hon. Members and for the Canadian public to know what is going on with respect to foreign investment. We are not asking for the moon. All we ask is to be informed. We want workers who fear their plant will close down because it was taken over by an American competitor to be informed. I do not see why our friends opposite object to that. Have they become so obsessed with secrecy that they do not even want to know about decisions that may have an impact on their ridings? That is the purpose of these amendments. Our NDP colleague should be pleased we are supporting his amendment, but he is still complaining. I think he will always be dissatisfied, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will agree.

Mr. Gauthier: I certainly do.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, my point is that these amendments are like virtue and motherhood. Who could be against information? Who can begrudge the public the right to be informed? I am sure the only people . . . I am sure the members of the public who are here would like to be informed if their jobs were at stake. And if they went to see their Member, at least he would be able to give them information. However, for the time being, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is being given a free rein.

I see the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) and I am sure he does not want to give the Minister a free rein. He is much too worried about what is going to happen in textiles, clothing and footwear to be willing to give the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion a free rein. I know the Hon. Member has good judgment and that he will vote in favour of this amendment, because its purpose is to keep him informed of decisions that affect his riding, his workers and his constituents.

Mr. Speaker, that is the point I would make, in urging our friends opposite to wake up. I realize that the telegram of congratulations they received from the Prime Minister included the words: Keep quiet! But Mr. Speaker, that was six months ago. There is a time for congratulatory telegrams, the day after the election, and there is a time for decision, and I think they should understand that. I hope they are going to forget the order they received from the Prime Minister's Office, and that now, they will rise in the House. Our friends in the gallery must be very upset to see there is not a single Conservative Member rising today.

An Hon. Member: Velcro lips, all of them!

Mr. Lapierre: Imagine! They call them Velcro lips, Mr. Speaker! I am sure the Canadian public is astonished to see no one is rising to support all these amendments that have the support of the public. They are not even rising to speak against them. That just shows how short they are of arguments. I would invite our hon. friends opposite to tell us this afternoon why they are against the public's right to be informed. Why do they want all these secret operations with foreign investors to go on in the office of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion? I would not trust him for a minute, Mr. Speaker. And I am convinced that my constituents would be inadequately served if it were strictly a decision of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

I see the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette), the translator of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and his factotum, as my colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) would call him . . . he is not aware of the decisions, because Cabinet is not even consulted. It will be strictly the responsibility of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who will decide as it may please him. His Parliamentary Secretary (Mrs. B. Tardif) who is here to support the Bill is not aware of the decisions either. The whole process will take place in an atmosphere of secrecy, and that is what we want to prevent. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you support entirely the principle of public disclosure. Because you are a wise man, you would not like to be taken for a ride, something which is likely to happen to us.

I urge you, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to use all your influence to persuade our hon. friends opposite to wake up and support this amendment, failing which they might be very sorry when they see plants in their own ridings closing down following their take-over by foreign interests.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and I welcome his support for the principles of this Bill. I note the fact—and this is why I interrupted him—that when the Liberal Party was in office it was responsible for FIRA, and FIRA's restrictions concerning information to the public were similar to those contained in Bill C-15 now under consideration. That is precisely why we want some changes and have introduced amendments. I gratefully accept the support of the Liberal Party. Unfortunately, however, when that Party was in office it could have brought in radical changes so as to share information on the conditions and agreements made with companies investing in Canada, but it did not introduce the necessary legislative amendments with a view to opening the books to a wider audience than the restricted circle of officials of the Minister responsible for the administration of this measure.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments proposed by this Party highlight the fact that the process advocated in Bill C-15 is shrouded in secrecy. To put it another way, a company prepared to invest in Canada may very well have to guarantee to the Government that its investment project will be of benefit to Canada, but such corporate guarantees will never be revealed and made public. Therefore, the only control measure proposed by the Government in that case is what might be termed administrative accountability, or accountability to public employees. It will therefore be left to the discretion of Investment Canada administrative staff to decide whether we should know—two, three or even five years down the road—if a company has lived up to its guarantees once the investment has been made.

That is expecting quite a lot from them, Mr. Speaker, because they are a busy crew with all kinds of things to do. All the more so because it is difficult to interpret today the full extent of a guarantee given years ago. It is difficult because the staff are forced to work in a rather nonsupporting environment, especially if the Government of the day happens to be Conservative. They have shown a bent for foreign investment, but they do not seem overly concerned about the rules and conditions inherent in investment approval.

As it is, one public employee is expected to do on his own something which calls for well-advised public input. It should not be the exclusive responsibility of somebody who works in an office in Ottawa, for the workers and the people in the community want to know what is going on, because they may be the people who supply parts to the manufacturing company that has made the investment. The same goes for people who buy the products and others in service industries created by that investment. All kinds of people must be in on it, that is the guarantee, including the shareholders, I would say, since many of those companies probably have shareholders in Canada and in other countries. But Canadian shareholders especially have the right to know exactly what guarantees have been offered by the company and whether it will actually live up to them.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind Hon. Members that in the past, the concept that information is something very important, that it should be shared with the public rather than restricted to officials or even Members of Parliament, was a view that was never assumed by any spokesman of a Progressive Conservative Government.

The former Member for Peace River, for instance, a man who was respected by all sides of the House because of his efforts in trying to achieve freedom of information, Mr. Ged Baldwin, stated on February 12, 1976, as reported in Hansard, and I quote:

[English]

He said:

—it is time for us to act. I know there will be some argument about detail. We will all agree there must be exceptions. Government cannot be asked to conduct all its discussions in a goldfish bowl. When there are working papers leading up to a decision, then I am quite prepared to accept the fact that those working papers should not be available during the time the decision is being considered.

Our recommendations are that the negotiations can be carried out in secret. But then Mr. Baldwin said:

But once the government has arrived at a decision, it would be my submission that all working papers of a factual or statistical nature should be made available so that members of the public would be able to examine the bases upon which the government acted, and evaluate whether or not the government's decision was sound.

What we are saying is that the promises and undertakings made by companies regarding their investment in Canada should be made public as part of the record. If that is done, then you can genuinely have accountability under the foreign investment review process proposed by the Government. It will not just depend on the civil servant, with many other things on his plate, occasionally saying, "well, gee, I wonder about that particular investment that was made three years ago; are they living up to their promises or not?" The chances are under this legislation the civil servant may never get around to it because he will be too busy, and the company is not required to report every year, as our amendment proposes it should, about how it is fulfilling its undertaking.

In other words, we are not saying that one person who may have dozens of investments to oversee and many other responsibilities, should be responsible for seeing that a promise to create 1,000 jobs in Canada is fulfilled, or a promise to source spare parts in Canada is being fulfilled, or a promise to generate research in this country is being fulfilled. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, that is not enough. It is well known that the span of control of individuals can only go so far.

One way of getting around that is to make things public so that if something is going wrong, then the workers in a particular plant, or the middle managers or the community or the customers or the suppliers can speak up. They can say that when this company came to Chatham or Ottawa or Montmagny or some other part of the country, it promised to create 350 jobs and buy parts from Canadian suppliers, and it has not achieved that. They can say that this company promised that by 1986 some 49 per cent of its shares would be Canadian owned and it is not moving in that direction. That is the kind of accountability which you cannot have with a secret process.

I recall very much during the course of the election campaign that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised we would have a new kind of government. We would have change because so many Canadians were fed up with what had happened under the Liberals.

I welcome the comments of the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) supporting these amendments calling for much greater openness, and I deplore the fact that he forgot to mention that his Liberal colleagues in government prior to last September had not brought in that openness by making the necessary amendments to the Foreign Investment Review Act. We have the opportunity to make up for the failures of the old government. We have a government in power which promised to do that and bring in a process of openness. Our amendments are directed to that process so we can learn from our mistakes, ensure accountability, and get information about how foreign investment actually behaves.

This is not just good management practice. We have to learn to share information with employees if companies are going to be managed effectively in the country. This also does a favour for those foreign investors who want to be good corporate citizens. The foreign investor who wants to be a good corporate citizen is tarred with the brush of those companies that are not good corporate citizens. I am sure there are cases where technology has come across the border and some foreign investment that has been of benefit to Canada. Unfortunately, there are too many cases where foreign investment has not been of benefit to Canada.

However, when the company is living up to its obligations by doing a good job and bringing net benefit to Canada, it is in its interests, as in the interest of all of us, for that information to be there. There was a voluntary process under the Foreign Investment Review Agency which led to a total stifling of information. It is time to ensure that it is obligatory. I call on members of the Government, particularly the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) to support these amendments.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-15. Each time I speak I become more concerned about this Bill. The Bill is called Investment Canada which is a complete misnomer. It should be called "investment anything else but Canada".

The actions of the Government give us more reason to be concerned about this Bill. The amendments we are considering today contain very important points which we should keep in mind. As the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has said, we want more openness in this type of legislation. He has rightly said that under the Federal Investment Review Act there was not as much openness as a great many of us would have liked to have seen. That is correct. However, there is now considerably less openness in this particular legislation. It is frightening to think that investment in the country is being completely shrouded in secrecy, and to realize in whose hands the information is located.

Investment Canada is going to put more and more power in the hands of one Minister. It is even more frightening to realize who the Minister is, "Mr. Compassion", the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). That is of very deep concern to me personally and to other Members on this side of the House.

Yesterday I asked the Minister about the sale of Gulf Canada by Chevron Corporation. That is a very important aspect because we want to ensure that Gulf Canada is sold to Canadian interests. That is tremendously important because we want to maintain the principle of 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry by 1990. From 1980 to 1983 Canadian ownership increased from approximately 28 per cent to over 40 per cent. As the ownership gets higher, it will be more and more difficult to obtain that 50 per cent level. It is an important issue. The Government is continually dismissing it.

With the Government's present frame of mind, and its present policies, there is no way that there will be any consideration for decentralization. The Government is too intent on following the policies of the United States. In his speech on December 10 at the Economic Club in New York the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that we are open for business. His Government will not do anything to review any take-over or investment in the country. This Act is supposed to say that anything under $5 million will be reviewed, but it will not be reviewed, Mr. Speaker, because the Government will not want to antagonize or hurt the feelings of the United States in any way.

This is a problem in respect to Canadianization. It is not only threatened, it is a concept which the Government is not even considering. The Government is following lock-step with what it believes is wanted in the United States. This is the first time that a Canadian Prime Minister has gone to a summit without a distinctive Canadian monetary policy. While in Bonn the Prime Minister is "me tooing" exactly what the Government of the United States wants. This is not only frightening, but shameful, in view of the monetary problems which exist in the world today. This is a threat to the economy of Canada and the Canadian industry, not to mention the principle of Canadianization.

What about the policy of Canadianization? I asked the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion today about that. I asked whether the Minister could tell me if they are adhering to a policy of 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990. He said that I should wait until the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) comes back. She is going to be away for a month. That is great consideration for Canadianization or whatever goes on in the country. I do not object to her being away, but that is no reason that the Minister cannot answer a question of fundamental importance to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Honourable Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order.

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would like again to question the relevance of the debate now going on. I think the Hon. Member does not even know which motions we are now discussing.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe all the motions deal with public information. I am sure the Hon. Member will be relevant to the clauses.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I mentioned the motions we were discussing, the issues in those amendments that are of concern, and the issues that these amendments address which, if accepted, would go part way toward allaying the fears of the country with regard to this Bill. I do not object to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources not being here. As far as I am concerned, she can stay away as long as she wants. However, I do object to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion refusing to answer questions of fundamental importance in the House of Commons. A supposedly important Minister should be able to give the Government's position on a principle which is supposedly being adhered to by the Government and which was in place long before the Government took office.

This will be a concern with respect to Canadianization as well as all aspects of business in the country. If there is no check on foreign investment in the country, the foreign investment may very well be in the form of take-overs. If that is all we can expect from foreign investment, we will be shortchanged tremendously. That must be of very serious concern to the country because we want more than just take-overs from foreign investment. I do not disagree with foreign investment. I think there is a definite role for foreign investment and we need it. However, it must be understood by foreign investors that we want new investment. That is what it is all about. This is supposedly why this stance has been taken. Yet, it seems that there will not be any kind of check whatsoever. If we do forget about it, we will suffer.

One of the principles that the Government is discussing and putting forward is that this is supposed to be a benefit to regional development. If foreign investment is not checked it will not be of benefit to regional development because the industry will be placed wherever the investor wants it.

It has not been indicated to my satisfaction, or to the satisfaction of many other people in this country, what benefits we will be able to achieve. There has been much talk about broad theorization, but nothing to indicate that this Bill will be an improvement. In fact, the more one studies this Bill the more one believes that it will be a detriment and a large step backwards from the Foreign Investment Review Act that has been in place in this country.

If there is a downturn in the economy, it is the branch plants of these foreign companies that will be the first to lay people off. They will be more concerned with their head offices in other countries and will buy the products from their head offices and main corporations. These foreign interests would not have the same incentive as Canadian operations to operate in Canada.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in this debate on the amendments to the Investment Canada Bill introduced by my Party. These amendments are important because they address the whole question of secrecy.

As I have stated in other speeches I have made with respect to this Bill, this Bill is deplorable and represents a backward step in our struggle to maintain our cultural and economic identity. This Bill is a blow against our efforts to maintain an economically independent Canada.

The Government's efforts in this area are not unique. Such backward steps can also be seen in the Government's cutback on our cultural agencies and the CBC; on foreign policy and defence policy in which it is trying to destroy Canadian independence. Therefore, it is no surprise to us that Bill C-15 is a blow against our economic independence.

With respect to these amendments, I would point out how strange it is that angels should preside with Opposition Members. When the Conservative Party was in Opposition, I joined with many of them in urging the Government to introduce freedom of information legislation. We often worked closely with prominent Conservatives like Walter Baker to try to squeeze some sense of commitment from the Liberals for public disclosure and freedom of information. As a result of an election, roles have switched and we find that the angels sitting with Opposition Members this time happen to be Liberals. They are now espousing the virtues of freedom of information and it is the Conservatives who are stonewalling efforts to have a more open and free society.

Information is essential in a democracy because the public depends upon it to know what is right and what is wrong when it makes the ultimate decisions. It is up to society to define public morals and standards, and this can only occur when the public has the information upon which to make decisions. That is why it is essential in a democracy to have freedom of information.

In our increasingly complex and interconnected society, each part of our social economic structure affects our society as a whole. For example, a decision made by the board of directors of a corporation not only affects the shareholders and the investors in that corporation, it affects the employees, the consumers, the community and ultimately the public at large. Therefore, I reject the notion that much of the information in such corporations should be considered private.

Many of these corporations receive large direct Government grants and enjoy tax breaks. They enjoy the use of the public infrastructure such as roads, railways and telephone networks. They enjoy the products of our educational system. I suggest they could not exist without our modern state that provides all of these services to the community as a whole. Therefore, I reject the notion that much of the information of those companies should be considered private.

When we are dealing particularly with foreign investment, I submit that it is important for information to be made public. For instance, if a foreign company makes commitments to the country before acquiring a Canadian firm, surely the affected Company's workers, the community, its suppliers and the public as a whole have a right to know about those commitments. I suggest that the public is the ultimate judge in a democracy, and therefore has a right to all information in order to make that judgment.

Let me give several examples. A few weeks ago Dr. Stuart Smith of the Canadian Science Council appeared before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. He brought to our attention that a company from Massachusetts was planning to buy up small companies in Canada that were low in capitalization but high in technological know-how. Many of these small Canadian companies had receive either direct Government grants for research and development or the benefit of the R and D tax credit. There is an aspect of public investment in these young Canadian companies that have been nurtured by public policy. Therefore, I would suggest it is immoral for them to be acquired by foreign companies. Surely the public has a right to know if these firms that are receiving public funds are being gobbled up by foreign companies. That is why it is important to allow access to information.

Let me give another example concerning the environment. An American company involved in disposing of toxic wastes could come to Canada to buy out a similar Canadian company. Experience in the United States has shown that gangsters and mobsters are often involved in such companies in the United States. Testimony before the Congress in the United States has shown that some unsavoury characters are involved in environmental clean-up and the disposal of toxic materials. Therefore, Canadians should know the background of these companies which attempt to buy up Canadian firms that are involved in this area of toxic waste disposal.

The provisions of this Bill will never permit the Canadian public to know who is coming into Canada to buy up Canadian firms. We will not know their background and what commitments they are making to the Government of Canada when they come to invest here and take over a Canadian company. We do not know this vital information, Mr. Speaker.

This Government does democracy a disservice by not supporting the amendments we have introduced. A complex industrial society like ours can only function if there is a free flow of information so that the public will have the information to form its opinion and make the decisions on how the economy and this country should be run. By not allowing the public information, we do democracy a disservice and we weaken our free society. For all these reasons I support the amendments.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, might I say that on several occasions in the past I have talked about each one of the amendments in the motions that are here before us. Every one of those amendments has dealt to a large extent with the process, the results of the review of the acquisitions undertaken and the method by which the new Investment Canada Bill wishes to undertake those reviews. I think that nothing could have brought home to all members of the House in a better way the need for some amendments to these motions before us on Investment Canada than the situation that arose earlier this week with respect to the take-over of Canadian Porcelain Company by an American firm called the Lapp Co., New York.

Here is a situation whereby the jobs, the employment record, I suppose, and to some extent the economic importance of those jobs to the City of Hamilton have been jeopardized by the actions of a competitor from the United States which has dumped its product at below cost into the Canadian market in direct competition with the Canadian Porcelain Company. The dumping was done to such an extent that the Canadian Porcelain Company had to go into receivership. At that time the receivership was being handled by Peat, Marwick and company. In turn Peat, Marwick approached bankers and others interested in bailing out the company. Lo and behold we find that the purchaser of the Canadian Porcerlain Company will be the same company that dumped its products into the Canadian market in order to put that Canadian company into receivership.

I find it incredible that we on this side of the House in the Opposition have had to ask day after day to have the Investment Canada Bill amended so that the definition of benefit to Canadians is more clearly understood in the Bill and that the responsibilities which the Minister would have to live up to are contained in those amendments that we are suggesting. I say that because here is a situation in Hamilton that I think in a way illustrates why we must have the definition of benefit further explained in the Bill. These workers are asking themselves some very valid questions. Of what value will the take-over be of Canadian Porcelain Company by Lapp Co., of New York? Absolutely none, Mr. Speaker. It will be done with a loss of jobs in Hamilton, a loss of jobs in Canada and with a loss of economic impact in terms of the salary components in the City of Hamilton.

Workers were not informed about that take-over. They were not informed whether there was to be some provision in the take-over about their job security. These workers are basically at the mercy of the receiver, the Royal Bank of Canada, that will be funding the take-over by Lapp Co. Workers have no say in the way in which job security can be protected.

Under the Foreign Investment Review Act, the legislation that is in place today and which was put in place by a previous Government, we allowed the take-over of Canadian companies by multinationals. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when a multinational or a foreign interest decided to buy out a Canadian company we certainly asked questions; for example, what will this do to jobs in Hamilton? What will this do in terms of the investment climate in the City of Hamilton? We made sure that workers would be protected in a take-over of that kind. I think the workers in Hamilton realize this week that, thank heavens, the Foreign Investment Review Act is still in effect, and they are asking this Government and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to ask those same questions of the company doing the take-over.

With respect to that particular case, I think you are well aware, sir, that because of questions raised in the House this week the workers involved at the Canadian Porcelain Company have decided to pool all their resources and, with the aid of various groups in the City of Hamilton, including the Chamber of Commerce, labour groups and church groups have put forward a competing bid to buy back their own company. By doing that, at least the Canadian workers can ensure that they will have job security. That is something the Lapp Co., of New York will not guarantee. It is something that the present Conservative Government of Canada will not guarantee to those same workers in Hamilton.

When we are considering the review of Investment Canada, why do we not apply the situation that exists today in Hamilton to the need to have those amendments put on the books? If the previous legislation is to be thrown out of the window with the approval of the Investment Canada Bill, why are we so silent about the need to make sure that the same privisos are in this new Investment Canada Bill, namely to defend the interests of Canadian workers, because that is what they are asking. That is what they ask of their Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). It is the same question I raised in the House two days ago.

I find it astounding that we have the Canadian labour movement behind a group of workers in Hamilton who are concerned about the so-called benefit to Canada of this acquisition by Lapp Co. of New York yet getting no answers from this Government. Quite frankly, they are not getting any answers from their own Conservative Members of Parliament who represent the Hamilton region. I think the conspiracy of silence among back-benchers of the Conservative Party will be reflected in the actions of voters in the Hamilton area in the next election. People expect more of their Members of Parliament. They expect them to defend their constituents' interests.

I have found that we as an Opposition have been required to put up all the speakers for these motions before us on Investment Canada. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, if you asked individual back-benchers for the Hamilton area to try to defend their silence when their constituents are losing jobs because of the lack of provision in the Act and the lack of willpower by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to protect their interests as labourers and as contributors to the economic activity of the Hamilton region, you would be astounded by the lack of response.

When we talked earlier about the way in which the previous government Bill, the Foreign Investment Review Act, was put into place, and the way in which we have used it over the years, there seemed to be a misconception that FIRA was responsible for a decrease in the flow of foreign capital into the country over the last seven to eight years since it was implemented in the mid-1970s. Nothing can be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. There has been only one year in which foreign investment showed a decrease in terms of the amount invested in this country. That year was 1981. It was the year in which the National Energy Program was introduced by the Liberal Government. The reason for a net outflow of capital was the buy-out of the multinationals so we could have a window on the oil industry. With the exception of 1981, despite the existence of the Foreign Investment Review Act, there has always been a surplus of foreign investment in Canada.

I remember very well the speech made by the Minister when first reading was given to the Investment Canada Bill. He made quite a thing of the fact that he felt with the implementation of Investment Canada billions of foreign investment would flow into the country. To this day I am still waiting to see the result of that new mood of optimism expressed by foreign investors. The facts do not show that these dollars have flowed into Canada in the last six months. If anything, the situation is to the contrary.

Much was said about the Prime Minister's economic statement in his speech to the business community in New York last fall about how he felt that Canada was open for business again. As my Leader has said, whoever said that it was closed? Canada has never been closed. Every year we have had more and more foreign investment pour into the country, even under FIRA which did a lot more to protect Canadian interests than this Investment Canada Bill. I suspect that if in the United States, the country in which the Conservative Government has put so much hope, the rebound in the economy that is supposed to bring all kinds of goods to Canada as well as investment and job opportunities fails to materialize, the people of Canada will not forget what this Government stands for.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to make a few remarks on this third grouping of amendments to this Bill. I suggest that the principle involved in this grouping of amendments is one that should certainly be acceptable to government Members. The principle is one that they used as the basis for a good deal of their campaign in the last election. It is the principle of accountability combined with the principle of the right of the public to know, the principle of open Government. We heard a great many of those phrases in the few months prior to the election. We have not seen a great deal of result since the election on September 4.

The Conservative Party has a legacy of which I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker. Before I came into the House I was very much aware of the fight that was put up by Ged Baldwin leading the campaign for freedom of information. That whole movement was initiated in the early 1960s by Barry Mather, a New Democrat from British Columbia. It certainly achieved a great deal of prominence under Mr. Baldwin. In the last Parliament, the late Hon. Walter Baker carried on that struggle for freedom of information. The whole principle of open Government was something we heard espoused time and again by Conservative Members when they were sitting on the Opposition side.

When the testimony was being presented before the committee on this Bill, the former commissioner of FIRA, Mr. Gorse Howarth, testified that very often the present legislation respecting the Foreign Investment Review Agency left no option but to keep everything concealed and hidden. Secrecy was built into the law. That was one of the unfortunate drawbacks of the present legislation. Unfortunately, the previous Government built that in. One criticism business often made of that legislation was that it felt that it was before some sort of star chamber. Mr. Howarth pointed out that there has been no change, that the criticism that people made of the present FIRA legislation also applies to the legislation respecting Investment Canada. What was required to be secret and hidden under the FIRA legislation will also be required to be secret and hidden under the present legislation. We want to see that opened up, as I am sure many Members opposite would like to see.

We all recognize that there is a need for business confidentiality. If business is going to operate, it has to be able to do so with the knowledge that not everything it does will be on the front page of the paper or in the business section of The Globe and Mail the next day. The whole concept of business confidentiality can be abused, very much like we have seen an abuse of the concept of national security or Cabinet security.

I will give an example from my own riding. Last year people in that area were very concerned about the export of raw logs from our area. I applied under the Freedom of Information Act to obtain details about these exports. I tried to find out where these raw logs were going, what volume was involved, and what prices were being paid. I was not able to get that information. The answer I received was that to reveal that kind of detail would destroy the concept of business confidentiality, that it would undermine the competitiveness of the companies involved.

We were concerned with the export of basic resources from this country to another country. These resources were being exported with no processing at all. We were receiving the minimum benefit, yet we could not get information about what was happening because of the concept of business confidentiality. That has been carried too far. Certainly the present legislation carries it too far.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) spoke about the need for performance accountability and the need for that accountability to be made public. If a company comes into Canada, obtains a corner of a key sector of our economy, promises a certain number of jobs, makes a commitment about the research and development it will be performing in Canada and a commitment about Canadian purchasing, those commitments should be made public so that the people understand the kind of commitments that are being made. Following the investment, there should be a monitoring process, the results of which should be made public. In other words, there has to be built-in accountability. We cannot presume that every dollar of investment that comes into Canada will automatically result in some good for the Canadian economy.

Getting back to the whole concept of business confidentiality, it is important to note that several of the amendments contain clauses that allow specific areas to be protected if the whole question of confidentiality is required. We want full public disclosure of company commitments involved in takeovers of Canadian business.

I want to make a few comments on the right of the public to know. It is not simply an abstract virtue, something that we say is nice, kind of a frill and, if at all possible, the public should have the right to know. In a democracy the right of the public to know is fundamental. Democracy depends upon an informed electorate. Indeed, it depends upon informed legislators and an informed Opposition. Unless the legislators and the Opposition have access to information, they are not going to be able to deal in an informed way with the problems that face us.

We live in a world of managed media news. A good deal of what passes for news is really nothing more than a staged photo opportunity. We see a lot of managed media rather than substantive reporting. Every so often an issue arises where the public insists upon having the truth, where it wants to know, where it is not satisfied with merely a glossy photo on the front page. In those situations where people are prepared to do the digging, they should be able to get the facts. That is why we want these amendments adopted. They would make the facts available. They will not always make the front pages of the newspapers, but the facts will be available for those who want them.

In conclusion, as I see you are giving me the sign to wind up, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize to Members opposite that they campaigned on the need for open Government. The Government has that mandate now. As it brings this legislation before the public, let us insist that written into it is the kind of guarantees we need so we can do our job, and that the public needs so that it can stay informed and make a responsible decision at the time of the next election.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Frith: Hear, hear!

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I suppose I should thank the Hon. Member for his encouragement.

Today we are debating Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75. In speaking to these motions, I would like to remind Hon. Members that their purpose is to provide a balance in the tremendous powers that have been given to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) under this Bill. In light of the powers given to the Minister, these amendments are concerned with the publication of information and access to information. This would provide some balance to the powers of the Minister under this Bill.

I would like to remind the House of the powers of the Minister. Under the Investment Canada Bill, as opposed to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, final authority is to be vested in the Minister rather than in the Cabinet, and no provision for appeal to higher authority is formally stated. Therefore, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is given discretionary power to decide by himself whether or not a foreign investment in Canada should be accepted. How can there be any justification for putting in the hands of a single Minister the power to make the final decision on such important investments for Canada? Any amount of money, be it $500 million or $100 million, could be involved. As has been pointed out by previous speakers on behalf of our Party, the Cabinet has totally relinquished its responsibilities under this legislation.

These amendments propose to provide the balance of which I spoke earlier. They speak to the need for greater openness about the process and about the results of reviews of the acquisitions undertaken under this legislation.

The amendments before us today have been proposed by Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party, and many of them are similar to amendments we proposed in other motions. These amendments are all supported by the Liberal Party with the caveat that those who are directly affected by them should be allowed to make the case that commercially valuable information would, if released, damage their business in a measurable way.

I would like to refer specifically to several of these motions. First, Motion No. 8 would amend Clause 5 which deals with the duties and powers of the Minister to carry out research and analysis relating to domestic and international investment, and it simply states that the Minister should make public this research and analysis where not expressly prohibited by federal legislation. There really should be no unwillingness to accept this kind of an amendment. We are not talking about confidential information in the possession of any company. We are not talking about business information. We are simply talking about research and analysis which will have been conducted by the Minister or by the agency under the authority of this legislation.

Motion No. 12 provides for similar disclosures. Again, under this legislation, the Minister must ensure that notification and review of investments are carried out in accordance with the Act. Again this appears in Clause No. 5. Motion No. 12 would add a further subclause (g) under which the Minister would be obliged to regularly compile and make public information, where not expressly prohibited by federal legislation, pertaining to the performance of Canadian businesses owned and controlled by non-Canadians.

One of the important reasons for having a requirement of this nature was brought up during the course of the committee hearings by the Chairman of the Science Council of Canada, Dr. Stuart Smith, who proposed an amendment to the Act which would allow the Government to review foreign takeover bids for Canadian enterprises that have received over $100,000 of federal money for research and development in the preceding five years. This amendment which was proposed was, as I understand it, defeated in committee and was ruled out of order by the Speaker as being outside of the four corners of the Bill.

I think it makes sense that takeovers in situations where companies have received substantial assistance from the Canadian taxpayer for research and development be subject to review. Indeed, when this suggestion was made there were comments from the private sector which indicated that when companies have undertaken research and development without any assistance from the taxpayer there is no reason, other than a moral reason, that they should be accountable to the Canadian public. However, when such assistance has been furnished by the Canadian taxpayer, it seems eminently reasonable that such takeovers should be subject to review.

As I mentioned previously, this amendment was not accepted in committee. However, Motion No. 12 which is now before us would oblige the Minister to compile and make public information pertaining to the performance of Canadian businesses owned and controlled by non-Canadians, and this information would of course be compared with information regarding the performance of Canadian businesses owned and controlled by Canadians. This would give Canadians the opportunity to review the performance of foreign-owned companies as opposed to Canadian-owned companies in the area of research and development.

Another amendment we are debating today is contained in Motion No. 63. I was very interested to hear the remarks made earlier by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). He said that the previous Government was just as secretive as we are accusing the present Government of being. I would simply point out that the amendment in Motion No. 63 indicates that the Minister should make public his ruling, including all undertakings made in connection with the investment.

I have with me a sample undertaking from a firm which made an acquisition under the auspices of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Several years ago, a certain company acquired control of a Canadian company. At the time the acquisition was announced, it was announced that the foreign company had undertaken to expend certain amounts of money for the purchase of plant and equipment, to export actively a certain percentage of its sales, and to give the Canadian-owned company a mandate to export a line of products world-wide. There is no guarantee in that type of undertaking that those undertakings will be made public under the present legislation. However, if this motion is accepted, they will be made public.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat certain points which have been made with respect to the motions which are before the House because I do not believe that they can be made too often. The motions deal with the need for a greater openness about the results and the reviews of the acquisitions which are undertaken.

I am concerned about the effects which foreign takeover will have on certain areas of the country, especially those areas which are underdeveloped and more vulnerable than others. In particular, I am referring to Atlantic Canada and my province of Newfoundland.

As the Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson) will know, a group of people appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry yesterday who spoke about an area in which private enterprise is very vulnerable. I am concerned that foreign companies will be allowed to come in holus-bolus to any area of Canada and take over companies in areas in which Canadian companies are struggling for survival.

While the fishery is in a very difficult situation in Newfoundland, it is the small private companies about which I am concerned. I am glad to see that the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette) is in the House today, because he will know from my remarks that it is the small fishing companies in Newfoundland which have survived and done very well. It is the larger companies in Newfoundland which have not done very well. I am afraid that foreign companies will come into Newfoundland, without reference to Newfoundlanders, and take over companies in a holus-bolus fashion. This Bill gives the Minister the right to let that happen without reference to Parliament or Cabinet. There is no requirement for consultation. A foreign company can come in, in the dead of night, and take over an operation in which a small-businessman is struggling to survive.

The Bill may make some sense in principle, but certain aspects of it require a closer look. One of the amendments which is before the House asks for consultation with people in the underdeveloped regions. There is nothing in the Bill to target foreign investment. A foreign company from any country could suddenly decide to invest in Canada. That company will go to the area which has the best prospects. There should be an incentive, target or carrot in the Bill to lure investment into the areas of Canada which need investment the most. There is nothing in this Bill that does that. There is nothing in the Bill that indicates that investment should be made, for example, in Atlantic Canada or Labrador. I would like to see that provision in the Bill.

Returning to the point which I made earlier, apart from not having a carrot, incentive or provision to target the investment, there is no provision for consultation with existing businesses and the people who work in those businesses. There should be consultation with existing business groups, chambers of commerce, unions or other groups which will be directly affected. There should be consultation with local communities. As well, there should be a provision for existing Canadian firms, if they so desire, to take advantage of the opportunity which a foreign firm identifies. Of course, that would be done without any prejudice to the foreign firm.

The situation in Newfoundland is quite critical. Newfoundland has the highest rate of unemployment and the highest cost of living in Canada. Government cut-backs are having a disastrous effect on many people in Newfoundland, both the workers and the consumers. For example, the increase in ferry rates is having a detrimental effect. The trade which existed between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland will be affected by that increase. Those cut-backs are having a disastrous effect on the economy of that area.

First, I believe that there should be safeguards to protect existing Canadian business and workers. There should be a provision for consultation with Canadians before a decision is made by the Minister to allow a foreign company to invest in Canada. Second, there should be a provision for targeting. Previously, there were provisions for targeting. As a matter of fact, part of the mandate of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was to do that. The mandate of that Minister was to enhance, develop and promote regional development in Canada. That was the original principle behind DREE. However, DREE has been replaced by DRIE. Some people refer to it as "Canada DRIE". Some people say that DREE has dried up. It has dried up in Newfoundland, because DRIE was primarily for manufacturing, and Newfoundland, like many western provinces, has a resource-based economy.

Part of the mandate of the Minister is to target investment and to give incentives to companies, whether they be Canadian or foreign, to set up their businesses in underdeveloped areas. This Government has already implemented certain measures which have militated against that kind of development. For example, the cut-backs in government programs and the changes in unemployment insurance regulations will have that kind of effect.

I would like to mention PIP grants. When the Liberal Government was in power it told the oil companies, whether they were foreign or Canadian, that if they drilled and explored in a certain area they would be given a certain amount of money, provided that jobs were created for Canadians, that Canadian goods and materials were used and that Canadian companies had a chance to bid. There had to be some benefit to Canada. That was the principle behind PIP grants. However, PIP grants have been done away with. So far, nothing has been established to replace those grants. There may something in the Budget. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) may tell us that he will give tax breaks to companies which explore in the offshore. However, the policy which gave investors assistance, if there was Canadian content and a benefit to Canadian companies and workers, has been abolished.

I am seeing evidence of the removal of the existing incentives to Canadian companies, of benefits for Canadian workers and of the existing provisions for Canadian content. I think they must be highlighted in this Bill. We are telling the Minister that amendments are required to improve the Bill on behalf of Canadians, and in particular on behalf of the Canadians who live in underdeveloped parts of the country.

In conclusion I do want to emphasize again that I think the Government and the Minister should take the points I have made into account. I think the appropriate amendments should be made to this Bill before it comes to us for final approval.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my comments this afternoon to the proposed seven amendments with respect to Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, and in particular to the amendments which reflect the desire of the Opposition to have divulgence of information or, as the Opposition likes to say, to make it a more open Bill. I would like to address my comments to the intent of the Opposition in asking for the kind of information contained in the seven amendments.

Essentially, the amendments seek, through various ways, to open up Investment Canada so that the Minister will be forced or empowered to release a great deal of information which, I think, on the face of it, is highly unfair to business in Canada and to those non-Canadians who come to our country to invest. It all sounds very good. The Opposition talks about open Government and about giving the ordinary Canadian the ability to look into those companies. But it is highly irregular for a Government to do what the Opposition would like our Government to undertake. On the one hand, it is suggested that Government demand information, some rather commercially sensitive information. As Hon. Members who are in business would know, that kind of information would affect a company's competitive position and investment capability. The Opposition would like the Government, through this Bill, to divulge that information openly to the public. What is so unfair is the burden which this places on the Government, which would first have to ask for it and then turn around and open it up to anyone in Canada who would like to see the information, even information which would be commercially sensitive.

I will isolate three motions as examples: Motions Nos. 8, 12 and 63, which were proposed by the New Democratic Party. Motion No. 8 asks to make public the results of agency research. It sounds noble on the face of it, but if one looks a little more closely, one finds that there would arise, in any agency research through the examination process, confidential information. That would only be natural if the agency research were done to a respectable standard. The New Democratic Party would ask that that information be made public, and I believe I speak on behalf of all businesses when I say they would be very strongly against operating in the kind of environment where, on the one hand, we encourage investment which will open up Canadian jobs, opportunity and economic growth, and on the other hand we say, "Well, the agency has done some research, has uncovered some confidential material and now anyone in Canada can come and take a look at it". I think that is very unfair.

Motion No. 12 asks for the agency to compile and publish information about the performance of foreign-owned companies, again, with typical New Democratic Party fervour. To examine these foreign-owned companies sounds very noble, on the face of it, and when one looks at the role which we see for Investment Canada, one finds that, of course, within reason, there will be the release of statistics and information which will be relevant to the different industries which are involved. The implication in the wording of this motion that the performance of a company is going to be monitored for some purpose—the purpose is unstated in this motion—and it is told that it has to fulfil certain criteria, is something to which I addressed myself earlier. What I told the New Democratic Party then, and I must now repeat, is that in my home Province of Saskatchewan we looked at the nationalization of the potash mines and the role which the state plays to such a great extent in the lives of business people, and found out what that does to the psychology of investment. The Government should deal realistically and openly with the people, hoping to become part of their economy. The people should not think that their Government does not really trust them. Their Government should not act as if it does not give the average man and woman investor in this country enough credit for their ability to know what is good for the operation of their company within the safeguards of our Bill as it stands.

Motion No. 63, Mr. Speaker, is another New Democratic motion. I do not know why I chose three New Democratic motions, except that they seem to be the most hopelessly off-base of the package. This particular motion requires the publication of decisions and undertakings. Again it sounds so noble in all the idealistic and rather naive fervour of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Riis: You don't have open Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: There's not one of them that's ever met a payroll.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Gormley: The Minister says that not one of the New Democratic Party Members ever met a payroll, and I think that this is a very accurate statement to those who follow this political Party's attempts in this House. Undertakings will sometimes contain or reveal commercially sensitive information. I think that is self-evident. An undertaking by anyone who is dealing with Investment Canada, by its very nature, will contain commercially sensitive information.

I would like to look now at Motion No. 63 and perhaps address my concerns in a little broader way about the communication and disclosure which is a part of this Bill by its very nature. For example, Motion No. 63 asks that somehow the decisions and undertakings be publicized. Originally, in Bill C-15 there was no prohibition on the disclosure of decisions or of information contained in written undertakings in a lot of cases. This will ensure that the public can be informed, and the Government has already shown that it means to disclose the information in cases where there is a public interest, such as, for example, in connection with the recent Chevron-Gulf and Texaco Canadian reserve cases where details of the undertakings were in fact made public. Again, if we go back to what Bill C-15 attempts to do, we find that safeguards are already evident, as well as the important measure of accountability.

It has been said by some Hon. Members of this House, in addressing their thoughts to accountability, that the Bill does not make the Government accountable. If I can refer members of the Opposition to Clause 44 of the Bill, they will find that accountability is spelled out. This ministerial accountability will empower the Minister to prepare a report on the operations under this Act to be laid before each House of Parliament. Rather clearly, this clause has the Minister explaining to the committee and to the House of Commons the functioning of Investment Canada.

I have not been very political up to now, Mr. Speaker, on the way this Bill has passed through this House to date. But I think what should be on the record at this point is the performance of the opposition Parties in the plethora of motions which have been moved, the taking up of so much valuable time of this House of Commons and the level of debate which has gone on to this point. Debate on second reading of this Bill lasted 16.5 hours. This particular Bill was in committee for 40 hours where all seven of these motions were dealt with in some form. Now the Bill is at the report stage and we have been in debate for over 18 hours. I would like to say that these motions as proposed would simply reduce to the most distrustful terms the way that Government encourages business in Canada. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I speak strongly against these motions.

● (1650)

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today on behalf of my Party to speak about an extremely important matter. What propelled me to this House with such haste to ask my colleagues whether I could speak out of the normal order was the opportunity I had to listen to the speech on television of the Hon. Member who preceded me. He talked about—

Ms. McDonald: A lot of drivel.

Mr. Skelly: My collleague from Broadview-Greenwood says "A lot of drivel".

Mr. Gormley: She would.

Mr. Skelly: Unfortunately, I have to agree with her. For those who think this debate is not serious we should examine the facts. This Bill proposes to sell out Canada and do it in secret. I am appalled at what I see across the floor of this House.

Mr. Siddon: You guys have destroyed the country.

Mr. Skelly: I have worked many hours in committee with many of those people across the floor. We have battled together to condemn the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government for exactly the same kind of thing that the legislation before us today is trying to prevent: honesty in government. It took the Liberal Party of Canada 50 years to reach the low level they had reached in this country. We all remember the attempts to get information in this House. There are Members across the floor who have been here since 1979 and we fought together to try to extract information that was impossible to get. I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) smiling. He fought those battles as well. Members across the floor screamed loudly about patronage when the Liberal Party sank to depths we just could not comprehend. In the dying days of the last Parliament it was nothing less than disgusting. The amendments before us today are an attempt to stop that from happening in another agency of this Government. It is a sad situation when the Conservative Party starts at the low depth at which the Liberal Party ended up, and it is going down faster.

I will give you one example of what I think will happen with this and other agencies while this Party is in power. This is definitely not a humorous matter; it is a matter which is extremely serious. We have seen the appointments to Air Canada, VIA Rail and other government boards which are nothing less than disgusting examples of Tory patronage. We know we will never see a shred of information, that we will have to do things that the Conservatives, when they were in opposition, never thought of in order to get the kind of information we need to have from this Government. The Conservative Party of Canada did itself a great disservice in making some of these patronage appointments, and I suggest they have reached new depths of which the Liberal Party never even conceived.

To give you another example, and it is probably as nasty and ugly as any we would want to see, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) decided to give a $5 million grant to three Conservative organizers. Essentially she said, "You can spend one third of it, or approximately a third, let's not dicker about numbers", and with undignified haste they began to put that money in their pockets. That money is not going to unemployed Canadians on the coast of British Columbia, it is going into their pockets. We suspect this has become a vehicle for handing out money to people who had served the Conservative Party. This situation, we understand, was not the fault of the Minister of Employment and Immigration; it was the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) who had advised her to do that. We then see three prominent Conservative organizers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to know which clause the Hon. Member is speaking to, which one this is relevant to, if he does not mind?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the clause is in Motion No. 8, that this Bill be amended in Clause 5—I hear my friends from the Conservative Party laughing and giggling. I think they must be new Members because they do not realize that at one time we fought together on this issue. But it was false morality, strictly political stunts, and today they have gone too far.

These amendments before us deal specifically with open Government, honesty, access by Members of Parliament to information, and I suggest that from the examples of withholding information, the hard and blatant patronage we have seen, this is clearly relevant and an example of the manner in which this Government will be operated.

We remember the example of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) flying across the country and talking about Liberal patronage. He joked about it, much the same way his colleagues here said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I really think the Hon. Member should get back to the clause, if he does not mind, either Clause 8, Clause 12 or the many other clauses he can speak to. I do not think that what he is saying is really relevant.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, if the business of patronage is not relevant, if honesty is not relevant, if openness and fairness in government is not relevant, I do not know what purpose any of us are serving here. These clauses basically deal with those types of questions, and I tell you as honestly as I can that the Minister of Employment and Immigration yesterday in this House, in attempting to deal with those issues, completely misled the House. It strikes me that if the Government is not prepared to address that issue, this whole thing should be put forward to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and we should get to the bottom of it so that some kind of justice is done here.

The clauses before us would move us forward to more honesty in government. There would be less patronage. It strikes me that for the House not to pass these clauses would be absolutely astounding. I am absolutely astounded at the hypocrisy in the Conservative Party, a Party which fought in this House against patronage, the dishonest handing out of taxpayers' dollars and applying them to purposes which are completely unacceptable. Then we have the situation where a Minister can stand up and say with some pride that she is giving money out in this fashion on the recommendation of other senior Cabinet Ministers. I am completely astounded that that kind of thing would happen. For a Government and a Minister of the Crown to mislead the House in her statements is completely astounding.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is one of those afternoons when we have had a number of lectures from distinguished Members of this House, and I want to continue that by going back over a little bit of history. Some of those who are academically inclined would recall that in the United States during the 19th century there was a political Party called the Know Nothing Party. That Party was characterized primarily by the answer it gave to every question, which was, "We don't want to know anything about that". Well, Canada has once again duplicated in all its glory the American pattern with our own Know Nothing Party, otherwise known as the Government of Canada.

From time to time we have heard statements made by members of the governing caucus. In answer to questions for information their basic response is that it is better if Canadians do not know what is happening to them. There is no point in having information, understanding what is going on, or trying to analyse the impact of foreign investment. They want to ensure that the people do not know. They tell us to trust in them, have faith, and believe. That is all right if you are in church, but we are in Parliament. Parliament expects a reasoned, rational approach to public policy dependent upon useful information and, more particularly, information that will ultimately hold members of the executive accountable for their actions.

In the Investment Canada Bill the most serious investment they are talking about is the investment of the Minister responsible with the most extraordinary powers ever given to a Minister under any statute ever passed by this Parliament. He is accountable to no one for any of it. He will be responsible for billions of dollars of investment decisions and no one will know why, how, who, or what the exact result will be. One wonders if the Conservative Members of Parliament realize the kind of power they are giving to their Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. If I were a Member of Parliament from Quebec I would be a little concerned. We saw how sensitive he was to the concerns of Quebec with regard to Domtar because he had arbitrary powers. They should be equally concerned that this Minister has full and total responsibility for making decisions and that he reports to no one. Yet they argue time and again that they do not want to know. I guess if you are a member of a know-nothing Party, that sounds reasonable. They feel that perhaps they can slide it by and no one will notice what the Minister is doing. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it is not that easy.

We have seen time and again that decisions by foreign investors sometimes have a devastating impact upon communities, workers and industries. The case of Canadian General Electric was raised in the House this week. The parent company in the United States imposed requirements upon its subsidiary basically to strip the company to improve the dividend performance of the parent company. The parent company said that if the subsidiary did not do that, it would shut it down or sell it off.

Under the Investment Canada Bill it will be increasingly hard to get information about those kinds of decisions. We introduced amendments in the last grouping which were turned down, amendments that attempted to make the Minister accountable. At this stage we are giving the Minister an incredible amount of power and putting a veil of secrecy around those decisions to ensure that Canadians will not know what the impact will be.

I would like to point out another very telling case, Mr. Speaker. Time and again we were told before the committee that there is a substantial difference between the performance of foreign-owned companies and that of Canadian-owned companies. That was not socialist propaganda or Liberal mythology. We heard that from the Conference Board, from the Science Council and from reputed research organizations, which said that foreign investors import a much higher range of components from their parent companies, therefore substantially impacting upon our balance of payments. It is also true that subsidiaries of foreign-owned companies are not allowed to export or compete against their parent company. It is also true that subsidiaries of foreign-owned companies do not provide nearly the same amount of research and development.

If those suppositions and representations have any element of truth to them, Mr. Speaker, the Government that is responsible for the economy of the country should be prepared to do the analysis and intelligence and to provide the information to determine what the impact of foreign-owned investment in the country should be. It should also be prepared to share that information with Parliament so that all legislators would know it in case of need for remedial legislation or for a response.

If the Government is saying that the great panacea to our economic condition in Canada is wide open foreign investment, then logically Parliament should be able to determine in the future whether that hypothesis is correct. At least the Government should be willing to put its hypothesis to a test. If members of the Government are as firmly convinced as they say they are that wide open foreign investment is the answer, then why are they afraid to have that information shared with Parliament so that in a year or two they can be called to account?

Mr. Frith: Because they are know-nothings.

Mr. Axworthy: Because they are know-nothings, and furthermore, I suspect that they do not have the courage of their convictions. I think they are chicken. Otherwise they would agree to the amendments that have been brought forward by the Liberal and New Democratic caucuses asking for further information so that we can hold them to the test and determine whether their blind faith and true belief in the miraculous solution of foreign investment pans out. They are not prepared to live up to the faith they have placed in their commitments. They are not prepared to do the intelligence or allow Investment Canada to publish that information for the benefit of Members of Parliament and the public.

I can only conclude that they know something that the rest of us know, even though they are not prepared to admit it, that is, that foreign investment is not the economic answer to what ails Canada. The answer must be found within Canada, through Canadian investment and Canadian growth. It is embarrassing for all Canadians when the Government says that it must rely on foreigners to solve our economic problems. It is churlish of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to preach that someone else must provide the solutions to our economic ills.

Time and again, as the Government has rejected amendment after amendment, we have seen that it is not prepared to provide improvement to this Bill which would encourage further enhancement of Canadian investment or to hold the Minister accountable for his actions. It is not prepared to provide information to Parliament that would determine whether foreign investment is working. It is are not prepared to support amendments that would give Canadians the right to ensure that the technology and investment which takes place here will be worth-while and beneficial to Canadian workers. It is providing us with a know-nothing solution. It is asking Canadians to act on faith and belief. Mr. Speaker, its theology is faulty and its faith is lacking. That is why the Opposition intends to continue to oppose this Bill and why our Party supports these amendments.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to respond to some of the comments made by some of my colleagues in the Conservative Party this afternoon. We in the New Democratic Party feel very strongly that we do not have to look to foreigners to solve our problems. We do not have to look to Hong Kong to solve the economic and social problems in our country. We have faith in Canadian investors. We have faith in Canadian businesses. Given the right leadership and opportunities from the federal and provincial Governments, we can create the economic climate and expansion, and therefore the jobs, to put the 1.5 million unemployed people back to work in our country. We have faith in Canadians.

This Investment Canada Bill says that the Government does not have faith in Canadians. The Conservatives are saying that they want to make it easy for foreign investors and business people to come to Canada because they do not have faith in Canadians to do the job. The fact that there is more foreign control of our economy than in virtually any country in the world is overlooked. This Bill displays almost a religious zeal that is built on the assumption that making it easier for foreigners to come into our country will automatically make life in Canada better.

In the last number of months I recall many of my colleagues standing in the House holding letters written from the head offices of foreign corporations based in the United States, Japan and Europe directing their branch plants operating in Canada not to do any research and development in Canada. This is taking place at a time when research and development in our country is of paramount importance. Yet the directive to branch plants in Canada was not to participate or make expenditures in research and development because it is being done in Dallas, Texas, Frankfurt, Tokyo, Hong Kong or Singapore. We do not want to see a situation in Canada where firms are encouraged not to participate in research and development into new product lines and economic activity.

A second directive that has been quoted time and again by Members of the House has been for the branch plants of foreign head offices not to participate in export development or try to sell the goods they are producing to another country. Again, that is the job of the parent corporation. At the time when we need more export development, export opportunities and more research and development, the provisions of this Bill will prohibit that development. It is almost a guarantee that firms within Canada will not participate in research and development and the creation of export opportunities.

Government Members are declaring that this Bill will help business in Canada. I recall listening to bankers when they appeared before the committee. These were domestic bankers from schedule A banks, schedule B banks as well as foreign bankers. They were asked if this Bill will result in a significant amount of additional investment in Canada. Their answer was no. They said that in their estimation the Foreign Investment Review Agency did not really stop any investment of any substance in Canada. I am not talking about fly-by-night operators who want to come in and rip off the system for a short term without having to go through all the hassle, but legitimate firms who wanted to come to Canada to make a long-term investment in an operation. They were quite prepared to demonstrate to the FIRA officials that in fact their development in Canada would be for the benefit of Canadians.

I am most surprised when I hear government Members saying that they will vote against these motions of the NDP and the Liberal Parties. These thoughtful motions from our two caucuses are simply asking that more information be made public. Government Members are saying that they do not want that to happen. They want to impose a veil of secrecy over this operation. They do not want to obtain and provide information to parliamentarians that would demonstrate what the role of a foreign corporation is in our country. They do not want those firms operating in Canada to demonstrate how they are benefiting Canadians in the Canadian economy.

If this discussion were taking place eight months ago when the Conservative Members were in opposition, I suggest that they would be standing up one after the other ranting and raving, screaming and shouting, ringing the bells and stopping votes because of the dictatorial powers that this Bill gives the Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Expansion.

The other day we saw the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion hand out tens of millions of dollars to a central Canadian corporation because he felt that it was the appropriate thing to do. This Bill gives more powers than we have seen given to any other Minister responsible for an economic portfolio in this country.

While I might have a lot of faith in the present Minister, I am not certain that any Minister of the Crown should have these incredible powers to make economic decisions as though he were being given the divine right to decide on the future of what corporations and what type of economic development would be in the best interests of our country.

When listening to witnesses who appeared before the committee, Mr. Howarth, a former FIRA commissioner, made a presentation. Let me read a few of his words about the whole matter of secrecy. He said:

> The most telling criticism, certainly the most telling criticism as far as I was concerned, was that the whole process was conducted in secrecy. People used words like 'Star Chamber' and this, that, and the other. And of course it was imputed that the government wanted to do it in that way and the agency wanted to do it in that way and cover up their own misdeeds and so on and so on. The truth of the matter is that the way Parliament wrote that law, the government and the agency had no choice but to keep virtually everything concealed and hidden.

This FIRA commissioner went on to say:

> As far as I can see, that is going to happen under the proposed new law, as it is now written. The requirements for confidentiality are no less stringent. Virtually all the information which was classified by Parliament under the Foreign Investment Review Act as privileged is classified as privileged under the proposed new Act. And if that is indeed to be the pattern, then Parliament and the government and the agency and everyone can expect, sooner or later, after the first blush of happiness and so on has gone, that there will be the same kind of criticism that this whole process is being conducted in a secretive manner. There will be more criticism, perhaps, because this government, as I understand it, is committed to making things more open to the public.

I think the people of Canada understood that the Government was committed to making the proceedings of Government more open and accessible to the public; that it was going to allow the public to see the inner workings of the system.

This new Act, as reflected in the words of a former commissioner, is making things as secret if not more secret. Surely that is the motivation behind the presentation of these motions which we are discussing. They would shed some light on those activities so that the public could see what is happening. Presumably the Government has nothing to hide about how it will deal with corporations under this new Act. Surely the firms that will be operating in Canada from foreign bases will be acting in an honourable way. That is what we want to see.

In closing let me say that if we as parliamentarians are going to be responsible, it would be very naive of us to assume that the operations of a foreign based corporation in our country will be in our best interests. When one sees what the petrochemical companies have done to our river system and our environment generally, one finds that it is one of many examples of corporations that have not acted in the best interest of Canada and Canadians but only in the best interest of their shareholders.

Looking at the track record I suspect that foreign-based firms are the greatest culprits. All that we are asking in these motions is to be more open and to let Canadians have an opportunity to see the activities of these corporations in Canada. Surely, in the spirit of openness and freedom of speech, that is not an unreasonable request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). It is my understanding that Motions Nos. 8, 12, 32, 63, 69, 74 and 75 are grouped. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded divisions on the proposed group of motions stand deferred.

● (1720)

The next grouping is Motions Nos. 19 and 20.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 12 to 14 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"the Minister in exercising his powers under this Act, to secure notifications and conduct reviews of investments by non-Canadians under this Act, and provide to other relevant federal departments and agencies information about means to stimulate investment by Canadians in Canada."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motion No. 20 is to be moved by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). He is not here. Could I have unanimous consent to have the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) move Motion No. 20 for the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor? Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We are debating Motion No. 19.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to have a clarification on the proceedings. We were intending to debate Motions Nos. 19 and 20 together. Is it your ruling that we are not now doing that because unanimous consent was not given?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We cannot propose Motion No. 20 because the Hon. Member is not in the House and unanimous consent was not given. That is correct.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would you clarify for me exactly, because I am not certain about the interchange you had with the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Is the result of it that Motion No. 20 will now be lost?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I am afraid so. It cannot be proposed. It was grouped together with Motion No. 19, but it cannot be proposed because the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is not in the Chamber. We are now debating Motion 19.

Mr. Skelly: My I ask one further thing, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, you may.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, there have been other occasions when Ministers and other Members of the House have requested this type of permission and it has gone forward without too many problems. I am quite surprised that members of the Conservative Party would not recognize this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate that. Any Minister can act for any other Minister because they have collegiality.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on the same point of order? I just intervene because in watching the proceedings I was not sure what the actual indication was from Members opposite. I understood that they were prepared to give unanimous consent to having the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) move Motion No. 20 for the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). At least in terms of the indulgence of the House, you might want to take that sounding again. Maybe we could clarify the matter and eliminate something of a procedural wrangle.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that when we asked for unanimous consent—and I am talking to an old professional, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), and I know I will get his attention—it was in the spirit of proceeding more rapidly. When we ask for special permission from time to time we have a tendency to say no, and that is it. May I just make an appeal to our colleagues? We have three and a half years to go and there may be other times when the Government may want to ask for permission—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Dick).

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that, by all means, our Party will be happy to give unanimous consent in this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for Motion No. 20 to be moved by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River on behalf of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River) (for Mr. Langdon) moved:

Motion No. 20

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 6 by adding immediately after line 14 at page 5 the following:

"(2) The Agency shall have the power to ask for policy directives from the Governor-in-Council as it deems necessary."

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is an historic moment in this young Parliament in that we are now working in the spirit of co-operation. I hope the spirit will carry over slightly longer and we might find some agreement on the amendments. Though I understand that will be a proposition that is a little tougher, I am quite prepared to try to make the case. I hope this amendment, the one that we are introducing in Motion No. 19, will speak for itself. Motion No. 19 is a motion that is fair, reasonable and provides to the Government a more accurate portrayal of its own intentions.

During the course of our committee hearings, there was one central theme that we heard from all private sector delegations. They wanted certainty. They wanted to make sure that the Bill as passed by the House would clearly enunciate what the actual objectives were, what the procedures would be and what the rules and responsibilities of the various players and partners would be.

If I were to make any criticism at all of our former FIRA legislation, there were from time to time certain areas of ambiguity about its deliberations. I think that quite honestly and for good reason the people who appeared before us said, "Give us a Bill that, in a very distinguishable way, ensures that when people read the Bill as passed by Parliament they will know what to expect".

I suggest that the amendment we are presenting is presented to meet that concern.

Clause 6 as it now stands, Mr. Speaker, reads:

There is hereby established an agency, to be known as Investment Canada, to advise and assist the Minister in exercising his powers and performing his duties under this Act.

What are those powers and duties? Nowhere in the Bill will you find an elaboration of what the Minister is supposed to do. Again we are transferring a very general, vague set of powers and duties which may be further elaborated by regulation but do not have the sanction of parliamentary statutory passage in this House.

Our amendment at least attempts to clarify in three important respects that the Minister is responsible and so is Investment Canada for advising on questions of notification and review. This will ensure that foreign investors will know what to expect. Second, as a bare minimum the Minister will be responsible for sharing information with his colleagues about how to stimulate investment in Canada by Canadians.

In a previous set of amendments, which unfortunately were ruled out of order, we provided eight or nine specific enumerations of what the ministerial powers and duties should be. However, in its wisdom the Chair felt that that was going beyond the scope of the Bill. These are accepted as being in order by the Chair. Therefore, I make the case that they do not interfere with the objectives of the Bill, but do in fact establish that this is still a Bill to review and notify on foreign investment.

I know that some Members opposite may want it otherwise, but you cannot camouflage the fact that there is still to be a review of foreign investment. It will be a weak review, it may be a non-influential review, but it is a review nonetheless. As a result, it is important once again that this be clearly established in the Bill. Perhaps more important, we say that part of the powers and duties of the Minister should be to share information, if not with Parliament, at least with other Departments and agencies so that they can complement decisions taken under Investment Canada with their own investment decisions.

One of the most important reponsibilities of any Government is to get its act together to co-ordinate the various actions of different Departments and agencies. That is not an easy thing to do, especially when you have 40 Ministers, almost one-third the Ministers in history. There is a requirement to bring those different Departments and agencies together in order to co-ordinate the various forms of investment that might be made by the Department of Transport, the Department of Supply and Services or the Department of Communications. We say in this Bill in particular that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion should be required to try to co-ordinate those investment plans that come about as a result of a decision he is taking under this Bill, to co-ordinate that with other Departments.

I make that case because of its importance for regional development. If, for example, a foreign investor is establishing here, because of the review provisions in this Act the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion should know that there may be some impact upon resource development in the Atlantic provinces. That would immediately affect the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State for Forestry. Surely we should try to bring those various Ministers together to get a total impact of that investment as opposed to having it happen separately in a discordant fashion.

I ask Members opposite what is wrong with that. Surely they are not going to argue that that kind of co-ordination, that sharing of information is somehow inimical to the interests of Canada and inimical to the interests of this Government. Equally, it may be that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion receives notification about a proposed take-over and that some other Minister is working on a proposal for a Canadian investor in the same region, in the same area. That Minister should also be informed of the intentions. It should redound upon the ultimate decision taken by the Minister responsible under this Act to refuse that application for a takeover or for some pre-acquisition.

I hope that the Conservative Members of this Parliament will understand that the amendment we are bringing forward in this case, Motion No. 19, is designed to ensure that any decision taken by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion will be compatible with Canadian investment opportunities and that we will not by his decision forgo or cancel out some activity by a Canadian investor or enterprise that would be put out of action by a foreign investor. Certainly that fits the objective of the Bill which, we say, is to encourage Canadian investment. I would assume that if there is to be an advantage or a priority, this Government will have to accept that the priority should be given to Canadian investment.

In the remarks I made a few minutes earlier, I pointed out that the evidence is conclusive that Canadian investment carries with it substantially higher economic benefits than does foreign investment in terms of research and development, export potential and less reliance upon imports from other countries. Therefore, we have a clear case. In weighing the balance, if there is some kind of judgment between the advantage of a Canadian investor and a foreign investor, the Canadian investor should have the priority. That will only happen if there is some sharing of information, which is what our amendment proposes.

If Hon. Members accept that basic proposition, they should support this amendment. We will give them enough time, certainly during the debate on this motion, to take it up in caucus, to consult with their Minister and perhaps come in with a willingness to show that they as a Government are prepared to say in a clear way that when it comes down to a choice, they are going to choose Canadians over foreigners, that they will clearly enunciate their belief that when it comes down to weighing the balance, it is Canadian investment that should have the priority. That is not to say that foreign investment will not be considered, but under this amendment we require the Minister under this Act to make sure that in the weighing of the balance the preference will clearly be on the side of Canadian investment and Canadian enterprise. With that, I recommend this amendment to the House. I look forward to its constructive response.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on both amendments. I think the grouping is reasonable. Together they make one very important point, that is, that the base of responsibility for the operation of the agency and the work of the Minister under this Act must be as wide as possible. Both these amendments have the effect of asking for that widening beyond what is provided by the Bill at present. That widening is needed not only so that the operation will be seen to be fair in a situation where there are competing interests and a possibility of the appearance of unfairness of any decision by any person or body, not only for the best chance of fairness and appearance of fairness, but also for effectiveness. I will come back to that with regard to the garment industry as I have become acquainted with it in Spadina.

Motion No. 20 proposes, and I quote:

The Agency shall have the power to ask for policy directives from the Governor in Council as it deems necessary.

This is the subsection that would be added. The first reads:

There is hereby established an agency, to be known as Investment Canada, to advise and assist the Minister in exercising his powers and performing his duties under this Act.

Our amendment would go on to say:

The Agency shall have the power to ask for policy directives from the Governor in Council as it deems necessary.

● (1740)

The point of that is very clear. Those who are appointed by the Minister in consultation with the Cabinet and anyone else with whom he chooses to consult must be people in whom he has confidence, and they in turn can exercise that confidence by requesting directives from the entire Cabinet and not exclusively from the Minister who, after all, has the limitation of being only one person, however capable a person he may be. In other words, this widens the base of accountability.

The motion put by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) provides that the agency will advise the Minister in exercising his powers under this Act to secure notifications and conduct reviews of investments by non-Canadians under this Act and provide to other relevant federal Departments and agencies information about means to stimulate investment by Canadians in Canada. That is a very important function. I do not think that function can be adequately exercised if, at a vital point, it has to be entirely and exclusively channelled through one person, however competent that person may be. The one Minister will still have the final responsibility for decisions, but there is a great deal that can and should go before that and a great deal that might come after that in the implementation of the decisions.

What is particularly critical here is the relationship to the investment by Canadians in Canada. Here I am referring to the purpose of this legislation as stated in Clause 2 which indicates that increased capital and technology would benefit Canada and that the purpose of the Act therefore is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians. In other words, this Bill is not only concerned with investment by non-Canadians but is concerned with investment by Canadians.

I suggest that investment by Canadians is more important than investment by non-Canadians. Canadians may have more money or less money than non-Canadians and they may have more ideas or fewer ideas than non-Canadians, but what they have is a sense of accountability to Canada and very often a superior knowledge of Canada. Therefore, I suggest that the principle must be to integrate investment by non-Canadians into investment by Canadians. For that to happen, there is a great need for consultation with the industry in which the investment may be made. That consultation should not take place through favouritism. There should not be consultation with only those who happen to have the ear of a particular Minister. That consultation should take place in a properly established and organized way that is accountable through the agency and whatever advisory groups or subcommittees the agency might establish.

In Spadina, there still exists a large and flourishing garment manufacturing industry. Some Hon. Members have heard me mention this before. What I have been told by a spokesman for that industry is that members of the industry are prepared to develop and modernize to a very considerable extent. They are not only interested in modernizing but they say they have the money to do so. They do not say that they can get the money from outside; they say that they have the money to introduce computer-guided technology and other modernizations into the industry. They have certain concerns about the security of their investment and those concerns relate to the Canadian market. They say that we do not need to give them money to develop the industry but that we just need to assure them of a reasonable share of the market for more than a year at a time.

Technological change in the garment industry is moving fast, whether it be in Canada or in other countries. Everyone agrees that Canada must keep pace with that movement. The people to make those changes should primarily be the Canadians who are now working in the industry. The people who could give the best advice about how investment by non-Canadians could be integrated into that industry are the Canadians who are now working in the industry. They would be able to give advice about just what kind of technology and training through our technical colleges is needed. They would be able to give advice about the production of the appropriate machinery and equipment for this technological development.

These people should have the assurance that they will be heard in an organized way. Therefore, there should be advisory structures developed, and the proper point of application for those structures would be the agency as envisaged here. However, the people who work in the industry must have the assurance that that agency will be able to make responsible use of the advice it receives. The final decision will still be in the hands of the Minister but the people in the industry will want to know that the agency is able to request advice from the Cabinet. They will want to know that the agency genuinely shares with the Minister the responsibility for securing notifications, conducting reviews and doing the other work that is necessary under this Act, and they will want to know that the agency will not simply be a rubber stamp.

One person, however capable, cannot provide the assurances to which I have referred because he cannot be instantaneously in touch with many representatives of many industries. Therefore, I urge the House to adopt these amendments in the interests not only of fair play but of effectiveness.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on behalf of the motion brought forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I believe it is a motion that goes quite far not only toward what we hope to achieve for purposes of better information service to the economy of the country but it can also have a very positive effect on the development and management of the regional development of this country.

I would like to deal with my first point which is the knowledge of what is going on in the economy of the country. We need this knowledge so that we can minimize the negative surprises we receive when companies pull out of the country and when jobs are taken away from branch plants and given to head offices in foreign countries. We need this knowledge to be able to communicate between Departments. I think it is of vital importance that this knowledge be increased and considered a routine procedure between government Departments. If it is not, there could be takeovers prompted and approved by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion that will have a very negative effect on the responsibilities of the Departments of Science and Technology and Energy, Mines and Resources.

For instance, a takeover could run completely contrary to what Canadians want to see happen, which is 50 per cent Canadianization of the oil and gas industry by 1990. This is a tremendously important aspect. If each government Department had the information that other Departments have, then we could better prevent such negative and sudden turns that are not considered beneficial to the Canadian economy.

As well, I would like to deal with the regional development aspect of this amendment. Here we have something that is a very positive by-product of this motion to amend Bill C-15. If Hon. Members are aware of the concept of regional development in other countries, they will know that regional development is not handled by a Department of the Government but quite often by the office of the Leader of the Government. The reason for this is that, through the Leader's office, a Government is better able to co-ordinate the concept of regional development. It is not left to a Department, with the vested interests of that Department, as is the case in Canada. The Leader, through his or her office, is able to co-ordinate with other Departments the activity of regional development. That is important, not only from the point of view of determining what a prospective investor would want and need to be able to carry on the work of the organization in that region, but conversely, it can also be used by the Government to plan the economic future of that region. The Government would be able to determine what that region required to be able to attract economic activity.

I see that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) is in the House today. I would like to tell him that the removal by his Government of the federal building in Sydney has had a very adverse effect on the economy of that area. The cancellation of the decentralization project of social income security from Halifax to Sydney—and Sydney has over 40 per cent unemployment—is taking jobs away from an area which needs those jobs. The Government is taking away jobs which could have been created instantaneously and which would have had a spiral effect in the community. The project would have provided an economic stimulus and it would have diversified the economy. It would have created business for hotels, motels, and transportation. It would have created an economic spinoff and put additional moneys in the economy if the decentralization offices had been moved to downtown Sydney. It would have created a stimulus for downtown restructuring in an area which badly needs the activity.

Had the Government considered the activities of all Departments before making those decisions, it would not have created the additional hardship in industrial Cape Breton which it has created. In addition, the Minister's Department has not followed through with downtown and harbour development in the City of Sydney, thereby making it less attractive to industries which would set up businesses in that city.

There is also a need to co-ordinate with provincial Governments as to what certain areas require. For instance, if an area has adequate school and hospital facilities, of course it will be much more attractive to regional and industrial development than an area which does not have those facilities. Those concepts should be thought out and co-ordinated. That is not being done by this Government nearly to the extent to which it was done by the last Government. The areas of regional disparity are slipping further and further behind the growth areas. It is a tragedy. If the downward slide can be caught with industrial and regional development, then the distance will be less to bring that area back to the Canadian norm and, more important, the level which we in Canada consider to be the level of economic development and life which we want to have in Canada.

More important than the disparity between regions is the disparity between people. In this technological age, because there has been no consideration given to planning and because of the lack of co-ordination between Departments, we do not know what employment opportunities will be provided to Canadians. There are thousands and thousands of young people who have given up hope of finding jobs. There is not even a make-work program into which they can fit. They are not coming off unemployment insurance and they are not employed. They are not disabled. They are young people who want to make a start. Because they have not had unemployment insurance benefits, they cannot qualify for grants because only people whose unemployment insurance has expired can receive them. It is a Catch-22 situation. It is very dangerous. We are dealing with the lives of Canadian citizens. To make it even worse, we are dealing with people who know what they have to offer to this country. We are snuffing out the possibilities and the hopes which young people have. With regard to other Canadians, we are snuffing out the possibility that they will be able to fit into the technological age and the job opportunities which will come from that. If we are not careful, the Government will create a society within a society—one society with possibilities and upward mobility and a second society without any hope of being able to be a part of what this country has to offer.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the two amendments to Clause 6 of Bill C-15. Clause 6 is important because it creates the agency which will be known as Investment Canada. The first amendment was moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and the second amendment was moved by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). They attempt to spell out in further detail what should be the powers and requirements of the agency.

The effect of the amendments will be to increase the scope of Investment Canada. Instead of being there only to advise and assist the Minister in exercising the directives which the Minister may set out, the amendment indicates that the agency shall assist:

> The Minister in exercising his powers under this Act, to secure notifications and conduct reviews of investments by non-Canadians under this Act, and provide to other relevant federal departments and agencies information about means to stimulate investment by Canadians in Canada.

The second amendment would further add to that clause by adding the following:

> (2) The Agency shall have the power to ask for policy directives from the Governor-in-Council as it deems necessary.

The first amendment would expand the scope of the agency and the second amendment would provide a certain amount of independence for the agency which would permit it to make recommendations to the Governor-in-Council or to Cabinet.

What do Canadians expect from Investment Canada? I think that it depends upon which Canadians you ask. The Government seems to be making this the flagship of its economic policy. It is the only economic change which has been proposed during the term of the Government thus far. It leads one to conclude that the problems of unemployment, high interest rates and getting the economy fully functioning again are being left by the Government to the tender mercies of foreign investors. The Government is putting everything in one basket and relying on foreign investment to bail the country out of its problems.

Is that realistic? I think not. I would like to continue when we next meet again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the Bill is before the House again, the Hon. Member will have the remaining six minutes in which to speak.

It being 6 p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

[English]

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 1, consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions No. 19 (Mr. Axworthy) (p. 4313) and No. 20 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4314).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, when my remarks were interrupted by the adjournment of the House last evening I was discussing the reason we need an agency to review foreign investment. Canadians ask themselves, very legitimately, if we want foreign investment which cannot meet the test of being of significant value to the Canadian economy, which the previous Bill required. I also mentioned that the Government seems to be putting great stock in this Bill as it is the first and only economic measure which it has proposed in an attempt to turn around the dreadful unemployment rate in Canada. The Government seems to be throwing the responsibility for job creation to the private sector. Regrettably, with the rhetoric we have heard concerning this Bill, the Government seems to be relying almost entirely on the foreign private sector to create jobs. It is time we asked ourselves if that makes sense. I suggest that it does not.

The Investment Dealers' Association of Canada has pointed out that more than 95 per cent of the investment needs of Canada can be met by internal sources. If the economy was functioning at full capacity, instead of the restricted capacity at which it is functioning now, the investment needs would be surplus to the amount of investment which Canada could absorb.

The Government seems to spend a great deal of time attempting to copy the example and policy of the United States. I think the Government has missed the very significant differences between the U.S. and Canadian economies.

First, the savings rate in Canada far exceeds the savings rate in the United States. The Canadian rate is double or triple that of the rate of savings in the United States. That is one of the reasons, which the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada has pointed out, that even with the depressed state of the economy Canadians can still raise over 95 per cent of Canada's investment capital.

A second significant difference between Canada and the U.S. is that the U.S. has had a trade deficit for the last four years and Canada has generated a trade surplus. Canada generates plenty of investment funds. It does not have to rely on foreign investment to get the economy moving.

If we look at the current account, we will see that for the first time in some months the Americans have a deficit. That tells us that the U.S. is beginning to rely on foreign investment, so much so there is beginning to be some question about the possibility of the U.S. being able to refinance its investment needs. In fact, most analysts have agreed that interest rates are so high in the United States because of the shortage of investment funds. The United States is hiking up interest rates and cannot attract money from outside.

I submit that Canada would make a great mistake if it followed that practice. Canada would end up charging more interest than it needs to, given the strong underpinnings of our economy. In short, the Government would be much better off concentrating on "made-in-Canada" interest rates in order to make use of the great amounts of money which are generated within Canada. If that were done, Canada could become self-sufficient in investment needs, and would be able to reap the benefits of the continued and accelerated ownership of Canadian goods and services by Canadians.

When we do set out to achieve Canadian ownership of key resources and sectors of the economy, we can be successful. While there were some problems with the National Energy Program, I think that programs preceding it and that program itself as it applied to Canadianization of the industry showed some progress. We went into that particular program owning about 11 per cent of our natural gas and oil reserves and refining capacity. Seven or eight years later that proportion of ownership had approached 30 per cent. I think that is a very good turnaround for Canadians in that period of time.

This assisted the creation of more control and ownership in Canada. It has meant that head offices are employing people in Canada. It has meant that the technology which the industry uses, because the decisions are made in Canada, tends also to be contracted within Canada. I am using that as an example, but it presents all of the arguments for some Canadian control over the type of foreign investment we have.

Because of the lack of time, I won't be able to describe a couple of recent cases where foreign investors received an advantage over potential Canadian investors, a form of discrimination which has gone on far too long in this country and which passage of this Act will only make worse.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to have an opportunity to participate in another debate on this Bill, particularly on Motion No. 19. I was somewhat hesitant to rise, Mr. Speaker, because I wanted to give the opportunity to Hon. Members of the Conservative Party to speak. I know that deep down inside they want to participate. Be that as it may, I guess they just won't be able to do so. They have probably been prohibited by someone on the Tory side. They have been whipped into line again and won't be able to say what they want to say. So I would like to take this opportunity to say it for them, as I think those Hon. Members opposite need and are looking forward to our help.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I can tell from some of the noises coming from the book-ends over here, Mr. Speaker, that that is indeed the case.

The position of our Party is that the Minister and the committee chairman, of course, had rejected Liberal efforts in the past to make a positive contribution to this Bill by giving the Minister the power to promote investment by Canadians. The Minister only wants to exercise negative powers, as we all know, and then very rarely. The Minister seems not to be interested at all, unfortunately, in either participating in this debate himself or even to avail himself of those powers and then share them with his cabinet colleagues. He wants to exercise that authority himself and have that secretive type of discretion which we know is becoming an all too familiar approach of this Government.

I thought that some of the Hon. Members of the Conservative Party, who want a more open Government and who have campaigned on that theme during the last election campaign, would have stood today and demanded from the Minister that this whole process be changed.

I received a little pamphlet which I want to share with you, Mr. Speaker. It is entitled "Speakers Bureau of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada". It says that if one has a meeting someplace, one can phone that group and they will send back-benchers, Members of Parliament, Senators and Parliamentary Secretaries to speak in one's riding. This is misleading advertising, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) should investigate this. We in this House know that Conservative back-benchers do not speak. I have yet to see a Conservative back-bencher speak on this issue, save and except, perhaps, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) who spoke for a few moments a few days ago. But the Hon. Member who is sitting at the other end here today should be making an important contribution to the debate on this Bill. He has factories in his riding, and the workers in those factories who want their jobs protected want him and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques), and all the others, to participate in this debate. We would hope that they will say that they want this Bill to be modified in the way that Liberals propose.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Of course, if the Minister really had the interests of the Canadian people at heart, if he really wanted to do the proper thing, he would withdraw the Bill entirely. But we know that that is not likely to happen, so we have attempted to put forward a series of strong and constructive amendments to convince this Government that the Bill could be salvaged somewhat, given a certain willingness on the part of Conservative members to understand that the modifications are indeed very necessary. We have not had the opportunity of convincing them so far, but we will continue to make our point and speak forcefully in this House on behalf of the people of Canada because the back-bench Conservative members are either unable or unwilling to do so. I am sure you understand this, Mr. Speaker, and that at an opportune time you of course would want to say this on behalf of the people of Canada because of the unwillingness of the Conservative members to do so.

We in our Party want to make the sharing of information with other Departments and agencies a formal duty of the Minister. We remember from the Domtar case and others that this particular Minister, and perhaps others who will succeed him in the future, does not have the regional interests of this country at heart.

I see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) sitting across from me. He will know, because he knows how government does business, being in charge, in a way, of letting government contracts, that this can sometimes lead him into controversy. But the fact that he is familiar with how government does business, and being a Minister from Quebec, he will know, and so will the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner), that it is important to have that regional input into those kinds of decisions which may have an adverse effect on Canadian jobs. One of the best ways to prove this is to look back at the Domtar issue and several others in which unilateral decisions were imposed on everyone by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). I see my friend across the way is shaking his head in disapproval but he knows, being the good Member that he is, that many, many people had to lobby the Minister, and ultimately the real power in the Cabinet had to tell the Minister what to do, otherwise that province would have been forgotten. Well, on many other issues there may not be the intervention that there was in this particular case. Ministers would have their way individually and not act in the best interests of our country.

That holds true on several other issues. We know the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has some rather unique views, shall we say, on the issue of foreign investment. He believes all investments should be allowed to come in, even if it means eliminating Canadian jobs.

I remind you again of the issue I raised with you only a few days ago about the member from the Simcoe area who stated publicly that FIRA had not been strong enough to stop the take over of the Black & Decker factory in his riding and the eventual loss of hundreds of jobs. This was a Conservative member saying that FIRA was not strong enough. I am sure that when he is given the opportunity to vote on this Bill he will stand up and vote against the proposed Investment Canada legislation; he has already stated that the existing legislation needs to be strengthened, not destroyed. I find it unusual that that Member, who made such strong statements, did not participate in this debate. I challenge him now to stand up and make a contribution on the record, indicating how his constituents feel about this issue. He was quite forceful during last summer's election campaign when he talked to the good people of Barrie. He told them that he, as a Member of a Government of his Party, would not have allowed that take-over. They won that election and are in power—not that I like it, but nevertheless they are in power temporarily until the next election. They had promised to strengthen the legislation to ensure that there would not be take-overs that would unduly affect their constituents.

Rather than introducing measures to help small business, to assist the farmers of the country, or the people on social assistance, the Government's first priority was to help out the large multinational corporations. That is the priority of the Tories, Mr. Speaker. What happened to the beautiful promises they made to the people of Canada? They forgot them. They made 338 promises and probably around 325 of them will never be fulfilled.

That is enough to cause a backbench revolt by some of those very forceful Tory backbenchers who want the Government to do something to help small business and want to strengthen investment review legislation in order to ensure that jobs are not lost. Instead, they sit on their hands in the House, not even making a contribution. They do not say a word while the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is perpetrating this vicious attack on the Canadianization of our industries. When the Bill was introduced all Members on the Government side who were in the House that day applauded the legislation. They sat in their places applauding legislation which was contrary to the promises they made to the voters of their riding in the last election campaign.

The Government should withdraw the Bill entirely. However, the very least it can do is to approve whole-heartedly and speak in favour of Motion 19 as proposed by my colleague.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to make a few remarks on this fourth group of amendments and to indicate my support, as well as that of other New Democrats, for Motion Nos. 19 and 20. Motion No. 19 was moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and Motion No. 20 was moved on behalf of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Both of these motions relate to Clause 6 of the Bill which reads:

There is hereby established an agency, to be known as Investment Canada, to advise and assist the Minister in exercising his powers and performing his duties under this Act.

● (1125)

Both of these motions are intended to ensure that this agency known as Investment Canada will have a degree of independence and will be able to perform the functions for which it is intended. While Investment Canada is supposed to assist the Minister, we believe that the assistance the Minister needs must be of a very broad nature.

Motion No. 20 reads:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 6 by adding immediately after line 14 at page 5 the following:

"(2) The Agency shall have the power to ask for policy directives from the Governor in Council as it deems necessary."

Very simply, we on this side of the House believe that Investment Canada should be able to appeal to the entire Cabinet rather than be completely under the thumb of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

Clause 7 of the Bill states that the Governor in Council shall appoint a person to be the president of the agency, to hold office during pleasure. Clause 9 points out that other officers and employees of the agency will be appointed in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act. The president will be appointed by the Governor in Council. We hope that the president will not simply be another patronage pay-off to another Tory hack.

We urge the Government to implement its promise that there will be an all-party committee of the House that will vet senior appointments such as this to ensure that we do have a president of Investment Canada who will have an independent mind, a broad grasp of the issues and an understanding of the implications of Investment Canada, particularly with respect to investment by non-Canadians in a great many areas. Some of those areas that are particularly sensitive include culture, energy and resource development.

We believe it is necessary to appoint someone of independent mind, with a broad capacity to be aware of the implications affecting these many areas. That person should be able to receive advice from employees in the agency, because many concerns will go far beyond the scope of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Although there are 40 Cabinet Ministers, far too much power is already concentrated in the hands of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. A number of Ministers, such as the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew), do not have their own departments and we believe that if we are to have 40 Cabinet Ministers they all should have some real power. That is the reason for our Motion No. 20 that would give Investment Canada the right to appeal to the entire Cabinet.

Bill C-15 will increase the power of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to a dangerous level. We have already seen how the views of the Minister are not necessarily those of his Cabinet colleagues. For example, he was completely opposed to doing anything to help the Domtar situation, yet some of his Cabinet colleagues who were closer to the situation and more sensitive to it saw that there was a need for Government action in this area. Thankfully, the Minister was overruled.

Our Motion No. 20 simply provides that the agency will be able to go directly to Cabinet. This is particularly important when we are dealing with non-Canadian investment in such areas as culture or energy. I see we have the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) with us this morning. I would be interested to hear his opinion on this amendment. Would the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans like the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to have the absolute discretion about investment in fish processing plants and aquaculture? Does he agree with leaving that absolute discretion in the hands of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, a person who knows absolutely nothing about the field with which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is concerned?

We want to see a more independent agency that has access to Cabinet at times of real concern. If the Government follows our suggestion and appoints a person of some independence of thought and mind, if the Government follows its own promises and establishes an all-Party committee to vet senior appointments like this, then we would not simply have just another Tory hack, another patronage pay-off, but someone who might have some legitimate concerns that he or she would want to take to committee. I urge support for Motion No. 20.

Motion No. 19 moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry spells out the powers of the Minister that this agency is supposed to assist. Those powers, as spelled out in this motion are to help:

—the Minister in exercising his powers under this Act, to secure notifications and conduct reviews of investments by non-Canadians under this Act, and provide to other relevant federal Departments and agencies information about means to stimulate investment by Canadians in Canada.

These powers are very important, Mr. Speaker. We believe the intention of the Bill should spell them out.

Investment Canada should have information about notifications of investment. The Investment Canada Agency should be able to look at and examine these investments and determine whether or not they really are in the best interests of all Canadians. It should be able to conduct reviews. While we are abolishing the Foreign Investment Review Agency, there will has to be an element of review even though Members opposite might not like it. There still has to be somebody charged with the responsibility of ensuring that investment is for the benefit of Canada. There should be somebody charged with co-ordinating information and making sure that other government Departments are responsible. This fits in very well with our Motion No. 20 that would give Investment Canada direct access to Cabinet. It should have access to other federal Departments and be able to call them in to make sure that any investment is co-ordinated to serve the best interests of all Canadians.

What we want is to strengthen Investment Canada so it can serve the real purposes of all Canadians. This is not a good Bill. We are not happy with it. We would like to see it improved in certain key areas, by strengthening Investment Canada, by giving the Agency access to Cabinet and by spelling out the powers and duties of the Minister that Investment Canada is supposed to assist. We do not want the Minister simply to have carte blanche for his open door policy. We want to see some vestige of a review process, and we want to see wherever possible that Investment Canada will have the option of going to Cabinet when it has a concern, and not be completely under the thumb of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief words on what is taking place today on Motion No. 19 and Motion No. 20. Having listened again to the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), it is very apparent that hon. gentlemen opposite have run out of things to say on this Bill. They have become extremely repetitive. I would admit that on occasions these two gentlemen do have good ideas and do have something to contribute to debate in this House. At the present time though they have run out of ideas. What we are witnessing is something we very often get at report stage on a Bill where there is a wide difference of opinion between the Parties represented in the House of Commons.

A number of motions have been introduced, not with the idea that they add or take away anything from the Bill, but just as a vehicle for debate and prolongment. The motions we are dealing with here are frivolous motions. They are meaningless. They are senseless motions.

Mr. Gauthier: That's nonsense.

Mr. Nickerson: The Opposition is using the occasion for delay. I do not mind the Opposition doing that. I spent a lot of my life on that side of the House. I am glad I am not there any longer. I am quite happy to be on this side. But what we will have to think about in the future is changing the Standing Orders of the House of Commons dealing with report stage on Bills.

Mr. Gauthier: Speak to the motion.

Mr. Nickerson: When we have a Bill of this nature the Opposition feels obliged to put motion after motion on the Order Paper and have these debated ad infinitum, thereby forcing the Government to bring in time allocation. That is something we do not want to do. We have been very lenient so far in this debate. There is no threat of time allocation closure as long as Opposition Members behave themselves—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nickerson: —are nice and get this over with in a reasonable period of time. I ask Members of the Opposition not to force us to bring in time allocation on closure. I think we have to look at the rules of the House of Commons so we can allow the opportunity for a certain amount of delay—that is the only real power the Opposition has—but at the same time not force the Opposition into forcing the Government to bring in time allocation on practically every Bill where there is a great difference of opinion between the two sides of the House.

With respect to Motion No. 20, this is one of the most peculiar motions I have ever read in this House. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) who introduced this should go back to law school and take a course in legislative drafting, because the motion is meaningless. It purports to give to the agency the power to ask for policy directives. Any one can ask for a policy directive. I can ask for a policy directive. One does not have to write that into legislation.

If we really want to take a look at what it says here and draft it properly, what we would be saying in the Bill would be the other way around. It would say the Governor in Council shall have the authority to give policy directives to the agency. If that is what was said here, can you imagine, Sir, the howls of indignation that would come from the benches opposite? The Governor in Council is the Cabinet for all intents and purposes and we would be hearing that we have in law set up an agency that is supposed to conduct its affairs with some degree of objectivity, yet here you are giving a bunch of politicians who form the Cabinet the power to overrrule them. That is what is really being said here. If that was translated into proper, legal legislative language, I am sure opposition Members, particularly those in the New Democratic Party, would be absolutely against what they are trying to say here. It makes no sense whatsoever.

If we look at the motion introduced by the former Minister of Transport, we see that it is completely superfluous and redundant. All one has to do is read Clause 5 of the Bill. The agency is supposed to advise and assist in the exercising of all the powers and duties of the Minister by virtue of the existing Clause 6. They are all listed already. They are precisely the things which are repeated again in Motion No. 19. There is absolutely no need for it. All it is is a vehicle for debate and prolongment. There is no way that we on this side of the House will vote for something which is as nonsensical and as redundant as Motion No. 19. All these authorities are already given; all the directions are given to the Minister by the House of Commons, by the Parliament of Canada, in Clause 5.

In conclusion, I would like to make an illustration or give an example. When we had FIRA in the country, it was the big brick wall. Everybody was up against FIRA. It was an agency of Government, and its objective appeared to be to stifle investment in Canada. It was the agency which always said no. It was a very negative agency.

In this Bill we are trying to do quite the opposite. We are trying to establish a positive agency which can be a repository for advice, knowledge and expertise in the field of investment in Canada, both by Canadians and by non-Canadians. When people walk into the office of the new agency, they will be welcomed. They will be told that we want them to invest and to create jobs in Canada. They will be told that we want profitable businesses in Canada. If they are profitable, then we can tax them. We will not subscribe to the old Liberal ideas where we have to say no to everything. We will not tell them to keep out, that we do not want their business or that we are not worried about jobs and profits.

Two or three years ago I had the opportunity to visit Malaysia which had an agency in some respects similar to the one we are trying to establish under this Bill. In talking with the members of that agency, in comparison with crossing the street and talking with FIRA people here, it was like night and day. Although there were the same kind of political problems there as there are in Canada, in that they were worried about an excess of foreign ownership and having to put on some degree of control, just as we are doing with this Bill, the whole emphasis or attitude was different. It was: "Come on in and we will try to facilitate the making of your investment because it will be to the benefit of both of us". That is what we are trying to do with this Bill.

I hope the Opposition Parties will quit using delay, will state the case and be prepared to vote on the Bill so that we can get the Act into effect as quickly as possible and start creating jobs and investment opportunities in Canada.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House after the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). As far as the Hon. Member saying that the motions proposed by Opposition Members were stupid, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that I have never heard a stupid person make such a stupid speech in this House.

Mr. Speaker, while Opposition Members have from the outset been trying to explain the logic of—

Mr. Lanthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for La Salle (Mr. Lanthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, is such language really parliamentary? I know there was a previous occurrence, but I would appeal to your experience. Is it parliamentary to use such language or to address remarks to Hon. Members instead of debating their arguments?

Mr. Malépart: On a point order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member for La Salle (Mr. Lanthier) that his colleague said Opposition Members were stupid. I think he should listen more carefully and refrain from political partisanship.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Concerning the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for La Salle, I would like to point out to the House that the word used by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is parliamentary. However, it is not appropriate in the circumstances.

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I notice that Government Members, as usual, take delight in holding up the debate when our colleagues address the House, so that they will run out of time and not be able to say what they want to say. Mr. Speaker, I urgently request that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) be given the time to which he is entitled so he will have his full 10 minutes.

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, since this is a point of order, I would ask the Chair not to include the time used to make my point of order as part of my speaking time.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with your ruling, namely that the expression, though parliamentary, is inappropriate, but I think it is appropriate when used in referring to people who really are that.

Mr. Speaker, to continue the debate concerning the comments of the Hon. Member who was criticizing Opposition Members both on the Liberal and the New Democratic Party side for proposing amendments to a Bill—in fact the aim of these amendments was mainly to protect jobs—I realize that the previous speaker is more concerned with protecting the multinationals and the wealthy. However, I think that in this House, every Member has the right to express his views as he sees fit and to defend the groups and individuals he wants to defend. If the previous speaker only wants to defend the wealthy, he will suffer the consequences. However, I think the Members of the Official Opposition and Members of the New Democratic Party are here to defend all Canadians, whatever their income or beliefs, Mr. Speaker. The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the previous amendments rejected by the Conservatives were in fact aimed at ensuring that all parliamentarians would be informed of all investments made in Canada, and not only that a foreign company was taking over a company in one of our ridings, but also whether that company was going to guarantee existing jobs. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and this Government cannot be trusted, because when Bill C-15 was tabled, the first thing they said was that now Ottawa could easily get rid of Canadair. All the Bay Street Minister is interested in is selling Canadair, at any price, but he could not care less about the company's employees. I think the Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) should wake up to this fact, since Canadair is in his riding. The Member for Lasalle, instead of worrying about whether a term is parliamentary or not, should start worrying about the employment situation in this area which affects the people west of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, this shows a complete lack of . . . The Progressive Conservative Members from Quebec will have to stop listening to these people who keep telling them that the Prime Minister is always right, that the Ministers are right, and that their job is to applaud or make sure they are in front of the camera so they can be seen on television when somebody else is speaking. It is appalling. On the weekend in my riding, people were asking where the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) had his seat, because every time a Member rose to speak, he would change seats. They wondered whether his seat had wheels. And the same applies to the Hon. Member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins). All they do, besides opening doors, is move from one seat to the next to make sure they are in front of the camera. Mr. Speaker, I think Progressive Conservative Members should listen—

Mr. Desjardins: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue, on a point of order.

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) would speak to the amendment. I think his attacks are uncalled for. We, that is, the Committee, accepted 17 amendments to this Bill, and I think Canadians would like us to get to work on other Bills they are waiting for. His attacks on us are uncalled for. We would like to hear him speak to the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that it is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I will be nice to the Hon. Member. He is not familiar with the Standing Orders, so I will be patient with him, he will learn them some day. It is just a matter of time. Mr. Speaker, he will learn the Standing Orders the day he will stop playing up to the camera and taking seats close to the speakers. He ought to go by the Standing Orders, get up on his feet and defend proposed bills.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians will understand the fears of both Opposition parties if they consider the choices and priorities of this Government. It is not a matter of one party being more fussy than the other, for both Opposition Parties have introduced amendments to guarantee employment, to make sure that Canadian investors do not lose faith in their country, and to promote regional development throughout Canada, particularly in Quebec.

Here is the kind of headlines we see these days, Mr. Speaker:

> Complete reversal of federal priorities. Military expenditures favoured over regional assistance.

Statements by ministers and Government priorities are quite enough to worry Canadians, and the whole exercise cannot be left in the hands of only one individual. Let us say I have confidence in this Minister, but all Hon. Members know that he will not be alone to monitor the situation. Officials and various people will be there to assist him. I would suggest that Hon. Members are in the best position to advise the Minister. They are supposed to be familiar with their region, their riding, and regardless of political affiliation—Conservative, Liberal and NDP alike—each Member must have a role to play because his first responsibility is to uphold the interests of men and women in his riding who elected him in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the decisions made since September 4, or November 5 when the session began, including Summer Canada programs budget cut-backs in most ridings, no wonder people have lost faith in the Conservative majority. Various projects have been handed over to officials who make honest and sincere efforts to do their job properly, but those people cannot possibly be thoroughly familiar with our ridings and, as elected Members, we must answer to our electors for every decision made, good or bad. No Sir, I suspect the Government may have been through bad experiences with some of the Conservative Members with respect to Canada Works. The Minister did not waste time before telling those Members—Liberal Members were told automatically—that they could no longer participate with community organizations and businesses in the development of their region. That was the first sign of mistrust between them. The fight has broken out within the power hungry Cabinet. It is no secret, we all know that the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) does not get along with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Those two are fighting, and one does not know what the other is doing. They are always looking over their shoulders. The best proof, Mr. Speaker . . . The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) just said something. The best proof? The president of the national caucus was appointed, not elected. It shows a lack of confidence—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member to speak to the two motions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malépart: I am sure you agree with me, Mr. Speaker, and when you stood up, it clearly demonstrated that I was right on and that the problem is truly there. That is why all the amendments introduced both by the NDP and the Liberal Party aim at ensuring that Parliamentarians get the proper respect. These amendments call for the Cabinet to be advised of the terms of any planned takeover. That is quite normal. Why try to hide anything? Why object to public disclosure? What is there to hide? Is someone plotting anything? I wonder, because of the position of the Conservatives towards these amendments. If we consider the proliferation of the little clubs with a $100 admission fee, we become increasingly suspicious about the concentration of privileges. I can understand the Conservatives' reaction, because they cannot stand being told the truth. Otherwise, if they had nothing to hide, why would they refuse the amendments proposed both by the NDP and the Liberal Party?

Have you ever seen ordinary citizens trying to hide anything? Ordinary citizens are open, Canadians are open, and what we are trying to do, first and foremost, is to protect thousands of jobs in every part of the country.

In this regard, if we consider the substance of the amendment moved by my colleague, as well as those moved by NDP members, we realize that the purpose of all these amendments is to make sure that when foreign investors take over existing plants or build new ones in Canada, it will not result in a loss of jobs as is the case at the present time. Also, they would have to agree to continue the development of the region together with community groups. And finally, to make sure that they are not setting up shop just to be able to dump their products in our market and to force the closure of a competitor who is doing just fine.

We know that the textile industry is rather shaky. Are we going to let foreign investors come to Canada and jeopardize the future of our own companies which can hardly survive? It would be unthinkable! I believe that the information should be made public and that the member of Parliament representing the area should be the first to know, or perhaps the Progressive Conservative members do not give a damn about their constituents, preferring to travel extensively, ignore the problems and enjoy the good life. But I do not think there are many like that, Mr. Speaker. I know a number of them who are honest and sincere and who are eager to work for and defend their constituents. These people should support our amendments, Mr. Speaker.

I notice that the time allotted to me is about to expire, Mr. Speaker. I could add a great many things to try to convince them, but, unfortunately, they will not listen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) has the floor.

● (1150)

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): I should like to point out to my colleague that if he intends to speak about the Progressive Conservatives in his constituency, as a Progressive Conservative member, I intend to speak about some Liberal members and especially him. I am told that the Progressive Conservatives are quite bright people. They do their homework seriously instead of shouting as the Liberal member is now doing. And it is not with shouts or with charges of inaction that this country will be soundly administered. In that respect, I have been receiving complaints in my constituency and I am asked: What are they doing? And they refer to that well-known statement of Mr. Mulroney who said: "The clowns of the Liberal party are not all gone."

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I intervene again on Bill C-15 and the amendments to Clause 6. The reason for our Motion No. 20 is very obvious. We think there should be some separation between the Minister and the agency. We believe we should not give the Minister the authority to make judgments. We have a good basis for our feeling of insecurity about giving the Minister that kind of power. Consequently, we moved this particular motion which would eliminate, as far as possible, the kind of control and power that is given to the Minister by this Bill.

If we were to look at the long-term Tory position we would find first that there is not that much difference between the present Tory position and the past Liberal position, although the periphery of that position is being defended very strongly these days. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he would put FIRA on the back burner and would establish a new screening process, and that looked as though it might be a good idea. However, we now find that the screening process is made up of a pretty big net through which everything can fall.

I would like to quote from a statement by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He said:

> Let us look at foreign investment. The test now is whether that investment is of significant benefit to Canada. I say, Mr. Speaker, that almost every investment in Canada is a benefit to Canada—We do not need to turn it off—What we must do as part of our industrial strategy is to remove the shackles put on foreign investment.
> We need to have another strategy, Mr. Speaker, a strategy of hands off.

That is the Tory policy as far as investment in Canada is concerned. It is unfortunate.

Over the years the policy has changed considerably. It seems that the Conservative Party has taken on the mantle of C. D. Howe, the mantle of unfettered continentalism, in opening the doors to investment, particularly investment from the United States. I wonder what the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker would say, if he were listening to this debate, with respect to the policy of the present Conservative Government. I wonder what John A. Macdonald would say if he was listening to this debate and hearing what the Conservatives are attempting to do by removing FIRA and any inhibitions to foreign investment in Canada. I can imagine what Mr. Diefenbaker would say. He would be on the floor of the House every minute of the day saying that this policy would make Canada the fifty-first state of the United States. We do not trust the policy and, therefore, we believe that making it difficult for the Minister to have these powers under the Bill is worth-while.

Motion No. 19, which would also amend Clause 6 of the Bill, is an attempt to have more Canadianization. Nothing could be better. This Party knows, as does the Government, that the net amount of investment in Canada during the last 25 years has been negative. More Canadian money has been invested outside Canada than has been invested by foreigners in Canada. More money has left Canada in research and development, profits and interest than has come into Canada during the last 25 years. If the Government wants to establish Canadianization, it should look at investment and turn it around. It should not increase foreign investment, because it has a domino effect. The more investment, ownership and money which foreign companies have in Canada, the more they will spend increasing the size of their companies. Those foreign companies will become larger and expand into other areas. Canadianization over the years has had some impetus as far as the Government is concerned, but this Bill will turn that entirely around. Canadian nationalism will no longer be a basis for development in Canada.

I spent a number of years in Nigeria. That country is considered to be part of the Third World. At that time the Government of Nigeria was what we in Canada would call a benevolent despot; it had a military government. However, Nigeria had the courage to realize that if it was going anywhere, it had to own Nigeria. That Government put into place a Nigerianization policy, which allowed it to take over small businesses and large corporations. Nigeria did that, even though it was having problems maintaining its status as a democracy. The people in that Government had the courage, foresight and understanding of foreign ownership which enabled them to eliminate, as far as possible, foreign ownership of Nigeria's businesses and industries.

For example, the Nigerian policy dictated that any industry which was worth under 400,000 naira had to be owned and operated entirely by Nigerians. Nigeria gave those companies two years to find Nigerians buyers. If no buyer was found, those companies would be closed down and Nigerians would take over. The same policy existed for large corporations. The Nigerian policy dictated that within a certain amount of time a major portion of the shareholders of the companies had to be Nigerian.

Canada is a much more sophisticated and developed country than Nigeria, but it is unable to control investment in Canada. In fact, this Government thinks that the more investment, the better. The Government thinks that the closer Canada gets to the United States, the better, and the more the U.S. owns in Canada, the better. The idea of Canada becoming the fifty-first state of the United States must be looked at very closely.

These amendments form step one in the process of considering and possibly stopping that.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to speak to Motion No. 19 as proposed by my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and try and convince Hon. Members that the amendment in question is indeed an important one.

What the motion means is that the Minister is being asked to do two things. First of all, he is being asked to carefully consider foreign take-overs, making sure he has done everything in his power to encourage other Canadian companies to take an interest in a company that may be purchased by foreign interests. Second, the Minister is being asked to exercise the powers he has to inform his Cabinet colleagues about what is going on in his department and, conversely, to receive from those same Cabinet colleagues the information he needs to ensure that everything is proceeding in an orderly fashion, that everything is co-ordinated, and that all parties are working together to create jobs and attract investment for the benefit of our economy.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the amendment in question, and without quoting extensively from what was said in committee and in various public forums where people have asked that the Minister be given such authority, I simply want to comment on a recommendation by the President of the Science Council, Dr. Stuart Smith, because he appeared before the committee and asked the Government to carefully examine the following suggestion, namely that... As the House is aware, there is a $5 million threshold, which means that the Government must carefully examine any foreign take-over of Canadian assets worth more than $5 million. On the other hand, there are of course companies, and I know several... I see my colleague from Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté), I see my colleagues from the Ottawa-Carleton area... there are many communities in Canada where industries with assets worth less than $5 million and provide employment might be the subject of a foreign take-over or might be of particular interest to a foreign company, and this might be a lumber mill or a sawmill or a paper mill, whatever, a local industry, and of course I am not talking about a shoe store, for instance, that might be bought out ... That is not what I mean. I am referring to established industries that are important to the community where they are located.

Mr. Speaker, every year, the Government gives grants to companies and industries in the private sector. Sometimes there are very good reasons for helping a company. For instance, a company may be given a grant of $100,000.

When Mr. Smith proposed the amendment before the committee, he said: Any company which receives $100,000 in five years or over five years should be the subject of close scrutiny by the Minister to make sure that the company was not sold to foreign interests at a profit, thus taking advantage of the $100,000 grant.

I think it is serious, I think it is necessary, and I think coordination is required at the departmental level to be sure that grants to companies benefit Canadian companies and, therefore, Canadian workers. That is why, first, I urge the Minister to find out whether there might be a Canadian company interested in buying the company and continue to create jobs and operate the factory, the plant or the sawmill. Second, I think it is important that the Minister should know how much the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon), for instance, contributes to development or research. I think he has to know what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) may have given in grants to such or such company, or such or such organization, just so he might be able to say: My colleagues and I will coordinate the whole thing, see to it that everybody knows what the left and right hands are doing so that, one way or another, Canadians will become interested in the economic activity of their country.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the motion under consideration has a dual purpose: first, to secure notifications and conduct reviews of investments by non-Canadians and, second, to provide to other relevant federal departments and agencies information about means to stimulate investment by Canadians in Canada.

• (1210)

In particular, Mr. Speaker, we feel it is very important that these reviews be conducted on all proposed foreign investments, especially those which deal with the high tech industry and research and development and those that have received grants of $100,000 or more in encouragement from the federal Government so that they can continue operating in our country.

Everyone knows that Ottawa-Carleton has a very active high tech industry. That high tech industry has been the object of federal and provincial grants. That industry has received these grants to encourage it to establish itself and to create jobs in the Ottawa area. Recently, the Chairman of the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton wrote to the Premier of this province asking him to put more money into the Ottawa-Carleton area so that its high tech industry can really grow and prosper. The Minister responsible for this legislation before the House could, in my opinion, co-ordinate not only with his colleagues in Cabinet but with the provincial Government, and possibly with the municipal Governments so that, indeed, we could look at a program of encouragement, co-ordination and working together to encourage these industries to grow.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record the statements made by Mr. Haydon in his letter to the Provincial Government. He was asking for more extensive economic activity in the Ottawa-Carleton area, adding that Ottawa-Carleton, after having contributed in promoting Ontario's international reputation in the area of high technology, is now demanding greater attention. Those are his terms, and I am reading from a report published April 27, 1985 in the newspaper Le Droit. The Provincial Government to provide the following programs, and hopefully they can be implemented with the co-operation of the Canadian Government:

Assistance to firms that want to invest in the construction of research laboratories, research and development loans, financial help up to $100,000—

As you see, this agrees with the recommandation made by Dr. Stuart Smith, President of the Science Council.

The Chairman of the RMOC is also asking the Provincial Government to provide grants for the universities of Carleton and Ottawa for new technology facilities, and to exponentially increase research grants to the Ottawa-Carleton Research Institute.

Recalling the role of high technology—

Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Regional Municipality, Mr. Andrew Haydon, goes on to say:

—job creation, Mr. Haydon stressed the fact that such selective programs for Ottawa-Carleton would catalyze the energy needed for high technology industries to reach the critical mass needed to settle down and face competition.

There is the objective: create jobs and expand our high technology industry in the Ottawa-Carleton area. I think this is worthwhile. I am wondering what the MPs for Ottawa-Carleton, that is Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) will do about this issue. I wonder if they will also show concern, rise in this House and suggest that we are in fact requiring some sort of coordination between the federal, provincial, municipal and probably regional governments in order that the leaders may know that the Canadian Government is in a position to co-operate with all those participants and in this way promote and create jobs, making sure that the high technology sector can develop through full co-operation a meaningful industry, an industry which is vital to all of us, an industry which will create jobs, an industry which, as far as we, residents of Ottawa-Carleton, are concerned, Mr. Speaker, has made a significant contribution to the local economy.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join in the debate today on the amendments proposed by my Party and by the Liberal Party. These amendments are aimed to strengthen the Bill and make it at least a little more palatable to the people of Canada. I very much think that as a whole, the Bill is a backward step.

I know that Hon. Members of the present Government and, in previous years, members of the Liberal Government as well, have bowed to the notion that foreign investment is good. They have never really critically examined that proposition. It has been shown in the history of our country, surely, Mr. Speaker, that it is not necessarily good at all times. Simple logic would tell you, Mr. Speaker, that a person invests in an enterprise hoping to get back than what he puts in. We have seen over the years the amount of money which eventually leaves Canada in the form of foreign investment, return on interest and dividend payments of past investment in Canada. The capital which leaves this country is greater than the capital which comes into this country.

Essentially, we are digging a hole and we try to attract foreign capital to fill that hole but in doing so we have just dug ourselves that much deeper into the hole. The foreign investment we receive, we will in time pay out many, many fold. Therefore, it has always seemed to us in the New Democratic party that it becomes more desirable to have Canadian ownership and Canadian control over our economy. Unfortunately, the Bill which we are debating today is a backward step from that notion of Canadian control.

The first amendment introduced by the New Democratic Party attempts to give the Cabinet a little more power over the Minister. As things stand now with the present legislation, it is the Minister and the Minister alone with his agency who will make the decisions as to what type of foreign take-over should be allowed. In other words, it is the Minister who decides whether a take-over of some cultural agency or research facility or energy corporation by some foreign agency should be allowed.

We suggest it is not just the Minister responsible for this Department who should make that decision; the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) should be involved when decisions have to be made which affect their particular field.

We feel the legislation as it stands now gives the agency and its Minister too much power. We have attempted in our amendments to be more specific, but unfortunately those amendments were ruled out of order so all we have left is the amendment which now stands before us. All it does is call for the Cabinet to have the power to give some broad policy direction to the agency and the Minister.

The amendment introduced by the Liberal Party is also a worthy amendment. It attempts to foster greater concern by the agency in developing Canadian investment. When we heard government members explain the Bill to us, they paid lip service to the notion that there should be greater Canadian investment in Canadian industries. Yet we found there was precious little in the Bill which would have the agency actively go out and attempt to foster greater Canadian investment in Canadian industry.

Both ourselves and the Liberals attempted to introduce other amendments which would be more specific concerning direction to the agency to seek more Canadian investment, but those amendments were not considered to be in order. Therefore, we are left with the amendment before us today, but the intent is both worthy and important. We believe there should be something in the legislation to direct the agency to be more active in seeking investment by Canadians.

These two amendments will improve the Bill. They will give greater responsibility to the Cabinet as a whole in setting policy so that cultural agencies and scientific intensive companies would not be taken over, based on the decision of one person, the Minister in charge, but that the responsibility be shared by the Cabinet as a whole.

We feel as well that the Bill should be more specific in directing the agency to seek greater Canadian investment in Canadian industries. They are important amendments which I had hoped the government members would find to be worthy and positive additions to the legislation. Instead we have heard the few government members who have stood up accuse us of attempting to fillibuster. I am somewhat amused when I hear some of the Hon. Members across the way make that accusation; less than a year ago some of them were participants in tactics which should make them blush when they make that accusation about us.

Mr. Nickerson: We have matured since then.

Mr. de Jong: It is amazing how government members claim that they have seen the light since they have crossed the floor. I would suggest they have lost the light.

Mr. Blaikie: They went into the cave.

Mr. de Jong: If the Government is really concerned about developing a more co-operative attitude in the House where the Opposition need not resort to attempting to drag a Bill out, which is one of the few instruments we have of making the Government accept some of the changes we are proposing, then the Government must also view the Opposition and its amendments as legitimate representatives of the people of Canada, having legitimate points to make, and the Government should cease rejecting out of hand everything we have proposed just because the bureaucrats in the back room and the few power Ministers have said no, this is the way it is going to be and damn what they say across the way; we are going to push this through whatever may come.

Mr. Blaikie: Tories just do what the bureaucrats tell them.

Mr. de Jong: If the Government is interested in a new co-operative attitude in this House, it has to start looking seriously at the ideas we are proposing. A good example of that is the amendments we are proposing today. These amendments will strengthen the Bill. They will be of benefit to the people of Canada and therefore the Government should give serious consideration and support to these amendments when they come to a vote.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on the amendments before us, it seems to me that anything which will improve the living conditions and lifestyle of Canadians is the kind of thing we want. You have to use a litmus test to examine whether this legislation will meet some of the basic values and principles which we have the responsibility to move forward in any agenda for all Canadians.

With respect to the definition of the role and responsibility of the Minister, he should be very grateful that the amendments say in a sense that we want to remove this onerous task from his shoulders alone and have him share it with the other members of his Cabinet, share the responsibilities he has to direct the future of Canada, because he has chosen to throw down this welcome mat at a most unusual time in the history of our country and the world.

We are part of a world of competition, a world that is facing some very difficult times. I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister, and particularly his staff, an article which I came across entitled "Canada For Sale, But Who's Buying?". It was written by Deborah McGregor, who points out that there is growing evidence that all the developing countries are desperate for economic growth and they are now winning a bigger share of the world-wide potential of $550 billion in annual foreign direct investment. In fact, the proliferation of free trade zones in developing countries where corporations are given a host of tax incentives and other concessions to produce exports is causing the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund new concern, because this is adding to the fiscal burdens of those countries. In that light, Canada could be compared to a high-priced boutique open for business when all the surrounding shops are holding half-price sales.

If the Minister is serious in considering the well-being of Canadians and wanting to promote an improved lot for us, he is not addressing the issue. If he would accept an amendment of this kind, he would share his responsibility with the entire Cabinet, and it would not rest solely on his shoulders. I would like to bring to the minister's attention, and that of the members of the Government certain realities. They are of the opinion that by just changing the name from FIRA to Investment Canada we are going to have an automatic inflow of dollars. Well, I would like to share some realities which The Globe and Mail brought to our attention.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the conservatives have been blaming FIRA and the NEP for scaring away foreign direct investment. They have attempted to bolster their point by pointing to StatsCan figures on net U.S. direct investment into Canada. I think it is very hard to argue with StatsCan figures, so in that sense I would like to bring them to their attention.

The article goes on to say:

> Indeed, these figures seem to show U.S. capital fleeing Canada in 1976, the year after FIRA was set up, and in 1981-83 after the imposition of the NEP.
> Yet, on their own, these net figures are misleading because they are made up of two quite distinct component parts: actual U.S. direct investment into Canada (called gross inflows by Statscan); and the buying back of branch plants by Canadian firms (called gross outflows by Statscan).
> When these component parts are examined, the picture is significantly different from that painted by Mr. Mulroney. For until 1982, the gross inflow of U.S. direct investment into Canada continued to expand—in spite of FIRA and in spite of the NEP. Gross inflows varied between $1-and $1.4-billion throughout most ot the 1970s, before skyrocketing during 1980 and 1981.

FIRA and the NEP did, however, seem to affect significantly the other side of the ledger, the so-called gross outflows of capital from Canada to the United States as Canadians bought back U.S. branch plants.

This trend to repatriation, accelerated by the NEP in particular, peaked in 1981. That year, a massive $6.9-billion left the country, mainly to pay for the purchase by Canadians of U.S.-controlled energy firms resident in Canada.

But while the NEP affected repatriation, it did not seem to turn off the gross inflow of U.S. direct investment into Canada. For that too peaked in 1981, at $3.2-billion. Gross inflows of U.S. direct investment began to decline significantly only in 1982 as the world recession took hold and raw material prices plummeted.

We are not going to cure the problems of Canada by merely changing the name. I strongly recommend that this amendment be considered most seriously. If you look at the responsibilities the Minister has arrogated to himself under Clause 5 you will see that he is really not rendering the country any service. I suggest that he review what he has undertaken and what his standing committee decided to accept. He should take a good hard look and be open-minded and open-spirited with respect to this amendment.

All amendments should withstand some of the litmus tests of our society. If the Minister is to share his perspective with Employment Canada and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), he might be in a position to ensure that the goals which the Government has been enunciating on employment equity are applied and followed through when foreign companies come in to purchase our companies.

The Minister and the Government have thrown down this welcome that. They are inviting the global corporation—which I gather is the new word for multinationals—to come in. They are saying that we are open for business. They must be reminded that we were always open for business, but in this time of stiffer competition money flows where it can be productive. If this money is to be productive the Minister should share his power with other members of the Cabinet, involving as many Ministers as possible.

We must recognize some stark realities. This is not the way that unemployment, particularly among our youth, the need for education and training, the problems of our aged, and the area of ecology and peace will be addressed. Those are the issues which need to be addressed. This Minister and his ministry can certainly do something. Perhaps it can be partly accomplished through this Bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I sincerely hope that some attention will have been paid, both to me and to the issue, and I hope that the amendments will be adopted.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the amendments which have been put forward on Clause 6 of Bill C-15. That clause establishes the agency, to be known as Investment Canada, to advise and assist the Minister in exercising his powers and performing his duties under this Act.

The amendments before us, which I hope the Government will consider accepting, seek to increase the power of the Investment Canada agency in relation to the Minister who now has the final decision-making authority. These amendments suggest that in certain areas of ambiguity or uncertainty with respect to exercising its mandate, the agency be able to go directly to Cabinet for a decision. The objective of this, Mr. Speaker, is to put some distance between the agency and the Minister without changing the advisory role. This is part of a set of amendments aimed at strengthening the agency itself, as opposed to the Minister.

I regret that so little attention is being paid by the media to the clause by clause consideration of this Bill at report stage. The amendments we debated yesterday dealt with the secrecy aspects which are built into the new agency, as they were in FIRA. The first set of amendments we dealt with were with regard to giving some indication, in the purpose of the Bill, that we wanted the federal Government to show some discrimination in what form of investment it deemed to be beneficial. All these amendments are very helpful in pointing out some very fundamental differences between the Opposition Parties and the Government with regard to the issue of foreign investment.

This is not an ordinary Bill, Mr. Speaker. This Bill represents a drastic change in the way in which we see ourselves as a country and the way in which we understand our national economic integrity. For that reason, much more attention should be paid to the arguments which are being made on both sides of the House. The Government offers a view of Canada's economic future and integrity which is accepted by many Canadians. The Opposition also offers a view which is accepted by many Canadians. I find it regrettable that there is no reporting of the debate as it proceeds in the House.

The issue of foreign investment is absolutely central to the future of any country and to its understanding of itself. Only minutes ago I came from a meeting with Dr. Allan Boesak from South Africa. One of the things which we had occasion to speak about during that meeting was his contention that a change in the foreign investment activities of other countries in South Africa would have a beneficial effect on the struggle of black people there to achieve their freedom and get rid of Apartheid. I realize that that view is not accepted by a great many people. However, it is a view held by increasing numbers of people who are concerned about the situation in South Africa.

They know that not just South Africa but the whole world is sitting on a time bomb that will eventually go off if countries like Canada do not put pressure on the South African Government to radically change its attitude and do away with apartheid.

While that is not a widely held view, I raise this question because it is an example, that is also evident in other countries, of how decisions about foreign investment not only affect the marketplace but the future of those countries in which the investments are made.

Although Canada does not face the same situation as South Africa, that is an extreme example which shows that foreign investment is not only economic in nature but affects the social, cultural and environmental dimensions of the countries in which investments are made. That is why we very much regret the uncritical attitude of this Bill toward foreign investment.

When I spoke to previous amendments that our Party proposed for the purpose of the Bill, I said that we wanted the Bill to indicate a willingness on the part of the Government to exercise discretion and simply not accept the premise that all foreign investment is beneficial. We want the Government to learn from the experience of other countries as well as ours that not all investment is beneficial and not all technologies are beneficial. That discretion will be impossible as a result of the Government's actions. Not only is the Government making these judgments impossible, it is saying that it is undesirable to make those judgments.

The Progressive Conservatives often say that we are open for business. What does that mean? It seems to me that in the context of what the Government has done until now and what is contained in this Bill, "open for business" means sending out the right signals to the investment community. Unfortunately, the Government signals its attitude toward working people and labour-management relations by postponing the amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. Its signal with respect to the environment has been to cancel research and monitoring programs in order to tell those who want to invest here that they can do what they want to the environment and the Government will not do anything about it. The Government's message with respect to social programs is that it is more willing to tamper with universality than to reform the tax system and collect revenue that would help offset the deficit and eliminate the need to tamper with the social programs.

While it may appear that the Government has made a series of mistakes with respect to these issues, there is an internal coherence to all of its actions. While the Government's other actions were a matter of policy, this Bill is the singlemost legislative action on the part of the Government which is part and parcel of the Government's over-all strategy. Therefore, it is very important that Canadians pay attention to this very fundamental debate about our position in the economic community.

Our Party believes that we should not capitulate and follow the trend in the world to play one country against another. We should resist those trends and work toward a new international economic order in which countries do not have to engage in such a policy by seeing who could be more obsequious to the investment community in order to get jobs.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the amendments we are discussing today concern the powers of the Minister responsible for the administration of the future agency known as Investment Canada.

Our amendment aims at extending the scope of the Bill so that the various departments and agencies can be kept adequately informed in order to be in a position to promote Canadian investments in Canada.

The main concern of this Government is to open our doors to foreign investors. Its first action as a Government was to introduce legislation to facilitate the takeover of Canadian markets by allowing foreign interests to invest in Canada without inquiring about their intentions or future projects.

Of course, foreign investment should be promoted in Canada. We do not refuse any capital inflow, but if foreign interests develop our markets and our resources, they must contribute to the social, cultural and economic development of this country.

Would the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) be willing to entertain people as guests in his home without knowing where they come from, what they do and what they intend to do?

If he had to share his house with these people, would he not ensure that it would be of benefit both to himself and his guests, and that they would help to upgrade rather than degrade his property?

I am certain that, before sharing his house with strangers, the Minister would consult the members of his family. If he then decided that it was to his advantage to share his house, he would ask his friends, relatives and acquaintances to suggest someone suitable in the vicinity rather than a foreigner.

Before concerning himself with foreign investors, did the Minister think about Canadian investors? What legislation promoting Canadian investment have we had in the 8 months since the Progressive Conservative Government came into power? None, Mr. Speaker! On the contrary, to discourage Canadian investments, the Progressive Conservative Government has increased the sales tax, the price of gas and unemployment insurance premiums, which all increase the direct costs of businesses. Those were the first decisions of the Progressive Conservative Government to discourage Canadian investors. It is now introducing a new piece of legislation called "Investment Canada" which is aimed, not at Canadian investors, but rather at foreign investors, so that they will have every opportunity to lessen the entrepreneurship our young people had developed because they were assured that their efforts would be protected by FIRA. Even though we welcomed foreign capital, we ensured that everything would be under Canadian control and that Canadian business would be protected.

Mr. Speaker, our figures show that the savings rate in Canada is twice as high as that in the United States. If we have so much money in this country, why do we not encourage Canadians to invest in our businesses?

We all know that our small businesses create most of the new jobs in this country, but why do we not encourage Canadians to invest in this sector in order to create the hundred thousand jobs our young people need?

It is clear that foreign investors will not come to Canada to start small businesses. We know full well that because large corporations prefer to operate with robots, they create such a limited number of jobs that they should not be allowed to use our wide open-door policy to jeopardize the future of our small businesses, which account for 80 per cent of our jobs.

Mr. Speaker, this government does not understand the importance of small businesses. The Minister clearly demonstrated that when he introduced his amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act. This legislation which in the past had helped thousands of Canadians to start their own businesses, this government, in one of its earliest initiatives, made it less accessible to businessmen, thereby discouraging Canadian investors and stopping the development of a great many small businesses.

And what about the Domtar mess? Again, the government failed to encourage Canadian investment, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion refused categorically to help, without even considering the benefits which would accrue to both Canada's and Quebec's economies. The Minister has chosen to deal with our neighbours instead of encouraging our own people.

Just how many Canadian projects have failed because of this government's incompetence? Just how many jobs have we lost because of this Conservative government's ineptitude which favours foreign investment at the expense of Canadian investment?

As recently as this morning, I read the following heading in the economic section of the Le Devoir daily:

> Ottawa attaching too much importance to foreign investment in Canada.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put on the record a couple of paragraphs from this article:

> The head of the Quebec General Delegation emphasized that he did not mean to go to war against the federal government. Even at the height of the Constitutional crisis, the Canadian embassy has always demonstrated its willingness to co-operate on economic issues . . . Yet, its concern is legitimate, in his opinion, considering that the federal government's interest in the promotion of foreign investment is new.
> In fact, this interest is as new as the election of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney who, as soon as he assumed power, announced his intention to abolish the Foreign Investment Review Agency (FIRA). During his official visit to England, he even made it the main theme of his trip.

After selling Canada cheap to the United States in January, the Prime Minister is again trying to sell it to Europe. That shows the little consideration this government has for Canadian investors and small businesses which are responsible for the majority of jobs created in this country.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise today not so much to make a speech but to comment specifically on these two very important motions before us. One of these motions was submitted by the Liberal caucus and one was submitted by the New Democratic caucus. Both motions in a sense attempt to do the same thing.

First, i want to be specific about Motion No. 20. This amendment seeks to increase the power of the Investment Canada agency in relation to the Minister who is now the final decision-making authority. It suggests that in certain areas of ambiguity or uncertainty with respect to the exercise of the corporation's mandate it is able to go directly to the Cabinet to get a decision. The aim of this motion is to put some distance between the agency and the Minister without changing the advisory rule of the organization.

This comes forward after, I think it is fair to say, the New Democratic Party having been on record time and time again suggesting that this Bill in total is not in the best interests of Canada. This motion is an attempt to improve an already inappropriate or bad Bill. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you are asking what the Hon. Member means when he says it is a bad Bill. I want to pose the question to Hon. Members assembled through you, Mr. Speaker, namely, do we want foreign investments in Canada that cannot meet the test of significant benefit to Canadians? That is basically the fundamental question. Why do we want to fall over ourselves as a country attracting foreign investment, foreign control of our economy, without assuring that this foreign control of our economy is in the best interests of Canada and Canadian citizens generally?

As responsible parliamentarians, we must not get caught up in the assumption that any business is good for the country, that any kind of technology will obviously benefit us. I do not have to go through the long list of corporations operating in Canada, some of them foreign, some of them domestic, that have not been operating in the best interests of Canada, in a whole variety of ways. I think of some of the petrochemical companies, the Love Canal situation and the acid rain that is now falling on this part of Canada. I looked at my deck early this morning. While I painted it last fall, as a result of the rainfall and snowfall I have to repaint it this spring—because of the penetrating influence of the acid rain continually falling from our skies.

I see the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is in the House. He will recall that it was about 18 months ago when there was concern about the building in which we are sitting today because acid rain had caused parts of it to crumble and fall. These situations arise as a result of companies like Inco—both public and private corporations—which have not, in spite of many an attempt by Government to regulate, always acted in the country's best interests. That is all we are saying. Let us not get caught up in the rhetoric that whatever is business is therefore good; what is good for the Bank of Montreal is good for everyone, what is good for Inco is good for everyone. It is that assumption that we are attempting to challenge by suggesting foreign-owned corporations in Canada, and this is supported by our own studies in the House of Commons, import much more of what they need from their home countries than they do from Canadian sources.

Put simply, if a foreign company opens up a branch plant in Canada its tendency is to obtain services and goods from the parent corporation as opposed to the Canadian company that is down at the end of the block, at the other end of town or, at the other end of the province or the country. One respects that. It is keeping the cash flow within the family, but it is not necessarily in the best interests of Canadian companies, large and small.

Companies tend to discourage competition with their parent company. Again that is totally understandable. If a branch plant from an American corporation is operating in Canada, it will not want to go into the international markets and attempt to compete with a parent company. I think that is only common sense. These branch plants are here to serve this little market and this little market only. Any attempt to sell more lumber or finished products on the world market is not part of their mandate. It is not part of their raison d'être; it is not part of the reason for their presence in Canada. In that case, the restriction is on a foreign company operating in Canada which is not necessarily here to expand in the best interests of the Canadian economy, Canadian suppliers, Canadian exporters and the like.

One could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. I think I would choose to end my comments by quoting from the Progressive Conservative Party's own task force on high technology. In the report we find the following:

> Recent data indicates that the research and development intensity of foreign subsidiaries in Canada tends to lack behind domestically-owned operations of comparable magnitude.

Perhaps I will have an opportunity to enlarge on that point this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—EXPIRATION OF BENEFITS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, once again this year ice is blocking many of the bays around the Island of Newfoundland and along the coast of Labrador. As in past years, fishermen, particularly inshore fishermen, are unable to get their boats out and to fish as they usually do. This has happened before; it has now happened again.

Fishermen cannot collect unemployment insurance benefits after May 15. After that time there is no income for them whatsoever. This situation has gone on and has not been corrected. I call upon the Government to correct the situation by bringing in measures to amend the regulations so that fishermen are treated on a par with other workers, and are allowed to collect unemployment insurance benefits until such time as they are able to go to work once more.

Failing that, I call upon the Government to do what has been done before, to make an ex gratia payment, a special allotment, for those fishermen who will have no other income after May 15, so that they will be able to feed themselves and their families until such time as the ice has gone and they are able to fish again.

UNITED STATES—IMPOSITION OF TRADE EMBARGO ON NICARAGUA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Canadians heaved a small sigh of relief yesterday at the news that we would not be going along with the American embargo on trade with Nicaragua.

President Reagan's failure to consult, or even to notify the Canadian Government, should tell us that it is very difficult to be a paranoid's best friend. President Reagan's bully-boy tactics do not even reflect the majority American opinion as expressed in the resounding House of Representative's defeat of his $14 million program to help right-wing rebels. President Reagan's cowboy diplomacy poses a grave threat, not only to the fragile economy of Nicaragua, but also to the equally fragile stability and peace of our world.

Canada has a responsibility to tell President Reagan that we do not support his fantastic goal of overthrowing the Nicaraguan Government. Rather, we should increase our aid to the people of Nicaragua and take immediate action to widen our trade. Let us tell the people of Nicaragua that we are indeed open for business.

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

CHOICE OF GRANDE PRAIRIE AS ALBERTA FOREST CAPITAL

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform my hon. colleagues that next week is National Forest Week, making forestry the focus for many celebrations across Canada. These festivities will provide Canadians with an understanding of the resource and its benefits. It is time for Canadians to appreciate our forest resource and to learn more about it.

I am particularly proud that the City of Grande Prairie in my riding has been chosen as this year's capital of Alberta. I will be with the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) this weekend as he presides at events in my own riding and in other communities throughout Saskatchewan and Alberta. The forest is a vital element in these communities. It provides economic, recreational, and ecological benefits.

As a nation we have been blessed with the wealth from this resource for centuries. Only recently we have realized the importance of preserving it through proper management, reforestation, protection against insects, disease, and forest fires, and through the use of improved forestry methods.

To mark these festivities the Minister of State for Forestry and the Forestry Service will provide Hon. Members of the House and members of the Parliamentary Press Gallery with a seedling of a genetically improved white spruce. This is our chance, through the care of this fragile gift, to show our concern and support for forestry in Canada.

In closing, I urge Hon. Members of the House to support the activities of National Forest Week taking place in their communities.

FORESTRY

SUBAGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON FORESTRY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, on April 30, 1985, the Canada-Quebec subagreement on forestry development was signed. Under that agreement, both Governments will promote forestry development in order to increase the availability of that resource, and foster the setting up of basic nursery equipment and, of course, of research facilities. This is a $300 million agreement over the five next years.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, for too long we have felt that our natural resources were inexhaustible. For too long we have utilized our forests without carrying out any real policy. This agreement is the trademark of a responsible Government. And believe me, the constituency of Champlain will derive more than significant benefits from it.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec forestry is one of the main sources of jobs. And since 1970, the number of jobs has been on a steady decline. From 14,815 that it was in 1970, it decreased to 8,994 in 1982, in logging operations alone.

To conclude, I am proud that we now have a forestry policy, and this means jobs. This also means an insurance policy on that national resource, because this Government will safeguard the heritage we will be leaving to the younger generations.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—EXPIRATION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the statement made by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). Indeed the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr Fraser) knows that the situation in Newfoundland this year with respect to ice conditions is almost unprecedented. The Minister knows that all along the great northern peninsula, the White Bay region of the province, and on the northeast coast, severe winter conditions are still being experienced and that we have pack ice going off the coast for miles. Also he knows that in 1984, and indeed in 1974, special incentives or payments were provided to fishermen who were unable to acquire an income at this time of the year because their unemployment insurance expired on May 15.

The Minister of Fisheries met with the President of the fishermen's union within the last 24 yours, who was here in Ottawa to underline the urgency of this matter. I ask him to respond through the House to all Canadians, and in particular to the people of Newfoundland who really have no other form of income to which to turn, as quickly as possible, in respect of this matter.

I know the Minister has the welfare and well-being of fishermen at heart. I know he will be able to convince his Cabinet colleagues, particularly the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), to come forward with some kind of answer very soon.

NATIONAL PARKS

RIDING MOUNTAIN—PROPOSED ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, all friends of Riding Mountain National Park, and those concerned with the preservation of our dwindling heritage of natural habitat, should be aware of a matter which poses a threat to the integrity of that park, the proposal by a Progressive Conservative MLA in Manitoba to construct a new road through the west end of the park.

Riding Mountain National Park is a world class heritage area. It is one of the richest, most diverse wilderness settings in North America, surrounded by intensive agricultural towns and villages. It is an island of wilderness, surrounded by human development. This home to thousands of elk, moose, deer, and beaver, dozens of wolves and coyotes, and the elusive lynx and cougar, is in its present healthy state because it has been protected by wise policies and laws over the past 50 years. We cannot permit this rich heritage to be violated by new roads into pristine wilderness areas. This road would disrupt vegetation and wildlife patterns, increase poaching and road kills, and increase the incidence of forest fires caused by the carelessness of passersby. The integrity of such a rich natural environment in southern Canada should be kept intact.

FORESTRY

SUBAGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON FORESTRY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Champlain (Mr. Champagne) has done, I would like today to stress before this House the importance of the recent Canada-Quebec subagreement on forestry, which was signed this week in Quebec City. Indeed, on Tuesday, April 30, 1985, I had the privilege of attending with some of my Quebec colleagues the signing of the subagreement on forest development.

Mr. Speaker, this is the fifth regional economic development agreement to be reached between this Government and the Quebec Government. This shows how much this Government has succeeded in reinstating a fruitful dialogue with Quebec, to the benefit of both levels of government.

Our Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) has succeeded in reaching with his Quebec counterpart a historical agreement. Mr. Speaker, this new $300 million, five-year agreement is the best ever signed by Quebec and Canada. Of that amount $190 million will be allocated to public forest development and $90 million to private forest development, on the whole representing the creation of 16,000 person-years of work.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the importance of this agreement for the Abitibi-Témiscamingue area. This agreement, in addition to solving in our area the problems of supply, will have important economic spin-offs, both in terms of job creation and with respect to the millions of dollars that will be invested in my area.

TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF SASKATCHEWAN EXPORTS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, recently the City of Saskatoon hosted one of the international trade consultations which the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary initiated in 16 centres across Canada. This initiative reinforces the importance which international trade plays in our economy, including the more than three million Canadians who depend upon international trade for employment.

In northern and central Saskatchewan wheat is not the only major export. We export potash, uranium, canola, plant and animal biotechnology, high-tech electronics, and agricultural machinery. As everyone knows, one of the major Saskatchewan exports is its ingenuity which contributes to Canada's future prosperity.

I feel the excitement of future international trade potential growing in Saskatoon. The combination of the research genius of the university, the innovation of the private sector, and the commitment of all levels of government, provide a formula for the prosperity that translates into jobs for Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and Canada.

With the assistance of my colleagues in the new Government we can develop the tremendous international trade potential that exists in Saskatchewan. The initiative exemplifies the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to get Canada going again and to get Canadians back to work. I applaud this initiative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—IMPOSITION OF TRADE EMBARGO ON NICARAGUA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, once again President Reagan, the President of a superpower composed of 250 million people, has launched vicious threats against Nicaragua, a small country of 2.5 million people, a country that only five years ago overthrew two generations of Samozan dictatorship and is now trying to build a democracy based on political, economic, and social justice.

The President has decided to impose a total trade embargo on Nicaragua, and to abrogate a U.S.-Nicaragua friendship treaty. The President has not taken similar steps against such "models of democracy" as South Africa, Chile, Guatemala, or even the Soviet Union, but in his opinion Nicaragua is just too evil and too dangerous. What complete hypocrisy and nonsense!

We must do everything in our power to denounce this misguided U.S. policy and to support those many Americans, including many Congressmen, who oppose it as well. I would likewise ask the Canadian Government to take a strong position against this U.S. policy, and to make its views known to the President of the United States.

PRIME MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, people here in Canada and around the world are praising the new course of action being led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), an outstanding world statesman.

S.O. 21

Mr. St. Germain: In eight short months he has re-established respect for Canada as a key player in the arena of international relations. The Prime Minister has made it clear that Canada is committed to meeting its international commitments, developing international trade, promoting world peace, and meeting its moral obligation to international aid and development assistance.

From the high priority the Prime Minister has attached to our extensive relations with our greatest trading partner, the United States, to the lead role that Canada intends to play at this week's Bonn Economic Summit, our country stands front and centre as an example of a modern nation committed to harmonizing global relations. The Prime Minister's performance under the international spotlight makes all Canadians proud.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REGINA TELEVISION REPORTING POSITION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, CBC Television in Regina is going to lose its national television reporter position. Henceforth, news of national importance from the Province of Saskatchewan will be covered from either Winnipeg or Edmonton, but not Regina. This is but the latest insult to the Province of Saskatchewan, perpetrated first by the Liberals and now by the Tories. The Liberals took away the taxation centre and transferred it to Winnipeg. The weather office was the next target of the Liberal Government to be taken out of Saskatchewan. As a result, services have deteriorated.

The Tories promised change. They told the people of Saskatchewan that they would do things differently. So much for promises. We are finding the same insensitive behaviour coming from this Government as came from the former Government. Tory restraint has meant an end to the Air Canada reservations desks at Regina and Saskatoon, and now Tory restraint has stripped Saskatchewan of its national television reporter who worked for the very network which was established to provide equal service for all Canadians.

If the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and the mandarins of the CBC have their way, Regina CBC which is considered to be one of the finest facilities of its kind in Canada, will no longer produce the Peter Mansbridges, Eve Savorys and Paul Workmans of the country. What will the Minister of Finance's Budget take from Saskatchewan next? Tory Ministers from Saskatchewan sit on their hands while the Government is turning Saskatchewan into a forgotten province.

AGRICULTURE

SITUATION OF QUEBEC PORK PRODUCERS

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I represent a predominantly rural riding, Beauce, and I am very much interested in the lot of Beauce farmers. Beauce now has some 900 pork producers who have been penalized since April 3 last when the American Government decided to impose a 5.3-cent excise tax on every pound of pork from Canadian producers.

I would ask the Minister of Agriculture of Canada (Mr. Wise) to make personal representations to Washington and undertake immediate negotiations with American authorities. I would suggest that spokesmen for the pork industry and the two levels of Government form a common front in this respect. Quebec pork producers export about 25 per cent of their production to the United States, and this tax will cost them more than $11 million in 1985.

We in Beauce riding consider that such an excise levy on pork exports is unwarranted since it is related to pork industry assistance programs, at a time when the already stagnating production is declining even further every month.

That is why I strongly urge the Minister of Agriculture to go to Washington at the earliest opportunity. The survival of thousands of Quebec and Beauce pork producers is at stake. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) may grumble all he wants, I will continue to defend the interests of my constituents.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING BY WEST GERMAN FLEET

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans told us yesterday that he would inform the Chamber what action he intends to take regarding a blatant violation by the West German fishing fleet of the long-term Canada-EEC fishing agreement. The Minister knows that the West German fleet has exceeded its quota by 300 per cent and is fishing a stock which is managed by Canada, a stock which we claim is a Canadian resource, and is implicitly realized internationally as being a Canadian resource. What will the Minister do about this shocking situation?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to echo what the Hon. Member has said. It is a shocking situation, and it is a blatant over-fishing and breach of understanding between this country and the European Community. Unfortunately, the German vessels have indeed taken over twice the allotted amount of fish from this stock which is viewed as being a Canadian stock. As well, there is a very serious conservation problem.

Earlier today the Secretary of State for External Affairs met with Mr. De Clercq, the EEC Commissioner for External Affairs. A meeting is scheduled on Saturday between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Foreign Minister of West Germany. I will be meeting with EEC officials on Monday, and I will be meeting with the Fisheries Minister of the Federal Republic of West Germany on Wednesday. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that this matter is viewed as being serious and is at this time being pursued vigorously at the highest level.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is not only shocking what the West German fleet is doing, but the Minister's inaction is shocking as well. I would like the Minister to verify to the Chamber that Canada sent a diplomatic note to the EEC one month ago protesting this overfishing by the West German fleet. Will he confirm to the Chamber that the EEC responded bluntly on April 17 to the Canadian mission in Brussels, saying:

We do not recognize Canadian jurisdiction over this stock.

Will the Minister verify that, and will he tell the House why he did not close ports, impose sanctions, or cancel this agreement a month ago?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member points out very correctly that protests have been launched. He also points out that there has not been a satisfactory response. What the Hon. Member also knows, and what is important for the public of Canada to know, is that in addition to cod stocks which the German vessels took within the Canadian 200-mile limit, the recent fishing has been taking place outside the Canadian 200-mile limit. We do not have the authority to interfere physically with that.

• (1420)

The Hon. Member asked me to close ports. That has been considered, but we do not think that at the present time that would be conducive to finding a solution. The options which we have, with respect to future relations with the EEC and the Federal Republic of Germany in this matter, will be discussed in the next few days. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want me to comment on those discussions before I meet with them.

REACTION TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY RESPONSE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has confirmed that the EEC ignored Canada's diplomatic protest which was made a month ago. So, the question remains. Why has the Government taken this lying down? Is it true that the reason is that the Prime Minister is in West Germany fishing for friends? Is that the real reason? While he is fishing for friends in West Germany, the West German fleet is here overfishing our resources.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that the probability of getting a resolution to this complex problem which, as I said, we do not have the jurisdiction to interfere with physically, is probably much better with friends than with enemies.

The Hon. Member, having raised a legitimate question, is now destroying the credibility of his outrage by trying to play politics. As I said earlier, extensive discussions are ongoing. I will be at those discussions on Monday, and again on Wednesday. I am sure that we will find an appropriate answer. The appropriate answer, in view of the fact that this stock is recognized as a Canadian-managed stock, is not to destroy the contractual agreement under which that understanding exists.

ACCESS TO CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans told us yesterday that he only heard about this matter on Tuesday. We now find out that a diplomatic note was sent a month ago, and that it was ignored two weeks ago. I do not know about the credibility and the outrage in the House today, but the Minister should get his facts straight.

The Minister said that the stock which is being overfished is outside Canada's 200-mile zone. He knows that the Spanish have been denied access to Canadian waters for the last half a dozen years because they overfished the same stock. Is he telling us now that the EEC can have its cake and eat it too? Is he telling us that the EEC can have a quota inside the Canadian zone, yet overfish just outside the limit and maintain that quota? It is one thing to try to use the Queen for a photo opportunity, but it is quite another to sell out the fishermen of Atlantic Canada in order not to upset the applecart in Bonn. What actions will the Minister take?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who has just risen in a state of high dudgeon—

An Hon. Member: Spurious indignation.

Mr. Fraser: Yes, it was indignation. It was justified indignation, except that it would be more helpful if members of the Opposition would put forward something constructive.

It is quite clear that unilaterally breaking our relations with the European Economic Community is not the answer to this problem. It would solve absolutely nothing. In fact, it would play into the hands of those particular German companies which are taking advantage of the situation. I would hope that Hon. Members would use some common sense and let us work this thing out.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF FISHING QUOTA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that we should unilaterally break off relations. I am suggesting that we should follow the EEC example. When EEC members decided that the import of seal fur into those countries, was not in their best interests, it was banned. That ruined the economy of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: If we decide that the EEC is overfishing our stocks and ruining the economy of fishermen in Atlantic Canada, it is quite simple. We do not break off diplomatic relations with those countries; we tell them that their licences are withdrawn and that they have no more quotas in Canadian waters unless they are prepared to live with the agreements which they signed. That takes courage and commitment. You have got to show some leadership to have that kind of action take place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the options which the Hon. Member has shouted across the floor of the House are, of course, options which are available. It would not surprise me, or others, if the concern of the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members in the House in all Parties will be very vigorously put—or, indeed, is being very vigorously put—to our friends in the EEC and our friends in the Federal Republic of Germany. I can assure the Hon. Member that I shall let the appropriate people know just how enraged he is today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—REQUEST THAT CANADA INCREASE TRADING LINKS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the unilateral American decision to impose a trade embargo on Nicaragua. It is an utterly disastrous decision, as I gather the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have said.

I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister, in addition to the social and economic assistance to Nicaragua that the Secretary of State for External Affairs said would be continued, and in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, will the Government consider compensating for at least some of the U.S. trade by encouraging Canadian trade in the crucial areas of machine tools, pesticides, fertilizers, and other products which have now been denied to Nicaragua by the U.S. embargo?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): As I told the media yesterday, Mr. Speaker, our diplomatic and trade relations with Nicaragua remain normal, and we intend to go on promoting international development. I would think that the trade embargo which has just been imposed by the United States has no extraterritorial connotations and, as a country, we will of course follow the situation very closely.

[English]

SUGGESTED ROLE FOR CANADIAN COMPANIES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. Perhaps I could turn to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to ask him that if no extraterritoriality will be applied—that is to say, that American subsidiaries which are operating in Canada can continue to export various goods to Nicaragua—can he also assure the House that the Canadian Government will give some active encouragement to Canadian firms and, indeed, Canadian subsidiaries of American firms, to fill up the slack which will be grievously difficult for Nicaragua, in fields such as machine tools, pesticides, fertilizers, and similar products?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that there has been absolutely no indication of any pressure being brought by Washington or other American sources to restrict Canadian companies from carrying on whatever trade relationships they feel are appropriate with Nicaragua. Of course we will monitor that type of thing. I can assure the Hon. Member that I do not anticipate that there will be any pressures of the nature to which she has referred.

BEEF QUOTA NEGOTIATIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that there would have been some active encouragement for Canadian firms to fill the slack, particularly in products such as machine tools. I hope that the Minister will give that encouragement.

In my final supplementary question I will return to the Acting Prime Minister, as neither the Minister for International Trade nor the Minister of Agriculture is in the House. I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister about the very critical matter of Nicaraguan beef quotas. For four months the Nicaraguans have been negotiating their 1985 beef quotas and they have not as yet received an answer on those quotas. Could the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion assure us that the quota on beef imports from Nicaragua will be kept at least at the 1984 level, which was 9.7 million pounds?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that in relation to beef quotas generally, including those which might apply to Nicaragua, the Government of Canada will be equitable and fair. Those quotas will be announced in due course.

NICARAGUA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations, and I also wish to inform her that we agree with the Government's policy of continued assistance to Nicaragua. Considering the fact that the Prime Minister said in London a few days ago that he wanted to speak on behalf of the Third World at the Bonn Summit, could the Minister give the House the assurance that the Prime Minister will raise the subject of the trade embargo imposed by the President of the United States on the people of Nicaragua and will tell the President of the United States that Canadians deplore a decision that will have a destabilizing effect on the poor people of Central America, and that here in Canada, people are asking him to encourage a process that is very important to the quest for peace in this part of the world, that is, to encourage the Contadora process?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I think that in Bonn, the Prime Minister will certainly mention the fact that the Third World should be present at the discussions because of their international impact. As whether there will be any discussion about Nicaragua and any kind of action in the light of the information we are receiving today, I do not think that is the primary objective of the Bonn Summit. I think it would also be premature to make any predictions as to what the Prime Minister will be saying on that occasion.

CANADIAN PEOPLE'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

I simply want to ask the Minister to let the Prime Minister know, while he is over there, how outraged Canadians are about this decision. The President of the United States lost the battle with Congress on his policy regarding Nicaragua, and today, he intends to make the citizens of Nicaragua pay for his defeat in Congress. I therefore hope that the Minister will forward this message to the Prime Minister and clearly explain the position taken by all Canadians on this issue.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, Canada's position is clear. I think our role has always been to promote dialogue and conciliation, and we are convinced that the best way to bring peace to the situation in Nicaragua is by helping the Contadora process, and we shall continue to provide assistance in this way.

[English]

SOVEREIGNTY

POSSIBLE APPLICATION OF UNITED STATES LAW TO INDUSTRY IN CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He will be pleased to know that I have just been in touch with an official of the United States Office of Foreign Assets Control in the U.S. Treasury Department, who said that the United States will be bringing forward regulations within the next few days to restrict the ability of Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies to export to Nicaragua. Specifically, the official said that if a Canadian subsidiary sells a product to Nicaragua which contains a significant of American content, then the parent firm will pay a significant penalty. This might mean, for instance, that General Motors Canada, Ford Canada, and Chrysler Canada will be prevented from exporting parts to Nicaragua.

Will the Minister, in spite of his earlier comments, immediately request a meeting with U.S. officials so that this unilateral action on the part of the U.S. Government will not end up preventing Canadian exports, and costing Canadians jobs?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I am sure that the House would be quite interested to know what his source is. All I can say at the present time is that if such regulations are received, we will naturally review them. We will certainly get in touch with American officials if we receive such regulations.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, to be precise, Ms. Catherine Mann with the U.S. Office of Foreign Assets Control was the individual who conveyed to me that regulations are presently being put together to restrict Canadian exports to Nicaragua. Other than being simply concerned, is the Minister prepared to say to the House and to the people of Canada, if it is the case that Canadian firms operating in Canada will be restricted in their export policy, that Canadians are quite prepared to take action on their own and do not need to be dictated to by the United States in terms of their export policy?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, it is very difficult to respond to a hypothetical set of circumstances such as he has indicated. I can only say that if it would satisfy the Hon. Member I would have no hesitation in asking one of our officials to get in touch with the source to which he has referred, and at least learn more detail.

INQUIRY RESPECTING SPOKESPERSON FOR GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). Yesterday, the Minister said that the Canadian Governement was considering guaranteeing a fixed percentage of the Canadian market to the Canadian textile, clothing and footwear industries. In Bonn, the Prime Minister wants to urge rich countries to open up their borders to goods from southern countries. We saw what little influence the Minister had in the Domtar affair. If the commitments of the Prime Minister are kept, it is obvious that the Minister has once more been telling us fairy tales. The Minister says one thing and the Prime Minister another. My question is this, Mr. Speaker: Who speaks on behalf of the Government?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member may I say that the comment to which he is referring was simply a comment which was made with respect to a general discussion concerning the so-called sunset industries of this country. I pointed out at that time that in talking to textile manufacturers, the shipbuilding industry, and like companies, we thought a longer term perspective, to the year 2000, for example, was most appropriate, and we would like to learn from them—and in our discussions we are learning—what they feel they need from government to give them some confidence to build the factories, to create employment, and keep Canadians working. That is the main concern of this Government, and I wish the Official Opposition would give us more support in getting Canada back to work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the North-South dialogue policy established by the previous Liberal Government has been retained by the present Prime Minister, does the Minister intend to strengthen the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board in the next budget so that the regions where textile industries are located can modernize and convert to new technologies, which would allow the Prime Minister to keep his commitments to developing countries?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the CIRB organiztion to which the Hon. Member has referred, I would be very interested to know what his view is, because his colleagues, when in government, proposed a sunset at March 31 next year. Is that still the position of the Official Opposition?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What is your position? You are the Minister.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In spite of the Prime Minister's assurance that native programs would not be cut, provincial organizations such as the Council of Yukon Indians have not yet received their funding for the current year. Because the Deputy Prime Minister's task force called for a "go slow" policy in settling comprehensive land claims, many Indian organizations worry that the delay in funding is part of the new government policy for native programs, and that cut-backs are coming. Could the Minister assure the House, and assure the Indian people, that the level of funding for the Council of Yukon Indians, and for other Indian organizations, will not be cut back from the current level?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question by the Hon. Member I would like to indicate to him, and to the House, that the funding has been approved for the Council of Yukon Indians. I had meetings with the regional director of my Department in Vancouver on Monday. Any questions were dealt with and final review was undertaken at that time. Next week myself and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development intend to make a more comprehensive announcement about the matter of funding for other organizations.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Crosbie: Your beard has gone.

Mr. Manly: That is true, it is. So is yours, John.

Could the Secretary of State assure the House that he is not attempting to undermine the funding for provincial and territorial organizations by funneling more money to the bands and not making money available to the provincial organizations?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that the Prime Minister issued a statement. The guidelines of any announcements made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, or myself, will be within the frame of reference outlined by the Prime Minister in his statement.

STORAGE OF DANGEROUS MATERIALS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Pierre H. Cadieux (Vandreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment or the Acting Minister.

In view of the obvious danger of any PCB spill and the outcry among the residents of the western part of Montreal, can the Minister tell us what he intends to do about the proposal of Reliance Power Equipment Ltd. to store 227,000 litres of PCBs in Pointe Claire?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The matter raised by the Hon. Member is very important. Unfortunately, the Minister is not here today, but I shall take due note of his representations.

AIR TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF NORDAIR SHARES BY SQT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As he knows, under the Aeronautics Act, federal authorities must rule on the purchase of Nordair shares by the Société québécoise des transports. Can the Minister tell this House what position the Canadian Government will take in this regard? Yesterday, the Minister of State for Transport said that the federal Government was in a quandary. What does the Government plan to do? Will it approve this transaction or not?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member is absolutely correct. There is a provision in the Aeronautics Act, Section 15(1), which governs that type of proposed transaction. There is also a provision in the National Transportation Act, and in the CTC regulations. When a formal presentation is made, the Cabinet will certainly consider it. But as of this date the latest information I have is that no such proposal has been presented.

REGIONAL CARRIERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Yesterday, the Minister of State said that it could take several months and I would like the Minister to tell us the reason for such footdragging. This is a very simple question. The transaction will be either approved or rejected. Relations between this Government and the Government of Quebec seem to have changed because it would be quite simple indeed for this Government to approve the request of the Quebec Government. Why this delay? Mr. Speaker, if the Minister refuses to answer this question, he might tell me what are the Government's intentions with regard to regional carriers. Is the Government in favour of a merger or does it want to promote greater competition?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before we are in a position to accept or reject the deal, we will have to see the deal.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RETENTION OF WINNIPEG AS REGIONAL HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport will be aware of the widespread concern in Winnipeg which followed the creation of a new position in the CNR, that of senior vice-president, to be located in Edmonton. Can the Minister assure Winnipeggers that Winnipeg will continue to be a regional headquarters for the CNR, that there will be no amalgamation of regions, and that there will be no outflow of CNR management jobs from Winnipeg to Edmonton?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yes, I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. As a matter of fact there will be a new CN regional vice-president appointed in the next few days or weeks. There is no contemplation of a mass transfer of people from Winnipeg to Edmonton. As I said earlier, this is a restructuring of management, and I think the Member should applaud the fact that the decisions affecting investment plans by CNR in western Canada will be made in western Canada. Clearly the management team which will be situated in Winnipeg, Edmonton, and Vancouver will be in a position to make those decisions in the West.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, we want more than an assurance that there will be no mass transfers; we want an assurance that there will be no significant outflow of management jobs from Winnipeg to Edmonton. We went through this a couple of years ago when, under the previous Liberal Government, there was a rumour that there would be a significant downgrading of Winnipeg in relationship to Edmonton. We now have a Conservative Government in power which said, before its election, it would look after western Canada, Winnipeg being part thereof.

I would like the Minister to say to Winnipeggers not that there will not be a mass transfer but that there will not be a significant outflow of management jobs from Winnipeg to Edmonton. This is what we need to know.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this Government has no intention of downgrading the role of Winnipeg as a transportation centre and as an important part of the CNR. The fact of the matter is that the growth in western Canada should augur well for the future of the CN operation in Winnipeg, including Transcona, because as the traffic increases it will clearly provide more jobs and more activity in western Canada, particularly in Winnipeg.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SINKING OF LADY MARJORIE FISHING VESSEL

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. This past Sunday HMCS Nipigon fired two shells into the partly submerged fishing vessel Lady Marjorie in order to sink it completely. I ask the Minister to instruct his officials to conduct a full and urgent inquiry so that the vessel owner can count on having his vessel replaced as fast as possible.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The short answer to that question by the Hon. Member for South West Nova, Sir, is yes. The vessel he speaks of, the Lady Marjorie, found itself in conditions of heavy seas about 60 miles northeast of Halifax on April 28. It took on water to the point where it was awash to the gunnels, its crew had abandoned her, and when asked whether they wished to reboard in order to attempt to salvage her, the response was in the negative and, because the vessel constituted a hazard to navigation, it was sunk.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—EXPIRATION OF BENEFITS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Around the shores of Newfoundland and along the coast of Labrador there is a very heavy ice blockade this year, heavier than we have seen in some years. He will know that after May 15 inshore fishermen will be unable to collect unemployment insurance benefits. That means until such time as the ice disappears there will be no income for thousands of inshore fishermen in Newfoundland and Labrador.

I ask the Minister what steps the Government is taking to deal with this very serious emergency. Specifically, is it prepared to amend the unemployment insurance regulations in order to treat fishermen on a par with other workers and assure their income until such time as they can get back to work again?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a matter of serious concern to the area that he and others represent. In the absence of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration I can say that the Government is watching this very closely on a daily basis. As the Hon. Member knows from the time he came to see me with a delegation from Newfoundland and Labrador, the matter is being treated very seriously, and I know he had the same response from the Minister of Employment and Immigration yesterday as well.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL PAYMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that response, but I want his assurance that he will speak to his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and if the Government is not prepared to amend the regulations, which I think is the first course of action, can the Minister in any case assure us that he will ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration at least to make a special payment available to fishermen this year to ensure some income will be in their hands between May 15 and such time as the ice leaves those bays?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Fisheries I understand full well the representations which are being made. The Hon. Member has my undertaking that I will be discussing this with my colleague, and other colleagues if necessary. I will pursue it vigorously.

TRADE

QUOTAS ON EUROPEAN BEEF IMPORTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and the Minister of Agriculture, my question probably should be put to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. Last December the Government put a stop to the importation of cheap, subsidized beef into Canada, by placing quotas on beef imports. A few months later we are hearing rumours that the Government is crumbling under EEC threats to take retaliatory actions against other commodities. Will the Parliamentary Secretary assure Canadian beef and veal producers that the Government will hold its position and not crumble under the pressure of the EEC?

● (1450)

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is indeed aware of this pressure. One should understand that beef imports are only one part of the import and export activities of the Canadian government, and that the Minister and his departmental offcials are presently negociating in an effort to find a solution. You can rest assured, Mr.

Speaker, that we will do our utmost to promote and defend the interests of Canadian producers.

[English]

REQUEST FOR COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for that answer. Will he suggest to the Minister that he stand firm against the EEC retaliatory threats? Has the time not come to take retaliatory action against them? Is it not now time for Canada to establish countervailing duties against this highly subsidized beef coming from the EEC?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the EEC retaliatory threats. It is important for the government of Canada to make sure that whatever measure it may take will not have desastrous consequences, because if it should bring the issue before the GATT, win or lose, it could find itself in a difficult situation. The high level of imports could be raised even higher, which would be disastrous. One should also understand that the government of Canada must also defend the interests of Canadian producers in other areas, for example honey and maple syrup producers in this country. We will make every effort to defend the interests of Canadian producers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENTS SIGNED WITH UNIONS BE TABLED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Ever since the Minister announced what he calls the new era in labour management relations in the Public Service, I have been asking him in the House to table the memoranda that he has signed or negotiated with the Public Service unions. The Minister has persistently said no to my request. In fact, the documents have been leaked to the press. Public servants are quite concerned. Superannuates are very disturbed. Will the Minister table those documents today so that people can rest at ease, read them, and understand them clearly?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I should like to point out to my colleague that those documents which have been described in the media as being signed agreements are agreements in principle which are the basis of the negotiations now under way. I will be pleased, Mr. Speaker, to table those papers in the House today because there is nothing confidential about them. We have to understand that they lay down the basic principles to be followed in the bargaining now under way and which I hope will be completed in the near future.

PENSIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in order to allay any fear and apprehension among retired civil servants, can the minister assure the House that they will be represented on the pension management board? Will he make sure that the 50,000 retired Canadians will be well represented?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can say that I have already held discussions with the advisory pension committee in which the pensioners are represented. I have had some discussions with the unions on the matter. And it is the wish of the government to have in the new advisory committee representatives of—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: It is absolutely true, you were there. You can argue but we clearly intend to promote the representation of pensioners in the committee looking after the plan which at last, after so many years, will be financially sound.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The day before yesterday, Canadian spokesmen for the textile industry held a press conference to ask for a toughened Multifibre Arrangement to stem the tide of imports from low-wage countries which is disrupting our markets.

In view of that problem, is the Minister considering the establishment of a parliamentary committee to give Hon. Members an opportunity to study the matter and see for themselves how important that industry is to Canada's and Quebec's economy?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's suggestion is very interesting. I think it might be fitting for me to remind him that we do have a study under way at the present time concerning this industry. We have certain other representations to come from industry sources. When we have those it may well be that, rather than setting up a special committee, we could at least consider making a reference to the appropriate committee so that the matter could be looked into as the Member is suggesting.

Oral Questions

PLANTING OF UNLICENSED SEMI-DWARF WHEAT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. I sent notice of this question to the Minister's office some time ago. I hope he has received some briefing on it.

The Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board has estimated that over two million acres will be seeded this year to the unprescribed, short-strawed semi-dwarf wheat varieties. Since these varieties are not licensed for use in Canada, and cannot be imported into Canada, will the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House where the seed will come from for this crop and how it will get into the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the question of my colleague and I can assure him that I will convey his remarks not only to the Minister of Agriculture, but also to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

[English]

IMPORTATION OF SEED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could refer the rest of the question to the Minister of Agriculture who is in charge of this particular aspect of our law. Have any charges been laid for illegal importation of seed in the past? Will there be charges laid in the future to make certain that importers comply with the laws of the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I noted the question, Mr. Speaker, and my colleague may rest assured that he will have an answer at the earliest opportunity.

HEALTH

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on April 17 of this year, the Minister met with representatives of the Quebec Federation of Committees of urea formaldehyde foam victims, and according to newspaper reports and comments I received from these people following that meeting, they were very disappointed. Today, Le Devoir reported some very important information, namely that a clinical study had been made of 75 children examined at Sainte-Justine Hospital. Dr. Jacques Lacroix revealed that an abnormally high percentage—65 per cent—of these children who had been in contact with UFFI had suffered from headaches, emphysema and similar disorders.

I would like to know whether as a result of this new medical study, the Minister intends to ask the Minister of Finance to reallocate funding for scientific research, because we must not forget that our children's lives are at stake.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we have been informed of the latest findings concerning the health of these children. I shall be completing our analysis of the facts on urea formaldehyde foam, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will do everything that is necessary to protect the health of Canadian citizens.

● (1500)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as the spokespersons for the Federation remarked, it has been seven months since they gave you the facts, and considering the results of this study and the very real threat to our children's health, I do not think we can afford to wait another seven months. Could the Minister give the House the assurance, here and now, that he will obtain additional funding for scientific research to study the health problems of these people?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that we shall be completing our analysis of the facts and we will take action as soon as possible, in the interests of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Petition presented by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) on Wednesday, May 1, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

I am also in receipt of a Question of Privilege.

PRIVILEGE

PARLIAMENT HILL DEMONSTRATIONS—REGULATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I raised this matter of privilege yesterday, I was provoked specifically by what appeared to be a double standard in enforcing regulations on Parliament Hill as between Members of Parliament and other citizens of Canada. I have had a chance to look at some of the precedents.

I believe there are matters of freedom of expression and freedom of contact with Members of Parliament which are perhaps more appropriately raised here than the matters of the administration of the grounds of Parliament. The precedents indicate that, for whatever reasons, the parliamentary precinct under your direct control includes the buildings but not the grounds of Parliament Hill. Therefore, my question is not so much about whether or not it was appropriate for the RCMP to remove tables at which Members had been distributing literature a few hours before, but now relates to a new set of regulations that were adopted by Cabinet last week.

These regulations now impose what I believe are quite extreme restraints on the time honoured right of citizens to petition Members of Parliament, demonstrate their points of view and to communicate their points of view to the public as well as to Members of Parliament here on the grounds of Parliament Hill. I suggest that that is the question which must be considered.

Let me point out that under the regulations it is now an offence to occupy a public work if a peace officer says it is. The dictionary definition of "occupy" is "to be in". Let us say that someone is on Parliament Hill for five minutes. If a peace officer who may be acting under the direction of the Minister of Public Works says that that person is "occupying" and therefore violating the new revised nuisance regulation, that individual can be asked to move. If that person refuses to move, he or she can in fact be arrested and removed from Parliament Hill. Their personal property can be removed from Parliament Hill and they can be subject to a fine of $400.

I believe that constitutes very arbitrary police power to interfere with the time honoured right of persons to in fact demonstrate on Parliament Hill. Joseph Maingot in Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, refers to the fact that it is not the precinct of Parliament that is sacred but the function.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, contempt of Parliament can lie in interfering with the work of parliamentarians or in actions which might have the effect of interfering with the work of parliamentarians. I suggest that that is what is happening now as a result of a new power that did not exist in the past to interfere with access to parliamentarians by people who wish to demonstrate.

Mr. Maingot states in the book Parliamentary Privilege in Canada that since Parliament Hill has always been a public place, restricting the movement of the general public on the grounds would probably be considered excessive.

In 1971 the Committee on Procedures and Organization spoke of the need to strike a reasonable balance between the importance of allowing the public reasonable access to the House of Commons on the one hand, and the necessity of preserving the security of the House on the other.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that I am required to ask him, in his presentation of his case of privilege, to indicate his point of privilege early in the proceeding. The Member is citing precedents but I must know to what his precedents refer. Could he tell me how his privileges have been breached?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it is a time honoured privilege of Members of Parliament to have and enjoy freedom of speech and freedom of access. I am suggesting that the freedom of access to Members of Parliament by people who wish to come to Parliament Hill is now impeded by the creation of a power in the hands of the Government and the RCMP to prevent people from coming to Parliament Hill and staying there to express a point of view.

There was evidence last week that that power is in fact applied in a discriminatory fashion. One demonstration is permitted and another form of demonstration is not permitted. One object or structure is permitted and another is not permitted.

I suggest that it would be extremely difficult for Members of Parliament to carry out their duties if members of the public were not allowed access to Members of Parliament. For example, if police officers were to prevent access to a Member's constituency office in Toronto or Vancouver, that would be a contempt.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member make it clear if he is saying that his privileges are breached if someone is not allowed to have a demonstration on the Hill? Is that the case he is making?

Mr. Cassidy: I am saying that my privileges as a Member are breached if an arbitrary and excessive right to interfere with demonstrations on Parliament Hill has been created, and therefore prevents the expression of opinion on Parliament Hill.

I am prepared to move that the matter of restrictions to freedom of expression in the vicinity of Parliament Hill which have been recently decreed in regulations by Cabinet be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Of course, I understand that that motion will depend on your ruling as to whether there is a sufficient case.

However, I suggest that because there have not been restrictions on public access to Parliament Hill, apart from the Criminal Code restrictions and reasonable arrangements made with the RCMP, something new has been injected which is potentially of grave concern. It could be used to stop all demonstrations on Parliament Hill, and I do not believe that that is in the interest of parliamentarians, but represents potentially grave interference with our traditional privileges. For that reason I wish to see this matter referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Public Works on the same point.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to put everything in perspective with respect to the question of privilege. The Hon. Member who is raising the question of privilege today is not providing full information to the people, I am sure of that. First of all, we must be honest. The new regulations now in force authorize the Minister of Public Works to protect the grounds which are the responsibility of the Department, and they do not favour any group. Contrary to what the Hon. Member said, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that some groups would not be allowed to demonstrate. I told the media over and over again that it will still be possible to demonstrate in support of certain ideas or principles, but under supervision and to the extent that a request has been made to the proper authorities. That is clear.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that most Canadians got the message that certain people wanted to get across. It should now be clear to Hon. Members and everybody else that, particularly on Parliament Hill, rules must be observed, and those rules are defined in an order in council of which the Hon. Member is fully aware, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I do not need to reserve on this question. The Hon. Member believes that citizens have and should have a right to demonstrate within the precincts of Parliament. I take his representations seriously, but he must make a prima facie case that the privileges of Members of the House have been breached. That is the question of privilege that must be put before the House.

If I understand the Hon. Member correctly, it is his view that a citizen's privilege has been breached and he believes that there may in fact be some different application of rules so that someone's right to hold a demonstration may be different from others. While that may be true, the Hon. Minister says it is not. That is a question for debate as to the fact.

● (1510)

Perhaps the Member is trying to extend the concept of privilege. While I fully accept the right of Members to receive citizens and I fully expect citizens to be received by their Members in offices, or anywhere that is appropriate, it is difficult for me to find that there is a question of privilege. In fact, I cannot even find that there is a prima facie question of privilege put by the Hon. Member with regard to the argument he is making, that somehow access to a Member has been prevented in any way whatever.

Therefore, I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions No. 19 (Mr. Axworthy) (p. 4313) and No. 20 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4314).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed, as I rise to conclude my few comments on Motion No. 19 and Motion No. 20, that the Government has decided on what I think is the first Bill to muzzle the voices of the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada, perhaps one of the most important Bills this Parliament will debate. I think there are many other Bills that certainly would have moved much more quickly through the House of Commons, but we are talking about a Bill entitled Investment Canada that will in a sense set out the economic agenda for our country for possibly many decades.

We are sending out a message to foreign investors, foreign entrepreneurs and foreign industrialists. We have made countless comments to this point in terms of identifying ways and means to improve this legislation. We have submitted thoughtful amendments to this Bill from the Liberal caucus, as well as from the New Democratic caucus—

Mr. Stevens: Ninety-nine.

Mr. Riis: Ninety-nine says the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), and I thank him for that clarification.

Mr. Stevens: Forty-seven were ruled out of order.

Mr. Riis: These amendments are proposed in an effort to improve legislation. That is why we are here.

The Government comes forward with a Bill that, in its wisdom, it feels is in the best interests of Canada. We have concerned Members of the Opposition Parties who have gone through the Bill clause by clause thoughtfully in committee and have made a number of suggestions and recommendations on how we feel the Bill could be fine-tuned. One could comment about the Bill itself; but we recognize there is a majority of government Members and we thought we owed the Government a favour in terms of trying to identify how we could improve clauses of this Bill. After thoughtful deliberation as we moved through that very appropriate process, the Government says "We are not interested in hearing any more comments from Members of the Opposition. We are not interested in hearing any more comments from our backbenchers, or the thoughtful reactions of these duly elected representatives of the people of Canada. That is it." We are being muzzled.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Enough is enough.

Mr. Riis: "Enough is enough", says one of the Tory Members. This is, as I say, perhaps the most important Bill that we are going to debate in this session of Parliament in terms of what it is going to do to the future of the Canadian economy and Canadian companies attempting to operate in conjunction with foreign subsidiaries in Canada.

We have just seen dowing Question Period the reason we are concerned about this Bill. The United States has decided in the last number of hours to curtail trade with Nicaragua. We can debate that issue and the merits at some length. Setting aside the wisdom of that decision, that same American Government has now said to its subsidiaries operating in Canada, of which there are many—as a matter of fact, most of those foreign branch plants in Canada are American-owned—if the products they are putting together, manufacturing or creating in Canada have a significant amount of American content, like automobiles, machinery and all sorts of other items, they cannot be exported to Nicaragua. Canadians at this time might be quite encouraged to expand trade with Nicaragua.

Where do those people now turn if they cannot turn to the United States and its allies? To where did Cuba turn? We are right back with the Cuban issue. Cuba had nowhere to turn but to the Soviet Union. Now the United States is saying the same to Nicaragua. It is saying to Canadian branch plants and subsidiaries in Canada that if the content of their product is sufficiently American they cannot trade with Nicaragua. That is influencing our trade policy.

● (1520)

Now can the Minister sit there, a toughtful Minister on this particular issue, without saying that we will not accept that, that we will not have anything to do with a foreign power dictating export policy for companies in Canada?

[Translation]

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Opposition Member who just spoke, I would like to stress the point that the debate has been going on for quite some time, first here in this House, then in committee. We had 102 amendments for consideration in committee, and we now have 99 amendments here before us. More than 80 hours have already been spent on this legislation. Compared with the FIRA Bill, which was discussed a number of years ago, we have already spent more time on Investment Canada than the Government of the day spent in this House considering the old FIRA legislation.

I would like to remind the House that we have already spent enough time, and Opposition Members have had all the time needed to express their views.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the Minister's arbitrary action in deciding that the Government will impose closure on the remaining stages of Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Bill. As my colleague just said, this Bill is probably the most important economic Bill we will see in this session or, quite possibly, in the entire four-year life of the Government. Under those circumstances, the Government's action in deciding to take some 80 amendments, which have yet to be considered in the House of Commons, and simply throw them out the window and dispose of them in one day is arbitrary and unjustifiable.

Mr. Stevens: They were dealt with in committee.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister is perfectly right. However, he realizes that the committees are not televised. People interested in seeing the debate and in knowing what is happening were unable to see the debate in committee on the particular amendments put forward by the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party, and quite possibly the Government as well. Yes, they can read them, I suppose, but it is appropriate that Parliament deal with them in a measured and reasonable way. They are important amendments, particularly when there are some serious and important differences of views in terms of what the Government is trying to do with the Investment Canada Bill, and what we have tried to do in terms of improvements by means of the amendments we have proposed.

The particular amendments now before us relate to an attempt to free up Investment Canada, the new agency which is being created, from being completely under the thumb of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). That is an important point. In theory, Investment Canada is being created in order to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians, as well as by non-Canadians, and in order to ensure enforcement of conditions and undertakings which are entered into by non-Canadian investors who are making investments in Canada. In practice, so long as the agency is under the thumb of the Minister there will be no guarantee that those particular provisions will be implemented.

I recognize that Parliament is a talking shop; it is a place where people talk about these issues. In the end, the legislation is passed and has to be implemented by the Government of the day. However, when the issues relate to foreign investment, and when foreign investment is responsible for close to 60 per cent of the manufacturing industry of Canada, and inhibits to such a degree the ability of Canadians to export into our major natural market in the United States, those questions are worth more than a few days of debate, followed by the decision of the Government to impose closure.

For example, if the Government had said that there were six or seven groups of amendments still to be considered and gave one day to each group of amendments—perhaps we on this side of the House would have objected to that—the citizens would have said that it was not totally unreasonable. Then in each area of amendment it would have been possible to have some debate in Parliament itself, in the House of Commons, not just in committee. That was not the Government's decision.

Is the Minister suggesting that 25 minutes should be given to each of the remaining groups of amendments, so that we can get through them all in the course of the remaining day of debate which will come after the guillotine motion has been put down? Does he honestly believe that we can have any kind of reasonable debate on groups of amendments which in some cases may be 10 amendments with different ideas, albeit in a related area? Does he believe that we can have a debate on all those amendments in 25 minutes, with 10 minutes from the Opposition and 10 minutes from the Government—

Mr. Stevens: You have already had 80 hours.

Mr. Cassidy: Of course we have had time in committee.

Mr. Stevens: And here.

Mr. Cassidy: I am talking about the right to debate here. We have been moving along at a measured pace. The pace is not the pace the Minister likes. The Minister is impatient. He wants to sit down in the Chateau Laurier and talk with his friends from the business community.

I would like to comment on a matter raised a few minutes ago. It is very interesting that when the Opposition wants to say things the Government does not like, the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion comes into the House and announces that he will impose closure on the debate which is taking place. If there were huge amounts of legislation to be considered, the case would be stronger. We all know that the House has been spinning its wheels because the Government has effectively had no legislation on the plate of Parliament. There is no pressure of stacked-up legislation; Parliament is not faced with a bottleneck. We have lots of time to consider these matters, but the Minister has decided that it is uncomfortable.

In the meantime, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) has decided that it is equally uncomfortable for Parliament to have a handful of demonstrators outside seeking to communicate an opinion. This is a Government which promised openness and accessibility when its Members campaigned for office during the course of the election campaign last summer. Somehow what was promised then and what is being delivered now is very different. Like the Liberals who went before, they will be secretive and restrictive. They will restrain debate, take away the rights of citizens to come and protest, do things in a quiet way and try to prevent any sharing of information with respect to this particular Bill. If the Minister has a comment, I will listen.

We have tried to open up the process. We have tried to inject an element that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion does not ride roughshod over Investment Canada without at least having the backing of his Cabinet. At least Motion No. 19 provides that Investment Canada will carry out the function of conducting reviews of investments by non-Canadians and will provide to other federal Departments and agencies information about means to stimulate investment by Canadians in Canada. Can anyone object to that kind of provision? Is the Minister really saying in opposing these amendments, as I believe he is, that he is opposed to measures to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians? Is that his position? From time to time that seems to be his position.

The Government came to power determined to do one thing in the economic sphere. It said it would open our doors to business around the world and that somehow that would get the Canadian economy moving. It will ignore the talent and initiative which exists among Canadians. Instead it will court by every means possible investment coming into this country. The Minister should know that there are too many examples of companies and foreign investors taking advantage of the Canadian openness that already exists in that particular regard.

I think of the way the Government and the people of Manitoba were treated by the promotors behind Churchill Forest Industries some 12 years or 15 years ago. Those promoters came in, took dollars away from Canada, took lots of profit away for themselves and left virtually nothing in return. That kind of history has been repeated again and again. I think of the way the rights of working people in Nova Scotia were trampled by the pressure of Michelin Tires when it twisted the arm of the Nova Scotia Government, until the point that that Government passed one of the most repressive anti-labour pieces of legislation the country has seen in order to prevent the workers at Michelin plants from having the right to acquire a trade union. These kinds of things have happened many times.

The Minister will say that some good things have come out of foreign investment in Canada. I am sure that is the case as well. However, every other country recognizes that there must be pressures from Government to ensure that foreign capital acts responsibly and in the interests of the host country. Somehow I believe that this country is really no different.

We have consistently experienced Canadian initiative, invention and companies being restrained from developing products, from carrying out research and development and from developing markets in the United States because those companies or organizations were controlled by multinationals based in the United States. That, my friends, is the kind of thing that leads me to have grave misgivings regarding the degree to which the Government is bending over backward to accommodate foreign multinationals through the Investment Canada Bill. That is why we in the New Democratic Party believe it is important that we strengthen the powers of Investment Canada, and that the Bill puts at least as much emphasis on the encouragement of investment in Canada by Canadians as it does on the regulations and surveillance of investment in Canada by non-Canadians. That is the reason for the various amendments and that is why I believe this matter must be debated further.

I am adamantly and categorically opposed to the decision of the Minister who has simply gotten bored with listening. The Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary may have spent 80 hours in committee listening to people speak about these matters. But, as the Minister knows from his time in Cabinet and from his time in Opposition, it sometimes takes a long time before arguments made in the House of Commons begin to be heard by the people of Canada. That is why it is important that this debate continue. I would call on the Minister and the Government to withdraw the misguided decision to stifle debate in the House of Commons on this important Bill.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise at this point of the debate to address not just the motion now before us, but also to reflect on the Minister's action which actually imposes closure on the bill.

I am not at all surprised at the Government's action, Mr. Speaker, because this is the second time the Progressive Conservative Government has imposed closure on this legislation. They did so through the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary on second reading, and now it is done once again, this time by the Minister himself, at report stage.

Canadians certainly will be surprised to see the impatient, high-handed ways used by this Government which given its overwhelming mandate, its overwhelming majority in this House, should not have to use such tactics, to use the guillotine on the few Liberal and Conservative members who were elected.

There are so few of us, Mr. Speaker, that it is absolutely amazing that the Government should want to prevent us from speaking on this Bill. But that being said, the Governeent's tyrannical force cannot be stemmed by this Opposition, but it is my view that the Canadian public will judge the Minister's actions, his impatience, his determination to prevent a full, enlightened discussion of this Bill which, in my view, will cause serious prejudice to the Canadian economy. What will this legislation do in fact? It will give unrestricted carte blanche to anyone wishing to take over companies in Canada.

This legislation, so to speak, empowers the Government to sanction the takeover of Canadian companies by foreigners, without laying down specific review criteria to find out whether those investments will have any beneficial impact, create more jobs in Canada, or help our Canadian regions. In some way, it amounts to throwing us bound and gagged into the hands of foreign capital, mainly the large multinational corporations.

The Liberal Opposition tried to move a series of amendments during the clause by clause study of this Bill in committee. A whole series of amendments, including one in particular, were moved. We recommended that Clause 6 of the Bill be amended and that the Government ensure that certain criteria be met before an investment is approved. Included in this amendment were the following:

(a) develop a comprehensive information base on all sources of investment in Canada and on the differing factors which affect investment;

(b) work with the relevant federal and provincial departments and agencies to develop a favourable climate for private investment;

(c) seek to coordinate public sector and private sector investment planning through consultation;

(d) act as a clearing-house for information on investment incentives offered by all jurisdictions in Canada;

(e) promote by all manner of means the expansion of equity investment by individual Canadians;

(f) generally carry out such activities under the direction of the responsible Minister as will stimulate Canadian investment and improve Canadian investment policies and programs.

What the Liberal Opposition wants, Mr. Speaker, is for an objective review of the facts to be carried out by competent public servants assigned to that work.

As we read and understand this Bill, the Minister seems to be keeping for himself the discretionary powers to approve or turn down takeovers by foreign companies and to approve or turn down any foreign investment arbitrarily and strictly as the whim takes him and depending on whether he got up on the right side of the bed or not that morning, without an independent and objective review by public servants assigned to that work. In my opinion, the powers that the Minister is asking for are excessive. This Government, which had such close ties with large multinationals, this Government which went literally on its knees before the oil multinationals by destroying so shamefully the Canadian National Energy Program and giving away millions of dollars to the oil multinationals, while refusing a few thousand dollars to organizations asking for government assistance for social programs, is now showing its bias towards big business and against workers and ordinary Canadians.

I therefore believe that the purpose of this Government and the Minister sponsoring this Bill is to find another way of making life easy for the big multinationals so that they will come to Canada and take over sound Canadian businesses in order to have a solid base for competing unfairly against our Canadian businesses. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that under the former legislation passed by the previous Government, the Director of Combines Investigations played a major role.

He could intervene to block a take-over, as well as stop foreign investors from moving in and hurting their competitors in Canada. This bill which the Minister has introduced ignores the need for fair competition to exist in Canada and for small and medium size businesses to continue playing an important role in the Canadian economy.

I think this bill is bad, because it delivers us, bound hand and foot, to the multinationals. I think it is unfortunate that the government has chosen to turn down the amendments which the Liberals had proposed in committee. I think it is even more unfortunate—dare I say outright indecent—that this majority and tyrannical government should not only stop the opposition from proposing amendments, but also prevent it from speaking out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) has the floor.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the Investment Canada Bill in a way which is entirely different from the way the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) just did. The Investment Canada Bill will create jobs. We have introduced this bill to make it possible for investors—

Mr. Rossi: How?

Mr. Bissonnette: Because I listened very politely and attentively while the hon. member was speaking, Mr. Speaker, I should appreciate if Hon. members opposite kept quiet and allowed those who want to contribute something positive to the debate to do so, contrary to the Liberals who have contributed only negatively over the past 70 hours.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill will create job opportunities, develop new technologies, put Canadians back to work and restore what Liberal governments have destroyed over the past 16 years.

I think that this bill should be implemented as soon as possible. I think also that we should welcome foreign investors intelligently—

Mr. Rossi: Intelligently! That's not like you!

Mr. Bissonnette: —and politely, and use their know—how and capital to create new jobs opportunities in Canada. The reason we are here is to restore what the previous government has destroyed over the past 16 years. I urge you, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to expedite these matters and make it possible for the House to adopt this bill without any further delay.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak again, today, to Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, because I think the amendments we have on the table of the House are extremely important. However, before speaking to the amendments, I would like to say that the Government advised us at 3.15 this afternoon that it would impose closure on this Bill. What that means? It means that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has decided to gag the Opposition. He does not like what he is hearing, and he obviously has no intention of accepting any amendments. This is an affront to democracy. It is despicable and intolerable.

Mr. Gauthier: They are going to vote for 470 minutes!

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, I did intend to speak to the two amendments now before the House, namely Motions Nos. 19 and 20.

The clause proposed by the Government is far too vague as it stands. This is how it reads: "There is hereby established an agency, to be known as Investment Canada, to advise and assist the Minister in exercising his powers and performing his duties under this Act."

That is what it says in Clause 6. We believe the two amendments being proposed, one by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the other by the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) are extremely important, since they are aimed at expanding the agency's role.

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, read the amendment we are proposing in order to make sure my hon. friends opposite know what they are turning down. The first two lines remain the same. We want to add the following and I quote:

—in exercising his powers under this Act, to secure notifications and conduct reviews of investments by non-Canadians under this Act, and provide to other relevant federal departments and agencies information about means to stimulate investment by Canadians—

Why do the Members opposite object? I am sure I do not know, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, it is all very straightforward. We are trying to give a clear definition of the agency's raison d'être that will prevent any problems due to lack of communication and result in better decisions. First of all, we want the agency to obtain advice on investments by non-Canadians, and second, to provide information to other federal departments and agencies.

It is perfectly normal to try and encourage Canadian investors to invest in this country. We could not tolerate opening our doors to foreign investment, if it meant closing them to our own investors. It is the only way for the Government to ensure that Canadian investors will be considered first.

Many of my colleagues have mentioned the importance of keeping Canadian money in Canada. It is just as important to make it attractive for our investors to put their money on the Canadian economy. By informing other departments and federal agencies on ways to promote investment by our entrepreneurs and industrialists here in Canada, we will be promoting the development of a healthy competitive climate.

As I said before, I think it is vital for Canada to monitor the quality of investments made in Canada. We have every reason to welcome foreign investment, but we must not discourage our own businessmen and women from undertaking new ventures here in Canada.

The results have already shown that it works. Investments made in Canada by Canadians are of far greater benefit to the economy than foreign investment, as a result of higher levels of research and development and better export opportunities, and would also reduce our dependence on imports.

Another reason why I think it makes sense to present that motion is that it would enable us to screen and control investment requests. Indeed, if we carefully screened the various investment requests, we would be in position to inform the departments and agencies of the Government about the possibility to ensure an adequate Canadian participation.

If we consulted other countries likely to invest in Canada and put their suggestions to good use, Canadians would be assured that their rights and their funds are protected.

The pride of our businessmen and businesswomen is badly shaken by this Government. It is not a matter of appropriating the ideas of foreign entrepreneurs, but one of finding a common ground leading to more satisfactory co-operation between non-Canadian and Canadian entrepreneurs.

● (1550)

Once again, Mr. Speaker, our jobs are at stake. We must protect them. We are told that we must open Canadian markets to foreign investors, but we must not forget that Canadians who are in a position to participate in this country's economy may give up any interest they might have had, as a result of the Government's lack of action.

We have said many times that lay-offs are a very real threat in a company controlled by non-Canadians. I think that if we encourage Canadian investors, we will not run this kind of risk. As it stands, the Bill ignores the plight of Canadians. In the past, through the FIRA program, we have always tried to consider the Canadian content of investment in this country. In very recent years, Canadian businessmen and women have regained confidence in this country and in the possibility of being considered full partners. The Bill as it stands does not provide any protection for Canadians who want to invest in our country. That is why our amendment is so important. It guarantees that the Government will not turn its back on Canadians and offer foreign investors the whole pie. In fact, I find it hard to understand why the Government should try to attract non-Canadian investors, when many Canadian investors would be delighted to get the kind of encouragement they need to market their ideas.

This Government claims it favours consultation and co-operation. We also know that it has great plans for affiliation with the United States. We agree that Canada is a country that welcomes entrepreneurs. However, it is our duty to ensure that the autonomy of Canada and the rights of Canadians are not affected, especially in the small- and medium-sized business sector.

After more than six months, the Government opposite has no excuse for its inertia. Putting the blame on the previous Government is no longer an excuse. Canadian men and women are fed up, and it is high time this Government showed it can act responsibly. The time has come to take the concerns of Canadians seriously and to defend the interests of our Canadian industrialists and entrepreneurs. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I support the motions proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset how shocked I was moments ago when the Minister announced that debate would be cut short by imposing closure on this bill. If I have used the word "shocked" it is because, I remember not so long ago when we sat on the other side, that the Opposition would rake us over the coals and call us everything under the sun precisely because after a while—I am not talking about days, but weeks and sometimes months—the Government would invoke closure. I was shocked and I am surprised to see that my colleagues on the other side of the House do not seem to be overly enthusiastic about this Bill. Fewer and fewer of them take the floor, excepting the Minister, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Bissonnette), who came in a while ago to practice speech-making, probably because he is planning to make another depressing announcement later on.

For all practical purposes, Mr. Speaker, the Foreign Investment Review Agency is dead. Naturally, we must have another organization to replace it, but I am wondering whether Investment Canada is really designed to replace FIRA. In my opinion, they have turned the whole thing into a political issue instead of trying to improve the existing structure of FIRA, something which could have been done by introducing more radical changes. But no, everything has been thrown overboard and now the Minister alone will be responsible for foreign investments in Canada.

I am sure the Minister is an intelligent man, no doubt about that, but I wonder where he will find the time to deal with all the investments that will be made in Canada. I agree that we need investments in this country, because with a small population of 26 million we simply cannot keep all our industries operating at full capacity. We do need foreign investments.

If we want to instill some kind of confidence in investors, perhaps we should just put our own house in order. We should streamline our legislation. We should also remove from the sphere of politics the problem of foreign investment in Canada. How come the government is going to set up another agency which will report to the minister and tell him whether particular investments are good, not as good, really bad or against the national interests of Canadians?

Let me turn to another phenomenon. In the past, many companies based in the United States, especially in the pharmaceutic industry, chose to set up Canadian subsidiaries. According to the reports they filed with the federal government, they merely said that they had spent a certain amount for research. In fact, it was merely for income tax purposes. There was almost no scientific research done in Canada. Such research was done in the United States. Thus, our researchers could not work in their own country and Canada could not create the jobs normally related to research work.

In fact, when we started putting some pressure on them, the drug companies, for all practical purposes, moved to the United States. If you have no control over foreign investors coming into Canada, you cannot expect them to behave just like Canadian companies with research rights and funds for research which might be expected to create jobs. But I do not think that an agency inside some kind of government department or under some minister's responsibility will amount to much.

Mr. Speaker, as for the person who will be appointed head of the agency, I shall not of course mention patronage, because it is all in the mind of some people—I have nothing against patronage, Mr. Speaker, nothing at all. It has become normal practice, normal political practice, but the problem with the Progressive Conservative Party is that throughout the election campaign, they behaved most improperly by suggesting to the Canadian voters that patronage was a thing of the past, that patronage was out. Mr. Speaker, patronage is with us more than ever before!

• (1600)

Mr. Isabelle: To come back to the appointee to that most blessed position of head of the agency, I am sure it will be a man that we do not know yet, but who certainly had some dealings or connections or some link with the Progressive Conservative Party during the last election campaign. Mind you, once again, I have nothing against that, but I do not think it is the right way—

Mr. Bissonnette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) on a point of order.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, I feel the Liberal Member is sounding off about patronage which has nothing to do with the Bill before us respecting Investment Canada. He is straying from the subject-matter of the Bill, and I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call him to order and ask him to speak to the matter under consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must unfortunately inform the Minister that this is not a point of order. I recognize the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle).

Mr. Isabelle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, I simply want to say that patronage does not exist, because I am quite certain that the eventual appointee will be completely independent, without any connection with the Progressive Conservative Party, nor indeed with the Liberal Party, but will certainly be a school buddy of someone we know quite well in this House.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, if an agency such as the one that will eventually be established can be biased from the start, how can it provide independent advice about some foreign investors? I am certain that those appointed president and directors of the agency have friends in the United States or in Great Britain. I was listening to our Prime Minister, who is on a marvelous trip, and we wish him every success in the mother country, namely Great Britain. He will be travelling throughout Europe trying to prove that Canada exists, and I hope that he will keep up the good work, but he has opened our door or at least given some hope to the British who would like to invest in this country. The door is wide open. However, we should perhaps keep in mind that, a few years ago, when the EEC was established, we had some problems, not with British investments, but with our trade with Great Britain. We should perhaps remember that little game, which the British have never really forgotten, I am quite sure.

Naturally, the Liberal Party has some experience in Government since we had the confidence of the people for 20 years and perhaps even more. We suffered some setbacks in 1957 and 1984, but such setbacks are not eternal. They last but a moment. As I was saying, with its long experience, the Liberal Party moved many amendments, perhaps 47 or 50, and I can promise one thing, and that is that we will make the Canadian people aware of our amendments which were aimed at improving investment in Canada by having all propective investors in this country follow the same rules as the Canadian companies.

To conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, we should also help small businesses. Often, small businessmen are in a quandary for lack of money. So the federal Government might help them out, Mr. Speaker, instead of allowing several of them to be taken over by American interests. And I am not sure whether a few years from now, some people, looking back on the Bill before us today, will not be reminded of the passage in the Holy Scripture that says: It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he cast into the sea. I doubt that some will actually say this about the Progresssive Conservative party, but I believe some will entertain this thought that will not, I know, come true.

Mr. Speaker, as for us we have made our contribution, and I hope that my colleagues who howl here and there in this House will at least rise and try to prove that their Bill is sound, otherwise I shall have to conclude like all Canadians who follow our proceedings on television across the country that this Bill is definitely a bad one because even the Conservative Members do not want to stick up for it.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): In speaking to this motion today, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House that when the Minister announced his intention to introduce this bill setting up Investment Canada, he indicated that it would have a positive role, that its purpose was to encourage both foreign and Canadian investors to invest in Canada.

I think therefore that this bill is inconsistent with the stated goal, for there is not in this clause a single mention of the main purpose of the bill which is to promote investments in Canada.

We are dealing today with Clause 6 which establishes an agency to advise and assist the Minister in exercising his powers and performing his duties under this Act.

But, as I said, nowhere does it state that the agency's role will be to promote investments in Canada. As a matter of fact, in committee, the Minister and the Chairman of the committee turned down the amendments Liberal members had proposed authorizing the Minister to promote investments by Canadians. And it seems to us that the government is not prepared either to accept Motion No. 19 which suggests that the Minister should exercice his powers to stimulate investment by Canadians in Canada. If the minister claims that we have adopted a negative attitude, it is simply because each time we have proposed an amendment for the purpose of clarifying the goals of this bill or increasing the powers given to the Minister to fulfil his responsibilities, the government turned it down. The government is now seeking to impose closure, which clearly demonstrate its unwillingness to listen to our suggestions or to consider our amendments. They often urge us to come up with suggestions. And when we do come up with suggestions, they refuse outright to listen.

I mentioned yesterday a suggestion made not by our party, but by the Science Council Canada, to the effect that it would be normal in a bill of this kind to have provisions allowing the government to review all takeovers of Canadian firms which have been the recipients of government research grants.

I understand the government simply rejected this suggestion in committee, without trying to understand our point of view or explain its refusal to consider any amendment proposed by the opposition.

• (1610)

[English]

The unwillingness of the Government to accept any amendment which attempts to clarify the role of the Minister or to permit him to encourage Canadian investment in a well specified manner, is totally contradictory to the words of that Party during the election campaign. We all remember the famous promises that investment would flow into the country the minute the Government was elected. The famous Investment Canada Bill has been tabled and we are still waiting.

I think most Canadians knew that the actions would not meet with the rhetoric. Most Canadians knew that it would take more than the election of the Government and the introduction of one Bill to bring about the economic changes which the country needs. Most Canadians know that a whole range of economic policies in the tax and regulatory areas must be presented to enable our economy to compete in the tremendously competitive world in which we live today.

It is nine months since the election of this Government and we have yet to see a Budget. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this far surpasses the record of the Clark Government which, in spite of all the errors it made, took only six months to introduce its Budget. We know what happened to that Government. Perhaps that is why the new Government has taken so long to introduce a Budget. Needless to say, the expectations of all Canadians are very high in this respect.

An Hon. Member: Fifty-seven per cent today.

Mr. Berger: Fifty-seven per cent today. We will see whether it is 57 per cent one month after the Budget that we are all awaiting at the end of May.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to what I was saying a moment ago, that is the need to encourage foreign investments in Canada, or rather the need to have this kind of policy. This government said that the former Foreign Investment Review Agency prevented foreigners from investing in this country. That is why the old act is being repelled and this change is put forward. But I would like to bring to the attention of the House an article published in today's Le Devoir where if is said that, according to the Quebec's agent-general in London, Ottawa gives too much importance to foreign investments in this country. So what did Mr. Patrick Hyndman have to say in an interview he gave yesterday to a Quebec journalist in London? He said that he was a little worried to see this governement make the promotion abroad of foreign investments in Canada its top priority. He noted that in the past Ottawa's priority, that is our Liberal government's priority, was instead the promotion of export. We had set up a wide range of initiatives: the Export Development Corporation, the efforts the previous government made to enable Bombardier to get contracts for the New York subway and the Mexico subway. We had set up a wide range of initiatives to encourage exports by Canadian businesses.

The general delegate of Quebec is somewhat disappointed with this new direction the Government is taking, but then, he says that federal involvement may not be necessary because he notices in London an ongoing competition for foreign investment. No less than six provinces have delegations in the British capital, namely the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Nova Scotia. He says that the Ontario Government in Toronto has a delegation of 40 members, seven of whom do nothing but foster foreign investment in Canada. He notices that the province of Quebec has only some twenty employees, three of whom are responsible for all aspects of economic promotion.

Therefore, as shown by a distinguished representative of a provincial Government, namely the Quebec Government, some remarkable efforts are being made at present to foster foreign investment in Canada. Foreign investment will not bring about economic recovery; it is through the promotion of Canadian companies and exports, and thus the creation of our own economy, that we will maintain our current standard of living. That is the reason why we have introduced this amendment which, unfortunately, the Government has rejected offhandedly, and I strongly deplore the fact that this Government rejects all positive amendments put forward by Opposition Members.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions No. 19 (Mr. Axworthy) (p. 4313), and No. 20 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4314).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming the debate. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth time since the beginning of the debate on Bill C-15 that I rise in this House to speak and call the Government's attention on—

An Hon. Member: No need for that, you are wasting time!

Mr. Garneau: Government members speak about time being wasted. I wonder who wastes more time in this House. Would it be the Liberal Members who are working hard to improve legislation, or those Members blissfully seated in the fat of their regained felicity, as a brilliant Member from Quebec once said, sitting there and applauding but never saying a word on any legislation?

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed because since the opening of this debate, we have called attention first to the principle, and, of course, the huge Government majority won the day, even though the arguments put forward were limited to a few speeches. We resumed the debate in committee, a number of suggestions were made to try and improve the wording of the Bill to make it more operational.

This time, the debate is on Motion No. 19. It seeks to a certain extent to break down the divisions between the various responsibilities of the Agency. It is beyond me why they should want to create an agency, appoint a President to hold office during pleasure which is somewhat like the appointment of a judge, and he cannot be removed—but the Agency to be headed by that President, that high official during pleasure, that Agency has no power because in the final analysis, the Minister alone can make decisions. And when we proposed amendments to clause 5, in the first series of amendments which will be voted upon a little later, and hopefully a few will be passed, the few remarks we heard from the Opposition were negative which leads me to believe that, in spite of my hopes, the amendments will not be passed.

We come back with this Motion no. 19 to amend clause 6 creating the agency; we would like to circumscribe somewhat those powers of the agency which remain extremely ill-defined, and given the fact that the responsible official or the chairman of the agency who is still removable because those powers are not defined, the agency itself will not be able to take any initiative. We would like to be able to amend clause 6 to enable the agency, to be known as Investment Canada, to advise and assist the Minister in exercising his powers and performing his duties under the Act, but we would also like this agency, this person who is to play almost the role of a judge in a quasi-judicial court, an administrative commission, this person whose position is considered important enough to make him or her removable, to have the power to receive opinions, to have investment by non-Canadians reviewed under the present Act. We would also like to see the chairman of this agency who will be, as I said, a person with a very special status, have at least the power and the responsibility to offer the other departments concerned the information available to the agency in order to favour foreign investment, and particularly investment by Canadians.

If all this is not done openly, Mr. Speaker, if the agency does not have the power under the Act, to communicate information ... Let us take for example a foreign company wanting to buy a high technology company and let us say the asking price is $5.1 million ... Would the Progessive Conservative Members in this House not wish that the chairman of the agency could have the opportunity and the power under the Act to get in touch with the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) and tell him the following: Listen, Mr. Minister, here is a company which is going to be taken over by foreign capital for a price which exceeds the maximum by only $100,000. We are forced to give an opinion, to make a decision. Would you not have, in your area, businesses of another size, a little larger or even a little smaller, which could buy that company with adequate financing? But in the context of this legislation, the Minister alone may take action and the Agency is not empowered, as set out in Clause 6, to go and consult the Minister of State for Small Businesses or any other Minister such as the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) when his own area of communications is at issue.

We would like the mandate of the Agency as described in Clause 6 to be broadened somehow and the President of the Agency to be allowed a certain amount of discretion that would enable him to consult his colleagues. Otherwise, all facts remain confidential and he can divulge them to no one but the Minister who alone has the power to make decisions. Amendments to Clause 5 that would have made the Minister exercise his powers not alone but within a ministerial committee were rejected. It is most likely that the proposal now under consideration will be rejected as well.

We asked first that the powers be granted to a ministerial committee. That was refused. A ministerial committee? Denied. The Minister is now the only authority. We say that the Agency should have at least the chance to consult and to relay information. Of course, Mr. Speaker, people who have been in office for a while are often a lot more careful about legislation than people who do not have that experience.

Members of the Opposition as well as Members of the Government should mark my words. After this legislation has been in effect for a while they will be the first to react negatively to decisions taken by the Minister alone or by an Agency that lacks the power to consult them in their area, either through small businesses, the Minister responsible for Technology or the Minister of Communications. There is no way to override the law and, since the Minister is almost like a judge, he can disregard all objections and hide behind the law, saying that the Act and the powers referred to in Section 6 do not give him any leeway. Members will see what will happen if they have in their riding, companies which are doing better than average. If a company is worth $100 million, there cannot be very many buyers. Smaller companies, in the $5 million range, Mr. Speaker, can employ many people, but the investment is not so high that money cannot be found for a take-over. We believe that this amendment would improve the Bill and I do not understand why the government is acting so stubbornly by refusing to broaden slightly the extremely limited scope of these sections as they now stand.

Mr. Speaker, the second part of the proposed amendment deals with information. Would you not like, as government members who are not part of the inner circle, to be informed of what is happening? Things are going to happen in government departments and you will learn about them in the media. Would you not like to be officially informed? The Science Council of Canada mentioned the importance of publishing information. Imagine for a moment a company which would have received from the Department of Technology $300,000 or $400,000 in subsidies to develop a project. A foreign investor comes along, and the Minister responsible for granting that sum of money does not even know, since notices are not required, that the $300,000 he has given to Company X are going to be used by foreign investors, when Canadian interests might have wished to use it or to buy that company!

Mr. Speaker, I hope that government members instead of viewing this as an exercice in futility will look at our representations and warnings as a positive input which might be of some benefit to all Members of this House, and in particular it might be advantageous for Canada to have the greatest possible number of businesses owned and operated by Canadians thus giving Canadians the opportunity to buy businesses that would otherwise be sold to foreign interests. If government members do not see all of this, it is due to the fact that they are not aware of it, and according to clause 6 of the bill, the agency does not have the authority to give this information through the various departments involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 19 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

[English]

The next question is on Motion No. 20 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

[English]

The next motion for debate is Motion No. 23. However, the mover of Motion No. 23, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), is not here. Is there unanimous consent to allow another Hon. Member to move the motion on behalf of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East) (for Mr. Langdon) moved:

Motion No. 23

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 6 to 10 at page 6.

[Translation]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 24

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 43 to 48 at page 6.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 25

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 49 and 50 at page 6 and lines 1 to 43 at page 7.

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, before addressing myself directly to the amendments at hand, I think it is worth commenting on the recent actions taken by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) who introduced closure to the House. This Minister has never been known for his delicate sensibilities when it comes to Parliament. I think we can now say that his nickname, which used to be "Sinc the Slasher", can now be turned into "Sinc the Slink." He is hiding behind his huge majority, afraid, as is his Government, to face the music—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —afraid to face what they know to be the truth that this is a bad Bill, bad legislation and bad economics.

Mr. Towers: You should be the last one to make that comment.

Mr. Axworthy: This is perhaps the worst kind of authoritarianism when a Government uses its majority to hide behind, to suppress debate, to suppress the opportunity for the public to know exactly what it is facing and what the consequences are of the legislation.

What about those fine virtues that Conservative Members of Parliament used to promulgate when they were members of the Opposition after 40 days of debate on the Western Grain Transportation Bill when we brought in closure? After five days of debate on this Bill, the Conservative Government finds it necessary to slink with its tail between its legs away from the hot and important glare of public debate and discussion about a matter that affects the economic welfare of millions of Canadians. That is a sign of what a lousy Government we have. Its Members are afraid to speak up for their convictions and their own rights.

It will not be long before the Canadian people will understand what a group of mealy-mouths we have on the other side of this House. Government Members do not have the ability, the will or the motivation to defend themselves on their own legislation.

Nowhere is that more clearly seen than in the amendments we have brought forward under this grouping. We are dealing here with a section of the Bill dealing with exemptions for those categories of companies or activities that are totally excluded from any form of notification or review. They get a free ride. They do not even have to register with Investment Canada to make their investments known. Let me point out, for the edification if not the endorsement of Members opposite, just what this means. In Motion No. 24 that we have brought forward we are suggesting that it will be almost a criminal act of folly for this Government to exclude from notification foreign transactions dealing with real estate developments. This Government exempts any form of foreign enterprise dealing with the investment in rental real estate the revenue for which comes from the rental market.

It was but a year ago that some 13,000 tenants in the City of Toronto were faced with total eviction from apartment blocks and the total disruption of their living accommodation in the famous Seaway-Greymac affair. The principal operators were a group of numbered companies that had their registration in that wonderful free enterprise area called Lichtenstein. Under this Bill, this group of numbered companies will be totally excluded from having to notify Investment Canada of their intentions or willingness to buy into real estate in this country. Can you believe that we are now exempting a whole category of investment in what is perhaps the most vital and delicate areas affecting Canadians, their housing and their habitation, from any form of review or notification? That is the intent of this legislation. It is hard to believe, Mr. Speaker. I would think that those 13,000 tenants, who were faced with the most dire consequences last year because of the financial shenanigans and finagling that was going on using numbered companies registered in foreign locations, would not find it so amusing that this new Government of theirs, for which some of them may have voted, is totally relinquishing any protection for real estate development.

My colleague has argued time and time again that this is a Government that must be sensitive to rental housing. We see just how sensitive this Government is in Investment Canada. I am not saying the Government should have to review every transaction. Real estate deals do not even have to be notified or registered. Anybody can buy a group of condominiums in downtown Vancouver, Toronto or Winnipeg, get into the kind of flip deals that we saw in the Seaway-Greymac Affair, put tenants out on the street, and then this Government can say, "We did not know. We had no responsibility". Why? Because this Government has excluded this category under the Investment Canada Bill.

How can Members opposite consider that to be a good piece of legislation? How do they consider that they are protecting the interests of Canadians when they are providing a wide open screen for wholesale transactions in the housing field without having any set of responsibilities placed upon the foreign investor or upon the Canadian investor who wants to use a foreign location as a cover-up for fancy deals as we saw in the Seaway affair? I am not making this up. It was on the front page of every newspaper for four or five weeks. The former Government of Ontario, the Conservative Government, former as of about nine o'clock tonight, was faced with one of the most serious embarrassments of its life because of this transaction. Yet here we have the new Mulroney Government, the great defenders of Canadian interests, throwing it away, not even interested in that kind of transaction.

Similarly, in Motion No. 25, what else is being excluded totally from any form of notification? Investments by life insurance companies. That is a $4 billion portfolio annually. Life insurance companies, according to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), are part of this new system of what is called one-stop shopping arrangements. These companies can get into a whole variety of investments. They can circulate funds from Canada through foreign subsidiaries and back again. They too are excluded not only from review in Investment Canada but from any notification.

I do not attribute any undue motivation to those people in life insurance industry, but this is an open invitation to avoid the other requirements of the Act by channelling portfolio investments through insurance companies in order to get themselves into deals which will not be subject to any form of assessment or judgment. I would make the same comments on the proposal put forward by the New Democratic Party in Motion No. 23 dealing with forms of financial assistance. Once again we are dealing with a case where properties or enterprises are acquired and, because they are used as collateral, they become a form of indirect acquisition which under the Act is subject to review if it happens in the normal fashion. If a company gets an indirect acquisition because of its collateral holdings, because it gave financial assistance to another company, it is not covered by any notification or review procedure.

I can only assume that the Minister and the drafters of the Bill were in one of their sort of nocturnal moments when they were not paying much attention to the finer points of the legislation. How they would let a matter so crucial to ownership in the country once again escape any assessment or judgment really boggles the imagination. But they have done so. I think I have shown the key areas—real estate, life insurance or indirect acquisitions through financial assistance. All three are very common forms of enterprise and transaction, and they totally avoid any accountability under this legislation. This opens a wide area of investment where there will be no information or no ability on the part of the Government of Canada to ensure that the interests of Canadians are protected in this area, nor will there be any opportunity provided for remedial action.

I put the proposition to the House that if ever there was a set of amendments which could be used and adopted by the Government to improve its own legislation, clearly this grouping fits that particular definition. As I said yesterday, I am afraid the Government has become a know-nothing Government. It does not want to know what is good for it. It does not want to listen to constructive proposals. It does not want to accept amendments which make sense. The Minister laughs. That is the attitude of the Government. It has a large majority, so it does not have to pay attention to the Opposition. Government Members can proceed in an arrogant fashion because they have a majority. Many countries have been ruined by that kind of attitude. They simply say that Parliament does not mean anything any longer. They feel that they do not have to listen to Parliament. They can go to committee and invite people to make representations, but they do not have to listen. They do not have to listen in committee. They do not have to listen at report stage. They can steamroll whatever they want through the House.

That is a Government which is doomed to destruction, for all its protestations about consultation. It is a facade, it is phoney. The Government does not want to listen. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is simply a Sammy Slick, interested in getting headlines. Real consultation means that there is a response at the end. There has to be a willingness not only to listen but to respond. The Government has absolutely no intention to do that. We have seen this in spades in this Bill—nothing in committee and nothing at report stage. It brings in closure, closes down the House, gets the legislation through and goes ahead and makes mistakes, even though, for all intents and purposes, the Opposition is here to do nothing else but try to help the Government in terms of its own folly and its own mistakes.

We are presenting these amendments to try to ensure that Canadians in the rental market will not be subject to the kind of disturbance in their lives which they faced in the Seaway affair, and to ensure that life insurance companies are at least required to notify the Government when they make foreign investments and collateral arrangements for investment purposes. We are proposing measures to improve the legislation. If the Government is not interested in improvement, it can live with the consequences.

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to some of the remarks made by the former Minister. I should like to correct the record. For the Hon. Member's information, with regard to the Greymac sale, the number of people affected was 25,000, not 13,000. Those people made submissions to FIRA and to the Liberal Government. They were advised that that sale was none of FIRA's business. They were turned down by the Liberal Government. The tenants then went to the provincial PC Government and were protected by legislation passed in the Province of Ontario.

It is not a matter of what rules we have or do not have. The question is whether or not a Government is sensitive to the needs of the people. The Liberals have proven in the past that even though they had all the rules, regulations and laws in place—they do not care, whereas Conservatives have proven the opposite.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate, but unfortunately, the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) has left, and that is too bad, since he is responsible for protecting a sector that creates the most jobs in Canada and Quebec.

As all Members of this House are aware, this sector is particularly vulnerable to the impact of foreign investment. I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) explained this very well, and I think it is quite easy to understand. If only the Conservative Members would understand there is a real threat to the housing sector. In addition to the threat to the small- and medium-sized business sector, if the amendments proposed by my hon. colleague are not adopted, this may have very considerable repercussions for the housing industry, an industry that is extremely important and essential to all Canadians because after all, everyone needs accommodation.

Mr. Speaker, we know this Government ... Why are we afraid? Why are we proposing amendments? To protect Canadians. It is our duty to protect the men and women of Canada. It is not our role to protect the Government or the Ministers. It is the duty of every Member of this House to ensure that all Canadians across the country, whatever the province, region, town, city or municipality they happen to live in, have the assurance that their homes are protected.

Let us take a look at what the Government has done in this area. It has cut unilaterally the funding for residential rehabilitation assistance. Mr. Speaker, if we look at Bill C-15 and at what this Government has done in the way of cutbacks in its housing program, the question arises whether it is not opening the door wide to speculators. If the Government no longer helps small landlords renovate their accommodation and maintain rents at reasonably low levels, someone is going to offer to take their property off their hands and that someone is foreign investors, who will have plenty of money to invest. However, as soon as they buy up buildings, streets and whole villages, they will completely change the social and economic climate in a community, Mr. Speaker.

I know of a case in the Laurentians where people were sold condominiums that have yet to be built. They have already paid $7,000 each. There must be some form of protection for that which is most important to every Canadian, namely, his home and property. Is there a Member in the House who does not think his or her home is important? I think it is, Mr. Speaker. And I think it is only reasonable to ensure that information is available. It will be too late, when in our ridings or maybe in the riding of the Minister responsible for small- and medium-sized businesses, one day he will wake up to find that a whole block has been bought up by foreign investors who may decide to convert rental accommodation into condominiums and evict the tenants, thus completely disrupting their lives. Is there a way to make at least one or two Progressive Conservative Members aware of this problem, not to make speeches about it here in the House, Mr. Speaker, but to rise in caucus and say: Listen, some things make sense, it is simple and clear, our duty is to protect the people? With respect to this Bill, everybody agrees that we need foreign investments, but I would much rather see Canadian men and women take the lead and assume that responsibility. I am sure that all Members in the House are in favour of programs to help our young people become entrepreneurs to promote Canadian industry and create the jobs we need. It does not mean we should prevent foreign investors from coming here to buy goods and help us grow, but we have to make sure that any development, any investment and any measure taken here meet the needs and aspirations of all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, we in Canada have long-standing traditions in the fields of labour relations and social development. I have in mind a sector which may be threatened if not enough information is made public. Perhaps we should not roll out the red carpet for some investors who might come here and create the odd job, Mr. Speaker, while at the same time doing a lot more harm than the few jobs they might create in the long run would be worth.

I am referring to the social field. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are blessed with the best health care and social security system in the whole world. We enjoy free and universal health care. But, Mr. Speaker, if we lack information and are without means to control foreign investors, what guarantee do we have that those people in every province and every region of the country might not change the systems which Canadians have built up over the years? Speaking of Conservative Governments, it seems that former Premier Miller is having a hard time tonight. His mandate will have been short-lived, and I know he said that he was in favour of extra billing. Mr. Speaker, this shows the influence of people from other countries who are used to two types of medicine, one for the rich and one for the poor. We have to keep a balance in Canada and the amendments moved by my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and by the members of NDP, therefore by two different parties who agree on this matter, should make the Progressive Conservatives more aware of our views, Mr. Speaker. I feel this is important and I trust that some of the Progressive Conservative Members are thinking about it, because the impact will be felt in all our constituencies.

Mr. Speaker, not only do they refuse to listen to reason, not only do they refuse to listen, not only do they refuse to make amendments, but they have now reached the point of imposing closure. Mr. Speaker, they are taking unfair advantage of the majority they won in the last election, and I warn them to be careful. I remember what happened in Quebec when I was a Liberal Member in the provincial Legislature. At one time, there were 102 Liberals and 6 PQ members, but three years later, the Liberals were gone. I warn the Members opposite not to take unfair advantage of their majority because the voters do not like to be muzzled in this place. The House of Commons is the place where the differences of opinion of the people should be voiced. I am happy to see that the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) is back.

An Hon. Member: He is the best of the lot.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, when someone has to say that he is the best, it is because not too many people will say it about him, which means that he is not that good. Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to tell the Minister and all the Progressive Conservative Members is very serious when we see what their Government with its enormous majority is doing by gagging us and passing motions to prevent people from speaking up in the House of Commons.

Second, Mr. Speaker, there were two persons who expressed the views of a number of Canadians on Parliament Hill, namely the peace camp. This Government, early one morning, shamefully sent policemen armed to the teeth to send these peaceable people away. Those people and the rest of the Canadian population will remember.

Mr. Speaker, three harmless persons were chased away early one morning. This Government sent the police after them as though it wanted to arrest criminals. All that was missing was a tank and an F-18.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) on a point of order. He will probably say that the comments of the Hon. Member are irrelevant.

Mr. Bissonnette: Exactly, Mr. Speaker. How long will we have to listen to such nonsense?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has 30 seconds to conclude his speech.

Mr. Malépart: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the previous Minister is in charge of a chicken coop—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) does not have to speak to the point of order, because I have already ruled on that. He has the floor again to conclude his speech. He has 30 seconds left to do so.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, we were having an intelligent debate until the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) barged in. He thinks he is still in his chicken coop taking advantage of his employees.

Finally, I would like to remind all those people, all the Conservative Members, that in one or two years' time, if the amendments are not passed and nothing is changed, those same people will be crying out loud, but it will be too late then and you will be responsible.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this part of today's proceedings is nearly over. As pointed out by some of my hon. colleagues, I have noticed that no Progressive Conservative Member has spoken today. On one of the most important Bills to come before the House of Commons in this session, virtually no Progressive Conservative Member has spoken, with the exception of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Towers: If you had been here five minutes ago, you would have heard one.

Mr. Riis: My comments—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member would allow me as a government Member to speak before five o'clock, he would not have to worry about the point he has just made.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I heard what the Hon. Member said. I hope he does have an opportunity to share with us his views on this Bill. However, as he will know, the Government has virtually imposed closure on this Bill. The Government has decided that there will be no more debate on the most important piece of legislation to come before Parliament in this session. I do hope he does have an opportunity to speak.

I find it peculiar that although representatives of the NDP and the Liberal Party have stood in their places for the last number of days to pose questions, with the assumption that Hon. Members opposite would rise to attempt to answer those questions, we have heard virtually no response. One can only assume that government Members are unable to answer the questions that have been posed.

Let us deal with the fundamentals of this Bill. Since we in Canada have more foreign control over our economy than most nations of the world, why is it that Members opposite feel that the solution to our problem is to have even more foreign control over our economy? That is not a rhetorical question. It is a reasonable question to pose. I see that the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) is present. I expect to hear from him in response to that question within the next two days as there are only two days left in which to debate this issue.

If a debate on foreign control of the economy were to take place in any other Parliament of the world, the place would be in a total uproar at all times. What other country of the world would tolerate a manufacturing sector that is 40 per cent owned and controlled by a foreign country? What other country of the world would tolerate for a moment having 80 per cent of its petrochemical industry owned and controlled by foreigners? No other country in the world would tolerate this; yet the Government says it wants even more foreign control without monitoring what it has monitored before.

The Government says that it does not want any reviews or notification. If sources from Saudi Arabia came to Canada to purchase huge tracts of land or sectors of rental accommodation, the Government would say that that is quite fine. According to government Members, we do not want to be notified of or to have to review such takeovers. We assume that what any foreign business does in Canada will be good for the Canadian economy and good for the people of Canada.

● (1700)

I could stand here for days and days and list all sorts of very specific instances in which foreign business has not been in the best interest of the Canadian society. Foreign companies have not always behaved in a positive and productive manner in terms of Canada's interest. A number of foreign subsidiaries were operating in my constituency, but they closed down. They closed down not because they were not profitable, not because they were not performing the proper research and development, and not because they could not expand their operations. They closed down because their parent companies, in the United States or in Germany, decided that in their corporate interests, those businesses should be closed. That is not in the best interest of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 174?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING REGISTRATION OF PROVINCIAL AMATEUR SPORT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Leo Duguay (St. Boniface) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be empowered to study and report on the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to permit the registration of amateur sport bodies created under provincial statutes as amateur athletic associations in order that donations to them be treated in the same manner as donations to registered Canadian amateur athletic associations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion I bring before the House today is very straightforward. It is, however, of great importance to amateur sport bodies created under provincial jurisdiction and, in particular, to the young athletes which those associations support. The purpose of the motion is to enable provincial sport organizations to raise funds within a province in a manner which is consistent with that which is already acceptable under the terms of the Act with respect to federal amateur athletic associations.

I would like to compare the national and provincial organizations, and to do so I will read into the record the objects of a provincial sports organization in Manitoba and compare it with the objects of a national sports oranization. One of the objectives of the provincial organization is:

To foster, through the provisions of funding, the development of national and international calibre athletes in Manitoba for all nationally recognized sports.

I would like to compare that with a national organization which has the objective of selecting and training members—and in this case it is the National Ski Team—to represent Canada in national and international competition.

The objective of the provincial organization is:

To assist in the development of proper coaching programs for Manitoba athletes.

The objective of the national organization is to:

Provide guidance, information and assistance to the divisions and zones of the association in respect of these objects and in the development of programs for competitive and non-competitive skiing.

The objective of the provincial organization is:

To promote sporting and recreational activities for all Manitobans.

The objective of the national organization is to:

Encourage support of its programs by the public generally.

I am trying to point out that provincial sport organizations, provincial amateur athletic organizations and their federal counterparts, try to support the same thing, that is, sports in general and young athletes in particular.

In order for the House to understand why I am suggesting that the Act should be amended, I will deal with the structure of the current Act. The current Act states that for the purpose of computing taxable income, a taxpayer may deduct amounts which are applicable under Paragraph 110.1(a), for example, charitable donations or the aggregate of gifts made by the taxpayer in the year to registered charities or to registered Canadian amateur athletic associations.

This Section clearly shows, Mr. Speaker, that registered Canadian amateur athletic associations are charitable organizations. The donations they receive are deductible for income tax purposes. This Section must be amended in order to include as well provincial amateur athletic associations.

[English]

Certain questions come to mind. The basic question is: What is a registered Canadian amateur athletic association? The definition in the Act states that a registered Canadian amateur athletic association means an association that was created under any law in force in Canada, that is resident in Canada and that has, as its primary purpose and its primary function the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada on a nation-wide basis. Section 149 of the Act further defines amateur athletic association as non-profit associations.

The current Income Tax Act goes out of its way to define, for tax purposes, a registered Canadian amateur athletic association in order to permit it to issue tax receipts as a non-profit organization. The Act goes out of its way to ensure that national associations operate on a nation-wide basis. However, as I have previously indicated, the objects of national associations and the objects of provincial associations are almost identical.

If we look at the regulations of the Act, we realize that the Act had to go out of its way to ensure that amateur athletic associations, which are regional in nature or provincial in nature, are excluded from giving tax receipts. To redress that discriminatory provision, the following amendments would have to be made. With these amendments, the Income Tax Act would read as follows:

Section 110(8)(b)

"Registered Canadian amateur athletic association" means an association that was created under any law in force in Canada, or any province of Canada, that is resident in Canada, and that

(i) is a person described in Paragraph 149(1)(L)

(ii) has, as its primary purpose and its primary function, the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada on a nation-wide or province-wide basis—

In those two amendments I have added the words "in Canada or any province in Canada" and "on a nation-wide or province-wide basis". Under paragraph 149(1)(L) non-profit organizations would be amended to read as follows:

—a club, society or association that, in the opinion of the Minister, was not a charity within the meaning assigned by Subsection 149(1)(L) and that was organized and operated exclusively for social welfare, civic improvement, pleasure or recreation or for any other purpose except profit, no part of the income of which was payable to, or was otherwise available for the personal benefit of, any proprietor, member or shareholder thereof unless the proprietor, member or shareholder was a club, society or association the primary purpose and function of which was the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada or in any province or Canada;—

● (1710)

The purpose of the amendments is to redress the discriminatory provisions which currently exist, which are designed exclusively to prohibit amateur athletic associations within a province from raising funds for deserving young athletes in their communities.

In 1983-84, the Government of Canada had a substantial involvement in amateur sport. From the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, I discovered that in 1983-84, fitness and amateur sport programs in Canada received contributions of over $29 million toward the administration and project costs of national sport governing bodies to assist in the promotion and development of amateur sport for Canadians. The total contribution of this Government to fitness and amateur sport was over $50 million.

The purpose of my motion, Mr. Speaker, is to try to suggest that the private sector has a role to play in the support of amateur sports associations in this country. If it were given the opportunity to support young athletes in the various regions, it would do so. Then, perhaps, we could consider over the long run having the Government of Canada withdraw its paternalistic support of sports and have the private sector contribute more on a local basis.

It is significant to note, Mr. Speaker, how much the federal Government is involved in supporting amateur sport. Hon Members should understand very clearly that I want our Government to indicate its support in just as categorical a fashion as have previous Governments. Sports organizations in this country are deserving of our support, and it is essential that we give it to them. However, we have a responsibility to try to place the emphasis back on local direction, control and support of athletic associations. The motion which I am proposing would ask the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to study those provisions and see if they can be included in the Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am proposing this motion today so that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs can be empowered to study the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act. These amendments would allow donations to provincial athletic associations to be treated the same way as donations made to registered Canadian amateur athletic associations.

[English]

Raising funds for local athletes is a lot easier when one is not trying to get a local company to sponsor an athlete it does not know. It is very difficult for a national association to get local companies across the country to agree to give funds to support a national calibre athlete they do not know. In the Province of Manitoba, we have a large number of private companies which would very much like to contribute to the development of local athletes, but they are prohibited from doing so under current income tax legislation. It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that if we made this change in the Act, we would encourage the private sector to do what it really wants to do in terms of helping young athletes in Canada.

With the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary quickly approaching, I think it is high time that we enabled provincial sports organizations to raise funds for the purpose of developing the national and international calibre athletes whom we would want to represent us in Calgary. We currently allow the Canadian amateur athletic associations to be registered, and it is my belief that we should allow the provincial groups as well to be registered.

On September 4, Canadians told us that they wanted to stand on their own two feet. These changes would give them the opportunity to support their own young athletes in the same way as they support national athletes. I think that provincial associations have indicated that they want to do more. The private sector has indicated that it wants to do more. This change would permit these organizations better to support young athletes in this country.

I think all of us share the view that it is certainly a desirable goal to promote young athletes. Therefore, I urge Hon. Members of this House to support this motion by referring the subject matter to committee for further study. We have asked to refer it to committee for further study because we know that the Income Tax Act is very complex and the implications of the changes I have read into the record are far reaching. However, we think the principle of allowing provincial sports organizations and the private sector to help in the funding of young athletes is well worth the support of all Hon. Members, and I ask for that support.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak today to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay). Many provisions in the Income Tax Act should be underlined and examined from time to time. The suggestion contained in the motion under consideration gives us a welcome opportunity to take a closer look at the tax provisions with respect to tax-exempt donations to amateur sport bodies, or even to charitable organizations in general.

In this motion, the House is being asked not to judge on its merits the amendment proposed to the income tax provisions respecting amateur sport bodies established under provincial statutes, but indeed to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for study and report. We are in no way trying to prevent the matter from being referred to the Standing Committee. We do recognize, however, that it might be somewhat difficult for that Committee to add another subject-matter to an already heavy agenda. But it is always possible to set aside some time to look into the matter, and it will certainly be considered in a more thorough and thoughtful way than would be possible in just an hour's debate in the House.

I would like, however, in these few minutes to make a few considerations which I believe should be taken into account in reviewing that suggestion. I am afraid that the public is not very familiar with the present legal status of those amateur sport bodies, particularly with respect to the Income Tax Act. Although this confusion may be understandable generally speaking in relation to some parts of the Tax legislation, the Income Tax Act is fairly clear, simple and specific on the subject-matter of the motion under consideration by the House.

Under the Act, donations to registered Canadian sport bodies are tax exempt. Such associations are defined under Paragraph 110(8)(b). It must be a non-profit body, also a body which, and I quote:

—has as its primary purpose and its primary function, the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada on a nation-wide basis.

Any sport body that meets those requirements may be registered quite easily with the Department of National Revenue, and may thereby receive tax-deductible donations.

As our colleagues will note, that definition in no way specifies that the sport body must have been set up under a provincial or federal statute. This means that a sports organization created under a provincial statute definitely can be registered, provided its purpose is to promote amateur athletics in Canada on a nation-wide basis.

The motion now before the House refers to the registration of amateur sport bodies created under provincial statute. Under the current provisions of the Act, such organizations may in fact be registered and receive tax-exempt donations, provided the amateur sport body so created under provincial statute is active on a nation-wide basis. It does not have to be established under a federal statute.

What about amateur sport bodies created under provincial statutes that are only operating on a provincial or regional basis? Are they excluded outright by the current provisions of the Income Tax Act? Not at all. A registered Canadian amateur athletic association may, at will, use tax-exempt donations it receives to grant financial support to provincial amateur sport bodies. In fact, many of our amateur sport bodies are grouped under national federations, and this allows for such a circulation of funds. In the final analysis, the only general requirement that must be met by the organization receiving tax-exempt donations, is to operate on a national basis, directly or through a federation.

Another provision of the Income Tax Act also applies. Section 168(1)(f) provides that the Minister may revoke the registration of a registered Canadian amateur athletic association that accepts a gift or donation the granting of which was expressly or impliedly conditional upon the association making a gift or donation to another person, club, society or association.

The barring of conditional donations merely reflects the general spirit of the Act. For example, a provincial sport body could not launch a financing campaign under which donations would be made to a registered Canadian amateur athletics body if, mandatorily or because of some underlying agreement, all those donations should end up in the coffers of that provincial body. That kind of apparent loophole could allow getting easily around the obligation for a registered Canadian body to promote sports on a truly national basis.

To sum up, the Act quite explicitly allows a provincial amateur sport body, member of a Canadian sport federation, to receive from that federation funds obtained by way of tax-exempt donations.

After all, it should not be that difficult for our provincial amateur sport bodies to join a national sport federation. Since Canada is a political federation, such a federal approach should not be that unusual when it comes to Canadian sport bodies. That form of organization may require from those bodies that they be willing to make compromises of course to harmonize certain local aspirations with the national general interest, but that aspect is inherent in a federation such as ours, and should not be a problem for us Canadians, whether on the political or athletic level.

This is not the only area where under the Income Tax Act a federal organization which operates at the national level can take advantage of a tax arrangement which is denied to its provincial counterpart. The tax credit which can be applied to donations made to political parties is another case in point. Our Canadian Parliament has already decided that this credit should be granted when a taxpayer makes a donation to a federal as opposed to a provincial political party. No doubt that one of the main reasons for this decision has been the understandable firm belief that the federal Treasury should only support federal parties and that any financial support given to provincial parties should come out of provincial Treasuries. Similarly, it could be argued that the same principle should apply to provincial organizations dealing with amateur sport. On the other hand, if we decide to exempt from tax donations made to provincial sport organizations, are we prepared to be consistent and to apply the tax credit granted to federal political parties to donations made to provincial political parties, whether or not they believe in federalism?

I would like to deal now with a more general matter which might be implied in the motion of the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) although not clearly stated. This question is as follows: Under the Income Tax Act should direct donations to provincial amateur sport organizations be tax exempted? If so, the National Revenue Minister (Mr. Beatty) should allow these organizations to be registered, even if they only operate at the provincial level.

I would humbly suggest that, looking at it that way, we will soon discover that the questions become more difficult and the answers much less obvious. What factors would have to be considered? The increase in the costs to the federal Treasury is certainly one of them. It is impossible at least for the time being to fix an exact figure on the costs involved. Obviously, there would be a major increase in the number of sport organizations collecting funds from the public thus accepting tax exempt donations. The cost of this tax arrangement would increase significantly. Hon. Members will no doubt wonder if it would be justified to let the federal deficit grow bigger when the cost of our public debt is already too high.

The Hon. Members will also surely want to examine if indeed there are provincial athletic organizations with urgent financial needs that warrant such a measure and should take precedence over other equally justified applications for funds made to the federal treasury. It is not necessary to list those applications here. We hear about them every day. Considering the substantial federal deficit, we have to set priorities since obviously the federal Government cannot hope to respond favorably to all applications for financial assistance however deserving they may be.

In that context, it would perhaps be relevant to consider also to what extent provincial amateur sport organizations take advantage of those large lotteries under the sponsorship of the provincial governments.

I think that the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs could also consider in what way the proposed amendment would fit in the comprehensive federal policy on assistance to amateur sport. Such an aspect of the issue goes beyond tax policy considerations since the amendment advocated would unavoidably influence the organization and general financing of sport in Canada. In the context of a review of that extensive issue it could be useful to study the present Income Tax Act and the general direction taken in that regard.

One of the important elements coming out of a study of the relevant clauses of the Income Tax Act is that such a legislation makes a clear distinction between registered Canadian of amateur sport associations and charitable organizations. The gifts made to one or another of those organizations could obviously be tax free, but it is equally obvious that the tax legislation does not consider amateur sport associations as charitable organizations.

The Income Tax Act defines the words "Registered Canadian Amateur Sport Association", but does not indicate what is a charitable organization, a charitable activity or a charitable goal. Generally speaking, the legal position in that regard has been to use the Common Law definition, that is an organization that tries to relieve poverty, to propagate a religion, to promote education or something else for the good of the community. Legislators seem to have tried to apply to charitable organizations criteria allowing them to receive tax-free donations, but they made sure local and provincial sport organizations would not fit in that category. The same distinction is to be found in the Income Tax Act regarding the specific definition of activities for which a registered charitable organization is allowed to spend money. One of these goals is to help "recognized donors" which include registered Canadian amateur sport associations. However, a provincial athletic organization which cannot be registered under the Income Tax Act cannot get any type of financial assistance from a charitable organization. Therefore, the legislation makes a clear distinction between charitable organizations and amateur sport associations dealing only at the local or provincial level.

The most important possible reason for this distinction may be that charitable organizations usually work for other people while most amateur sport organizations take care only of their members.

We know that each year Revenue Canada receives some 3,500 registration requests from organizations wishing that donations given to them be tax-free. Approximately 10 per cent of these requests are turned down and these come mainly from organizations which are not really charitable organizations, but whose goal is rather to promote the direct or indirect interests of their own members. Of course, that does not mean such a goal is unacceptable. I hope however that Hon. Members will want to make sure these organizations have good reasons for claiming the tax status given to charitable organizations.

To conclude, we would like to thank the Hon. Member for St. Boniface for raising this matter in the House and suggesting it should be studied further by the Standing Committee. I hope my remarks helped Hon. Members to understand some financial matters which the Committee could study with the other points raised more directly by the Member for St. Boniface.

• (1730)

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for St. Boniface for introducing this motion, for considering this most important issue which I feel is all the more important since I heard the Parliamentary Secretary so beautifully read out the well-written speech that was prepared by the people in the Department.

Mr. Speaker, I am shocked whenever I heard someone make a distinction between charitable organizations and sport organizations that look after their members—

Mr. Speaker, it is most outrageous. I have had the experience of a similar case. A baseball organization in my riding was asking for leave to issue receipts for charitable donations for the purpose of helping young people practice their favorite sport not so they would train to play some day for the Expos, but to stop juvenile delinquency and prevent youngsters from hanging around on the streets. The reply I received from the Department read just like the one the Hon. Member mentioned in his speech. Is it not a charitable purpose for an organization to look after its members? I commend the Hon. Member for St. Boniface because Members will have to express in that committee the wishes of the population they represent. The old legislation still applies.

How was charity defined fifty or sixty years ago? Things have changed since that time. We all have in our ridings athletic, recreational and social organizations at the provincial as well as the local level. The Parliamentary Secretary should tear up the speech he has just read and throw all the pieces back at the public servant who wrote it. We do not want any more replies of that kind. No more! Tenants' associations in Montreal and Quebec City were refused a registration number that would have allowed them to issue receipts for charitable donations. The United Appeal in Montreal refuses to grant them money because those associations are not registered as charitable organizations with the federal Government, Mr. Speaker.

Tenants' associations defend those people that are least organized, and then the Minister of Finance comes around and tells us that they are not charitable organizations. But what do you do when you help people? Is that not charity?

I think it is important that this committee . . . And I congratulate the Hon. Member for St. Boniface, but the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) gets no praise for having read his text, for having stuck to what the public servant told him to say. He must be reminded, as every members in this House, that he has been elected to say what must be done, not to read what public servants tell him to say. In that area, it is very important for all the young of this country, and not only for the organizations at the national level, not only for sport organizations, recreational organizations, cultural organizations, community organizations throughout this country, at the local level, in every village, in every city, in every parish, that they be entitled to some benefit when they try to raise funds.

If we did not have in Canada those thousands and thousands of unpaid family men and women to work in all those organizations, what would happen? The government could never pay the cost for all that manpower, all the quality and all the dedication of those people. It would cost a fortune. Compare that with the parliamentary secretary's answer which was prepared by officials in the Department. It is totally unacceptable to tell those people: Sacrifice yourself, spend your money to help the youth, to help senior citizens, to help tenants, to help needy people. Sacrifice yourself, spend money from your own pocket. But don't come to us asking to be entitled to issue tax receipts as a registered charitable organization for your fund raising campaigns. We, the federal government, deal with big concerns. We, the federal government, are above all that; $56 millions to change the colour of soldiers' uniforms, that's our business. That's no way to talk to citizens. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface knows them, he knows the local organizations at home, as evidenced by what he is asking for, Mr. Speaker. And I will have to go around with the Hon. Member for LaSalle to remind him that there are in his constituency organizations which need that help to finance themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is going . . . the Parliamentary Secretary or aspiring Minister of Finance is going to try to defend us. Here, we agree; there are hundreds of people who earn $100,000 and who manage not to pay a penny in taxes. No problem. This is money not received by the government. No problem. There are tax havens for the better off people, and it costs $18 billion to Canadian taxpayers. No problem. But the previous speaker was a Conservative member, not a Liberal, not a member of the NDP, an Hon. Member from the same party as the Hon. Member for LaSalle. We should figure out the costs. How much is it going to cost to give a mere $500 for organizations? They are poor. So who cares? The Conservative government is not interested. No. When multinational companies come here they are greeted with open arms, with champagne; the door is wide open. That is what is called class. No, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for St. Boniface. I know that in each of our constituencies, and I am convinced that every Hon. Member is going to hear about it when they go back to their constituencies over the weekend because I am going to make sure that all sport and recreactional organizations remember that their Member of Parliament said: No, we are not going to study that. You do not need financing. Manage on your own. No, Mr. Speaker. Those organizations play a very important role in Canada, and I think it is very important not only that the committee examine that matter in order to give the same privileges to sport organizations at the provincial level but that we also consider sport, recreational, cultural, social organizations at the local level, Mr. Speaker.

When I see this government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of "social injustice", the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in Canada, supported by the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), I ask the question: Do the Canadian people want to go on paying for tax benefits, tax havens which cost billions of dollars and which benefit the rich? That is the question. Can we go on like this, Mr. Speaker?

In conclusion, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay). He can count on the support of Liberal Members against people like the Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for LaSalle who, without stating his opposition, has eloquently read the speech prepared by a public servant. I look forward to hear a speech of his own some time, stating what he really thinks, and to study the matter and to help all these organizations, all these voluntary people, because they play an important role for our youth, for older people, for people in the cultural area. I think it is very important to agree to the motion before us, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, that is quite an act to follow. I congratulate my hon. colleague, the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I also want to congratulate the Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) on bringing forward a motion that is long overdue. Sports and athletic organizations play an important role in the communities, small towns and rural areas of Canada.

There is usually no assistance from the federal Government for these groups. People in the communities should be encouraged to support these very worth-while organizations, whether in amateur hockey, soccer, baseball, fastball, gymnastics or riding schools. These organizations provide a legitimate outlet for people who are genuinely interested in pursuing some form of sports or athletic activity. An incentive could be provided through the tax system by identifying these organizations as legitimate charities to enable donors to receive a tax benefit. There is no one in the House who would say that these organizations do not provide good work in their communities.

I am concerned that once this motion passes through the House and is referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that will be it. From what I have heard in the few short minutes during which we have debated this motion, I can say that government Members will vote against this Bill because we cannot afford it. They will say that we cannot afford the few millions of dollars that it will cost the federal coffers to assist thousands of small communities of Canada to build up their amateur sports organizations. I can hear them saying it now, Mr. Speaker. If that is not the case, I will eat this paper on my desk when the motion returns to the House in the form of a Bill. That is a promise. I just cannot believe that Members opposite will volunteer to spend additional money.

I phoned the Department of Finance today and asked what they thought of this motion. They said that they have some concerns because of the tax expenditure aspect of it. They said that since we have a big deficit in the country we cannot afford these things, but that they would look at it.

• (1740)

Mr. Comeau: Who did you talk to?

Mr. Riis: I talked to officials in the Department of Finance, to respond to the Hon. Member.

However, there has been no discussion about the fact that the Government falls all over itself trying to raise a few tens of millions of dollars to help out a bank when it gets into trouble. Also, it can find a few million dollars overnight in order to help a trust company.

What about a corporation like Domtar? That is a profitable organization but it wants a few tens of millions of dollars. Yet the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) can find that amount of money overnight for a corporation that is not in financial difficulty. I could go on and on with more examples.

Corporate tax expenditures alone cost the taxpayers of Canada in excess of $18 billion. When we talk about corporate tax expenditures in this country, we are not talking about small or medium businesses, because 80 per cent of the $18 billion goes to 1 per cent of the companies in Canada. We know that those companies are ones like the Bank of Montreal and Imperial Oil. My hon. friend, the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, has already indicated that although many banks make hundreds of millions of dollars in some years, they pay no tax. Individuals who earn in the vicinity of $500,000 a year pay no tax. However, Hon. Members opposite say that we cannot afford to provide assistance to the small athletic organizations in our communities. They say that we cannot afford to provide assistance to small business in the country.

However, let us look at the reality of our corporate tax expenditures. The businesses that often support athletic organizations in our communities are almost inevitably the corner stores and small plants in our towns. They are the ones that come up with the $100 donations and sponsor the Little Leaguers with their baseball uniforms. The multi-nationals cannot afford it because they must balance their balance sheets on a quarterly basis. Essentially, the small business sector is being penalized by our corporate tax expenditure system. When these organizations request support, I suspect that the Government says that it cannot afford to provide assistance.

I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for St. Boniface. I believe this particular motion is long overdue because it identifies a critical component of Canadian society—the sporting and athletic component—which provides our young people with an outlet for their energies and creative talents through participating in competitive or non-competitive sports. Competitive and non-competitive sports could include amateur hockey or baseball as opposed to gymnastics.

This motion provides parliamentarians with an opportunity to assist this vital sector of our society. As the representative of the New Democratic Party, I look forward to our discussions in committee as we find a way of enacting this motion into legislative form. I guarantee that the NDP will support this motion at every stage of its evolution.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I also take pleasure in rising in the House today to lend my support to Motion No. 174, moved by my friend and colleague from Manitoba, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay).

The purpose of this motion is to enable provincial sports organizations to raise funds for purposes of developing national and international calibre athletes within the province. This could be done in a manner which is consistent with that which is already acceptable under the terms of the Income Tax Act with respect to federal amateur athletic organizations.

As my friend from St. Boniface has mentioned, the portion of the Act in question is Section 110(1)(a) dealing with charitable donations.

At present, sports activities are not deemed to be charitable in nature and thus, a non-profit sports organization cannot register as a Canadian charitable organization for income tax purposes. Any qualifying organization, in accordance with the Act, must have, as its primary purpose and function, the promotion of amateur athletics on a nation-wide basis. According to paragraph (a), an organization which purports to operate for the improvement and development of sport must qualify as a Canadian amateur athletic association in order to be eligible for registration and therefore to be able to issue tax receipts to donors.

A Canadian amateur athletic association by definition includes federal associations but does not include their provincial counterparts.

If the legislation could be amended, as it would be following the recommendation under Motion 174, it would make it such that provincial associations would be eligible to issue tax receipts for donations received. I think everyone would agree that if such provincial amateur sports organizations could issue tax receipts, then funding for them would increase substantially. In other words, even though the amendments recommended today are quite simple and straightforward, the impact on provincial and local sports associations would be tremendously positive.

Amateur sport at the local level has played a very large role in my life as it has in the life of my colleague from St. Boniface. My involvement as a participant as well as the many years that I have spent coaching at various levels have shown me how important sports activities and associations are to young athletes, particularly activities and associations at the provincial and the local level.

The very existence of Section 110(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act shows that the lawmakers of Canada also believe in the development of amateur sport and in its importance to our country's people.

We must begin building a solid base in this country for sport, one that is accessible to all Canadians, not just a select few. In order for an amateur athlete to benefit from the present legislation—and the benefits are quite real—he or she must reside in a major populated area of our country. In other words, a dedicated, talented amateur athlete from my riding of Dauphin-Swan River in west central Manitoba is at a disadvantage right from the start. He or she does not have access to the funding and thus does not have access to the facilities and training that this money can buy. There are athletes who succeed in overcoming the barriers, but they have to be enormously gifted young people. Still, the question remains: How many others, given the opportunity, could have enriched their lives through amateur sport?

I am speaking about a very fundamental principle of Canadian life. I want my children and my neighbour's children to have and to enjoy the same opportunities as does another person who happens to come from a certain part of the country that is more heavily populated. I believe that the development of our young athletes can be quite successful at the provincial and local level as well as at the national level.

The creation of a sound provincial and local sports structure encourages all Canadians to participate and to compete. This infrastructure will not only provide an opportunity for all amateur athletes to partake in healthy sporting activities but will also create a sports pool of athletes from which our future sports stars will rise. This is our Government's interpretation of what a sports pool should be. It is not a gambling sports pool lottery but the creation of a pool of athletes.

The people of Canada must work together at the community level to develop amateur sports. It must be a community resource. It must become a community adventure. The amateur sports enthusiasts want a strong structural base for sports for all the people of Canada.

At present, funds are being spent to develop a select few athletes in the hope that they will become international sports stars. I am holding the 1983-84 annual report of Fitness and Amateur Sport of Canada. Let me illustrate some examples by reading from the summary of contributions in the annual report. In that year, for instance, the Canadian Amateur Basketall Association received over $880,000; the Canadian Amateur Diving Association received just under $400,000; the Canadian Amateur Football Association received close to $225,000; the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association received $653,000; the Canadian Amateur Speedskating Association received $575,000; the Canadian Amateur Swimming Association received over $1,100,000; the Canadian Association of Sports Sciences received $115,000; the Canadian Council for Children and Youth received $17,000; the Canadian Curling Association, a sport with which I am familiar myself, received close to $75,000; and the Canadian Field Hockey Council received $45,000. These are amounts which associations at the provincial or local level would be more than happy to receive to form that base and pool of athletes of which I spoke. The Canadian Gymnastics Federation received over $750,000; the Canadian Institute of Child Health received $64,000; the Canadian Ladies' Curling Association received $107,000; the Canadian Old Timers' Hockey Association received $65,900; the Canadian Racquetball Association received $140,000; the Canadian Ski Association received $103,000; and the Alpine Skiing Division of the Canadian Ski Association received $1,161,000.

I would like to mention just a few more examples, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Volleyball Association received $653,000; the Canadian Women's Field Hockey Association received $421,000; Curl Canada received $93,000; Lawn Bowls Canada received $92,000; the National Karate Association received $64,000; the National Sport and Recreation Centre Incorporated received $4,300,000; Participaction received over $1.5 million; and the Royal Canadian Golf Association received $55,000. The list goes on and on.

As you noticed from the list, Mr. Speaker, these are all Canadian federal associations. None of this money is being spent at the local and provincial level to develop our athletes and create that solid base that can make Canada a truly international force in amateur sport.

As I mentioned, virtually nothing is being invested at the local level for our local amateur athletes. If we can work toward establishing a strong and solid sport base in Canada, the huge amounts of money that I mentioned earlier need not be spent only on a select few. A wide national sports base will make it such that the cream will naturally flow to the top.

I have to say also that my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface, has been much too modest in his remarks today. He has played a very strong role himself in the development of amateur sport in our great province of Manitoba. It is because of dedicated people like my hon. friend from St. Boniface and the thousands upon thousands of others who dedicate much of their lives to the service of local sports organizations, both provincially and at the local community level, that the federal Government must support and encourage the development of a better structure. I believe that a better structure would flow from Motion No. 174 brought forward by my colleague and friend from St. Boniface, Manitoba.

In order to develop this structure for sport, Parliament must put in place the machinery which would allow provincial sports organizations to raise the money more easily.

As is presently the case with federal amateur athletic associations, provincial sports organizations should likewise be eligible for registration numbers. It only seems logical to me that they, like their federal counterparts, should be eligible to issue tax receipts with respect to donations received. This is why I urge this House to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for further study.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Duguay) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

YELLOWHEAD HIGHWAY—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION AS NATIONAL HIGHWAY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the adjournment debate this evening on an issue of great importance to many people, not only to the western Canadian Provinces of Manitoba through to British Columbia but to my own town of The Battlefords, Saskatchewan, and many communities that extend across our great western area of Canada.

The issue I would like to address is the status of the Yellowhead Highway. This highway is western Canada's major interprovincial highway. It spans over one-half of continental Canada and is over 3,106 kilometres in length. It begins in Winnipeg, Manitoba, connects with Merritt and Prince Rupert, B.C., and extends to the Queen Charlotte Islands.

As early as the 1870s, Sir Sandford Fleming identified the Yellowhead Pass as "the most accessible route through the Rockies to the Pacific Ocean". Many of us who were raised and grew up along the Yellowhead Highway have seen this highway as one of the most basic forms of communication. Before the emergence of the electronic mass media, even before there were telephones or telegraphs, the most basic form of communication was the roadway. Those of us who have lived along the Yellowhead Highway see this as an integral part of communication. A highway transports people across western Canada and, in areas like my home town, it encourages a high degree of tourist travel and encourages people to stop and to stay awhile to enjoy northwestern Saskatchewan and the rest of western Canada.

There is the concern that I have raised in Question Period of the federal Government's commitment to the Yellowhead Highway. This highway, although recognized by many travellers as one of the foremost major methods of road transportation in western Canada, is not officially designated for federal assistance. For that reason, there has not been a commitment by the federal Government in the past to provide funding to build twin lanes on this very important highway.

In my community of The Battlefords, which is a major stopping point on the Yellowhead Highway, an average of 5,750 vehicles travelled through it in 1983 when the last statistics were taken. This made our community the second most travelled community behind Saskatoon on the Yellowhead Highway. It gives great credence to the claim by many of us that the Yellowhead Highway for western Canadian travel is now surpassing the Trans-Canada. The Trans-Canada, of course, is recognized presently by federal initiatives and federal funding.

There is an organization called the Yellowhead Highway Association that represents over 100 rural municipalities and counties and towns and cities that lie along the Yellowhead Highway. The Yellowhead Highway Association has been very actively involved in recent years—with the Progressive Conservative Government of 1979, with the Liberal Government thereafter, and now with our new Government—in talking with Members of Parliament and Ministers of Transport about the importance of the Yellowhead Highway to the economy, tourism and growth of western Canada.

I would like to put forth, with the strongest degree of conviction, my belief in why the Government must see to it that the Yellowhead Highway is designated as a national highway and, further, that there is some funding committed for the twin-laning of this highway. I recognize, along with many good and concerned Canadians in the Yellowhead Highway Association, that the degree of federal involvement, given limited financial resources, is something that will not happen tomorrow or the day after. However, I would like to request of the Government that every serious consideration be given to designating the Yellowhead Highway as a national highway and to securing the much needed funding.

When one looks at the Yellowhead Highway and the service it has provided to the people of western Canada, one discovers that the Yellowhead Highway Association goes back to 1921. Over 60 years ago people recognized this highway for the good means of transportation that it was, and it has been for over 60 years that people of the western Canadian towns and villages have asked the federal Government to do something about it. The Yellowhead Highway, among many other gains and benefits which it provides to road travellers in western Canada, also provides a very good means of transportation through the Rocky Mountains. Having travelled this road many times, I can attest for those who have not had the opportunity to travel it that it is indeed one of the most scenic routes through western Canada. The Trans-Canada Highway in the 12 years from 1970 to 1982 was closed for a total of over 2,000 hours because of snowslides and snowfalls, whereas the Yellowhead Highway was closed for 50 hours. Obviously we see the benefit of mountain travel and regular, consistent travel which adds to the movement of goods and services, to tourism and to the basic link of communication, people being able to see one another throughout western Canada and taking advantage of one another's offerings, lifestyles, businesses and communities.

I ask the Government to give very serious consideration to the designation of the Yellowhead Highway as a national highway and to give every consideration to the much needed funding.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) in the name of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall).

The Yellowhead Highway is a link of the primary highway network and is becoming increasingly important to economic development in the western provinces. The highway runs from Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, to Prince Rupert, British Columbia. It follows a more northerly route than the Trans-Canada Highway and passes through Saskatoon, Edmonton, Jasper National Park and Prince George. A southern arm branches off the main route near the British Columbia-Alberta border at Tête Jaune Cache and terminates at Kamloops.

For several years the Yellowhead Highway Association, an interest group composed of communities located along the Yellowhead Highway, has made representations to have the highway upgraded under a federal-provincial cost-shared arrangement.

The Hon. Member will remember that the Government undertook discussions in 1979 with the four western provinces which sought agreement in principle for a multi-year Yellowhead Highway improvement program worth $120 million, with costs to be shared on a fifty-fifty federal-provincial basis. The Liberal Government chose not to pursue these discussions.

At the present time there are no federal-provincial highway agreements in place under which federal funding could be provided for the upgrading of this highway. In fact, all existing federal-provincial highway agreements are under review. These, too, are subject to the economic parameters within which we must work.

Indeed we are fortunate to have the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) note this worthy debate as he had a long and positive relationship with the Yellowhead Highway Association, and I am sure we can look forward to further productive discussions on this subject.

SOCIAL SECURITY—BENEFITS FOR WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS AGED 60-64—EXCLUSION OF SINGLE, DIVORCED AND SEPARATED PERSONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on November 30, I asked a question to the Right

Hon. Prime Minister regarding Bill C-26. I recall that at the time, the legislation had not been tabled. It had been announced in the Throne Speech, and the economic statement that the Canadian Government intended to extend the spouse's allowance to single people but that unfortunately, it would only apply to widows and widowers, which was discriminating against older people who are single, separated or divorced and who have the same needs. I would like to quote the answer given by the Right Hon. Prime Minister:

I can inform the Hon. Member that our objective is to help those people in our society who are most in need, and I think that is the basic purpose of any decent social program in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we believe there is a real need for such measures among people between 60 and 64.

Mr. Speaker, at that time, the Prime Minister agreed to my request that the spouse's allowance should be extended to single people who are in need and whom he mentioned in his answer. He made no distinction between widows, widowers, single, divorced and separated persons. At that time, the Prime Minister agreed to the statement of the Canadian Welfare Council in its report of March 1985, where it said about the poverty level:

Single older people, those who are living alone or in a household where they have no relatives, have a greater chance of being poor. Recent data indicate that about 56 per cent of them, or 434,000, are poor. Almost half of women who are heads of single parent families live at poverty level.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister had indicated at the time that the aim of his Government was to provide help to all Canadian men and women between 60 and 64 years of age who needed it the most, without differentiating between widows and widowers. What has happened, Mr. Speaker? Something entirely different. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has introduced a Bill which unfortunately restricted to widows and widowers the spouse allowance program which made it possible for these people who, year after year, had worked, paid income taxes, raised children and contributed to society, to get off welfare. This Conservative Government penalizes a great many Canadians, the vast majority of them women, simply because they have remained single or have been forced to separate. There is no more pitiful case than that of the poor woman abandoned by her husband and who must raise alone five or six children, provide them with a good education, and who is told, at 60, that she is not eligible to the spouse allowance because she could no longer stand her husband. I feel sorry for the Hon. Member who will have to deliver such a message in his office should this legislation not be amended, Mr. Speaker.

Last week, I talked about 80,000 people in need, according to the Department's own estimate, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) questioned those figures at that time. I have them here, Mr. Speaker, and I say again that 80,000 needy persons between the ages of 60 and 64 are not being taken care of. Of this number, 37,000 separated persons will not be looked after and 45,000 single persons will be penalized if the Government maintains its position and does not revert to its former response as given to me on November last by the Prime Minister.

Government Members often stated that it is a matter of money, that they have no choice because of the deficit. But no Conservative Member ever rose to question the Government's financial capabilities when it became known that the Western Accord would cost $2.5 billion. Even they did not know what that accord was all about but they did applaud it all the same. Not one of them suggested that our deficit was too high. No one stood against changing the colour of the armed forces' uniforms because it would cost $56 million. I repeat that no Conservative Member opposed such actions or mentioned the deficit for that matter.

But when it comes to helping people in need, those who live on $430 a month, Mr. Speaker, they say that the cupboard is bare. Those are not wealthy people, Mr. Speaker, and the proposed increase would only provide them with $536 monthly. Such an increase is not likely to make them millionaires but the Conservative government is opposed to it. As far as they are concerned, they are only prepared to help one group of the population.

I did mention earlier that this government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) were indeed considering the costs of our social programs. The Conseil du patronat and spokesmen for the multinationals have been talking about the deficit, claiming that social programs must be watered down because they cost too much money, Mr. Speaker, but nobody talks about tax shelters.

There are tax benefits for people who contribute to Registered Retirement Savings Plans. But the head of a family or a mother who earns $35,000—or even if both work every week and earn about $40,000—cannot set aside 10 or 20 per cent of their income to contribute to an RRSP and reduce the tax load. Poor people cannot afford to do that. It is always the same class of citizens who can take advantage of it.

Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to hear the reply of the Parliamentary Secretary. Perhaps she will tell me that, as we are speaking, the Prime Minister has reconsidered the decision he mentioned in his first answer. He told me that elderly people between ages 60 and 64 are most in need, that those are the people he wanted to help without discriminating against people living alone and those who are separated.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the proposal to extend spouse's allowance to all widowed individuals aged 60 to 64 was a definite commitment made during the election campaign.

Nobody denies the fact that this group has been identified as one of the most vulnerable groups amongst all the 60 to 64 year olds who are not yet entitled to pension and need help. What surprises me is that a parliamentary task force on pensions, set up in previous years, has produced a report which recommended the measure we just passed. The Hon. member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is so interested in social affairs that I suppose he was a member of that task force.

Mr. Malépart: No.

Mrs. Bertrand: That surprises me. I thought he would have been.

Then, I inform you that your committee, this task force set up by your party, proposed that very same idea. There is a real and urgent need to help that group, given the fact that more than 60 per cent of widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 would be eligible to the spouse's allowance program whose benefits are income tested.

The proposed measure will do away with the discrimination against widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 which exists in the present Old Age Security Act. As you know, at the present time, spouse's allowance is only paid to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 who were in receipt of that allowance before their spouse died.

In brief, this appears to me as a logical means of helping further some people in need, before they are entitled to a pension. About 85,000 people, mostly women, will benefit from that measure as of September 1985, when it becomes effective.

However, I admit that other groups in that same age bracket have financial difficulties. But, we have such fiscal constraints that we must set priorities. I hope the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie is not suggesting that we refrain from helping widows and widowers in need as long as the government cannot give the same help to all people in need who have not yet reached retirement age. And as I said before, the government does not have the means to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.15 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO ELECTION RESULTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party is alive and well and proving in Ontario that the path of moderation is the new direction Canadians want from government. The Liberal victory in Ontario—and it is a victory as more people voted Liberal than Tory—is a victory of the common person over the big machine. It is a victory of every-day people over a regime that thrives on patronage and polls. The people of Ontario refuse to turn back the clock to allow right-wing Conservatism to undo the progress of people politics and social responsibility.

The people of Ontario made it clear that they want a Government that will look after their needs and interests rather than be a bit player in orchestrated love-ins manipulated by the boss of all Tory bosses, in Ottawa. Tory platitudes will not be accepted as a disguise for boardroom policies or no policies at all. Only one Party offers the dynamic leadership and meaningful programs which can seriously address unemployment and economic development in a manner that is fair and equitable to all. That Party, of course, is the Liberal Party of Ontario.

The days of Tory Government composed of yes men with vested interests are over in Ontario. At the same time, the sands of time are beginning to run out on the Tory Government in Ottawa.

FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Canada's co-operative housing movement is being undermined by the combined actions of the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), who is responsible for housing, and of some private-profit builders. Last year the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who was then Leader of the Official Opposition, blasted the Liberal Government for cutting co-op housing allocations by 40 per cent. At that time he said:

> The Progressive Conservative Party finds it inexcusable that the Liberal Government should cut back funds for the co-operative housing program . . . Co-operative housing will continue to have a high priority in Progressive Conservative policy for housing.

What a phoney. The Minister of Labour has already cut co-op housing funding. In Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Ontario, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia, CMHC is cancelling co-op projects. These projects are mostly sound ones begun by well established co-op groups with a good record of producing housing within CMHC budgets. Yet, after encouraging these groups to spend their volunteer time and in some cases enter into contracts to buy land or to build, CMHC has suddenly cancelled approval for the projects.

After CMHC approval is cancelled, housing allocations seem to be handed over to fly-by-night, so-called non-profit groups which have cosy relationships with private-profit builders. Shame on the Prime Minister for flagrantly breaking his election promise and for helping to destroy the co-op housing movement in Canada.

NAVAL SERVICE'S SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the fact that tomorrow will mark a very important anniversary in Canada's history. On May 4, 1910, fully 75 years ago, this House, speaking for the people of Canada, gave assent to the Naval Service Act which brought the Naval Service of Canada into existence. Only four years later this fledgling service was called upon to defend Canada in ships that, although past their prime, were manned with great skill and courage.

In World War II Canada's navy reached its peak, with over 400 ships and 100,000 men and women in its ranks. It was the world's third largest navy and was unsurpassed in bravery and courage. During the five and a half long years of that struggle which is known as the Battle of Atlantic, Canada's navy helped keep open the vital North Atlantic sea lanes, frequently in terrible weather, against a determined enemy. To this battle Canada gave 1,800 gallant sailors and 24 proud ships.

Then came Korea, and once again Canadian sailors served their country with great courage. In the ensuing years our navy continues to play an important role in the North Atlantic alliance.

S.O. 21

As the Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, and as a former member of this illustrious service, I call on the House to recognize officially the 75th anniversary of the Naval Service of Canada, and to express unanimously its gratitude to the men and women of our navy, both past and present, for their contribution to our country.

CURRENCY

COINAGE—SIZE OF NICKELS AND DIMES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in order to divert the attention of the House from some rather disappointing, if temporary, setbacks in the Province of Ontario, I have a burning question that I wish to bring to its attention. The question, Sir, is why are nickels bigger than dimes? When nickels were made of nickel and dimes were made of silver, this made sense. But today both coins are made from baser metals.

The subcommittee looking into the possible issuance of a dollar coin, a move which I strongly favour, has demonstrated its prowess in coinage matters. Perhaps after finishing its appointed task its talents could be applied to examining other coinage issues such as the one just mentioned. Another might be the future of the copper penny. Do we really need pennies? If so, should they continue to be made of expensive copper, an increase in price of which might lead to the hoarding and melting down of these coins?

The opportunity exists for a thorough revision of our coinage and the development of a logical and distinctively Canadian coinage system.

SOCIAL SECURITY

RECOMMENDATION THAT SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE BE EXTENDED TO SINGLE ELDERLY PERSONS IN NEED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, for many months I have been asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to stop their unjust treatment of needy Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 who are being denied the spouse's allowance just because they are single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) informed the House last week that more than 1,000 people earning $100,000 or more do not pay a cent of income tax in Canada, which means an increase of 33 per cent over 1982. In addition, 6,000 people with an income of between $50,000 and $99,000 do not pay a cent of income tax in Canada, which is 4,000 more than in 1982. And 6,700 people earning between $40,000 and $49,000 do not pay a cent of tax in Canada either, and this is 5,201 more than in 1982.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all the Members of the House to ask the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of social injustice in Canada to impose a minimum tax on people in the wealthiest groups, so that we can then extend the spouse's allowance to all elderly Canadians who are single and in need. The anti-social measures the Federal Conservatives want to take are similar to the ones that helped the Liberals win the popular vote in Ontario yesterday.

ADMINISTRATIVE DIFFICULTIES ENCOUNTERED BY THE ELDERLY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, roughly 28,000 Quebec senior citizens had their old age security cheques reduced to the minimum this month and did not get any income supplement because they did not return the required application form before March 31.

Although they will get their supplement retroactively once the application has been received, many of these elderly people will have a hard time finding enough money to buy food or pay rent. The Government must see to it that administrative delays resulting from applications being received after the deadlines are reduced to a minimum. Instead of withholding the supplement in future, the Government would be better advised to send a cheque reduction notice to people who fail to return the application form one month before the deadline. The elderly would then be spared the unpleasant surprise of a sudden income drop.

In the case of a person living alone, Mr. Speaker, the supplement can amount to $328 a month, or half the monthly income of the needy. Obviously, such a loss of income takes its toll on the elderly. We ought to realize that such administrative procedures are not always readily understood by older people. Mr. Speaker, it is better to tailor bureaucratic requisites to the special needs of older Canadians than to make them put up with Government red tape.

DISARMAMENT

WORLD-WIDE NEED OF PEOPLES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my wife and I have three beautiful children, and I said during the election campaign that if I do nothing more during my term as a public person than to keep our world free of a nuclear holocaust so that our children can fulfil their lives, then I will have succeeded.

I have seen the Sowetos of South Africa, the poverty of Bombay, the dying of Ethiopia. I have seen the discipline of Japan, the down underness of New Zealand, the confidence of the U.S.A., and I can assure you, this House, and this country, that people are the same all over the world. Food and water, shelter and warmth, education and medical care, security and love, whether a housewife in the Soviet Union or a nursing mother in Same, Tanzania; whether black, yellow, white or mixed origins, the needs of these people are fundamentally exactly the same as ours.

I have lived their needs and I have been a daily part of their personal priorities. As a civilized, educated, and learned people, we can only come to one conclusion, one conclusion that easterners, westerners, northerners, and southerners, developed and developing, must all share; one conclusion that will put us on a track to sanity, peace, and world security; one conclusion that should, must, and will be unanimous, the conclusion that continued nuclear armament is total madness.

PARLIAMENT HILL

ERECTION OF DIEFENBAKER STATUE ADVOCATED

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, politicians love statues and pigeons love statues, but it appears that the former Government had little love for certain statues. Last week it was revealed in the press that the Right Hon. Lester Pearson had commissioned four statues as part of Canada's centennial celebration in 1967. Two Liberal Prime Ministers were to be honoured, Mackenzie King and St. Laurent, and two Conservative Prime Ministers, Bennett and Meighen. Oddly enough, only the Liberal statues made it to Parliament Hill; the others were either rejected in model form or stored away upon completion.

The old saying goes that "nobody ever raised a statue to a critic", so I do not want to appear too critical today. Nor would I want to see Parliament Hill overrun with too many monuments. However, I think it is important to support the proposal of my colleague from Scarborough Centre that a memorial be erected in honour of one of the country's greatest Prime Ministers, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

● (1115)

Perhaps it might also be timely to raise a memorial to that other, more recent Prime Minister, the one who goes for long walks in the snow. I strongly suggest that such a statue, with all the fingers in the right place, be erected in Salmon Arm, British Columbia.

ECONOMIC SUMMIT

PRIME MINISTER'S ATTENDANCE—INVITATION TO MEET JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the aftermath of yesterday's election in Ontario I can understand why the Deputy Prime Minister is not radiating his usual good humour and benevolence. In fact there is a rumour around to the effect that he lost a substantial bet to his very Liberal brother, Leslie.

To turn to the matters before us today, the Prime Minister's office has been promoting the absurd fiction that the Prime Minister has more credibility in the international arena than Pierre Elliott Trudeau. I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that that is much like comparing a college freshman to a learned and wise professor or, in a hockey analogy, a Johnston to a Gretsky.

The Prime Minister's actions during his current trip have left Canadians concerned and dumbfounded. Would the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House what possible reason Canada's Prime Minister could have for rudely rejecting an invitation to meet with Prime Minister Nakasone of Japan to discuss economic issues of mutual concern? What on earth are these economic summits for? Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain the inexplicable to Canadians?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that was quite a bundle to roll into one question. It is quite unfair of the Hon. Member to twist, warp, and distort as he has done. He mentions the efforts of Mr. Trudeau. I just happen to have The Toronto Star article of yesterday here in which our Prime Minister is quoted as saying:

> Like all of us, he (Trudeau) had his successes and his failures. That's the lot of a politician. He played his role as he saw it on the international scene and I have in the past indicated my admiration for the objectives he sought.

I think it is unkind and untrue for the Hon. Member to make that kind of snide reference.

With respect to his use of the terminology "rejected" in relation to a visit with Mr. Nakasone, that also is not true. The report in The Globe and Mail today, which the Hon. Member is repeating, is pure speculation with respect to the Prime Minister's itinerary which was designed well in advance of his visit. The explanation that he has given for having to defer that visit with Mr. Nakasone is quite understandable and should be accepted by Members of the House.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have grown used to the public explanations in this Chamber. I am sure that privately the Deputy Prime Minister must feel concerned and somewhat dumbfounded, as we all do.

ROLE OF CANADIAN MINISTERS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): This seems to be a trip of photos as usual, rather than business as usual, for the Prime Minister. Let us hope that the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are carrying on serious discussions on behalf of the interests of Canadians. How will we know? Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that the office of the Prime Minister has in fact muzzled these two Ministers by refusing to permit them to take their press spokesmen, their press assistants, to Bonn?

• (1120)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at times when I was sitting over there and the Hon. Member, as a former Minister, was sitting over here, I reflected on his contributions during Question Period and in debate, and thought that there was an honourable guy who should really be in the Tory Party, but I am now beginning to have doubts about that when he makes that sort of unkind and untrue representation.

The Prime Minister is in Europe admirably discharging his responsibilities at the Bonn Economic Summit, as are the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance. Rather than the critical attitude being adopted by the Hon. Member, I think he should be acting in the best interests of Canada and urging on the Prime Minister and his two Ministers in their very laudable task.

OVERFISHING BY WEST GERMAN FLEET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I can reciprocate and say that I have great respect for the Hon. Member, and always had.

Mr. Axworthy: But we do not want him over here; don't go too far.

Mr. Johnston: That is why I suggest that deep in his heart he really does not believe what he is saying to us today but feels constrained by this place to do so.

Let me point out to the Deputy Prime Minister that the Prime Minister himself is steering clear, or his handlers are steering him clear, of all controversial issues during this trip.

Yesterday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, whom I see in his place today, characterized the problem of overfishing off the East Coast of Canada by West German vessels as, and I quote, "a shocking and serious situation". I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister agrees, but why doesn't the Prime Minister of Canada seize this unique opportunity to raise this issue with Chancellor Kohl at the Economic Summit? Or is this issue, something that affects the livelihoods of tens of thousands of Canadians, too controversial to raise in the forum of an economic summit?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again speculation. How in the world does the Hon. Member know what the Prime Minister is raising with Chancellor Kohl?

Some Hon. Members: Tell us.

Mr. Nielsen: How does he know that it is not being raised by the Prime Minister? How does the Hon. Member expect me to tell him, instant by instant, what is being discussed over there?

I am certain that he will be discussing, as will the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, all those matters which are important and in the Canadian interest. They will take every opportunity in Bonn to affect those bilateral discussions. It behooves the Hon. Member ill, and it is certainly not in the country's interest, for him to be making the suggestions which he is making. Instead of doing that he should be applauding the efforts which are being made by the Prime Minister and others in that group.

Anyone who knows the Prime Minister knows very well that he is not handled like one of his predecessors in office was handled and muzzled in 1980.

INTERESTS OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow on the line of questioning begun by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount, by saying to the Deputy Prime Minister that the Prime Minister is now in the very country which is raping the resource most important to Newfoundland. It is simply not good enough to say that they do not know what the Prime Minister is doing in West Germany. We want more than smiles. Newfoundlanders want to know that the Prime Minister is over there fighting for them. I want an assurance that while the Prime Minister is in West Germany he will make sure that he raises this issue, fights on behalf of us, and stops the draining of the lifeblood of our economy.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that he can remove all doubts instantly with respect to the ability and the determination of the Prime Minister of Canada to fight for Canada's interest wherever he goes in the world, and not just as the Bonn Economic Summit.

• (1125)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us and the people of Newfoundland today that the Prime Minister of Canada, of all Canada, including the fishermen on the East Coast, while in West Germany will raise this matter, will fight for our interests and see to it that this draining of fishing resources on the East Coast, which are the only thing we have left, is going to stop?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can be assured that the Prime Minister will raise all significant and important issues of interest to Canada, including the fishery. The Hon. Member should be the last to be criticizing anything that our Prime Minister is doing on that score, in the wake of reaching an agreement, which he and his colleagues failed to reach over so many years, on the Atlantic Accord.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

UNITED STATES EMBARGO ON NICARAGUA—EFFECT ON CANADIAN EXPORTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister will know that earlier this week when the Prime Minister was informed of the American embargo on Nicaragua, he said that Canada would not participate in that embargo. That was certainly the right position to take. The Minister is now aware that as a result of United States subsidiaries in Canada being influenced by that decision, Canadian companies and Canadians will be influenced. Is the Minister simply going to stand by and allow Ronald Reagan to dictate to Canadians which countries we can trade with, and the commodities we can trade with those countries? Is he simply going to stand by and allow Ronald Reagan to dictate our export policy?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as you will recall, this type of questioning came up yesterday. We have now learned that the regulations that the Hon. Member and one of his colleagues referred to yesterday are not in place. It is simply coming from a story out of Washington that there might be such a regulation. As I indicated yesterday, surely getting into this hypothetical thing is totally unnecessary at the present time.

FORTHCOMING UNITED STATES REGULATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing hypothetical about this. The officials in the Treasury Department have indicated that the regulations will be completed by Tuesday. They will be in force by Tuesday and they will be affecting Canadian firms. The Minister says he plans to do absolutely nothing about it, that the firms operating in Canada will be prohibited from carrying on trade with that country and that his Government will stand passively by. Is that the case?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in response to the Hon. Member, he is missing the entire point. The regulations that he is referring to have simply been referred to by an official in Washington, if you can believe the news accounts. Our position is that we will endeavour to find out what exactly is the nature of those regulations and see if they have any direct or indirect bearing on Canadian companies, and we will act accordingly.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister is saying is that at the moment his officials are doing nothing. The Government is doing nothing to attempt to assist Nicaragua at this very difficult hour. Is the Minister prepared to say that, because of his Government's inaction, what it really means is that since the Americans have placed an embargo on Nicaragua the Canadian Government will be an accomplice of Ronald Reagan, forcing Nicaragua into the Soviet Bloc? Is that what he is saying?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the statements my hon. colleague just made in the House, I can reiterate my assurance that the Reagan order would not apply. Our Ministers, who are in Bonn at the present time, have held consultations, and we have the assurance that branches of American companies will not be affected by the embargo.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—CLOSURE OF FAMINE RELIEF CAMP

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Reports we are receiving show that the tragic situation in Ethiopia is deteriorating and is even worse than most people believe possible. The Ethiopian Government has forcibly closed the major feeding camp in that country, forcing some 60,000 people into a march which many will not survive.

● (1130)

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday officials of the External Affairs Department informed Members of this House that they have no information whatever other than what they had received through the media, about what was taking place in Ethopia, and therefore the Government had taken no action. On behalf of the Government will the Minister immediately contact the Ethiopian Government and express on behalf of the people of this country the very deep and great concern we have about the forced closure of that camp and the tragedy that is being inflicted on those people who are being forced into that march?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, or perhaps the day before, I announced in the House that the United Nations Co-ordinator was visiting Ethiopia, and that we were in touch with our ambassador who was also monitoring the situation. It is correct that the camp had to be evacuated because of the rainfall, which was making it difficult for the people to stay there.

I have been informed that the refugees received several pounds of food as well as seeds and farm implements before leaving, that the infrastructure is still intact, and that our ambassador is supposed to meet the senior UN official at the end of his visit in order to discuss the situation, and I can give the House the assurance that we shall be monitoring the situation very closely because we too have a sense of responsibility.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INSPECTION OF SITUATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Minister, that is simply not good enough.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I find it incredible that the President of the Treasury Board would be laughing about a matter as serious as this. If he finds humour in the Ethiopian situation, then there is something very sick and wrong with him.

My supplementary question is for the Minister of External Relations. Would she ask our officials in Ethiopia to undertake a personal visit to the area and not rely upon second or third hand reports, and from that direct visit ascertain what direct action this country might take to alleviate suffering which other international observers and observers from non-government organizations have said will result in the extinction and death of thousands of people if that march continues?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a very positive element in the present situation and that is the fact that after waiting for rain for months, it is now raining in Ethiopia. We intend to pursue our commitment to the famine victims in Ethiopia, and we shall continue to send help. Our non-governmental organizations will be monitoring the situation and taking care of distributing the aid we shall be sending, and our ambassador, as I said before, is very carefully monitoring the present situation on our behalf.

PROSTITUTION

CHILD PROSTITUTES—COMMISSIONS' RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The Badgley Commission last August submittred a comprehensive report which very clearly documented the shocking incidence of sexual abuse of young people, which often leads them into a life of juvenile prostitution.

Why did the Government refuse to accept the unanimous recommendation of the Justice Committee, the Badgley Commission, and the Fraser Commission, all of which urge the Government to undertake social and economic measures to deal with juvenile prostitution? In particular, why did he not toughen sanctions against customers of child prostitutes, instead of doing as the Minister did yesterday in his Bill, driving them further into a life of crime, violence, and dependence on pimps?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not rejected any recommendations of the Badgley report nor of the Fraser report as yet. The Government is dealing interdepartmentally with these many and complicated recommendations and with the provinces which are involved in almost all phases of these serious social problems. I am expecting that we will have a range of legislative suggestions in this area that will be put before the House next fall. We are acting.

We acted yesterday to carry out one of the main recommendations of the Fraser committee report. It said that with respect to street prostitution citizens are entitled both to consideration by the law, and more than that, to forms of legal protection which can be effectively enforced. We have put before the House legislation dealing with street solicitation which can be effectively enforced so that the public streets of Canada can be recaptured for the use of ordinary citizens and controlled by the police as they should be.

BADGLEY COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, obviously on this question, as on so many others, the Minister is basically trying to work both sides of the street.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: There is nothing there at all on juvenile prostitution.

In view of the fact that the Government has been studying the Badgley Commission recommendations for over eight months without taking action on a single recommendation, how much longer will we have to wait before the Government does respond to the recommendations of the Badgley Commission? Will the Minister assure this House and, through this House, Canadians, that he will respond on behalf of the Government to those recommendations at least before the House rises for the summer recess?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is soliciting an answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I can assure him, yes, I am working both sides of the street. I am working the whole street. We are going to reclaim the public streets of Canada, in Toronto, in Calgary, in Vancouver, in Halifax, in St. John's they are already all right—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —in Burnaby—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —without discrimination against both men or women, or gender discrimination. There will be no discrimination. We are going to stop street soliciting both on behalf of those who sell sex and those who wish to purchase sex. That is the objective of our legislation, and that is what it will do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

RECOMMENDATIONS OF MR. JUSTICE HALL—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

We know how important the grain transportation policy is to Quebec farmers and to producers in Western Canada. This morning the papers reported that the Government was going to wait at least a year before implementing the recommendations of the Hall Report. Could the Minister inform the House whether this is indeed the Government's policy?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House earlier, the report of the Hall inquiry into the method of payment is being considered and will be debated hopefully in a comprehensive fashion. Also under the provisions of the Act, it is mandated to conduct a review during the crop year 1985-86. Of course the subject matter of the Hall inquiry and its recommendations will be included in the course of that review.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, considering the Minister's answer and the importance these decisions will have for producers in Quebec, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, does this mean that the Hall recommendations will not affect Canadian producers, either in Eastern or Western Canada, before the 1987-88 season?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations that have been advanced have been advanced under a set of criteria with the one important criterion being the method of payment that will be the most conducive to agricultural development in Canada and, second, a method of payment that will not be unfair or disproportionate to sectors of western agriculture relative to other regions of the country.

The recommendations that have been brought forth, I think, are very interesting ones. They should be considered in a very thoughtful and comprehensive fashion.

INDEXATION OF PENSIONS—MINISTER'S POWERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns the grave misgivings that members of the Public Service, the unions, and also superannuated members of the Public Service are expressing over the announcement that the Government is proposing to deindex public service pensions. The agreement with the alliance states that pension adjustments for inflation, and I quote: "will be determined by the President of the Treasury Board on the basis of the recommendations of the management board", that is the union-employer management board that is being proposed.

Is the Government proposing that the Minister will be able to veto or to change recommendations of that management board on inflation adjustment? If so, why should the public service unions give up the statutory indexing they now have, for a grace and favour system which gives the power to the Minister?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me say that first it is an agreement in principle. It is a basis for negotiating the final agreement that we can reach with both parties on the issues of pensions.

• (1140)

The reference to the power of the Minister is really with regard to the financial soundness of the plan. The management board will be set up, and as far as the management board making recommendations that are consistent with the financial soundness of the plan is concerned, there is no problem. It is not a veto power of any kind.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the grave concern about this and the fact that there may be some other verbal understandings not contained within the agreement, is the Minister prepared to appear before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, or another committee of the House, in order to explain and be questioned about the agreement with the public service unions? Would he use his good offices to make sure that such a meeting can take place at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. We have to negotiate this deal and it is very complex. We need actuarial reports and a number of technical details.

These are questions of principle and negotiating items that we have set forth to help both sides understand where we are going. It is not explaining in detail, as the Hon. Member asks, what we are going to do. This is a document that states that both parties will pursue discussions along these lines.

As soon as we reach any kind of specific agreement I will be more than happy to talk to any parliamentary committee and to the House in general, if need be, on the how, why, and when of the whole agreement.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF ERDA AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The pending ERDA agreement with the Province of British Columbia is of great importance to the people of my home province. Will the Minister advise the House of the status of this proposed agreement?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member will be pleased to learn that discussions are continuing. We have had discussions with the Minister of Industry and Small Business in British Columbia, Mr. McClelland, and he has indicated that he feels a basic agreement on the over-all ERDA can be worked out with respect to the subsidiary funding agreement.

I am very pleased to note that he stated in a major speech on April 29 that there is a new and important spirit of co-operation between Ottawa and the provinces which bodes well for us all. I agree.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

MINISTER'S MIDDLE EAST VISIT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns junkets on board the sacred instruments of travel of the Government.

In the face of massive cut-backs in the arts, the CBC, and other valuable areas of government activities, could the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House what could have possibly possessed his colleague, the Minister of Communications, to fill a government jet with family and personal staff members to fly off to Algeria, Greece, and other exotic places, at a cost of $57,000 to the Canadian taxpayers, at a time when he and his colleagues are preaching restraint and telling us how to tighten our belts? How does he intend to stop this kind of activity in the future?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I recall it the specific journey that the Hon. Member talks about was one which was made in the vital interests of Canada's international trade in one of the leading areas of our technology, namely, telecommunications. The Minister visited several countries in the Middle East on missions to improve markets and establish markets for the sale of Canadian manufactured products and goods.

When I saw the article to which the Hon. Member refers, I, who have that responsibility now, looked very carefully at that trip. I see every justification for the use of government aircraft in that instance. It has nothing but benefit. Certainly it is a far greater advantage to Canada than the example that was portrayed by his Party when it was the Government a couple of years ago, when three government aircraft, with three separate Cabinet Ministers, arrived at roughly the same time in the City of Winnipeg, unbeknownst to each other. All of them could have taken commercial aircraft.

INQUIRY WHETHER TRAVEL EXPENSES WILL BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, we know that when he was a Member of the Quebec Cabinet, the Minister of Communications had a reputation for nationalistic flights of fancy. Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House today whether he intends to allow Government travel documents to be made public as the previous Government did, so that Canadians can check up on unnecessary trips and spending by this government?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, not only are we doing it in public, if the Hon. Member were up to scratch he would know that he or any other Member can walk into National Defence Headquarters where these records are kept, on any day of the week within normal office hours, and have that information fully accessible to him on a daily basis. Certainly the journalists have discovered the accessibility.

It is not like the previous administration which kept them under wraps for three months, and would have liked to have kept them under wraps forever. This Government is open and fully accountable to the people, and any time that anyone wishes to see manifests or whatever other information with respect to the use of administrative flights, they can do so on a daily basis.

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY—SALE OF UNITED STATES ASSETS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion said that the sale of White Farm's U.S. assets involves "no direct connection whatsoever with the Canadian company". Yesterday news reports revealed that amongst those items that are being sold in the United States is the tooling for parts used in Brantford, and that these will have to be bought, or replaced, to keep the Canadian company in production. Will the Minister admit that he misled the House? Will he also admit that the sale that I talked about on Tuesday is a serious threat to the future jobs of those people in Brantford?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to what news account the Hon. Member is referring. We are in touch with the Royal Bank and the receiver in this case, as well as the person who has been attempting to put together a financing package possibly to take over the White Farm Equipment concern. We have been assured that the activity in the United States has no effect as far as the ongoing operation or potential operation of White Farm in Canada is concerned. There was certainly no misleading of the House when I answered the Hon. Member's question earlier in the week.

Mr. Langdon: In fact it was The Globe and Mail of yesterday, Christopher Waddell, who pointed out that this is a key problem for the survival of this company.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO HELP COMPANY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister again if he is prepared finally—having talked about socialist extraterritoriality, and trying to bring red herrings into this question—to act and get some urgency behind the survival of this company which is important not just for its own employees but for farm dealers across the country, and for the tool manufacturers, 13 of whom sent a telegram to him this week? Will he stop fiddling around and finally act?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has shed a lot of light on the source of his information when he refers to The Globe and Mail, and Mr. Waddell in particular.

We are acting with respect to his concern about White Farm, and we are in daily contact with various people who expressed an interest in reactivating the concern, including Mr. Sinclair, with whom we met and also discussed this matter on more than one occasion.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—INTERNAL INVESTIGATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. After months of waiting the Solicitor General revealed this week that he has received only an interim report from the RCMP on the Hatfield affair. I would like to ask him, after all these months, what possible additional work needs to be done on the report. I would also like to ask for his assurance that the interim report will not be watered down or sanitized to delete its findings from the final version which will be made public.

• (1150)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. colleague, as he perhaps will appreciate, that this internal review was one which took a considerable amount of time, and it was interrupted from time to time by the Commissioner's other duties. It was prepared in segments. I want to assure him that, just as there were no attempts to influence or water down the investigation which prompted the internal review, neither will there be any attempt to do anything like that with the comprehensive report which the Commissioner of the RCMP has just about completed.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WAS INTERVIEWED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, regarding the comprehensive report I would like to ask the Minister whether he was interviewed, or whether the RCMP asked to interview him as they did my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Member surely ought to know, if he would reflect upon the subject, that I speak with the Commissioner of the RCMP on many occasions, as he did when he was Minister. I can assure him, insofar as the request which was made to interview the Hon. Member for York South-Weston was concerned, that instead of co-operating with the force, as I am sure the former Minister would have done, he sought to make a media event out of it. Because of the circumstances, he never made a contribution to the review.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR TAX MEASURES TO ASSIST ARTISTS AND WRITERS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The question concerns the poverty of artists and the number of measures which have been proposed to relieve artists in dire straits which were made by the Subcommittee on the Taxation of Visual and Performing Artists and Writers. So far, only the easy recommendations have been implemented.

Could the Minister tell us if the Government is prepared, or when it will be prepared, to introduce measures on the more difficult matters and, in particular, to permit the deduction of losses from professional artistic activities and writing, and the function of self-employment for all performing artists for the purposes of expense deductions? Those are two of the key recommendations which concern practical artists in Canada right now.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not expect me to comment on matters which relate to the Budget at this time. The Minister of Communications, the Minister of Finance, myself, and this Government are very committed to Canadian culture. We are aware of the issues which have been raised. I am sure she will get her answer in due course.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE INQUIRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, that is not much of an answer. We would be happy to see action before the Budget. It does not have to wait for the Budget.

I would like to deal with another very specific measure. With the arts cut-backs, more and more artists are experiencing long periods of unemployment, yet they do not collect unemployment insurance because of their tax status. Recommendations were made as far back as 10 years ago, which have been studied by her Department, to incorporate artists into the unemployment insurance system. Can we expect action on that point in the near future as the situation for artists continues to get worse, and the periods of unemployment continue to affect more of them for longer periods?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we are considering a number of policies with regard to the cultural community. I am very happy to report, in light of the fact that we are seeing some economic recovery, that we expect the artistic community to share in that as well. Certainly in my riding we are very aware of the issues which she has raised, and we are very sensitive to them.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM—PARTICIPATION OF NORTHERN CONTRACTORS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. What is the Government doing to ensure that Canadians, in particular those contractors and workers living in the Northwest Territories and Yukon, will be able to get maximum benefit from the proposed North Warning System?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, immediatley after the announcement of the modernization program I caused the project manager from the Department to pay a visit to both the Governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, in order to acquaint them fully with the progress thus far and, as far as possible, to anticipate future needs. The problems he raises will be addressed to ensure the largest possible participation of Northerners in all of the projects, wherever they may be undertaken in Canada.

HOUSING

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of several Ministers, and especially the Minister of Labour who is responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Minister or to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, a number of mayors of Quebec municipalities have written to the Minister responsible for CMHC to complain about the cutbacks made in the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. They have also asked for additional funding. I would like to know whether the Minister could inform the House if he is willing to grant additional funding to the Regional Municipality of Arthabaska, the Town of Bécancour, the Regional Municipality of Bellechasse, and the cities of Rouyn-Noranda, Sherbrooke and Rimouski?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question would require the kind of detail which I am sure no reasonable Hon. Member would expect me to have at my fingertips. However, to avoid the necessity of the Member putting it on the Order Paper—where, perhaps, it should probably be—I will draw the matter to the attention of the Minister responsible and see to it that he communicates with the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since the Deputy Prime Minister has promised to speak to the Minister responsible for CMHC—now that the elections in Ontario are over, we can say that thanks to the Minister responsible for CMHC, who cut $17 million from Quebec's budget and only $2 million from Ontario's, that the Ontario election cost Quebecers $17 million—is the Minister going to ask the Minister responsible for CMHC to rectify a decision that was unfair to Quebecers and grant additional funding so that the RRAP program will get at least $10 million more?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept those premises as outlined by the Hon. Member. What he should be doing is complimenting this Government and the Minister of DRIE, who is sitting in his place, for reaching an agreement which eluded the Party which formed the previous Government—the Party of which he has been a member for so many years—for reaching a $1 billion agreement under ERDA with the Province of Quebec. It eluded those fellows over there, Mr. Speaker, for more than a decade.

AIR TRANSPORT

CP AIR—REPORTED EFFORT TO ATTRACT WORKERS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I am informed by one of my constituents in Vancouver that CP Air has been advertising in Seattle, Washington, by radio, for airline personnel, saying that there is no problem with a 90-day work permit. Has the Government agreed to issue immigration permits to permit strike breaking?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the incident to which the Hon. Member has referred. Certainly I will check it out. I do know that labour problems have developed between the airline, the IAM, and other unions. I will check it out and get back to the Hon. Member.

POSSIBILITY OF WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the labour problems, it will be a rough summer for airline travellers if another airline is on strike or locked out. What steps has the Government taken to try to resolve the situation at CP Air before either a strike or a lock-out happens?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Labour, is actively involved and is monitoring the situation very closely. He has been in touch with both parties and I am sure that he will be in a better position to report on the developments when he returns to the House next week.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

COMMITTEE STUDY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It relates to her announcement this week that she will introduce legislation to compensate Pioneer Trust depositors who are not fully protected by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Since January a private sector committee, which was appointed by the Minister, has been studying CDIC. Lest we risk being further overtaken by events, would the Minister tell the House what her timetable is, when she expects to have the committee's report, and when it will be tabled in the House?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have the draft report in my hands now. I will be reviewing it and tabling it as soon as possible in the House.

CEILING FOR INSURABLE DEPOSITS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Consumers Association of Canada has recommended raising the ceiling for insurable deposits to $100,000 from the present $60,000 and, further, that institutions covered by CDIC be required to inform customers whether their deposits are covered. In fact the customers would be required to sign a form which says that they have received that advice. Does the Government intend to introduce those particular proposals or recommendations?

● (1200)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already instructed the CDIC that it is to ensure that customers are adequately informed of the benefits and limits of deposit insurance. As far as raising the level of insurance is concerned, I do not want to prejudge what will come out of the report. We will have a full discussion of all the issues relating to deposit insurance when the report is tabled.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, May 2, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader what business he proposes for the coming week. When the Parliamentary Secretary was asked that question yesterday by the Deputy House Leader for the Opposition, he was told that the information would be provided today. I trust it will be.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. That was indicated yesterday by my Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

The Hon. Member will know that we are currently involved in discussions with Opposition Parties respecting the facilitating of the passage of several of the items of legislation which are on the Order Paper. At the moment, I would therefore like to indicate the business of the House for Monday and Tuesday of next week.

The first item of business on Monday will be a Bill entitled Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation Act, a Bill which will be introduced later today by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). As I indicated to the Hon. House Leaders in our discussion of last Wednesday, I am hoping we can have this important initiative on the part of the Government passed through all stages on Monday. The item is important to the people of Saskatchewan and I know that Hon. Members will be interested in giving serious consideration to moving that Bill through.

The second item of business that I would propose to call would be Bill C-30, the Bretton Woods Bill, which is at report stage. Hopefully we can make progress with that Bill and have the matter disposed of so that it can be referred to the Senate.

Mr. Gauthier: Does the Senate exist?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Senate as it now exists. If Bill C-30 is passed, the next item of business will be Bill C-33, the meat inspection Bill. I understand there is a disposition to deal with that matter rather quickly. I do not think there is any particular dispute regarding that legislation.

Finally, if Bill C-33 is passed, the House will move on to a debate at second reading stage on Bill C-45, the parliamentary staff relations Bill.

The business for Tuesday will be the same as the business I have just outlined for Monday.

PIONEER TRUST PAYMENT CONTINUATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-50, an Act to provide for the continuance of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, Questions Nos. 109 and 315 will be answered today.

COMPENSATION FOR EMPLOYEES

Question No. 109—Mr. Angus:

Were any salaries, expenses or remunerations paid to or negotiated with the Hon. Bryce Mackasey, the Hon. Eugene Whelan and Mr. Maurice Dupras between July 9, 1984 and the date their appointments were rescinded, or between that date and November 30, 1984 and, if so (a) what was the amount (b) what was the purpose and the date of each payment (c) were any of these payments taxable?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of External Affairs and Agriculture as follows:

The Hon. Eugene Whelan, the Hon. Bryce Mackasey and Mr. Maurice Dupras received salaries from the Department of External Affairs from July 9, 1984, the date on which they were appointed, to October 11, 1984, the date their appointments were terminated: Messrs. Whelan and Mackasey were paid at the GIC-08 level ($75,560 to $88,930 per year) and Mr. Dupras was paid at the GIC-06 level ($63,230 to $74,410 per year). Income tax deductions on salary payments were made at the appropriate rate.

The only other payments to them by the Department of External Affairs were those related directly to their postings and specified in the Foreign Service Directives: Mr. Whelan received reimbursement for expenses incurred in removal of personal effects and their storage pending shipment to Rome and Mr. Dupras received a posting loan that is now being recovered.

In so far as Agriculture Canada is concerned: Under the terms of a service contract, the Hon. Eugene Whelan was paid a taxable fee of $11,810 to serve as Canadian Representative to the World Food Council for the period October 11, 1984 to November 30, 1984.

CANADA-GASPÉ-LOWER ST. LAWRENCE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 315—Mrs. Killens:

Did the Government implement the Canada—Gaspé—Lower St. Lawrence economic development plan and, if so, what was the total amount invested in all areas of the plan since the work began?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Since the launching of the plan in May, 1983, until December 31, 1984, the total amounts spent or committed in all areas are as follows:

Agriculture	$ 3,474,000
Forestry	$ 3,166,000
Transport	$ 9,386,000
Fisheries	$60,133,000
Industry	$ 8,198,000
Tourism	$ 1,592,000
Mining	$ 1,310,000
Reserve and Administration	$ 195,000

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its indifference and negligence toward Atlantic Canada, especially with regard to regional industrial development, fisheries and transportation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in debating this motion which speaks of the neglect and indifference of this Government toward Atlantic Canada, its transportation problems, its fishery and its regional development, I am reminded of a suggestion made to me by a fisherman to whom I spoke on the telephone the other day. He suggested a way to solve two major problems facing the fishery in eastern Canada. He made the suggestion because the Government of Canada was not taking any action. He said to me, "I suppose it would be a good idea for the Prime Minister of the country, while he is attending meetings in Bonn, to turn to the President of the United States on his right and whisper into his ear, 'Ron, will you lift those tariffs you imposed on our saltfish that is going to the United States?' He should then lean to his left to say to Mr. Kohl, 'Will you please stop overfishing our resources on the East Coast of Canada?' ".

The reason the fisherman said that is quite logical and simple. Since the Government came to power, the most serious action ever taken by another country against our country involving the export of saltfish from Canada was the tariff imposed by the United States Trade Department on the importation of Canadian saltfish. Why was that tariff imposed? It was imposed because a fish company in Puerto Rico figured that it was the one and only fish company that actually salted fish within U.S. legal jurisdiction.

Because of the action taken by that small fish company in Puerto Rico, the U.S. Trade Department had to impose a tariff. This tariff ranges from 15 per cent up to 26 per cent, averaging out at 22 per cent. Every time producers from eastern Canada and from the Prime Minister's own riding—and the Prime Minister's riding is even more affected by this tariff imposed by the United States Government than any other riding—export saltfish to the United States, they have to post a bond of 22 per cent on average. That practice began two months after the Government was elected and is still going on today. Surely there is some diplomatic way for this Government to get the U.S. Government to lift that tariff that was imposed for the first time on Canadian exports of saltfish into the United States. However, nothing yet has been done about that.

We have now learned that for the last three months West Germany has been fishing on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland using nine factory freezer trawlers of over 300 feet in length with feeder boats. These trawlers take in incredible amounts of codfish. For the past three months they have been violating an agreement signed by the EEC and Canada in 1983 that was to extend until 1987. They have overfished to the extent of, as the Department of Fisheries shows in its records from boat inspections made on the high seas as of three weeks ago, 30 times their assigned quota. However, I have learned that not all of the boats were visited by inspectors. They do not really know right now how much fish the West German fleet has caught.

Those fish, Mr. Speaker, are the offshore and inshore stock. They migrate to what is called the Nose of the Grand Banks and then inshore. In other words, they are the stock that Canadian fishermen in Atlantic Canada have to use to make a living. That stock creates employment in eastern Canada.

What is wrong with our system, our Government, which allows this to go on? The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) admitted today that he sent his first note back in March to the EEC saying that they were violating the long-term Canada-EEC fishing agreement. But then I discover that the EEC had replied to the Canadian Government on April 17 saying categorically and bluntly that they do not recognize that as being Canadian jurisdiction. It always was and always has been recognized internationally as being Canadian jurisdiction and the fish as being Canadian stock. But the West German fleet is blatantly violating its quota and the EEC is backing them up and saying they do not recognize that as Canadian jurisdiction.

What, then, is the normal procedure for this Government to follow when that kind of action occurs? What do you do when you have a blatant violation of a written agreement and a foreign country is fishing beyond its quota to such a degree as to probably destroy the stock? The options open to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the federal Government are quite simple. The Government of Canada, as it has done in the past, can close its ports to the country which violated the agreement. In other words, that country's vessels cannot come into a Canadian port for supplies. We have done that to the Soviet Union, we have done it to several other countries.

A second option open to the Minister and the Government is that we can impose sanctions. What does that mean? It means that next year that country will not be assigned a quota.

Then there is a third and obvious option which the Government can take, an option which I am sure every single fisherman and fish plant worker, every single person in the Department of Fisheries, would want to recommend, and that is cancellation of the entire agreement with the EEC. Why? Because it is the EEC which has the problem. They are the ones who have to get their house in order. They are the ones who have to deal with the West German Government. They have to say to that Government that its fleet has overfished its quota by 300, 400 or 500 times.

Actually, to face facts here, the entire EEC quota has been exceeded three times by the West Germans alone as of today. So the Canadian Government should cancel the agreement and the EEC would then turn around and say to the West German Government that it has overfished its quota and that means that the U.K., with a quota of 850 metric tonnes, will not be able to get its quota; the French Government, with a quota of about 1,500 metric tonnes, will not be allowed to take its quota. Let the EEC straighten out their own internal affairs; let them get their house in order. Have the Canadian Government cancel the agreement and that would force the West German fleet off the Grand Banks of Newfoundland and stop them from raping our resource, as the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) said this morning in Question Period.

This is a very, very serious matter. Here we have two countries, the United States and West Germany, as well as the EEC as a whole, involved in discrimination against Canadian fishermen. They see the Canadian federal Government, as this motion says, exercising indifference and negligence in not taking any action. There has never been in Canada, in the past 20 years at least, such a violation of an international agreement in the fishery and it has gone on and on and on. The Minister says "since March"; it has gone on until this very day.

The nine factory freezer trawlers that were out there with their feeder ships, these boats of more than 300 feet in length, have now been reduced to five. Why? Because the other four are all filled up and heading home; but the rest are this very morning still overfishing. And the Minister turns around and says, "Oh, we are going to have more negotiations". Well, as was made clear in this Chamber, the EEC has made its position clear: "We do not respect your jurisdiction". In all honesty I believe the EEC member countries are expecting this Government to cancel the agreement and that is what the Government has to do.

Those are just two matters in which this Government has been negligent in dealing with eastern Canada. I refer to what this new federal Government says is the answer to the fishing problems. I refer to this document called A New Direction for Canada: An Agenda for Economic Renewal, presented by the Hon. Michael H. Wilson, Minister of Finance, on November 8, 1984. The Government says new approaches are required. Well, everyone would agree with that.

Mr. Stevens: What page?

Mr. Baker: Page 59. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) wants to follow along to make sure I am quoting correctly. This publication says:

> Government financial resources are not the solution.

The Minister would certainly agree with that. Then we get down to the second last paragraph which says:

> Consolidation of employment in the sector would have to be complemented by public and private initiatives to promote job opportunities in other sectors of the economy, as well as fair and generous adjustment programs for workers in the sector.

When you go through that entire section on fisheries, Mr. Speaker, there you see the policy, the solution proposed by this Government to the problems of the Atlantic fishery: "Consolidation of employment", and "promote job opportunities in other sectors of the economy". Can you imagine a government saying to people who work in this industry, the fishermen who feed that industry, the fish plant workers, that it is examining job opportunities elsewhere to see if it cannot work out with private enterprise a fair and generous adjustment program for workers in this sector? That is the policy direction of this Government! Even worse, if we go down to the last line, and I know the Minister is going to follow along, it says:

> Fisheries decision-making needs to be more open—

Yes!

> —with greater involvement by commercial fishermen—

That is quite a statement and no one would disagree with that. But where was that policy statement when the Government of Canada decided it was going to cancel the entire insurance program for fishermen's boats and then turned around and discovered it could not do that? We in the Liberal Party said that they could not do it because it would cause thousands of fishermen to lose their boats. Sure enough, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans discovered that it could not be done. He then issued a press release saying that they were going to keep up the Government insurance program but triple the rates. They were going to ensure that the plan would survive and be profitable. Mr. Speaker, every fisherman, every fisherman's organization, and every union knows that since its inception that program has had a net benefit of about $5 million. The Minister is now changing his policy.

• (1220)

Where was the consultation when the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) announced in the House that the Government of Canada was going to charge people for phoning the weather office? She has still not changed that policy although she knows full well that she cannot implement it. She then waffled. She said that fishermen, farmers and other people whose livelihoods depend upon weather information will be excluded. Opposition Members asked how they could be excluded. Were they going to get their social insurance numbers over the phone? How can they find out whether they are full-time fishermen? The Minister then waffled again saying that they were going to charge everybody.

That is a very dangerous policy, Mr. Speaker. Imagine a man about to go out in his boat at five o'clock in the morning. He wants a weather update because of fast-changing weather patterns. He is involving his own life and the lives of his crew. When there is a charge for making the phone call, no matter how low the charge is, the man will know that he is being charged extra for it and he will hesitate. He will not make as many calls as he made before. In fact, Mr. Speaker, our policy should be to encourage him to make more calls than he has normally made. Where was the consultation when that policy was introduced?

Where was the consultation when the Government unilaterally increased charges on fishermen's charts and cut back on the hydrographic service charting the coastline of Atlantic Canada? The charting of the waters of eastern Canada is absolutely necessary. Most of the charts for a certain section of the coastline of eastern Canada are Captain Cook's charts. They date back to the days of the old lead line. Five years ago the Government of Canada tried to institute a policy to update those charts. It wanted to spend more money on that service. However, without consultation, the new Government has increased the charges to fishermen and started to chop from that service.

Where was the consultation when the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans announced a herring quota for this spring starting April 15 when every single harbour was frozen over? Where was the consultation when the Government announced it was going to cut back on UIC because it was examining the unemployment insurance scheme? That scheme provides a guaranteed income for the fishermen of eastern Canada and now the Government is tinkering with it with no consultation.

As this motion says, Mr. Speaker, the Government has been totally negligent and totally indifferent to the needs of fishermen in eastern Canada. The Government must start changing its policies or it will face the same fate as a lot of provincial Tory Governments will face when they are defeated in their next elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments? Resuming debate, the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate I would point out that the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has addressed his remarks to only one aspect of the motion. The motion deals with regional industrial development, fisheries and transportation. If I were to rely on the remarks of the Hon. Member, I could only presume that he is reasonably happy with regard to regional industrial development in Atlantic Canada because he did not single out anything for criticism in that field.

Mr. Baker: That's not true, Mr. Speaker. That's not fair.

Mr. Stevens: He must be reasonably happy with regard to transportation as well. I am pleased to hear that because we feel that we can indicate some optimism with respect to Atlantic Canada. We can indicate that matters have improved greatly.

However, we must approach this debate with a word of caution, Mr. Speaker. When I read the wording of this motion I was rather startled to find that a representative of the Official Opposition would be so bold as to suggest that he would like to have a debate on the issues of regional industrial development, fisheries and transportation in Atlantic Canada when their record as a government over the previous 10 years was such an utter disaster. Others joining in this debate must remember what we inherited from the previous Government.

The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council did a recent study of which I was given a copy. The study included a contrast between Atlantic Canada and the states which make up the New England states. I invite all Members who are interested in the debate today to get a copy of that study. It shows that in 1975, when the Hon. Member's Party was in power, unemployment in the New England states was higher, on average, than unemployment in Atlantic Canada. By 1984 unemployment in Atlantic Canada had gone up by about 50 per cent from 1975. In the six New England states unemployment had been cut in half. During that 10-year period the average incomes of residents of Atlantic Canada were a constant 75 per cent of the national average income. I find that unfortunate. We in this Party believe that average incomes in Atlantic Canada can be much closer to the national average than has been the case over the previous years.

What happened in the New England states? We find that during the same period they had a net increase of about 10 per cent in their state products as related to the national average. This is a second barometer which indicates how unfortunate the previous Government's policies directed towards Atlantic Canada have been. I say that notwithstanding the fact that there have been literally hundreds of millions of dollars poured into Atlantic Canada in the form of subsidies, grants and other approaches.

Don't get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. We are acknowledging and will continue to acknowledge that in an area such as Atlantic Canada there is room for Government assistance, whether it is a grant, an incentive or a subsidy. What we are saying, however, is that the Official Opposition in the House today has absolutely nothing to teach the people of Canada about solving the problems of Atlantic Canada. Whatever they felt were the solutions for Atlantic Canada in their term of office, we know that their solutions did not work. The people who are out of work in Atlantic Canada today are out of work because of previous policies that did not take hold.

I am a little surprised to hear the tone of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). It is that old Liberal ploy of always assuming that it is a "foreigner", as they like to call them, who is causing the problems. If there has been any overfishing or any misuse of quotas, we are the first Government to champion the Canadian right to resist whatever that wrong has been. I suggest that it is totally wrong for a Liberal spokesperson to stand up in the House and pretend that the problems all come from some foreigner, as they suggest, as opposed to some of the misdirected policies that their colleagues put in place when they had an opportunity to govern.

It was interesting to note how the Hon. Member's speech dealt mainly with the fisheries question, which is of great concern to all of Atlantic Canada. In particular, he seemed to dwell more on the Newfoundland situation than on the four provinces generally. However, I notice that he never once mentioned Fishery Products International. That company is a main employer in the fishing industry in Newfoundland. He did not refer to it and surely Hon. Members must have wondered why.

If the Hon. Member really has the concern of fishermen in Newfoundland at heart, as he professes, why did he not make some reference to the main employer? I can suggest why, Mr. Speaker. It is because that company, when the Government left power, was in an utter disaster. The workers were on strike, the fishermen were not fishing and the processors were not employed. It did not have a chief executive officer and virtually no board of directors. In short, it was the worst example of what the Hon. Member refers to as indifference and negligence in a corporate activity that I have ever witnessed.

I am pleased to say that one of the first challenges that we accepted was to sit down with the Government of Newfoundland in an attempt to put this company into a viable position. We agreed that not only did we have to put up an equity of approximately $25 million to overcome some immediate problems, but we had to find a suitable chief executive officer and a good board of directors for him to work with. Their job was to try to make peace with the labour unions and get people back to work and hopefully get Fishery Products International back into business on a viable basis. I am pleased to inform Hon. Members of the House that we have done that.

Vic Young is an excellent chief executive officer. We intend to support him. He is backed up by one of the best corporate boards in the entire nation. I am pleased to say that settlements were reached with onshore workers and the fishermen themselves. The company is back to work.

I say this in order to put this debate into perspective. It is not only a question of our being able to get Fishery Products International working again because there are many similar situations in the Atlantic area which we inherited and which needed very immediate attention. Devco is another example which I will refer to later. As a result of some of the actions we have taken there is new hope for that company today. Yet the previous Government had absolutely no hope for those people. Our Government has begun to restore Devco and I will give good news about Devco later on. I know that Hon. Members will be very interested to hear it.

Again, we have an example of a Crown Corporation that was left with virtually no board and no senior executive officer by a previous Government. This company, with the mining of coal as one of its principal activities, had a senior executive officer who knew nothing about coal mining. The Opposition has the audacity to walk into the House and propose a motion dealing with indifference and negligence with respect to Atlantic Canada. I notice that the Hon. Member is even giggling now, as he looks into the House. As far as I am concerned, that record will hopefully set the facts straight. Those are the hard facts and the business facts.

Let us talk about specifics. I have referred to Fishery Products International and I have referred to the Liberal inability to oversee this enterprise which is so important to Atlantic Canada. Last year it meant a disastrous strike that lasted 180 days. People were out of work not only in the plants but in the fishery itself. It is no wonder that there was no permanent chief executive officer for over 12 months. In short, the prior Government offered no support to the company.

Since we have taken office we have put in a strong chief executive officer and the board to which I have referred. That board is made up of people such as Anthony Wright, President and Chief Executive Officer of Newfoundland Power Company; Paul Desmarais, Chief Executive Officer of Power Corporation; Bill James, Chief Executive Officer of Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd.; Howard Hawkes of Bache Securities and Frank Stronach of Magna Corp. With the work of Vic Young and a board of that calibre, I know that we will be pleased with the result.

Let me deal with the situation of National Sea Products. As Hon. Members probably know, the Government of Canada owns about 20 per cent of that company. Perhaps it has been noted in today's paper that the net profit in the last quarter ended March 1, 1985, was 40 cents a share in that company as compared with a loss of 25 cents in the same quarter last year. That is good business. That is getting that company back to a viable level. That is what we intend to do.

For all the talk coming from the Opposition benches about grants, subsidies and all the rest, let us never forget that the real bottom line is getting people back to work in this country, especially in Atlantic Canada. When we talk about doing more in the private sector, creating the atmosphere and essentially creating jobs, that is our objective. I know that all our Members, as far as the coming Budget is concerned, are going to take new hope when they hear some of the measures that will be proposed to get Canadians back to work once again.

This is not a time, as the Opposition benches seem to love to foster and dwell on, for doom and gloom. This is essentially a time for new hope, to be taking a look at opportunities and not problems. I can tell Hon. Members that since we took office last September we have signed seven economic and regional development agreements with the four Atlantic provinces; two each with Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and one with New Brunswick. For these the federal Government has allotted almost $230 million. Does that sound like indifference, Mr. Speaker? Does that sound like negligence, as the Hon. Member from the Official Opposition would have us believe? The people in Atlantic Canada know this is a Government that is attentive to their problems.

In addition to the $230 million to which I have referred, let us not forget the Atlantic Accord with Newfoundland which calls for a further $225 million in federal funds. Isn't it odd that a Member from Newfoundland would stand up and speak on this subject and not say how pleased he was that the offshore oil situation has been settled in a way satisfactory to the Government of Newfoundland?

An Hon. Member: He forgot.

Mr. Stevens: Somebody just suggested that maybe he forgot. Opposition Members do have very convenient memories.

I could go on and relate the multitude of programs that we are enhancing and developing as far as Atlantic Canada is concerned. For the last fiscal year, right up to the end of March, let me mention that ongoing programs pumped $128,-751,000 in federal funds into the Atlantic economy.

I mentioned earlier that I felt the record I related to was unsatisfactory and could be improved. I can also tell you that one of the most encouraging things, Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as development Minister, has been to meet with my provincial counterparts. That first occurred here in Ottawa in January. Incidentally that was the first time in Canadian history that development Ministers at the provincial and federal level have ever had a joint meeting. We did that. We met in Quebec City and further advanced co-operation and identified goals that we wanted to attain to get people back to work.

Later this month we will be going to Vancouver. Once again we will be having meetings. Later we are to go to St. John's, Newfoundland for a meeting in the summer. We have been meeting every two months. We believe there is an urgency in getting Canada's regions back to work to enjoy the prosperity that they rightly deserve as far as the federal Government is concerned.

I mentioned that I would love to come back to Devco. I am very pleased to be able to tell Hon. Members that here is a company that over the years has had hundreds of millions of dollars pumped into it. As I mentioned, the previous Government abandoned it. In fact, the company never did have a chief executive officer who had any experience in the mining business. We named Derek Rance as the chief executive officer. I met with him yesterday. He is taking some excellent steps to ensure the viability of Devco. But here is the good news. That company for the first time in a decade is going to show a profit for the past year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: That profit has come from the fact that we have been able to get a 31 per cent increase in output per man-shift, a 25 per cent reduction in absenteeism and a 17 per cent reduction in accident frequency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: We think we are on the right track. I can tell you, sir, that the more we clear away the underbrush, the indecision and the confusion which the last Government left us, the more we know we are on the right track as far as Devco is concerned. Because of the excellent results, we have agreed that there should be a profit-sharing plan for the employees of Devco, and the profit to which I have referred, the first profit that corporation has had for 10 years, will be shared 10 per cent by the employees and management of Devco, the people who have produced those results.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: That is the Brian Mulroney Government in action. We feel that Atlantic Canada can once again be one of the most viable, economically prosperous areas of this country, and if the Official Opposition would just back off a little, it will be surprised how quickly this turnaround is going to occur.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Baker: I was smilling at the Minister from behind the curtains because I could see what a bind the Minister was in in trying to participate in this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: He did not seem to have much flow or logic in what he was saying. On the one hand he was saying, "Well, any unemployment and bad performance is due to the last Liberal Government".

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Baker: Then all of a sudden he said, "Well, for last year Devco is making a profit, but that is due to our Government." Last year was 1984, Mr. Speaker.

It is very interesting to hear what the Minister said. He accused me at the beginning of not mentioning transportation or regional development. The reason I did not is that I never got around to it. I got so caught up talking about the bad performance of this Government in the fisheries that I did not have the time to get to what the Government has done in transportation and regional development and what this Minister has done by cutting out $200 million. From where did the Minister cut this money? He cut it from the industrial incentives program. In the document tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), he should explain what lay behind that move of his Government. The Minister does not realize certain things. He should examine the new ferry rates on the East Coast of Canada. He should examine all the cut-backs. What about all the boat services that have been cancelled on the south coast of Newfoundland? The Minister should look at how much it will cost him and his family to get over to one of the provinces in eastern Canada since this Government has taken over.

Let me ask the Minister a question. The Minister talked about Fisheries Products International. He said it is now on an even keel. He really took credit for Fisheries Products International. Did the Minister agree with the action taken by the former Government in setting up Fisheries Products International? Did he agree with the amount of money that went into the setting up of that company?

Second, the minister now says everything is fine and dandy. Everything is on an even keel. Is the Minister saying that there will not be any closures of fish plants under Fisheries Products International? That is an interesting question, Mr. Speaker, with the advent of this Government's policy of consolidation in the fishing industry. Will the Minister answer yes or no in this House under this great Fisheries Products International that he claims he has reorganized? Is he saying that all fish plants will remain open, or is he going to relocate the workers?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I hope we can keep the record straight, notwithstanding the interventions of the Hon. Member. When I referred to the Cape Breton Development Corporation for the first time in the past decade swinging into a profitable position, I was referring to the fiscal year ended March 31, 1985. The fact is that when we took over in September last year, the company was still operating at a loss. In the last six months to seven months we were able to swing it around, so that we can now say that it is into the black as far as operating figures are concerned. The profit to which I am referring contrasts to a loss the year before, March 31, 1984, of $49 million. That is the way the previous Government was running this company.

The Hon. Member asked me whether I agreed with their financing plan for FPI. Let there be no doubt what the financing plan was. It was a bail-out for the banks. It was essentially an arrangement to allow the banks to recover moneys which they had advanced. There was very little put up to ensure that the company would be viable and could operate for the benefit of the employees who needed the assistance of FPI to get on with their fishing occupations. That is the truth, and I hope there will be no doubt as far as the House is concerned.

Mr. Baker: I would like the Minister to answer the question. Did he agree with the policy of the former Government and the input of some $100 million in total into that reorganized structure? Did he agree with the actions of the former Liberal Government which the Premier of Newfoundland called the greatest thing since Confederation? Did he agree with the Premier of Newfoundland? When he talks about how great Fisheries Products International now is, is he saying that there will be no closures of plants and no consolidations into other sectors, as the policy statement of this Government indicates?

Mr. Stevens: The Hon. Member has raised the question of financing. He mentioned about $100 million, but he only told half the story. Money went in but it also went out to pay off the banks substantially, as far as their ongoing credits were concerned. In that respect I feel the previous Government was rather naive in what it put together as a refinancing package.

Here again I find the Hon. Member's approach very fascinating. He reflects the interventionist tendency of the previous Government. He wants me to comment on what the present executive or board may or may not be doing with respect to the operation of the company. In due course, because it is more than 50 per cent owned by the people of Canada, we naturally will be reporting back to the House. However, let me assure all Hon. Members that I do not think anything is gained by running commentaries by some politicians as to what they think in a day to day sense should or should not be done in Fisheries Products International. I am pleased that they are back to work, that productivity has risen, and that fishermen once again are able to ply their occupations in the fishery, not listen to a lot of pompous political speeches about what might or might not be possible.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Minister has not made such a pompous speech this morning, in that case. Also I am pleased with the conversion to recognizing the virtues of public enterprise. I suspect some other earth-shaking things to happen in the near future, such as foxes endorsing the virtues of hounds chasing them in the hunt and alligators favouring purse manufacturers. This is a kind of conversion which is so magnificent that I cannot help but congratulate the Minister on it.

However, I want to ask the Minister whether he is now prepared to answer some questions which were raised in the previous debate on Atlantic Canada. These were questions which we posed at the time, coming out of our action group visit to Atlantic Canada. Three of those questions remain particularly relevant. I am talking about the debate on January 25. I might have hoped that the Minister, if he were not indifferent or negligent, would have answered these questions by now.

First, could the Minister tell us whether he is yet prepared to meet the request of workers at Sysco to assist with federal funding to improve productivity and the future export capacity of that company?

Second, is the Minister able to tell me whether an arrangement has finally been worked out with the Woodlot Owners Federation in New Brunswick with respect to reforestation plans there? I talked with the president of that association just two weeks ago, and the Minister had not yet been able to sort out that arrangement.

Third, has the Minister been able to see to it that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has reached an agreement with the Canada Works Program in Newfoundland that we stressed, on the basis of groups which talked to us, was not representing employment equity in its allocation of jobs as between men and women in that province?

Would the Minister be prepared to provide answers to these quite important questions which frankly have been hanging about for some time and which I expected him to answer before now?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), I can only in passing comment upon the fact that only yesterday the Hon. Member somehow or other got out of Canada and started to raise a question which would have been more relevant in Washington, D.C. Today he has taken us down to alligator country while we talk about Atlantic Canada, and then he got into the question of foxes. I must admit that perhaps there is no better Member of this House to speak about foxes than the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor. Then he dealt with the question of Sysco. As he undoubtedly knows, Sysco has been mainly the responsibility of the Government of Nova Scotia. There are discussions at the present time concerning its future activities. Of course, we are participating in those discussions with a view to trying to do what we believe will be right for the people involved with that company.

The Hon. Member also referred to forestry in New Brunswick. I know he will be very pleased with an announcement, which will be made probably within the week, concerning some activity in New Brunswick that most Members of the House would heartily endorse. As well, he referred to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) with respect to certain ongoing discussions with Newfoundland. I can only say that I think it would be more appropriate for my employment colleague to comment on that aspect of the question.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately the time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will start his speech at two o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I had hoped to raise this point of order before the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) left. Now that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is in the Chamber, perhaps he could clarify the point.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion said in his remarks this morning that there were two new agreements signed with the Province of Newfoundland since his side of the House became the Government of Canada. To my knowledge, that is not the case. There have been announcements of intentions, but to my knowledge there have not been two new agreements signed that were not originated by this side of the House when we were the Government of Canada previously. I know the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion did not intend to mislead the House. Maybe he was right, but I do not think he was. Possibly somebody could clarify that for me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that in my opinion this unfortunately is not a point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are large gaps in the knowledge of the hon. gentleman. When I speak later this afternoon I will address myself to his inadvertent lapses of memory. I will describe all that has been done for Newfoundland and Labrador in the last seven months, more than in the last 10 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: That doesn't answer the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) had the floor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must say, since I am going to make a speech, that I feel I should rise on a point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: You have not done a thing for the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Langdon: Give us a chance.

Mr. Crosbie: You will never have the chance.

Mr. Langdon: I first want to express my pleasure at having the opportunity to speak today. This is a fine morning in Ontario after a demonstration last night of what indifference and negligence can result in for Governments that are guilty of that. I suspect there are few Conservatives today in the House of Commons who are not sitting slightly less comfortably in their seats. For me, that is a pleasure.

I have to remind people, as the voters of Ontario reminded the Government last night, that a tough jury is out on all of us, a tough jury that has to be satisfied that we are dealing with all the crucial issues in front of this country. I give congratulations to the Liberal Party in this House of Commons on the gains it made in Ontario. I give hearty congratulations to my colleagues in my Party, particularly in Windsor where we managed to take a seat away from the Liberal Party.

I also have to say that it is a pleasure to be part of the same debate as the "Minister for closure". The Minister for closure is not very happy with debate and discussion within the House, so I am pleased to actually see him today. It is not often that he is prepared to participate in such important debates, I fear, in view of his predilection for getting controversial legislation passed fast.

This is a motion on Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canada is a part of this country where our action group spent a good deal of time and learned a good deal. It is a part of the country where we found the tragedy of unemployment to be particularly severe and particularly sad. I want to begin my contribution today with a quotation from a report by the Social Justice Network of Sydney, Nova Scotia. It talks about one of the underemphasized sides of the unemployment crisis, about the fact that it is not just parents who bear the brunt of the unemployment crisis but children as well. I quote:

We have noticed that children's reactions to unemployment are similar to those of adults, these being apathy, boredom, depression, a sense of loss, worry, anxiety, defeat and resignation. We feel that like their parents, children who are exposed for long periods of time to unemployment are at risk of becoming emotionally unstable.

Those are the human costs that face us as we talk today about the problems of Atlantic Canada.

In his contribution the Minister suggested that the bottom line is jobs and job performance. I agree with him. Obviously Conservative Members who applauded his words so vigorously also agree. We must look first at that bottom line. What that bottom line tells us is that for all four Atlantic provinces, the unemployment rate has gone up dramatically since this Government took office.

In the case of Newfoundland, the unemployment rate is as high as 24.6 per cent as compared with 23.3 per cent a year ago. In Prince Edward Island, the unemployment rate is now 17.6 per cent as compared with 15.9 per cent a year ago. In Nova Scotia, it is now 17.3 per cent as compared with 15 per cent a year ago. In New Brunswick, it is now 19.9 per cent as compared with 17.6 per cent a year ago. Some bottom line! In social accounting terms and in terms of human costs and benefits, that is a sad story indeed.

I do not want to deal only with the gloomy facts although those facts themselves are gloomy enough. I would like to suggest to Hon. Members here today that there is a positive direction in which we as a Parliament can proceed. This direction will give the people of Atlantic Canada and indeed the people of the entire country a sense of hope and confidence for the future.

In the action group report released by our Party early in April, we laid out a series of commitments to community self-direction, to building on our resources, to corporate accountability and to equity in the workforce which would provide a direction for this country and a hope for Atlantic Canada. I recommend these commitments to government Members as they look to their own Budget later this month.

The direction we laid out in that report speaks directly to the potential of Atlantic Canada, a potential that we ourselves saw in Newfoundland when we heard the ideas and plans for fishing co-operatives expressed to us by the fishermen's union in Newfoundland. We have seen these ideas transformed into direct concrete action in the case of New Dawn Enterprises of Cape Breton Island, a co-operative which has provided jobs and hope to that community. This potential was expressed to us by members of the Federation of Woodlot Owners of New Brunswick who told us in detail how switching funds to them for reforestation could get the trees we need for our future industries and could give us more jobs.

We saw that potential in the messages that came to us about the accountability of a company like Noranda, a company which has taken so much out of the Province of New Brunswick but, when asked to pay it back by making one commitment, a commitment to provide a zinc refinery in that province, played political games for years and finally turned down the request. We see that potential in the Indian communities of New Brunswick with which we spoke just last month after our action group report was released. People in those communities told us that this report did provide a focus on their needs which they had not seen from previous Governments. It is possible to take a positive direction. This positive direction is one which must reverse the kinds of policies which were followed by the previous Government.

We in this country have had ten years of trickle-down economics. It has not worked. We have had ten years of attempts to get the economy moving by giving extra breaks to those who are well off. It is time to take a trickle-up approach. For ten years we have been putting our trust as a country in the hands of Ottawa bureaucrats and the large corporate sector. That has not worked either. It is time to trust people and their communities across this country. For ten years we have been cutting our trade barriers, supposedly to help our economy. That has backfired. It is time to use our trade barriers as levers to help us win a position in the tough international economy.

We in this Party have looked for practical and positive ways to use a trickle-up approach and to put trust into our communities. We see a way that this can be accomplished in the very Budget that will come down this month. We could give to the people of Canada the tax breaks they deserve. We have suggested that $2.7 billion in tax help be given to middle and lower income earners rather than to the corporate sector and the wealthy of the country. We have suggested that there be a clear set of expenditures for community initiatives which would give communities across the country the capacity to put into reality their dreams. These are dreams of new small business ventures, of new co-operative ventures, of municipal ventures and of improving resources within communities. Our young people have dreams of making jobs for themselves. However, this is not going to just happen; it takes leadership and a Government that provides that leadership.

As well, we have suggested that $1.1 billion be spent on resource upgrading, that $200 million be spent on the forestry sector and that $150 million be spent on the fishery sector. This is the kind of positive commitment which the previous Government lacked and which this Government, despite its rhetoric, has not been prepared to provide. We have as well suggested support for agriculture and for energy alternatives.

The right direction is there. It is possible to take the new approach of trusting our communities in this Budget. It is possible to take a bottom-up approach that would give us the jobs that are so desperately required. It is possible to affect the economy positively. Instead, what do we see? Why are we rising today to support this motion of non-confidence in the Government with respect to its neglect of Atlantic Canada?

When looking at the actual performance of the Government as opposed to the honeyed phrases and bombastic commentaries, we see that there has been a lack of action. We see negligence and neglect. The Minister spoke of meetings and I applaud that. However, there is a point at which meetings must translate into action. Attending meeting after meeting as described by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion does not help an unemployed woodworker in Newfoundland. It does not help the fishermen in Cape Breton or the 55 per cent of the workforce out of work in Newcastle, New Brunswick. It takes action and that is what we have not had.

We have not even had a Budget from this Government as yet. But we have had cuts; in social housing and the residential rehabilitation program. This Minister of closure who got up to talk about what a magnificent job he is doing did not bother to mention the cuts in IRDP which has left Halifax, as one example, ineligible to receive grants for modernization and expansion. How can the Conservative members who represent that part of Canada feel happy and confident with that direction?

There has been no action on Sysco despite the request from the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia for federal help to put that enterprise back on its feet. Then we have the woodlots. The Federation of Woodlot Owners in New Brunswick made a simple request, five months ago by my count, for more funding to help local, small woodlot producers reforest their lots. Five months and no action yet. How can this Government justify that? Atlantic Canada put its confidence in those Members and they are not coming through. Co-operatives are very important in Atlantic Canada, but has this Government done anything to help them? Not a thing.

This Government believes that the answer to all our problems lies outside our boundaries. This Government truly believes that the foreign investment community, thanks to the magnificent honeyed tones of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), will flock in and solve our problems. The people of the Maritimes have had far too much experience with the Doscos and Hawker Siddeleys of the world to expect that foreign investment is going to be some kind of magic cure. Then we have free-trade zones. This is the new pot at the end of the rainbow. We can somehow turn Cape Breton into a free-trade zone, get rid of minimum wages, get back to the free market where we can compete with Korea. Fantastic stuff. What a vision! What a sense of commitment to and confidence in the Canadian people. This Government believes that competing with Taiwan and Korea is the answer to our problems. Free trade with the United States is the other magic solution.

What all of these ideas have in common is that they have not been thought through, they will not come to pass, and even if they did they would not solve the job problems of the hundreds of thousands of people in Atlantic Canada who are looking for a future. Where is the faith in Canadians? Where is the faith in small business people? Where is the faith in the co-operative tradition in Atlantic Canada? Where is the faith in the men and women of that part of the country, people who told us again and again and again of positive, exciting ideas they had to build their communities and create the jobs we need? Yet this Government is not responding to that sense of hope and potential. It puts its faith in magic solutions from the outside instead of real answers based on Canadian communities.

What we heard from Atlantic Canada was that they are tired of hand-outs; they are tired of short-term, make-work projects. They want a long-term future. They want jobs based in and on their communities, but this Government has not as yet shown it has heard that message. Perhaps it will, I hope it will, but on the basis of its record since September 4 I have to say: neglect, negligence; the evidence is there. I hope the evidence will be changed in this coming Budget, but for the moment it is clear this Government has failed Atlantic Canada and it deserves to hang its head in shame for that failure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), in his introductory remarks, congratulated certain members of his Party and certain members of the Liberal Party. In the Ontario riding of Cornwall the Conservative candidate, Luc Guindon, was successful in winning a seat which had been held by the NDP. I was wondering if inadvertently the Hon. Member had forgotten to congratulate the Conservatives.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question. I had thought, to be fair, that I should not comment too much on the Conservative performance in yesterday's election. As I look through the detailed results I thought it might be best, out of a sense of charity and friendliness, not to mention what had happened to my poor Conservative friends in Ontario. However, since the question has been raised I feel honour bound to talk with concern about what has happened to Mr. Miller and his regime.

Mr. Nickerson: Tell us who came in last.

Mr. Langdon: I see, for instance, there has been a tremendous loss in Toronto. Here in Ottawa there have been losses. I see that in London, even Ministers were defeated. I see that the poor Minister of Labour in Sault Ste. Marie, and I can understand my hon. friend from Sault Ste. Marie—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think we are way off the motion. Resuming debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to debate this motion before the House today. This matter needs attention and has been ignored for far too long. In dealing with the motion I would ike to deal with the three areas mentioned. With respect to the first and the problems with the fisheries, that question has been dealt with very ably this morning by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), and will be discussed this afternoon by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey).

With respect to the question of transportation, there are quite a few problems which I think have to be discussed in that area and it relates directly to the future of Atlantic Canada. I have spoken to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) about these questions and I must say in his defence that he heard me out and gave me the time to discuss them. I can only hope that he and his Government will be sympathetic, will study the question and realize the seriousness of these transportation issues in relation to Atlantic Canada. I would like to mention a few this afternoon.

One issue relates to the problem of Terra Transport. That company was forced to increase its fees, which put it in a bad position in relation to its competitors. When the CTC requested that they make that fee increase, they put the railroad in Newfoundland in jeopardy. That can have a very serious effect on the Province of Newfoundland.

The question of whether this increase can be enforced or rolled over and negated is now before the courts. In the meantime, the Minister of Transport has agreed to roll back the fees to their level before the increase took place. If these increased fees are allowed to stand, there will be a tremendous negative effect on CN Martine. CN Marine is the Crown corporation which provides ferry service between the Atlantic provinces and Maine. It is an integral part of the transportation network.

CN Marine is having tremendous difficulties at the present time in relation to the number of people it is laying off in Atlantic Canada. The employees who are being laid off are not junior employees who just got a job, got married and bought a house. These are men with 15 to 20 years seniority who have bought houses and have children who are going to university. These men are being laid off at the time in their lives when their expenses are the highest. The people in Atlantic Canada feel that if there are to be decreases in the number of employees at CN Marine, that should take place through a moratorium on hiring rather than through lay-offs. These men have worked for the Government of Canada through a Crown corporation. They have given the best part of their lives to their communities. How are they going to find alternate employment now? It is very important that the Government of Canada realizes its obligations to these men and women.

Last October Canadian National divided CN Express from CN Rail, making them two separate Crown corporations with two separate bargaining units. Previously in Atlantic Canada men who were laid off in either arm of CN could bump someone in another area. This can no longer happen. The men working for CN Rail were frozen there and those working for CN Route, as it became known, were frozen there. They could not move from one to the other. Therefore, if they are laid off, that is the end of it. They cannot take on another position. That is very serious. The reason for this is that CN wanted to be able to do away with permanent employees and retain the services of temporary employees. They would then not have to give the benefits and would have greater control over whether or not they needed the services of people. That is a very serious situation and a serious point of view for a Crown corporation to take.

The situation at CN Marine is in jeopardy partly because of the subsidy which the federal Government must pay to CN Marine. On the other hand, the federal Government is paying a multi-million dollar subsidy to Atlantic Container Express to ship directly from Montreal to St. John's, Newfoundland. This reduces the business of CN Marine between North Sydney, Nova Scotia and Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland.

The federal Government is saying that it is going to give a subsidy to CN Marine and a subsidy to Atlantic Container Express. The subsidy to Atlantic Container Express allows them to provide the competition to CN Marine, thereby reducing the income of CN Marine, again increasing its subsidy. Therefore, the subsidy to Atlantic Container Express is in turn creating a larger subsidy to CN Marine. We must get our act together. Mr. Speaker. The Government must become aware of the transportation concerns in Atlantic Canada.

This morning in the House I saw a Minister sink to the lowest level to which I have ever seen a Minister of the government sink. This morning the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) gave a speech in the House which was an insult to the problems and needs of Atlantic Canada. He took the credit for the improved position of National Sea Products. He did nothing for National Sea Products. He did not even mention the workers or management of National Sea Products and their contribution to the improved position of that corporation. Then he said he had good news about the Cape Breton Development Corporation which has as its jurisdiction the island of Cape Breton.

Industrial Cape Breton at the present time has an unemployment rate acknowledged by Employment Canada of 29.5 per cent. The level admitted privately by Employment Canada is over 40 per cent. The people of industrial Cape Breton have been waiting for months for good news from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the man who holds the purse strings for regional development and investment which will help the economic base of industrial Cape Breton.

The Minister's news was that this year Devco is going to show a profit and that he was going to introduce 10 per cent profit sharing with the workers of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Wasn't it wonderful what his Government had done? He did not mention that the management policy which created this profit was brought forward by the chairman, Joe Shannon, who was appointed by the former Liberal Government. However, that is not the major feature. This profit was made possible by the work, sweat, problems and difficulties of the miners on Cape Breton Island rather than through any action of this pompous Minister of the Government. For him to take any credit for what happened in the Cape Breton Development Corporation is completely and utterly insulting to the people of Cape Breton.

Not only is he taking credit for something that the people managed to do for themselves despite the adversities of industrial Cape Breton, but his good news did not relate to that which he had promised the people of industrial Cape Breton. On January 25, 1985, an Opposition day sponsored by the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), he said that positive announcements would be coming very soon with respect to that company, referring to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. At that time he did not know that there would be a profit for the Cape Breton Development Corporation, as minimal as that good news would be for the people who are unemployed in Cape Breton. In that respect he has not brought forward any good news. He has not kept his promise to the people of Cape Breton to do something about the plight of that area of our country.

What is happening? We must be concerned, Mr. Speaker, because as I have said, the unemployment rate is officially 29.5 per cent and unofficially over 40 per cent. The people of Glace Bay would be so pleased to hear that he did so much for them by creating this profit. They have an unemployment rate of 50 per cent in that town. The two industries, No. 26 Colliery and the Highland Fishery in Glace Bay, were destroyed by fire in the last 14 months. They would be pleased to hear the good news. They have been hanging on to the hope there will be something forthcoming to salvage not only the economy of Glace Bay but the whole industrial area of Cape Breton. They will be very impressed by the news of the Minister and the hypocrisy of what has been said in the House by the Government.

Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, recently had a special benefit concert on the CBC. A recent article in a periodical told of the hope and good spirits of the people of Glace Bay and their generosity in donating to charitable campaigns, such as to the people of Ethiopia. They have been doublecrossed by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

The people of Sydney Mines are also without an industry. That city of 10,000 people has no industry and nothing is being planned by the Government. It is a disgrace that the Government would treat the problems of Canadians in such a cavalier and pompous fashion.

The Minister has talked about Devco and that it will turn it around. Devco did not turn it around this morning when Haak Engineering, a company that was formed by the industrial development division of Devco, lost their contract with the Cape Breton Development Corporation to a company in the United Kingdom. It had to lay off all but two of its employees in Cape Breton Island. It is only more bad news for the industrial area of Cape Breton.

The Minister talks about meetings. It is time to stop meeting and start to take action. All that the Minister has done is set up two studies, but what will this do for those peole who come to see me? For example, there is a young couple who have lost their home because it does not have any heat or water. They have two children and are living with the wife's parents. Her father is bedridden and the six members of that family must live on the grandfather's pension. While this takes place, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion holds meetings and sets up committees to conduct studies. He does not even trust his own bureaucrats.

There are professionals in his Department who have studied industrial Cape Breton. He has officials in the directorate under the Director General but nothing is being done. He does not trust them. The Minister operates in a vacuum and the problems of regional development in Atlantic Canada are going unanswered. The Government will have to correct that situation and the Minister will have to be held accountable.

The Minister says that this is not the time for doom and gloom. What does he expect from people in Atlantic Canada when the unemployment rate has gone up to 29.5 per cent? The Minister has compared the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada to that in New England. He said that the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada has gone down and it has gone up in New England by 50 per cent. When the Tory Government was elected on September 4, the official unemployment rate in industrial Cape Breton was 19 per cent. As of the end of March it was 29.5 per cent. That is an increase of over 50 per cent since the Government has been in power. The Government cannot tell Canadians that it is doing something for Atlantic Canada and for the unemployed in this country and that it is acting on the concept of regional development.

The Government has done nothing positive in industrial Cape Breton. What has it done? It cancelled the building of a decentralized office which would have created 100 construction jobs. It has taken away an income security office which was to be decentralized from Halifax. That would have created 85 jobs in downtown Sydney. Not only would it help in job creation, it would have had a spin-off effect that would have enhanced the downtown area of Sydney. The Minister and his friend, Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia, have managed to sabotage a $12 million subsidiary agreement for downtown Sydney.

The former Liberal Government approved $8 million not only at Cabinet but through Treasury Board. Where is that money at a time when people in industrial Cape Breton are unemployed and going without hope because of the broken promises of the Minister?

The North Sydney wharf has been cancelled. Half of phase three and phase four of the expansion of the coast guard college have been cancelled. The wash plant at the Prince Mine at Point Aconi has been cancelled. That is what the Government has done for industrial Cape Breton. Everything the Government has done is negative. The Government will have to explain itself properly to the people of industrial Cape Breton.

This neglect is a result of an elitist policy by a Government that has no feeling for people. It has only been following elitist principles and has displayed no co-ordination in its policies. It is cancelling transportation programs and regional development programs when those programs would be in lock step with attracting industrial possibilities for Cape Breton and other areas of Atlantic Canada. These setbacks to industrial Cape Breton apply as well to the whole of Atlantic Canada. This will not go unnoticed by the people of Atlantic Canada, I can assure the House.

There was reference to the Sydney Steel Corporation. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) put forward an important point. However, the problem is with both the federal and provincial Governments because not only is the provincial Government refusing to put in a request for funding for Sysco, but the federal Government will not take action as a result of that refusal. Both Governments are doing a jig at the expense of the Sydney Steel Corporation.

The federal Government is an elitist Government that has no concept of regional development. The Minister did not mention the concept of regional development during his speech this morning. He thinks that regional development is strengthening the muscles in his posterior.

The Government must reverse its attitude about eliminating regional development because an entire area of this country is dependent upon the support of the Government. The Government is creating unemployment and taking away hope in this country. The Government is doing this to the unemployed all across Canada as well as to low-income Canadians and those on fixed incomes. It is creating a society within a society. It is supporting the upwardly mobile people who can take care of themselves and forgetting about those who need training and help. It is forgetting about the young who need help to get their first job. The Government is failing those people and therefore the country.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I see that the matrimonial bliss that has existed so long between the NDP and the Liberal Party is still in place. They will have no need whatsoever for that new divorce capability which was introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). I would think that after the election in the Province of Ontario the NDP might have learned that if they want to go on their own course they should perhaps criticize the Grits somewhat as well as the Tories. Their future might be enhanced. As long as that matrimonial bliss is maintained, no divorce is required. They will stay where they are and maybe slip back.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). There were three former Maritime Premiers in the Senate or the House of Commons. Why were these questions not addressed to them when the Hon. Member sat on this side of the House? Would he also explain why, in this motion, he has settled his entire debate on a single issue, namely his own constituency? While I am interested in my constituency, I have to be a Canadian as well and my interests must be of a national nature.

Why is there a deficiency in the refrigeration and freezing capability of our fishing fleet? How does it happen that we have inherited the difficulties in the fishing industry of overfishing, over-licensing and expenditure of resources by bad management? Why was that not addressed since this is partly a fisheries question? It is not just the harbour in Cape Breton.

How does it happen that the Hon. Member, in his sincere interest for Atlantic Canada, has not realized that all ports of Canada under the new ports legislation would go into the new independent ports structure with an equal debt? The Hon. Member has not addressed the fact that Saint John is the only former National Harbours Board port which has a burden of debt which it cannot carry and operate in competition.

Why did the Hon. Member not address the matter of the very minimal attention that has been devoted to quality in world markets? Why has the Hon. Member not devoted some attention to the fact that in the fishery we might not have had to socialize the whole structure if we had not had a complex which utterly and totally refused to accept the idea that perhaps somebody from outside this land might be able to assist in marketing and processing and in improving the fish markets of Canada as a whole?

Why has the Hon. Member exercised all the prejudices that he has expressed today, when he was on the Government side of the House long enough to have corrected them all? They should not have been inherited. Why has he not addressed the fact that in those years when the Liberal Government was in power that Government did not address the maritime feed freight assistance program? How does it happen that you could on September 4, and still can, have five cents more profit on a pig produced in Edmonton and marketed in Halifax than on the pig produced in the Annapolis Valley and marketed in Halifax, a situation caused by a deterioration in national policy which was intended to recognize all of Canada?

These are the questions I think the Hon. Member might have addressed. I compliment him for addressing his own constituency but this is a broad-based motion. It certainly should have addressed the whole structure of Atlantic Canada and its needs.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address with a great deal of pleasure the question put by my hon. friend on the other side. I would like to say I certainly have not agreed with everything that was done by the former Government. As I said in the House today, there were a lot of things that Government did that were cancelled after the election as a result of the present Government's policy of attrition. That is taking into consideration only politics and not taking people into consideration. There are people relying on those politics. It was a shameful practice. It should be abhorrent to all Members of this House. I wish I had had more time to discuss the things the Hon. Member mentioned.

He mentioned the marketing of fisheries products. That was an area in which a very severe cut was imposed by this Government. I have notes here on energy that, I would have loved to use but I did not have the time. I say to the Hon. Member that I realize the point he is making, that there are problems in all of Atlantic Canada and this Government better realize that. But I am the Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. McCain: We inherited them.

Mr. MacLellan: These are the people who elected me. Had I had a whole afternoon, I would have got around to the things he mentioned.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) on probably one of the best speeches he has given to the House of Commons. I am fully aware that he has a great deal of concern for the people he represents. I do not want my comments to be interpreted as taking away from that at all. I was sadly disappointed, however, that the Hon. Member did not propose anything positive that might put things right in industrial Cape Breton. He had that doom and gloom sense which Liberals very often have about them. This was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), who asked what the Member had been doing for so long when the Party he supports was in office. What the Hon. Member was giving us was a kind of farewell to Nova Scotia speech.

I had an opportunity to visit the Hon. Member's riding not too long ago and to spend some time with Devco in Cape Breton. I returned with something of a different attitude. I know there are serious problems of unemployment and that things must be done to improve the industrial situation, but I returned with the attitude that there are great things possible in the coal industry there. Coal is expensive to mine in Cape Breton but once you have it, you have it in tide water. Transportation costs to market virtually anywhere in the world are far less than they might be with, say, western coal. Nova Scotian coal enjoys an advantage. With the closure, unfortunate in a way, of No. 26 Colliery, beneficial things did occur because it was the least efficient of the mines. Now with the new Lingan Phalen mine coming into production and the possibilities of Donkin coming in, I see a great future for the Nova Scotia coal industry.

I noticed both in the management and in the workforce there a great esprit de corps. People obviously know what they are doing and they have confidence in themselves and in the future of the coal industry. I wanted to inject into the debate something of that spirit of optimism. We cannot write off, nor should we write off, Cape Breton. I think it has a long way to go and a great part to play in the future of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his important and positive question. I certainly do not take any offence to it whatever. The question helps me if the Chair will give me time to answer it.

I see possibilities for industrial Cape Breton, and indeed for the whole of Atlantic Canada, but that has to be done with the help of both provincial and federal Governments. Referring to doom and gloom, the doom and gloom represents what we see Governments doing on behalf of Atlantic Canada. If we see there is hope and Governments are sincere about helping us, then there will not be the feeling of doom and gloom. Goodness knows, people in Atlantic Canada and industrial Cape Breton could not have carried on without that hope and without feeling there would be a better time. The problem is that industrial development is competitive.

Recently Pratt & Whitney announced that it was going to Halifax. If someone had said to Pratt & Whitney, "You have to go to industrial Cape Breton," that company would have said no. What should be done? Would that mean you would give them all the money they needed to go to industrial Cape Breton? The answer is no. One has to look at the situation as one aspect. We have to encourage industry. We have to tell industry that industry will be successful there and that there is a good industrial framework. As part of that framework one must co-ordinate all departments, both provincially and federally, so that one hand is not doing something contrary to what the other hand wants done. One must not reduce transportation facilities that will be needed for the industrial possibilities which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Development in Nova Scotia feel will be necessary to entice development. They have to work together and co-ordinate. You have to have the infrastructure in a community that people need. You have to have schools and hospitals that meet what the people want. That is part of regional development. You have to have downtown facilities that are not elaborate but a conceptual idea of what you are going to develop in that community. Then the people who locate and live there will see this as a community that is being planned for a positive future.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this motion has been moved so that we can produce some facts to show what has been done for Atlantic Canada. However, I have had the unfortunate experience of listening to two discourses which really make one despair.

When I listened to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), I thought to myself of an old song. To paraphrase that old song, it goes, "Oh, Russell, I hardly knew you". Where was all this passion, emotion and disgust a year ago? After all, it was the Liberal Party, which that hon. gentleman represents, that was in power for the last 20 years while these conditions that he described were allowed to arise in Cape Breton. The Hon. Member himself has been here for the last four or five years. Everything he said today about Cape Breton was just as true a year ago, and nothing was done about it. The situation was allowed to worsen and to worsen by that Government and that Hon. Member. Yet we heard him today, and all we could think was: What a fine actor. They are marvels at spurious indignation. Where was that indignation last year? They are marvels at hypocritical alarm, carefully constructed crocodile tears, yowling, howling, bawling and mewling; not policy, puling, drooling, hoping to fool them. We did not hear one suggestion from the hon. gentleman about what should be done to help Cape Breton or the unemployed, or what this Government should have done over the last 20 years. It was like the wind whistling through a whale's spout and just as useful. The hon. gentleman was not even as useful and did not make as much sense as a blow-hole of a whale would have made. I have heard many whales through their blow-holes. They were all more interesting, made more sense, had more logic and wasted less time than did the hon. gentleman in his speech in the House, and they would have been a lot more effective.

Patriotism used to be described as the last refuge of the scoundrel, but it is not patriotism any longer. It is spurious indignation, hypocritical alarm, and the kind of unctuous bunkum and mind-boggling blarney we have heard for the last 40 minutes from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys and the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

I have more sympathy for the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor. He was never in power, so he cannot be held responsible. Of course the NDP is completely irresponsible. Its members have never been in power. They are never going to be in power. They can whistle and blow through their blow-holes until kingdom come; they will never be asked to account for the nonsense they get on with or for the promises they make.

The people of Ontario, sophisticated as they are, know that. That is why they only gained two members in that deluge yesterday. They only swelled their ranks by two. The Liberals are much better at fooling the people of Ontario than is the NDP. The NDP, having no responsibility and never having to be accountable for anything, could only increase its number of members in Ontario by two. That says a great deal for the educational system of Ontario. But the educational system in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island is much better because we only have, I think it is, two provincial Members for the Atlantic provinces who represent the NDP. Of course it was a magnificent victory! I remember they had one Member in the Newfoundland House. The election was called last March and they have one Member now, and they declared a great victory. Isn't it marvellous? Last year we had the federal election and they came back with fewer Members than they had before, and that was announced as a great victory. The only Party in history that cheers loudly when it loses Members is the NDP. It is the NDP nirvana, pedal power, the never-never pills which the NDP offers to the people of Cape Breton. The people of Cape Breton are not interested. They are not interersted in never-never solutions from never-never people who will never, never be in power. The NDP is the only group in this House which does not need drugs to suffer from fantasies.

Let us get down to business here. Let us forget the socialist slops and their Marxist mythology, their pseudo solutions, the detritus of dismal ditties from dotty dodos, and get on to some facts here. I will only deal with my own Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. I will not deal with the whole Atlantic area, and I will not deal with just my own district because there is very little done in my district. I am always sacrificing for the other districts down in Newfoundland and Labrador. That is what happens in St. John's West. However, in this little list I have here, there are one or two things which are being done, even in St. John's West.

Let us look at this resolution. What a joke! Thank heavens the person who moved it, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), is now coming back into the House to take his medicine. The resolution reads:

> That this House condemns the Government for its indifference and negligence toward Atlantic Canada, especially with regard to regional industrial developments, fisheries and transportation.

It is a motion moved by a Member of the last administration—he had the gall to move this—an administration which declared war on the Atlantic provinces, which savagely attacked and savaged its own provincial administration in Newfoundland for the last 8 or 10 years, which refused to sign an offshore oil and gas agreement, which tried to grind them down, which went down to Newfoundland and refused to sign agreements in the Confederation Building, the headquarters of the Newfoundland Government. The Liberals said: "You come down and sign them here in the Hotel Newfoundland where we the great, mighty federal Government are". That is the way the Liberals treated Newfoundland, and now they condemn this Government for indifference and negligence toward Atlantic Canada.

Why do they think they are out on their what-nots? It is because of their indifference and their neglect toward Atlantic Canada and toward the rest of Canada that they are out on their what-nots. I could spell what-not, but it would probably be unparliamentary. It is the only three-letter word which I know that might be unparliamentary.

Let me give a little list. The Atlantic Accord—if nothing else was ever done by the administration of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Atlantic Canada or in Newfoundland or Labrador, the Atlantic Accord would make up for everything else, everything else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Let us turn to February 11, 1985, after six or seven years of being bullied by the Government of Canada through the then Minister of Energy Lalonde and the then Minister of Justice who became Minister of Energy, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), the Hon. Member for Shawinigan or Bay Street, which I think is his latest address. He only pitches in here now occasionally on the way to his luxurious law offices on Bay Street in Toronto, because as Minister of Justice he became a member of the Bar of Ontario, and I have become a member of the Bar of Ontario.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Crosbie: I agree. It could be useful later on if I am in the perilous plight of the former Minister of Justice. These are the people who treated Newfoundland so shamefully. There was no agreement under them. It was their way or no way. All of it was to be controlled and dominated by the Government of Canada. Now there is an agreement on joint management of offshore oil and gas. There is a Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board appointed by both, with a chairman selected by both. There is a $300 million Canada-Newfoundland development fund. Does that sound to Hon. Members as if they are being treated with indifference and negligence—a $300 million Canada-Newfoundland development fund to help put in the infrastructure which is needed for petroleum development in Newfoundland? I believe the contribution of the federal Government is $200 million or $250 million.

Mr. Rompkey: It is $225 million.

Mr. Crosbie: It is $225 million of the $300 million fund. It is not a loan, it is a grant. Is this indifference and neglect? Is establishing the principle that revenue sharing shall be on the same basis as it is between Canada and other provinces indifference or neglect toward Atlantic Canada? How can the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate move such a resolution with that background? This one agreement alone means that Newfoundland will be able to establish and collect revenues from offshore oil and gas as though it was under the land in Alberta. Is that indifference and neglect? No, that is being saved from the indifference and neglect of the last seven or eight years.

I would not mind if this resolution had been moved by the NDP. I cannot blame its members for anything. In fact, some of them are perfectly likable. It is just like members of your family—you think they are useless but they are very likable because they are related to you and, after all, you can choose your friends but you cannot choose all the members of your family. That is the way I look upon NDP Members. They are perfectly likable, even though some of them are not all that useful, but we cannot hold them responsible. They have never been in power. They did not grind Newfoundland down. They did not say no to regional development. They did not take away the self-respect of Newfoundlanders. They did not tell Newfoundlanders that they were not as good as other people across the country and, therefore, could not be trusted to look after their own resources.

The NDP has never done that, but the Liberal Party has. The Party which the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate represents has done that. He stood by in this House year after year and let them do it. Now he has the gall, the crass hypocrisy, to move this silly jejune—you see I am bilingual—resolution about indifference and negligence towards Atlantic Canada.

I have to watch the clock. I will have to skip quickly. I cannot go into detail. The Canada-Newfoundland roads agreement to the tune of $180 million was agreed to in March. That is to be spent by the federal Government and the Newfoundland Government jointly on the Trans-Canada Highway on roads in Labrador and on the Avalon Peninsula over the next five to six years. That is the biggest roads agreement ever entered into between the two Governments. Is that indifference and neglect, especially with regard to transportation? Is this Member in the real world? Does he not know what is going on around him? When he gets in his car in the Town of Gander, he is right on the Trans-Canada Highway where $180 million will be spent, and he says there is indifference and neglect. What does he want? Is $180 million not enough?

Let me just list a few of the other things that have been done with respect to Newfoundland in seven months.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Minister would care to clarify something. Is he telling us now that Cabinet and Treasury Board have approved $180 million for Newfoundland? I know he announced that during the campaign. Little good it did him, but he announced it during the campaign. Is he telling us that he has Cabinet and Treasury Board approval and a signed agreement to spend $180 million? I just want the record to be straight. I think the record should be set straight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order. That is debate.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, let me set the Hon. Member's mind at ease. I have done what he could not do in four or five years. Yes, Treasury Board has approved it. Yes, the Cabinet has approved it. The agreement will be signed in the next couple of weeks. The work will go forward this year. Nothing to it. You just need to have a Government that is interested in helping the province.

I did not want to embarrass the Hon. Member, but now that he has annoyed me, I will. In the pulp and paper agreement, signed December 20, 1984, the federal share will be $38.5 million and the total will be $46.3 million. Of the $180 million highways' agreement, $12 million will come from the federal Government of Canada. That will be the federal contribution. We are only getting started.

Earlier in 1984, as the election date came closer, the federal Government at last signed some agreements—planning, mineral development, Burin Peninsula, rural development, ocean industries, and tourism. Those agreements were signed by the federal Liberal Government after holding off for a year and a half, bullying and punishing and trying to do all it could to damage the Newfoundland Government. They were signed as the election came on in the futile hope they could save some of their seats.

Mr. Rompkey: And we did.

Mr. Crosbie: They saved the hon. gentleman, but he is on a hair's breadth, he is gone the next time. That totals $77.85 million which the federal Government will contribute under those agreements. What about the two agreements that we agreed to in the last seven months? The federal contributions will total $151 million, double the efforts of that hon. gentleman over the period of his tenure in office.

Mr. Rompkey: You have not signed two agreements in the last seven months.

Mr. Crosbie: I just told the Hon. Member it was approved by Treasury Board and approved by the Cabinet. All we have to do is to list it now and scratch our names on it. We will probably go to Newfoundland to do that so that we can be sure that the hon. gentleman and everybody else will know that it has been done. Is that negligence, neglect or indifference?

I am not sure how much time I have left. I will have to go very rapidly to put the nails into the coffin of this silly resolution, this jejune resolution, this careless resolution, this negligent resolution, this grossly negligent resolution, this conscienceless resolution, this resolution of which the hon. gentleman should be ever ashamed. It is in the same league as the resolution that was moved by Mr. Pearson years ago when the PCs got in for the first time in years and he moved that they get out and turn the Government over to the Liberals. This is the kind of resolution that this is.

Modernization of the Corner Brook mill, the Grand Falls pulp and paper mills, is a $37 million modernization program, with $5.6 million coming from the federal Government. The Marystown offshore service facility, an $11 million agreement, was signed on September 28, 1984. The Cow Head facility near Marystown involves a $7.7 million grant from DRIE. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. There is the freezing of container rates. This motion speaks of indifference and negligence.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Let the record show that the Marystown funds came out of the Burin Penninsula fund, which was signed when we were the Government of Canada. Let the record be straight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order, unfortunately.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member does not know the rules. They were never in the House when they were in Government, so he is not familiar with the rules. It is not a point of order. There is the freezing of container rates on Terra Transport where we took action a couple of months ago to see that the container rates were not increased as the CTC directed. We are continuing assistance to the Ace Shipping Company while that proceeds. Is that indifference or neglect? Then there is the St. John's Convention Centre. I know the Hon. Member hates to have anything go near St. John's. We know the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was an enemy of St. John's and anything that came near St. John's. He did everything he could to keep everything away from St. John's. There was the agreement on the St. John's Convention Centre. The cost will be $7 million, of which DRIE is putting in $1.7 million.

There are the Town of Channel-Port aux Basques water supply facilities. The Hon. Member tried to cod the people of Port aux Basques that they were going to pay for a water supply system, but he did nothing about it. At last, after months of effort, I have $6.5 million from the Government to construct the new water system at Channel-Port aux Basques. Is that indiffernece? Is that neglect? My God, it's a miracle. There was also the combined services building at St. John's airport.

With regard to search and rescue, for years hon. gentlemen opposite were satisfied with inadequate search and rescue facilities on the east coast of Newfoundland. They did nothing. It did not matter what happened, what disaster struck or occurred. They sat on their big red what-nots and did nothing. They think they can pass a resolution here saying that we are showing indifference and negligence toward Atlantic Canada when we have improved immensely the search and rescue capability in St. John's and for the offshore with a second fixed-wing tracker aircraft, with two long-range DND aircraft and an additional helicopter based in St. John's. I do not have the time to go into all of the capability that has been assembled for offshore search and rescue work in connection with the offshore development. They want us to pass a resolution saying that we showed indifference and negligence. Why should we pass a resolution in the face of one or all the things I have mentioned, much less all of them?

There is the new Challenge '85 program. Yes, there is an unemployment problem in Newfoundland, but the people of Newfoundland know that the NDP is never going to resolve it. NDP Members can go down and look sympathetic and concerned, and I hope they are sympathetic and concerned, but Newfoundlanders know the NDP will never never be doing anything about it. We are attempting to do something about it. We have a Challenge '85 program, not only to give young people jobs in the summer, but to give them experience so that they can have jobs for the rest of their lives, so that they can develop their skills and receive training. We are taking a long-range view, not the short-range political, putrid view that the hon. gentlemen opposite had over their 20 years in office. That is not indifference and negligence, but concern for people, concern for young people. We are starting to take action that will do something about it, not as the jackanapes opposite who did nothing about it.

In Goose Bay, in the hon. gentleman's district, we are going to do something. We are going to save Goose Bay. We are going to revitalize it. The North Warning System is going to help Goose Bay and help the whole of Labrador. There will be a magnificent increase in defence spending in Labrador. The hon. gentleman's Party objects to it, fights against it and quarrels. With regard to the star wars' Member in the first row, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), I say that star wars for him is a knock between the eyes. That will give him star wars. The Hon. Member is objecting to all of this that will help build up Labrador and the Goose Bay air base. He just sits there and lets his colleagues object to that. They object to the three long-range radar stations for the Labrador coast, the Baffin Peninsula area and the other area that will be part of that system. In the next few years, $395 million will be spent in Labrador and along the Baffin Peninsula area. I do not have time to go into the details of it all but there are other plans for the Goose Bay area.

The Hon. Member should come over here to join us. I will make him welcome. He is a decent enough chap. However, his views have been obscured by his years in the Liberal Party. We will make him welcome and I think we can help him along.

There is a Canada Works special allocation of $6 million in connection with needs related to the fisheries. The Placentia Nursing Home will be built in my own district. There will be $18 million spent on a Winter Canada Works Program. At the Memorial University, there will be a grant for work-term students that will help 72 students. In my own district, just over $1 million will be spent to help put up a fine new tourist facility, Governor's Park, in the Salmonier Line. This is the only decent IRDP grant Newfoundland has had since the program started. Is that neglect and indifference?

An Hon. Member: It's enough.

Mr. Crosbie: Do you want any more punishment, boys?

An Hon. Member: No, too much.

Mr. Crosbie: I could go on and on but I am delighted to be here today to speak again about the incipient hypocrisy of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate. He should be ashamed of himself and he should, before the end of the afternoon, withdraw this cretinous motion from the House.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, after that I do not know whether I should ask a question or simply make a comment. I was wondering if I did all that the Hon. Minister claims I did.

The Hon. Minister mentioned bullying. I suppose the biggest bully in this Chamber, when it comes to making sure that projects go to his riding, is the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Most people who observe the actions of this Government would believe that Newfoundland stops at the St. John's overpass.

The other day I heard the Minister say that there would be international flights into the City of St. John's. How can the Minister of Justice say that when there is a procedure that must be followed? Having international flights into St. John's must be approved by the CTC, the Customs Department, Transport Canada and ICAO. The Minister knows that, but he publicly states that those international flights that are passing through Gander will pass through the City of St. John's. How can he state publicly to the people of Newfoundland that flights will be taken from the Town of Gander and given to the City of St. John's?

While the Minister is answering that question, perhaps he could tell us how the Atlantic Accord can be such a magnificent document when a section of that Accord indicates that no industrial use will be made of offshore oil in Newfoundland until the industrial capacity of eastern Canada is satisfied? This is fine for Petromont in the Speaker's riding. It is certainly fine for the ridings of some other Hon. Members of the House. Perhaps that was the intent of the Accord. However, how does the Minister justify that? It is a good thing that Accord was called the Atlantic Accord because it could not have been called the Newfoundland Accord. Perhaps the Minister could make reference to that.

The Minister spoke of search and rescue helicopters. Do you know where those search and rescue helicopters came from, Mr. Speaker? They came from Gander and are going to the riding of the Hon. Minister. Those helicopters came from the search and rescue facilities based in the Town of Gander in order to serve all of the province. Those facilities were placed there by the former Liberal administration. It is not unusual for this Minister to take those helicopters into his own riding. Now, in order to satisfy his own riding, he is taking the international flights away from Gander without going through the necessary procedures. As far as the hon. gentleman is concerned, Newfoundland stops at the St. John's overpass.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member rose to ask those fuddling questions. He has given me a chance to deal with them.

Let us first deal with the overpass. The Hon. Member is talking in local terms. By that, he means that everything is done in St. John's and nothing happens outside of St. John's. Let us just look at what is taking place. There will be a $180 million Canada-Newfoundland roads agreement. Not one cent of that will be spent in the City of St. John's. It will all be spent on roads in Labrador and the southern Avalon Peninsula. Then there is the modernization of the Corner Brook mill. Is Corner Brook in St. John's? Of course not; it is on the west coast of Newfoundland. The Grand Falls pulp and paper mill will be receiving $33 million. That is in Grand Falls. Marystown will be getting $11 million. Not one cent, one nickel or one dime of that will be going to St. John's. I am the most unselfish son of a gun I have ever come across when it comes to my own district.

The only thing here that is designed specifically for St. John's is the St. John's Convention Centre. That is in St. John's but one cannot have a St. John's Convention Centre if it is not in St. John's. We had to put that in St. John's. After all, it is the capital of Newfoundland and it is the biggest city in Newfoundland. It is called the St. John's Convention Centre so we had to put it in St. John's. It is too bad we could not put it in Gander. However, if it is to be called the St. John's Convention Centre, it has to be put in St. John's. The Newfoundland Government has helped Gander with its convention facilities and has recently given the hotel there help.

The money that would be provided for the Town of Channel-Port aux Basques water supply facilities will not be provided to St. John's. It is going to Channel-Port aux Basques. Where was the Hon. Member when I read this list?

Regarding search and rescue, there was a helicopter moved from Gander to St. John's because the offshore industry is off St. John's, not off Gander. When there is an emergency in the offshore, the helicopter will be 160 miles closer to the disaster and will be able to get there considerably earlier. That helicopter should have been moved years ago, but the hon. gentleman selfishly kept it in Gander despite the fact that it should have been close to the offshore area. That kind of political willfulness and disregard of the health and safety of people in the offshore has now been stopped.

The North Warning System that will be updated in Goose Bay is not in St. John's. A few of the Canada Works programs will be in St. John's, but the Placentia Nursing Home is not in St. John's. I could go on and on. That deals with that part of the question.

Regarding international flights into Gander, only two or three trans-Atlantic flights that go from Newfoundland to the United Kingdom are being moved. Air Canada now uses Gander despite the fact that the traffic originates in St. John's, the Avalon Peninsula and the Burin Peninsula. The rights of the travelling public have been forgotten. The extra expenses incurred by the 60 per cent or 70 per cent of the travelling public who come from those areas are ignored because of the political willfulness and selfishness of the hon. gentleman. Moving these flights will not harm Gander in the least. The airport in Gander will remain an international airport. No other flights will be moved.

Air Canada wants to operate flights from the St. John's airport because the travelling public originates there. Air Canada wants to save the travelling public many dollars and wants to save them the aggravation of trying to get to Gander where they wait hour after hour to get an international flight to the United Kingdom. Gander will not suffer but, for a change, the travelling public will be taken into consideration. The hon. gentleman's selfish willfulness will no longer prevent us from doing what should have been done, 8, 10 or 12 years ago.

Have I dealt with it all? Is there anything else I can deal with that might be on the hon. gentleman's mind? Much will remain where it is. No one in St. John's wants to take anything away from Gander. However, where there is an obvious need for the travelling public to be served so that they can be saved money, time and inconvenience, then surely something should be done. Narrow political parochialism and selfishness should not stop that from being done. I can assure the hon gentleman that Gander is not going to suffer as a result of that action, and as long as I am in the Government of Canada, Gander will not suffer at all.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, as a new Member I have to say it is a magnificent experience to listen to the Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: It indicates to us how sadly confined he is in the Ministry of Justice. However, I did want to indicate that although I am impressed with the impact of the Newfoundland education system in teaching people how to speak, I am not so impressed with how they teach them to count. At last count there were six provincial New Democrat Members in Atlantic Canada and growing fast.

I am struck as well by the comment about the New Democrats as a never-never Party. I suppose it is preferable to be accused of never doing anything because you are not in power rather than being accused of never doing anything when you are in power. The Minister should, now that it is eight months since the Cabinet was formed, start to deal with the reality that his Government is in power. It is no longer enough to blame on the past what is happening today in Atlantic Canada. It is important for this Minister to recognize that he is in power, the Government is in power, and it has the potential to act. If it is a choice between being perfectly likable or jejune, or magnificently preposterous, perhaps being perfectly likable is preferable.

The Minister has talked about things increasing in Atlantic Canada. The main thing that has increased in Atlantic Canada since this Government came to power is the unemployment rate, and I think it is time this Government recognized that and did something about it.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is hard to get a question out of what the hon. gentleman said, but we know we are in power. We know that is the reality. Did I not just give a list of the results of our being in power for just one province of Canada, and a small one at that? Yes, we are in power and we are doing something. We are taking a long-term approach. The Challenge '85 program, for which the provinces have been looking for years, will not only give people short-term jobs but will help them in their future careers. That is being in power. We knew the reality of being in power when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) restored VIA Rail services. The people of Canada know the reality that we are in power. The people of Newfoundland know it because they are treated like decent human beings for a change. They get some respect, they are not treated as they were in the old days. They know, because of the Atlantic Accord, that we are in power. We know the reality because we put forward the Atlantic Accord and the Western Accord. The Hon. Member from Alberta knows we are in power and what the reality is because we got the energy problems settled in western Canada. The people in Quebec know we are in power because of the things we have been doing in Quebec.

We know the reality that we are in power, and we are going to take a long-term approach. We know how bad unemployment is. I live in Newfoundland, I have lived there all my life and I intend to continue living there all my life and I know what unemployment is like in Cape Breton. We know it is not easy to beat that. We do not even know if we are going to be able to beat it, but we are going to take a better crack at it than has been taken before because we are going to go at it in a long-term way, not just for the immediate quick fix. That is the kind of approach that we and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) are taking.

Yes, the reality is that we are in power. We know it, the people of Canada know it, and we are not going to forget it. The Member is not going to forget it either because with the kind of caterwauling performance we have had today we can see that they are on the road to ruin and perdition. They are going nowhere if they continue this way over the next four years, so keep it up.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) said that the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was a man of humour. He may very well be, but he is not accurate and he does not enjoy stating the facts as they should be. The fact is that what he has said here today is completely inaccurate, not factual, not the truth. I had intended to talk about issues which I thought were of serious concern in Atlantic Canada, but of necessity I have to deal with the points made by the Hon. Member for St. John's West.

First he says that the Atlantic Accord, if nothing else is done by his Government—and so far nothing else has been done by his Government—would make up for everything else. Well, we may get $200 million a year in a few years' time if the Hibernia project goes ahead. I hope it does. But after all the profits and all the taxes all we may get is $200 million a year. Our deficit now is $300 million. The Hon. Member says the Atlantic Accord is going to make up for everything, and that is the first inaccuracy.

He then went on to name all the agreements which his Government has signed. There has been one agreement signed by that Party since they became the Government of Canada, and that is money we put aside for the Port aux Basques water system. They get Cable TV down in Port aux Basques and Corner Brook, and they know the accuracy of what I am saying now. We met with the Port aux Basques Town Council and the Development Association and agreed to set aside $6.5 million for their water system when we were the Government of Canada. That is the agreement and the only agreement that Party has signed since they became the Government of Canada. Apart from the announcement, not a signed agreement, the $180 million for roads, which we will not see this year because it is too late for the construction season anyway, all other agreements were signed when we were the Government of Canada.

He talked about nothing going into St. John's. The Music School, which agreement we signed when we were the Government, is in St. John's in the Hon. Member's riding. The Fisheries College, $47 million, is in St. John's, in the Hon. Member's riding, and the agreement was signed and it was put there when we were the Government of Canada. There is a convention centre in St. John's. The Minister of Development for Newfoundland cannot deny this because it is a matter of record; we had agreed to that when we were the Government of Canada. So those three projects in St. John's were agreed to and most of the money provided when we were the Government of Canada.

The Hon. Member went through a lot of other agreements such as the Ocean Industries agreement. That was signed when we were the Government of Canada, between January and June of 1984, involving a total of $28 million. There was an agreement on tourism, a total of $14.7 million, signed when we were the Government of Canada. A planning agreement worth $4 million was signed when we were the Government. The minerals agreement is worth $21.95 million. We had the Burin Peninsula development agreement—and this is where he plays fast and loose with the fact—and that was signed when we were the Government of Canada, for a total of $28 million. The new mine at St. Lawrence came out of that same fund. This is a matter of record so let us set the record straight and not play fast and loose with the facts.

There was a rural development agreement involving a total of $18.2 million, signed with Newfoundland when we were the Government of Canada. He talked about the pulp and paper agreement, and that also was signed when we were the Government. He may have enlarged it, he may have put some more money into that agreement, but it was signed when we were the Government of Canada.

These are the facts and I do not think the Minister of Justice should be allowed to get away with that nonsense in this House, to get away with trying to fool people and mislead the House and the people of Newfoundland into thinking that his Government has suddenly, out of the blue, done something for our province which had not been done before. That is not the case. I think the people of Newfoundland have shown that they know that was not the case.

This morning the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) talked about the people's knowledge of the Liberal record. In the federal election the people of Newfoundland gave the Liberal Party popular support equivalent to that given to the Liberal Party in the Province of Ontario last night. Three of us sit in this chamber now as living proof that the people of Newfoundland know what the Liberal Government did for them. They returned us here because of that.

The Minister speaks of Goose Bay. They spent $2 million to improve a communication system in Goose Bay that is not going to create one single job there. I wish he had risen today in the House and said that his Government was going to create the NATO training base that we have been asking for. That would create jobs. So far the Government has not created one single job in Goose Bay. It must be done, but it has not done it so far. Do not allow them to mislead the House on that as well.

The Minister talked about search and rescue. He talked about taking a helicopter from Gander and putting it where the need was greatest. Seventy per cent of all the marine accidents along the northeast coast of Newfoundland occur within the range of Gander. The Hon. Member has oil on his mind. He is like Premier Peckford who, during the election campaign, bragged about the agreements that we had signed. The Premier of Newfoundland, who almost lost that election, never mentioned the Atlantic Accord during that election campaign, but he did mention those agreements which were signed. That is a case on which the record must be set straight.

The Hon. Member said the helicopter was taken from Gander and put in St. John's because that is where the traffic is. That is not the case. The traffic is off the northeast coast of Newfoundland. The Hon. Member is going to rue the day when a tragedy happens in that area and the aircraft is not there to take care of it. I agree that there must be increased capability in St. John's for the oil rigs, but the companies must take their responsibility too. The Government of Canada has a responsibility for the fishing craft as well as for the oil rigs. That is why it should have maintained the helicopter in Gander to do the job that was necessary. It has not put anything new there. It has only re-allocated resources. That is not a step in the right direction.

The Minister spoke about Challenge '85. Nineteen hundred applications have been received in Newfoundland under Challenge '85. Twenty per cent of those are career related. They talk about the great use which the public sector is going to make of this. The public sector is not making use of it and neither are the municipalities. The municipalities are being forced to put money which they do not have into Challenge '85. The municipalities of Newfoundland find themselves very hard pressed indeed.

Under Summer Canada the municipalities were given funds free and clear. Federal funds created jobs for young people. This year the municipalities are being forced to contribute 25 per cent of the cost of creating those summer jobs. As a consequence, there will not be as many jobs as there were last year. I do not believe there will be that many created by the private sector either because small companies in Newfoundland do not have the 50 per cent which is needed under Challenge '85. I do not think that Challenge '85 will work out as well as the Hon. Member thinks it will. My main concern is the way in which the Hon. Member has misled the House. I believe that the record must be put straight.

I would like to go on to other things which I think must be done. The Minister did not really address the problem of regional development this morning. We talked about this in relation to the Investment Canada Bill. I have seen nothing so far to tell us that the Government in power has any policy for directing funds or employment to the regions of Canada which are in most need, such as the Atlantic region. I could point to the things which have been done away with. The Atlantic provinces have been seriously affected by that. I would like to read from an editorial in the January 3 Telegraph Journal. It reads:

> Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and his deficit-slashing Finance Minister, Michael Wilson, would be well advised to take a second look at any schemes that would scale down Ottawa's involvement in regional economic development in Canada.
> In setting out to cut spending, the new Government evidently sees a scenario in which the federal Government would reduce its role in direct stimulation of economic growth in various regions and look to the private sector to help fill the gap.
> But the problem in regions such as the Atlantic Provinces is the private sector's limited ability to generate more growth under present conditions.
> Thomas Maxwell, chief economist for the Conference Board of Canada, points out quite correctly that Atlantic Canada is a region in which the private sector lacks the resources to fill the inevitable void that would be created if Ottawa were to cut back on its support and assistance.

That is an accurate description of what is happening. While it may be true that there are parts of the country where the private sector can carry the load, the Atlantic region is not one of them. The Government has not realized that by indiscriminately cutting programs across Canada it has hurt underdeveloped regions where the private sector is not strong enough to stand on its own feet and will not be strong enough unless something is done, and it will not be done quickly. It has not realized that through indiscriminate cutting it has hurt the Atlantic area.

There is a whole list of examples of the kind of thing the Telegraph Journal is talking about in its editorial. For example, there has been a $250 million reduction in PIP grants for the offshore. We have not yet been told what will be put in its place. There has been a $11.7 million reduction in capital expenditures in the fisheries development program. Marketing and the small craft harbours program was cut. There was a reduction in non-profit and co-op housing. That is not simply a matter of housing for people. That means that a lot of small businesses such as construction firms and lumber yards in the Atlantic Provinces will be very severely hurt as a result of that cut-back in housing.

This morning the Minister talked about what he was doing for the Atlantic Provinces. One thing he did was to cut tourism out of the IRDP program altogether. I think that tourism is going to be a sunrise industry in the Atlantic Provinces and it cannot now qualify for any grants under the Industrial Regional Development Program. There is a water slide in a town in my constituency which is attracting a great many tourists. It is a good, imaginative idea of a small businessman that is working well. It is making money and attracting people to that area. That kind of thing can no longer be done because tourism is no longer eligible under the IRDP.

Another thing which has been cut is ferry service. There are ferries along the northeast coast of Newfoundland, the coast of Labrador, and the south coast that have been cut. All of these things will have a very severe impact in Atlantic Canada and Newfoundland. We do not have a healthy private sector which can take up the slack. Perhaps Toronto, parts of Alberta and parts of British Columbia can do that, but that type of indiscriminate cutting will hurt people in the Atlantic provinces where the economy is not strong enough to stand on its own two feet. That is starting to happen now. The Atlantic Accord will not take up the slack.

What will we do in Newfoundland for the next five or ten years until all the money rolls in from the oil? How do we feed our people and get jobs in the meantime? What is the Government going to do in regional economic policy? That is a serious question which deserves to be answered but has not yet been answered. I hope there are some answers in the Budget when it comes down.

I have some questions for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I have some positive suggestions of things that could be done. Let me tell the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) what can be done in Goose Bay. I hope he will take it up with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen). Let us not talk about star wars because that will not create jobs. Let us talk about a NATO training base where the Government could make money and attract foreign companies to Goose Bay, as it is doing now, so the Government of Canada would make money. They would be paying guests in our country. I suggest that a proposal for a NATO training base in Goose Bay would not only keep our NATO commitment—

• (1550)

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Rompkey: We did it. We signed an agreement with the West Germans and with the British. We have the Americans there. We started it, you go farther and create a NATO training base in Goose Bay. If we had stayed long enough, we would have done more.

Mr. Crosbie: We have the Norwegians.

Mr. Rompkey: That is one positive suggestion I can give the Government of Canada. They would help that region and bring new foreign dollars into the country.

The second thing the Government of Canada could do is to set up in northern Newfoundland and Labrador a northern fishery development corporation. The Minister of Justice very blithely says, "If nothing else is done, the Atlantic Accord will make up for everything". I suggest he tell that to people along the Labrador coast. That is absolute, utter nonsense. There will be no immediate pay-off to the people in that area.

What should happen is an improvement to fisheries conditions in that area. A northern fishery development corporation should be set up.

However, let me say what the Government did. We had set aside $15 million for the northern fisheries development corporation.

Mr. Crosbie: Where was it when we needed it?

Mr. Rompkey: The Minister of Fisheries answered—

Mr. Crosbie: That is poppycock.

Mr. Rompkey: It is on the record. It is in Hansard.

Mr. Crosbie: It is not on the record.

Mr. Rompkey: He answered a question in the House and admitted that the $15 million that we had put aside—

Mr. Crosbie: You left a $34 billion deficit. That is what you left.

Mr. Rompkey: You read Hansard.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is this $15 million?

Mr. Rompkey: It is all there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: A $34 billion deficit. You left nothing but IOUs and a $200 billion debt.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice had his chance—pitiful as it was—but he had it. However, those are the facts.

If the Government really wants to do something for the people in that area, it should put the money back and set up that northern fishery development corporation and give those people a chance. Oil will not be the saviour of the people along the Labrador coast.

Although we have heard that nonsense, I have explained some of the needs that we have. This is a serious motion because the main thrust of the Government so far has been to emphasize the private sector. In emphasizing the private sector and trying to deal with the financial situation in this country, the Government has made certain cuts in programs. I submit that while cuts in certain parts of the country may be realistic, that approach in other parts of the country where the infrastructure and economy are not healthy and the private sector is not strong can be disastrous. It will not create jobs but will lose jobs.

I am looking forward to seeing a realistic and positive approach to the Atlantic area in the upcoming Budget because we have not seen it so far.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? If not, we will resume debate.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is rather unusual for any Member to be sandwiched between two prominent Newfoundlanders, especially in an important debate such as this. I am not sure precisely how I will fare.

However, at the outset, having listened to the Hon. Member and others, I suggest that between the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), they have pretty well discredited this motion. This motion is also discredited by the fact that for most of the time this afternoon members of the Opposition who sponsored it have only had one Member in the House, sometimes two. That is almost as bad as the nine whom they mustered for the very good vote on that famous motion last Friday.

Mr. Crosbie: Let's have a vote.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is a very important motion, notwithstanding the fact that it is inaccurate. I think it provides an opportunity to discuss some very important issues as they relate to the Atlantic Provinces.

I came to this place in 1968. At that time, one of the most important issues affecting Canada was the issue of regional disparity. As a matter of fact, I think it was perhaps one of the more important issues in the election campaign of 1968. I point that out only because it is still an issue in Canada today. The fact that the Liberal Party has sponsored this motion today really reflects on 16 years of absolute failure and economic stupidity. There has been no change. In fact, things have deteriorated.

In the seven or eight months that we have been in office, the Liberals have suddenly discovered the problems in Atlantic Canada and want to correct them overnight. It will not be done that easily, Mr. Speaker. It is a difficult task because first we must clean up the mess. We took over Government under the burden of crippling interest rates, a burdensome debt, a lack of business and investor confidence and a dollar that was under attack. There was a continuation of the regional disparities that were the highlight of the election campaign of 1968.

In 1968, when the Liberals were elected to office, the unemployment rate was 4.5 per cent, or 350,000 people. After 16 years it was 11.5 per cent, or 1.5 million unemployed Canadians. That cannot be blamed on this Conservative Government. We were paying out in unemployment insurance benefits in the order of $400 million in 1968. It is probably in the vicinity of $11 billion today. The blame for that cannot be laid at the doorstep of the Conservative Government.

The Liberal Government had pork-barrel policies rather than long-term policies that would provide long-term growth, stability and the production of wealth. The Liberals' policy was to throw money and hope for the best. They failed to recognize that there are some very basic regional strengths in all parts of the country.

The Atlantic region is no exception. Rather than developing those regional strengths and turning them into economic opportunities in order to create growth and jobs, rather than stimulating the entrepreneurial spirit and encouraging private enterprise and the creative spirit within the people of Atlantic Canada, the Liberals killed it.

What we are dealing with here is a legacy of failure on the part of the administration of the Party that is sponsoring this motion. They failed to provide a climate that was conducive to economic growth and job creation.

They failed to provide a climate conducive to taking advantage of that region's natural strength. Just look at the mess that the fishery industry is in. Can the Liberals blame Conservative Government for that? There is failure in forestry, there is failure in agriculture and there is failure in tourism. The potential for tourism in Atlantic Canada is enormous. I am sure that that great region could have contributed enormously to reducing the $2 billion tourism trade deficit with which we are now burdened.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion outlined a number of programs and initiatives that we are taking. The new direction that has been proposed in the economic statement in November is a very important signal not only to Atlantic Canada but to all of Canada. Clearly, if we are realistic about our situation today, I believe that as an exporting nation we will be judged by our ability to compete in the global market-place in the 1980s and 1990s. That is the reality we must face.

This country must export to survive. It cannot continue to support our life-style and standard of living without exporting our products to the extent we have in the past and without regaining our fair share of the market-place which we have lost over the last 15 years.

• (1600)

A key component to achieving that performance is our ability to maintain an efficient, responsive and productive transportation system. I as Minister of Transport and on behalf of my Government, of which I am proud to be a member, view transportation as an essential and vital tool for economic development, particularly in the Atlantic region. In the short time we have been in office we can point to a number of initiatives we have embarked upon which illustrate that we are serious about that. The most obvious one is the reinstatement of the Atlantic rail passenger service, which will begin on June 1. This Government recognizes the importance of rail passenger service not only in terms of enhancing the economic potential of the region, but also as a unifying force across this country. Restoring the Atlantic Service really represents a fulfilment of a major commitment to Atlantic Canada, not to mention the jobs that will be created directly and indirectly, something in the order of 1,400 to 2,000.

The people of the Maritimes and the people of Canada have made it very clear they want an efficient, reliable rail passenger service. We are going to do whatever we can to satisfy that desire. We are confident that the people of Canada will respond.

We have also established the CN Marine Corporation as a separate Crown corporation. We now have a separate Crown corporation headquartered in Moncton, with corporate offices both in Charlottetown and in St. John's, that will ensure he maximum responsiveness to the region it serves. I know the service which CN Marine provides. It is very important. I know there has been some criticism about the rationalization that is taking place. Here again we must face the reality that we have to keep our unit costs down. We must acquire new vessels, a little larger, more modern, and the latest technology that will provide faster service and improve productivity. There may very well be some reductions in service in terms of frequency because we cannot have it both ways. There is a certain optimum that must be achieved. We are trying to do that. We hope that having CN Marine headquartered and managed out of the Atlantic region will enable it to respond to the realities and the needs of the people in the region.

The subsidization of freight costs to allow Atlantic producers better access to the important markets is really a channel of assistance that is available to the federal Government. In Atlantic Canada there are two Acts which are very important. These are the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act. Prior to our coming into office the usefulness of these two Acts was seriously questioned and undermined as those two very important proposals were reviewed.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that during the course of that period of time there was a fair amount of uncertainty created in the minds of the people in the Atlantic region. This serves to destabilize the economy and create doubt in the minds of the entrepreneurs who may want to invest. During that period of time uncertainty existed and I think it was unfortunate. We made it very clear during the course of the election campaign that we would continue, maintain and, if necessary, enhance the Maritime Freight Rate Subsidy Assistance Program, and we would work together in co-operation with all interested parties and the provinces to ensure that the money being spent would provide the maximum benefit to all concerned. In other words, if there are more effective ways of administering and applying the programs, we would be prepared and willing to adopt those changes.

My Parliamentary Secretary announced on December 11 that some 10 new commodities were added to the list of eligible products to be allocated under a selective transportation subsidy. That does not suggest that we are being indifferent or negligent toward the Atlantic region.

Federal transportation expenditures in Atlantic Canada for fiscal 1984-85 are forecast at some $755 million. This compares with a national outlay of some $4.4 billion. Expressed in per capita dollars, this represents $329 for every person in Atlantic Canada as compared to a Canadian average of $176. That hardly suggests that this Government is being indifferent or negligent toward the Atlantic region. These figures illustrate a very significant federal contribution to the transportation requirements of the Atlantic provinces.

I am sure there are those who would say there should be more. Yes, in some areas perhaps there should be more, but we are limited by the legacy of debt we have inherited. We must be very careful and prudent in the way in which we handle our resources. That does not mean to say we will ignore the Atlantic region. As a matter of fact, the kind of new transportation policy initiatives upon which we are embarking will provide greater competition, lower freight rates, better service, new types of innovative services and I think will auger very well for the development of the tremendous potential and opportunities that exist in Atlantic Canada.

Clearly the issue of freight rates and the enormous cost that transportation loads on to the delivered product is something we have to take into consideration. The transportation cost component of the products we export is major. We have to try to reduce the unit costs of transportation in every way possible. We are looking at ways and means of injecting more competition both in the inter and the intra-modal systems to ensure that we can reduce that unit cost of transportation, encourage better utilization of the system, and encourage greater flexibility and greater innovation, thereby bringing about lower prices.

Ports are clearly part and parcel of this whole concept of inter-modal transportation. They cannot be treated in isolation. Rather, the emphasis must be on increased flexibility and efficiency through inter-modal relationships which have to be expressed through a state of the art technology.

Recently we announced the extension of the $1.5 million regional air carrier subsidy to December 31 to support route services including Halifax, Charlottetown, Îles-de-la-Madeleine and services to Goose Bay and Labrador from Halifax. These are important and necessary support programs to provide services to the people in those areas. The thrust of our efforts will be further to develop affordable air service through the promotion of regulatory reform. Our goal is to establish a framework within which a strong, healthy and competitive industry can provide expanded and affordable air services for all Canadians, particularly Canadians in the Atlantic region.

The national air carriers, Canadian Pacific and Air Canada, are responding to our initiatives by looking at ways and means to improve international service and domestic service through co-operation with local regional carriers and the commuter type services. I must say that in Atlantic Canada, contrary to what the Member who preceded me stated, there is a great deal of interest emanating from the private sector, the Canadian entrepreneur, in starting local regional air carriers.

Major airport development has been initiated at St. John's, Newfoundland in the amount of $3.3 million; Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island in the amount of $4.7 million; and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia in the amount of $6 million. I could go on. Much work has gone into preparing St. Stephen, New Brunswick for the Canadian Owner and Pilot's Association convention at which pilots from across Canada and the United States will fly into St. Stephen. In addition, some $13 million for the Labrador air strip program has been allocated for this year. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) will know that the federal Government is providing $3 million for the construction and upgrading of air service in Fogo Island in his riding.

There are other things, and I could go on and on but I see that my time has almost expired. I have some press releases here. Let us look at coast guard shipbuilding. There is one type, 1100, navaids light icebreaker in the amount of $54 million; 1 type, 1050, offshore supply vessel in the amount of $25 million; and 2 type 800 coastal navaids vessels in the amount of $3.3 million. I could go on and on. CN Marine has advised that a refit budget of some $6 million will be spent on Atlantic region dockyards in the course of this year. In a short period of time there will be new orders for 38,000 tons of rail submitted to SYSCO, which will again assist in that region.

This motion is a lie. It is full of bunk. I personally take exception to it because I have a very intense and profound interest in Atlantic Canada. Of all the regions I have visited since becoming Minister, I have been in the Atlantic region more often than in any other region, with the exception of my home region, Alberta.

I want to continue to work with the good people of Atlantic Canada and with Hon. Members opposite. I know that behind the rhetoric and the flimflam there is a genuine interest in what they are saying. However, I assure them that we are not ignoring the Atlantic region or overlooking its concerns. I think together we can provide services, particularly in the transportation sector, which will be affordable, efficient, reliable, and will help in boosting the economic fortunes and in building the economic infrastructure which is so important not only to Atlantic Canada but indeed to the entire country.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important, for the record, to observe that we have now listened to speakers on the government side of the House talk about what is in the present budgets or what the present Government is doing. Unfortunately, they did not compare it to what was in the original budgets, what was spent last year and what was spent the year before.

I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will not be bullied by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in trying to force the CTC or his Department to move international flights to the Hon. Member's riding. I hope he will not be bullied into taking an action which will not be a very wise one. However, returning to the speech of the Minister of Transport, he made a correct reference to tourism and its importance in Altantic Canada.

Recently I noted what the Conservative Party talked about in its transportation commitment made in Halifax on August 2, 1984. It indicated that a Progressive Conservative Government would conduct regular reviews of CN Marine ferry rates to guarantee that they were equitable and not damaging to the competitiveness of local industries, with particular reference to tourism.

The Hon. Minister was correct, but what did he do? What did the Government do? Under ferry services, it is saving $16.1 million. That amount has been cut. How will that be achieved? It will be achieved from selective increased cost recovery and from operating efficiencies in restructuring the coastal and gulf services. The fact of the matter is that under the Minister of Transport the ferry rates have skyrocketed so that people will not want to travel by ferry boat. This will have a damaging effect upon the tourism industry.

What about CN Marine? Yes, the Minister talks about restructuring, but what for? The financial statement indicates a saving of $21.5 million. Then he talked about all he was doing for the Coast Guard. If we look at the financial statement we see that he is saving $51.6 million by cutting out capital projects relating to Coast Guard aids to navigation and vessels. In fact, that is all contained in the financial statement of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret).

It is fine for Ministers to talk about what they are spending this year, but when we see what they have cut we see why it is so devastating to Atlantic Canada. Every cut announced by the Department impacts more in the Atlantic region than in any other part of Canada. The reviews which are under way to produce further cuts will impact more in Atlantic Canada than in any other region of Canada. If the Minister wants to make a comment, perhaps he could comment on the cuts which he has made in his Department, not on his normal budgetary expenditures.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will address a couple of the points which the Hon. Member has made. I am sure that the modest increase in ferry rates will not be crippling, as the Hon. Member suggested. As a matter of fact, in some cases ferry rates have been reduced. I hope he will take notice of that.

Everyone in the House should know that the cost recovery for the provision of ferry services is below 25 per cent. It is 18 per cent to 19 per cent. I am sure Atlantic Canadians, like all Canadians, are not objecting to paying their fair share. We have also said during the course of this exercise that we have tried to generate an additional 15 percentage points of revenue through the combination of efficiencies, cutting out waste and increasing ferry rates. However, some, I repeat, have been reduced; some have gone up 7 per cent or 8 per cent. This was certainly not crippling, and this was done in consultation with the provinces. We worked it out together, and the Hon. Member will find that the impact is not as he suggested.

With regard to the other points, I do not think anyone should apologize for cutting out waste, inefficiency and fat in the system. That is precisely what we have been trying to do. We are trying to get a more effective, more efficient, more responsive and more productive system. It is part and parcel of our total effort to put in place a system which will produce goods and services at the lowest possible cost. That is the name of the game.

I think the Hon. Member would be the first to agree that the six and five program, which suppressed any increases, simply delayed the inevitable. Regardless of what Government took office, this issue had to be addressed.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister as well. I take what he said today about his interest in the Atlantic area to be accurate, and I believe it. As I told him in committee yesterday, the leading journals are saying that he is a major player in Cabinet, has the ear of the Prime Minister Mr. Mulroney), and is an effective Cabinet Minister who has taken charge of his Department and is running it. I believe what the leading journals are saying, and I take it to be accurate. Given those facts, let me ask him about the Newfoundland railway which he mentioned. He knows that some years ago a five-year program of $77 million was allocated to the Newfoundland railway to do some upgrading, some containerization, and so on. That is now coming to an end. As a matter of fact, a report was to have been submitted to Government last spring. I have not seen that report, but I want to ask him about the future of the railway, given the moratorium that was placed on the increase in rates. Clearly that is until such time as there is an appeal of the CTC decision. As soon as that appeal is resolved, presumably something will happen; those rates will go up. At that point we will get into the future plan as to multi-modal operations in Newfoundland.

What will be the future of the railway? What will be the future of sea transport? What will be the future of air transport? Could the minister give us a forecast now? Can he tell the Chamber and the people of Newfoundland what he sees ahead for the Newfoundland railway? Once that funding comes to an end, will there be further funding? Will there be further containerization? Does he have a positive view about the Newfoundland railway? Will there be a healthy railway in Newfoundland in the future?

Mr. Mazankowski: That is quite a question, Mr. Speaker. Do I have a positive view of the railroad? It was this Government and I in 1979 who put together the five-year plan that saved the railroad. That is why they have a railroad today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The matter is under review. There is no question about it. It is a serious question. The Hon. Member accurately pointed out the conflicting interests, whether we would have a variety of modes of transportation, and to what extent we would support them. At the present time the federal Government is supporting all modes of transportation—water, rail and air. The five-year program has expired. It will be reviewed in some fashion. All these things are being taken into consideration, having regard to the fact that it has been found that rail freight rates are non-compensatory and in violation of the National Transportation Act. It is a reality with which we have to deal.

● (1620)

Also, there is the reality that as long as rates stay low, we need to be supporting to a very significant extent water shipments as well as rail shipments. We view the railway as an important mode of transportation for Newfoundland. Otherwise, we would not have put together a salvaging package in 1979. We are working toward achieving that as well at a future period of time.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, at first I was not sure whether I would be speaking on this motion of the Liberals which reads:

That this House condemns the Government for its indifference and negligence toward Atlantic Canada, especially with regard to regional industrial development, fisheries and transportation.

Not being a specialist in regional development, fisheries and transportation, and not having very much personal familiarity with the Atlantic provinces, I thought perhaps I would just listen. However, although my acquaintance with the Atlantic provinces is limited to having visited some friends in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia two or three times and having visited my son in Newfoundland two or three times, it is not that on which I am relying. I want to speak today on the question of housing. Although not a major issue raised in the motion, I believe it is a matter to be considered.

The Minister spoke this morning, as did the Minister from St. John's, whining as they usually do about all the problems they inherited from the previous Government. It was understandable hearing that in November, but we have had November, December, January, February, March, April and now May. It is becoming less and less credible to have them blame all the things they are not doing on the previous Government. It is particularly inappropriate in the matter of the housing program.

Last year the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who was then Leader of the Opposition, bragged about his Party's policy in the matter of co-op housing. He sent letters to all kinds of people. This is the sort of thing he said during the election campaign, although he started before the campaign:

There are few matters of more importance to people than adequate housing for themselves and their families.

The Prime Minister has a genius for making a pompous statement about the obvious, such as that today is Friday. He said:

The Progressive Conservative Party finds it inexcusable that the Liberal Government should cut back the funds for the co-operative housing program. That they would do so without consideration for the thousands of Canadians who rely upon co-operatives for their shelter illustrates the emptiness of the Liberal rhetoric on their concern for social issues.

He does not just blast the Liberals. He went on to say:

Our Party is sensitive to the needs of Canadians and believes that co-operatives are a necessary element of any housing program. They provide Canadians who otherwise would not be able to afford their own homes with independence, security and a sense of community spirit.

He winds up the paragraph by saying:

Co-operative housing will continue to have a priority in Progressive Conservative policy for housing.

That is a lot of balderdash. A lot of people suspected it at the time. Now the Prime Minister and his Cabinet have proved it. The co-operative program was slashed unjustifiably by the previous Government. It has been further slashed in direct violation of those promises by the present Government. People who are in difficulty over their housing are left to fend for themselves by this Government, as by the previous Government.

One matter that has come to my attention since I undertook the housing portfolio for my Party is the situation in Labrador City as a result of the massive lay-offs there by the Iron Ore Company. I have here an October 1983 task force report. It was a task force of the Newfoundland Legislature to inquire into the socio-economic problems in Labrador west. It refers to the extremely difficult situation for individuals in that community left by the long-term shut-down of the Iron Ore Company operation there. The provincial Government task force stated:

Financing for houses has been by conventional mortgages, most of which are insured either through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation or through a private mortgage insurance company. It is significant that borrowers did not seem to know at the time of borrowing by whom they were insured and what the future implications would be if they failed to meet their payments. As will be clear from this report, private sector mortgage insurance, with its right to sue, is seriously deficient for remote, one-industry towns.

There are other references to that problem, but I will jump to page 16 in which the report makes these points:

Nevertheless, the fact remains that the several hundred workers who permanently lost their jobs in Schefferville—

Schefferville was owned by the same company, the Iron Ore Company of Canada.

—received reasonable financial indemnification, but the one thousand or so workers who permanently have lost their jobs in Labrador City have received nothing comparable. The difference is glaring, and the Government should try to influence the companies—

That is the provincial Government and the Iron Ore Company of which the Prime Minister was the head until recently. He went on:

—at least to provide free rail transportation to Sept-Îles for employees and their belongings, including mobile homes.

I understand that the provincial Government of Newfoundland has since that date provided mobility grants in the amount of $3,000 to help workers move out of that disaster area. It is very interesting that the man who has undertaken to lead this country and look after the interests of all parts of the country, including Newfoundland, the Prime Minister, treated Labrador City so very differently from the way he treated Schefferville. Of course, he has not told us the reason, but we can guess the reason by looking at the electoral boundaries. He treated people in Schefferville very well because they were his voters. He and his company did nothing for those in Labrador City. Of course, they were not obliged to do anything because they were not the voters of the Prime Minister. They had no opportunity to vote against him individually.

It goes beyond that. Newfoundland has had a modest co-operative housing program which has grown in the last few years. Recently there were at least three co-operatives which were encouraged by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to expect that they would be getting co-op allocations. The Kilbride, Heritage and Confederation Co-operatives are all in St. John's. These co-ops are not a big deal by CMHC standards, only 51 units all together, but they matter a lot to the people who put their volunteer time into those programs. Not only the Prime Minister and not only the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—who made a fulsome speech in Toronto last spring on behalf of his Party lauding the co-op program—but everybody, except for the private building industry, has recognized the value of co-operative enterprise. It is a small part of the economy and a small part of the housing sector. However, it does enlist volunteer energies in producing the best sort of housing available within the cost allowed by CMHC. That has the effect not only of welding people together in the creation of a co-op, but also of ensuring the durability in the quality of the building.

The people who are involved in co-ops do not want jerry-built buildings, because they are going to live in them and maintain them. It has been shown that co-op homes are generally of better quality and better maintained than rental housing for the same price. Of course, people who can afford private homes are in a different class in every sense, but here we are speaking of people who cannot buy their own homes and for whom home ownership is most easily available through the shared ownership of co-op housing.

For a dozen years, co-op housing has been growing in every province of Canada. It has been found beneficial by everyone except the private builders and those politicians who see their interests as being in association with those of private builders. There has recently been a sharp downturn in the co-op housing program. The social housing program from which 2,500 units were cut last year by the Liberal Minister has had another 2,500 units cut this year. Most of those cuts appear to be cuts in the co-op program.

In Halifax, there were two co-op projects that had been told they had priority. They had been reviewed, their performance was good and their plans were good. Seaview Housing Co-op, which was formerly known as Basinview, and Flip-Flop Housing Co-op had been told that they had priority. A couple of days ago, these projects were cancelled. The Crossroads Co-op project was also cancelled. In fact, there are no co-op units allocated for Newfoundland any longer.

I have not been able to find out about the complete co-op situation in Halifax and Nova Scotia because the present Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who is responsible for housing, although his Department pumps out a great deal of paper, pumps out almost no information about what he is doing. Members of his staff are experts at not answering questions on the telephone. We have to pick this information up piece by piece from different parts of the country.

There are hundreds of other co-op projects across the country that have also been cut in the same unjustifiable way under the present Minister. I will not go into those today because the other examples of this did not occur in the Atlantic provinces.

The policy of the Government toward housing in the Atlantic provinces cannot be justified. It cannot be defended on the grounds that it inherited the problem from its predecessor. We are talking about cuts made to a proven, useful program by a Government which, in its election campaign, promised not to make those cuts. Even this fall, the present Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing said that he did not intend to cut back the allocations for public housing. A cut of $9 billion was made in his budget, but he said that that would not be reflected in the allocations to housing but would somehow be made by shaving production costs. That particular bit of fantasy has now been blown away by the Minister's actual decision to cut the allocations.

I would like to comment on the human problems caused by these few examples to which I have referred. I have here a letter from Ron Cromwell, a Halifax alderman, addressed to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing. He writes:

I am writing to ask that if at all possible, you will do everything in your power to assist the Seaview Housing Co-op in their request for funding. This Co-op has been doing a great job and are ready to bring more affordable housing to our area, to help counter the already low vacancy rate that already exists.

I have a clipping from the Halifax newspaper referring to the extremely low vacancy rate in Halifax of 0.5 per cent. An article in The Daily News of Wednesday, May 1, reads as follows:

The number of publicly funded co-operative housing units to be built in the Halifax metro area has been slashed by 70 per cent for 1985.

As well, a new practice that has been introduced by the Government is that when programs are cut, as little notice as possible is given. The article continues:

The huge cuts—which went unannounced for the first time—by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, comes in the midst of a desperate need for more housing.

The article goes on to refer to provincial housing Minister Mike Laffin who, I presume, is of the same political persuasion as this Government. The Government can hardly laugh off the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia as it tries to laugh off the NDP Governments of western Canada. The article continues:

Yesterday provincial Housing Minister Mike Laffin pleaded with his federal counterpart Bill McKnight of CMHC for more co-op housing in Nova Scotia.

Since assuming power McKnight has implemented a stringent program called Assessed Cost Effectiveness (ACE) which has reduced the number of co-op housing units built in Nova Scotia.

The Minister can give this program a fancy title like Assessed Cost Effectiveness, but he has never explained it to those who have inquired. As far as we can find out, through that program the Minister simply says: "I like him; I do not like him". He obviously does not like the co-op people in eastern Canada.

The article to which I had referred goes on to read:

Nova Scotia MPs were the first to learn of the 1985 co-op cuts, last Friday.

I have a letter here from the Hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. McInnes) dated December 4, 1984, which is when he began to realize that there was a problem. The letter reads:

I have been advised by the Minister responsible for CMHC that they are not able to accede to your request for remedial work with regard to your most recent proposal.

I have difficulty in accepting the merit of the decision in view of the tremendous demand for housing in Halifax but accept that the Government has established priorities and apparently they lean towards new construction.

That letter was written on December 4. On December 7, a letter was written to the Basinview Housing Co-op in care of Access Housing Services. As I mentioned, the Basinview Housing Co-op is now called the Seaview Housing Co-op. This letter was written by Michael W. Tucker, Program Manager of the Social Housing Department, CMHC. The letter reads in part:

Inasmuch as your proposal was considered to be in a priority area this year, we are prepared to recognize that priority for purposes of reviewing 1985 proposals. It is suggested you modify your submission based on a new site, bearing in mind that a peninsula of Halifax location is preferred, but in any case you should locate within the metropolitan area.

Also, it goes without saying that all usual conditions of application approval must be met.

In December, the co-op was asked to make some changes and told that its priority continued because of the work that had already been done. Next there is a letter dated April 30, 1985, from the City of Halifax Non-Profit Housing Society, signed by Nancy Wooden, Chairman, and C. Mellett, Consultant, to the Hon. Minister of Labour regarding the 1985 unit allocations for the Seaview Housing Co-operative. The letter reads:

Our Society was extremely distressed to hear that the Seaview Housing Co-operative did not receive funding allocations under the 1985 announced allocations. As you are very aware the housing situation in Halifax has been at crisis proportions for the last four years with vacancy rates at 0.5% and even more severe affordability problems.

The writers of the letter address specifically the changes sought by CMHC four months previous to that.

• (1640)

As to the criteria for selection, the Non-Profit Housing Society has worked with Seaview Co-Operative as its priority number one for co-operative development in Halifax. That is what CMHC asked for. To date, they have agreed to lease land on the peninsula of Halifax to the co-op as asked for by CMHC; put considerable time and money into a design competition to ensure an appropriate design for the area; and provided staff time to assist in the development of the co-op. Volunteer time and money have been spent with the encouragement of CMHC to produce housing in an area where it is desperately needed, yet CMHC, without any explanation or warning, has cut them off. But they have asked in the letter that the Minister review the process of evaluating co-operative projects as they relate to affordable housing being developed in major centres close to jobs and services. They are asking for a country-wide review. They have also said that 1985 is the year in which CMHC should acknowledge the critical and ongoing shortage of affordable housing in Halifax by increasing immediately the unit allocations to mainland Nova Scotia by 25 units. That is very reasonable, Mr. Speaker. They are asking that the regional office be directed to use those 25 units within the municipal limits of the City of Halifax by funding the Seaview Housing Co-operative.

They have followed the directions of CMHC, but CMHC cut them off. I would say that that as well justifies the accusation of neglect. I would say that it justifies the accusation of contempt by this Government for the people of Halifax, as the actions I mentioned before constitute contempt for the people of Newfoundland in regard to housing programs. I am very sorry that that is so and I hope the Government will reconsider its approach in this matter.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to add my comments to those already made on the following Opposition motion:

That this House condemns the Government for its indifference and negligence toward Atlantic Canada, especially with regard to regional industrial development, fisheries and transportation.

[English]

I was particularly interested in listening to a number of Ministers making comments and being paticularly pleased with the roles they are playing in our society and the changes they are effecting. They talked about this being a new era of co-operation and harmony which they have demonstrated through ongoing consultation across this land. If those ongoing consultations do end with a positive, constructive and new place for the Atlantic Provinces in the growth and development of this country, then I for one, as will all members of my Party, be more than pleased. Certainly I would be more than ready to give the benefit of the doubt to any initiative which would improve the lot of Atlantic Canadians. However, there are so many election promises not being met and the prose and rhetoric continues in such a way that I have some serious concerns. I hope those concerns prove to be unfounded.

I must bring to the attention of members of the Government the list of areas in which they have effected cuts which have direct impact on Atlantic Canada, particularly Newfoundland and Labrador. There was a 1.8 cent per litre increase in gasoline tax and I do not think the people of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick are particularly happy about that, nor is anyone else in the rest of Canada. The reduction in the fisheries development program amounted to $11.7 million. We just heard about overfishing in that area and the impact that has on the canneries and fish plants in the Atlantic region. The reduction in non-profit and co-operative housing was very well addressed by the Member from the NDP. He brought to our attention the cut in social and co-operative housing, an important area. That is only to the tune of $9.6 million. We have had a 25 per cent cut in the RRAP program regarding home renovation to the tune of $29.4 million. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion was cut to the tune of $200 million. This impacts on the private sector, particularly in the Atlantic region, where it is so important.

Grants to local groups in support of cultural activities have been cut by $9.8 million. Graduates of job training programs have had their unemployment insurance program extensions cut from six to three weeks, a cost factor of $5.8 million. This impacts very dramatically in that area of our country where the unemployment rates are extremely high and unemployment insurance is often the only dollar brought into the home. The Canada Student Loans program is held at the current level of $5 million. When you look at the needs of youth and see the cuts in that area, that is rather dramatic. CN Marine ferry services on the East Coast have been cut by $37.6 million. I would say that has a rather severe impact on that area. The general industrial training program involved 42,000 people being placed in job training programs last year. It assists employers to improve job training skills, but here we have seen a cut of $40 million. The Summer Canada program for students was cut by $85 million; its reinstatement under a new name I will address in a few moments. The COSP program was cut by $95 million, and CHIP was cut by $84 million. Every one of these cuts impacts on the people of the Atlantic region. The Forest Research Centre in Corner Brook was cut by $16 million and I think that is a particularly mean cut which demonstrates a lack of open-heartedness and open spirit.

New development services in Parks Canada will be reduced by $19.5 million. Capital expenditures at Fisheries and Oceans will be cut by $18.1 million. I am wondering which one of those Ministers and which one of the back-benchers is looking after the interests of Atlantic Canada. The dredging program will be cut by $3.6 million. Coast Guard aids to navigation and contributions to community services is cut by $51.6 million. The litany goes on. Increased fees for food inspection, quality assurance, et cetera, amount to $32 million. User fees for Parks Canada and fees for weather information have been introduced to the tune of $10.5 million. Charges for berthage fees for fishermen, $6.3 million. Increased parking rates at airports, higher rental rates for airport land and buildings, new tariff structures for government wharfs, increased charges for marine-related services, further savings from reduced service levels for marine activities and airport maintenance, $23.5 million. Airport transport and cargo taxes, 8 per cent to 9 per cent on domestic flights, and a new cargo tax to be introduced at a cost of $34.6 million. This tax will impact very heavily in that area of our country. There was a crackdown on collecting money owed to the Government, especially from those who owe money to Revenue Canada. Here we have had a cut-back of $440 million or a saving, depending on how the Government wishes to look at it, yet 330 new tax collectors have been employed to the tune of $10 million.

There is something very wrong when you hear a Government speaking in such glowing terms about what it has done and then you listen to this litany of cuts which have impacted so negatively. If these cuts are, as one of the Ministers put it, to cut out the fat, improve where we are inefficient, cut back programs which are redundant, and effect changes where we have had unnecessary expenditures, if it is to find new ways in which to work, then I say, fine, good, proceed. But that has not been demonstrated and it is not the view that we have at the moment.

● (1650)

One of the areas in which I have a particular interest is that of youth.

[Translation]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, young people today are an incredibly important natural resource for this country. Their technical or academic training is an investment, not only in their own future but in that of the entire country. The challenge we are facing today is that of ensuring that when our young people enter the labour market, they will find jobs that measure up to their qualifications and expectations, as well as a saner and more compassionate society and a world at peace. Furthermore, we must tell young people, and this special year is a particularly appropriate occasion to do so, that Canada has great hopes for their generation.

However, Mr. Speaker, considering all the cut-backs in funding, the lack of money for training, and the delays in setting up summer programs for our young people, we should not be surprised if they complain about the lack of interest we are showing in their future.

[English]

Spring is upon us and young people across the country are finishing exams, or preparing for them. They are putting their winter clothes away and getting ready for summer. Whether they can do so in the knowledge that a summer job awaits them is another thing. We have heard glowing reports of how the private sector is going to do all kinds of wonderful things. I am waiting to see the final result. In the meantime, in February, after a long, patient winter, Challenge '85 was unveiled to Canadian students. This $205 million program claimed to be the answer to the cries for a substantial, meaningful job-creation program for our young people. From the outset skeptics voiced their concerns. The emphasis on private sector input to create 10,000 jobs worried student federation leaders across the nation. Those in the business community expressed their concern as well. I am sincerely hopeful that that concern has been overcome. We will have to hear from the Minister in that regard.

Application forms which normally should have been available have not been. That is making it difficult for the businesses to complete the forms and for the community organizations and municipalities to create the jobs which were to be career-oriented. Details were unavailable, indeed often nonexistent. Yet we all remained hopeful. There is clearly a need to create comprehensive, meaningful job opportunities for young people.

As the critic for youth, I have repeatedly stressed the importance of the youth of Canada for the future of our country. The latest Statistics Canada figures show that youth unemployment rose dramatically and is near 17.5 per cent. That is something to be truly worried about, Mr. Speaker. It is of great concern to me. The effects of unemployment on young people have been studied. It remains their chief concern and preoccupation. It has created a situation of moroseness for them. They look at society and ask what their future and potential is and where they are going to go. They are losing hope. We see that with the increase in violence and suicide. We note that with the move to prostitution, drugs and alcohol. I am hopeful that Challenge '85 and the IYY activities that were promised to speak to these concerns will have some impact. The plain fact is that the Government has missed the mark.

Taking a closer look at the various programs which fall under Challenge '85 I see little cause for celebration. Of the several projects, only the Summer Employment Experience Development Program has received even a fraction of the attention and concentration needed to ensure a moderate level of success. At this point only 33,000 jobs have been allocated. That is a far cry from the 95,000 jobs which are needed to enable students to make the money they need to ensure that they can continue their education next year. The fact that the program was announced so late has limited the creativity and input of municipalities and community organizations.

In her announcement of this program the Minister talked about being very creative. She said the program would meet certain enunciated needs of youth. She said she would have a new approach to job creation for students. Instead of offering pre-packaged, federally funded projects which only provide next year's tuition, she said that the Government was challenging its economic partners to come forward with meaningful jobs to improve students' abilities to contribute to society now and in the future. She said that they were working to harmonize the student summer program with those of the provinces for maximum benefit to our young people. The need of all sectors of society to contribute to the participation of young Canadians in the mainstream of economic life was underlined by the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne).

In reality, the Minister decided that the program should be allocated on a first-come first-serve basis, and the criteria established for career-related jobs result in those which were submitted first being approved regardless of the value of the proposal. If someone was a little late because he or she could not get a form or did not hear the information until later, their good proposal, which would meet the aspirations and needs that were beautifully enunciated and carefully thought out, will not be met as a result of this very poor advice to centres which are administering the program. There have been no guidelines established as to what constitutes a career-related job. This is a very subjective decision which, for the most part, has been left in the hands of local authorities who have been given few, if any, details.

The Student Entrepreneur's Program was supposed to provide $30 million in loans and cost the Government up to $7.5 million. The Minister said that the entrepreneurial potential of students would be developed this summer by supporting provincial initiatives which provide them with loan guarantees or loans to start summer businesses. She said that this component will be based on, and where appropriate, meshed with, the successful use of this approach in a number of provinces. The Minister said that up to $7.5 million of SEED funds would be available for the net cost of providing up to $30 million in additional loans or loan guarantees.

There is a little problem there, Mr. Speaker. I do not think that DREE got together with the Minister of Employment and Immigration. From what I can gather, that program is not even working. Those students who were planning to undertake student entrepreneurial summer jobs are not able to do so at the moment. The money is still not unblocked. If the money does not go to that program, students are a little late to apply and get involved in something else.

This matter is of great concern to me, particularly with regard to the situation of youth unemployment in the Atlantic provinces. The national unemployment rate is 11.2 per cent. The national rate for the 15 to 24 year age group is 17.5 per cent. However, in Newfoundland it is 39.3 per cent. Almost 40 per cent of all the youth in that part of Atlantic Canada are unemployed. In Nova Scotia, 29 per cent are unemployed and in New Brunswick, 32.2 per cent are unemployed. That is absolutely dreadful. Even when a student wants to move to find another place to obtain work, his mobility grant is cut.

I gather that my time has expired. I wanted to address the cuts more significantly but I will do so at another time.

PIONEER TRUST PAYMENT CONTINUATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-50, an Act to provide for the continuance of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, before I begin, could I indicate that discussions have taken place among all Parties and I would like to move that this Bill be discussed at next reading in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Am I to take it that there was consent that the motion be changed to reference to Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mr. de Jong: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. Speaker: I see no such agreement. It would take the consent of the House to make the change, I believe.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned, as you recall, in the course of the statement on business that my initial impression from all Parties was that they would be prepared to let this matter go through all stages of the House today, including Committee of the Whole. There was at that time no indication to the contrary. If the Official Opposition or the NDP want to delay this matter, then perhaps I will have an opportunity of learning that in further discussion. But I had raised it specifically during the question on House business to make sure it was clearly understood that it was our intention to proceed with all stages of this Bill today so that the Senate could deal with it. I think it is in the interests of not only the people of Saskatchewan but a good number of people who have investments in this company to have the matter resolved quickly and I would hope we could get the approval of all Parties.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader made two comments. He said it was his impression that there was an agreement that this Bill would go through this day; we do not deny that impression. I understand that there have been negotiations between the leaders of all Parties, but they concerned the need to have the Bill passed this day. What the Minister just did was to bypass second reading of the Bill and go into Committee of the Whole now. I am saying to the Minister we did not agree to that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is not what the Minister asked.

Mr. Gauthier: I understood the Minister to want to move to Committee of the Whole now.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can try and help. The normal proposal which is put to the House at this point is that the Bill be read a second time and referred to the normal standing committee. What I understood to be proposed was that the Bill be now read a second time and referred to Committee of the Whole House as opposed to the normal committee. That was the motion on which I was told there had been some discussions. That would still leave second reading before the House, and on completion of second reading the Bill would remain here for reference to Committee of the Whole House. I took it there was some agreement on that.

Mr. Gauthier: There is agreement that there will be no delay, that the Bill will proceed through second reading and Committee of the Whole in this House today, and then third reading this day. What I understood was that the Minister told us that she wanted second reading approval now.

Mr. Speaker: Having therefore sensed that it probably was the way the Chair read the motion which caused the confusion, may I have the consent of the House to withdraw the earlier motion and replace it with the following? I take it this is what is preferred.

Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-50, an Act to provide for the continuance of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company, be now read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to indicate that we in the NDP are concerned that the Bill be passed today and we concur with that agreement. However, we are as well concerned that in Committee of the Whole we have an opportunity of asking some questions of the Minister and her officials, because it is our belief that certain things surrounding this Bill have not been made public. Hopefully we will be able to do all of that today and we will be able to pass this Bill later on today.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I rise before the House today to speak on Bill C-50, the Pioneer Trust Payment Continuation Act. I am delighted that all Hon. Members have agreed to give this Bill speedy passage, and for that I thank them.

The source of the Company's difficulties are by now, I think, quite well known. Pioneer Trust had encountered severe financial problems as a result of a large proportion of its mortgage portfolio being in arrears and also as a result of the need to write down the value of certain real estate investments. Given that capital could not be raised through a preferred share issue as originally proposed, and could not be successfully marketed in the absence of a guarantee from the Province of Saskatchewan, the continued operation of Pioneer Trust no longer seemed viable and it therefore ceased operations.

On learning of management's decision and the proposed action, I immediately directed the federal Superintendent of Insurance to take control of Pioneer's assets so that the interests of the depositors would be best protected. Officers of the federal Department of Insurance went to the company's offices and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was informed of the situation. An application to have the company wound up pursuant to the provisions of the Winding-Up Act was filed in the Court of Queen's Bench of Saskatchewan on February 11 and the court issued a winding-up order on February 15, 1985.

Prior to the granting of the winding-up order the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation began making arrangements for the repayment of all demand deposits, including savings accounts, chequing accounts, and demand deposit receipts up to the $60,000 insured limit. Cheques in payment of savings, chequing, and other demand deposits dated February 18, 1985, which included interest to February 20, were made available to the depositors at the branch where the account was maintained.

In total, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation has made payments of approximately $203 million in respect to the Pioneer Trust deposits which were insured. These payments were made promptly and efficiently and, judging from the comments I received, in a manner that caused as little inconvenience and disruption to insured depositors as was possible in such circumstances.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, Pioneer Trust had approximately $36 million of deposits that were not protected by deposit insurance. About $25 million of the $36 million of uninsured deposits are savings and chequing accounts, guaranteed investment certificates, and insured RRSP accounts that were in excess of the $60,000 insurance limit. The remainder of the uninsured deposits consists of $600,000 of U.S. dollar deposits. Under the CDIC Act only deposits in Canada and in Canadian currency are protected by the deposit insurance. There was also some $10 million of guaranteed income averaging certificates that were not insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation because they were for a period in excess of five years.

As Hon. Members will be aware, the insurance limit provided by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation for each of its member institutions is $60,000 per depositor. Indeed, each member institution is required to post in a promiment location in each branch a decal of design provided by the corporation which bears the legend "$60,000 maximum insurance per person per member institution".

Since its enactment in 1967 the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act has stipulated that deposit instruments for periods longer than five years are not protected by deposit insurance. Given this fact, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation had no authority to make insurance payments in respect of Pioneer's guaranteed income averaging certificates.

Soon after the winding up of Pioneer Trust I became concerned about the position of the approximately 650 holders of the guaranteed income averaging certificates that were for periods in excess of five years and were, therefore, not insured. Many of the certificate holders are elderly Canadians who sold their farms, their homes and their businesses and, encouraged by the provisions of the Income Tax Act as they existed at that time, invested the proceeds in guaranteed income averaging certificates. Many are dependent on the payments promised by the certificates for their daily living expenses. I became most concerned very early during this process and began almost immediately to have discussions with the Province of Saskatchewan and with my officials as to how this matter could be resolved.

We then began to receive numerous representations from many of the certificate holders that they did not realize their certificates were not protected by deposit insurance. In fact, they claim that some of the markings and wordings of the certificates led them to believe that they were protected. Upon further investigation I determined that many of the certificates prominently display on their faces a facsimile of the seal of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation as well as the words "Member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation".

It is important that depositors be in a position, when they are making a deposit, to know whether or not that deposit will be protected by deposit insurance. The by-laws of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act stipulate that uninsured instruments should be clearly marked on their face: "This is not an insured deposit as defined by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act". Unfortunately, the Act does not impose any penalties for non-compliance with the by-laws.

The experience with the Pioneer Trust guaranteed income averaging certificates has demonstrated to me that much more must be done to ensure that depositors are aware of the exact limits on deposit insurance coverage provided by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Admittedly, as a result of changes in the Income Tax Act, guaranteed income averaging certificates are no longer being issued by trust companies. Nevertheless, I think it is most important that steps be taken to ensure that the public is informed about the limits on deposit insurance on all financial instruments.

As Hon. Members will recall, even before the Pioneer Trust problem I appointed a private sector committee composed of three people, chaired by Robert Wyman of Vancouver, Chairman of Pemberton, Houston and Willoughby Inc., to study and provide me with advice on all aspects of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and the operations and organization of the corporation. In the context of the events of the past few months, I have specifically asked the committee for its advice on legislation and other measures that may be desirable to ensure that depositors are adequately informed about the deposit insurance coverage. In the meantime I have also very strongly requested of the board of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation that it instruct its member institutions as expeditiously as possible to ensure that depositors are informed about deposit coverage and restrictions.

I am determined to proceed with whatever legislative or administrative measures seem desirable to ensure that depositors are better informed in the future about the limits of deposit insurance coverage. In this context I might mention that three weeks ago I released a discussion paper entitled "The Regulation of Canadian Financial Institutions: Proposals for Discussion". One of the important principles on which this paper is based is improved protection for consumers. This Government is committed to this principle and the paper puts forward a number of proposals aimed at improving the regulatory framework.

The short-term administrative actions that I have described and the proposed revisions of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and the financial institutions legislation should ensure that depositors are better protected and informed about what is insured and what is not. However, this provides little comfort to holders of the guaranteed income averaging certificates of Pioneer Trust. As I indicated, these persons, many of whom are elderly and dependent on the certificate payments for their daily living expenses, thought that they were protected by deposit insurance. I have been very disturbed about the circumstances of the some 650 certificate holders of guaranteed income averaging certificates who appear to have good reason to believe that they were insured.

It is my concern about the circumstances surrounding these certificate holders that led me to enter into the recently announced arrangement with the Government of Saskatchewan for a plan to compensate uninsured depositors and to propose the legislation that is the subject of discussion today. The objective of the legislation is to authorize me to enter into arrangements to continue the existing payments to holders of uninsured guaranteed income averaging certificates up to a limit of $60,000 that would have been applied had the certificates been insured. In other words, my objective is to provide a federal contribution to the plan to compensate Pioneer Trust uninsured depositors in an amount necessary to put the certificate holders in a position that they thought they were in, namely, protected up to the $60,000 deposit insurance limit. The Government of Saskatchewan has undertaken to assure the liability to make payments required by the original guaranteed income averaging certificates for amounts in excess of $60,000.

In addition, the Government of Saskatchewan has also undertaken to compensate with accrued interest to the liquidation date depositors with U.S. dollar accounts and all depositors who had amounts in excess of $60,000 on deposit in savings accounts, chequing accounts, guaranteed investment certificates and RRSP funds. The Bill asks for an appropriation of $5 million. My officials are satisfied that this amount, together with the amounts to be contributed by the Government of Saskatchewan and the amounts expected to be recovered from the liquidator, should be sufficient to enable the payments promised in the guaranteed income averaging certificates to be continued. In fact, depending on the distribution that the court-appointed liquidator of Pioneer Trust is able to make, the cost to the federal Government hopefully may be less than $5 million.

If this legislation is passed, the intention is to make arrangements as quickly as possible with another financial institution to start making the payments due and outstanding under the guaranteed income averaging certificates so as to prevent any tax disadvantage to the certificate holders. The plan is to continue the contractual periodic payment rather than pay the holders a lump sum payment.

The Government of Saskatchewan will be making arrangements to have lump sum payments made to U.S. dollar depositors and to depositors who have more than $60,000 on deposit in the form of chequing accounts, savings accounts, GICs and insured RRSPs. All depositors will be required to assign their claims in consideration for the payment.

Given the circumstances I have described, I think it is reasonable that the Government of Canada take action to see that the holders of garanteed income averaging annuity certificates are in the position that they had every reason to believe they were in, namely that they are protected to the extent of the $60,000 limit. As I have mentioned, this is part of a plan that will involve the Government of Saskatchewan compensating all other uninsured depositors, including those with deposits in excess of the insured limit. I am, therefore, recommending passage of this Bill.

Our Progressive Conservative Government is committed to responsible management of the affairs of this nation. The Bill before this House demonstrates in no uncertain terms that we accept that responsibility to ensure that our citizens are protected while at the same time we proceed with reforms to bring our financial institutions regulations in tune with the realities of the 1980s.

It is my intention to have as broad a public discussion on that topic as possible and to ensure that the Canadian people are kept informed of their rights and benefits, as they should have been in the past.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of Bill which one has no alternative but to approve and to facilitate its passage. But that does not mean one approves of the way matters have been handled up to now. Obviously there were many depositors who did not realize that there was a $60,000 limit. Equally so, there were the guaranteed certificate holders who did not realize there was a five-year limit. I am advised that many of those people were retired farmers who had put the entire proceeds of the sale of their family farms into this trust company. In other words, their entire savings and the result of a lifetime of hard work was there and had disappeared.

Under those circumstances, I would agree with the Minister that the taxpayers of this country might reasonably be asked to help compensate those people, as we are being asked to do by this Bill, but, Mr. Speaker, there are many, many questions that need answering. We are being asked to put the Bill through quickly. We are not, therefore, going to be able to have full answers today. I trust that the Minister, who thus far has shown herself to be open, will in fact provide additional information to the House and provide an opportunity, perhaps by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, to discuss some of the issues which really need to be dealt with.

The Minister referred to the green paper on financial institutions. Of course, that will allow a discussion on many broad issues, as will the paper on the role of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. But, apart from the broad principles there are some very specific matters concerning this trust company on which we should have answers.

There are many questions concerning the role of the Government of Saskatchewan and, in particular, there is the question as to why this particular trust company had its licence renewed by the Government of Canada on December 31, 1984, although it had not succeeded in increasing its liquidity. The federal Government on August 1 allowed the company to continue to operate under restrictions, on the understanding that it would have to increase its liquidity by December 1, 1984. To my knowledge that requirement was not met, yet the licence was issued. This is a serious matter on which we should have some answers to our questions. Did the Government of Saskatchewan provide some kind of backing which satisfied the federal Government? If so, what was the nature of that guarantee, and was it met?

The question of legislation to increase the amounts which can be paid by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation keeps coming up. It is increasingly unsatisfactory to operate in this ad hoc fashion. With the Canadian Commercial Bank we had one large bail-out just a couple of months ago. Now comes this one. Again there are many unanswered questions. Why was it not known that these institutions were in such difficulty? Why was there not earlier action?

I was pleased to hear the Minister say that CDIC will in future be requiring better and clearer notification to customers of the limits of the insurance coverage. I hope this will be in place immediately and that we will not have to wait for the full paper on the CDIC.

Since we gave un undertaking to let this Bill pass quickly, I will not take up much time of the House. I know there are Hon. Members who wish to speak, but I merely reiterate that although there is no option but to use taxpayers' money to repay some of these depositors who are not rich people but have their life savings tied up, agreeing to rapid passage of the Bill should not be interpreted in any way to mean that we are agreeing with the process or that we are at all satisfied that the matters were dealt with effectively either by the Government of Canada or by the Government of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to echo the remarks of the spokesperson for the Liberal Party that while we have agreed to speedy passage of this Bill, that in no way should be construed as meaning that we are happy with all of the events surrounding Pioneer Trust. There are many unanswered questions. I have been requesting the Minister to hold public hearings so that many of these questions could be answered. It is important at some appropriate public forum that a full hearing be held concerning the events surrounding Pioneer Trust.

It is important from the point of view of the public. The public needs to be assured that private and public officials know what they are doing. Surely the events surrounding Pioneer Trust are, if anything, a comedy of errors and mismanagement on the part of the federal Government and its agencies, on behalf of the provincial Government and the Minister of Finance and, I suspect, on behalf of some of the practices of senior management of Pioneer. Therefore, I submit that an appropriate public inquiry is very much in order.

The taxpayers of Canada and the shareholders and depositors of Pioneer Trust need some answers to some important questions. We would like to know about the management of Pioneer. It is important to them as well. The senior management are prominent business people in Saskatchewan. It is important for them to clear their names as they continue to do business in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Questions have to be asked and answered. Was the collapse of Pioneer at all due to bad business decisions? Were there any substantial loans made by Pioneer to business concerns on which the interest charged was below the fair market value? These are important questions that need to be answered for the sake of management and its reputation as well as for the Canadian public. The Minister has proposed extending the powers of trust companies. Let us see how the trust companies have operated in the past. We need answers to these questions.

The Minister talked about a stronger regulatory body. Let us find out what the practices have been in the past and what the specific need is for new regulations and a stronger regulatory body. These questions deserve some clear answers.

We would like to know as well from the time the decision was made by the provincial Government, which I understand from the Minister's letter to me dated March 7 where she said "On February 4, the Superintendent was informed by the Government of Saskatchewan that it would likely not be proceeding with the guarantee of the preferred share option", to when Pioneer closed its doors on February 7 if there was any trading in shares or any extra trading in shares. Did some people who had inside information that the provincial Government would not be continuing with its guarantee use that information? We would like to know if there were withdrawals of deposits from Pioneer Trust.

These are legitimate questions that have to be raised and answered in a public forum. At this stage of the game, just to hand over more millions of dollars to clean up the mistakes that have been made without answers to these questions is not right. As representatives of the people with the responsibilities that we have as Members of Parliament, we have to try and get answers to these questions.

The Bill essentially deals with one part of the uninsured group, those people who had put in money under the guaranteed income averaging certificates lasting over five years. My colleague from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) raised this in the House, as did I. We pointed out to the Minister that people had bought the certificates and that on the application forms, and so forth, the CDIC stamp appeared. This insinuated that CDIC was insuring the certificates. Many people became quite shocked when they realized that they were not guaranteed by CDIC. Many of these people are not rich. A fair number are retired business people or farmers who have no pension scheme. They have saved all their lives and have sold their businesses or farms. The amount of cash they received is their sole asset, their sole source of income.

Many of these people had invested in these certificates and were living off the interest. The interest was like their monthly pension cheque. With the collapse of Pioneer, these people soon discovered that their source of monthly income, their security, had been wiped away.

It is obvious that the Superintendent of Insurance and the CDIC had some responsibility in this. After all, they were the policing agents. They had the responsibility of making certain that trust companies like Pioneer Trust did not suggest to their depositors that their investments were covered under insurance when in fact they were not. The federal Government has a responsibility to be a policing agent. It was obvious that it had not fulfilled that role, that it was not aware that Pioneer Trust was issuing income averaging annuities with the CDIC stamp on them, suggesting that they were insured when in fact they were not.

There is no doubt that the federal Government had a responsibility. The Minister's Bill is an acceptance of that responsibility. If these forward averaging annuities did not have the CDIC stamp on them, I doubt that we would be seeing this Bill in front of us today. The Minister asks for $5 million in compensation, yet by her account some $10 million has been invested in these certificates. The Minister said this morning that she hopes that the other $5 million will come from the sale of the assets of Pioneer Trust. We are still not quite certain what people are to do in the meantime. When will the assets of Pioneer be sold? When will we know how much money has been collected under the sale of the assets of Pioneer? What do people do in the meantime?

Since the Bill recognizes the responsibility the federal Government has for this $10 million that has been invested in these guaranteed income averaging certificates, why does the Bill not ask for $10 million? What the federal Government could get back out of the sale of the assets of Pioneer could then be recovered by the Government later on.

The events surrounding Pioneer Trust are worth mentioning here today. I rose during Question Period on February 7 to ask the Minister a pretty general question. At that time, I asked her if it was true that her Department was concerned about Pioneer Trust and other trust companies in western Canada. My question was based on a report that originated in The Globe and Mail earlier this year which suggested that there had been some investigation by the Superintendent of Insurance into trust companies in western Canada. The Minister assured me that there were no problems and that none of the trust companies was experiencing difficulty.

Later on that same afternoon, I received a message from the Minister's office stating that the Minister of Finance of Saskatchewan was about to announce publicly that the Province of Saskatchewan would not continue with the guarantee of Pioneer's public share issue that the Saskatchewan Government had publicly made. Therefore, Pioneer Trust closed its doors later that afternoon. In the months of February, March and April, we heard of more financial institutions in western Canada going under.

I appreciate why the Minister stated in the House that none of these financial institutions was in trouble. I suspect her reasoning was that she did not want to see a run occur on these financial institutions. However, when one takes that position, one also pays a price. Perhaps the price one pays is that one creates a false sense of security which leads investors and depositors to put money into institutions when in fact those institutions are in great difficulty. The other price one pays is the price of a lack of honesty. The Minister felt that she should not answer a legitimate question put to her by an Hon. Member because the answer might engender a run on some of these financial institutions. The price to be paid must include a lack of full disclosure by a Minister to Members of Parliament.

When looking at the events, one must come to the conclusion that the provincial Government and its Minister of Finance made some grave errors. The Saskatchewan Government publicly committed itself to guaranteeing an equity share issue, a commitment made public by the Premier of the province. We find out later that the Government made that commitment without a full appreciation of Pioneer's financial position. Members of the Government of Saskatchewan made that commitment without looking at the books of Pioneer Trust. I find that amazing. I am dumbfounded by the fact that such a commitment could have been made without first having a look at the books.

I understand that after that commitment was made public Members of the Government of Saskatchewan made requests of the officers of the company to see the books. As I understand it, senior management of Pioneer Trust simply did not comply with that request, or at least it took them quite a while to comply. I understand that some of the senior management people in that company went off on long, extended holidays during that period in December that was so crucial to the continuing success and well-being of their enterprise. Surely that was irresponsible behaviour on the part of senior management members and as well on the part of the Minister of Finance of the Province of Saskatchewan who made that commitment in the first place.

I understand that when no figures were made available from Pioneer management, the Province of Saskatchewan finally decided it had better act on its own and sent some of its people from the Finance Department to look at the books of Pioneer. Again, this is a somewhat odd situation because I am sure that those civil servants from the Saskatchewan Department of Finance were not experts when it comes to looking at the books of a financial institution. Be that as it may, these civil servants came back with the conclusion that Pioneer's situation was even worse than they had first thought it to be. That then became the public reason for the Province of Saskatchewan to decide not to proceed with its guarantee.

Some of us in political life try not to become too cynical. When seeing events occur on a day-to-day basis, it is all too easy for politicians to develop a sense of cynicism. I am afraid that I have great difficulty holding back my sense of cynicism when it comes to this whole sordid mess. I understand that one of the things the provincial Government did was to send out approximately 1,000 letters to professional people, lawyers and business people in the Province of Saskatchewan inquiring what they felt about the bail-out that the Province of Saskatchewan was proposing for Pioneer Trust Company. The response from these professional people was that they were against this bail-out. Therefore, I wonder whether the Province of Saskatchewan acted for political reasons when it decided not to proceed with the bail-out or whether it did in fact act in that manner because the books were so bad that the company was a bottomless pit, the bailing out of which was not in the interests of the public of Saskatchewan.

Another comical aspect of this matter—I suppose I could call it comical if it were not so sad—was the provincial Government and its Minister of Finance accusing the federal Government and the Superintendent of Insurance of being the villains in all this. The provincial Minister accused the Superintendent of Insurance of being a little too harsh on Pioneer management by indicating that he should have held back and given Pioneer more time. He indicated that the problem with trust companies was that they were being over-regulated. In fact, the Saskatchewan Finance Minister was suggesting that the federal Government should relax its regulations. I find that statement made by the Minister of Finance of Saskatchewan to be incredible. That is not what the events of the last number of months and indeed the last number of years have shown. In fact, the Province of Ontario has experienced a fair number of trust companies going belly up.

I think it has been shown that the problem has been that there has not been enough regulation and that the CDIC has been woefully understaffed. It does not have the ability to carry out its proper mandated duties to regulate these trust companies. I think it has been shown that the Superintendent of Insurance and the Minister did not know the actual situation faced by Pioneer Trust.

Again, we heard this later through statements that the Minister made both in and out of this House regarding why she did not attempt to get some agency agreement so that Pioneer Trust could be saved. She has stated publicly that the reason they did not try for an agency agreement was that they first realized how bad the situation was when they looked at the books. So the federal Government did not know how bad the situation was and that is because the Superintendent of Insurance and CDIC did not have the ability properly to monitor these trust companies. For the Minister of Finance and the Province of Saskatchewan to suggest that the regulations have been too strict and should be relaxed, I find the ultimate in nonsense and irresponsibility.

We come today, therefore, to the sad situation where the public of Canada is asked to dish out even more money. The Minister admitted in her remarks that some $203 million already has gone into paying off the insured depositors. The federal Government is asking for $5 million more. The Province of Saskatchewan will have to dole out some $10 million more. That is a situation, Mr. Speaker, that I believe somehow could and should have been prevented. One would have thought that the federal Government, which prides itself on its business management, and a provincial Tory Government which prides itself on its business management, should not have allowed the loss of several hundred millions of dollars "oops" through their fingers; "oops, a mistake".

It is amazing to me how these astute businessmen and business-women paraded themselves in front of the electorate saying; "Elect us; we know how to run the shop". You should have heard them in the Province of Saskatchewan in 1982, Mr. Speaker, during that provincial election. They said: "Let's get rid of the New Democrats because they are the sloppiest administrators in this country. They are a spend-all party and have no sense of business and keeping the bucks". They said: "Elect us as experienced businessmen and business-women and we will have a businesslike Government". That was the rhetoric. But, Mr. Speaker, one just has to look at this fiasco to realize that these so-called businessmen and business-women who claim they really know how to run the shop and how to prevent a waste of government money just had two hundred million some odd dollars go "oops" through their fingers.

Mr. Crosbie: So vote against it. You're against the Bill, are you? Why don't you vote against it?

Mr. de Jong: I hear the Hon. Member across the way bellowing as usual, Mr. Speaker. Does he not realize that under a New Democratic Government in the Province of Saskatchewan, we never had a cent of deficit? But the Tory Government in the Province of Saskatchewan in less than three years has accumulated a deficit of over $1 billion. So much, Mr. Speaker, for those responsible, businesslike people. And when one considers the fiasco of Pioneer Trust, we begin to realize why we have over a $1 billion deficit in the Province of Saskatchewan. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that these men and women who parade themselves as being astute business people who know how to run the shop, in fact do not know how to run the shop. They gave a $30 million guarantee to a trust company without having looked at its books. That is being irresponsible to the taxpayers of the Province of Saskatchewan.

I have asked the Minister time and time again if she ever got in touch with the Province of Saskatchewan directly about the guarantee which it made to Pioneer Trust. I asked if she ever got assurances from the province directly. I have been met with silence, Mr. Speaker. If one goes through the court documents which were submitted in Saskatchewan under the Winding-up Act, one sees a total silence concerning the communications between the federal Government and the Province of Saskatchewan.

Perhaps during the committee stage we will get a little more information about this, but I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that they did not even talk to each other, that they did not even communicate with each other until it was too late and it was all over. I suspect that the federal Government, when it renewed Pioneer's licence in December, took Pioneer's management's word, the letter it waved from the Treasurer of the Province of Saskatchewan giving the guarantee, and never went back to the Minister himself and asked: "Do you really make this guarantee? Can we have it in writing before we renew Pioneer's licence?" I suspect that never occurred. I suspect there was never any of that type of communication.

So we find that not only were the federal Government and the provincial Government not very astute in their business dealings—which has now resulted in a cost to the taxpayers of this country of some $200 million—but they did not even communicate. And that is a party which claims it is going all out on communication and consultation. Perhaps Hon. Members opposite feel "What's another $200 million?"

I do have great difficulty in supporting this Bill.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, don't. Vote against it.

Mr. de Jong: I will support it because it was not the fault of the depositors that they lost. It is not their fault. But there is something inside of me which says that something is not right here. This Government has cut some $200 million out of unemployment insurance, restricting the benefits a little more, so that unemployed people will find their benefits from unemployment insurance a little more restricted. These are people who are living on a few hundred dollars a week and are desperately trying to make ends meet. The Government is all gung ho to cut down on these programs, this government fat, so to speak, to put the screws to ordinary working men and women, the retired, the disabled and the poor, but at the same time it can throw out $200 million here and so many hundred million dollars there for another trust company or another firm. And it all gets passed in a day, as smooth and easy as grease passing through a goose. There is something not right. Something inside of me says: "Hey, what's going on here?" What sort of world are we living in when the incomes and well-being of the poor people and the unemployed are always up for grabs, always being debated and always being sniped at? Something is just not right.

I hope that the Committee of the Whole will be able to ask the Minister and her officials some direct questions. I hope we will be able to get some straight and honest answers. I think it is in the interests of the Minister herself, as well as in the interests of the people of Canada, to give some straight answers so that she can attempt to restore the public trust in these institutions and bring about a new regime in this field. We want to feel that she knows what she is doing and is being honest with us. We will judge by the type of answers she will give us this afternoon whether we are to have confidence in her and in the changes she will attempt to bring about. I understand that some time later this year there will be legislative changes dealing with financial institutions. So I hope we will get some straight answers from the Minister and her officials, that the Bill before us will be the last of its type, and that in the future we will see our financial institutions better managed, better policed and more sturdy. Hopefully we will hear some intelligent comments this afternoon from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), because I am sure he will have a lot to say.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate this morning. I say that recognizing that all of us would rather not ever discuss such issues in that they would never happen; but it seems that ever since I was first elected at the provincial level in 1981 we have not had any more than a couple of weeks go by without having to discuss the failure of a financial institution. I remember that in the 1981 Ontario provincial campaign one of the major issues was the fall of Astra Trust and ReMor, two affiliated financial institutions in Ontario. At that time, the provincial Government told us that never again in this country would we hear about financial institutions collapsing in such a way. Of course, we all know better now. We all know that, unfortunately, financial institutions have had their share of trouble over the past few years. The most famous or infamous of these failures is that involving Crown Trust, Seaway Trust and Greymac Trust in Ontario. We all recall that the owners of those trust companies were participating in some rather incestuous transactions with the depositors' money. Some 10,991 apartments were involved in one group of transactions with the Cadillac-Fairview Company. We remember the effect that had on confidence in our financial institutions.

I had the privilege of being the consumer and corporate affairs critic of the Official Opposition at Queen's Park at the time. Needless to say it kept a number of us busy for quite a long time trying to unravel the mystery which surrounded the way these companies did business. Needless to say, officials are still trying to sort out what happened some two or three years ago. I recall that it was during the debate involving those three companies that the Canada Deposit Insurance guarantees were raised from $20,000 to the $60,000 in force today. That was done by the previous federal Liberal Government.

There are still quite a few issues which we as legislators do not have all the answers to. If we go back to some of the previous failures and the effect they had on investors in this country, we can see that every time these institutions failed, they left a very sad legacy behind. I want to recall the failure of Astra and ReMor, and one particular case involving a farmer who lived in the Brampton area of Ontario. This investor had sold his farm and, like many people, invested the money in what he considered a safe investment. You will recall that some financial institutions in the late 1970s were involved in the selling of investment certificates in organizations that were not really insured as they should have been. In some cases people would walk into the trust company to buy an investment certificate and were promptly offered a certificate in a mortgage company which operated out of the same office, in many cases having the same principals, but not having the same kind of insurance. When investors walked into the trust company the person at the counter would say they could have one of these investments and they would get one quarter of 1 per cent more interest. The customer would ask if this was just as good as the other one, and they were always assured there was nothing wrong with these certificates. They were as good as the Rock of Gibraltar. You could invest in these certificates and make more money. Of course, a retired person is always interested in putting the proceeds of the sale of his farm or small business into something that will give him the best benefit. That is only normal. But people were often taken in this way.

The particular case of the farmer I mentioned a while ago involved a large amount of money, perhaps in the order of $500,000, which was deposited in this particular way. After the failure of that trust and mortgage company, the farmer was left with perhaps $100,000. When he went to reinvest whatever he had salvaged from the previous failures, he got supposedly sound financial advice and was told the best thing he could buy is preferred shares in Crown Trust. Crown Trust, of course, was the most stable financial institution, so he was told, and he just could not go wrong with buying preferred shares. It was much better than buying GICs. In any case, the amount he had to invest was still larger than the then loss guarantee of $20,000. So this individual bought the preferred shares in Crown Trust. When I met this gentleman in my office at Queen's Park he was drawing welfare, his shoes were tied with bailer twine, and I am sure he did not have a cent to his name. He had done nothing wrong. He had not invested his money in weird and unusual schemes. He had every time gone to what was supposed to have been stable financial institutions, and put his money there. But he got burned, not once but twice, and was left with nothing.

I cannot help but feel the same kind of thing for people who not only bought GICs, but those who bought such things as preferred shares in the Pioneer Trust Company and other financial institutions which have had some difficulty lately. That is a large number of people and we sometimes forget about them. Perhaps some people in this House will say that when you buy shares in a company, you are really gambling in a way; you are investing in the stock market and you have to expect that perhaps you will not always be a winner. When you buy preferred shares in a so-called reputable financial institution, the distinction is not always that clear. I am sure there are many people who own preferred shares or other forms of investment in trust companies and other institutions that are insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation who are of the belief that those are insured deposits.

An Hon. Member: They shouldn't be.

Mr. Boudria: I hear an Hon. Member across the way saying that they shouldn't be. There are many things which lead to that kind of confusion. For example, the CDIC logo is right on the door of those institutions. Therefore, why would one not believe that an investment in that particular financial institution, in whatever way, shape, or form, is indeed a guaranteed investment? However, we know that that is not the case. We know that preferred shares are not insured. That distinction is not always easy to make.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, there must be a mechanism through which the consumers would be alerted far more efficiently than they are now. We must tell them what is and what is not insured with regard to investments in those financial institutions. As I said previously, the reputation of the institution is not at stake. As an example, we were led to believe that Crown Trust was one of the most solid institutions in the country and it went down. Actually, it did not quite go down, Mr. Speaker. It was seized by the Province of Ontario, but the net effect was the same. The property of the owners of those shares was expropriated without compensation. The preferred and common shareholders have still not received anything from that company.

A little earlier this year the Auditor General told us that the eventual losses in the case of Crown, Seaway, and Greymac would be in the order of $500 million to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Fund. We also know of people who lost money through investments in preferred shares which were not insured. Many people were deceived by a system which did not properly warn them of the fact that certain things were not guaranteed.

I am of the view that we, as elected people, must send a message that not all investments in CDIC approved institutions are insured. This is not to scare people or erode confidence in our financial institutions, but we must alert the people far better than we do now. When people discover that their investments are not guaranteed, after having seen the logo of CDIC on the door, on certificates, or on leaflets handed out by the financial institution, something has gone wrong. We must have a system which highlights that on those contracts, perhaps with a large stamp on them which says that it is an uninsured deposit or investment from a so-called insured institution. In that way consumers will be aware of what they are getting themselves into.

Unless we do that, Mr. Speaker, we will fail again, as we already have. People will again be in the same situation in which they are now. I do not say this to criticize the present administration. Governments at the federal and provincial levels must instruct and advise consumers better so they do not get taken in as they have in the past.

There is one other issue which we should all remember with regard to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. All people are users of services of banks, trust companies, and other financial institutions that are insured by CDIC. We must remember that funds extended by CDIC for the purpose of reimbursing people are actually tax dollars by another name. If everyone pays for them, they are in fact taxes. We all pay for the failures of those trust companies and other financial institutions. We could convince ourselves that these are not really taxes. They are funds which are paid 25 per cent by depositors and 75 per cent by the banking institutions of which we are all customers. However, that is only a play on words. Since everyone uses those facilities, we are all paying for it in the end. The total loss of those financial institutions is really a loss to the consumers of the country. To call it anything else is to be not entirely honest with ourselves.

Because of the magnitude of these losses, Mr. Speaker, I hope that confidence in financial institutions is not too badly damaged. However, I also hope that consumers of the country will be better informed when they make investments in the financial institutions of our country.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member a question. We are talking about Pioneer Trust. Surely the Member knows that this is only the latest of about a dozen similar cases with trust companies. Does the Member know that in 1962 a royal commission headed by Professor Porter studied problems surrounding trust companies? He warned that since provincial and federal laws, regulations, and monitoring agencies were inadequate, this kind of thing would happen.

Does the Member not believe that a large part of the responsibility for what has happened in these cases should be put on the former federal Government? First, it should have brought in legislation of the type he has spoken about. It should have discussed the bringing in of laws and regulations by the provinces, particularly the Province of Ontario. It should have given the Inspector General the mandate to monitor the trust companies and banks. In that way the Inspector General could have discovered in advance that they were following improper procedures and making risky investments rather than finding out after the fact.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the question of the Hon. Member. First, as the Member knows, we are dealing with areas of mixed jurisdiction. There are trust companies that are incorporated federally and some that are incorporated provincially. We are also dealing with the credit unions and caisses populaires provincially. The Civil Service Co-op is federally incorporated. Therefore, there are a variety of areas of jurisdiction.

I am aware of the Porter Commission report. There was also a provincial report in Ontario in 1980 after the fall of Astra and ReMor. There was also a provincial report started in 1983 in the Province of Ontario that took almost a year to prepare and which made certain recommendations. Frankly, that 1983 provincial report did not address such things as the 10 per cent rule in ownerships of common shares of trust companies such as exist federally for banks. I believe that the absence of such a rule was at least partially the cause of the fall of Crown, Greymac and Seaway. It could almost be said that the owners of some of these companies could use a process by which they could take a depositor's funds and, through a series of flips, convert it into equity in the company. Of course, that benefited the common shareholders in those companies. That is an example of real problems concerning these areas of mixed jurisdiction.

It is as a result of those reports that the federal Government became involved with Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. That corporation which is almost parallel to the CDIC guarantees deposits in caisses populaires and credit unions. In 1981 and 1982, there were several runs on those institutions in industrial towns in Ontario that had severe problems, especially in the housing market. Many of those institutions faced severe difficulty as a result of taking over the buildings and suffering severe losses.

When I was a member of the Ontario Legislature I raised the question of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation giving consumers better warning. I believe it is the responsibility of the Government to ensure that, in the future, consumers are at least given better warning so that they do not experience difficulties such as those that exist today. Obviously this legislation will not prevent financial institutions from collapsing but at least those who have uninsured deposits will be better notified if and when there is a collapse.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have some comments as a result of the Hon. Member's presentation. It is quite clear from the title of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation that it guarantees deposits. It has absolutely nothing to do with equity, preferred stock or any other kind of stock.

The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) advanced a legitimate argument when we were talking about the Commercial Bank some time ago. People might have thought that certain deposits were insured, such as deposits over five years, which were in fact not insured.

In that particular instance, what the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) says is probably quite true. The law should be improved to make sure that people realize that certain types of deposits are not insured by CDIC. However, I submit that his observation that certain people confuse deposits with equity and expect that the CDIC guarantees investments made in common stocks is absolute nonsense. I suggest that every Canadian knows the difference between making a deposit within a deposit-taking institution and investing in equity in that institution in which you become a part owner of that institution. If there is any confusion at all it lies entirely within the mind of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, if I am confused, I know that I am not the only one because the Hon. Member opposite will know that technically, if one puts money in a trust company one is not putting it on deposit but putting it in trust. Technically, the Hon. Member is wrong because one cannot actually put money on deposit in a trust company at all. It can only be put in trust and that is why it is called a trust company. While that may be a technicality, so was the issue raised by the Hon. Member.

The fact is that financial institutions sell certificates for others, sell certificates for longer than a guaranteed period and for amounts larger than the insurable limit. Consumers are not always aware of these matters and I do not believe that is right. While I am not casting blame on anyone for this, I believe the structure should be improved so that consumers are better informed.

The Hon. Member says that it is his view that consumers do not need to be informed when they buy preferred shares in a trust company. Perhaps that is his view of consumer protection but it is not mine.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, first I support the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). In that context I will ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) if his Party would support a substantial review of the role of the Inspector General of Banks with a view to tightening the provisions governing his responsibilities.?

Let me give a case in point. In my constituency the Inspector General of Banks has been virtually powerless to act in a number of cases that have arisen. For example, a man in my riding obtained a loan from a bank under the Small Businesses Loans Act. All correspondence and transactions with the bank and the Government of Canada were pursuant to the Small Businesses Loans Act. This man was in the business of insulating homes with urea formaldehyde foam insulation under the former Liberal Government's UFFI program. When the federal Goverment suddenly snatched the rug from under him, his business declined over a two or three year period. After the bank had seized several of his assets, it only then discovered that the agreement under the Small Businesses Loans Act which had been adhered to by this man and accepted by the federal Government had not been signed by the bank at the time it was providing the loan. It is now considered null and void. Who is to be held responsible? Is it the bank? It is not the Government of Canada, but I hope to effect a change in that respect. The person responsible is the consumer.

The question I am asking the Hon. Member and others is: Would they support a substantial tightening of the regulations and provisions that will give greater authority to the Inspector General of Banks in carrying out his responsibilities?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the Hon. Member on some of the issues he has raised. I am glad to see that he disagrees with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who does not believe that consumer protection should be enhanced in any way but believes in the caveat emptor philosophy.

The Hon. Member is far more progressive than his colleague who is far more conservative. I support the Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco). I have consulted with our critic in this area and it is her view that we should enhance and provide more services to the Inspector General of Banks so that he can better supervise the banks and other financial institutions of this country in order to give better protection to the consumer, as suggested by the Hon. Member, unlike the Member for Western Arctic.

With respect to the UFFI program, I would remind the Hon. Member that the provincial Governments are in charge of the building code and it is up to them to identify whether or not a substance adheres to that code.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap on debate.

• (1230)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): I am pleased to have an opportunity to rise today, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words regarding Bill C-50. This Bill is at the second reading stage and it is at that stage that Members are encouraged to reflect and comment on the principle of the Bill.

I would like to begin by suggesting I have some reluctance to join in the enthusiasm with which we are coming at this Bill. We recognize that for a lot of people it is important to pass this Bill quickly and we are doing it in that context. This is not in any sense to say we are condoning the over-all thrust of this Bill in terms of bailing out another financial institution using taxpayers' money either through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation or in this Case the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan.

I am reading now from a document headed "Pioneer Trust Company". It is an application for a guaranteed income averaging certificate. It was filed by Mr. Raymond Schwartz from Saskatchewan in which he makes a $10,000 deposit to be repaid over a six-year period. By the laws of the land, this particular averaging certificate should not be covered under CDIC. That was a point ably stated by my colleague from Regina. I consider that to be a reasonable policy. However, on this same document it is stamped at the top alongside Pioneer Trust Company "The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation". At the bottom of the page is written "A member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation". In no way while this individual was discussing the return of his investment was he told that it was not covered by the federal deposit insurance scheme.

I might say his investment in this case came from the sale of grain as a western grain producer. He had retired from farming, discontinued his activity, sold off the farm and purchased a number of these guaranteed income averaging certificates to provide him and his family with a monthly income of a few hundred dollars. One of these certificates was for six years, one was for seven years, another for a six-year period and so on. This was done by hundreds of individuals in Saskatchewan at any one of the eleven branches of the Pioneer Trust Company. In every one of those cases, the implication given by the stamp on the document and the comments on the document was that these sums would be protected under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation program.

I think it is also important that we recognize that the individuals completing these forms on behalf of Mr. Schwartz failed to mention that this particular averaging certificate was not covered under CDIC. Again, as a gesture of good faith, one would certainly expect the person involved here—it looks like his name is Denis Delwich—would have mentioned to Mr. Schwartz that this certificate was not covered under the federal deposit insurance scheme, but that was not done, Mr. Speaker.

It is for this reason that we are rushing this Bill through today, to allow Mr. Schwartz and the hundreds of others like him to receive fair compensation for what they considered to be an insurable deposit all along.

In the last few days there have been others in similar situations whose plights have been brought to my attention and who will not be covered under this agreement. This is something we want to flag at the moment. I refer in one case to a recent immigrant to Canada from Hong Kong. This was an individual who had left that part of the world to come to the Canadian prairies to invest in a small business. He brought with him and his family $50,000 in U.S. funds. He opened up an account with Pioneer Trust to deposit those American funds to be used later to invest in a small business. He found out that his American funds were not insured and by the Bill we are debating today he will not be compensated in any form whatsoever. At no time was this individual informed that his deposit made in U.S. funds was not to be covered under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation program. Let us recognize that we are leaving individuals out in the cold.

What we are doing today is bailing out another trust company. We have bailed out over the last three years a dozen trust companies. Some have been very large. I refer to the famous Greymac and Seaway Trust Company bail-out in Ontario. In 1983 the losses to CDIC were in the $650 million range, reflecting a system that is not working well. It reflects a system where the trust companies are not being adequately monitored by the provincial and federal authorities. The superintendent of Insurance responsible for federal trust company monitoring has only a handful of people on his staff, yet he is asked to keep on top of all these firms spread across Canada. He is finding it impossible to do the job that has to be done. These are very turbulent times in the financial community, reflected, as the Minister said earlier, in the introduction of a paper to find new ways and means of making it even more complicated basically in an effort to provide more competition in the financial community. This means that a more onerous task will be before the Superintendent of Insurance and his associate, the Inspector General of Banks. I will have more to say about that a little later.

Some strange signals are being sent out to the financial community these days. On the one hand we see certain trust companies that get themselves into trouble, and the Government steps in and essentially bails out most of the depositors who are not insured. We see other trust companies that experience the same fate and find themselves in financial difficulty. I refer specifically to the Western Capital Trust Company in British Columbia. It found itself in a position where it was forced to wind up. Again, it had a few million dollars in uninsured deposits. There was no effort by the provincial Government in this case or the federal Government to provide any assistance.

In British Columbia we have a group of people involved in the trust company business wondering why it is that the federal Government worked so hard to bail out Greymac and Seaway and other depositors, why the federal Government is working so hard now to bail out the uninsured depositors of Pioneer Trust, yet the federal Government did virtually nothing to bail out the uninsured depositors of Western Capital Trust. We seem to be treating some trust companies differently from others. We seem to be treating some trust companies in some parts of Canada differently from how they are treated in other parts of Canada.

A lot of people are asking questions such as, is there some sense of bias in the Government's reaction to trust companies in difficulty? It is difficult to respond to that allegation other than to suggest that there appears, on the surface at least, to be some discrimination and bias in how trust companies are being treated in different parts of Canada. What about an individual who sells off his or her farm and sees all kinds of forms that call for a guaranteed income averaging certificate, perhaps with the Pioneer Trust Company? It was supported by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. It was not surprising that individual farmers felt that their funds were being adequately protected, that they were guaranteed; they were in trust and they were with the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. They have faith in the financiers who make these arrangements, but the point is that they are not worth the paper they are written on. That is what we are saying about this particular Bill at second reading. We are not protecting depositors across the country. They are not receiving the protection which they have come to expect and for which in fact they are paying through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

If a signal is being sent today, surely it is that we must bring some equal treatment to the matter of "bail-outs" which have now been expanded into the financial community. We became used to the Government deciding which large corporation it would bail out over the years, whether it was Dome Petroleum or Domtar. That tradition continues today: certain firms are bailed out and certain firms are left to the wolves. However, it has now spilled over into the financial community where some trust companies are bailed out and others are not. We see where a western bank got itself into some difficulty, and once again the taxpayers of Canada were called upon to come up with their hard earned tax dollars to bail out a bank in which imprudent loan decisions had obviously been made.

I want to close my remarks so that we can get this matter into committee. There are penetrating questions which must be asked by Hon. Members on all sides of the House. Suffice it to say that I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has considered the signal very carefully. In the proposal to merge the Inspector General of Banks with the Superintendent of Insurance, the Government, in its cutting and government reduction mentality, should see fit to ensure that individuals with the responsibility of monitoring our federally chartered financial institutions have the mandate and the ability in terms of staff to do the job which Canadians expect of them.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I know there is an agreement to finish this Bill at all stages today. It is important for people who have been badly hurt by what happened with this trust company; they deserve the assistance which the provisions of the Bill will give them.

I think we need to put on the record and to make clear that this was not just some accident. It is not an isolated case. In fact, we have experienced a whole series of similar cases going back many years. I should like to list a few of the more recent ones. In 1982, there was the District Trust case in which $44 million was paid out; in 1983, there was Crown Trust, $300 million; in 1983, Greymac Trust, $138 million; in 1983, Seaway Trust, close to $300 million; Seaway Mortgage, $39 million; Greymac Mortgage, $92 million; Fidelity Trust, $184 million; and AMIC Mortgage Investment Corporation, almost $3.5 million. This indicates that we have a very serious problem, a problem which has been known to the provincial and federal Governments at least since 1962 when the Royal Commission on Banking, headed by Professor Porter, looked into the banks and the trust companies. It warned that there were serious deficiencies in the law, in the regulations and the ability of supposed regulatory agencies, both federal and provincial, to deal with the difficulties which might arise before tragedies happen.

In the case of Pioneer Trust, people bought guaranteed investment certificates with the impression that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation guaranteed them. The Company was able to use the seal of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation on the documents it gave to these people. It is not surprising that they thought they were protected. This situation was brought to the attention of the House by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) over a long period of time.

I hope we are today dealing with the first small step in what needs to be done. We will pass legislation now to compensate people who lost as a result of the mismanagement of Pioneer Trust. However, we have to ask ourselves some questions. How many more situations like this will happen? What is wrong with the laws, federal and provincial? What is wrong with the regulations? What is wrong with the officials who are supposed to do the job of monitoring these matters? Are they remiss? Do they not have legal power and authority, or do they just not have the staff?

I understand the Inspector General had a staff of only seven people. How can we blame the Inspector General even if we had the laws, which we do not, even if we had the regulations, which we do not? How could we expect the Inspector General to do the job of protecting the people of Canada with a staff of seven?

One of my Liberal colleagues from Ontario said earlier that part of the problem was divided jurisdiction. Of course that creates problems, but if the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is expected, as it has been, to put up money for the losses, it seems to me that it should not be that difficult for the Government of Canada through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to say to the provinces which issue charters to trust companies that it will not guarantee those trust companies. It should not be difficult for the Government of Canada to say that it will not pay the losses unless they pass legislation giving the provincial organizations which monitor these institutions the power and the ability staff-wise to do so. If we are to have repeated failures in Ontario or in any other province, the federal Government and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation have the right and responsibility to say to the Province of Ontario, or to whichever province is involved, that it was to get its act in order or the Government will not bail them out.

The losses which CDIC, the federal Government or the provinces pay in fact come from the people of Canada, either in the form of taxation or, if the banks pay the losses through higher premiums to CDIC, they collect the money in turn from their customers. We are talking about losses which the people of Canada have had to meet amounting to at least $2 billion. That ought not to have happened, should not happen in the future, and will not happen if the federal and provincial Governments pass legislation to establish the kind of regulatory agencies which are needed.

For the first time in many years we have a bank in trouble, the Canadian Commercial Bank, into which we have now put somewhere in the neighbourhood $500 million to $600 million to save it and its depositors. Not only did the officials in government who should have known not know, but as well the Inspector General and the Governor of the Bank of Canada stated, two months before we were told that the Canadian Commercial Bank needed a tremendous infusion of money or it would go bankrupt that the Canadian Commercial Bank was on a sound financial basis. What is wrong? Surely the Inspector General and the Governor of the Bank of Canada should have known the facts. If they did not know the facts, we are indeed in real trouble.

In the case of Pioneer Trust, it was public knowledge for some considerable time that this trust company was in trouble, but neither the Department of Insurance nor the Government seemed to be able to step in to stop the collapse. In this instance, the federal Government knew well in advance of the difficulties, but left it to the Government of Saskatchewan to effect a bail-out which, of course, never happened. I say that the federal Government should have been more insistent about this trust company. It should have known that this company, like Fidelity Trust, Greymac and Crown Trust, had involved itself in highly speculative loans.

This is a very serious matter. They had involved themselves in loans to major shareholders in the trust companies who were also involved in very highly speculative business operations such as real estate and oil and gas speculation. There was no arm's length look at this. Senior officials such as the Inspector General and the Governor of the Bank of Canada should have warned the Government and the Government should have taken action.

We are going to support this Bill, but I want to say to the Minister that if the record of the federal and provincial Governments is such that we have had a whole series of disasters such as bankruptcies of trust companies and now a bank, and the federal and provincial Governments did not have the legal power or monitoring agencies with the authority and staff to see what was happening, and we now have to put in somewhere in the neighbourhood of $2 billion to rescue those who have been hurt, I am very suspicious of what she is proposing for financial institutions in the future. The disaster could be much greater than what has happened with these trust companies or this small bank and could have much more serious implications for this country. If we cannot manage these, I am very skeptical that we will be able to manage better the much more complicated and greater institutions which she foresees for the future financial world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-50, an Act to provide for the continuance of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could call it one o'clock? Noting that it is just about lunch-time, I would like to call it one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF BUDGET CUTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party was clobbered soundly last Thursday in Ontario for a number of reasons, one of them being its handling of the environment. The cuts made by provincial government Ministers to environment programs upset a lot of people. Their delay in proclaiming the Spills Bill cost them a great deal of support when the PCB spill occurred in Kenora. Their ineptness in controlling the movement of toxic waste material once it enters Ontario must be added to that list. Add also their decision to privatize provincial parks, thus commercializing areas that were never meant to be commercialized. Add also their lack of a sound sense of priorities when they found money for the purchase of Suncor but not for the cleanup of Toronto's beaches, or for improving municipal sewer systems across Ontario.

We on this side of the House urge the so-called Progressive Conservative Government in Ottawa to learn a lesson from what happened to their Ontario cousins, and to stop the nonsense of cutting the environment budget, restore the wildlife service, restore environmental research-oriented programs to their original strength, and give environment issues the attention and priority the Canadian public expects from the Government of Canada.

SPORTS

THUNDER BAY TWINS—ALLAN CUP HOCKEY CHAMPIONS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Thunder Bay sports fans welcomed home another winning team on Saturday evening. The Thunder Bay Twins succeeded last Friday in winning the Allan Cup in Corner Brook, Newfoundland. The victory established the western Canada champs as the best senior hockey team in Canada for the second year.

The Twins came from behind one more time to win this final series. In each of three previous series this spring, the Thunder Bay team lost early games, but won four and three games straight to achieve victory. Again this time they were down three games in a best of seven series, and were forced to win four straight games, far from home, in order to keep the Allan Cup in Thunder Bay. This victory marks the seventh time the Allan Cup has been won by a Lakehead team since 1925. It is also the first time in 51 years that the same team has won two years in succession.

Thunder Bay is proud of the Twins. We recognize the determination required to keep a senior hockey team playing in our smaller cities and towns. We appreciate the determination required to organize leagues and to provide a high level of competition. We applaud the victories that reward this determination.

HELSINKI ACCORDS

HOSTING OF CONFERENCE IN CANADA

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, for those who care about human rights issues around the world, tomorrow is an historic day. Canada will host a conference of experts representing 35 countries which signed the Helsinki Accords. The final planning for this conference, which will last six or seven weeks, starts tomorrow.

The results of this conference will impact strongly on the hearts and minds of many people around the world. Many communities have suffered for years, and some for decades, from human rights violations.

Some members of this conference will address issues against Soviet bloc countries. We should remember, however, that the record of some western countries is not unblemished. Therefore it is essential to establish a proper tone and climate on the eve of this conference. New initiatives of trust, co-operation, and conciliation are essential if we truly desire thoughtful, sensitive, solutions to human rights violations. I know the Hon. Members of this House recognize the complexities of such a conference. We wish the participants Godspeed in their deliberations.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PURPOSE OF SYSTEM

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the original concept behind unemployment insurance might well have made sense, but today it has become a welfare program rather than an insurance program. Increasing numbers of people regard the fund as something to be tapped on a regular basis, rather than something to be drawn upon as a last resort.

Many people expect, as a matter of course, to draw unemployment insurance for several months every year, and those whose pride would formerly have prevented them from making unnecessary claims now wonder out loud why they should not also recover some of their own premiums when so many others are milking the system.

The unemployment insurance account has to be provided with funds from general tax revenues. Administration costs are close to $1 billion per year. Premiums are ever increasing, and are becoming a distinct disincentive to employment. When, in his forthcoming Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) looks for areas in which government finances can be improved, he might do well to look at the unemployment insurance system.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

RESULTS OF ONTARIO ELECTION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, "Fight on my men," said Sir Andrew Barton, "I am somewhat hurt, but I am not slain. I will lie down and bleed a while and then I'll rise and fight again".

Let those who said the Liberals were dead stand up and face the facts. Last Thursday the people of Ontario spoke loud and clear. Ontarians said no to empty rhetoric, to broken promises, and to disappearing Premiers. Not even a personal appearance by "Brian the Wonderful" could save the day.

The results of the popular vote favoured not the Tories, not their propped-up friends the NDP, but favoured the Liberals. Cabinet Ministers went down to defeat to the tune of Another One Bites the Dust. Now across Ontario we hear Tories humming the lovesick blues.

Liberalism is alive and well. Liberalism is growing. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said it some months ago, and he was right. So disgusted were the people that even in Brampton, home of that great ambassador of acid rain, "Dollar-a-Year Bill", the Tories were rejected.

What will happen to the Tories and to "Miller Time"? In a quote attributed to her by The Toronto Sun, the wife of the former Prime Minister, Maureen McTeer, perhaps said it best when she said: "You're asking me what Tories do to their leaders when they lose?"

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED RAINY RIVER PARK

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, government cut-backs have struck again. Economic development, jobs, tourism about which the Government talked so much, and human concerns, have come up again in second spot. Plans for a national historic park on the Rainy River which would preserve the historic Manitou Mounds near Fort Frances have been put on hold by the federal Government. This burial mounds site is believed to be the only existing example in Canada of mounds from the early Laurel culture, and is the northermost mounds complex on the continent.

The mounds complex is being eroded by the Rainy River, and an adjacent ancient village site is deteriorating because of a gravel pit operation. I call upon the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) to go ahead with Parks Canada's plans to establish a national park there. These mounds have great spiritual and historic significance, and a park will also provide employment, economic development, and tourism benefits to the Rainy River Indian Band and the entire Fort Frances area.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TURKISH-CYPRIOT CONSTITUTION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's news that Turkish Cypriots had overwhelmingly approved a new constitution for the self-proclaimed Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus is most disturbing, particularly for Canadians of Greek origin, many of whom came here from Cyprus and still have relatives living there.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that since Turkey invaded Cyprus in 1974, the island has been divided into a Greek sector and a Turkish sector, separated only by a United Nations peacekeeping force that includes 515 Canadian soldiers. Turkey is the only country that recognizes the northern Cyprus Turkish Republic which declared independence from the Cypriot Government in 1983. Eleven years after the invasion, there are still 20,000 Turkish troops in the Turkish sector, 200,000 refugees in the Greek sector, and thousands of Cypriots missing and unaccounted for.

Hopes for a settlement soared last January when the U.N. Secretary General held negotiations with Cypriot leaders. Unfortunately, those talks failed. Now there is a new Turkish-

Cypriot constitution that makes no mention of the possibility of a unified Cyprus. In the light of this new development I call upon our Government and the United Nations to renew their efforts without further delay to bring about an end to the stalemate, the removal of all foreign troops, and a united Cyprus.

HELSINKI ACCORDS

CANADA HOSTING CONFERENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, in 1975, 35 nations signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, better known as the Helsinki Accords. The guiding principles of the Helsinki Accords were to establish security in Europe and to promote mutual co-operation in the areas of economics, science, technology, the environment, and humanitarian concerns.

Canada is host to the CSCE Conference which begins this week. As representatives from the 35 nations gather in Ottawa it is incumbent upon the Canadian delegation to make every effort and take every opportunity to strengthen international peace. Special emphasis must be put on family reunification and human rights. Multilateral responsibility and accountability are the binding tenet of this international agreement. It is Canada's right and moral duty to help bring about greater mutual trust and understanding and to help secure the delicate balance of peace.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—TICKET AGENTS' STRIKE

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Government, which was so quick in appointing its friends and supporters to the board of Air Canada, has been less than speedy in ensuring that the current strike of Air Canada ticket agents is brought to a just and equitable solution. After the federal mediator in the dispute failed to bring the two parties together, one might have expected the Government to step in, particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), to see that air travel continues to run smoothly. The Government, however, seems more concerned with providing party hacks with cushy patronage jobs than with standing up for the rights of these employees of Air Canada.

As we all know, Air Canada wants to do away with thousands of full-time jobs. It wants to increase the percentage of its part-time workers to 45 per cent of its total work force. Most of its ticket agents are women, many of whom are single and who rely on their jobs to provide them with a steady income on which to live. In a time when government ostensibly wants to increase the number of women in the workplace, we have the example of Air Canada which, in a very arbitrary and high-handed manner, has moved to decrease the number of full-time jobs for a great many of its female employees.

The strike of Air Canada's ticket agents is just. These workers are simply fighting for the right to earn a decent living. The Government, by its inertia and inactivity, would appear to be denying the ticket agents of Air Canada this most basic human right. Surely the Government and the Minister of Transport must quickly move to end a costly strike, and see that the employees of its Crown Corporation are treated with dignity, respect, and fairness.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—SUCCESS OF TEAM CANADA

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members of this House will want to join me today in praising the remarkable performance of Team Canada at this year's world hockey championships in Prague.

The members of the Canadian team played as a tight unit with great determination and enthusiasm, all of which helped them to return to this country with the silver medal for which they worked so hard.

Mr. Speaker, to find a parallel, we have to go back as far as 1962 in Colorado Springs. As we all know, conditions are particularly difficult for our Canadian players during these world championships. Coming from various teams in the National Hockey League, the players get together just before the beginning of the first game. After an exhausting and stressful regular season, they have to draw on their last reserves of energy and determination to put on a good show in a world championship series where the competition is becoming increasingly fierce.

Our Canadian players have more than earned our congratulations, and we are particularly proud of the fact that they defeated the Russians and also of the determination with which they played in the final game against Czechoslovakia, when they played valiantly up to the very last minute. Mr. Speaker, the members of Team Canada have every reason to be proud.

Finally, I have some words of special praise for Mario Lemieux, a 19-year-old Quebec hockey player who was selected as one of the players on the second team of stars. To all members of Team Canada, we say: Well done and thank you!

PARLIAMENT HILL

END OF PEACE CAMP

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, for more than two years a group of Canadians have been maintaining a vigil on Parliament Hill to protest Canada's decision to aid the arms race by permitting Cruise missile testing within our borders, and to express their concern about nuclear devastation. Most recently, Mr. Speaker, that group in the Peace Camp has been voicing the concerns of millions of Canadians over President Reagan's star wars project, a $30-billion initiative which will escalate the arms race, jeopardize the anti-ballistic missile treaty, and gravely destabilize the military balance between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The people of the Peace Camp have been exceptionally well received, both by the public and by people who pass near the Centennial Flame on Parliament Hill. They have weathered rain, snow, bitter winter weather and harsh conditions, to carry on their protest. The one thing the Peace Camp could not withstand, Mr. Speaker, was the opposition of an unfeeling Government which cared more about good housekeeping than it cared about peace. I record with regret the decision of members of the Peace Camp that, in view of the Government's intransigence, they are bringing their demonstration to an end. They have been forced out by a set of Draconian regulations which now permit the Government to stop any demonstration on Parliament Hill, with heavy fines as a penalty.

While the Peace Camp has disbanded, the concern for peace which it symbolized lives on in the hearts of almost all Canadians. On behalf of my Party and of this House, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the people of the Peace Camp for their witness to peace.

BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO EXTERNAL AID

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister, but I would first like to welcome him back to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: If he had done as he had been well advised to do, stick with the agenda and deal with environmental questions and foreign aid, I think I would have been more than pleased to congratulate him on achieving something like that. But in the words of John Fraser, a Globe and Mail correspondent, today:

> But the hype and silliness around the concept of the The Great Conciliator, which the Prime Minister unwisely fuels, undermines his real, albeit modest accomplishments.

I would like to tell the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, that his success at Bonn is a bit similar to the success of the Miller and Mulroney show in Toronto last week.

Seriously, I would like to say to the Prime Minister that we subscribe to his goal to urge the developed nations to put more money into foreign aid. In the light of what the Prime Minister discussed in Bonn, is it the intention of the Government to reinstate the money which was cut from foreign aid last fall in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for his warm welcome. I am reluctant, of course, to take issue with anything written by such a distinguished journalist as Mr. Fraser of The Globe and Mail, but my hon. friend would forgive me in the circumstances, because of his question, for pointing out the entirely different versions which appeared in the front pages of the New York Times, and le Figaro, as well as a direct statement by the President of France, who said that the Prime Minister of Canada, and our delegation, played a very important role at that conference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: All we did was follow in the distinguished role of previous Canadian leaders, including my hon. friend when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canada has consistently played, I think, a helpful and useful role.

With regard to the direct question, we were, I think, helpful in securing the third window with which my hon. friend is acquainted, and which would be very helpful to developing countries. And we have no intention of doing anything other than continuing in that vein of being helpful, financially and otherwise, to developing countries around the world.

EXTERNAL AID

NICARAGUA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister would be well advised to speak to his Minister of Finance and re-establish the goals announced by the Canadian Government, namely, that we were going to spend 0.7 per cent of Canada's GNP on foreign aid. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether communications with President Reagan have deteriorated to the point that the Prime Minister is no longer notified of decisions that shock Canadians, such as the embargo on trade with Nicaragua, especially since last year in the House, he said it was an insult that President Reagan had not given the Prime Minister advance notice of the invasion of Grenada? Does the Prime Minister not think he should take the same position on this latest decision, where the economic survival of the poor people of Nicaragua is at stake?

● (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my hon. friend. We have done much more than that. The Hon. Member is referring to a matter of form, but I would prefer to discuss the substance of the issue, which is far more important to the Members of this House. The U.S. Government unilaterally announced its intention to impose an embargo on trade with Nicaragua. Canada has taken a position against such action, and announced that it is neither in the interests of Canada nor consistent with our traditions. I think all Members of this House would agree with this position, which has been taken internationally.

[English]

GOVERNMENT STATEMENTS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is completely in accord with that position which was supported by the three Parties in this House and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, why did the Prime Minister, in Bonn, take a stand which would humiliate the Secretary of State for External Affairs, saying that he did not agree with him that Canada should have been informed? Who is speaking for Canada when we are talking in this House and abroad about external affairs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think I just dealt with what is the important question, the question of substance. The Government of Canada, notwithstanding an initiative announced in Bonn by the President concerning their intention to impose a trade embargo on Nicaragua, indicated we were in disagreement with that move, we would not subscribe to that view, and we would oppose it because it was not in the Canadian national interest. I would hope that all Members of this House would applaud that declaration of independence in foreign policy by the Government of Canada.

With regard to questions that were asked, they were asked in different contexts and there was nothing said, if you care to examine the record—no, I said if you care to examine the record, not The Toronto Star.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: La Presse. Globe and Mail.

Mr. Gauthier: How about The Toronto Sun?

Mr. Mulroney: If you care to examine the record you will find that what the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I said was completely consistent and in the national interests of Canada.

BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE RELATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The failure of the Bonn Summit to arrive at any specific timetable on multilateral trade negotiations, I think he would agree, raises the real potential of a U.S. trade war which would have a great deal of serious impact on Canada. The Prime Minister is quoted again this morning, in a newspaper of record, as saying that he would be assured by President Reagan that Canada would be given special exemptions, otherwise, I think his words were, "we can cut him up into little pieces". I am afraid his friends in the United States have already started the cutting process because a week ago the Secretary of the Treasury, James Baker, said in a briefing to Canada journalists that President Reagan would not ask for special exemptions for Canada.

Can the Prime Minister explain this major contradiction between his statement and that of the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury? Can he tell us what guarantees President Reagan gave him that we would get special exemptions?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Run for Congress, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: Can he tell us why he is so sure that Congress will listen to President Reagan and give us those special exemptions, or when can we start cutting him into little pieces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My hon. friend raises some important questions. I cannot give him a guarantee that Congress will respond to President Reagan on any given subject. He might want to ask him the next time he sees him. I cannot give that guarantee, nor can I explain each and every statement made by an American official. I can tell him that this Government recognizes the importance of our trading relationship with the U.S. Over three million Canadian jobs depend on maintaining the excellence of that relationship.

Why we worked so hard with everyone else to try to avoid a breakdown of a new GATT round is precisely because of the spectre raised by my hon. friend, where there might not be a U.S. trade war but a breakdown in efforts toward liberalization of commerce and trade which are to the advantage of all the democratic countries.

We take this very seriously and we worked very hard to make that point because of Canada's national interests and our international obligations, and there is no inconsistency at all as far as Canada is concerned.

GERMAN AND JAPANESE ISSUES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have to say to the Prime Minister that there is a major problem if this Government is assuming that President Reagan is going to speak for it, yet his Secretary of the Treasury says he will not. I think it is very important that this be clarified, and I ask him if he intends to clarify what the American position will be.

Furthermore, I would like to raise with him the assurances given in this House by the Deputy Prime Minister last week that the Prime Minister would undertake specific representations on behalf of Canada, in his role as the great negotiator, with the Japanese Prime Minister concerning Japanese automobile import guarantees, and with the West Germans on the problem of overfishing in Canadian waters. Did the Prime Minister speak specifically to the leaders of those two countries, and have we new agreements, or guarantees, or assurances from them that they will act in the Canadian interest and, if that is the case, why are the West Germans still fishing in Canadian waters at this very time that we speak? When is the Prime Minister going to put his great negotiating talents to work for Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are two questions. Did I speak to the Chancellor of West Germany with regard to overfishing off the coast of Newfoundland? And the answer is yes, I did. I explained the Canadian position and advised him that the Minister of Fisheries would be there shortly hopefully to resolve this in an amicable way, as the Hon. Member would want.

With regard to the question of meeting with the Japanese Prime Minister, on a number of occasions I pointed out to him the growing problem in Canada, in Ontario in particular, and I laid out some thoughts for his consideration about further Japanese investment in Ontario specifically, and in Canada generally, in this regard, including joint ventures where we could create jobs and where there might be easier access for Japanese and Canadian products to the American market. I invited him to consider, in a very specific way, some major Japanese investments in Canada. To this end, I am going to Calgary next week to speak to 400 community leaders from Japan, to encourage them to maintain their investment plans in Canada.

I can assure the Hon. Member that I took a very strong position on behalf of the automobile and parts manufacturers with the Prime Minister of Japan, as I did on behalf of the East Coast fishermen with the Chancellor of the West German Republic.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and also concerns the Summit. Following the Summit, President Mitterand of France announced that his Government, having considered the star wars project of President Reagan, came down on the negative side and decided not to participate. Did the Prime Minister use this occasion to discuss this project with President Reagan, and in the context of those discussions did he use the opportunity to tell President Reagan, one way or another, what the decision of the Government of Canada was?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of the Strategic Defence Initiative was naturally discussed informally among Heads of Government and Foreign Ministers. I indicated to Mr. Shultz there, as I have done indirectly through statements in this House and across Canada, that the Government of Canada was considering the invitation to participate in research and would announce that decision when our own inquiries and consultations had concluded, on our own timetable, in our own interests.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I take it, unless the Prime Minister corrects the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that a decision has not yet been reached.

My supplementary question is then directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. Could he tell the House if the National Research Council of Canada has been instructed in any way to participate in the star wars project?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INVESTIGATE SITUATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Well then, my final question is directed to the Prime Minister, and I hope he will deal with it. I recently received a letter from a former senior scientist who worked for the Government of Canada, and he has informed me that just the opposite prevails. I have subsequently confirmed the authorship and contents of the letter with him on the telephone. He has said that the Government has not only made a decision to participate, but has done so in the context of assigning a leading role to the National Research Council. I would like to read a short part of the letter to the Prime Minister and ask him to respond. He writes:

● (1430)

—the National Research Council has already been informed that Canada will participate in the American program of research for star wars, and that the National Research Council will act as the point of contact in Canada for co-operation between the two countries.

Mr. Mulroney: Who signed it?

Mr. Broadbent: I will be happy to provide the information to the Prime Minister. Given the seriousness of what this former distinguished scientist for the Government of Canada has said, will the Prime Minister undertake a personal investigation into this?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to undertake an investigation, provided the Member would identify who signed the letter. With deference to the individual, who is no doubt distinguished, the facts are completely at variance with the contents of that letter.

INTEREST RATES ISSUE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since high interest rates are the greatest obstacle to sustained non-inflationary growth, can the Prime Minister tell the House why the issue of interest rates was not prominent at the Bonn Summit, and why he did not join with other world leaders in pressing President Reagan to agree to a world monetary conference?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question of interest rates was a very prominent one. It took up a considerable amount of time during the discussions among Finance Ministers.

With regard to the specific question about a world monetary conference, a report will be presented to Finance Ministers of the Group of Ten countries in Tokyo on June 21, I believe. Subsequent to that, there will be discussion of that report in different countries. It will be discussed further in Seoul at the IMF meetings. I imagine that there will be a decision taken at those meetings on how that matter will be dealt with further in the new year.

CONFERENCE COMMUNIQUE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the communiqué issued at the conclusion of the Summit does not mention any joint undertaking to lower interest rates. Obviously any country that moves alone to lower its interest rates will see an exodus of capital in search of a higher return. It is presumably for this reason that in Washington last month the Minister of Finance stressed the importance of lowering real interest rates on a world-wide basis. Why was the consistency of this position not maintained in Bonn?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to dig for something that simply was not there. The importance of interest rates, and of lowering them, was widely recognized. For that reason the time we spent discussing interest rates was quite considerable.

As the Hon. Member knows, you cannot simply wave a wand and say that interest rates will drop. However, if industrialized countries collectively introduce those policies which will lead to lower inflation, that in turn will lead to lower interest rates. That is the direction we are embarked upon.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It follows up on the question asked by my Leader with respect to possible instructions to the National Research Council for participation in the American star wars project.

The letter which my Leader referred to indicates that the NRC has been instructed to find $6 million for the purpose of star wars research, despite the very sharp cuts imposed on the NRC last fall. Will the Minister inform the House whether such instructions have been given to the NRC, or has it been told to set aside $6 million, or some other amount, for star wars, in the event that the Government's decision is positive?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and his Leader are on little more than a fishing trip. In fact the NRC is hard enough pressed to find funds for its existing programs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: That's right.

Mr. Siddon: The question is totally hypothetical and based on fiction rather than fact.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister neglected to say that it is the cuts imposed by his Government which have backed the NRC into that kind of a corner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

USE OF COUNCIL FUNDS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My Party and I hope that there will not be a positive decision on Canadian co-operation in the star wars project. However, in that event could the Minister assure the House that there will be no cuts in Canadian Government spending on research and development in existing programs in order to pay for the militarization of our defence efforts in participation in star wars?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the National Research Council is doing an outstanding job with the funds it has been voted by this Parliament. Any further use of those funds along the line suggested is a completely hypothetical fabrication of the Member's imagination.

CALGARY OLYMPICS—LEGAL WORK CONTRACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is with regard to his brother, Peter, who has been awarded all outside legal work for the Calgary Olympics.

I know that the Minister will say that this is not patronage, a conflict of interest, or Tory porkbarrelling, and that his brother, Peter, was appointed because he is a good, conscientious lawyer, and has an intimate knowledge of Olympic law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: For the record, I would like to ask the Minister why the existing Olympics lawyer, Rob Rowley, was fired and replaced by his brother, Peter. Did the appointment have anything whatsoever to do with the fact that his brother, Peter, is the federal fund raising director for the Conservative Party in the Province of Alberta?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that matter comes within my jurisdiction as Minister of Justice. It has nothing to do with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, I doubt, knows anything about the matter as he is not concerned with legal matters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That's right.

Mr. Crosbie: I get the impression, Mr. Speaker, that the question is not for the purpose of getting information, but to allow that crowd of hyenas to jeer, laugh, and roar.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: If the question is for the purpose of obtaining information, I can inform the House that I appoint legal agents for the Department of Justice. In October I appointed Mr. Peter Clark to provide legal advice with respect to documents associated with the funding of the Olympic Winter Games, capital contribution agreements, and other such work.

I knew the hon. gentleman would have some interest in this matter, he having been on the phone poking around Calgary. I had a report from my officials. They report that they are extremely pleased with the legal service provided by Mr. Clark, who will continue to provide them no matter what innuendo or insinuations the hon. gentleman brings forward in his usual rodent-like fashion.

REASONS FOR APPOINTMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are not laughing because they were hoodwinked by the Conservative Party on the issue of patronage. They said it was wrong then, but now they are saying it is right.

The question is, why brother Peter in this particular case? I would like the secretary of State for External Affairs to stand up and speak for himself.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has no jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order! order! I can stand here until all Members on both sides quieten down. May I remind the Member for the record that questions to the Ministry are put in their capacity as Ministers of their Departments. That is the only question that is appropriate in the House. I simply remind the Member of that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He doesn't care about the rules.

Mr. Nunziata: Would the Minister not agree that Peter Clark, the brother of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, was given the government hand-out only because of the brotherly relationship, and only because he is a loyal Tory fund raiser? Would he not agree that this is a blatant and obvious conflict of interest, and Tory patronage?

• (1440)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it ill behooves a member of a Party that fired 26 Liberal MPs onto the bench and onto various positions in the Civil Service, including the Livestock Feed Board, which is where they belong, to question the appointment of legal agents. This is not patronage; this is the appointment of a lawyer to carry out certain very involved legal matters, to assist the Department in involved legal matters concerning the Olympics.

It is not patronage. The Secretary of State for External Affairs probably knew nothing about it, and I do not intend to penalize the brother of the Secretary of State for External Affairs just because he is the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

An Hon. Member: What about Sheila's mother?

Mr. Crosbie: Is she a lawyer?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

Ms. Jewett: Talk about the pot calling the kettle black. The Liberals are just jealous, obviously.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

UNITED STATES EMBARGO ON NICARAGUA—CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I wish to return to the position he took at the Summit regarding what is really America's disastrous policy vis-à-vis Nicaragua and the trade embargo. The Prime Minister said that he did not even discuss it with the American President because he had covered Canada's position on American policy in Nicaragua at the Quebec City Summit.

In view of the fact that this has taken place since the Summit, why did the Prime Minister not raise, as forcefully as possible with the President, the really disastrous consequences of the trade embargo not only for Canada but for the United States and, above all, Nicaragua? Why did he not press the President on this issue? Will he still do so before the embargo goes into effect tomorrow?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I raised the question of the American actions regarding Nicaragua, at length and vigorously, with the U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. Schultz. I indicated to him, as I indicated publicly earlier that, while that might be American policy, it was not Canadian and it was not policy that Canada could accept.

I expressed our concern about the impact that might have upon the Contadora process which we believe is the most likely process to bring stability to that region. I made it quite clear that Canada expected assurances that there would be no effect, upon Canadian exports, of the American sanctions.

Before leaving Bonn I received from the Secretary of State, and my colleague, the Minister of Finance, received from the Secretary of the Treasury, assurances that the American actions will not affect Canadian exports to Nicaragua.

We intend to carry on the policy that we had carried on toward Nicaragua before. We will contribute, and continue to maintain our trade relations. My colleague, the Minister for External Relations, will continue the trip that she has planned to that region in June.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, that is all very well, but we want to know why the Prime Minister did not, and will not today, say directly and forecfully to the President of the United States that the policy being followed is disastrous not just from the point of view of our interests but the point of view of the security of this whole hemisphere, by the escalation of East-West conflict in throwing Nicaragua into the arms of the Eastern bloc? Why does he not say it forcefully now, and why did he not do so at the time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of Canada was made forcefully at the time. The Prime Minister and the President knew that I had made that position forcefully, to use the Hon. Member's words, to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Broadbent: Why did the Prime Minister dismiss it then?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Now the Leader of the NDP is helping out his foreign affairs critic.

It is the position of this Government that if a position is made clearly and articulately by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as this one was—

Ms. Jewett: Did you speak to the President?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —there is not a need for that position to be repeated by the Prime Minister.

The other point that I want to make is that our interest here—I hope that it is the interest of all Members of the House—is in moving toward a situation not only of some stability in Central America but also a situation where there might be some addressing of the elemental problems of hunger and poverty that are at the base of concerns there. That will be accomplished only if this Government, and other Governments, are prepared to make our positions known clearly and firmly and are also prepared to resist the temptation, after the issue has been made known clearly and firmly, to seek inflammatory forums, in the House of Commons or elsewhere.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CALGARY OLYMPICS—LEGAL APPOINTMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Conservative patronage family compact has graduated from Ministers' brothers-in-law last week to Ministers' brothers this week. My question concerns the affair between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his brother, Peter, with respect to that appointment in Alberta.

In view of the fact that the Government's expenditures on this particular contract involve some $300 million and that this particular award is indeed very lucrative for the solicitor in question, and in view of the fact that the political responsibility for this lies with the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, will the Minister tell the House if he discussed any potential conflict of interest with Mr. Peter Clark, his colleague, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, and/or the Prime Minister of this country, before this job was awarded?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen, as usual, are straining at gnats. They are not very successful at straining at gnats.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Gnats or nets?

Mr. Crosbie: G-n-a-t-s. You would look it up in the dictionary under N, but it's G.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Peter Clark is a practising barrister and solicitor in Calgary. He was appointed by me because I knew that he had the capability, legal knowledge, and the skill to do this work properly.

He was appointed in the same way as other people were appointed to do work in connection with the Olympic business in Calgary heretofore. I might say that the rate of pay that he has accepted is most reasonable, even being a little under what the person was receiving who had done some of that work earlier.

The whole matter is quite above ground, and I think it is in very poor taste for you to try to embarrass the Secretary of State for External Affairs because a member of his family practises his profession, as he is doing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Boudria: This appointment would qualify for the patronage of the week award—the paw award.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In July, 1984, the Prime Minister said:

> I think what took place is completely unacceptable in an open democratic society. We are going to reform this instrument in our national life.

Does the Minister believe that that statement attributed to his Leader is still accurate and, if so, what will he do to stop this blatant abuse of power on the part of the Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there was a wholesale raiding of the ranks of Liberal MPs to put them on the bench, to put them in the Senate, and put them on the Livestock Feed Board, last June. The hon. gentleman could do a lot in connection with the situation that he decries if he would produce the letter that his Leader said that he had been sent by his predecessor. If that letter could be produced he would strike a blow for freedom in the Liberal Party. Why does he not get after his own Leader?

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the riding of Terrebonne have been asking me the same question for several weeks now. They want to know exactly when the next Budget will be brought down. I imagine this situation is not unique to my riding and, Mr. Speaker, I think it proves that Canadians are concerned about the economy of their country.

My question to the Minister is as follows: Could he inform the House exactly when the new Budget is to be brought down?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the concerns of the constituents of my hon. colleague from Terrebonne, and I am sure that the Budget I shall be bringing down within a few weeks will be a very good Budget for all the economic problems this country is facing. Today, Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to announce that the Budget will be brought down on Thursday, May 23, 1985.

FINANCE

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Minister is aware of the article in this weekend's Globe and Mail which revealed that some $2.8 billion has now been lost because of the scientific research tax credit scam. The article also reveals that senior officials of National Revenue have been aware that, in spite of the moratorium imposed on the credit last fall, the moratorium has been consistently violated by the tax credit users which overwhelmingly are the largest corporations. Why has the Minister done nothing to terminate this obvious rip-off?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that last fall we moved very quickly to terminate what was the most obvious, to use the Hon. Member's expression, rip-off of this scientific research tax credit approach. I think the Hon. Member must be conscious of the fact that it was not just the large companies that were taking advantage of this. A lot of small companies were receiving a lot of benefit from obtaining access to very sorely needed funds to finance very good projects in research and development.

I read that particular article myself. I will look at it closely to see whether there is anything in there of which I am not aware. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing the matter to my attention.

AMOUNT OF REVENUE LOSS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. On November 28, I asked the Minister of National Revenue whether he would immediately impose a complete moratorium on the grandfather clause which left the door open to abuse of Canadian taxpayers' money. Since the Government has lost ten times more than was originally estimated in the Lalonde Budget on the R & D tax credits, will the Minister close the loophole and table the full revenue loss from the R & D tax credit immediately?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to disagree publicly with the Hon. Member. I think he should be very cautious about taking information that is in a Globe and Mail article and translating it immediately into the truth.

I am looking at the matter carefully and if there is any announcement that should be made, I will make it. In the meantime I would caution him that there are a number of small research and development oriented companies that are benefiting from this tax procedure, and it is generating some job creating research and development which is helpful to the country.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

POLICE DIFFICULTIES IN APPLYING PROVISIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. The Minister is aware that because of Section 38 of the Young Defenders Act, the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department has been unable to warn the public adequately of the identity of a 17-year old who escaped custody after being charged with armed robbery with a sawed-off shotgun. The Metropolitan Toronto Police Department is most concerned about the danger to the public. Will the Minister agree to meet without delay the chief of police of Metropolitan Toronto, and or with the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs, in order to discuss their concern about the Young Offenders Act?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with some of the chiefs of police before. I would welcome the opportunity to meet with them again to discuss this matter.

Oral Questions

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TAX DISCOUNTERS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In April he met with a consumers' affairs group from Quebec, l'association coopérative d'économie familiale de Québec. At that time he told them he would move soon to stop the rip-off of low income Canadians by tax discounters. I want to remind the Minister that the majority of those affected are Canadians with incomes under $8,000 a year. The majority are on welfare, or on unemployment insurance. The Minister has done nothing since that time. Why has the Minister done nothing? Why does he not move now to stop the rip-off of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money that should go to these low-income Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the Hon. Member that we have completed our consultation sessions and expect to produce a consultation paper within the next few weeks. Subsequently, we shall be receiving comments and we shall act on those comments.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot get away with consulting any longer. He has heard from the National Anti-poverty Organization. He has heard from the Consumers Association of Canada. Throughout this year consumers associations from coast to coast have told the Minister exactly what they want. The Minister has done nothing.

Mr. Crosbie: You were Minister of National Revenue. You did not do a thing.

Mr. Rompkey: Will the Minister move now, immediately, to see that these economic and financial draculas are put back in their coffins?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can say that in fact the situation goes back to 1979, and the previous Government did absolutely nothing to deal with it. During the last seven months we have had a large number of consultation sessions. In fact, we have been consulting with all the agencies concerned, and as soon as we are in a position to take action, we shall do so forthwith.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—TICKET AGENTS' STRIKE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. A number of groups this weekend asked the Prime Minister to intervene in a dispute between Air Canada and the union representing the 3,000 striking ticket agents. They have said Air Canada is taking full-time jobs, which are basically women's jobs, and making them into lower paying part-time jobs.

Since the Prime Minister was specifically asked to intervene, will he get up in this House and state whether the Government will instruct Air Canada to keep full-time jobs at a reasonable salary instead of turning them into part-time positions?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that statement is a distortion of the facts. I think it can best be explained by the letter that went out from Air Canada officials to members of CALEA. Perhaps I can best respond to the Hon. Member's question by quoting from the letter as follows:

> Our first priority is to settle the strike and get all of us back to our normal work activities. The Company remains prepared to meet with the Union in that spirit at any time, and to continue to show flexibility in seeking agreement on the improvements we believe are essential to our future as a Company.

I might say I have also had an opportunity to talk to the President of CALEA today. I suggested to him that it would be in the best interests of all to recommence negotiations, because Air Canada is prepared to sit down and negotiate in the spirit of flexibility as outlined in the letter.

HOURLY WAGE RATES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister wants to read from Air Canada documents, the Air Canada document which I have admits that Air Canada is trying to reduce the starting salary from $7.42 to $6.13 an hour. With the drastic increase it wants in part-time workers, that will have the net effect of having less women working full time, and more working part-time at lower salaries. Is the Government supporting that policy?

Hon. Don Mazankoswki (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since there is obviously a distortion, or a misunderstanding of the facts, I think the Hon. Member would agree with me that it would be in the best interests of all parties to get back to the bargaining table and settle this thing once and for all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

ADVERTISEMENT IN UKRAINIAN NEWSPAPER BY FORMER MEMBER—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Witer) on April 25. Let me emphasize, if I may, that the function of the Speaker is to determine, on the basis of the evidence presented, whether or not the matter raised should be given priority over all other business. It is not for the Speaker to determine the question of privilege itself; that is for the House to decide.

On April 25, the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park drew attention to an advertisement which appeared in the April 6 to 13 issue of Vilne Slovo, the Ukrainian newspaper circulated in Toronto. The advertisement was in Ukrainian, and the translation provided to the Chair by the Hon. Member reads as follows:

Christ has risen—With the Holy Holiday of the resurrection of Christ, sincere best wishes to all Ukrainians in Canada and specially to the readers of the "Free Word" from: Jesse P. Flis, (Member of Parliament for Parkdale-High Park).

Mr. Flis is in fact the former Member for Parkdale-High Park. The address given in the advertisement of the constituency office, which is given in English, is the same address of the constituency office Mr. Flis had when he was a Member.

It should go without saying that a Member of Parliament needs to perform his functions effectively and that anything tending to cause confusion as to a Member's identity creates the possibility of an impediment to the fulfilment of that Member's functions. Any action which impedes or tends to impede a Member in the discharge of his duties is a breach of privilege. There are ample citations and precedents to bear this out.

The House will remember that at the time I undertook to delay. I have now delayed for some days. I can tell the House that I have had a verbal conversation with Mr. Flis in which I indicated that I would be able to take matters into consideration only if they were sent to me in writing by those involved. I will say to the House that Mr. Flis indicated verbally to me that he had no personal knowledge of the matter, and I see no reason to distrust or not to believe his verbal view. I indicated that the Speaker could deal only with those matters which are produced for him in an evidentiary way and that therefore I needed more than a verbal conversation. Having received no correspondence from Mr. Flis or from any other source which might shed light on how the advertisement came to appear in Vilne Slovo, I feel in the circumstances that I am restricted and can only act on the evidence with which I have been furnished. In this case that evidence comes from the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park.

I have concluded, after long thought and a delay which I hoped would make the matter to some degree resolve itself, that I can wait no longer to rule, that it would be improper to wait any longer. Given the importance of questions of privilege, and given that I have only received the evidence I have received in writing, I believe I have no choice but to find that I must rule on the evidence which has been presented. I must therefore rule that a prime facie case has been established, and I invite the Hon. Member to move a motion.

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, in light of Your Honour's finding, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick):

That all matters relating to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park on Thursday, April 25, 1985, with respect to an advertisement published in Vilne Slovo of the week of April 6 to 13, 1985, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation and reporting.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is debatable. There being no debate, I shall put the question. Shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 148 and 277.

[Text]

CHRISTMAS DECORATIONS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 148—Mr. Boudria:

1. What was the cost to the Government for the Christmas trees and decorations located on the grounds of Parliament Hill including the cost of decorators, movers, and any person directly or indirectly involved in the project?

2. Did the Canadian taxpayer pay for any part of this?

3. Were there any contracts awarded by public tender and (a) if so, in what amount (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): 1, 2 and 3. The three Christmas trees on Parliament Hill were provided and installed under the supervision of the National Capital Commission. The costs of acquisition, transportation, erection, taking down and disposal of the trees was $1,891.27.

No contracts for this work were awarded by public tender for the reason that the amounts involved were too small.

The Christmas trees were decorated by Public Works tradespersons using existing lights from previous years.

CANADA/GASPÉ AND LOWER ST. LAWRENCE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 277—Mr. Ouellet:

1. Did the Government implement the Canada/Gaspé and Lower St. Lawrence Economic Development Plan in May, 1983 and, if so, were federal expenditures amounting to $224.5 million approved?

2. Which projects (a) were completed (b) are under way in the transportation sector and, in each case, what (i) is the location (ii) is a description of the works and studies undertaken (iii) amounts were allocated?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Industrial Expansion and Transport as follows:

1. Yes. The Canada/Gaspé and Lower St. Lawrence Economic Development Plan was launched in May, 1983, endowed with a $224.5 million budget for the first five years (1983-1988). The plan is a 15 year multi-sectoral economic development plan.

Since the launching of the plan in May, 1983, more than $87 million have been spent or committed by the various departments participating in the plan. On the basis that special budgets intended for the region under the plan should not replace the regular budgets already allocated to each department, the total budgetary envelope has been increased from $224.5 million to $264 million.

2. (a) (i), (ii), (iii):

PIONEER TRUST PAYMENT CONTINUATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-50, an Act to provide for the continuance of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company—Mrs. McDougall—Mr. Danis in the chair.

● (1510)

On Clause 2—Agreements and arrangements generally

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of questions and I would appreciate your guidance. This is a very short Bill. Am I correct in assuming that it is at the beginning of the clause that general questions are to be placed, that this is the appropriate time to ask general questions?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't filibuster the Bill. The people of Saskatchewan want this Bill passed.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Regina East may proceed with his questions.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, we are concerned as well to have this Bill passed in a very expedient manner. I understand the Government House Leader is anxious for me not to ask questions because it might embarrass him and some of his friends. First, when did the Minister become aware of the problems that existed with the guaranteed income averaging certificates that Pioneer had issued with the CDIC stamp on them, those that were for over five years?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we became aware of the income averaging annuities very shortly after the company closed its doors. In our preliminary analysis of their assets and liabilities, this came to our attention. It was fairly early in a sort of ongoing review and analysis of the balance sheet.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, when it was raised on March 28 by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, the Minister had already been made aware of the situation. While the Government is anxious to have this legislation passed today, and we appreciate why it would like to have it passed in a speedy manner, the question is why it took three months for the Government to introduce this legislation. The Government has known about it since a week or so after February 7 when Pioneer closed its doors. It has been almost three months now. Why the delay?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we spent a considerable amount of time looking at all the problems associated with the trust company. We wanted some analysis of the liquidators' views on what would be left over after the assets. We were in discussion with the Province of Saskatchewan. Unfortunately, these things cannot always be resolved as fast as one would like.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that this was not brought up earlier. We have a bit of a gun at our heads situation today because the Government wants to have this legislation put through in one day when it took quite some time getting the legislation in front of us.

Let me move on to the question of licensing. The court documents filed make reference to the date that the licence was renewed, December 31. Was the licence again renewed at the end of January? The licence that was issued December 31, was it a monthly licence? If so, was it renewed at the end of January?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it was renewed at the end of January. My predecessors had put a deadline of December 31 on the licence on the condition that the company raise additional capital. When the Province of Saskatchewan indicated that it would guarantee a preferred share issue, we extended the licence pending that financing.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, at the end of January the provincial Government still had not made up its mind, so it was further renewed at the end of January for another month?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could table the Pioneer Trust licence that was issued December 31, the licence that was issued at the end of January and the previous licence? In other words, the licence that existed for Pioneer up to the end of December. Is it possible to make that licence and the conditions of that licence public?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I have no problem tabling it, but I do not have it with me. We can arrange for that.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate if that were added to the minutes of the Committee of the Whole. According to the court documents, as of May 10, 1984 it became plain that Pioneer already had some difficulties. One would presume that the Government was aware of Pioneer's difficulties before that date. Otherwise they would not have asked for a special report. Was there any attempt at that time or in the months after May 10 through to the fall, November, 1984, to get into an agency agreement? I recognize that this occurred at a time when the Minister was not the Minister, when the Liberals were in charge, but did the Liberals attempt to get an agency agreement?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I cannot speak for the Liberals. I know that at that point the Superintendent of Insurance was in touch with the trust company on a continuing basis. There was reason to believe that they would be able to raise some capital. They were looking for capital in the market-place. Whether they looked for an agency agreement or not, I cannot tell the Hon. Member. It was a liquidity problem and they had a need for additional capital.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, we note in press clippings, for example, part of the reason why the Saskatchewan Government initially stated it was anxious to support Pioneer Trust. It wanted to be certain there was a financial institution in Saskatchewan essentially owned and controlled by people in Saskatchewan. For example, I have a quote here from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of January 11, 1985. It quotes Premier Devine as saying: "Then some big dude comes in and says I'll pick it up. Most chances are he would be from Toronto or eastern Canada and we would lose the head office." Does the Minister feel that Saskatchewan's attempt to secure financing within western Canada or within Saskatchewan prevented other financial institutions in other parts of Canada from working out an agency agreement with Pioneer which could have saved Pioneer Trust?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, that is judgment after the fact. I do not have any reason to believe so. Whatever discussions were held between the Province of Saskatchewan and the company I think were appropriately held, from what I can gather. As far as I know, there was no impediment to an agency agreement, but I am not sure if that would have been possible before either. That is why I do not like dealing with that kind of hindsight judgment.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, when the Minister took over her responsibilities, there was nothing in the files that would have suggested the previous Minister alerting the provincial Government as to Pioneer's situation or any attempts by other financial interests in other parts of Canada attempting to reach an agency agreement with Pioneer Trust. In other words, the Minister is saying none of this existed in the files when she took over.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I am saying I have no reason to believe that at the ministerial level there were discussions. My understanding is no, but once again I cannot answer for other people. Whether there was informal contact, I have no way of knowing.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, concerning agency agreements and the attempts to secure one for Pioneer Trust, I note that in the Minister's letter to me of March 7 she made mention of the Bank of British Columbia as well. Can the Minister tell us what attempts were made and with what financial institutions? I understand that several financial institutions were approached about trying to achieve an agency agreement and that essentially all of them backed off because they felt, after looking at the books, that there was not much chance of achieving such an agreement. Perhaps the Minister could explain to the committee what attempts were made and what other financial interests were approached to have a look at the books of Pioneer.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there were two institutions, the Bank of British Columbia and a group out of Winnipeg known as the Can-West group. I think they had a fairly cursory look at the books and that there was an indication by that time that the company's solvency was in such a position that it would have been very difficult to deal on an agency agreement in an appropriate and non-disruptive way.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I note as well that in her statement of February 7 the Minister said that the federal Government and the Government of Saskatchewan had been co-operating and trying to find a solution to Pioneer Trust's problems. Did the Minister mean there that the Bank of British Columbia and the Winnipeg group were the two groups with which the Minister had some involvement in connection with exploring ways of reaching an agency agreement?

Mrs. McDougall: Not precisely, Mr. Chairman. Our role had been to accommodate the financing that was to be guaranteed by the province. Our discussions with the province to that point revolved around its anticipating that it would guarantee a preferred share issue and that that was the proposed solution with which the company seemed happy. That seemed to be an appropriate solution. We were facilitating it through the licence extension until the financing could be completed.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, let me get this straight. In other words, because of the commitment made by the Province of Saskatchewan in the letter of November 21, the federal Government essentially felt that there was a solution to Pioneer's problems and no active attempts were made to find an agency agreement because the federal Government thought that the problem was in hand?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We had had concerns about the company but those concerns dealt with its capital base. We felt that this was an appropriate route to take. We continued to watch the company on a regular basis and were in touch with the provincial Government from time to time as it attempted to pull the financing together.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal briefly with the federal-provincial relations. Did the federal Government offer to share information with the Saskatchewan Government before the Saskatchewan Government wrote the letter of November 21? In other words, before the provincial Government made its commitment in writing to Pioneer Trust, the commitment contained in the famous letter from the Minister of Finance of Saskatchewan, was the provincial Government in touch with the federal Government at all about Pioneer's situation?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the Superintendent, as a matter of routine, sends monthly reports on certain institutions to provincial Governments. There had been no specific request from the province for additional information and there was no real need to offer any. There was no basis on which we would initiate a contact. The provincial Government dealt directly with Pioneer Trust itself. It was in the same city as Pioneer Trust and dealt directly with the company. There was no reason for the provincial Government to come to us at that stage.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, was the federal Government ever in communication with the Province of Saskatchewan after the letter was sent and before Pioneer closed its doors? I am referring here to the period of time between November 22 and February 7. We understood from news statements that the Saskatchewan Minister of Finance had difficulty getting a financial statement from Pioneer. Eventually he had to send people from the Saskatchewan Finance Department to look at Pioneer's books. It seems to me that if the provincial Minister had trouble getting a true financial picture from the management of Pioneer Trust, he should at least have gone to the federal Government to ask if it had any more up-to-date information on Pioneer Trust.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the Superintendent of Insurance confirmed with the province that it had agreed with the company to undertake the guarantee of the preferred shares and our assistance was offered through the Superintendent to officials in Saskatchewan. I had one or two informal conversations with the Saskatchewan Minister of Finance. We certainly offered our best assistance, and at that point he did not seem to require any special assistance.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, this brings me to another point which confused me. When Pioneer closed its doors, the Minister used the figure of $24 million as being the amount of money in uninsured deposits. News statements from both Regina and Ottawa seemed to indicate that the amount was indeed some $24 million. In the House today, the Minister mentioned the fact that the figure is closer to $36 million and we have heard as well from other sources that the figure could be as high as $40 million.

From where did the initial figure of $24 million come? Was it the figure supplied to the Minister by her Department? Was it a figure that came from the provincial Government? Where exactly did the figure of $24 million in uninsured deposits originate?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, it was the provincial Government together with the company that was making this assessment. Our examiners were not present at that time. They went in later to do their own assessment. There was no reason for our examiners to be there when the provincial Government and the company were dealing with each other on the basis of the preferred issue. As the Hon. Member knows, the size of deposits is a movable feast; it changes from day to day. This was the best assessment of what they were.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister know what the amount of uninsured deposits was on December 31?

Mrs. McDougall: No, Mr. Chairman, I do not. There was no reason to assume that we would be covering uninsured deposits on December 31. The company had had some liquidity problems that looked as though they could turn into solvency problems, but with the new capital those problems would have been solved. On the understanding that there would be new capital, there was no need to start assessing the deposits.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, there is no need, then, for a company like Pioneer, when it makes its financial reports to you, to indicate what amount of uninsured deposits and certificates it has? This is not part of the information trust companies are required to report?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, in their annual reports to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, that information is listed, but it is not called for on a more regular basis.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, in other words, we will not know whether the amount of uninsured deposits decreased or increased from December 31 to February 7 or in the period of time about which I am quite concerned of February 4 to February 7? It seems to me that the Saskatchewan Cabinet made the decision not to proceed with the guarantee on February 4 though Pioneer closed its doors on February 7. Is there any way of finding out whether the amount of uninsured deposits decreased or increased in those crucial three days?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the liquidator will be looking at the activities of the company within its last few days. That is part of his role. He will assess any movement that may have occurred into or out of the trust company that was inappropriate or out of line.

• (1530)

Mr. de Jong: I wonder as well, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister might comment on some of the statements made by the Minister of Finance of Saskatchewan, particularly on the March 5 CBC program Venture. He stated, "The federal Superintendent of Insurance was going to pull the licence out on January 1 unless we gave a guarantee". In other words, the Minister of Finance of Saskatchewan felt that the Superintendent of Insurance had been too harsh with Pioneer and he felt that the federal Government should have eased up a bit. Do you think the federal Superintendent of Insurance was too harsh with Pioneer and perhaps should have given it a few more months to try to find another source of capital?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I will try to answer the question. I will not comment on the program because I did not see it. The Superintendent of Insurance has a very stringent role to play in advising the Minister on the state of particular companies. I think that the Superintendent of Insurance acted most appropriately and I have every confidence in the actions he took.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, I also have a number of questions for the Minister. The first question concerns the guaranteed income averaging certificates. A statement has been made in the House that in at least two cases people owned such certificates which had "insured" stamped on them even though we know they are not. I am aware that the CDIC regulations require disclosure but that there is no penalty for failure to disclose. In these two cases, however, it would seem that this is more than a failure to disclose. This is misleading information. I would be interested to know if any steps are being taken about that situation.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, along with the evidence sent to me, some of it by Hon. Members of this House, some of the deposit certificate holders, who I think were quite naturally upset as well as confused, sent me copies of their certificates. But none of these certificates said they were insured. The statement on those certificates said, "Member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation", which is a different statement. It is obviously a very subtle distinction in the minds of members of the public.

These problems also went back quite a long way because the CDIC did catch up with this in 1979 and started requiring the company to indicate on the face of the certificate that these were not insured under the meaning of the Act.

Certainly, if I had been the Minister in 1979, I would have jumped on that an awful lot faster in terms of what happens around other institutions. I have directed the CDIC that it is to make very clear to the institutions how much is insured and how much is not. Income averaging annuities are not issued any more, but there are a lot of them out there. There may be others who have run into this problem and I am very disappointed that the former Minister did not deal with this.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, I also have some questions about the renewal of the licence in December, 1984. The sequence of events was that in May, 1984 a report was made to the then Minister. In June, 1984, a hearing was held and limitations were placed on the company's licence. There were a number of limitations which restricted its investments and reduced its borrowings. There was also a requirement that it improve its capital position. The company was given until December 31, 1984, to comply.

We have just heard that the licence was extended on a month-by-month basis after December 31, 1984. I would like to know on what basis this was done and what kind of proof it provided that it had complied with the requirements over the six months. Or was it simply a request for additional time in which to do it without any guarantee or any evidence that it had made a serious effort?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the only part of the directives which had not been complied with by the company was the need to raise additional capital. The other requirements were complied with and the Superintendent of Insurance monitored the company on a regular basis to ensure that that was happening. When the licence was extended, it was extended on the basis of a forthcoming provincial guarantee of a new preferred stock issue. We had no reason to believe that this would not resolve the need to build the capital base.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Is it true then, as has been stated in this House, that the Saskatchewan Government undertook to guarantee that process just described by the Minister without looking at the books, and when it did look at the books, it took flight and retreated?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer for the action of the Province of Saskatchewan. I think that it believed it was acting in a responsible way. It was in touch with the company. I was not present when its officials talked to the company and I do not know what examinations they undertook. However, I am sure that the Treasurer of Saskatchewan is a responsible man and that he make the undertaking in good faith.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Minister can understand that it is a little difficult to believe that the Province of Saskatchewan gives certain undertakings on the basis of which the federal Government extends a licence and then, within a matter of weeks, backs off and says, "No, we cannot do this". Surely there must have been some explanation or reason for the change?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I think the Treasurer of the Province of Saskatchewan should speak for himself. I think the Province of Saskatchewan discovered that it might cost a little more than expected. It had given a letter of undertaking, but on a detailed examination it determined that it was not in the interests of the people of Saskatchewan to go forward. But I do not want to stand in this Chamber and speak for the Treasurer of Saskatchewan.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, I am not trying to put the Minister on the spot. I am not trying to ask her to speak for the Government of Saskatchewan. But surely if the licence was extended on the basis of commitments made by the Government of Saskatchewan, then when the Government of Saskatchewan decided to withdraw from those commitments, it must have given some explanation. Can the minister make that explanation public? Can she tell Hon. Members of the House what it was, or table the correspondence?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I cannot document or table our conversations at that stage because our discussions were on the telephone. Obviously, time was of the essence at that stage. I have indicated my understanding of the Treasurer's reasons at that point. The Province of Saskatchewan thought it was going to cost more money and it felt it was not in the interests of the people of Saskatchewan to proceed.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): It is a strange business, Mr. Chairman. Why would the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan which, we are told, has many very experienced business people in it, feel confident enough of the situation to ask for the licence to be extended one month and then, a month later, come back and say, "No, we cannot afford it"? That is really very puzzling and I hope that those members of Government are giving some explanation to their own constituents even if they are not prepared to give any to us here.

The Saskatchewan Government decided on February 4 not to guarantee, and then Pioneer closed its doors on February 7. Could we know exactly what happened in those three days? Was there much activity? Are you now in a position to tell us, based on the liquidator's report, that there was no insider trading or unusual movement in those three days?

• (1540)

Mrs. McDougall: First of all, Mr. Chairman, it was not a definite decision on February 4. The Province of Saskatchewan indicated that it expected it would back out of its guarantee. It proceeded with discussions with the company for a couple of days in an effort to come up with some solution. It was at this stage that Can-West and the Bank of British Columbia were contacted as well. So that, yes, there was a considerable amount of activity in those two or three days, and then the company took the only step it could take when none of that worked out, which was to close the doors.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, the Minister need not feel that we are attacking her or anything.

Mrs. McDougall: I don't.

Mr. Riis: Particularly when she had nothing to do with most of this whole process. These questions are posed in that spirit.

The decision was made to compensate some of the deposits beyond the $60,000 limit. Could the Minister explain to us why this particular company was treated differently from Crown Trust and others in Ontario all the depositors of which were in a sense covered? Why was there some difference between the two groups?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the CDIC Act is very clear on what can and cannot be covered and when an agency agreement can be invoked and when it cannot. The legislation states that this can only be undertaken if it results in less cost to the insurance corporation. Obviously I was not around when the decision on Crown and Fidelity was taken at the time. I do not think, however, it has worked out that way, and I think the CDIC, rightly, is very careful in how it looks at agency agreements.

There were two differences here. The first was that we did not have an agency agreement, and the second is that I think the CDIC, in light of those events, probably looks more carefully at agency agreements now than it would have before.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, as the Minister said, it did not work out that way in Ontario. Would the CDIC have acted differently had it known there would be additional costs for the people of Canada via this Bill? If this requirement had been known at that time, would the same decision have been made?

Mrs. McDougall: I am sorry, what requirement?

Mr. Riis: The Minister said that the CDIC makes the decision in favour of what is least costly at the time. We are now debating the Bill which is going to add another few million dollars to the burden of the taxpayers of Canada, and probably Saskatchewan is doing the same. Was this kind of action taken into consideration when the superintendent made his decision on what is going to be least costly?

Mrs. McDougall: I am sorry, I am still not quite clear on what information the Hon. Member is looking for. He means the decision to—

Mr. Riis: The decision to proceed in that particular way.

Mrs. McDougall: Once the company is closed—

Mr. Riis: Yes.

Mrs. McDougall: —the decision either to pay or not to pay?

Mr. Riis: No. I will attempt to explain it. The Minister pointed out that Greymac Trust was treated differently from Pioneer Trust with regard to what depositors were insured in the end. That decision was based on what would be the least costly solution to the problem. When that decision was made, this Bill we are debating today was not introduced in the House and presumably the costs to the people of Canada had not been contemplated at that time. So when the Minister comments that the decision to move in this direction regarding Pioneer Trust was made because that was going to be the least costly to the corporation—maybe I misunderstood her response.

Mrs. McDougall: I was trying to explain that there were two differences. One difference was that there was no agency agreement to consider. You can consider an agency agreement if that is the least costly, but you have to have the agency agreement there in order to consider it. I then went on to explain, in answer to no one's question, that the agency agreements, in light of what has happened in the past, would probably be scrutinized very carefully. As it has turned out, sometimes that has not been the least costly, it has been the more costly by quite a bit. But there was not one to consider in this case.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, really what we are debating at the moment is a provision which will enable those uninsured depositors, who were in a sense given the impression they were insured, compensation for the losses of Pioneer Trust. Earlier today I mentioned a situation which is not dissimilar, where a young immigrant from Hong Kong had come to western Canada planning to open up a small business. He had opened a deposit in American funds, which are not covered by this particular Bill before us, yet he was never told that this $50,000 deposit was not covered. So this person who was hoping to open a small business had been caught and has lost the major part of $50,000. Was the Minister aware of these problems when the Bill was introduced?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The Province of Saskatchewan is covering all those accounts.

Mr. Riis: So this individual will be covered by the Saskatchewan contribution in this process? Thank you.

When the decision to proceed with this Bill was introduced, I had some discussions with people from what used to be called Western Capital Trust in British Columbia. They asked why we were introducing legislation to use taxpayers money to compensate those people whose deposits were not protected when, at the time Western Capital Trust got in some difficulty in British Columbia, in their estimation there was little encouragement or assistance. There seemed to be, in their minds, at least, a bias in how the Government approached this.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, there are no income averaging annuities in Western Capital Trust so there are no people there who lost everything. My concern was for retired farmers who had lost everything. The CDIC has to stand on its own to some extent. I felt this was an anomaly because people who had retired had their life savings, their retirement income, everything at risk. I felt that since I am responsible for the CDIC, it was my responsibility to do something about that. I am not happy about it and you will see that I am doing it outside the CDIC; I regard this as an obligation of the Government. But it is on that basis that I was prepared to support this.

Obviously you cannot go through, one, two, three, four, and say you lost all your life savings, but you did not because you have an account somewhere else. So we decided that we would protect a group which had been confused and had the most to lose. I am unhappy that that is what the institution did and I intend to change it in the future. I think the deposit insurance system should work on its own to the extent it is legislated to work, and that is the objective I am working towards.

Mr. Riis: To continue from the point the Minister was just making, there appears to be some confusion now in the financial community. The Government appears to be willing to come to the assistance of certain trust companies. I mention Greymac again because it is such a famous example. We are now introducing special legislation to deal with some very special problems associated with Pioneer Trust. Many people in the financial community are asking if it is a pattern. If we are unfortunate enough to have financial institutions fail in the months and years ahead, which is a possibility given the difficult times, which firms are going to get assistance and which are not? There seems to be some confusion in the community. Could the Minister say something which might provide some direction or ease that confusion?

• (1550)

Mrs. McDougall: I do not know whether or not I can ease the confusion. I have been in the financial business all my life. I am not enchanted at being in the position of bailing out financial institutions. I believe that we should have had legislation on financial institutions and on the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation a long time ago. I wrote my first paper in the private sector on financial institutions 10 years ago. That is why I have asked a private sector group to study the CDIC. We will have that report shortly. That is why I produced the green paper on financial institutions. I made it a real priority, as did the Government, to provide a better legislative farmework, stronger supervisory and regulatory authority, and a framework in which we have an even hand through the system. I am very anxious to do that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the Minister on those words of encouragement for consumers and depositors and on her undertaking to better protect people and better inform them as to what is and what is not insured. I think that is a step in the right direction.

There is some confusion. Possibly I should not be admitting this, but I would like to understand a few points. We were told that about $36 million is outstanding in terms of uninsured deposits. Of that, $24 million will be recovered by the liquidation of the assets of Pioneer Trust. Is that exact?

Mrs. McDougall: I do not have the precise figure. One reason that the figures are not terribly precise is that we can estimate that the uninsured deposits amount to $36 million. The return on the liquidation of the assets is something that we can only guess at that will come back to cover whatever deposits are paid off.

Mr. Gauthier: I take it that the liquidator will table a report with the Minister and make public certain documents. Will the Minister make an undertaking today to make these documents public so that we can at least have an idea of what was there?

Mrs. McDougall: The liquidator does not report to me, he reports to the court. Therefore, it will be a public document. It is not there yet, but it will be.

Mr. Gauthier: It would still be a public document if it were reported to the Minister.

Let us assume that there is $24 million in assets that can be recovered. There is $1 million left. The Minister is looking for authorization to transfer $5 million to the Consolidated Revenue Fund to cover our part of the deal with the Saskatchewan Government. I understand also that we may not go up to the maximum of $5 million, depending upon how much there is outstanding. Is the Saskatchewan Legislature studying the same legislation simultaneously with us?

Mrs. McDougall: It is producing legislation. I do not know whether it is simultaneous or not. I do not believe so. I do not know what its timing is.

Mr. Gauthier: I guess it will be forthcoming, and it will be for about $10 million. I did not catch in the Minister's speech exactly what Saskatchewan is doing. I know it is paying the U.S. investors and it is paying certain depositors who have losses in excess of $60,000 that would normally be covered by the CDIC. Over and above this, what exactly is Saskatchewan doing?

Mrs. McDougall: As I understand it, Saskatchewan is paying off $24 million immediately, whereas the payments to the income averaging annuities will be paid over time. It will be paying off the non-income averaging annuities immediately. We are covering about $10 million of income averaging annuities, and our assessment is that $5 million, conservatively, will cover that. It is covering $25 million and it is expecting that the ultimate cost to Saskatchewan will be $10 million. So it expects about $15 million back.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Chairman, I notice that this Bill covers only income averaging annuities from this one institution. Are there any restrictions on the size of income averaging annuities in this institution, or are you covering all income averaging annuities regardless of size?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the Government of Canada is covering them only to the extent of $60,000, the extent to which they would have been covered had they not been confused about the insurance. The Government of Saskatchewan is covering amounts over and above that. There are not many income averaging annuities that are over and above that. There are only 19 over and above that.

Mr. McCrossan: Do I gather that it would be the Government's intention to extend similar guaranteed facilities to any other averaging annuities issued by any other institution that is a member of the CDIC?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I am not anticipating that we will have a large number of claims on our hands. Second, the reason grew out of the confusion. When people bought these they were given the impression that they were insured. I have asked the CDIC to ensure that member institutions are far more responsible concerning the information they give out. That should have been done a long time ago but it was not.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Chairman, were there any registered retirement income funds or registered retirement savings which exceeded the $60,000 limit which are not covered?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, there were. All I am covering is that confusion of people who lost everything on the income averaging annuities to the extent that they would have been covered. The RRSPs and all other deposits are being covered by the Province of Saskatchewan. That was its decision.

Mr. McCrossan: Were there any RRIFs issued by this institution?

Mrs. McDougall: Registered Retirement Income Funds? No, not as I understand it.

Pioneer Trust

Mr. McCrossan: Does this particular failure suggest that the capital and surplus requirements of trust companies, as they are currently in the legislation, are inadequate?

Mrs. McDougall: That is a very difficult judgment to make. The ratios become important rather than the size of the capital and the surplus. This company ran into a particular economic problem within its territory which is well known to anyone who is familiar with deposit taking institutions in western Canada. I think it tells us something about the importance of diversification as well. No one had foreseen the decline in the real estate market to the extent that it happened. Therefore, these were mortgages in arrears as well as people walking away from mortgages on an asset that was declining in value. It would have been nice if people had had the foresight to diversify more, but no one did at that stage. There were other people as well who were speculating that the oil boom would go on forever.

Mr. McCrossan: You mentioned the term "ratios" rather than "absolute limits". I understand that the European Economic Community has changed the solvency and capital requirements for its financial institutions to reflect ratios rather than absolute limits. Is it your intention to make such a change in Canada?

• (1600)

Mrs. McDougall: It is certainly something that we are discussing within the context of the financial institutions.

Mr. de Jong: The Minister has stated that the Bill covers the forward averaging annuity of five years and of $60,000. Does the fact that Pioneer Trust issued these with the stamp of CDIC mean that the federal Government believes it has some responsibility regarding these people?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there is no legal responsibility. There is nothing in the legislation that indicates that anything should have been done.

Mr. de Jong: Is there anything in the regulations that would have required Pioneer Trust to send a copy of the form to the federal Government when it made these issues and offers? Is there nothing in the regulations that would allow the Minister to monitor what they are doing in the market-place to ensure that they comply with the regulations?

Mrs. McDougall: There is nothing in the Act that indicates that forms must pass an examination by the regulators. The legislation creaks and groans with age.

Mr. de Jong: Is the CDIC being sued by anyone holding the certificates and, if so, is this why the Government is moving at this time? Are there any court actions being pursued at this time?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, no, not that I am aware of.

Mr. de Jong: This morning the Minister mentioned the total absence of any penalties. Obviously, what Pioneer did in issuing these certificates with the CDIC stamp on them goes against the spirit of what should be done if not against the letter of the law. Is the Minister considering introducing legislation or can she do so by amending the regulations through Order in Council to provide for penalties? If they are not required to submit their forms to the Superintendent of Insurance, surely when they are caught doing something that is illegal or morally wrong there should be some penalties to prevent them from carrying out these practices. Without any penalties, some of these financial institutions could have a field day by selling securities that are not insured but given the appearance of having been insured.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, that is one reason why I am anxious to move with changes to the legislation. There are some regulatory changes that can be made, and I have an official studying that now in connection with some other matters. I am anxious to overhaul that piece of legislation because I think it is long overdue.

Mr. de Jong: I have a question with respect to how the $10 million worth of income averaging annuity contracts work. Will these people be paid off over a period of time as though the contract were still in existence and they will be given their monthly payments? Will this continue until the contracts run out, so that some will run out in 1987 and so on?

Mrs. McDougall: That is correct. I believe the last one runs out in 1997. Approximately 40 per cent will run out in the next few years. It is a declining curve.

Mr. de Jong: Who will be sending out these cheques? Will it be the federal or the provincial Government?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, it will be another financial institution. I thought the liquidator would be appointing the institution, but it will be myself.

Mr. de Jong: The Minister will be sending out the cheques?

Mrs. McDougall: The institution will be sending the cheques.

Mr. de Jong: With respect to the liquidator, what will Touche Ross be charging? I had the opportunity to have a discussion with a lawyer whose expertise is in this field. He suggested to me that Touche Ross has what they call in the trade, "a dripping roast". By the time Touche Ross is finished with this, there will be some hefty fees as a result of acting as the liquidating company. Does the Minister know what it will cost?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that. The liquidator must submit his bills to the court. He is appointed by the court, responsible to the court and will send his bills to the court. It is totally out of my hands.

I do know, however, that during the past three or four years, next to family law, bankruptcy has been the biggest growth industry in the country, and it would be nice to bring it to an end.

Mr. de Jong: Could the Minister indicate when the liquidation process will end?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, it could take several years. It depends upon the recovery in the market. It is a dreadful process that takes a long time.

Mr. de Jong: As a result of the legislation before us and what the provincial Government will do, will no depositor either have to wait for the money or lose any money? Will the only ones harmed be the shareholders? Will they not know until this process is finished how much will be left for them? Conceivably there will be very little because I imagine there will be nothing left once everyone else has had a chance to recover what is theirs.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speculate on the outlook for the real estate market but I doubt that there would be anything left for the shareholders. The depositors, as opposed to the investors, will be looked after immediately. All of them will receive 100 cents on the dollar for their deposits.

An Hon. Member: Will they hold it against us?

Mr. de Jong: No, these are questions that my constituents have asked me and I am acting on their behalf.

Am I to understand from what the Minister said earlier that Touche Ross may makes recommendations or comments on any wrongdoing, if it is discovered? If there is any wrongdoing on the part of the management, is it the responsibility of the liquidator to discover this, document it and provide it as part of its report? Or is this the responsibility of the Superintendent of Insurance?

Mrs. McDougall: According to the Winding-up Act, it is the responsibility of the liquidator to examine what had happened immediately prior to the insolvency and attempt to assess the possibility of any irregularities. The liquidator reports to the court.

I might also point out that according to the Bill that Saskatchewan will be producing, there will be no payment against the deposits of shareholders or insiders until everyone is paid off. For example, if the president or senior vice-president of a company had a deposit, they are not included in this package.

Mr. de Jong: What would happen if a retired farmer who had sold his farm had deposited that money in Pioneer and also happened to own some shares? Would he be excluded then?

• (1610)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there is no one like that. It is on legal advice that we provide the public support. To our knowledge, there are no insider problems. The liquidator will be examining that and in the meantime there is no payment to those depositors.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, concerning the management of Pioneer, having understood what the Minister has just said on the role of the liquidator and looking at the events immediately preceding the demise of the trust company, I would imagine that the Superintendent of Insurance has been concerned with the company over a period of time and has had a look at its books. Has the Superintendent of Insurance come across any situation where the trust company provided loans that were under-secured or unsecured in the two years prior to February 7, 1985? If so, in what amount, and on what specific dates were those loans negotiated and approved? In terms of identifying those involved to the extent possible, were any of those under-secured loans or unsecured loans approved to individuals whose influence could be construed as having a direct or indirect bearing on the ability of Pioneer Trust to elicit the 27 million share issue guaranteed from the Government of Saskatchewan or in any other way be perceived to influence the future stability of Pioneer Trust?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, that was a very lengthy question. I will try to answer it as best I can.

In the Trust Companies Act where it defines investment there is a basket clause whereby you can lend money on an unsecured basis. Seven per cent of total assets can fall into the basket clause, which means that within that there can be unsecured loans.

To our knowledge there are none that went to any insiders who would have been in a position to influence the company. Was that the Hon. Member's whole question?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, not just insiders within the company. Rumour back home had it that there was a provincial Cabinet Minister who received an unsecured loan. I would like to lay that rumour to rest if that is the case. If the Minister has the information, I would like her to comment on it.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I do not have that information. That is the first time I have heard it and I would be very surprised if it were the case. That is exactly the kind of thing the liquidator will be looking for. We do not go through the individual names of all lenders on a regular basis. The liquidator will be looking for that kind of thing.

An awful lot of rumours get started under this sort of circumstance, and I do not want to add to that in this Chamber. To my knowledge it is not true.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Minister understands as well my position. I am representing the people from the area where this situation happened. They look to me as the person from whom to get some answers.

Would the liquidator then be obliged, if that is the case and he comes across some wrongdoing, to make it public?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the liquidator would have to report to the court if there is—I think I am putting this correctly—an unfair advantage to one creditor over another. The liquidator would be obliged to report that to the court. The liquidator would then take action to try to recover some of the funds if that were the case. I do hope the Hon. Member will tell his constituents that in our examination, or our part of this, we have not seen any evidence of that kind of irregularity. I know how these stories start. I know exactly what happens. I am sympathetic to his constituents and to the Hon. Member and I hope he will carry that message back.

Mr. de Jong: In the same vein, Mr. Chairman, in the two-year period prior to February 7, 1985, did Pioneer Trust engage in the provision of loans at unusually low rates of interest below the then current market rate?

Mrs. McDougall: Not as a matter of routine, Mr. Chairman. If you went through the list you may or may not find one or two, but there is no evidence that Pioneer Trust was lending money at other than market rates.

Mr. de Jong: If the liquidator does come across this, Mr. Chairman, would the liquidator also make this part of his report?

Between the dates of November 22, 1984, and February 7, 1985, how many demand deposits or other funds held by Pioneer Trust in whatever manner, namely guaranteed income certificates, RRSPs, annuities, etc., which exceeded the $60,000 insured limit or were uninsurable, for example, American fund deposits were either withdrawn or in some way removed from Pioneer which thus ensured that in spite of the closure of the company those funds were fully protected? In other words, has the Minister come across, in the period from November 22 to the demise of Pioneer, any movement of funds that were uninsured into more insured types of deposits, or has the Minister come across funds that were withdrawn? Has the Minister come across any unusual activity like this?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we do not have any way of knowing that. It is that three-month period the liquidator is looking at for any irregularity. He would be the one to report on that.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, in terms of the trading of shares, has there been any extraordinary trading or selling of shares in the period from November 21 to February 7, particularly from February 4, when the provincial Government seemed to have started its internal discussions about backing off from the guarantee, to the time when the matter became public on February 7? In those three days, was there any unusual trading of shares?

Mrs. McDougall: The trust company itself is not a public company, Mr. Chairman. It is owned by a management company. As far as I know, there was no irregular trading in the stock.

Mr. de Jong: Of Pioneer management, Mr. Chairman?

Pioneer Trust

Mrs. McDougall: Of Pioneer management, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Prince Albert brought up the question of constituents who have had a mortgage with Pioneer Trust. Their mortgage is up for renewal. Touche Ross, in essence, refuses to deal with them saying that the company acquiring their mortgages will be the one to look after them. People are finding that if they want to change mortgage companies, they are stuck with the changeover fee. They themselves are not given the opportunity of buying out their mortgages. Touche Ross is saying, "We are selling all these as a block", even though a mortgage at 12 per cent or 13 per cent interest might be sold to an institution for only 10 per cent interest. The mortgage holder himself or herself is not able to benefit from that.

Has the Minister addressed herself to this problem, and particularly to the problem of those people who will have added legal costs in transferring their mortgages because of Pioneer's default?

● (1620)

Mrs. McDougall: Unhappily, I do not have any jurisdiction to do that. Under the Winding-up Act the liquidator has two obligations. One is to liquidate the assets as quickly as possible and the other is to maximize the return to creditors whom he represents. It would be helpful if he could accommodate all the individuals, but he is charged with those two responsibilities. In terms of my jurisdiction, I just do not have any.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chariman, I have just a couple of questions for the Minister concerning sanctions and enforcement. For instance, I am advised that in looking at Pioneer Trust, the Department of Insurance noted several statutory infractions including an investment in a Denver real estate project which was outside the Department's guidelines. If this is true, what action will follow from it?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there is not much action which can follow from it. The company was instructed to bring that down to within the limit. Unfortunately, there was not a big market for Denver real estate, and that was a problem. It was a business decision and it was over the limit. It was instructed to bring it down to within the limit that it could. Unfortunately, I think the bidding on Denver real estate was not terribly active.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The Minister is saying that nothing can be done, presumably because the company has now been wound up. If the company had been staying in business, presumably it could not just ignore guidelines or instructions from the Department of Insurance without some kind of sanction.

Mrs. McDougall: Unfortunately, there are not a lot of teeth in the regulatory function. The Superintendent can reduce the borrowing ratio of a company or can instruct it to reduce interest rates offered on deposits. There is not a whole lot else. Of course, most companies comply. In a situation where the value of the assets has declined considerably, there is not much market for them. This makes it very difficult on the other side to get into line quickly. I personally think there should be a lot more teeth. There should be more the regulators can do, and we have indicated in our discussion paper that we would like to see a lot more power, a more pro-active role and a lot more prevention. At the moment there is very little we can do until there is actually insolvency, and we are working very hard to try to revise that.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): I also have a question about the parent company, Canadian Pioneer Management Limited. Were the two companies so structured that the parent company has been able to walk away completely from any responsibility for what happened with the trust company?

Mrs. McDougall: It has lost its total investment in Pioneer Trust. All its equity is just gone, so it has certainly created some difficulties for those shareholders.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Finally, I would like to return to the role of the Saskatchewan Government in this matter. As far as I can see—and the Minister has neither confirmed nor denied it because obviously she may not have the full information yet—the Treasurer of Saskatchewan issued a letter of comfort to this trust company indicating that the Saskatchewan Government would guarantee a preferred share issue up to $10 million. He did this, simply taking the word of Pioneer and perhaps being motivated in part by suspicion of eastern bureaucrats and eastern banks and an appeal to western pride. Those seem to be very poor motives for dealing with public moneys. However, apparently the Treasurer came to his senses later, when he was sufficiently incensed to find that he could not get clear information and that the president and someone else had gone on holidays to places like Hawaii and wherever. He sent in a team and found that the need was not for $10 million but for something between $20 million and $30 million, at which point he withdrew his offer of guarantee.

If the circumstances are as they have been reported and as I have said, all this sounds amateurish and irresponsible. It kept the licence there for a period of almost two months when it might otherwise not have been there. It dragged on a situation with no particular benefit to anyone. If indeed the Saskatchewan Government has acted as irresponsibly as the reports say, it seems to me that it becomes a matter for very serious discussion between the Canadian Ministers and their Saskatchewan counterparts, and that there should be a very clear understanding that any costs involved as a result of this kind of behaviour on the part of the Saskatchewan Government should be picked up by them.

Mrs. McDougall: I cannot undertake to explain the motivation or the examination which the Treasurer of Saskatchewan might have undertaken before the fact. I know Mr. Andrew and I regard him as a man of honour and a man of responsibility. I think some questions will be asked in his own legislature as to how this came about.

As a former western Canadian, I understand that people do care very much about their indigenous institutions. I worked for one myself in Edmonton. There is a real caring. It is always a matter of judgment on something like this, whether it is a liquidity problem or a solvency problem. A liquidity problem can become a solvency problem, but there is a point at which an infusion of capital can be helpful.

I support the Treasurer of Saskatchewan in his approach. He felt a responsibility to attempt to fund the institution, and following recognition that that could not happen, he has taken a responsible position. He indicated that he will ensure that the depositors are not hurt. I think he recognizes that withdrawing that guarantee would have hurt the company so much that he was prepared to support the depositors.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I have just a very short question. The Minister indicated an appointment of a committee from the private sector, if I read her speech correctly, to study and provide advice on all aspects of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and the operations and organization of the corporation. She said that the report would be tabled soon. Could the Minister be more specific? In the last two weeks we have had two bail-outs. This is not a bail-out, but we have had the CCB bailed out for a hefty sum of money. Now we have this thing. Could we have some commitment from the Minister that "soon" means before the Budget?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I will be able to do this before the Budget. The report is in its final stages. Publication and translation will take a little time, so I really cannot promise a date. Coming from the private sector, I am always far too optimistic about dates.

• (1630)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a final question for my own satisfaction. I understand that within six weeks all depositors will be pretty well satisfied. There is an exception, I understand. Management or the directors of Pioneer will have to wait until final liquidation. The officers of the company, and their relatives will have to wait until final liquidation. Is that correct?

Mrs. McDougall: It is the officers and directors, yes.

Mr. Gauthier: Officers and directors?

Mrs. McDougall: I believe so.

Mr. Gauthier: And relatives?

Mrs. McDougall: I apologize. I cannot remember the wording. I will take it as notice and let the Hon. Member know.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I have a few more questions. The first concerns the Saskatchewan Minister of Finance. I know we have been hard on him, although I agree with the Minister. I have known Mr. Andrew for some time. He certainly is one of the brightest, if not the brightest on the government benches in the Province of Saskatchewan. I feel sorry that this happened in his backyard. We would have called for his resignation except that we were just too afraid of who would have replaced him. The whole episode in Saskatchewan, particularly the Premier's role in all of this, is still to be documented. It certainly makes the alleged statement by the former Premier of Ontario in describing the Devine Government of Saskatchewan as "amateur night on the Prairies" ring true. That apparently was Billy Davis' statement.

I want to go back to some of the statements the Minister made. She does not expect Touche Ross to finish its work for up to two years. Does that mean it would take two years for any report to be submitted to the court if Touche Ross did find any wrongdoing in terms of management practices, that we would not hear about it until two years down the road when the company finishes its work?

Mrs. McDougall: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I was having a certain amount of trouble with the vocabulary. Some of the money will go back to the creditors in the meantime. It does not mean that, if it goes on for two years, the funds will be held until the end. It starts moving back to the creditors on a pro rata basis as soon as some assets are sold. That is an ongoing process. I am aware that they are making regular reports to the court. I am just not sure what "regular" means, I'm sorry.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, when they look at the management practices, if they find any wrongdoing by either the directors or senior management, they would also include senior staff. If there is any hint of wrongdoing, using inside knowledge for example, that would also extend to senior staff in the company, I take it.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of the specific definition, but he would be looking to see if anybody had benefited. How he would define that, I cannot be more specific, I am sorry, but he would be looking to see if anybody benefited.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I have a question concerning the Bank of British Columbia and its involvement. As I understand the events, on February 4 the provincial Government, although it did not make its final decision started to have second thoughts and the Bank of British Columbia was one of the companies that was contacted. Mr. Kaiser, the President, flew to Regina to do some negotiation. Am I correct in understanding that that was the sequence of events that took place?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, with the Bank of British Columbia it was somewhat unusual because Mr. Kaiser had been looking for an opportunity to expand into the other three western provinces. He was in Regina at the time. He was there and became involved because he was available on the spot and was asked to look at it right away. I think he looked at it as an opportunity to fill his own corporate needs at that point.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I have a final question. When the Superintendent of Insurance looked at Pioneer's expenses and assets over the last number of years, did he come across any item that dealt with paying Decima Company money to conduct a poll in Saskatchewan? Again, street rumour back home in Regina has it that Mr. Klein, out of Pioneer Trust or Pioneer management paid for the Tory poll in Saskatchewan conducted by Decima Polling Company.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I understand that Mr. Klein's politics change depending which way the wind is blowing, as I am given to understand. There is certainly no evidence of any benefit to the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan or Canada, Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta or any other place, as far as I am aware.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. McDougall moved that Bill C-50, an Act to provide for the continuance of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few remarks at third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the unanimous consent of the House, we will revert to debate on third reading.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I thought it was the practice at third reading that we make a few short comments about the Bill in a general sense.

As I said during second reading, we are not opposed to the Bill. The necessity of this Bill is unfortunate. It is something that we believe could perhaps have been prevented had the former Government taken more decisive action in the earlier part of 1984 when it became apparent that Pioneer was experiencing difficulties, when it became logical to assume that other financial institutions in western Candaa had so much of their capital assets based in western Canada, particularly in Alberta, which in turn was based at that time on a boom economy of rising oil prices. When that boom started to turn into a bust, it would have been reasonable to assume that some of those financial institutions would experience difficulty. I felt that the former Government in particular should have played a leadership role at the beginning of 1984. Perhaps this could have been prevented if it had.

● (1640)

As well, one must look at the role played by the Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan and the Saskatchewan Minister of Finance. From press reports, we can only come to the conclusion that they might have prevented an agency agreement from occurring because of local pride. We understand that local pride. I feel that Saskatchewan does need a Saskatchewan-based financial institution. All too often in the past we have found that financial institutions that were not based in Saskatchewan did not understand our local financial needs and conditions and were not sympathetic to the needs of the people of Saskatchewan.

I think that economically, politically and socially it is desirable to have institutions like Pioneer Trust that are of a local nature and meet local needs. However, the actions of the provincial Government in providing a guarantee without taking a look at the books is indeed an indictment against it and shows that it handled this situation in an amateur way.

Because of that, the people of Saskatchewan will be paying millions of dollars at a time when public funds are scarce and when different sectors of the economy and society are asked to tighten their belts. This is occurring when the province is experiencing cut-backs to education, health and social programs, cultural programs and road construction. The Province of Saskatchewan can ill-afford to lose $10 million.

Another aspect of this situation that needs to be raised in this public forum is the need for extensive reform. The Minister has given us her commitment, and I believe her commitment, to bring forth a package of reform. Certainly if the Superintendent of Insurance and CDIC are to carry out their important functions, they need resources. If they are not able to carry out their important function, and if trust companies and particularly local trust companies like Pioneer go under, it will shake our faith in our financial institutions. If that occurs, the country and its economy are in trouble. Therefore, the Superintendent of Insurance and CDIC have an important role to play. It would indeed seem strange that our trust in the financial institutions of this country should be shaken because some extra dozen investigators were not hired by the CDIC or the Superintendent of Insurance.

There is a need for a major shake-up within the Department of the Superintendent of Insurance and the CDIC. I think they need accountants who are aggressive and knowledgeable of the ways of the street, so to speak. The last thing they need is young, green graduates fresh from accounting school. They need old, seasoned accountants who know the ins and outs of the financial market and the financial world so that they can play the role of tough cops in order to keep financial institutions honest and in order to restore the confidence of the Canadian people in our financial institutions. As such, we will be supporting this motion and we do hope that the Minister will, in the very near future, bring forth appropriate legislation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—Toxic chemical control program. (b) Request that program be renewed; the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—National Defence—North warning system—Participation of northern contractors; and the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation—Committee study. (b) Ceiling for insurance deposit.

PIONEER TRUST PAYMENTS CONTINUATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-50, an Act to provide for the continuance of payments under certain guaranteed income averaging certificates issued by the Pioneer Trust Company, be read the third time and passed.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset when we dealt with second reading of this Bill, we on this side of the House are in favour of the Bill. We are in favour of providing relief to those depositors who in some cases lost their life savings, but we are uneasy about the entire process and the circumstances which led to this particular failure. We think it is extremely important that the basic problems be addressed so that this kind of thing does not happen again.

Apparently this particular trust company was operating in some ways that were beyond the guidelines and requirements of the Department of Insurance, as it was in the case of the Denver real estate project. There has been another recent failure which also involved imprudent investments outside of the country. It is difficult for Canadian taxpayers to be required to bear the brunt of unwise investments made in other countries. To be sure, these are value judgments. These investments may have looked like wise investments at the time, but in the event they proved not to be.

The whole question of the Saskatchewan Government's involvement in this matter is worrisome. First it produced a letter of comfort and agreed to back a preferred share issue; then it looked at the facts and figures and decided that this would not be wise, so it backed off. All of this had the effect of delaying a resolution of the problem for a couple of months. It could be that a different kind of resolution might have been arrived at if there had been different kinds of negotiations.

The issue of the lack of disclosure to the depositors is serious. People who had guaranteed income averaging certificates with a life of six or seven years were not made aware of the fact that CDIC insurance only covers five-year transactions. The Minister has said that she is addressing these problems, and I am quite sure that she is. However, this is an additional indication of the fact that we need to see the Minister's discussion paper and to look in a broad way at all of the problems with CDIC. The private-sector group that was appointed by the Minister was appointed in January, and it really should be possible to have seen its report by now and to have taken some action on it.

The Minister has criticized the inaction of the previous Minister of State for Finance, but I should point out that that previous Minister was prepared to move on new legislation regarding financial institutions if we had been returned as a Government last fall. The new Government has chosen to proceed by way of a discussion paper on financial institutions. This paper has just been made public. I trust we will in fact see legislation next fall. I mention this merely to show that delays caused by one Minister or another are not unique to one Party. I am sure that such delays are always justified by the person concerned as being needed in order that there may be more consultation and a more careful evaluation of the options.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we support this particular Bill because it has become necessary. But so that we are not overtaken by events and that we do not have to deal with another rescue operation like this, I trust we will proceed quickly to the reform of the legislation on financial institutions and to the reform of the legislation on the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I also want to say a few words about this important Bill with which we have dealt today. First, I want to say to the Minister that her responses today were most encouraging in terms of her plans to enact the green paper recommendations as soon as possible. I think we have cleared up a number of questions we had and perhaps some misunderstandings which others have had about the process pursued by the Minister and her officials to provide relief to the people who were under the impression that they were insured when in fact they were not. Indeed, it would have otherwise resulted in destitution and extremely hard times for the many people caught unawares.

I would like to make two or three observations, Mr. Speaker. First, we as parliamentarians tend to put a great deal of faith in the sophistication of our financial institutions. We almost inevitably assume that the people who manage our institutions and provide the leadership always know exactly what they are doing. I think one of the things we have found over the last number of months in considering the situations regarding Crown Trust, Greymac Trust, Seaway Trust, Seaway Mortgage, Greymac Mortgage, Fidelity, and it goes on and on, is that in fact, a lot of these individuals who, we simply assume, were making prudent loan decisions, acting in a very sophisticated way, recognizing the trends of the times and investing appropriately, in fact were not doing that. They were making some very poor decisions, which resulted in a variety of cases, including the Canadian Commercial Bank, of taxpayers having to come forward with hundreds of millions of dollars for what many people referred to as "bail-outs". Out in the financial market-place recently the Chairman of the Toronto-Dominion Bank was quoted as wondering about the wisdom of the bail-out to the Canadian Commercial Bank. A lot of people in the financial community, I believe, are wondering why it is that we are bailing out certain trust companies and not others, and while the Minister has explained today, I think quite adequately, why the decision was made to provide this support for the uninsured deposits for Pioneer Trust, I think there is a great deal of confusion out in the financial community as to just exactly what this Government is doing—or perhaps, to be fair, what this past Government had done.

I listened carefully to a number of representations from the Official Opposition. I think those Hon. Members may have forgotten that their Party was in power for the last number of years. I can recall at least six times, Mr. Speaker, when the trust companies came before the Finance Committee of the former Government and begged for new legislation and action, explaining that we had not had an updated piece of legislation regarding trust companies for 40 or 50 years. They were operating in a vacuum out there. This is the vacuum we see now.

To be fair, I want to balance some of the criticism levied. When the Official Opposition was in government for some time, it had ample time to introduce legislation which might have made some of these misfortunes which have happened in the last number of months not occur. Of course, we have not discussed credit unions and we have not discussed the banks and other financial institutions. Now we will be seeing, hopefully, as a result of the green paper, changes which will bring in some competition. But with that competition, of course, come more difficult times. We certainly have to take steps which will provide more adequate monitoring by the Superintendent of Insurance and the Inspector General of Banks so that they can be on top of the situations in order to ensure that the depositors are protected and the financial stability in Canada is protected. I think that a lot of people were a little shocked when the Canadian Commercial Bank nearly went down and it was required that the other banks and the senior levels of Government come in to rescue that operation. I think that cost some people some real concern.

I would just like to conclude my brief comments by suggesting that the provincial Government of Saskatchewan certainly has to be criticized in its operation when we look at how it reacted at a very sensitive and critical time. I have certainly not learned today that its behaviour was in the best interests of this institution. I suspect political motivation in terms of some of its behaviour and activity. I am not convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer of Saskatchewan—and I don't know if it was necessarily his decision at the end—actually always acted in the best interests of the depositors involved.

We are pleased to have had an opportunity to participate in today's debate and we are pleased to see that we have been able to deal with this Bill adequately in one day, as the Minister requested. We hope we will never have to repeat this performance or this process ever again.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my friends in Saskatchewan, I just want to raise a couple of points; one on my behalf and one on theirs.

First, there is no point in having a major shake up in regulators until we have a major shake up in regulations. That is why I want to move very fast with the new legislation.

Second, I have been in the financial business a long time. I have been an analyst and forecaster. I would just like to remind my friends on the other side of the House, who were very helpful in getting this Bill through today, that when they are talking about the Treasurer of Saskatchewan, I have discovered time and time again that the best forecasting tool is hindsight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It now being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the House proceed to Item No. 132?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Hon. Member whose motion is being called will be here in a moment.

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Lewis) is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps there has been some misunderstanding in the office of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Rather than lose the opportunity to present his Motion under Item No. 132, I would ask for the indulgence of the House—I have just had a brief opportunity to discuss this with the Deputy House Leader for the Liberal Party and I would ask for the indulgence of the NDP—to adjourn the House at this time so that the Hon. Member for Athabasca would not lose the opportunity to bring his motion forward and have it properly spoken to. I appreciate that this would perhaps cause an inconvenience to members of the Opposition who are scheduled for the adjournment debate, and I undertake to make sure that those matters will come up for discussion tomorrow if that would be satisfactory.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to trying to help the Government put its act together, so we will lend our support to the proposal made by the Parliamentary Secretary. However, I would like to have an agreement that those Members listed today, and two of them are our Members, for the adjournment debate will have consideration of their question tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to agree to that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, in response to the request by the Parliamentary Secretary, we would be prepared to support it on the understanding that the appropriate questions in the adjournment debate will be raised tomorrow. I would also like to make another offer. If the Hon. Member would like to have additional Members to assist in the organization of his caucus, perhaps we in the NDP can help out.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the indulgence of both Parties in the Opposition. I advise them that Private Members' Hour is for private Members to organize, and we are just doing our best to help out this particular private Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there was a motion before the House moved by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), seconded by the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), to the effect that this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock, and that the opposition Members scheduled to appear in the adjournment debate will have their day tomorrow. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, because there are Members other than opposition Members who are to speak in the adjournment debate tonight, can we have the same undertaking with respect to them?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is what I understood, all Members.

Motion (Mr. Lewis) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do now leave the Chair until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m.

At 5.05 p.m. the House adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties with respect to the order of business. It would be appropriate at this point in time to announce that in the rotation of legislation which I announced last week I want to insert consideration of Bill C-25 before Bill C-45. That Bill deals with agricultural stabilization. That item will be called in the rotation prior to the consideration of Bill C-45.

Mr. Speaker: That is understood.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-30, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and to repeal the International Development Association Act and amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam) moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 12 to 20 at page 3.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the first of the two amendments that we would like to introduce and speak to today would strike out lines 12 to 20 at page 3 of the Bill, in effect restoring the original clause. This is with regard to the method of financing of the World Bank group. Prior to the Government's amendment of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, the financing had to take place through an Act of Parliament. This gave us an opportunity in the House of Commons, every year or two, to debate the subject of international development assistance.

The Government is now removing from Parliament the opportunity to debate the role of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund in international development assistance, therefore removing parliamentary accountability in this very important area of Canadian Government activity. Instead of having the replenishments to the World Bank group and the IMF authorized by Parliament, they will simply be authorized, in effect buried, in the Estimates.

This procedure of burying such matters in the Estimates was followed a year or so ago with regard to the other international financial institutions such as the Inter-American Development Bank. We were not successful then in maintaining the authority of Parliament. There is no opportunity in the House to debate the operations of the Inter-American Development Bank and other international financial institutions of a regional nature. We know that there is no chance of debating the operations of these institutions through the instrument of the Estimates or appropriations.

The previous Government removed other international financial institutions from parliamentary debate. If the present Government follows that precedent and takes away the World Bank group and the IMF from Parliament, there will be no use for this body or the relevant standing committee in having a say on their activities.

A report to Parliament will still be required, although it will be very slim when compared to what we originally requested a couple of years ago. Reporting alone on the activities of these institutions will not give us the opportunity of debate in the House of Commons and therefore I urge the Government not to take a backward step by diminishing the authority of the House. The Government has said repeatedly that it wants to enhance the position and authority of Parliament and its committees.

Furthermore, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said at the Bonn summit that he was going to be a voice for Third World countries and that he wanted to enhance Canada's role in international development assistance and activities. However, rather than strengthening Parliament's role in its debate on international development, the Government is diminishing its power. The Government is essentially saying that it cannot be believed. In effect, the Government is saying that it does not really want to strengthen Parliament or play a more significant role in the activities of international financial institutions. It does not want Parliament and Canada to play a stronger role with respect to development assistance in the international community. Therefore, one can only conclude that the Government is simply paying lip service to the role of Parliament and to Canada's role in international development.

The Government has already cut back on international development assistance. It will never reach the goal established by a former Prime Minister of 1 per cent of our Gross National Product being devoted to international development assistance. The Government has already admitted as much.

The Government's present position is that international development assistance, whether it is in the form of grants or loans, must be related entirely to the provision of goods and services. That is the Government's main criterion, rather than the needs of the developing countries themselves, particularly the poorest of the poor nations. As a result of preventing Parliament from discussing Canada's role in international development assistance, particularly with respect to international financial institutions, the Government is effectively saying that we should have no voice in Canadian activity in such institutions.

● (1115)

If we reverted to the form the Bill was in before the Government changed it, we would be required as a Parliament to authorize the funds for the World Bank group and to restore the wording of the present Subsection 5(2), which reads:

(2) The Minister of Finance may provide for payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in the manner and at the times provided for by the Agreement therefor set out in the Second Schedule, of a sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole an amount equivalent to the subscriptions required from or permitted to be made by Canada, that is to say, two billion, one hundred and seventy-eight million, two hundred thousand United States dollars of the weight and fineness in effect on July 1, 1984.

That is the present subsection 5(2). Of course, on subsequent occasions the Act of Parliament would no doubt have a different amount of money, obviously.

In restoring that section, which is the purpose of our amendment, we would, as I have indicated, be making it possible for this body, the Parliament of Canada, to discuss and debate the activities of the World Bank group and of the International Monetary Fund as we have done up to now in this House and not leave this extremely important matter of the financing and role of the World Bank group and the IMF to be buried in appropriations along with a million others and therefore, significantly by so burying them, lower the whole role of the Canadian Government and of the Canadian Parliament in the activity of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank group.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party is one that calls for the maintenance of a very important principle, that is, a strong reliance on the over-all system of parliamentary control for the provision of funds by Canada for the operations of the important international financial institutions covered by the Bill.

We of the Official Opposition are generally in support of the principle I have mentioned as it applies to this Bill and as it is reflected in the amendment that has just been spoken to by the representative of the New Democratic Party.

There is a contradiction on the part of the Government when it comes to the matter of parliamentary approval of financing of the international financial institutions in question and what the Government has proposed in this Bill with respect to one of these institutions, the International Finance Corporation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, one of the amendments proposed by the Bill is to give a general legislative basis for Canada's participation in the International Finance Corporation. The International Finance Corporation is one of the World Bank group of financial institutions. Its focus is on the support of private sector investment in developing countries, unlike the work of the World Bank and the International Development Association which focuses particularly on government initiatives.

● (1120)

In presenting Bill C-30 to the House in March, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) said that the reason the Bill in question dealt with the International Finance Corporation in the way it did was to move away from the system which had existed for many years of providing financial support to the work of the International Finance Corporation. This system was to fund Canada's role in the International Finance Corporation through the Estimates process. The present Government has now decided that the Estimates process is not a sufficient means of supporting, dealing with and considering Canada's involvement in the International Finance Corporation and, instead, there had to be an over-all legislative underpinning in the form of a permanent statute rather than through annual appropriation Bills. Yet when it comes to the manner of providing financial support to the World Bank group in general, particularly to the World Bank itself and to the International Development Association, the Government is saying that we should move back from the very course of action which it is proposing with respect to the International Finance Corporation and have the financing of the World Bank and the International Development Association on the part of Canada, as it is required from time to time, dealt with only by the Estimates process.

I see here a very important contradiction. It would seem to me that to be consistent with the arguments put forward for including the International Finance Corporation in this Bill, the Government should not at the same time be insisting that increases or changes in the financial support which Canada provides for the World Bank and the International Development Association be done through the Estimates process rather than through a legislative proposal, that is, a Bill presented to the House from time to time, which would be required to go through the whole procedure required under our rules for a formal piece of legislation.

Bill C-30, if adopted, moves away from the concept of having a piece of legislation each time the Government wants to make a substantial change in its method or extent of supporting the institutions of the World Bank group. This means, in my view, a lessening of over-all parliamentary control of a very important aspect of Canada's involvement in the world community. It takes away an opportunity for formal debate here in what should be the central place for consideration of the business of the country, here in the House of Commons, in the high court of Parliament. The problems of the Third World and Canada's effort to solve them and the issue of the transfer of resources to developing countries are, in my view, highly important and in fact in many ways crucial to the survival of our over-all civilization. Therefore, when it comes to the matter of providing or changing and hopefully increasing Canada's financial involvement in the World Bank group, this should be the subject of a specific, separate piece of legislation resulting in the formal debate which our rules require for such a piece of legislation. Financial changes in our support for the World Bank group should not be buried among one of possibly hundreds of items in an appropriation Bill. In my view and in the view of my colleagues, they require and deserve a separate piece of legislation.

• (1125)

Therefore, I call on the House to support the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party. This amendment would strenghten a very important principle which has been somewhat under attack by the present Government. That is the principle of a very strong and central parliamentary scrutiny, starting out in this House of Commons, of expenditure by the Government on behalf of the people of Canada. Second, it would provide an opportunity which, as much as I believe in the committee system, would not be the same if consideration were not carried out in this House of Commons—to debate and consider Canada's role in supporting the needed progress of the Third World. I believe this amendment should be supported.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am truly astonished at the tenor of the speeches being made by the Opposition. First of all, this question was debated at the second reading stage, when I had the privilege of reading the address, and there were also thorough discussions in committee.

I am rather puzzled by Motion No. 1 as moved by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) because the motion as proposed would in fact restrict the powers of the House and considerably increase the burden of decision-making for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). By striking out lines 12 to 20 on page 3, as proposed, we would be gagging the House, as it were, and putting the entire burden on the shoulders of the Minister of Finance.

Since the substance of this motion has already been debated, I would rather not discuss it at length. It is in no way my intention to deprive the House of debate on the motion but I think a careful analysis is in order.

Mr. Speaker, I have had some opportunity, be it limited, to speak in the House and in committee, and I believe that the appropriate venue for debating the details of a motion is in committee, where we have all the expert witnesses with us, and not in the House, where we have, I would not say only the Ministers, to avoid insulting those who are in the House today, but I would say that in the House, we have people who are here to discuss the principle of the Bill. If we were to encumber the proceedings in the House will all kinds of detailed discussion, this could slow down a debate that could be far more thorough in committee. I would therefore urge the Member of the House to act responsibly and to vote against an amendment that I think is more likely to weaken the powers of this House.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a few comments on the record in support of the motion of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). Motion No. 1 respecting Bill C-30 deletes the specific financial provisions of the Bill. It would revert to the system we had before. That would mean that the Government would have to come before the House for financial authority rather than having this whole question buried in the Estimates.

We believe it is very important that when we are discussing important questions of international aid and the whole question of development of Third World countries, the entire Parliament should be involved. It should not simply be a matter of a committee looking at this. It is important that it be looked at in some detail in committee, but it is also important that the House of Commons have an opportunity to examine this issue in some detail.

• (1130)

It is important for the government side to note that its own former critic on this issue, Mr. Doug Roche, the present Ambassador for Disarmament, two years ago, on March 25, 1983, spoke on this issue. He said, and I quote from Hansard at page 24162:

> One of the reasons for the importance of debating this legislation is the fact that it is a very rare occasion when the House is seized of any sort of debate on these matters, let alone dealing with legislation having to do with Canada's role in international development. As we know, CIDA has been operating through the years without an Act of Parliament. The only time we deal in any substantial way with what CIDA does as the main proponent of Canada's role in international development, is at the time of the Estimates. I am afraid that all Members of the House are too well aware of the inadequacy of the rules concerning the examination of Estimates that preclude the full treatment that important spending programs require.

I urge the Government to pay attention to its own former critic in this important area.

I was pleased to hear that the Liberal Party is giving its support to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Cotquitlam. However, it is important to note that it was under the Liberal Party, when it was in government, that the regional banks were removed from this kind of parliamentary scrutiny. Again we have one of those issues where the Liberal Party did one thing when it was in government and another thing when it is the Opposition. In this case, Mr. Speaker, what it was doing in government was wrong. What it is saying now in opposition is right. I would urge the Conservative Party to remember what it said when it was in opposition and do the same thing now that it is in government.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the amendment produced is an amendment which was discussed fully in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The amendment in a sense demands that every time we want to put money into one of these international institutions we must produce a Bill in Parliament, have it debated, have it go through the three readings and committee stage, with respect to every one of those appropriations. That is a ridiculous suggestion. It will hold up Parliament. It will hold up the affairs of the country and it will make sure that development money is not forthcoming because the Bill will never be given sufficient House time to get through.

That is the problem right now. We want to honour our international commitments and make those appropriations in the normal appropriations sense so that those appropriations can be discussed in committee where witnesses can be heard and where parliamentarians can take due note of the intention to make advances to these institutions, and we can understand what is going on. There is no reason at all to insist that a Bill go through Parliament in all stages just so that some Hon. Members can get their faces before the TV cameras.

Ms. Jewett: Shame.

Mr. Blenkarn: So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a question of parliamentary accountability. This is a question of holding up Parliament for no reason at all. The Hon. Member, who has been around here for a long time, knows that.

Ms. Jewett: You argued differently when you were on this side.

Mr. Blenkarn: This is a situation of an ordinary appropriation to an institution or institutions which we all believe in, and when we make appropriations for other institutions or other organizations, we do it through the Estimates. We do it through an Estimates procedure where there is provision for those Estimates to be properly examined.

There has been a question about whether we do examine the Estimates properly. That is why the committee led by our colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), is studying the way we can change the committee procedures of this House. The reform of Parliament is under way and the Hon. Member knows that. The Hon. Member also knows that that reform of Parliament will give Parliament much more control over the Estimates procedures. That will make it possible for more detailed examination. But surely, Sir, in the interests of making parliamentary government work, we cannot have parliamentary government encumbered by a Bill every year, making a special appropriation to these international organizations. There is just no room for it in the parliamentary calendar and the suggestion from the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party—and I am surprised it is supported by the Liberal Party because it should know better—is just an attempt to hold up the work of this House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I thought I heard words from the last speaker to the effect that having this discussion in Parliament would slow up the process of evaluation and the thorough examination of appropriations to such organizations as the World Bank group, including the IMF. I recall it was the same individual who, not many months ago, after sitting through various committees, said that this process is insane. It is absolutely absurd. Here we sit day after day going through the Estimates and I don't think there is a single Hon. Member in this House who would say that the process we have used up until the present time makes any sense whatsoever.

When it comes to debating the appropriations to the World Bank group now, we will have an official who will come into the committee for a two-hour session, whose job it will be to provide bafflegab and mumbo-jumbo for two hours until he can get out. That is the examination, Mr. Speaker. That is the thoroughness with which the various appropriations are examined. Perhaps, as the Hon. Member suggests, this is all going to change and a whole new fresh approach, a sense of openness and thorough debate, will occur. Perhaps—and perhaps the sun will come up tomorrow as well. We will have to wait and see. But to suggest that today is the last time Parliament is ever going to discuss what Canada does with the World Bank group and what it does with the IMF, I think, is a tragedy. These are two absolutely critical sets of institutions which have a profound impact on what is happening in the developing nations of this world. We know, as parliamentarians, that our participation in the World Bank group has not been particularly impressive over the years. All kinds of schemes have been funded and introduced through the World Bank group and IMF which have not helped the Third World countries, which have perpetuated a sense of oppression, economically and socially, and which have tied them more closely with our own western ideals, approaches and economy.

The situation for most Third World countries has worsened as a result of our participation through the World Bank group, including the IMF. To suggest that that is it, that there will be no more discussion or debate in the House of Commons, I find astounding. I can see some Hon. Members opposite who spoke against the Liberal move not too long ago when the Liberals said: "Listen, we're getting embarrassed by these debates in the House of Commons where people point out the shortcomings of our development work in the Third World, so our solution is to take it out of Parliament and out of public scrutiny".

Ms. Jewett: It's not our solution.

Mr. Riis: No, it is not our solution. I said that was the Liberal Party's solution when it was in government. And Hon. Members of the Conservative Party stood in their places and ranted and raved against the burying of these discussions.

Now the tables have been turned. I remember the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who heads up the Finance Committee now, almost getting beyond the point of being able to continue to speak in the House of Commons because the Liberals were going to stifle debate on this most crucial issue. Eight months later he now stands up and says: "This is a wonderful idea. I've been born again. I am a supporter of the World Bank group and what I was saying eight months ago was incorrect". Those Hon. Members cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. They cannot speak one way as members of the Official Opposition against what the Liberal Government has done and now when they are in government support the very same process.

Let us recognize today that for the people of Canada this is the last opportunity that they will have to hear this issue debated in the House of Commons. And this is at a time when all of us are desperately concerned about what is going on in the developing nations. We are desperately concerned about the situation which has occurred now in the African countries, especially Ethiopia. We want to avoid these kinds of disastrous situations in the future. But by participating in the traditional World Bank group activity, by supporting the IMF in our traditional ways, we are simply making sure that this lack of development, the lack of the production of viable agricultural endeavours of these countries, will continue.

That is why we have moved this amendment, to keep this topic before the House of Commons and Members of Parliament. After all, we are accountable for the way in which we spend the taxpayers' money. When we continually shovel appropriations through the Estimates into these traditional institutions and do not get the proper return on those investments in terms of assistance to the developing nations, I do not believe we are doing our job.

In conclusion, I would say that we have lost a real opportunity. I am not certain that Members of Parliament realize what they are doing by not supporting this amendment. Members of Parliament are saying, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South stated, that witnesses will no longer appear before the standing committee to discuss the appropriations. As I know the procedure, when a Bill comes before Parliament it is referred to the appropriate standing committee and if the feeling of the members is that expert witnesses are required to explain a particular appropriation—whether it should be expanded, reduced or whatever—the opportunity exists. In a sense, what the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs argued can be done, but it should also have the benefit of discussion in Parliament. People say that it will place an unfair burden on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and that it will increase the burden of his decision-making. That is too bloody bad. If the Hon. Member is saying that we are asking too much of the Minister of Finance in terms of our participation in the World Bank and IMF, so be it. If the Minister cannot take the heat, perhaps he should step down. I do not believe it is asking too much for the Minister of Finance to stand in the House and explain our participation in these international banking institutions.

I would be remiss if I did not remind the House that it was members of the Liberal Party, when they were in government, who removed the regional banks from this discussion. I hope that might mute some of their criticism.

I hope that Members will reconsider their opposition to this proposal and realize the value of discussing such a sensitive issue in Canada's Parliament. Parliament is the vehicle which enables the people of Canada to see and hear how their Members represent development plans and assistance to countries, particularly Third World nations. To bury that and place it in the Estimates is a very regressive step.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to participate in the debate on the amendment which was introduced by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). Indeed, it is a sad day when government Members attempt to limit the role of Parliament, particularly in an area which is of great concern to Canadians. We have a strong tradition in Canada of concern about, and involvement in, the plight of all humanity, particularly the plight of the people in the poor developing countries.

The role of the IMF and the World Bank is crucial to the well-being of hundreds of millions of people throughout the world. It is a rare opportunity for Members of Parliament to be able to discuss Canada's role in these organizations and to debate their rules, procedures and practices. To deny that opportunity, I believe, does injustice not only to Parliament and its Members, but also to the Canadian people. Canadians expect to hear and see their Members debate these important issues even though they occur on such rare occasions.

I suppose I should cease being puzzled on a daily basis, but I am puzzled by the fact that the Conservative Party has flipped over. When it was in opposition it said one thing, and now that it is in government it is saying something else. For example, the previous Liberal Government introduced Bill C-130. Among other things, that Bill moved the appropriations given to various foreign agency banks out of the debates in Parliament and into the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. On March 25, 1983, a speech was made by Mr. Doug Roche, who was the spokesperson for the Conservative Party. He said; as reported at page 24162 of Hansard:

> One of the reasons for the importance of debating this legislation is the fact that it is a very rare occasion when the House is seized of any sort of debate on these matters, let alone dealing with legislation having to do with Canada's role in international development. As we know, CIDA has been operating through the years without an Act of Parliament. The only time we deal in any substantial way with what CIDA does as the main proponent of Canada's role in international development, is at the time of the Estimates. I am afraid that all Members of the House are too well aware of the inadequacy of the rules concerning the examination of Estimates that preclude the full treatment that important spending programs require.

Mr. Roche was speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party. He stated that he had no confidence in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to deal with public expenditures through international development. He said that it did not provide an open and public forum which would enable the Canadian public to follow in the discussions concerning our role in international development. Mr. Roche moved an amendment on behalf of the Conservative Party to change the legislation to allow public debate within Parliament on the issues of international development. However, the Liberal Government of the day voted against the amemdment. We in the NDP voted for the amendment. Now the situation has flipped—the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party are fighting against the Conservative Party. What the Conservative Party proposed in opposition, it is now defeating in government. What the Liberal Party in government was defeating, it is now supporting. Surely it must be embarrassing to members of the Conservative Party to realize how they have totally changed their position.

I would like to reiterate the point which we are trying to make. We are not attempting to filibuster, but international development is an important issue. The role which the Canadian Government plays is important. It is important to the Canadian people and it is important to the hundreds of millions of people who are living in Third World countries. Canada has a good image abroad. We are looked to as a country which is not greedy, and not imperialistic in the sense that Canada does not colonize other parts of the world. I believe Canadians want to hear what their representatives feel about international development. This is our last chance to stand in Parliament and speak in this public forum about a situation that concerns international development, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. It is a sad day. The Government has drawn the curtain on the opportunity for public debate. It is a black day. In the past, such Conservatives as John Diefenbaker and Robert Stanfield fought to retain the integrity of Parliament. However, on this day the Conservative Party is the author of a Bill which will further diminish the role of this institution on such an important topic.

• (1150)

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have been told to be very brief so I will be very brief. I understand there is a very important agricultural Bill coming up soon and I would not want to take time away from that.

I can understand some of the points presented to the House, especially by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who did so in his usual perceptive way. I can well imagine myself, were I to be a member of the Opposition and the NDP, God forbid, were to form the Government, not trusting them one little bit. I would be extremely suspicious of any move they made. I would not want to give them any more authority than I had to. In that circumstance I would probably be arguing the same way as the NDP are today. It is an old debate; there are only limited amounts of parliamentary time to devote to any one issue, and we have therefore adopted standard procedures to deal with the Estimates of various Departments.

The test that should be applied as to whether this matter is of such importance that it cannot be dealt with by the normal procedure, concerning money to be allocated to the IFC, the IDA or any of these other institutions, is whether they are fantastically more important than anything else the Government of Canada allocates money to. Are they more important than allocations to the RCMP, the Department of National Defence, or any other Department or any other thing the Government is involved in? I agree with Hon. Members that the types of expenditures we are dealing with today are important, but I do not think in the general scheme of things they are any more or less important than all the other areas to which we allocate funds.

Another aspect of the test would be whether it would be a new expenditure, something that the Parliament of Canada has not previously allocated funds for. Is it an entirely new area we are getting into? By now allocations of this nature to these institutions have become somewhat standardized; it is not new, we have been doing it since the 1950s or before. It is done on a regular basis.

Another test might be the opportunity for debate on these issues, and that point was brought up by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap and his colleagues. I suggest that the opportunity for debate on matters of the financing of these various international institutions has not been precluded in the House of Commons any more than a debate on national defence, the judicial system, Indian affairs or anything else has. We all admit that the changes that were made to the rules of the House of Commons in 1968 are not perfect, and we would all like more parliamentary time to debate these issues rather than in committee, but under those rules, as imperfect as they are, there is a system of opposition days. If the NDP or the Liberal Party wants to use one of its opposition days for the purpose of debating the financing of international institutions, then they certainly can do that. There is nothing preventing them.

So the statement we have heard in this House today from the NDP that this is the last time this matter will be debated in the House of Commons is certainly not true. If the NDP are as concerned with this matter as they say they are, then there will be ample opportunity for them to bring it to the attention of the House of Commons again.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), which has the purpose of ensuring that there shall be regular debates on the advancing of funds by Canada to the World Bank group, including the International Monetary Fund.

The debate which has already taken place this morning on the motion certainly had its ironic moments. We recognize that the last Government brought this sort of proposal forward as far as the regional banks were concerned, and was quite supportive of the principle expressed in the Government's action which our motion endeavours to prevent, action which is designed to eliminate substantial debate in the House of Commons on these matters. We have, of course, seen the irony of the House Leader of the Official Opposition supporting our motion, the irony being a change of position by the former Liberal Government which is now represented in opposition.

Of course, that Party is hardly represented in the House this morning other than by its House Leader, so the irony is not as strong as it might be.

We have another irony of Hon. Members now in the Government, while they were in opposition, taking a very strong stand over the decades through personalities now dead or still with us, having spoken strongly in support of Parliament as an institution in which the representatives of the Canadian people gather to debate the most important questions which face the nation in order to decide, in the eyes of the public, what exactly the Government of Canada should do. We recognize or at least would like to recognize the sincerity of Conservative Members having argued those positions in times past. However, the curious thing which happens when those Members become the cogs in the Government caucus is that suddenly another motive force comes into play and we find Members, such as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), having taken a very strong stand as an opposition member, now attacking the motion we have put before the Commons. One wonders about the hypocrisy involved, although I must confess I feel for these Hon. Members in the Government caucus who are now caught in the machinery as the machinations pursue their course and they have to get up and speak only briefly in support of the Government's action.

Mr. Nickerson: That is all right, it will never happen to you.

Mr. McDermid: You will never have to worry about that.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): One feels for them, caught in this situation. What is the irony of Hon. Members being forced to do the Government's work? What is the irony of a Conservative Party which, when it was in opposition, realized the importance of Parliament but which is now saying that we have a few chances in the year to put things forward if we think they are important, but they really do not think these matters are all that important and will let the machinery work itself out.

I find myself thinking, Mr. Speaker, that the bureaucrats won again, without meaning to be unfairly critical of our splendid Public Service. I think that men and women who spend their working days in offices around us here on the Hill, who probably regard the attention we give to matters at various times as a nuisance in the smooth pursuit of their administrative responsibilities, do regard the House of Commons as an institution which might well end up being petrified, so let's keep these important questions out of it. We think these matters are important, and when the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) compares them with the appropriations for the RCMP or the Department of National Defence, I sense his list of priorities. I am prepared to work with that. The means by which the Government of Canada provides our prosperity and resources to ensure that development can take place in other parts of the world which matches or even outstrips what we have managed in the past has the highest priority. There is nothing more important that we can do, at least in a mundane sense, when dealing with the affairs of the world.

● (1200)

Given the importance of those matters, it seems quite tragic that it will become the responsibility of the Opposition to choose an opposition day to make these points. It is quite tragic that Hon. Members in the Conservative Party, caught in the toils and machinations, are now supporting the operations of a bureaucracy which rarely sees constituents as we do. It sees the world situation from its own limited perspective. Given what has been said in the past by Conservative Members and experiences which I have had with representatives of various ethno-cultural groups, perhaps we should consider the representations of people in this country who have relationships with other parts of the world.

Members of ethno-cultural groups from Europe are in Ottawa this week recognizing the importance of human rights in eastern Europe. People in this country who have escaped with their lives from Asian and Latin American countries are grateful to be here. However, they have by no means severed their sentimental connections. They are still concerned about relatives and friends they have left behind. Those issues are of enormous concern to us. People of these communities believe that one of the glories of our constitution is the House of Commons in which the elected representatives of the Canadian people can debate these issues and press the Government to modify its priorities.

In recent days the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has recognized that the World Bank is quite inadequate. If he sought to make a mark at the international economic summit in Bonn, it was with regard to changing the position of the United States of America and of opening new opportunities. Surely members of the Government caucus can recognize the importance of these things and will fail to tell us that debating these things is boring. Surely they will recognize the importance of keeping a parliamentary forum open so that our fellow Canadians and future fellow Canadians can watch us debate these matters. They must be aware that they have access to us. If they never have access to a Cabinet Minister, we can assure them that for 90 seconds at least the Minister will be aware of this particular problem because I will put it before his face and make him look at it.

Those members of the Canadian body politic should not be told that the bureaucrats will take care of it in the routine of things outside the House of Commons. That kind of disrespect for Parliament may be expected from a long governing Party, but it is most ironic for the Conservative caucus to be putting these things forward. It may be appropriate that we in the New Democratic Party continue to be the strongest advocates of the democratic institutions of this country, particularly the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the debate which we are engaged in today is to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act with regard to the World Bank group. I would like to address the particular motion before us which is with regard to secrecy versus open government, and accountability of the powers of Parliament versus the powers of the Government. It is also a debate about development, but I want to speak on the principles of secrecy versus openness in the field of development, first of all.

I do not think it is a coincidence that the Government seeks greater secrecy and less accountability because it does not have a very good record in this area. Development aid through CIDA and other development agencies has been cut in favour of emergency aid to enable the Government to get publicity by appearing to respond to a crisis. With regard to the crucial issue of providing the aid which the developing world needs, the Government has been deficient. It does not want to be made accountable by having these facts examined.

The tying of trade and aid measures together is a despicable trend which began with the Liberals, and which the Conservatives are continuing. They would prefer to keep it quiet because it is very strongly disapproved of in the international world which suffers from these policies. Our own voluntary and church groups are protesting most vigorously the tying of aid to trade. The Government would like to keep its tendencies away from the public because it knows that it does not have very strong public support.

The issue of development aid and loans does not get discussed enough in Parliament. Some of the Conservatives, when in opposition, had quite a different tack on the subject. I would like to quote the current Canadian ambassador on disarmament who was the Conservative spokesperson on this issue in the previous Parliament. This is from a debate in 1983. He said:

> One of the reasons for the importance of debating this legislation is the fact that it is a very rare occasion when the House is seized of any sort of debate on these matters, let alone dealing with legislation having to do with Canada's role in international development. As we know, CIDA has been operating through the years without an Act of Parliament. The only time we deal in any substantial way with what CIDA does as the main proponent of Canada's role in international development, is at the time of the Estimates. I am afraid that all Members of the House are too well aware of the inadequacy of the rules concerning the examination of Estimates that preclude the full treatment that important spending programs require.

This is precisely the point of the motion before us. The Estimates do not provide adequate opportunity for study and debate, and for bringing opinions of concerned individuals, organizations, and experts to bear on the subject. The previous Conservative speaker said that there are plenty of other opportunities which can be taken. He said that if the NDP is interested in this issue it can use opposition days to debate crucial issues of development aid and credit organizations.

That is simply not enough, Mr. Speaker. We can devote an opposition day and we hope that the Liberals will do the same. However, there are not nearly enough opposition days. The Government schedules the majority of the time and has some responsibility to see that these issues are properly dealt with. It is an absolute cop-out to say that if we have another opinion we should use an opposition day to debate the subject. The Government has a responsibility. It is elected to show leadership and to pay attention to concerns of the public. There is an enormous concern in the public expressed through the churches and voluntary organizations that work throughout the world. Canada has a reputation throughout the world largely because of the volunteer groups that send people out who bring back the message to Canada about needs in the developing world and what Canada can be doing to respond to them. We have enormous experience and expertise in Canada, thanks to this participation of so many people. This should be treated as a valued resource. These people should be consulted because when they appear before committees, when given a chance, they make excellent recommendations.

Some of the motions brought forward by the NDP are very much in line with proposals that have been made by an inter-church task force on corporate responsibility. That same group made recommendations about more openness in the process of consideration of these matters. Let me quote from the Task Force on the Churches and Corporate Responsibility in its brief to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on April 16, of this year:

> Few Canadians are familiar with the important decisions which are made on their behalf by the Canadian executive directors in these major international financial institutions. Unless particularly newsworthy decisions are publicized in the news media, neither Parliament nor the Canadian public are aware of the positions taken by Canada at the IMF or the World Bank.
> It requires dedicated research and a special relationship with American sources if one is to be alerted to forthcoming decisions in these institutions. In order then to discover Canada's position on these matters requires contact with hard-to-reach and often reluctant Canadian officials.

I regret to have to report to the House that this is the opinion of the people who work on this subject. It is only due to American freedom of information measures, that are much stronger than ours, that some of this information comes out.

The report gets even worse:

> Yet these institutions receive contributions from Canadian public funds; decisions about their disbursements and the reasons for these decisions should be available as a matter of course to Canadian parliamentarians and to the Canadian public. There should be legitimate channels for information about projects under consideration.

The report goes on to say that in order to get information through the Business Development publication which is available from Washington, it costs $250. It is clearly designed only for those in the business community who can afford it. The voluntary agencies and churches which have real expertise in these matters find it difficult to keep up.

The report goes on:

> Until 1983, the Canadian government publication, Canada Commerce published systematically a list of projects under consideration or agreed upon by the World Bank and by regional development banks. It noted as well particular officials who could be contacted about these projects. However, this service is no longer provided and we have been unable to discover another Canadian government source which releases such information.

Again, there is a drying up of information rather than an increase. It goes precisely in the direction we do not want or favour. The report continues:

> We recommend that the members of the Standing Committee review the question of public dissemination of information about the World Bank and the IMF.
>
> In particular we recommend that information be published and made available about credit applications, processing status and Canada's position in regard to them for the IMF, and the World Bank as well as for the regional development banks in order to afford parliamentarians and the Canadian public opportunity to engage in discussions about them.

These are not merely abstract matters because this group has particular cases in mind, as do we in this Party, of some fairly scandalous happenings recently.

For example, there is the case of a loan to Chile of which Canada did not disapprove. It is a loan to a military dictatorship with one of the worst records of human rights violations. People are abducted, tortured or held without trial. There are many people in Canada who have fled from that regime and are aware of the problems. Although that repression declined for a while, it is on the increase again as resistance against that government increases. The United States actually abstained from a vote on this matter and Canada did not even do that. Many Canadians would disapprove of this shocking matter and there will be less information about these instances in the future.

Another case with respect to these loans is when the United States exerted pressure to keep a loan from Nicaragua from even reaching the decision stage. This was done because recommendations lower down in the organization on the basis of economic criteria were favourable. Canada has not spoken against that. We are concerned about Canada's role in these matters.

In closing, we want to see greater openness and accountability to Parliament and to the community of volunteers who work actively on international issues and have a great contribution to make to those debates.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me take this opportunity to sum up the reasons for this amendment. Members will see that the effect of this amendment would be to retain the particular section of the Bill as it has existed since 1944.

This section of the Bill has not caused any delays in parliamentary time previously. Section 5(2) at present reads:

> The Minister of Finance may provide for payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in the manner and at the times provided for by the Agreement therefor set out in the Second Schedule, of a sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole an amount equivalent to the subscriptions required from or permitted to be made by Canada, that is to say, two billion, one hundred and seventy-eight million, two hundred thousand United States dollars of the weight and fineness in effect on July 1, 1944.

We assume that there would be a limit reflected in 1985 value beyond which the Government of the day could not spend. The important principle set out in this section is that Parliament decides on the limit of the money that is proposed to be spent by a government. Therefore, Parliament is performing a duty that can be traced as far back as Charles II, if not further.

It has been the case since before 1944 that the Bretton Woods Agreements Act has occasionally come before Parliament to be renewed. There have been few occasions when much parliamentary time has been used to review that Act. Not only are we arguing in favour of that principle in the section, but we believe it is a basic principle of parliamentary democracy and therefore a section which should stay in the Act.

We suggest that the Government should remove Clause 6(3) and Clause 6(4) which would have the effect of eliminating Section 5(2). That section limits the amount a government may spend but does not require it to spend up to that limit. In addition, that section leaves a certain amount of executive privilege to the Government while also allowing Parliament to set out a certain spending limit.

I hope Government Members will recall what they said when they were in opposition and will reconsider their position. Perhaps they will realize that we are attempting to uphold a parliamentary tradition whereby Parliament allocates and votes on the amount of money to be spent by the Government. That is a principle that has been enshrined in this section of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act for many years. We believe the Government should maintain that principle of democracy and we urge it to vote with us so that principle may stand unsullied in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1220)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 7

(a) by striking out line 32 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"including the resources and lending of the International Monetary Fund and the".

(b) by striking out line 36 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"goods and services and also including a detailed review of Canada's participation in the lending activities of the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund, with particular attention to: (a) Canada's use of its voice and vote to promote internationally recognized human rights; (b) Canadian initiatives to promote the use of loans to meet the basic human needs of the poorest and provide for a more equitable distribution of income in recipient countries; (c) Policy actions taken by Canada to protect the neutrality and multilateral character of the World Bank Group and International Monetary Fund and resist the excessive pursuit of rigid bilateral policies by other member nations; (d) Canadian initiatives to promote financial adjustment policies that do not impose additional hardship on the poor."

She said: Mr. Speaker, the first subsection of this motion is primarily for clarification. Clause 7 in the present Bill is a reporting clause. It repeals the present Section 7 and substitutes the following:

7. The Minister of Finance shall, on or before the 31st day of March next following the end of each year or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first thirty days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, submit to Parliament a report containing a general summary of operations under this Act and details of all such operations that directly affect Canada, including the resources and lending of the World Bank Group, the funds subscribed or contributed by Canada, borrowings in Canada and procurement of Canadian goods and services.

What we have done, Mr. Speaker, to make clear that this Act is also addressed to the International Monetary Fund as well as to the World Bank group, is to add the International Monetary Fund so that the latter half of the clause will read:

—and details of all such operations that directly affect Canada including the resources and lending of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank group—

There should be no difficulty with anyone supporting that clarification.

The second part of the motion is a substantive one: it tries to do something we have been trying to do in this part of the House in one fashion or another over the past many years, namely, to establish certain criteria to be followed in the lending practices of international financial institutions.

As our amendment indicates, there are four particular criteria that we have felt and continue to feel are essential in the lending practices of international financial institutions. The first of these is that particular attention should be paid to the human rights question, and that Canada's use of its voice and vote in international financial institutions should be for the purpose of promoting internationally recognized human rights. I will return to that in a moment.

The second criterion we are proposing concerns Canadian initiatives to promote the use of loans to meet the basic human needs of the poorest and to provide for more equitable distribution of income in recipient countries.

The third criterion concerns policy actions taken by Canada to protect the neutrality and multilateral character of the World Bank group and the International Monetary Fund and to resist the excessive pursuit of rigid bilateral policies by other member nations.

The final criterion we are proposing in this section for the operation of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank group is that there be Canadian initiatives to promote financial adjustment policies that do not impose additional hardship on the poor.

The way it is now in this clause, without any of the four additional criteria that I have just outlined and that are in our motion, the clause terminates with the words "procurement of Canadian goods and services". That is the way the clause ends now. The emphasis, therefore, in the reporting process is really on what Canada only has gotten out of the operations of these international financial institutions, what procurement of Canadian goods and services. That is literally all we will get in the reporting process provided in Clause 7.

What we are saying is that there are at least four more areas about which we want to know, and we want a report to this House concerning the activities of the international financial institutions covered by this Bill. We want to know whether in the first instance human rights abuses are being taken into consideration by the World Bank group and by the International Monetary Fund before they authorize a loan.

The arguments of the officials of the Department of Finance in committee were almost contradictory. On the one hand, they said that if they included gross abuses of human rights criteria they would be "politicizing" the IMF and the World Bank. On the other hand, they pointed out that in the case of Uganda several years ago when there were gross human rights violations, it was proper that a loan should not have been extended to that country. Apparently on that occasion refusing a loan was not in fact politicizing in the case of Uganda.

We have argued time and time again that requiring international financial institutions to look at the human rights situation in a potential recipient country is in fact not a politicization. Human rights and the human rights covenant of the United Nations are universal. All countries of the world which signed the human rights covenant have effectively said that the protection of human rights is beyond politics and partisanship, that it is universal. We all said that, all of us who signed the UN covenant. Because we have all said that, we have taken it out of a narrow partisan or political realm. We have said that because we all agree on human rights and are all opposed to gross human rights abuses, we are not politicizing the issue. Indeed, as the Canadian Government has already shown when it did not support loans to Uganda, it could equally well show today that it does not support loans to countries engaging in massive abuses of human rights. We are asking for this criterion to which apparently all nations that signed the human rights covenant of the United Nations agreed. It is a criterion which is universal and is universally agreed to.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that my time is coming to an end. My colleagues will address this criterion further, as well as the other three criteria which we are asking to be added to give some genuine meaning to the Act and to our belief in genuine international development assistance that respects human rights and the needs of the neediest.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to set the record straight and say that we, as new Members, are perfectly free to make statements, that we were not forced to do so by any Minister, that I get along perfectly well with both Ministers and that I am free to come or not to come to the House. I offered my services this morning because my Ministers were busy, but Hon. Members may rest assured that we are perfectly free, that we are not forced in any way to defend our Government's policy, and that we take an active part in that Government. I wanted to be on the record as having said that, and now, I would like to speak more specifically to Motion No. 2.

I think the first part of the motion, namely section (a), if I am not mistaken, clarifies the paragraph in question.

I even think that part of the motion would be acceptable, if the motion did not include a second part that is not acceptable to us. The first part stresses, and I am not saying it is redundant to do so, that the International Monetary Fund is to be included with the World Bank. Although I think this is covered in the preambles, the amendment does provide further clarification. However, I must reiterate that we cannot accept the amendment because it is part of a more complex motion, whose second part is totally unacceptable to us.

As for the second part, it is a firm statement of intent, the substance of which we support as well, but I think it would be dangerous at this time, to make a statement of intent that might be construed by other nations as restrictive, or which might be interpreted differently in the course of time. We have seen treaties signed after the last World War which seemed to promote freedom and which proved to be a straightjacket for some nations. I think it would be better to provide a little more latitutde with respect to the principles being laid down here, so that our representatives in these institutions can exercise, not their voting rights, which are frequently made use of at the United Nations, whose proceedings I have had a chance to observe, but their powers of persuasion, since in these organizations it is more important to establish a consensus: in other words, people analyze the problems thoroughly, discuss them and instead of submitting them immediately for a vote, they use their powers of persuasion.

So, once again, as a free agent, but not reluctant to practise my English, I prepared a short speech in response to the second part of the motion.

[English]

Canada has also been a very strong supporter of efforts over the past decade to ensure that World Bank loans promote the basic human needs of the poorest people in developing countries. In part, we have supported this approach as a means of ensuring a more equitable distribution of income in recipient countries. Moreover, we have felt that this approach would help ensure that the poor would benefit regardless of the political and ethical ideologies of the particular Government which happens to be in power at the time the loan is approved. World Bank and International Development Association loans seek to address the long-term problems of the poor, and great care should be taken before turning off programs which take a long time to get started. We are confident that the World Bank is seriously pursuing the objective of improving the economic lot of the poor in recipient countries and therefore deserves our strong support.

The proposed amendment would create the erroneous impression that Canada does not believe the World Bank is pursuing these objectives. The amendment talks of Canadian initiatives and policy action in these institutions. Instead, we believe the World Bank is committed and the need is for Canada to support the effective implementation and evolution, as necessary, of existing policies.

By referring to the use of Canada's vote in these institutions, the amendment also suggests a line of action which we believe could be counter-productive. Canada has sought to avoid the use of votes in the World Bank and has encouraged decision-making based on consensus. As a consequence, unlike the United Nations, voting is not a common practice in these institutions. Canada, by itself, could not stop a loan and if we were to encourage other countries to exercise their votes on the executive boards, we would not be able to contain the practice to our own objectives. In other words, we would likely only encourage greater politicization of these institutions.

• (1240)

In short, Mr. Speaker, we want to be consistent with our policy actions, as much within international organizations as within the Canadian Government itself. We would use persuasion and even change our original concept through a document or consultations paving the way for a final decision, rather than make a hasty decision such that those basic principles might eventually be harmful to us.

Keeping in mind what I have just said, I repeat that the first part of the motion is acceptable to us, because it does shed more light even though it is not exclusive since the first part of the Bill covers everything under the Bretton Woods Acts as well as the other related organizations. However, we cannot subscribe to the first part because the second part might hamper our negotiations with respect to the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the International Finance Corporation and the International Development Association.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot support this amendment.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I particularly enjoyed the comments of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). I found it rather interesting that the Government Members in a sense support the first part of this motion, which includes the name IMF for clarification, but when it comes to the reporting of human rights, there is no way they will be on the side of that. They do not want to support the second part of the motion. They would have supported the first part, but it was part of a package. The Hon. Member for LaSalle said that the second part of the package includes not restricting Canada's behaviour to tying loans to human rights support in our development assistance, but simply the reporting of the ways and means by which we were encouraging the development of human rights in those countries in which the World Bank group is associated.

I look rather incredulously across the aisle. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and a variety of their colleagues. Unless they speak differently, I guess I am hearing that they support the Hon. Member for LaSalle when he says that when it comes to human rights they do not want to be associated with that business, that they want to maintain the status quo.

The Hon. Member went on to read a nice statement that some bureaucrat obviously wrote, saying we should look at Canada's behaviour when it comes to human rights and at how we have ensured that all of our participation for development aid has resulted in more equality, in more egalitarian use of the aid and so on. Everyone in this House knows that the poor have become poorer and the right have become richer in almost every nation that we are presumably assisting, including Canada.

I take with some large chunks of salt some of the comments made by the Hon. Member. I do not believe he actually meant what he was saying, but was in fact reflecting the views expressed in the written statement of some bureaucrat on the government side.

I want to say a word or two about some aspects of this motion. We are asking the Government to accept this motion because it attempts to do basically three things. It attempts to ask Canada to pay some attention to human rights issues in our lending practices through the World Bank group. One could list pages and pages of countries that have received assistance from the World Bank group where respect for human rights is an absolute travesty.

I refer to countries like Chile. When Allende's elected Government was in power in Chile, the United States said that we had to stop this nonsense of supporting through the IMF and the World Bank the activities going on in Chile. As soon as that Government was replaced by General Pinochet and a totalitarian military dictatorship was imposed on the people and human rights were tossed out the window, the United States went to bat and said that now is the time for the IMF and the World Bank group to show support for the country of Chile.

We could go on with Vietnam. When Vietnam was in a state of war and there was American involvement there, the U.S. was supportive of IMF and World Bank aid. The minute they pulled out, they used their pressure to stop any assistance to South Vietnam.

In 1982 the United States Treasury identified 80 critical development issues in which the United States had sought to influence the policies of the World Bank group. That is from the United States Treasury itself. The United States said it was going to impose its heavy hand on the decision-making of that group. As a result, more and more development assistance tended to go to those countries where human rights abuses are extremely well known.

All we are asking in this motion is that Canada pay some attention to this fact, that Canada use its influence in these world financial groups to speak out against some of these pressure tactics of the United States and support the proposals that tend to recognize the human rights abuses in a variety of countries.

The motion goes on to add one other aspect. That is that the loans to the various countries coming from the World Bank group and the IMF assist those that really need assistance. All of us know that much of that aid simply goes to perpetuate the status quo. The status quo means a country where the land is controlled by a handful of individuals. I see the Minister of Agriculture here. He knows full well that one of the difficulties that these countries face is a continuation of a monoculture type of agriculture where people are starving because they do not have land on which to grow subsistence crops. They are encouraged through their system to carry on with banana plantations, coconut plantations and so on which are designed for a handful of people and for the procurement of foreign exchange. There has to be some balance in this. Many of our assistance programs simply perpetuate the old status quo type of economies that do little, if anything, to assist the poor people in a variety of these countries.

The third part of our motion asks that Canada work to protect the multilateral character of World Bank lending. Rather than tie a lot of the assistance in some way in terms of bilateral agreements, the multilateral system should be used. Anyone who appreciates and supports the concept of economic assistance to developing our lesser developed countries will have to admit that multilateral approaches in terms of assistance are certainly better than the bilateral-tied aid situation. This motion asks that Canada use its influence so that wherever possible the multilateral approach is used. I have not read a single article or book that says that the way to go is more bilateral aid. Quite the contrary. We are just going along with what is common knowledge.

We are asking the Government to pay attention to human rights abuses in countries that receive much of the benefits of the World Bank group and the IMF. We ask that Canada pay attention to doing what it can to ensure that the people who need the support, the economic infrastructure development and the export assistance in the developing countries receive it, not simply the landed aristocracy. Or, if you like, have aid milked through a corrupt, tinpot dictatorship as the sole beneficiary of much of this particular aid. More attention should be paid by Canada to encouraging development of multilateral assistance.

I cannot imagine why anybody would vote against this motion. I hope that before we vote we will have an opportunity to hear one of the Members of the Government Party explain what is wrong with these three proposals.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on Motion No. 2, particularly the second part of that motion where we are very modestly asking that the Government give more details in its annual reports on the activities of the World Bank group and the International Monetary Fund. In particular, we list four areas where we believe the House of Commons and the Canadian public generally need to have information from our Government as to the way in which we have participated in those organizations.

As the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) pointed out, we want to know how Canada has used its voice and its vote to promote internationally recognized human rights. The Parliamentary Secretary said that the Government tries to operate by consensus, but let us at least hear what our voice said when we were trying to reach consensus. Where do we stand on some of these questions?

The Task Force on the Churches and Corporate Responsibility, in its presentation to the committee last month, said that there should be the establishment of basic human rights criteria as a co-determinant for Canada's voting decisions at the IMF and the World Bank. When it talks about basic human rights, Mr. Speaker, it talks of the most narrow and restrictive meaning of that term. It was not talking about such exalted things as freedom of the press. It was talking about basic rights such as the right to be free from arbitrary arrest, detention and execution, the right to be free from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and the right to be free from internal or external exile. The most basic of human rights are what we are concerned about here. We would like to see some reporting on the way in which our voice, our vote, was used in determining loans to countries such as Chile where those basic rights are not observed at present.

We want to see reporting on the way in which Canadian initiatives promote the use of loans to meet the most basic human needs of the poorest and provide for a more equitable distribution of income to recipient countries. Certainly, Hon. Members of our Party—and I would like to think Hon. Members from all Parties—would not want our aid funding to go to create a wealthy elite which is completely separated from the needs of the poorest and most needy of the people in the country to which aid is going. We do not want to create just a shiny veneer at the top of the economic heap. We want to see true development, which means working from the bottom up rather than from the top down. We want to see policy actions taken by Canada to protect the neutrality and multilateral character of the World Bank group and the IMF and to resist the excessive pursuit of rigid bilateral policies by other member nations.

It is interesting to note that when this Bill was being debated in committee, the Government said we cannot have it both ways; we cannot both be concerned about human rights and be concerned that this whole process is not going to be politicized. I would like to ask Hon. Members on the government side if they see human rights simply as a question of politics, if they see it as simply something which pertains to the particular policies of a particular government at a given time, or if they see human rights and the question of politicization as something which is more basic as something quite different?

For example, we have seen the actions of the United States in the last few months in trying to block loans to Nicaragua. It is not because Nicaragua did not meet the formal criteria for the loans. In fact, the loans were approved on a technical basis. It is simply because Nicaragua does not meet some political criteria which are established by a paranoid official in the White House. We want to oppose that kind of politicization and it has nothing whatever to do, Mr. Speaker, with our insistence upon seeing that basic human rights are observed.

Finally, we want reporting on Canadian initiatives to promote financial adjustment policies which do not impose additional hardship on the poor. In the past we have seen the situation time and again where a debtor nation falls into some difficulty with the IMF with respect to its debts. The IMF goes in and establishes very rigid policies which have to be followed in order for the country to secure a rescheduling of its loan or additional credit. These policies impact most directly on the poor people in areas such as the withdrawal of food subsidies or cut-backs in social services. This is turn has led to riots, the so-called IMF riots where people have simply said: "We refuse to knuckle under to this kind of repression"; and that kind of unrest has led to further political repression and a movement away from democracy. That in turn often creates even more problems for the economy. It becomes a vicious circle.

We believe that Canada's voice should be heard in the direction of wanting to see that there are certain basic criteria which are adhered to in any IMF policy for debt rescheduling. Some of those criteria should require that debt rescheduling not result in an intolerable burden being placed upon the poorest people of the country involved.

It was interesting to note over the past week that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he was on his way to the summit at Bonn, said that he wanted to be a voice for the poor, for the Third World. Whether he was getting in some training because Conservative policies might soon leave Canada in a Third World, poor situation, or whether he was really concerned with speaking out on behalf of present Third World countries, I do not know, but if he is concerned about speaking out for present Third World countries, then I believe this is one area where Canada should be very active. We should make sure when we are dealing with the IMF that IMF resheduling does not impact in a way which simply adds additional burdens on the poor.

When the Task Force on the Churches and Corporate Responsibility appeared before the committee, Mr. Speaker, it pointed to three areas where it thought there should be establishment of the basic human rights criteria as a co-determinant for the granting of loans through the IMF or the World Bank. It also thought that there should be the establishment of social criteria as an integral part of the stabilization and adjustment measures negotiated between credit applicants and the IMF. When we are dealing with those countries which have been involved with gross violations of human rights, it suggested that there could be some specific projects which would give help to those who were most poor and needy and perhaps the establishment of a basic needs criteria which would ask the question: "Does a specific project help in such areas as food, shelter, clothing or education for the people at the very lowest stratum of society?" If that is the case, perhaps we would see our way clear to make loans available in those countries, but not if the loans simply go to provide some kind of development which is going to benefit only the people at the top.

It is interesting that Section 701 of the International Financial Institutions Act of the United States has this kind of provision. The brief of the Task Force on the Churches and Corporate Responsibility states, and I quote:

> Section 701 prohibits U.S. aid through multilateral institutions to "gross and consistent violators of internationally recognized human rights", unless it can be established that the aid project in question serves basic human needs. Basic human needs are defined as covering food, clothing, shelter, health and education.

This is one of the areas in which I think we should be willing to move. It is one of the areas which we want to see reported on. As my colleagues have said, we believe that this motion calling for reporting is one which should be supported on all sides of the House and I urge all Hon. Members of the Government to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO ELECTION RESULTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the wonderful job he did on behalf of his colleague, Frank Miller. The packaged Tory presentation, so typical of government by presidential caveat, was absolutely and totally rejected. In fact the downward tailspin of the Ontario Conservatives began when the Premier refused to debate the Opposition Leaders and then attached himself to the Prime Minister's coat-tails, which proved to be very short.

I can understand why the Prime Minister refused to say anything in English about the election results when confronted in Bonn. The stunning victory of David Peterson and the Ontario Liberals, the Party that received the most votes of any in Ontario, was a massive repudiation of Mulroney's seven months of broken federal promises.

The Prime Minister, on the satellite Tory love-in, said: "You can bet your mortgage on a Tory majority". As housing critic, I am calling to collect.

Today the Prime Minister blames the revenge factor on the tremendous Tory losses. Surely he should know best about the revenge factor; witness the cheap shot he levelled at the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) regarding the Nicaraguan embargo. Mulroney believes the urge to get even may overcome the urge to get elected. That is the time-worn Tory way, but the people of Canada are not interested in getting even. They are interested in getting jobs. Take heed, Mr. Prime Minister, the message from Ontario means—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but her time has expired.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TAX DISCOUNTERS—DELAY IN GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform the House of another instance of the Conservative Government's policy of strangulation by consultation.

Throughout this fall and winter, Members of Parliament and consumer groups have heard the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) say that he intends to act on the shameful practice of tax discounting. He, like the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the previous Liberal Government, fully intends to act, and told representatives of the Quebec consumer affairs group, ACEF, that he intended to bring legislation before the House by June of this year.

However, yesterday the Minister reversed himself, and now he wants to consult further with a consultation paper. This paper, and yet more consultations, will take even more weeks and months. The Minister should know that the longer he consults the more difficult his final action will become, because tax discounting is growing rapidly. Since 1981 the number of companies has quadrupled, their revenues have quintupled, and the number of offices has increased 13 times to more than 1,000.

All this is happening in an area that has been universally condemned as a rip-off of tens of millions of dollars from those who can afford it least. Much of the money taken comes from the federal Government's own child tax credit. Yet the Minister's reponse is more consultation. Consultation with whom, and consultation to what end? The Minister should realize that there is a point at which consultation becomes stalling, and—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

HELSINKI ACCORDS

OTTAWA CONFERENCE—HUMAN RIGHTS IN POLAND

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, participants in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, designed to monitor compliance with the 1975 Helsinki Agreement signed by Canada, the United States, and 33 European countries, today commenced formal deliberations in Ottawa.

Specifically with regard to Poland, it is crucial that the participants address themselves to the human rights of the Polish people and the Solidarity movement. Lech Walesa and Father Popieluszko have become household names because they have embodied the hopes and fears of their fellow Poles who seek those fundamental rights and freedoms enjoyed by all Canadians.

Therefore it is Canada's privilege and responsibility, as a nation which takes pride in its historical role as a champion of human rights and freedoms, to support and encourage the Solidarity movement actively. This we can do by calling upon the respective Governments of Poland and the Soviet Union to uphold the terms of the Helsinki Accords with respect to Solidarity and the people of Poland.

In 1961 the late American President, John F. Kennedy, immortalized the words, "Ich bin ein Berliner", precisely because those words encapsulated his own identification with the oppressed people of East Berlin and East Germany.

Similarly today, each Canadian who values freedom and democracy, can identify with the people of Poland by proclaiming that we, too, are members of Solidarity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NEED TO RESTORE CREDIBILITY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue the comments I started to make last Wednesday, which appear on page 4287 of Hansard. I mentioned the fact that in my riding, more than 15 per cent of the letters I sent were returned with the comment: "Moved: no forwarding address". However, most of the addresses were correct.

Mr. Speaker, what is the use of spending so much time and effort on communicating, if our mail does not reach its destination? Isn't every taxpayer entitled to receive prompt and equitable service from Canada Post?

As a Canadian and as the Member for Québec East, I am very proud to serve my constituents, and I believe it would be tremendous if all Canada Post employees could feel the same pride and satisfaction with a job well done.

S.O. 21

Mr. Speaker, the credibility of Canada Post must be restored in order to regain user confidence. Would the answer be to create another commission of enquiry?

TOURISM

FEDERAL ADVERTISING—DISSATISFACTION IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, some of the members of Common Council of the City of Saint John have expressed their displeasure with the federal Government's tourism advertising.

[Translation]

In fact, the Federal Government's tourism advertising in the April issue of the magazine "Sélection" emphasizes tourism in Quebec and in Southern Ontario. As for New Brunswick, the ad only mentions the Campbellton Festival and Loyalist Day.

Does the Minister not realize there are more tourist attractions in New Brunswick? Has the Government forgotten that the Canada Games will be held in that province this year? I should think that would be a very important national event.

But that is not all. The Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) also forgot to mention in his ad the Acadian Games, the Lobster Festival, the Fisheries Festival, the Acadians' National Day, and a lot more.

The people of New Brunswick have every right to be dissatisfied.

[English]

"It's very bad. It's about total neglect," said the Common Council. "The federal mandate should be larger than that." Is this what the Minister means by: "We have to back winners at the expense of losers?" Are we in New Brunswick going to be the losers?

EDUCATION

FIRING OF VANCOUVER SCHOOL BOARD BY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a Budget for May 23 and said that it would be a tough one. Yesterday the Social Credit Government of British Columbia fired the duly elected members of the Vancouver School Board because those trustees, with public support, refused to apply Draconian restraint measures, opting instead for decent education for Vancouver children.

The Vancouver trustees were elected specifically on a pro-education, anti-restraint program. Then the Government of British Columbia, in January of this year, passed a dictatorial provision in the Education (Interim) Finance Act, which states:

On or before May 1 in each year the Board of each school district shall by by-law adopt the budget for the next fiscal year in accordance with any directives issued by the Minister.

I call upon the federal Cabinet to look closely at the disallowance power it has under Sections 56 and 90 of the Constitution Act of 1867, to strike down this anti-democratic provincial law, and to restore democracy in British Columbia. I further call upon the federal Government, which is negotiating English as a second language funding with the Government of British Columbia, to use its influence so that education dollars are spent for education.

Finally, I would draw to the attention of the Minister of Finance how restraint policies have ruined the once prosperous economy of British Columbia. In his Budget of May 23, I ask him to avoid that kind of Draconian restraint and any educational cut-backs.

NATIONAL PARKS

RESTORATION OF CITADEL HILL IN HALIFAX

Mr. Stewart McInnes (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, Citadel Hill in Halifax will be restored as a result of an historic agreement signed between Parks Canada and The Friends of the Citadel Society. This program is a first, and is representative of our Government's desire to have private groups take the initiative in areas where high deficits have forced government restraint.

The Friends of the Citadel have initiated a revised plan whereby the restoration, which was previously deferred, will now proceed with the co-operation of Parks Canada. This joint project, which will provide immediate employment for approximately 65 students as "period soldiers", will also see extensive portions of the Citadel's fortifications restored.

• (1410)

Under this momentous agreement The Friends of the Citadel have committed themselves to raising approximately $2 million over the course of the project, while Parks Canada will provide $1 million. I feel confident that the citizens of Halifax will respond with generosity and enthusiasm to this plan. I applaud the ingenuity and imagination of The Friends of the Citadel, and the sensitivity of the federal Government in implementing the restoration of Citadel Hill.

INDUSTRY

NEW BRUNSWICK MEAT PROCESSING FIRMS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of this House to a crucial issue facing two major meat processing firms in New Brunswick. The future viability and existence of Hub Meat Packers Limited in Moncton, and Chippin Bros. Ltd. in Fredericton, will be in jeopardy if and when the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) signs an ERDA agreement with the Province of Prince Edward Island.

This agreement is intended to live up to a promise made by the past Liberal Government in the latter days of its mandate to provide funding to the former Canada Packers plant in Charlottetown, P.E.I. The Department of Agriculture, and the government commissioned study on the red meat industry in Altantic Canada, both cautioned against expansion of meat processing capacity in the Altantic Provinces.

The Province of P.E.I. has already expressed its intention to expand the number of hogs processed from 2,650 to 4,500 per week. Thus the activities of the federal Government, in conjunction with the Government of P.E.I., will place in jeopardy the supply of hogs and beef to the existing plants in Fredericton and Moncton.

Our Government has shown integrity in honouring past commitments, but a lack of foresight is allowing this commitment to be kept without taking precautions to protect the supply of hogs and beef to the plants in New Brunswick, or to limit the processing capacity of the P.E.I. plant. I urge the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to co-ordinate activities with other federal government agencies to guarantee the supply of hogs and beef to New Brunswick plants so as to protect the more than 600 jobs currently in existence but in jeopardy in both Moncton and Fredericton.

IMMIGRATION

NEED TO ADOPT GLOBAL POLICY CONCERNING REFUGEES AND IMMIGRANTS IN GENERAL

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Last week, Mr. Speaker, we learned that the Progressive Conservative Government had cancelled its lease with Toronto's Avion Hotel where refugee status applicants were held. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) stated that from now on humanitarian organizations should be responsible for sheltering and feeding a number of future refugees.

If we contrast the decisions to reduce refugee services and raise next year's immigration levels, the contradiction is even more obvious.

The Progressive Conservative Government is planning to let private organizations assume part of the refugee financial burden instead of shouldering its responsibilities and expanding refugee services at the same time as it raises immigration levels.

What we need, Mr. Speaker, is a new global policy concerning refugees and immigrants in general. This policy would cover such sectors as employment, training and social services, as well as others more specifically related to reception and accommodation.

Therefore I urge the Progressive Conservative Government to drop its plans to let private organizations look after landed and future immigrants.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

VISIT TO NETHERLANDS BY CANADIAN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, from coast to coast, Canadians must have felt pride at the hero's welcome some 2,000 Canadian veterans and veteran's spouses received from the Dutch people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: This visit to the 40th anniversary celebration of the liberation of the Netherlands from Nazi occupation was more than a sentimental journey; it was also a message from history. For a generation Canada and the Netherlands have had a warm and secure friendship. Neither country has had aggressive desires against any other people. Each has been committed to peace. However, this anniversary of war does not contradict any of that. Rather, it reminds us that preparedness for defence is necessary for peace.

Canadians died in the Netherlands in 1944 and 1945 because the democracies were not prepared to resist Nazi aggression in 1939 and 1940. Our desire for peace in the 1980s must benefit from this hard lesson. Sir Winston Churchill said another name for World War II could have been the "unnecessary war", unnecessary because it could have been prevented. This anniversary of World War II reminds us that if Canadians are never to return to Europe and war again, Canada and its allies must be prepared to prevent aggression by being prepared to resist it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ALBERTA CABINET MINISTERS

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to Oral Question Period, may I advise Members of the presence in our gallery today of the following Alberta Cabinet Ministers: The Hon. H. L. Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE RELATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The unfortunate failure of the Bonn Summit to move forward the agenda on world trade threatens to accelerate protectionist sentiment in the U.S. Congress and, indeed, in the European Economic Community, potentially leaving Canada in a very vulnerable position.

The Prime Minister will understand that any new trade barriers in the U.S. would be of grave concern to Canada. My question relates to his answer yesterday in the House when he told Members that he could not guarantee that Canada would receive any exemption from American trade barriers, yet a number of weeks ago in Quebec City he signed a joint declaration with the President of the U.S. moving both Canadians and Americans toward freer trade. Would the Prime Minister be good enough to explain to the House just what kind of arrangement he has with the President of the U.S.?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Liberal Party castigate the Government for trying to develop closer and sounder commercial relations with the U.S., to find all of a sudden the Grits are getting worried. Well they should be, because there are three million Canadian jobs which depend on developing the kind of mature and responsible relationships we have tried to rebuild since the election campaign, and with which, I am sure it is widely known, my right hon. friend is in general agreement. Indeed, there was a failure to reach unanimity at Bonn, but Canada, along with other countries, worked very strenuously to preserve the multilateral trading process and the thrust toward liberalization of trade. The Quebec meeting was all the more important because there was a declaration of intention there between the U.S. and Canada.

We hope there will not be a breakdown in multilateral moves toward trade liberalization but, if there is, we believe that the efforts we have initiated will stand us in good stead in consideration of options vis-à-vis the U.S., all of which will be designed to protect Canadian jobs vis-à-vis the U.S. market.

INTEREST RATES ISSUE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my criticism of the Prime Minister's position at the Quebec Summit was that he over-estimated the President's clout with the U.S. Congress, which is where our problem is going to lie.

[Translation]

However, besides our concern over American trade barriers, Canadians are also worried about interest rates. When in Bonn, the Prime Minister should have raised the interest rates issue with President Reagan. How come he did not manage to convince his friend the President to include in the final communiqué a plan of action to lower world interest rates?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we did discuss at length the problems created by interest rates and their impact on future economic recovery. Should one care to read the communiqué, one would indeed note direct references to the causes of our interest rates. It must be said, one is the extraordinary indebtedness which our relatively small population has inherited from the previous Government. When the other nations were in a position to appreciate the full extent of the debt which Canada inherited from the Liberals, they were quite horrified by such indebtedness. That is why our economic recovery program is much more serious and much more appropriately geared to the private sector.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance had explained that interest rates are linked with the American monetary policy.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES POLLUTION—CUT IN UNITED STATES PROGRAM FUNDING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question arises out of our relationship with the U.S. I was disturbed, as were I believe many Members, to learn of the recent decision of the U.S. Senate Committee on the environment which effectively cut about $175 million from pollution programs in states bordering the Great Lakes. This is, of course, of great concern to Canada in relation to those international waters. Would the Prime Minister advise the House whether he has telephoned the President of the United States on this very serious environmental subject?

● (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition perhaps knows that in the hearings prior to the decision being taken, representations had been made by the Government of Canada. We regret the decision that has been taken. We will be making other representations. We will try to follow those through normal channels at the moment. However, if it becomes necessary for me to raise the matter when I meet the Secretary of State, Mr. Schultz, in Washington in 10 days time, I will certainly do that.

TRADE

TRADE WITH NICARAGUA—POSITION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In the light of the decision made yesterday by the U.S. Treasury Department to monitor closely Canadian branches of U.S. companies that trade with Nicaragua, could the Prime Minister give Canadian businessmen the assurance that they can continue to trade with that country, without fear of reprisals? Furthermore, could we perhaps ask companies, even the branches of U.S. companies, to sell agricultural equipment and medical supplies, which are both extremely important to the economic survival of the people of Nicaragua, without incurring any punitive action on the part of the American Government?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made it clear since the American policy was announced that it is their policy and not ours. We have sought and received assurances that American sanctions will not affect Canadian exports, including those in the sensitive fields which the Hon. Member has mentioned.

The Member refers to reports out of the United States that Americans will be closely monitoring Canadian activity. If that is the case, I can say that there will be a whole lot of monitoring going on, because we intend to monitor extremely closely both the formulation and application of any regulations that the Americans might bring in with regard to their sanctions to ensure that they do not limit, in any way at all, Canadian exports to, or Canadian relations with, Nicaragua.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO LIBERAL MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the statement of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. However, I would like to inform him that when the External Affairs committee advocated the proposition that Canadians should try to fill the gap, a member of his own Party said that it would be "more or less like selling yourself off the street", if Canada were to fill the gap. I hope the Hon. Member will ensure that Members of his Party do not say that, because we want to help the poor people of Nicaragua; Canadians do not want to persecute them.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if there was a question there.

Mr. Chrétien: It was the Member for Halifax West.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He has the Member right. I do not know that that is any guarantee that he has the statement right. I would like to make it clear that the interest of the Government, and I would hope the interest of Parliament, is that the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada can act, during the period when these sanctions are in place, in every way possible to encourage econmic strength and political stability in Latin America. Our principal concern is the strength and vitality of the Contadora process. We in the Government, I hope with the support of Parliament, intend to do everything we can to strengthen that Contadora process.

REQUEST THAT EXPORT CREDITS BE EXTENDED TO NICARAGUA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and follows up on the very good statement he has just made. Is Canada now prepared to extend export credits to Nicaragua and to Canadian firms that are willing and able to undertake increased exports of fertilizers, pesticides, machine parts, and so on? Will he now say yes to extended export credits to both Nicaragua and those firms?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at this time in the afternoon of this particular Tuesday I am not prepared to say yes to the question that has just been raised by the Hon. Member. We are going to look at the policies that are brought in by the United States. We are going to look particularly to ensure that there is no extra-territorial application. We will then make judgments as to anything else that Canada should do.

I have already made it very clear that the Government of Canada does not intend to have its policies changed by the American introduction of sanctions. We do not intend to change the aid and development program we have put in place. We do not intend to change the plans of the Minister for External Relations to visit Central America and Nicaragua later this summer. We do not intend to change our strong and unequivocal support for the Contadora process.

REQUEST THAT ENVOY VISIT NICARAGUA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, will we do something to fill the enormous gap that is going to be caused by the U.S. embargo? The one big thing we could do is to extend export credits.

The Minister for External Relations will not be going for several weeks. Since we have no mission in Nicaragua, will the Minister consider sending a special envoy now from his Department to Nicaragua to determine the economic and other needs of the Nicaragua people and ways in which Canada might further the excellent work we are already doing? The envoy could report back to the Minister on the additional things we could do to be helpful.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the acknowledgement of the Hon. Member that the work being done by the Government of Canada in Nicaragua is excellent. Indeed, I would go further than that and say that the interest that has been shown by private Canadian groups and individuals has also been excellent.

I want to know what is happening in Nicaragua as a result of the sanctions that have been announced. If special means are required to find new information on what is happening there, we will certainly do that. First, I want to see the exact nature of the sanctions that are being imposed. I want a specific idea of what is at issue here. Then we can begin to see if it is useful for Canada to add to the development work we are involved in for the support of Cantadora and the other very extensive support we have already given to the process of stability and peace in Central America.

BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

WORLD MONETARY CONFERENCE PROPOSAL

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked why the subject of interest rates had not figured prominently at the Boon Summit and why the Prime Minister did not ask President Reagan to agree to a world monetary conference. The Minister of Finance responded that Finance Ministers discussed the importance of lowering interest rates. Did the Prime Minister then voice this concern to President Reagan and stress to him the need for a world conference on reform of the international monetary system, which is what France was advocating?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that was responded to by the Minister of Finance yesterday. France put forth its views in regard to a monetary conference. Those views were not shared by its European partners in the Economic Community, nor were they vigorously shared by other participants.

CANADIAN POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has previously said publicly at the IMF meetings that there is a need for the industrialized countries to work in concert to reduce their interest rates. It seems as though the Minister of Finance may take whatever position he wishes with his counterparts, but cannot count on the Prime Minister to back him up if those positions in any way appear to threaten our so-called special relationship with the U.S.

What exactly was the situation? Did the Prime Minister try, without success, to influence President Reagan, or did he simply side with President Reagan, as President Mitterand indicated, in an effort to protect that special relationship?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can clarify some misunderstanding which the Hon. Member clearly has on this topic. Frence wants a major Bretton Woods type of conference. Those are the words of President Mitterand. We and other members of the summit nations have said that we do not need a major Bretton Woods type of conference. However, it would be helpful to take the report of the Group of Ten Finance Ministers that will be tabled in Tokyo in June and study it further in Seoul at the IMF meeting and possibly come up with some evolutionary changes in the system, but not a revolutionary change like a major Bretton Woods type conference for which President Mitterrand seems to be asking.

NATIVE PEOPLES

GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On April 19 he said that for the coming fiscal year there would be no program cuts affecting native people's programs. Will he confirm that, on or about the same day, Cabinet considered a document that was submitted by the Deputy Prime Minister and supported by 11 other Departments, that contained recommendations for budget cuts in native people's programs for the fiscal years 1986-87 and 1987-88 in the sums of $133.9 million and $178.4 million respectively?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board signals his unawareness of that specific document. While I would have to refresh my memory, I have no recollection of that particular matter.

What has happend from time to time is that the Deputy Prime Minister reviews with groups from the outside, the private sector, labour unions and others, all of the programs as they exist in the Government of Canada, to try to save the taxpayers money and deliver services more efficiently to the people of Canada. In the course of that review we have received reports from time to time, and any definitive action thereon will of course come in budgetary statements, or otherwise.

CABINET DISCUSSION INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister concerning the secret document on the so-called "Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", a copy of which I have. Will he confirm that the Cabinet actually discussed a recommendation pertaining to the announcement of changes in native people's programs that contain the following words, "that no announcement of specific native program changes would occur before the budget is unveiled . . . allowing time for the impact of changes in other sectors to register"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of what the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Andre: Get a new source, Ed.

Mr. Mulroney: Maybe you want to get a better gumshoe; I don't know.

I can tell the Hon. Member that it is true that we obviously receive from time to time reports of commissions of inquiry and other recommendations. In this particular case the Deputy Prime Minister undertook a long overdue review of all existing ongoing programs to ensure the effective use of taxpayers' dollars. I have no recollection of that specific matter, but I can assure him that that would not have been our intent, in any case.

CONTENTS OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is written in the document in question, which was prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister, that it has the support of 11 Ministers of the Crown and is submitted for Cabinet consideration. It also contains a media strategy that is intended to convey or generate a certain impression of effects on the native people of Canada, after the Budget comes down.

In light of this, and the fact that the document recommends many changes in programs affecting native people and cuts out millions of dollars from the programs, does it not make a mockery of the Prime Minister's commitment to consultation, when the leading native people's groups have not been consulted at all about this outrageous proposal?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can help. I am not sure what document the Leader of the New Democratic Party has, but those matters which he raised with the Prime Minister in his question, and any of those matters with which I have been involved with respect to the Cabinet, are, of course, matters that the Prime Minister dealt with in a statement in the House on April 18 when he indicated that there would be no policy affecting aboriginal peoples that would not be a result of open and public consultation. That was the position then, that is what it is now, and that is what it will be.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT—UNITED STATES BUDGETARY CUTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the Canada-United States Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement which is based on a commitment by both countries to construct waste treatment plants in our lakes. Suddenly the United States Senate committee has decided to deny up to $175 million to the United States Great Lakes states to construct sewage treatment plants.

I do not know whether the environmental cuts announced by the Government last November led to a belief by the U.S.

Government that it can disregard agreements, but has the Minister registered her disapproval of this decision with her counterpart in Washington, and does she intend to correct the situation in the meeting that is to take place in two days?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is very fond of talking about cutbacks in my department's budget, but he tends to forget that we have earmarked $300 million for acid rain. That is not a cutback, that is added funding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: As for the Hon. Member's other question, I may point out that we are fully aware of this statement by the U.S., and my hon. colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is very well acquainted with the matter and I am monitoring the issue very closely.

[English]

CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs since the Prime Minister has shown today that, when it comes to special relationships with the United States President, he certainly does not use them for environmental matters. They are only good enough to intone duets in Quebec City.

What specific recommendations does the Secretary of State for External Affairs have in mind to take to his counterpart, of the kind that he just announced to my Leader earlier? What specifically does he intend to say to the U.S. Government so that it will live up to the content, spirit, and substance of the agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find it most curious that the Hon. Member, who was a Minister of the Environment who failed to get agreement on important environmental problems between Canada and the United States, should raise the question of the record of this Prime Minister or this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It was as a result of this Prime Minister and this Government that we now have, after a long, long period of no progress at all, movement toward the solution of the critical problem of acid rain.

I will be meeting the U.S. Secretary of State again in the next ten days in Washington. We will be making representations to the U.S. Government between now and then. If it is necessary for me to make specific personal representations to Mr. Shultz on this question at that time, then I will do that.

Oral Questions

NATIVE PEOPLES

INDIAN HEALTH CARE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I refer to the Deputy Prime Minister's April 12, 61-page memorandum to Cabinet which is based only in part on the so-called "Buffalo Jump of the 1980s" task force report. Page 7 of the Cabinet document states that 11 Departments are in general agreement, including the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Would the Prime Minister state definitely his views on the recommendations on page 39, listed as priority change, that costs for Indian health care be reduced by introducing deterrent fees and closing Indian hospitals in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe my hon. friend was here when I responded some weeks ago. That is rather an old report that he is relying on—second or third hand.

My hon. friend, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, indicated the commitment of this Government, and I believe that we display it. I hope my hon. friend would agree that we display it through the approach of this Government to native affairs, and our deep and genuine concern for them, indicated by the manner in which we approached the aboriginal conference here in Canada. We are deeply committed to justice and fairness for our native peoples, and we shall never back down from that commitment.

SCHOOLS ON RESERVES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it will not be that easy for the Prime Minister to get off the hook this time. The report that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development denied knowledge of is "The Buffalo Jump", the 395-page task force report. This is the Deputy Prime Minister's report to Cabinet, support by eleven members of Cabinet and their Departments. I want some clarification from the Prime Minister.

This is quite a different document. Concerning the last four pages of the document, would the Prime Minister confirm how the Government intends to manipulate the media around Budget day? Also, immediately following that is the aboriginal conference. Does the Government intend to make the announcement of change and cuts after the aboriginal conference?

Another very small thing, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister give his views on what the real agenda is, because on page 41 we see that the Government's intention is to close schools and student residences on reserves but to make that announcement after the Budget and after the aboriginal conference?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hate to disabuse my friend who likes to trade, and I regret to say it, in causing fear and alarm in native people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It was Nielsen's report.

Mr. Mulroney: —who know full well—I know the truth hurts the NDP.

Mr. Waddell: Frank Miller said it.

Mr. Mulroney: I know members of the New Democratic Party do not like it, but why do they not just wait? Rather than brandish documents like that and use scare tactics, why do they not wait until the Budget and see how wrong they are? Why don't you wait and see how bad you really are?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

REQUEST FOR COMPREHENSIVE REVIEW

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. It concerns the Young Offenders Act which was passed in 1982. As of April 1 the minimum age for a trial in a criminal court has been raised from 16 to 18 years of age. Since one of the consequences of this is that a 17 and a half year old could kill a person and be sentenced to a maximum of only three years, will the Solicitor General consider a comprehensive review of concerns like this, and other provisions in the Act?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Young Offenders Act, as the Hon. Member knows, was passed in the last Parliament with considerable support from all Parties. I think the Hon. Member should realize that while there are problems with the Act as it is being applied, and as it is evolving, there is a provision, I believe it is Section 16, that in cases where circumstances warrant, and an application is made before the court, a young offender can be transferred into adult court, and can receive an appropriate sentence if the circumstances warrant.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the past the Prime Minister has made cracks about my voice. All I can say about the Prime Minister today is the less the truth, the lower the voice.

My question is for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister still believe the statements he made last July when he wrote:

> There are few matters of more importance to people than adequate housing for themselves and their families. The Progressive Conservative Party finds it inexcusable that the Liberal Government should cut back the funds for the co-operative housing program. Co-operative housing will continue to have a high priority in progressive Conservative policy for housing.

Does the Prime Minister still believe those words, or were they merely a pre-election ploy?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm the words of the Prime Minister on July 8 last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: I would like to inform the Hon. Member that in 1985, in CMHC's last promotion to Stage 2 in Section 56(1), the division between non-profit, private and public non-profit and co-op housing, over 50 per cent of the awards in the competitive process within section 56(1) were given to co-op housing projects.

SIZE OF FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can back up those statements made in July.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Lower, Sheila.

Ms. Copps: If he cannot, how can he justify co-op cut-backs of up to 60 per cent in Halifax where there is a waiting list of 2,000 people and the City is forced to put up those people in hotels; cut-backs of up to 60 per cent in Vancouver where the Member for Vancouver Centre was able to secure a billion dollars for the oil barons but could not get money for a co-operative women's housing co-op project in downtown Vancouver, and cut-backs of up to 60 per cent in the city of Toronto? How can the Prime Minister justify those co-op cut-backs in light of his own statement last July?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is using selective figures that are not relevant to fact.

Mr. Axworthy: Three major cities.

Mr. McKnight: I would encourage the Hon. Member to take a look at the number of projects and the applications. Some 500 plus applications were received. Within the fiscal framework allowed this Government compared to the spending done by the previous administration, over half of those projects received awards. Again, I would reiterate that, rather than reducing awards to co-ops, as the previous administration did by 41 per cent between 1983 and 1984, there has been an increase, and in the competitive process between public non-profit and private non-profit and co-ops over 50 per cent of the projects awarded have been to co-ops.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SHIPMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. As the Minister is aware, statements were made in the last little while by officials of the Wheat Board that there will be either little or no grain shipped through the Port of Churchill this summer. I would like to hear the Minister's response whether those statements are correct or, if not correct, can he tell us when the people who work in the Port of Churchill will know if there is grain coming this summer?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I assume the article to which the Hon. Member refers today was a Canadian Press article out of Winnipeg stating that the Board may not move grain through Churchill, and I would point out two things. First, it is not the policy of this Government, nor has it been the policy of previous Governments, to interfere in the day-to-day operations of the Board, in other words, to get involved in directing it. What I can say is that, bearing in mind there was a short crop last year and that exports will be down, I am aware of some contracts currently being negotiated that will move through the Port of Churchill, and I certainly expect Churchill to have grain movement this year.

UPGRADING OF PORT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it may not be the policy of this Government to make a commitment on where grain should go, but there is the commitment of the federal Government and the provincial Government in Manitoba to spend millions upon millions of dollars to up-grade the Port of Churchill and to fix up the line that goes to the Port of Churchill. A power line is being built to the Port of Churchill at this time. Would it not also make a lot of sense for the Government to have a commitment to a certain percentage of grain through that port? Why invest that money if the Government is not going to commit grain to the Port?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly aware of the agreement, in fact well aware of many of the details of the agreement, and those agreements are proceeding. They have all been upheld as far as the Government is concerned.

This Party is well aware of the importance of Churchill. In fact the Minister of Transport in 1979, the present Minister, was responsible for extending the shipping season at Churchill into November, which was the longest season it had ever had. Bearing in mind that the Board can negotiate, and will negotiate terms that will have grain moved through Churchill, as late as July, the press reports, I think, are very, very premature. As I said, I fully expect to see grain moved through the Port of Churchill this year, especially in light of what the Hon. Member says, which makes good common sense. One does not spend a lot of money and then leave the port sit idle. We fully appreciate that.

HOUSING

GRANTS GIVEN TO ONTARIO COMPARED WITH THOSE GIVEN TO QUEBEC AND MARITIME PROVINCES FOR RENOVATION OF HOUSES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The Minister is aware of the fact that mayors of Quebec municipalities and Quebecers generally are furious as a result of his decision to reduce the housing renovation program by $17 million, compared with a mere $2 million cut-back in Ontario.

Can the Minister tell the House and the people of Quebec why he has opted for this formula which is unfair to Quebec and the Maritime Provinces? Does he intend to allocate additional funds to make up for such unfair treatment?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the renovation program is designed to provide repair and renovation for all areas of Canada. I understand and sympathize with the pleading and the request, but the Hon. Member must understand that there are people, regions, entire municipalities within Canada, that have absolutely no benefit from RRAP as it is presently designed because of the very, very scarce resources with which we have to work.

● (1450)

In terms of numbers, I should like to inform the Hon. Member that the total RRAP budget for the Province of Quebec this year is $30.5 million, and the total RRAP budget for the Province of Ontario is $17.8 million. These figures are based upon the needs-based formula which will be phased in over the next three years. As a matter of fairness, I would put the policies and proposals by CMHC, implemented in 1985, against any policy, except that of exceptional favouritism during election years of the previous administration.

[Translation]

CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL HOUSING—QUEBEC POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I was expecting that kind of stupid answer from the Minister since the same one was given by the CMHC President.

Are the Minister and the President of the Treasury Board prepared to confirm that Ontario is now the only province which has funds allocated for rental housing construction? Quebec and the Maritime Provinces used to get more money under the housing renovation program because Ontario and the Western Provinces needed social and rental housing. Is it true that Quebec is lagging behind to the tune of 20,000 low-rental housing units?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure whether the Hon. Member is familiar with the various programs. If he would like to name the programs to which he referred, I would be pleased to respond.

Again I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that if the needs-based formula, that is a self-assessment by individual Canadians done in the 1981 census, were applied today, it would give the Province of Quebec 28.4 per cent of the disposable dollars of Canada and give the Province of Ontario 26.9 per cent of the disposable dollars. Because it is phased in over three years, this year the Province of Quebec is receiving 28.4 per cent and the Province of Ontario is receiving 16.6 per cent, some 12 per cent less than it really should receive but will receive when it is phased in, in a spirit of fairness, co-operation, and understanding, for which this Party and this Government have stood for years.

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN PORCELAIN LIMITED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Will the Minister take whatever steps are necessary in order to ensure that the take-over bid for Canadian Porcelain by Lapp Insulators of New York will go before FIRA prior to it being consummated?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we have been in touch with all participants in this transaction—the receiver, the banker, and the Lapp people. We have informed them of our interest. At the present time there is no final agreement with Lapp. They have a letter of intent which certainly the bank feels they must honour as far as an eventual deal is concerned. We have made it very clear that if they propose to take this over as a business, as a going concern, that is a reviewable item and we would like an opportunity to review it.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GRAIN SHIPMENTS THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. It concerns statements made by officials of the Wheat Board on the future of Churchill. The major agreement which was signed dealing with the development of the Port of Churchill has now been put in real jeopardy because of these statements. Not only do they create uncertainty in the minds of buyers, but if the Wheat Board does not deliver sufficient volumes of grain there will not be the financing to continue with the port development.

Is the Government clearly committed to the ongoing development of that port? Will the Minister repudiate the statements of those officials and say explicitly that the Government intends them to make their best efforts to reach the 750,000 tonne level this shipping season, so that the port development can proceed on schedule?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a brand new interest in the Liberal Party.

Mr. Axworthy: I signed the agreement.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate what I said to the Hon. Member for Churchill. It is not the policy of this Government, nor has it been the policies of previous Governments, to interfere in the day-to-day operations of the Canadian Wheat Board. I think that is well established and well accepted on all sides. It is a good policy, and I think the Hon. Member, when he had the responsibility for this portfolio, carried it out as well.

Having said that, we understand that we do not spend money on a port with no grain to move through it. If he understood how the Board negotiated sales, he would understand that as late as July or August one can negotiate sales for movement through Churchill. What I said is true. To create apprehension in the minds of people in Churchill that there will be no grain movement through Churchill, is not founded at all. The statements which were made by the officials of the Board are very, very premature.

FUNDING OF PORT DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, If any apprehension has been created, it is by those officials making those statements and by the unwillingness of the Minister to repudiate those statements, so that we will know there is a future for the Port of Churchill.

Perhaps I will raise my supplementary question with the Minister of Transport who may have a better understanding of the problem. Officials of the Port of Churchill said that because of the unwillingness of Ports Canada to transfer capital to the port of Churchill, they needed at least 750,000 tonnes of grain in order to proceed with the development. The Minister's colleague has said that they will not reach that level. Will he agree that even if those levels of shipping are not reached, he will guarantee that capital will go into that port so that the tug, dredging, and dust control programs will continue on schedule, as the signed agreement with Manitoba indicates they should?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board did not make that statement at all. He said that he would encourage the Canadian Wheat Board to negotiate a deal in its transactions which would result in the utilization of Churchill as a shipping point, and I think he will give it that support.

In so far as the subagreements concerning Churchill are concerned, my Cabinet colleagues, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board and I met with provincial Cabinet Ministers of the Province of Manitoba last week. We ironed out a lot of the difficulties and problems. We had a full-scale discussion, and agreed to proceed with the boxcar rehabilitation program. Every one of the programs that were alluded to in the subagreement is on track, and is being followed through.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF ERDA AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will recall vividly, when he was in Vancouver nine months ago, promising the people of British Columbia that if he became Prime Minister his topmost priority would be the signing of an ERDA to provide financial assistance to the forest, mining, and tourism sectors. Then we were promised that that would come in October; then again in November, December, January, February and March. Now April has come and gone and we do not have any signed agreement.

Mr. Crosbie: You are all mixed up.

Mr. Riis: What is holding up the agreement? Why is he unable to come to an agreement with the Province of British Columbia on this critical matter?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I replied in answer to a similar question a few days ago, we believe that negotiations are proceeding in a way which will likely result in an agreement very, very shortly.

REFORESTATION PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, those were the exact words used last October, and we have been waiting week by week since then.

I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Forestry. This is the time of the year to plant trees; not in December, not in the wintertime. This is tree planting time for reforestation. If the Minister cannot come to an agreement on the over-all package, will he at least sit down and sign an agreement with the Minister of Forestry for British Columbia so that we can get on with reforestation and providing jobs at this critical moment?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should remind the Hon. Member that when he says as long ago as last October, the ERDA agreement was signed in November. If he is contemplating something signed even before the ERDA agreement, it shows one how ill-informed the Hon. Member really is.

MULTICULTURALISM

FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It concerns the upcoming federal-provincial conference on multiculturalism in Winnipeg on May 14. There is considerable anger and concern over the closed-door policy the Government is taking vis-à-vis this conference. In light of the fact that parliamentarians and ethnocultural organizations are being barred from even observer status at this conference, and the fact that multilingual television, which offered to televise it live, has been refused, does the Minister not see fit to open the doors a little to those Canadians who have been concerned about multiculturalism over the years so that they at the very least can observe the deliberations, and Canadians from coast to coast can obtain a greater understanding and awareness of this first ever conference?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the Hon. Member. There is not anger and concern across the country because of this. There is joy and happiness among every ethnocultural organization that finally this Government has been able to bring the provinces together to talk about multiculturalism, something that the previous Government could never do. We are doing it under the auspices of a federal-provincial conference. The Ministers will sit down to work and to try to deal with the very important matter of multiculturalism. We are not going to do it in the glare of public lights because we do not want to grandstand. This is a meaningful conference. We expect it to be very successful.

PETITIONS

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition from a number of very concerned citizens, the Christian Pro-Life Group in my riding of Grey-Simcoe, who wish strongly to express their views and opinions concerning abortion and urge that the rights of unborn human beings be written into the Constitution and that those rights be guaranteed under Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to start with a petition signed by residents in the federal riding of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth:

That people between the age of 60 and 64 who are single, separated or divorced and who are in need, are among those groups that depend most on Government aid. That the Government—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member knows the rules permit the Hon. Member to summarize petitions.

Ms. Copps: In summary, I have a petition from the great residents of the riding of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke on the issue of the Government's extension of benefits to people between the ages of 60 and 64 who do not happen to be married.

I also have from the great federal riding of Toronto-St. Paul's another petition, signed by a number of residents calling upon the Government to stop its discriminatory measure against single people and separated and divorced people between the ages of 60 and 64.

I have another petition signed by the residents of the great federal constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. It includes a number of signatories who want to signal to the Government their concern about the same issue, the discrimination in the current old age security changes.

I have another petition from other residents in the great riding of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke. Those residents also want to signal to this Government their dissatisfaction with the current discriminatory changes in the Old Age Security Act.

I have another petition from the great residents of the riding of Parkdale-High Park who also call upon this Government to stop the discriminatory provisions that it is instituting under the changes to the Old Age Security Act which discriminate against single people and those who are separated and divorced.

I have another petition from the great riding of Vancouver Centre. The residents of the riding of Vancouver Centre are extremely concerned about the discriminatory provisions of the old age security guaranteed income supplement provisions which are causing discrimination against single people and those who are separated and divorced.

I have another petition. We have petitions pouring in from across the country. I think we should certainly give credit to the public response to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

I have also received a petition from Richmond-South Delta, British Columbia, from a number of signatories who are also concerned about the discriminatory provisions of the old age security changes which tell single people and divorced and separated people that they are out in the cold as far as this Government is concerned.

I have another petition from the ridings of Vancouver South, Capilano and Burnaby. All three ridings are extremely concerned about the discriminatory provisions tabled by this Government with respect to the changes to the Old Age Security Act. It is not a crime in this country to be single, divorced or separated, but this Government is making it a crime.

I have another petition from the residents of Vancouver Centre who are calling upon this Government to extend its largesse to ensure that single people, those who are separated and divorced will not be discriminated against in the changes to the old age security provisions.

I have a number of other petitions. I am sure Hon. Members on the government side have a lot of time because we are here to represent not only our ridings but other ridings.

Mr. McDermid: Order.

Mr. Speaker: We do not need this. I have an inkling that there are a number of petitions to be presented today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Let us keep the procedure to what it is meant to be. I would appreciate not having to involve myself in the process. That means the petitioners should not try to extend beyond the bounds of summarizing the petition.

PROVISION OF HOUSING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition dealing with the issue of housing. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada calls for the provision of satisfactory housing for everyone in Canada. This petition is signed by a number of residents from the riding of Hamilton East.

PATRONAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by the residents of Hamilton East calling upon this Government to in fact cease and desist from the practice of patronage across this country. This petition is signed by a number of Hamilton area residents.

ACID RAIN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from those Hamilton area residents who are extremely concerned about this Government's lack of initiative in the area of the environment. We urge our Government to negotiate a swift resolution to the acid rain problem. That petition is signed by a number of signatories from the riding of Hamilton East.

PROVISION OF HOUSING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there is a second petition. Those who have not been getting petitions have surely been getting letters. This petition calls upon the Government to ensure affordable housing by an extension of co-op funding to co-operatives across Canada.

• (1510)

UNEMPLOYMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition also from the City of Hamilton in which area residents decry the high level of unemployment and call upon the Government to enter into speedy negotiations as soon as possible to rectify the barriers which are currently being placed on the Canadian steel industry. That petition is signed by a number of signatories from the great riding of Hamilton East, the most industrialized riding in Canada.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR EMPLOYMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which calls upon the Government to provide post-secondary graduates with greater opportunities for employment so that there is a better fit between the employment and the education system across this country. That petition is signed by a number of Hamilton area signatories.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which is signed by a number of residents of the great riding of Hamilton East. They call upon the Government to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone and ask the Government to cease wasteful spending on the arms race, diverting the funds to human needs in order to ensure prosperity through peace.

The same signatories are calling for the ratification through a free vote in the Parliament of Canada with respect to the nuclear free zone question.

I have another petition on the question of the declaration of Canada as a nuclear free zone and a request to the Government to cease wasteful spending on the arms race and to divert that spending to human needs. That petition is also signed by a number of signatories from the great riding of Hamilton East.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, in lieu of closure on one of the most important Bills to come before the House, from the great residents of the riding of Hamilton East who call upon the Government to cease and desist in wasteful spending on the arms race and to divert that money to human needs.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, signed not only by the residents of the riding of Hamilton East, but by the residents of Hamilton West and the great County of Lincoln, in which they are calling upon the Government to cease wasteful nuclear spending, to in fact divert that money into the area of human needs and to move away from the escalation of the arms race.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, and that petition also includes signatories from the ridings of Hamilton East, Hamilton West, Burlington, Hamilton-Wentworth and Lincoln. The petition asks that the above-stated objective of declaring Canada a nuclear free zone be—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but there is a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I have some misgivings about the procedure being used by the Hon. Member, because she mentioned, and we have already had two petitions, a motion of closure on a Bill. I wonder whether this exercise—

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is a point that has no connection with the petition the Hon. Member is presenting.

I therefore feel that this is a breach of my privilege as a Member of this House, because I am wasting my time listening to motions that have no connection with—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the point of order. I do not find there is a point of order involved in the matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it is still my right to present petitions in the House, and I will fight for that right until the bitter end.

SOCIAL WELFARE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition, from the riding of Hamilton East, asking the Government of Canada to divert funds now being spent on nuclear arms to human needs in Canada. The petition is signed by about fifteen people from the riding of Hamilton East.

[English]

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition, again from the great riding of Hamilton East, calling upon the Government of Canada to cease the nuclear arms race and to divert the money which is being spent in a wasteful way to those human programs which will allow our citizens to have good housing and access to jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by residents of Lincoln, Hamilton West, Burlington, Hamilton-Wentworth and Hamilton East, calling upon the Government to refuse and reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, delivery systems or components in Canada, and to ask for the declaration of Canada as a nuclear free zone.

In case the Government is unaware of the feelings of Canadians with respect to star wars research, I want to read into the record another petition. This petition is again from the residents of Hamilton East. They call upon the Government to divert funds used for wasteful spending on the arms race to human needs in order to ensure prosperity through peace.

The same petition calls for a free vote in the House so that all Hon. Members of the House of Commons can have their say on this most important issue.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, signed—

Mr. Warner: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: I think I even recognize a Conservative name on this petition. You had better not cut me off.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a point of order from the Hon. Member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Warner)?

Mr. Warner: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since I have come into this House there has been a tradition where, after a person has presented a reasonable number of petitions, you would move around the House to other Parties.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In fact, the rules do not allow the Chair to return to an Hon. Member for a second go at petitions. That is our tradition. The Hon. Member is availing herself—

An Hon. Member: I'm glad you agree with the rules.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is availing herself of her right to present petitions. She is doing it, as far as I can tell, entirely within the rules.

May I remind all Hon. Members, because I suspect we will go through this for a while, that it is the petition which may be presented and that any commentary in or around the petition is out of order.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Had we known that no Conservatives would have been in the House yesterday, we would have used that time. We had to adjourn early because they had no one here to speak.

I have another petition from the great riding of Hamilton East. Approximately 20 people have signed a petition calling upon the Government to reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, delivery systems or components in Canada. That petition is also signed by a number of the residents of the great riding of Hamilton East. Those residents, which include members of all political Parties, are calling upon the Government to hold a free vote in the House on the issue of declaring Canada a nuclear free zone and are asking the Government to divert arms race spending to human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, from the great riding of Hamilton East—and it is a very great riding, particularly today when we are fighting for Canadian Porcelain. This petition calls upon the Government to cease research, production, testing and transport of nuclear weapons, delivery systems or components in Canada and asks the Government to allow a free vote in the Parliament of Canada so that Canada can be declared a nuclear weapons free zone.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, and it is signed by residents of Hamilton East, Hamilton West, Wentworth, Hamilton-Wentworth, Lincoln and Burlington. These residents are calling upon the Government to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone in accordance with similar initiatives taken by other nations, and asks the Government to become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race. It is signed by a number of wise residents of the riding of Hamilton East and others.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, also signed by a number of signatories, asking the Government to encourage a free vote in the House of Commons on the issue of declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone and asks the Government to cease the wasteful spending on the arms race so that we can fund human needs like housing, jobs, and keep all of those promises which were made by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition asking the Government to declare Canada a nuclear-free zone.

Mr. Speaker, there are many residents in the riding of Hamilton East, francophone residents, who are very interested in this issue, and they want to ask the Government to hold a free vote on the subject in Parliament. This is much more important than capital punishment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Hon. Member not to do again what she has just done, which is to make comments outside a petition. I think, having told the Member three times, that I should not have to do it again. I hope the Member will not put me in a position of having to do something else!

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your levity!

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which calls upon the Government to cease wasteful spending on the arms race and to divert those funds into human needs to ensure prosperity through peace. It asks the Government to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, in accordance with similar initiatives which have been taken by other nations.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which calls upon the Government to get involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race and to reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, delivery systems or components in Canada. That petition comes from the great riding of Hamilton East.

I have another petition from the riding of Hamilton East which calls upon the Government to refuse and reject research, production, testing and transport of nuclear weapons, delivery systems or their components in Canada. It asks that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone and that it become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the great riding of Hamilton East. I might add that the petition is signed by signatories of all political Parties. It asks the Government to cease the wasteful spending on the arms race and to divert the moneys to fund human needs, so as to ensure prosperity through peace.

Mr. Speaker, again, I am joining with the petitioners to ask the Government to ratify, through a free vote in the House, the notion that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone, in accordance with similar initiatives which have been taken by other nations; and, that our country, as it did in the past under the initiatives of the former Prime Minister, become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the people of the riding of Hamilton East are asking or rather pleading with the Prime Minister to join the initiative started by the former Prime Minister and to work towards making Canada and the whole world a place that is free of war and free of any escalation in nuclear arms. Let there at least be a free vote in the House of Commons to give all Members a chance to exercise their right to a free vote. This was also signed by constituents from Hamilton East.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the riding of Hamilton East which asks that the Government of Canada cease, reject and desist from any research, production, testing and transport of nuclear weapons, delivery systems or components in Canada; and that all of the objectives be subject to ratification through a free vote in the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the residents of the Hamilton area, who are seeking counsel from the Government in asking the Parliament of Canada to refuse and reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, delivery systems or their components in Canada. They further ask that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace.

I have another petition, which again comes from the residents of the great riding of Hamilton East. They call upon the Government to ratify, through a free vote, objectives of which all Canadians can be proud; that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone and that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace. They ask the Government to reject research, production, testing the transport of any nuclear weapons, delivery systems or their components in Canada.

I have another petition. Obviously this is an issue about which the residents of Hamilton East feel very strongly. This petition calls upon the Government to refuse research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, delivery systems or their components in Canada. They ask that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone and call upon the Parliament of Canada to concur with the above-stated objectives through ratification by a—

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that I have a point of order from the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I seem to recall reading in Beauchesne that petitions on the same subject should be presented together, not separately as the Hon. Member appears to be doing. It is obvious to me that she is wasting the time of the House by presenting petitions on the same subjects, but from different groups. May I suggest that you look into this. It seems to me I read in Beauchesne that petitions on the same subject are presented together, not separately.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is actually referring to a proper citation. The last time this happened in the House was in October, 1983. The same citation was used by the then Speaker of the House to ask Members to bring themselves to order. Under the provision which is in Beauchesne, while Members have the right to present a petition, it is the normal practice to file petitions with the Table. At that time the Speaker invited Members to read one, two or three of the petitions and to table the rest, given that the petitions which were being read into the record appeared to be on the same subject. If I remember correctly, it concerned a member of the New Democratic Party.

I have resisted interfering in the hope that I would get some sense of how long the repetition would go on. However, since I have been asked to deal with the matter, I must invite the Member to take advantage of the normal procedure and to table any further petitions on the same subject. I hope I will not have to rule on this matter. At the moment I am inviting the Member to do that. That is all I have to say on the point of order for the moment.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from residents of the Hamilton area, which calls upon the Government and the Parliament of Canada to reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, delivery systems or their components in Canada. Further, they ask the Government to cease wasteful spending on the arms race and to divert those moneys to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace.

As I said, I would have been very happy to have given these petitions yesterday, but nobody in the Conservative Party saw fit to be in the House.

I will continue with another petition from the great riding of Hamilton East. In the petition, the residents are calling upon the Canadian Government to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone in accordance with similar initiatives which have been taken by other nations and to become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race. The petition asks that the Parliament of Canada refuse and reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, their delivery systems or components in Canada, and that all of the above-stated objectives be subject to ratification through a free vote in the Parliament of Canada.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I have the honour to present another petition, Mr. Speaker, signed by many residents who have expressed concern about Government policy on that question. They humbly call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject all research, production and transportation of any type of weapon made in Canada, they ask that Canada be declared a nuclear free zone by Parliament, as many other countries have already done, and that, first and foremost, the Parliament of Canada give all Hon. Members an opportunity to vote freely on all issues raised in the petition.

SOCIAL WELFARE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by a number of residents, not only of Hamilton, but also of Stoney Creek, Ancaster, Dundas and Burlington.

Mr. Speaker, the petitioners are asking the Government to stop spending money on armaments, and to use such funds to meet social needs like employment and social housing, and they urge the Parliament of Canada to hold a free vote and give all Hon. Members an opportunity to express their personal views on such an important issue as nuclear weapons.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by a great many voters and constituents of the ridings of Hamilton East, Hamilton West, Lincoln, Burlington and Hamilton-Wentworth, urging the Government to declare Canada a nuclear free zone, as other nations have already done, and to continue the work undertaken during former Prime Minister Trudeau's administration towards world-wide reduction of nuclear arms. The petitioners also ask the Government to give Parliament an opportunity to hold a free vote on these questions which all Canadian men and women consider very important.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by a number of electors who are asking that the Government stop promoting nuclear weapons research, production and transportation as it is being done now with the United States, that it reject any nuclear system and any nuclear weapons research in Canada. Mr. Speaker, the petitioners are asking Parliament to adopt a free choice policy to let all Hon. Members vote freely so they may decide for themselves whether or not they would like to have Canada declared a nuclear free zone.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by more Hamilton constituents who are asking the Canadian Government to stop and reject all nuclear weapons research, production and transportation, the entire system now under consideration by the Government, and they are urging that Parliament hold a free vote so that all Members of any Party may endorse the objectives set forth in the petition. I would suggest that the issue transcends party lines.

EMPLOYMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by many constituents in the ridings of Burlington, Hamilton East, Hamilton West, Lincoln and Hamilton-Wentworth who are asking that all wasteful expenditures now being made to prolong the arms race be used instead to finance housing and employment in Canada. The petition has been signed by a great many constituents.

DISCRIMINATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by a number of residents of the Quebec riding of Rosemont, with which you are familiar, I think. They are asking the Government to put an immediate stop to the policy of discrimination against people who live alone, widows, widowers and divorced people between the ages of 60 and 64. Signed by a great many constituents, this petition proves that Government policy discriminates against people who chose to remain single and others who are either divorced or separated. It is unfair and this prejudice must be eradicated immediately.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition on the issue of nuclear weapons and it comes from Hamilton East, Hamilton West, Lincoln, Burlington and Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. Speaker, the petitioners are urging the Government to hold a free vote on the question of nuclear weapons, and they are asking that the Government put an immediate end to wasteful spending on the arms race, and that the money be used instead to finance housing or job creation for many Canadian men and women.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the riding of Hamilton East concerning Canada's position with respect to nuclear weapons. The petitioners are asking that the Government stop and reject any nuclear weapons research, production and transportation in Canada, and all related systems, and that Parliament be given an opportunity to hold a free vote to establish a nuclear free zone.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated earlier what the practice of the House has been regarding multiple petitions. I invited the Hon. Member to file any similar petitions that she had, as opposed to the one she was continuing to read. She has changed once but has now reverted to the earlier petition which she has filed at least 20 times by my count. Therefore, I must indicate to her that since I have no indication that she has any petition on any other subject which she wishes to present, she should avail herself, if she wishes, of the right to file with the Table any further copies of the petition she has already read.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I respectfully make a comment on the point you raised earlier and about which you just spoke? I have reviewed Beauchesne's and I do not find anything in the Fifth Edition, the latest edition, saying that the preferred or priority method of dealing with petitions is to table them and that it is only by exception that they should be read out. Citation 692 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition says:

> While a Member may, if he desires, present a petition from his place in the House during Routine Proceedings and before the Introduction of Bills, he may also present his petition by filing it with the Clerk of the House.

So I submit with the utmost respect that it is only by way of exception that a Member may present petitions to the House by filing them with the Clerk, and that the principal method is by reading them out. While there may be a citation which, on the surface, suggests the opposite, that citation is in the Fourth Edition, and I respectfully submit that it has been replaced by the citation I read out from the Fifth Edition.

Therefore, I respectfully submit that so long as the Hon. Member does not make a speech or present any argument in support of the petition, there is nothing to prevent him or her, if they so wish, from presenting any number of petitions from his or her place in the House rather than simply filing them.

Mr. Speaker: I respect the argument of the Hon. Member but I suggest that there is something, and that is the ruling of Mr. Speaker Francis in June of 1984. I misquoted the date earlier but this matter has been dealt with and I invite the Hon. House Leader to refer to page 4587 and page 4588 of Hansard of June 12, 1984, when the matter arose. The Hon. Member is quite correct, it is Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, Citation 339, which says differently, and I think it is because of the differences between the Fourth and Fifth Editions of Beauchesne's that we have developed our own practice about how long a Member is allowed to continue presenting the same petition verbally before the Speaker interrupts.

I think the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) knows that this matter was dealt with in June of 1984 by Mr. Speaker Francis in an attempt to balance the tradition between the rights of Members to present a petition and the obligation of the Speaker to maintain order in the House, which is what Mr. Speaker Francis had to deal with. What I have chosen to do was to intervene earlier to invite the Hon. Member not to repeat the petition, but when, for whatever reason, and I mean no disrespect at all, the petition continued to be read, I felt I had no choice, in light of Mr. Speaker Francis' ruling, but to come back and say that, with respect, I must ask the Member to file the petitions. Since she has been given a chance to start a new series or new issue of petitions and has not done so, I have no choice but to suggest to her that she must file her remaining petitions so that I may go on to other business.

An Hon. Member: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I have ruled. I heard the Hon. Member. I heard no one else indicate he or she wished to—

Mr. Gauthier: I got up at the same time he did.

Mr. Speaker: At that moment in time there were several Members rising. I heard one Member say: "point of order". I heard no other Member say: "point of order".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1540)

Mr. Ouellet: A point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions, the Hon. Member for—

Mr. Ouellet: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: On a separate point of order, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Chair that a ruling on today's procedures based on a ruling made by one of the Chair's predecessors is possible, provided it applies to the same petitions—

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Is the Hon. Member rising on a separate and new point of order?

Mr. McDermid: You've been around here long enough.

Mr. Speaker: The only point of order I will hear from the Hon. Member is a new point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: I recommend that your friend over there shut up for a while.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if you want me to speak on a new point of order, I will indeed raise a new point of order. Before making a ruling, the Speaker traditionally has to listen to a point of view presented by both sides of the House. I submit to you respectfully that the House was not asked to make representation in this regard. A ruling was issued by you very quickly without seeking the advice of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Hon. Member is seeking to comment on my ruling, the Hon. Member—

Mr. Tobin: We don't act like the Tories. There are 10 of them over there waving their fists, for God's sake. We are only asking to be heard.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has no trouble being heard. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) knows full well the difficulty in which he is putting the Speaker by making a comment. My point to the Hon. Member is that I knew there would be some desire for at least the Hon. Member for Windsor West to comment. He is the House Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I did recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West for a comment. I looked to see if any other House Leader chose to comment. I saw none. I heard no other comment from anyone claiming to rise on a point of order. Therefore, I announced my decision based on the representations I had heard that at least the House Leader of the Party of the Hon. Member for Papineau wished to make. He seems to make it a point of order that I had an obligation to hear members of other Parties. I may have had an obligation, but no others rose. I only have an obligation to hear, on a point of order, the person presenting the point of order, which is what was done. House traditions allow others, normally in opposition, to comment. There being no other House Leaders rising, I chose to make my ruling.

I am responding at some length to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Papineau because he knows he is putting me in a difficulty. I hope we can get out of this difficulty by my adding these comments. I hope that that will be the end of comment on my ruling because, otherwise, the House will be in a different kind of disorder.

Mr. Nunziata: A point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of Parliament I would ask the Chair to explain its ruling. You referred to a ruling made in a previous Parliament. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, I was not a Member of that previous Parliament. I would ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Petitions.

Mr. Nunziata: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is the Speaker who decides when a point of order is a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: You did not make a ruling on the point of order.

SOCIAL WELFARE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit to the House a petition signed by constituents from my riding of Montreal-Papineau, who are asking for a review of the Government's spouses allowance program which is to be extended to widows and widowers in need between the ages of 60 and 64. My constituents want this program to be open to all persons in need between the ages of 60 and 64, whether they are single, separated or divorced. These citizens are demanding a fair deal from the Government for all Canadians.

In view of the Chair's previous ruling, I would like to mention that I have more petitions on the same subject from constituents in the riding of Verdun, whose Member of Parliament is here in the House today and who will certainly be most interested in this petition from constituents in the federal riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, from constituents in the federal riding of Trois-Rivières, from constituents in the federal riding of Chicoutimi, from constituents in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean and also from constituents in the federal riding of Montreal-Gamelin.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table petitions from the people of Montreal-Sainte-Marie who are asking the Government to extend the spouse's allowance to all single persons in need between the ages of 60 and 64, whatever their marital status.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to table a petition from the riding of Yellowhead in Alberta, signed by constituents who are asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to extend the spouse's allowance in order to avoid any discrimination against women, and especially women who are separated or divorced.

I also wish to table a petition from the people of the riding of Gamelin, who are also asking the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to extend the spouse's allowance to the elderly who are in need, in order to eliminate any discrimination against senior citizens, and especially against those who are in need.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the federal riding of Verchères in Quebec want to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to extend the spouse's allowance to all single persons in need, irrespective of their marital status. Unfortunately, everyone except the Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) knows that the present legislation only deals with the needs of widows and widowers, and very sensibly, the people of Verchères would like to see all single persons in need eligible for this program.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition from the people of another great Quebec riding, the riding of Chambly, who join the people of the riding of Verchères in asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare to ensure that all single people in need between the ages of 60 and 64 are treated equitably by the Government especially in connection will Bill C-26.

Mr. Speaker, another great Quebec riding, the riding of Laval in Ville de Laval. These people have all joined in an effort to make the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada and the Minister of National Health and Welfare aware of the need to correct the inequities of Bill C-26 with respect to persons who are separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from another great Quebec riding, the riding of Lotbinière. All these people have sent a petition to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada, asking him to refrain from perpetuating the injustice that we see now in Bill C-26, and to extend the spouse's allowance to all persons in need who are living alone, whatever their marital status—

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member's other petitions are identical, perhaps I may suggest, as I suggested to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), that he indicate the number of petitions remaining and file them with the Table? I am merely suggesting that the Hon. Member do so, that is all.

• (1550)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could accept that invitation.

Mr. Speaker: It is up to you!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot table all the petitions, because this would be infringing upon the rights of citizens in the various constituencies involved. They may deal with the same subject, but as you see, the next petition comes from people from the constituency of Abitibi, and I for one could not—if you want to prevent people in Abitibi—from expressing their views in this House. This is the privilege I was asking for, Mr. Speaker. I would like—

Mr. Speaker: But at this point, the Hon. Member is causing me some difficulty because he clearly indicated that all the petitions were the same. He said they came from different constituencies, but they were all the same.

Mr. Malépart: He said they came from various constituencies but that they are all grouped—

Mr. Speaker: In such case, he knows he has the right to table all his petitions. The effect is the same as if they were presented in this House. The effect is the same whether petitions are tabled or presented. Do Hon. Members have further petitions?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this one is from the people I mentioned, the people from Abitibi. In this petition they voice their concern about the plight of senior citizens and they mainly urge the Prime Minister to look after senior citizens.

I have here constituents from La Prairie, Mr. Speaker. I would not like those people to be deprived from being clearly heard in this House. They asked me, they implored me to submit their views to the Prime Minister, requesting that the spouse's allowance be extended to every single person—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, I indicated to the Hon. Member that if he had a petition on another subject I would be happy to hear him. But clearly he is continuing with a petition on the same subject. I invite him to table the rest of his petitions.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I noted that you based your ruling on one made by the previous Speaker. You therefore invoked a precedent to shut me up.

Mr. Speaker, you recognized me and allowed me to present petitions for a maximum of 40 minutes. Why should the same possibility not have been granted to other Members? After giving me 40 minutes to present my petitions, you have now ruled that other Members have to sit down after speaking for only five or ten minutes. All the Members should be treated equally and you have established a precedent today.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: A point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) claims to have a point of order. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston would like to comment on what the Hon. Member for Hamilton East claims is a point of order.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is correct in that I did not interfere, hoping that the matter would resolve itself. I was called on a point of order. I indicated to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East what I thought the rules meant and I invited the Hon. Member to stop. She did not.

Therefore, I was put in the position of being made to interfere. So I intervened as shortly as I thought was reasonable after the Hon. Member for Hamilton East sat down, she being a new Member of the federal House.

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) was brought to order on the same point of order. He indicated to me clearly that he was going to carry on, and I was left with no other choice. That is why I intervened at that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am here to defend the interests of my constituents, so I leave matters of procedure to the lawyers. However, I believe that my privileges and those of my constituents have been infringed upon. If one Member is given 40 minutes to express the views of citizens from across the country—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Petitions.

Mr. Nunziata: A point of Order.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East was permitted by the Chair to present petitions for—may I finish my point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I have ruled on this point of order. Does the Hon. Member have a new point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: What is the new point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: The Member for Hamilton East was given the opportunity to present petitions for a total of 40 minutes. You indicated just a few moments ago that you intervened with respect—

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's point of order? Would the Member simply state to me the point of order he is trying to make?

Mr. Nunziata: My point of order very simply is that you are discriminating against various Members of Parliament. As a Member of Parliament I am entitled—

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: —to the same time as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. What gives one Member the greater right and more time on petitions than another Member in the House?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nunziata: I ask that you be fair in the presentation of petitions and not give in to the pressure of the Conservative Members.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston suggests that I was trying to be unfair by allowing more time to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East than I did to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie. I took the position that in my view the Hon. Member for Hamilton East was a new Member and perhaps did not know the rules as well as other Hon. Members should. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, having seen the Member previous to him being called to order, would perhaps understand, as I hope the Member for York South-Weston and others would understand that, once I had been put in the position of having to indicate to the House the rules and the practice, I could not then simply let it go on unchallenged for the time I let the other Member go unchallenged. Yes, it is discriminatory. I was trying to help a new Member, and if that is something which the Hon. Member wishes me to cease doing, let me assure the Hon. Member for York South-Weston that as of this moment, I will cease trying to help new Members.

Petitions.

INCARCERATION IN NEW JERSEY OF BRUCE CURTIS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I am almost hesitant to take advantage of this opportunity for fear that the credibility of the process has been eroded by the antics of the Members opposite.

I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by residents of the constituency of Moncton in which they expressed concern—

Mr. Ouellet: A point of order.

Mr. Cochrane: —over the present plight of Bruce Curtis, a resident of Nova Scotia currently incarcerated in a New Jersey prison. They are urging the Government of Canada to hasten the current negotiations for a treaty with New Jersey by which Bruce Curtis could apply for a transfer to a penitentiary in Canada so that he could be close to his family and thus receive the benefit of emotional and spiritual support from them.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. First of all, I regret to see that you are in such a hurry to interrupt Members of the Opposition when those on the other side rise on a question of privilege, and how slow you are . . . On a matter of privilege, I had not finished presenting my petitions when you recognized another Member. I would like to continue to be recognized so that I can go on with my petitions.

[English]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all due respect to Your Honour, I want to point out that while the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) was presenting his petitions you reminded him that he could not continue to present his petitions on the same subject and you invited him to table with the Clerk the petitions he had on the same subject.

I would like clarification from you on this subject. I think the rule is clear that you cannot order a Member to table his petitions with the Clerk. The Member of Parliament has the choice to present his petition in the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. With great respect, the Hon. Member for Papineau is attempting to re-open a ruling that has already been made.

Mr. Ouellet: No, I am not.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau knows full well that if a Member has a petition that has not been presented in the House, he retains his right to table it with the Table. That right is not lost.

Mr. Ouellet: Another day.

Mr. Speaker: Or today. I invited the Hon. Member to table his remaining petitions by simply indicating the number and tabling them. He chose not to do so, and that is his choice.

• (1600)

Mr. Nunziata: You have to listen to his point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Nunziata: What do you mean, no?

Mr. Speaker: Order. What do I mean, no? I mean Hon. Members have to respect the Chair or the House falls apart. That is what I mean by no.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, you intervened and invited the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie to table the rest of his petitions if they were the same as the others. Afterwards, there were points of order, questions of privilege, and so on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! May I ask what is the question of privilege?

Mr. Malépart: I rise on a question of privilege because you did not recognize me again so that I could continue to present my petitions.

Mr. Speaker: That is not true. I invited you to table them.

Mr. Malépart: No, Mr. Speaker. You recognized me on a point of order. I rose again—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, this is on a different subject.

Ms. Copps: It is on a different subject, and you have denied us.

Mr. Malépart: He can foretell the future.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let me be very clear about this. I invited the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie to table petitions on a different subject. He did not. Therefore, I rose again to say he left me no choice. That is the way it is. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on petitions.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of several constituents from the federal riding of Kenora-Rainy River, in Ontario, who exercise their right and ask the government to extend eligibility for spouse's allowance to all single people, some 80,000 of them, who are needy. I humbly present this petition to the House.

I have also a petition signed by several constituents from the federal riding of Rosedale, another riding, who exercise their right as Canadian citizens and ask the House to amend Bill C-26 to cover not only those who meet the requirements of the bill, but all Canadians who are either single, separated, widowed or divorced.

I have also a petition from a number of Canadian residents of the federal riding of Algoma, in Ontario, who exercise their ancient and unquestioned right to present a petition to the House and ask the Canadian Parliament to adopt a legislation which would extend the eligibility of the spouse's allowance to all needy senior citizens.

I have also a petition from residents and constituents from the federal riding of Kingston and the Islands, in Ontario, who exercise their right and, through this hon. member, present a petition to the House calling upon the government to pay more attention to their social and economic needs and extend the provisions of Bill C-26 to all Canadians who are either single, separated, divorced or widowed.

I have also a petition signed by a number of residents from the federal riding of Hamilton East, in Ontario—I have signed too on the reverse side—who are asking the government to amend Bill C-26 and extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to the people who are over 64 years of age and who are either single, separated or divorced.

I have a further petition from a number of constituents from the federal riding of Renfrew-Nippissing-Pembroke, in Ontario, asking the House to seriously consider their social and economic needs and to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people living alone, no matter what their marital status.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition, this one from residents of Ottawa, my native city, who are asking the House to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people between 60 and 64, no matter their marital status.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to proceed to another petition from people in the riding of Ottawa Carleton asking this House to amend Bill C-26, which is presently in committee, to extend the eligibility of the spouses' allowance to people 60 to 64 years of age who are either single, separated, or divorced and who have identical needs to the others presently admitted to that program.

I have another petition—

[Translation]

—from residents in the federal riding of Ottawa-Vanier who are again asking the House to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people between 60 and 64, and to amend Bill C-26 to make it possible for these people to get the help they need under this program.

[English]

I have a petition from the riding of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, from the constituents of that riding who have asked this House to extend the eligibility of the spouses' allowance, which is granted to widows and widowers, to all Canadians who are either single, separated or divorced.

I have—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the Hon. Member to invite him, if he would please, to table any other petitions he has with regard to that matter? And may I suggest to him that perhaps he could proceed to other petitions he has on other subjects?

Mr. Gauthier: Your invitation is not accepted, Mr. Speaker. I will repeat those tomorrow. It does not make sense to invite me to do something that I can do here verbally. I will wait until tomorrow. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of Parliament it is a great pleasure to offer a petition from the riding of Kenora-Rainy River. The people are asking this Government and this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to take another look at Bill C-26 so that it can offer all Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 and who are single, separated, or divorced the same benefits as are others who are eligible.

I also have a petition from the riding of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the riding of Etobicoke Centre. The Petitioners are asking similarly to have the clause removed with respect to discrimination of individuals between the ages of 60 and 64 years of age who happen to be single, separated, or divorced.

The voters and electors of Durham-Northumberland are humbly beseeching the Government to remove the discriminatory clause of Bill C-26 so that all individuals who happen to be single, separated, or divorced between the ages of 60 and 64 can receive the same benefits as those who are widows or widowers.

From the Hastings-Lennox-Addington riding the individuals are petitioning their Government to change Bill C-26 so that it may be fair to all Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 regardless of marital status.

I have a petition here from Kingston and the Islands. These people regard Bill C-26 as being discriminatory and ask their Government to change it accordingly.

I have another petition from Laval-des-Rapides. The petitioners are asking their Government that separated, divorced, or single individuals between the ages of 60 and 64 receive the same benefits as widows already covered under Bill C-26.

The last petition comes from Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke. Basically it asks the same thing as do the earlier petitions.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I find this practice resorted to today by our friends opposite quite interesting.

I have noticed several of the papers that were displayed for the camera containing the names of no more than one, two, or three persons.

Ms. Copps: Get your facts straight. You have 20-50 vision.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of whether a petition is in order will be verified by the Table. That is the normal procedure. Does the Hon. Member have a point of order?

Ms. Copps: What have you got, a zoom lens?

Mr. Speaker: Lenses and papers, no. There being no point of order, I recognize the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on petitions.

NUCLEAR-WEAPONS-FREE ZONE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to present several petitions this afternoon. First, I have a petition signed by eight residents of the federal riding of Hamilton East. The petitioners petition this Parliament and this Government to take specific action with respect to items of utmost concern, not only to the people of Hamilton East but to all people of Canada. It concerns the nuclear issue.

• (1610)

This group of petitioners is asking the Parliament of Canada to refuse the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member at his seat?

Mr. Blais: I rise in my place, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Very well, I apologize. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Blais: My point of order is quite specific Mr. Speaker. I think that there is a general parliamentary rule that one cannot do indirectly what one cannot do directly. However in the present case, the Hon. Member has just tabled a petition on behalf of the Hon. Member just in front of her, that is the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, thus repeating the petitions presented a while ago. They are trying to do indirectly what they cannot do directly.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Any Member of this House may present a petition on behalf of any Canadian who asks that Member to present a petition, if the Member so wishes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There has never been, to my knowledge, a requirement that a petition from people of a riding be presented by the Member for that riding. There has never been such a requirement that I know of. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston may present a petition on behalf of whomever he wishes.

Mr. Nunziata: As a result of that intervention, I have lost my place, but thank you for your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

These particular petitioners are petitioning the Government of Canada to take some very specific action with respect to an item of national concern. It is an item of concern, not only to the people of Hamilton East but to all residents of Canada, indeed of the world. It concerns the nuclear issue.

These specific petitioners from the riding of Hamilton East, who number eight, are asking the Government of Canada to take some action to refuse the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and to reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, their delivery systems or components in Canada.

The petitioners further petition the Government of Canada to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone in accord with similar initiatives taken by other nations, and to become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race.

The petitioners further ask the Government of Canada that the wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace.

Finally, the good residents of Hamilton East who have signed this particular petition are asking the Government of Canada that the objectives I have just stated be subject to ratification through a free vote in this Parliament. That is my first petition.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition from residents in the federal riding of Kingston and the Islands. It is a petition which is signed by 16 residents of that riding.

The petitioners are asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to extend eligibility for the spouses' allowance, which has been granted to needy widows and widowers between 60 and 64 years of age, to all Canadians who are either single, separated, or divorced and who have identical needs.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition signed by a number of residents in the federal riding of Hamilton East. This particular petition is asking the Parliament of Canada to take immediate action to refuse the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and to reject any research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, their delivery systems or components in Canada.

The petitioners further ask that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone in accord with similar initiatives by other nations and that Canada become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race.

The petitioners are also asking that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace. Finally, they ask that the above-stated objectives be subject to ratification through a free vote in the Parliament of Canada.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from approximately 20 residents of the federal riding of Kingston and the Islands. These residents are asking the Government of Canada, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in particular, to take whatever action is necessary within the power of the Prime Minister and his Government to extend eligibility for the spouses' allowance, which has been granted to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 years, to all Canadians who are either single, separated or divorced and who have identical needs. If this is not done, and if the Prime Minister overlooks the proposed amendment to Bill C-26, some 80,000 Canadians will suffer discrimination and social injustice.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which is signed by a number of residents from the riding of Hamilton East. Once again it concerns the very important issue which is facing not only this Government but Governments around the world. It concerns the nuclear arms issue. These residents in particular are asking the Parliament of Canada to take immediate action to refuse any further testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and to reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, their delivery systems or components in Canada.

Also these residents are asking that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone by this Parliament in accord with similar initiatives by other nations and that Canada become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race.

They are also asking that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace. These residents are asking that the objectives which I have just articulated be subject to ratification through a free vote in the House of Commons, this Parliament.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition from the good residents of the federal riding of Western Arctic. The residents of that riding are asking this Government, in particular the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance, which has been granted to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 years of age, to all Canadians who are either single, separated or divorced and who have identical needs. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, there are some 80,000 persons who fall into this category and who will suffer discrimination and social injustice if the Prime Minister overlooks the proposal.

• (1620)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know that I cannot ask him to change his speed, but I can ask him not to lengthen the commentary.

Mr. Nunziata: I have several other petitions.

An Hon. Member: Are they different?

Mr. Nunziata: In reply to the Hon. Member, it is a different petition from the previous one I just read.

Mr. Speaker: Back to peace?

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, we are going back to peace. I appreciate that you recognize that peace is an important issue.

NUCLEAR-WEAPONS-FREE ZONE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): This petition is with respect to—I notice that Members opposite are laughing. This is no laughing matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the people who signed this petition are asking the Parliament of Canada not to authorize the tests of Cruise missiles in Canada, to give up research, production, tests and transport of any nuclear arm and component thereof as well as delivery systems.

[English]

These petitions are asking that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone in accord with similar initiatives by other nations and to become actively involved in working for the multilateral de-escalation of the arms race. They are further asking that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace. The petitioners finally ask that the objectives that I have just stated be subject to ratification through a free vote in the House of Commons.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from residents in the federal constituency of Burnaby and Mission-Port Moody and also from the federal constituency of New Westminster-Coquitlam in British Columbia.

[English]

These petitioners ask the Government of Canada, in particular the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to extend eligibility for the spouses' allowances, which has been granted to needy widows and widowers between 60 and 64 years of age, to all Canadians who are either single, separated or divorced and who have identical needs. Some 80,000 Canadians are in this particular situation and are suffering discrimination and social injustice.

Mr. Speaker: May I invite the Hon. Member to table any other petitions he has with regard to disarmament or the spouse's allowance matter, and suggest that if he has any petitions on other subjects, he might proceed to them.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the petitioners who signed these various petitions were advised by the various Members of Parliament who collected these petitions that indeed the petitions would be presented, not tabled, in the House of Commons. I would ask for the opportunity to present these petitions to Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I presume the Hon. Member knows that, if he simply indicates from his place that he is tabling them, they have been presented in Parliament. I presume he knows that. That, in practice, is what happens. However, I take it the Hon. Member has petitions on a different subject.

Mr. Nunziata: The various other petitions have various nuances to them. They differ in certain respects.

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the petition I now have which I wish to present to this House is signed once again by several residents of the federal riding of Hamilton Centre. They are asking that the Canadian Government take some very specific action with respect to the nuclear arms issue. They are asking that there be an end to further testing of the cruise missile in Canada. They are asking that that matter be subject to a free vote in the House of Commons.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition, not on the nuclear issue. This petition is signed by approximately 14 residents in the federal riding of Burnaby Mission-Port Moody and the federal—

Mr. Oberle: That is the entire Liberal membership list. Are there 14 Liberals in that riding?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would ask for some decorum from Hon. Members opposite. May I carry on? Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated, this petition is signed by 14 residents of the federal riding of Burnaby Mission-Port Moody and the federal riding of New Westminster-Coquitlam.

Mr. Oberle: That is two ridings. They couldn't possibly have that many Liberals in one riding. There are seven Liberals in each.

Mr. Nunziata: If I may, the residents petition the Government of Canada as follows:

[Translation]

We the undersigned are asking the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, to extend the spouse allowance program to needy single person 60 to 64 years of age—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I invited the Hon. Member to indicate if he has petitions other than nuclear disarmament or the matter he just raised. I suggest to him that he take the option of tabling the remainder. I am sure he knows they will be treated by the Table as having been presented. Further petitions?

• (1630)

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will be able to remain good-humoured because I have several petitions to present to you, and I thank you—

An Hon. Member: Slowly!

Mr. Robichaud: Not at all, Mr. Speaker, at the same speed I usually proceed. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will begin to read my petitions.

This first petition comes from some residents of my riding, and more particularly from the people of the village of Cocagne, who humbly request that the Spouse Allowance Program be expanded to include all Canadians men and women in need who are between 60 and 64 years old.

DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from some residents of my riding but this time from the beautiful village of Cap-Pelé, in New Brunswick, who also humbly request that the government recognize the needs of some 80,000 people who will be unfairly treated if Bill C-26 is passed in its present form.

CHANGES IN OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from some residents of my riding, this time from the town of Shediac, the lobster capital of the world, who humbly request that the Spouse Allowance Program include all senior citizens in need who are between 60 and 64 years old.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from people from Moncton and from the village of Cap-Pelé and from Shediac who humbly request that the Spouse Allowance Program be expanded to include all Canadian men and women in need who are between 60 and 64 years old.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the people of Halifax, in Nova Scotia, from Bayfield, in New Brunswick and from Cap-Tormentin, in New Brunswick who also ask that—

[English]

Eligibility for the spouse's allowance which has been granted to all needy widows be extended to all Canadians who are either single, separated or divorced, and who have identical needs.

[Translation]

DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition, again from some residents of my riding, from the beautiful village of Fort Elgin, and also from people from Bayfield, two adjoining villages, who also humbly pray and call upon Parliament to make the necessary amendments to Bill C-26 to avoid creating two categories of Canadian citizens. This petition is different, Mr. Speaker.

May I continue, Mr. Speaker? I see that you are still good-humoured, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have no choice.

Mr. Robichaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to disturb my colleagues in the Government, but I have still another petition, again from the people of Shediac, who call upon the Government to recognize the needs of some 60,000 people who will be treated unfairly if Bill C-26 is passed in its present form.

Mr. Speaker: Now, I would ask the Hon. Member to proceed with other matters if he has any to be dealt with, but for the moment, he is entitled to table any other petitions he may have that concern Bill C-26. Does the Hon. Member have another matter to deal with? Yes?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that I still have petitions to present. If I do not table them today, will I be able to do so tomorrow?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the Hon. Member should seek advice as to his rights on that matter from the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who, I believe, has it pretty well, I think the phrase is, "in hand".

Mr. Gauthier: Do you think he ought to come and see you?

Mr. Speaker: No. Petitions?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the basis is for your decision. You interrupted me after I had presented a number of petitions, after a while. You interrupted another colleague of mine after a certain length of time. I am trying to find out what rules of justice are applied in this House to determine the rights and privileges of each Member. I understand that the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is against providing assistance to senior citizens since she is constantly bothering you with points of order. But I would like to know what sort of justice is used as a basis to make sure that senior citizens can claim their rights in the House, and Members of Parliament can enjoy the same privileges, the same length of time to express the opinions of the people in the various ridings.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that there is no point of order in that matter. Petitions?

[Translation]

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, in my riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, there are 12 homes for older people. I did not count the names but I have several sheets of paper signed in duplicate.

Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present this petition on their behalf. Those people are concerned and worried by the government's position on Bill C-26. They call upon the Government to reconsider its position and extend the spouse's allowance program to all single persons 60 and 64 years of age, without any discrimination based on marital status.

I therefore urge the Government to take into consideration the concerns of these senior citizens and to take the necessary steps to correct this unfair situation.

I wish to present to the House a petition signed by constituents of the riding of Laval. They are opposed to the Government's proposal to institutionalize a systematic discrimination by granting a pension only to widows and widowers between 60 and 64. They call upon the Government of Canada to extend the spouse's allowance program to all single persons, whether they are widows, divorced, separated or single.

I also want to file a petition signed by the constituents of the riding of La Prairie, in the province of Quebec. These Canadian citizens find unacceptable the government's decision to determine eligibility to a social program according to marital status. They urge the Government to reconsider its decision and to extend the pension to all persons between 60 and 64, whether they are widows, divorced or separated.

The petition that I am filing today to complement the others comes from the riding of Témiscamingue. These constituents are also opposed to the bill introduced by the Government which wants to impose its will upon us. They ask that all single, separated, divorced persons who are in need and between 60 and 64 also receive the pension granted to widows and widowers.

The following petition comes from the riding of Lotbinière and was signed by a group of people who also ask the Government to extend the spouse's allowance program to all single persons between 60 and 64 who are in need, whether they are widows, separated, single or divorced persons.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by residents of the riding of Rosemont, in Montreal, who are also very concerned by the Government's decision to grant the pension only to widowers and widows between 60 and 64. They humbly ask the Canadian Government to extend eligibility to the spouse's allowance program to all single people.

Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence, but this is my last petition. It is signed by people from the riding of Verchères. These citizens find unacceptable the Government's decision to determine eligibility to a social program according to marital status. They consider the decision to grant a pension only to widowers and widows between 60 and 64 as a discriminatory measure and a social injustice and they call upon the Government to extend the pension to all persons between 60 and 64 who are in need, whether they are divorced, separated or single.

PETITIONS

VICTIMS OF VIOLENT CRIME

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, you are going to be very pleased to know that I have a number of petitions I wish to place before you which will deal with subject matters other than Bill C-26. In order that I not disappoint you, however, I would like you to know that during the latter part of my presentation here this afternoon I am going to introduce some petitions which will deal with Bill C-26.

I have the privilege to present a petition signed by citizens of the riding of Ottawa-Carleton. It deals with the issue of victims of crimes. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian justice system does not clearly recognize the victimized parties and the tragic losses suffered by the families of the victims. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray, beseech and call upon Parliament to encourage, foster and develop a better understanding by the police and other authorities in the criminal justice system of the needs of and the services required by the victims of violent crime, and to encourage the development of support groups for such victims. The petition was duly signed by citizens of the Ottawa-Carleton region.

ORGAN TRANSPLANTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition to the House of Parliament that is signed by citizens of the Village of Gloucester in the riding of Ottawa-Carleton which deals with a subject matter that was raised in the House during the week in which the need for organ transplants was recognized.

Many people in Canada require transplants which involve kidneys, eyes, hearts, livers and lungs—

Mr. Gauthier: Even brains!

Mr. Frith: And brains! But I must say that there is more need for that particular organ by Members opposite.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to initiate a nation-wide campaign to promote organ donor awareness in order to assist those who are currently in need of transplantations, and to provide hope for the future victims of debilitating diseases or injuries.

The petition was signed on May 7 in the Year of Our Lord 1985.

DEFAULTING SPOUSE'S MAINTENANCE PAYMENTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition which was signed by constituents of Ottawa-Carleton. The petition deals with a distressing number of spouses—I am told that it is between 60 per cent and 75 per cent—almost all of them being men, who have defaulted on support payments which they owe to their ex-spouses and children. Of course, the present system does not force the defaulters to pay.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take decisive steps toward ensuring that maintenance payments cannot be defaulted, and to create a situation so that the federal level of Government can take the initiative to search data banks to find the defaulters.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which is signed by constituents of the federal riding of Essex-Kent. It deals with the issue of Bill C-26 which is presently before the standing committee. Hopefully, it will come before Parliament at some stage for a resolution of the matter. The people who signed this petition are asking—

[Translation]

—wherefore, humbly petition the Government of Canada to extend eligibility for the spouses' allowance to all persons aged 60 to 64 who are alone and in need, whether they be widowed, divorced, separated or single.

TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR WOMEN AND THE ELDERLY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which is signed by residents of the region of Ottawa-Carleton. It deals with the fact that in recent years there has been a dramatic shift in the nature of the workforce to include many young people, women re-entering the workforce and older workers. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to develop training programs which are appropriate to the experience of these people, and particularly the learning abilities of older displaced workers.

Recently, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) made the announcement that older workers who find themselves displaced would be penalized and not able to draw unemployment insurance benefits. The petitioners believe that these individuals should be included in the Minister's target groups to provide greater incentives for employers to hire them.

As in duty bound, the petitioners humbly pray that the Government will listen to them.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which was signed by the citizens of the County of Elgin, in the London-Middlesex area. Again, the petitioners humbly beseech the Government to extend the program under Bill C-26 to the 80,000 constituents across the country who are not simply widows or widowers, but, in fact, single, divorced or separated persons. The petitioners are demanding that Bill C-26 be enlarged to include those people in order that they can be a part of the government program when it is introduced in September, 1985.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I have just read in the rulings by Mr. Speaker Jerome that a petition which criticizes a Government position cannot be read in the House, and that is exactly what those petitions relating to Bill C-26 are, Mr. Speaker. I wish to respectfully submit that the ruling to that effect was that such papers should not be tabled in the form of petitions, but that Members of the House of Commons were entitled to voice their criticism of a bill under discussion. Since those petitions relating to Bill C-26 are critical of a Government position, Mr. Speaker, they should in my opinion be ruled out of order.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: No. Is the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'Homme) rising on the same point of order? I do not think there is a point of order, but the Hon. Member can say something before I rule.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: On the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: On the same point of order? The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor.

Mr. Prud'homme: I would like to suggest to my colleague that she may be right, and I feel that you are about to rule on this matter, Mr. Speaker. The criticism is not to be found in the petition itself, but in the presentation of the petition; you have to show why the petition is presented. And it would seem very unlikely in my opinion that in so doing, one could altogether avoid including some element of criticism or appreciation. I would agree with my Hon. friend if she was saying that the petition itself is critical of the Government. But I do not feel that this is what we are discussing today. So I shall await your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I believe I understand the nuances of the whys and the whys of the nuances.

[English]

The Hon. Member is referring to a ruling which has been used in the past to rule a petition out of order once it has been received by the Table. It would be difficult for the Chair to find the petition out of order prior to its being presented and reviewed by the Clerk of Petitions. Therefore, I would invite the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) to continue with the nuances and the pourquoi.

[Translation]

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by constituents of Etobicoke-Centre, in the Greater Toronto area: That the Canadian Government extend the spouse allowance benefits to every needy person between the ages of 60 to 64, whether widowed, divorced, separated or single.

Fortunately, I have another petition signed by people in the federal constituency of Perth. I think we now have a Member in this House, Mr. Dick, who represents people that are urging the Canadian Government to extend the spouse's allowance benefits to every needy person between the ages of 60 and 64, whether widowed, divorced, separated or single.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by people from Témiscamingue in the Province of Quebec, who humbly beseech the Canadian Government to extend the benefits of the spouse's allowance program to every needy person between the ages of 60 and 64, whether widowed, divorced, separated or single.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member, if he has other petitions referring to Bill C-26, to table them.

• (1650)

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, now it is my turn to table a number of petitions, all of which indeed deal with Bill C-26, but which make reference to sections and items that seem quite different to me.

In the first place, a petition signed by a group of people in the constituency of Bellechasse, more specifically the Association of single parent families, who regret that single, separated and divorced persons between the ages of 60 and 64, most of which are needy, are excluded from the benefits of Bill C-26.

Also another petition signed by Canadian citizens in the federal constituency of Chicoutimi, who again deplore the really unacceptable way of assessing or specifying the eligibility criteria for a social program, namely the marital status.

I have another petition signed by a group of citizens in the constituency of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East in the Province of Quebec, who deplore the discrimination written in the legislation against single, separated or divorced persons aged 60 to 64.

Here is another petition, Mr. Speaker, signed by citizens in the constituency of Rosemont, in the Province of Quebec, who also strongly protest against the fact that single, separated and divorced persons aged 60 to 64 are excluded from that social program, which would be so helpful to them.

Another petition is signed by a group of people in the constituency of Rimouski, who also find unfair, discriminatory and totally unacceptable the fact that they are excluded from the benefit of Bill C-26.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, here is a last petition signed by a group of residents in the constituency of Joliette, who also urge the House to review its position on Bill C-26, in the hope that it will expand its provisions to extend the social benefits therein provided to persons between the ages of 60 and 64, whether single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present to the House a most important petition from people in Western Quebec or at least a substantial part of Western Quebec who signed hundreds of copies and they did so as a result of their sympathy for single, separated and divorced individuals in need from 60 to 64 years of age. They would like to see Bill C-26 extended to single older persons from 60 to 64 years of age.

I do not want to use up the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, because the petitioners have asked me to read their names. I think that there are some 400 so you will understand that I do not want to misuse the time of the House.

I should like to present in the first place a petition from the electors of the beautiful constituency of Gatineau, as it is called, calling upon the Prime Minister of Canada to do all he can to extend the spouse's allowance program to all needy single person aged 60 to 64 years of age.

I also have another petition from one of the finest constituencies in Canada, the constituency of Hull-Aylmer, a petition coming from several hundreds people who are also asking that Bill C-26 also include all needy persons from 60 to 64 years of age.

Mr. Speaker, the petitioners are all older needy individuals and you may be sure that they signed this petition quite willingly. I am convinced that the present government will have much sympathy for them and will give special consideration to that petition which is apparently one of the most important ever presented to the federal government since it objects to a sort of social injustice. I am convinced that the Progressive Conservative Party will show its usual sympathy for older persons by extending Bill C-26 to single needy individuals from 60 to 64 years of age.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition to present and it originates from the constituency of Saint-Jacques which I represent in the House.

The petitioners also want to exercise their ancient an unchallenged rights to present a common grievance, with the assurance that the House will provide a remedy. They humbly sheweth that needy single, separated and divorced persons aged 60 to 64 are among those who most depend on Government assistance.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon the Government of Canada to make the spouse's allowance program available to all needy persons living alone, aged 60 to 64, be they widows, divorced, separated or single.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from the constituency of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve whose signatories want to present a common grievance with the assurance that the House will provide a remedy.

The petitioners state that it seems unwarranted to assess eligibility for a social program on the strength of the marital status of a person. The petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance program to all needy persons living alone, aged 60 to 64, be they widows, divorced, separated or single.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the constituency of Montreal-Sainte-Marie whose signatories want to exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a common grievance, with the assurance that the House will provide a remedy. The petitioners state that the Government policy under which only needy widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 are eligible for the spouse's allowance amounts to discrimination against and social injustice towards single, separated and divorced persons with similar needs and belonging to the same age group.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from a rural constituency in Quebec, the riding of Lotbinière, whose signatories also want to exercise their right to present a petition to Parliament. Those petitioners of the constituency of Lotbinière humbly sheweth that needy single, separated and divorced persons aged 60 to 64 are among those who most depend on Government assistance, and they humbly call upon the Government of Canada to make the spouse's allowance program available to all needy persons living alone, aged 60 to 64, be they widows, divorced, separated or single.

Mr. Speaker, I have here another petition signed by many residents of the City of Montreal who state that the Government policy under which only needy widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 are eligible for the spouse's allowance amounts to discrimination against and social injustice towards single, separated and divorced persons with similar needs and belonging to the same age group.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper. Does the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) have a point of order?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I was seeking the floor to ask your guidance as to the next order of business, but you have called Private Members' Hour. Thank you very much.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

ADVISABILITY OF ENSURING EASY ACCESS TO POLLING STATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should take the necessary steps to ensure, that the Chief Electoral Officer, in future elections, make all polling stations in urban areas easily accessible to the elderly and the handicapped.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as you have noticed during the past two hours, our Party is concerned with the elderly and those members of society who need help. We are concerned with people who are in need of social security and who look to the Government for stability and security of income when they reach a certain age at which they want to be able to rely on some form of stable pension income, regardless of their social and marital status. What has happened in the last two hours is an example of the commitment that our Party has to that general principle.

Our record is long and substantial. Inspired by these basic principles, I put forward this motion today. It says, in essence, that the Chief Electoral Officer ought to ensure that in every federal election the polling stations in urban areas, or for that matter in any part of the country, be easily accessible to the elderly and the handicapped.

There are very good reasons for putting this motion to you, Mr. Speaker. In recent elections, and particularly the last one, there has been an increasingly frequent practice of using buildings that are not easily accessible to the elderly and the handicapped because they have long stairways or corridors. Some of these buildings can only be approached by a series of steps and corridors which make it difficult for people of a certain age or with a physical handicap.

I refer in particular to certain large school buildings in which polling stations may be located in the basement or on the second floor. I refer in particular to other institutional buildings where accessibility leaves much to be desired. I make the point that the instructions must be clear and vigorous. The Chief Electoral Officer of Canada must play a leadership role. His instructions to the returning officers in each riding must be very clear and to the effect that the selection of polling stations must take into account the basic principle included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that the elderly and the handicapped must be given consideration in the arrangements which lead to the electoral process.

On more than one occasion in the last election I was virtually reproached by a few electors who pointed out to me, with a certain degree of unhappiness, if not indignation, the fact that they would not be able to get into the building because of lack of access for wheelchairs. They would not be able to reach the polling station inside the large institution because they could not climb the stairs. Unfortunately and regrettably, some people simply give up their right to vote because of these considerations.

At a time when the whole thrust of our society is directed at understanding, recognizing and facilitating the participation of the elderly and the handicapped in public life, this matter requires close consideration by the Chief Electoral Officer. On many occasions, instead of utilizing large institutions, it would be better to adopt the old practice of using private homes. There is usually a side entrance and very few steps. The whole approach is much less cumbersome, particularly since a car can be parked in a driveway or very close to the entrance. I am not saying that this is the only solution, but I submit that an approach which takes into account the requirements of the elderly and the handicapped is most desirable.

In raising this motion, I urge the Chief Electoral Officer to take note of the experience that we had in Davenport in the last election. I am sure that a number of other Members have had the same experience on occasion. The numbers are not large, but that is not the principle at stake. It is an important principle which recognizes that the elderly and the handicapped must be given easy access to the voting process. That is what is at stake here and that is the reason for the motion.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a comment on the plight of unlisted electors, a matter which is not necessarily included in my motion. I am glad to see that it is recognized in the Private Members' motion of my colleague. I refer to individuals who discover on election day that they are not able to vote because their names are not on the voters' list.

Over the years we have developed an interesting, competent, and capable technique for resolving this problem in the rural voting areas of Canada. According to the Act, in those areas you can still be placed on the voters' list on the day preceding election day. That has been resolved to the satisfaction of many voters who, in the past, were dissatisfied and very disappointed when they discovered they were not on the list. However, this problem has not yet been resolved in urban Canada. Some people do not know that before every election a new enumeration is made and a new list prepared. Unless on elector is aware of the deadlines and procedures, there is potential for an elector to be omitted. He will continue to be omitted in future elections. That happens all the time in our society.

● (1710)

As a result of technological advancement and the equipment that is made available as a result of the chip, surely there must be a solution for urban voters who discover the day before an election that they have been omitted from the list they may be incorporated in the same manner that it can be done for the rural voter.

I would like to indicate to the Chief Electoral Officer that the time has come to find the solution for the urban voter as well. It is essential that people who care to vote and discover their absence from a given list the day before an election be allowed to vote, if they qualify, by way of a last minute registration.

I welcome this opportunity to put forward this motion today in order to recognize the elderly and the handicapped and to ensure that they all have access to polling stations in the future. This can only be achieved through close co-operation between the Chief Electoral Officer and the returning officers in the 282 ridings. It also gives me the opportunity to relate the recurring plight of the non-listed elector who qualifies but discovers the day before an election that he or she is not on the list.

I submit these suggestions and thoughts for the consideration of the Chief Electoral Officer and I thank you for your attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: No, unless it is my turn now.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to talk to this motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). He should be congratulated for giving us the opportunity to do so.

The motion reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take the necessary steps to ensure, that the Chief Electoral Officer, in future elections, make all polling stations in urban areas easily accessible to the elderly and the handicapped.

I would go further than what is called for in the motion because, as some Members know, I was a member of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped which essentially made the same recommendation in 1981.

It is also referred to by the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada in a 1984 statutory report. His recommendation concerning the motion we are debating today can be found on page 47 of that report. He said that Section 33(1) of the Act which defines some of the physical requirements of a polling station should be modified to comply with recommendations made by the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. He goes on to recommend that subsection 33(1) be amended to state that polling stations should be established in premises of convenient access which, as far as possible, shall provide level access.

I am not at all convinced that it would require an amendment to the Canada Elections Act in order to make a polling station accessible to disabled, handicapped or aged persons. It would seem to me that all that would be required is the political will to allow all eligible Canadians to exercise their democratic right to vote in a federal election campaign.

The Chief Electoral Officer appeared before the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped and made a submission. He further sent representatives to appear before the committee at a public hearing. While these submissions did not indicate that there were any problems of accessibility for disabled voters, the subsequent testimony from witnesses at the hearing clearly revealed that such problems do indeed exist.

In Manitoba, the Elections Act has been amended to help provide accessibility to disabled voters. In the first instance, the returning officer is instructed to locate polling stations in permises to which the voters have access from the street without going up or down stairs.

The Manitoba Elections Act also states that in the case of a disabled person who cannot enter the existing polling place without difficulty, the returning officer should remove the ballot box, along with all ballots and documents in the polling place, and take it to a place in close proximity where it is accessible to the person, such as an automobile outside the polling station.

The special committee cites this Manitoba experience as a possible model for federal legislation. In the meantime, I believe the issue could be further debated before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I know that the statutory report of the Chief Electoral Officer is before that committee and I know that whether or not the House chooses to refer this subject to another committee or to kill it by talking it out, the subject matter will still be discussed before that committee. Therefore, it will not disappear or go away. It would be much more preferable if the House were to deal with it in a forthright and honest way today rather than simply to talk it out as Governments usually are wont to do.

Throughout the hearings of the special committee, it heard complaints that the voting system throughout Canada makes it difficult for many disabled Canadians to travel to polls on election day. The one exception to these complaints was the Province of Manitoba which has made provisions for a postal vote system for provincial elections.

Under the Manitoba Elections Act, the returning officer receives an application by mail at least ten days before the polling day, and returns an initial ballot to the voter at least seven days before the polling day. This ballot is then marked and sealed in a plain envelope, which is placed into another special envelope which is printed in the form of a certificate.

On the certificate envelope, two people must be identified: the voter, plus another person who is authorized to vote in the same electoral division. The second person must certify that the first person's information is correct. The voter can then send the ballot and the certificate to the Chief Electoral Officer by any means before the closing of the polls. In the case of postal disruptions, the ballots may be picked up by the division returning officer, or be dropped off by friends or family.

In the last Manitoba provincial election, 900 mail-in votes were received and were mostly from urban voters. Manitoba's Chief Electoral Officer advertised the details of the postal vote and felt that the subsequent results were satisfactory.

The present policy of centralizing polling places serves the needs of the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, but it ignores many of the needs of the voting public, especially of those Canadian citizens who are disabled. Centralization makes it easier for electoral officers to organize the vote count, but it makes it more difficult for many voters to reach the voting place. Centralization again may cut the costs of the office of the Chief Electoral Officer of running a national electoral organization, but at the price of depriving many Canadians of their votes. It is totally contradictory for the federal Government to espouse a policy of maximum voter participation on the one hand, and a policy of restricted access to polling places on the other. This centralized policy, in my view, should have been ended years ago when this committee made that recommendation. It is certainly not too late for this House to instruct the Chief Electoral Officer to do it now before the next election comes.

Many of the problems the disabled voters encounter at polling stations can be solved by educating the people responsible for those facilities. This includes deputy returning officers and their staffs. If these individuals become familiar with the needs of the disabled voter at the very outset of an election period, the many potential conflicts and problems of accessibility could be eliminated. Since the polling station personnel must go through an orientation session as a requirement of their job, this additional information regarding disabled voters will entail very little extra cost in time.

As I said at the outset, I am not convinced at all that it would take an amendment to the Canada Elections Act in order to provide disabled individuals with the full right to exercise their vote. Simple political will to make sure it happens could make it so. There are some physical difficulties in some electoral ridings, I suppose, with electoral returning officers continually going back to the same places that they found to be suitable in the past, such as old church buildings, schools, and that kind of thing. Simply because it has been good enough for those returning officers in the past does not mean to say that it is good enough for the person who is trying to exercise his vote, such as disabled elderly Canadians.

There is another issue that I want to touch on, one that does not deal specifically with accessibility at the polling stations, that is, the accessibility of individuals who are confined to psychiatric institutions and simply because of that they are denied the right to vote. By the way, Mr. Speaker, the Province of Ontario finally smartened up last year and amended its Elections Act to allow individuals who are confined in psychiatric institutions to exercise their right to vote, and to recognize that simply because an individual may be mentally disabled at some point in his or her life does not mean to say that that person cannot exercise good judgment in casting a ballot in an election campaign. It also displays a certain kind of mental attitude toward individuals who are mentally disabled or who are temporarily mentally disabled. The results of two elections in Ontario, the series of by-elections last fall, when amendments to that legislation were in effect, and the recent election of last Thursday proved that there were no difficulties or problems created by those amendments at all. The effect of these amendments was very much appreciated by many of those individuals in those institutions because it helped them to recognize in the period of recovery that they were treated as able-bodied citizens and treated with some respect for their illness.

The Canadian Mental Health Association and other organizations appeared before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections about three or four weeks ago and made a very strong case for an amendment under the Canada Elections Act which would remove that blatant discrimination against people who are mentally disabled or mentally handicapped. We are not talking about the criminally insane. We are talking about people who suffer a mental disability, and if anyone has taken a look at the studies over the last several years about the effects of high unemployment in this country, the effects of the tremendous social pressures placed on people, they will realize that any one of us could suffer a mental disorder at any time.

It seems to me that in that light politicians, and especially the ones here for this debate, should act in a responsible way. They should not talk out this motion. Even though I do support the motion itself, I do not feel it goes far enough in addressing the problem. At the very least if it were referred to a committee, as the Hon. Member for Davenport suggests and requests, the matter could be fully aired and debated. Witnesses could be heard and they could make their own case in a much more substantive way than we possibly can here.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take the necessary steps to ensure, that the Chief Electoral Officer, in future elections, make all polling stations in urban areas easily accessible to the elderly and the handicapped.

Many resolutions come before this House, and each in its own way and for its own reasons has special interest and importance. I think that today Members would agree that this resolution has a poignant message because of what it symbolizes in the long and continuing struggle to ensure that all Canadians including those who suffer physical handicaps shall enjoy the full birthright of Canadian citizenship.

Section 3 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms states something that has long been part of our birthright but is now an expressed guarantee, specifically:

> Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons—

That guarantee is supplemented by the guarantee contained in Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms now in force since April 17, 1985, which guarantees that every individual has the right to equal benefit of the law without discrimination based on physical disability.

In that context, there could be no happier resolution, no more appropriate resolution than the one we have before us here today.

In my view there are perhaps two really important things that count when it comes to dealing with the handicapped. The first is awareness. The second is action. In this country in recent years there has been an increasing measure of awareness of the special requirements that men and women have in trying to fulfil and achieve their full potential. I would say that a person does not become disabled because of an impairment; he or she becomes disabled when forced to live in a society which is designed for some fictitious or mythical person who has no disability.

There are some features about election law that have been particularly of interest to me, and in my book Political Rights, I talk about the concept of administrative disenfranchisement. It is well and good to put a law on these statute books which gives someone the right to vote. By those same laws we in fact disenfranchise certain people for good and sufficient policy reasons.

To date we have seen fit, for example, to disenfranchise judges, inmates of prisons and certain other categories of people. That is one form of expressed statutory disenfranchisement. It is clear public policy. What is not public policy, however, is the administrative disenfranchisement which results when someone seeks to exercise his or her right to vote but finds an obstacle, a barrier, a handicap that is in front of the person and in fact results in that person being disenfranchised.

I listened with interest to the introductory remarks of the Hon. Member for Davenport who brought this resolution before the House and, in particular, to the comments which followed from the spokesman for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). The Hon. Member for Beaches is certainly recognized in this House and beyond as one of the several Members of the Canadian House of Commons who have particularly focused on redressing the long-standing wrongs which confront Canadians who suffer from both physical and mental handicaps. He should understand that I, for my part, and I think other members of the government Party who will speak later, do not intend in any way, as he suggested, merely to talk this measure out in order to have it passed by and be forgotten. As I said at the outset, there must be awareness; there must also be action. Therefore, I would like to place a couple of other considrations before the House and the Hon. Member, in particular, who expressed that concern.

There are other more general reviews taking place of the entire Canada Elections Act. I have the honour to be chairman of a caucus committee which is looking at that. I can say that the Government is particularly mindful of ensuring that the proposed reforms, which have been piling up on the public agenda year after year as the Chief Electoral Officer has brought forth his report and made suggestions, very few of which were implemented, are comprehensively reviewed so that within a very short term—and hopefully within this session of the thirty-third Parliament—amendments to the Canada Elections Act will be brought in to deal with many changes, not only the ones cited in this resolution, to ensure among other things that all Canadians have full access to the franchise.

Beyond that there is another development, that is, the fact that the parliamentary committee on equality rights is currently reviewing all federal laws to ensure that they comply with the spirit and the letter of Section 15. Major initiatives are under way which will culminate in specific action in the near term. The ideas contained in the resolution of the Hon. Member for Davenport are certainly part of that, but I suggest that it may be inappropriate today for us to take the provisions of this resolution as necessarily the final word or indeed the best solution which can be found.

For example, it bothers me to note that the resolution addresses only polling stations in urban areas. Handicapped and elderly Canadians live in the country from coast to coast to coast, many in rural areas. I think one or two of the other Hon. Members who will speak later will touch further on the question of the distinction between urban and rural and why it would be almost hypocritical on our part to seek to end one form of discrimination while in the process of perpetrating another, namely, maintaining an urban-rural distinction between those who suffer handicaps.

Indeed, just on that point, I did a little research and I would like to put some information on the record. In the 1984 federal election, there was a total of 64,169 regular polls and advance polls. Approximately 55 per cent of those were in buildings with level access. Of this total number of polls, 19,742 were in rural areas. This represents 31 per cent of the total or approximately a third. Because this issue has come to public consciousness at a relatively recent date, although it has been foremost in the mind of handicapped Canadians who have sought to these many years to cast these ballots, and because only recently it is emerging as an issue to be addressed, for example, here in Parliament, the Chief Electoral Office does not have figures as to the number of level access polling stations in rural and urban areas respectively. However, if we make the assumption that 55 per cent of those 19,742 rural polls were accessible, it means that some 8,884 polls were not in buildings with level access.

As quoted in the Winnipeg Free Press of March 5, 1985, the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Hamel, stated that trying to find 70,000 places across Canada with level access was not only difficult but impossible. We have therefore brought into sharp relief the reality with which we must grapple, that is, taking the principle of equality and bringing it to earth in specific, concrete places in terms which in fact will deal with the question of access. It would be misinterpreting the spirit of this House and the mood of these times to say that we cannot proceed in this direction because of the difficulty of finding level access places. If we proceed on that basis in this or in any other direction in public life, we will always be able to find excuses. Therefore, we have to press on. The times require it. The Charter guarantees it. There will be solutions if we have the will to see that they are found.

However, finding those solutions is yet another reason I would suggest to the House this afternoon that it may be inappropriate to adopt immediately this resolution, because there are other possibilities which should perhaps be part of a total package deal. Of course, another one of them is the question of the mobile ballot box. This has been used with some imagination at certain times in Canadian history, certainly when elections were conducted during times of war. In one instance the ballot box was actually carried to the troops in the trenches and the ballots were cast in that fashion. There have also been closer to home and more recent examples. There was one in my riding in the last election. It was the case of Mrs. Irene Cole of Etobicoke who went to her polling station and found that she was unable to get to the ballot box because of stairs. It was a question of accessibility. After a call was made to one of the Party's headquarters, people came to assist. It was arranged that the DRO bring the ballot box out and down the steps, and she cast her ballot in that fashion. There are common sense solutions. If it is impossible to find for every polling station in the country a level access building, let us at least ensure that the law provides a kind of mechanism which is common sense and can do the job. It is another solution which I think should be part of a package deal.

A third one which could be added to this in any amendments that come forward—and I would only pick up the idea to which the Hon. Member for Beaches already referred—is the example of the Province of Manitoba. Manitoba has developed the concept of a mailed ballot. If disabled and if certain qualifications are established and rules set forth that are followed within a certain time period, a citizen can cast his or her ballot by mail. That experience has proved very workable. In the last Manitoba election, approximately .2 per cent of the electorate of that province cast their ballots in that fashion. In the sense that that can also be a solution to the problem I think suggests that we should take that idea and make it part of the total package we can put together to ensure that the rights of handicapped Canadians are best assured in voting. In fact, the number of such votes cast in that Manitoba provincial election, just for the record, was 900 out of a total of 488,821 votes cast. The procedure there has already been described for the House by the Hon. Member for Beaches, so I will not repeat it at this time.

There is clearly a general mood for change in this area. The question that I asked in this House of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) last week about the implementation of the Ratushny report indicated that we are on the brink of a major announcement in that area. As Hon. Members know, the Ratushny report contains recommendations for changes in transportation facilities in Canada to ensure that handicapped Canadians can move about the country with freedom and dignity.

Another incident that some Members of the House may know about and others may not indicates something of the mood of the times and the willingness to try something new to accommodate those who suffer from handicaps. I refer to the recent expansion of facilities here for deaf people. We now have live simultaneous sign language interpretation of Question Period that is broadcast in both languages. I want to mention that a few weeks ago the Speaker of the House provided three deaf students who were attending Question Period with a TV monitor in the Ladies' Gallery so that they could follow the sign language interpreter and hear the words spoken on the floor. That was an important development, not too big a thing in the broad scheme of things but, as the old song states "Little things mean a lot".

What we are looking at here is a chance to do something that will mean a lot to a great many Canadians. There are precedents as well for us to look at in the Province of Ontario. Reference was made moments ago to the recently re-enacted Elections Act of the Province of Ontario. That provides access for the handicapped to polling stations. We would do well at the federal level to benefit from the experience at other levels.

In conclusion, I want to say as well what we did in developing special ballots for blind voters. In my book on political rights I discuss the recent history of the development of two forms of ballots, the one involving the template and the other the notched ballot to assist blind voters. We are on the right track. The debate this afternoon is serving a very valuable purpose in bringing good suggestions forward that can be incorporated in the amendments that the Government will introduce this session. I look forward during the remainder of the debate to hearing other Members express their views as to how we can make great progress on this important question of achieving equality for all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I feel very honoured to be taking part in this debate on the motion of my hon. friend from Toronto. I listened to the speeches. After all, that is why we are here. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are still Members who believe they can learn something by listening to their colleagues, and even after 20 years in the House, I am still very interested to hear what new Members, especially, have to say in the House.

I am proud to say that the comments made by our distinguished colleague from Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) will give all the Members of this House something to think about. And if I may have his attention, I would like to congratulate him publicly, because his comments, with those of my hon. colleague from Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and our hon. colleague from the New Democratic Party, deserve our attention. I want to start my comments—I can assure Hon. Members they will be brief enough to give another colleague on the Government side, who asked whether we could share the time available, a chance to speak—by saying that I hope we do not talk this motion out. I think we might refer this motion to the appropriate committee for consideration.

At this point, and I am encouraged somewhat by my hon. colleague from Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), I think it would be appropriate to pay tribute to someone who is no longer here in the House today, and I am referring to the former Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliot Trudeau, since Canadians have started to talk more and more about the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. For the sake of history, I think that those who are listening or would like to listen or those who will be reading what we said, I must repeat that thanks to what some called his stubbornness and others his determination, we have today a Charter that is complete and became so on April 17 of this year when we proclaimed Section 15 which is now an integral part of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I therefore want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to our former Prime Minister. I think there is no question of partisanship here, and I hope that very soon the Charter will also apply to the last province that has yet to agree to participate in the process and sign this agreement.

I also wish to congratulate the Chief Electoral Officer, who even before the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms existed had been aware of the problem in Section 168 referred to by the Hon. Member in his motion that in future elections, all polling stations in urban areas be made easily accessible.

There have been changes because the Chief Electoral Officer was already aware of the problem. That is why all ridings were asked to hold advance polls in locations easily accessible for people who would be unable to have easy access to regular polling stations, so that they could exercise their right to vote, which is now part of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Section 3.

I think a word of congratulations to our Chief Electoral Officer is indeed in order, especially since this year, he is celebrating a very special anniversary after years of loyal service for the benefit of all Canadians, whatever their political affiliation.

I would like to say that we are in complete agreement, at least I personally am in complete agreement with what was said, as I mentioned earlier, by my colleague from the New Democratic Party who spoke before and who presented the motion, and especially with what was said by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, when he commented that there must be no discrimination. Anyone who has the right to vote must also be free to exercise that right. This reminds me of Bill C-26, and although I did not take part in the debate this afternoon, there are a number of similarities. We would like to see all people between the ages of 60 and 65, whether they are married, single, divorced or widowed, treated on the same footing.

I think this is real equality and that these are real rights. But I just wanted to say that in passing.

I also think the suggestion, for people with a practical turn of mind ... and I see the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) and the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault). There are people here who may be new to the House but they are practical. And perhaps, as one of our colleagues pointed out this afternoon, we might have trouble finding 70,000 accessible polling stations right away.

Because in some areas, I don't want to oversimplify, but I think that we should use basic common sense. What does basic common sense say? It says not to create unnecessary difficulties, but if the elector should find it impossible to go to the polls, maybe the polls should go to the elector. If the elector who is handicapped goes to a polling station and cannot enter because it is located in a church basement or on a third floor, provisions of the act should make it possible for a ballot box to be made accessible to him or her, in the presence of the representatives of all the parties. Which means that when one uses one's basic common sense, one can always find a reasonable solution to a reasonable problem. These are the few remarks I wanted to make. I was prepared to say a lot more, but time flies, and my distinguished colleague from the Government side, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has asked me to share my time with one of her colleagues, something I am pleased to do. I want to repeat that I enjoyed the remarks of this new Member of Parliament, I find them quite reasonable, and if only we could work together to reform ... There are many amendments to be made to the Elections Act, to streamline it as the need arises during an election campaign. I think that we should be able to obtain the result the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is seeking. Thank you. I conclude to allow my hon. friend to rise.

• (1750)

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for sharing his allotted time with me to give me a chance, for the first time in this House, to speak about a Bill in which I am especially interested, namely one which aims at making polling stations and even public buildings easily accessible to the elderly and the handicapped.

I worked for many years as a draftsman, and I very often had to design public buildings. Fortunately, it has been possible to design easier and more adequate access to such buildings. What I find surprising is that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who is a man of experience, would propose a Bill aimed at correcting a certain inequity towards a particular group of our population, but only a particular group. I represent a rural constituency, and when I think of all the urban polling stations, I have to conclude that, while one inequity will be corrected, another will be created. I cannot support this resolution aimed at correcting only part of the problem. I believe that our handicapped and senior citizens, wherever they live in this country, should have easy and adequate access to polling stations. In this regard, I am unable to support the resolution of the Hon. Member because he is creating one inequity in his attempt to correct another.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at length about this matter, but since many of my colleagues also wish to express their views on this Bill, I shall yield to them.

[English]

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise to speak in support of the timely and thoughtfull motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that all polling stations in future federal elections be accessible to the elderly and the handicapped.

The special committee which tabled its report in February of 1981 heard complaints throughout the hearings that the voting system in Canada makes it difficult for handicapped persons to travel to polling stations on election day. There are many reasons why a handicapped person may not be able to get to a polling station. First, the polling station may not be in an accessible area. As an example, it may be in a location with stairs but no elevetor. Second, the handicapped person may be confined to bed and thus unable to get to a polling station. A possible cure for this may be in implementing a system such as is used in the Province of Manitoba. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) has already referred to that idea.

Another problem faced by the elderly and the disabled in trying to exercise their right to vote is the policy of the Chief Electoral Officer to try to centralize polling stations in order to save money. This policy has caused many elderly and disabled people to lose their franchise, Mr. Speaker, and I submit that no reduction in the expenses to run the polling stations is worth disenfranchising Canadians. Another problem faced by these two groups in voting is the fact that those persons who work in a polling station are often not qualified in terms of the special needs of the handicapped or the elderly.

On page 49 and page 50 of the 1984 statutory report of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, it is recommended that Section 45 of the Canada Elections Act be amended to add two provisions which would deal with some of the problems I have just outlined. First, the Chief Electoral Officer recommends that a mobile poll be set up at a number of institutions where the elderly, the handicapped or other incapacitated electors are located. The second recommendation is to allow the deputy returning officer of a polling station to take the ballot box and the necessary documents to the entrance of the polling station, or even outside the polling station, in order to allow the incapacitated elector to cast his or her vote. I am in full support of the two recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer.

In the interest of having another colleague of mine speak to this motion, may I just summarize by saying that by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and only by those rights that are provided, we must ensure that the handicapped and the elderly of this country are guaranteed access to polls. We should not let the cost stand in the way.

So I am in total support of the Hon. Member's motion. It is, and I stress this, time for action. But let us ensure that we do not overlook any existing problems which would work against the splendid spirit of this motion, if these problems were unresolved.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed the substance of the motion of the Hon. Member. In fact, I have had the opportunity in the last while to examine a number of elements related to the Elections Act. I represent a rural riding, as does my colleague who spoke a moment ago. I must confess I am a little surprised that we are addressing ourselves in this debate to the urban rather than to the rural component, at least in part. That does give me some concern, Mr. Speaker. It always seems that the rural areas are the areas which are first to be ignored.

I think that one must recognize that there are certain hardships in terms of getting to the polls which are more evident and apparent in the rural setting than they are in the urban. After all, in an urban setting one has the opportunity of employing or utilizing a dozen or more different facilities in a given polling area to which a person can go and exercise his or her right to vote. Those kinds of provisions do not exist in the rural area. We take what we can get whether that be a school, a church, some other public building or even a private building. In fact, I recall a polling station in a private home in the small community of Paterson in my riding. So while it is fine to impose a provision for those who are handicapped or elderly in the urban areas, it does present some difficulties for those persons in the rural setting.

It has been suggested that the advance poll would more than accommodate this particular problem. But I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that argument, while it is persuasive, cuts both ways because, really, what you are saying to the handicapped and elderly persons who would be expected to vote at the advance poll is, "You are a little different from anyone else. You have to vote at the advance poll. It doesn't matter if you have a medical appointment 200-miles removed or if you are on vacation and plan to be back on election day". Those are the difficulties which I can see will surface immediately.

In terms of the actual cost of construction or the provision for the voter to have access at the urban level, I think those costs would be much higher than at the rural level. Essentially, we are dealing with an existing building, probably with a simple modification.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—TOXIC CHEMICAL CONTROL PROGRAM. (B) REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE RENEWED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, a few years ago it was determined by the Liberal Government that the management of toxic chemicals by the Department of the Environment was a priority of national importance in Canada. The Toxic Chemicals Management Program which was instituted dealt with all the human activities which have the potential to alter nature, and the amounts or distribution of chemicals in the environment which adversely affect human beings, other life forms, ecosystems and renewable resources.

In 1985, it appears that the management of toxic chemicals by the Department of the Environment has ceased to be a priority of national importance. As of April 1, 1985, the Toxic Chemicals Management Program ceased to exist.

When I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) on April 23 why this program was cancelled, she answered: "It was a temporary one and is now included in my Main Estimates". In our research we found that the Estimates of the Environmental Protection Service have been reduced from last year by $6.4 million and that the personnel has been reduced from last year by 41 persons.

In light of the cuts to the service, I must ask the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary whether the Toxic Chemicals Management Program still has the same program funds to work with as it did prior to April 1.

It appears that what we have is another cut, through the back door, surreptitiously camouflaged by the Minister when she pretends that the program in question has been "included in my Main Estimates". How can the Minister say that when the budget of the Environmental Protection Service for this year has been cut by $6.4 million and the personnel has been cut by 41 persons?

I must gently reproach the Parliamentary Secretary for having failed to arrange for a scrutiny by members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to analyse the Estimates. The month of April has passed, we are now in May, and nothing of that kind has yet been arranged. Therefore, we are forced to use the "late show" to discuss that budget.

In checking the Estimates we could not find the following important components of the Toxic Chemicals Management Program which existed last year. One of the components was a three-year action plan on matters such as drinking water, dioxins, pesticides, indoor air quality and contaminants in fish. As well, we could not find the component which dealt with the development of a federal plan of action for the control of dioxin. Neither could we find the component which would improve national pesticide management and regulation activities by contributing to the registration of pesticides and by informing the public on the decision-making process with respect to pesticides. There is also the component which has to do with support of the general co-ordinative role, the contribution to meetings of the Canadian Council of Environmental and Resource Ministers on questions related to toxic substances, and the co-ordination of the Department's input to the interdepartmental committee on toxic chemicals as based on a Cabinet document on pesticides which outlines a three-year federal plan of action. These items have disappeared. I submit something fishy is going on because the absence of these components disproves the claim by the Minister that the toxic chemical program came to a "normal end".

In addition, there are cuts in the environmental conservation service of $5 million and 240 person-years. What is not listed this year in the Estimates for that service is multiple resource conservation which last year had approximately 81 person-years and $5.2 million. This program undertook research and monitoring of toxic chemicals to ascertain concentrations, transportation, sedimentation and precipitation. In addition, a comprehensive integrated surveillance plan was to be implemented with greater emphasis on radioactive waste disposal. That is gone, too.

Where has this program gone? It is not in the Estimates. Why has toxic chemical research become less a priority today than it was last year? Why is the Government cutting the research needed to solve the severe problems posed by toxic chemicals? What the population along Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River is losing is the essential research needed, without interruption, to determine the flow, quantity and increases of toxic chemicals in our water.

I will conclude by saying that this research is essential. We on this side of the House expect this Government to demonstrate its ability to prevent toxic chemical problems and to undertake responsible management of chemicals. Because of cut-backs which have resulted in the loss of important research programs, the Minister of the Environment should address the concerns of the public regarding the potential health problems associated with contaminated water. I submit that the toxic chemical management program is gone; the Estimates are reduced by 41 person-years in the environment protection service, and 240 person-years in the environment conservation service. How can the Minister claim that a toxic chemical management program is now in the Main Estimates? I ask you.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) indicated at the beginning of his comments that a number of years ago, I guess that was in the 1970s, the Liberal Government recognized the importance of toxic chemicals. I think that was all well and good, but in recognizing that he must also recognize the way the management of those toxic chemicals was really screwed up by the Liberal Government in the meantime. What we have ended up with is a mishmash of programs, a number of different orientations, and 18 different departments involved in trying to rationalize the management of our toxic control program.

I would like to look first at the premise of the Hon. Member, that these programs are gone. If he wants to give the Estimates the proper attention, he will see that none of those programs has been cancelled. The programs have been integrated into the internal programs of the department. The people who live on the Niagara River can be comforted by the fact that the programs will continue.

What the previous Government had was a fund which was superimposed on the regular Estimates, and the Hon. Member knows it was due to run out this year. It was a three-year program. All of the programs funded by that extra money are now included in the regular programming, with renewed vigour.

One of the Minister's priorities, and he has made sure it is also a priority of the department—I think this is very important in this whole discussion—is that toxic chemicals are probably second on our list of concerns, following acid rain. The competence with which we have handled that program will be matched in the way we handle the toxic chemical program with the thousands of new chemicals coming on stream.

We as a Government need to organize and manage from beginning to end the question of toxic chemicals and the pollution they are causing in our water, our air, the food we eat, indeed, the whole range of things we have to deal with on a day-to-day basis as Canadians. The Government and this Department are now in the process of ensuring that we have a long-term program that will adequately deal with those very serious questions.

• (1810)

NATIONAL DEFENCE—NORTH WARNING SYSTEM—PARTICIPATION OF NORTHERN CONTRACTORS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, on May 3 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) what the Government was doing to ensure that northern contractors and employees might benefit from the new North Warning System. I was pleased with the answer he gave at that time. He told us that as soon as the decisions had been made, or shortly thereafter, he had sent officers of his Department to brief the various territorial Governments, and that northern contractors and employees would be given every opportunity for involvement in this project. That was good news. The reason I bring this matter up again this evening is to elaborate a little on the way things went in the past and the way in which they might go better in the future.

In the mid 1950s, when the DEW line was originally constructed, things were very different. We did not have a lot of northern contractors with expertise. The level of training and education of the population was, to a great extent, lower than it is today. The whole construction exercise was very much under the control and management of the United States Air Force. Canadians did not play a full role in construction at that time.

There is a story going around that I believe is true. At one time a Supreme Court judge was forced to land at one of the DEW line sites. The American officer commanding there would not let the Canadian Supreme Court judge into the base. He told him to go away. These things will certainly not happen again with the new North Warning System. We have come a very long way in the last 30 years.

I have had a number of inquiries from very competent northern contractors involved in the building and construction trades, in engineering design work, in transportation, and in supply of all kinds of material, who are anxious to get in on the opportunities involved with the North Warning System. I have had inquiries from Chambers of Commerce and Arctic Co-operatives Limited which represent a number of businesses.

I have made a suggestion to the Minister of National Defence which I hope he will act on. I have suggested that he create a liaison office to provide information to northern contractors. This might be located in Ottawa, for the time being. It might eventually be located in Yellowknife, or they may want to use some of the facilities which may be vacated at CFS Inuvik. We should have an office established and an officer in charge whose specific job it is to encourage northern involvement in the scheme. We should be able to provide information to northern contractors. They want to know in advance what types of jobs are going to be available. If that information is provided to them it will allow them to make the necessary arrangements to get their bids in order and find the available people. It may be necessary to engage in a little training of northern employees in order to take advantage of the contracts as they come up.

I have had suggestions from constituents with regard to the integration of civil and military support for the system. Perhaps unit toll carriers can be used instead of completely military aircraft. That might result in a saving to the Department of National Defence, and at the same time increase the volume of freight handled by the unit toll carriers, hopefully bringing down the price. The possibility of establishing staging centres somewhere in the north instead of shipping out of a southern base is one suggestion. You may want to take it into a location somewhere in the North for assembly before it is shipped up to the various north warning systems.

These are some of the ideas that I have received. I simply want to pass them on to the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary today. I believe there will be tremendous opportunities from this. We know that it will not be a panacea for all our employment problems in the North but there will be hundreds and possibly thousands of person years of employment connected with this. We in the North would certainly like to get our fair share. I am satisfied that we will, provided some of these suggestions are taken into account.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the appreciation of the Minister and the Deputy Minister for the very quick intervention by the Hon. Member when the north warning project was announced, and for his continuing interest in the subject. Certainly the Hon. Member's interest in securing employment for Canadians living in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon is appreciated and well known in the House through his representations. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) urged him on May 3, during Question Period, to make him aware of problem areas concerning the participation of northern workers so that they could be addressed properly. He has done so today and we will take those suggestions as advice and look forward to considering them very carefully.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government intends to take steps which will favour Canadians living in the North to every extent possible. Follow-up visits by the project manager of the North Warning System are already planned. In consort with officials of the Territorial Government, the social impact and job opportunities will be reviewed and discussed in considerably more detail. The Government is acutely aware of the valuable contribution the Inuit and Indian populations have made to the development of the North. These native peoples make up a large portion of the total population and their well-being and interests will be important factors for the Government to consider.

There will also be an evaluation in which the Department of National Defence and the Territorial Governments will assess the types of northern companies and indeed the groups of companies that could participate in the construction and implementation of the North Warning System. Contracts will be awarded some time next year relating to the long range radar construction in the eastern part of the country, Baffin Island and Labrador. Construction in the western arctic will only occur in late 1988 and during 1989. In summary, consideration of northerners and of northern firms will be a factor in the selection of contractors to do work on the North Warning System project.

The Minister of National Defence and the Hon. Member of course have a particular interest, experience and understanding of northern development opportunities and concerns. The Minister and the Hon. Member, working together, will make this project the kind of successful model that we expect for northern development projects.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED POSTAGE RATE INCREASES

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, millions of Canadians have finished filing this year's income tax returns. They sent their tax forms in by the April 30 deadline.

However, one businessman in northwestern Saskatchewan was waiting for a receipt he required to complete his tax form. The receipt that he needed was mailed from Toronto, postmarked March 13. He waited and he waited. Finally the receipt arrived in Battleford, Saskatchewan, 49 days later, on May 1, one day after the tax deadline.

At a time when many Canadians are growing increasingly frustrated with their Post Office, and while this same Post Office asks Canadian citizens and businesses to pay more for their postage, many ask why. I urge the Cabinet to consider very carefully the increase in postal rates requested by the Post Office.

The cost of mail is significant, particularly for small businesses. The public would not be expected to shoulder the burden of removing the deficit of a Crown corporation that sometimes provides questionable service. If the Post Office does not perform adequately, then Canadians should not have to pay more for less.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF INDIAN WOMEN

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Quebec native women I make the following statement.

Indian women have had enough of the Government of Canada's refusing them the most fundamental of human rights. Indian women seek justice which they have never known since the arrival of the Indian Act in 1869. There have been one hundred years of misfortune for and injustice to those who married a non-Indian. This law, which was imposed on them by a non-Indian government, puts control on their most fundamental human rights, and creates divisions within their families.

For those who have married a non-Indian, this law takes away their identity, the possibility of transmitting this identity to their children, the right to live in their communities, and even the right to be buried within their communities. By this same law, which comes from the federal Government, non-Indian women who marry Indian men acquire Indian status.

The federal Government, in an effort to repair these injustices, finally introduced a bill, Bill C-31, which could have re-established the full rights of Indian women and their children. However, the committee which was mandated to study this Bill has proposed amendments which are contrary to the spirit of the Bill by putting limitations on the rights of Indian women, and has refused to consider amendments which would have guaranteed the right of Indian identity for their children.

They have had enough. They insist that justice be rendered to them. They insist that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) act now. Bill C-31 must ensure full rights to women and their children.

VIA RAIL

REINSTITUTION OF SERVICE BETWEEN EDMONTON AND VANCOUVER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada recently took steps to reinstitute regular western VIA Rail service between Edmonton and Vancouver, which includes the scenic and much travelled tourist corridor between Jasper and Kamloops, British Columbia.

This decision enabled the local communities to develop local tourism infrastructure projects. The critical component in this long awaited development process is the existing passenger train stations in the communities located within this corridor. However, VIA and CN are considering closing stations at Valemount, Blue River, and Clearwater, which woud seriously inhibit these communities in their tourism development.

Therefore I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to intervene and take whatever action is necessary to ensure that these stations remain intact so that passengers travelling along this scenic corridor will have the opportunity to access local tourist areas, which will enhance not only VIA's attractiveness but help provide local economic development and jobs.

HORTICULTURE

AGREEMENT ON INSPECTION FEES

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the agricultural inspection fees proposed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) as a necessary means of reducing our inherited deficit, have been under discussion by the Minister and the various producer groups for some weeks. The purpose of these consultations is to scale the fees in such a way that they will cause as little hardship as possible to producers.

One example of the positive effects of these consultations is the agreement between the Minister and the Canadian Horticulture Council and the Canadian Fruit Wholesale Association. These meetings led to agreement by the Minister to accept the horticulture association's suggested inspection fee of three cents per hundredweight at shipping point. Before this fee is changed next year, similar consultations will again take place.

This is another example of the co-operative spirit that has been encouraged from the outset by the Government that seeks consensus, after consultation, before implementing policies. Most certainly there is a vast difference between this kind of approach and that of the former Government.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE OF MIRABEL

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, what happens to Mirabel Airport will have a vital impact on the economy of the Montreal area and that of the rest of Quebec.

The Government ought to decide as soon as possible what it intends to do about Mirabel. Several Members of this House are concerned about what the Government will decide, and I think it is entirely unacceptable that the Government should refuse to announce whether it will approve expansion of the airport in Toronto or try to give Mirabel a certain status.

All parties concerned in this matter agree that Mirabel is the perfect location for an international airport, that it and is well suited to future expansion. There are no obstacles to expanding Mirabel, except the Government's inertia which is preventing it from making a decision. The people of Quebec and Montreal are waiting for a decision by the Government, and I think this Government is demonstrating its indifference to their expectations.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

GRAND CANAL PROPOSAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of attention paid recently to the so-called Grand Canal proposal, whereby the theory is that James Bay would be dammed, turned into a freshwater lake, and water diverted back south into and beyond the Great Lakes to points in the United States.

This proposal, earlier regarded as too bizarre to be accorded much credibility, has been given some credibility lately by the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) approval of water exports by tanker from his own riding, and his subsequent silence on the broader issue of water diversion for export which the Grand Canal project raises. Perhaps the silence is intended to complement the promotion of the Grand Canal scheme by the Prime Minister's old friend, Quebec Liberal Leader Robert Bourassa, whose enthusiasm for this massive act of technological hubris and ecological insanity seems to know no bounds.

The federal Liberal caucus, on the other hand, speaks with two voices. The Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) thinks it is a great idea, while the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) appears to be against it. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) thinks it should be studied.

● (1410)

Canadian waters are not ours to sell. In this sense, opposition to such a diversion is not to be seen as selfishness but as good stewardship of that which has been entrusted to us and of the ecological and planetary context in which our Arctic and northern waters need to be considered.

Americans, like Canadians, should look first to what can be done in terms of water quality improvement and water conservation. They would be surprised what we could do if the political will were there on both sides of the border. Unfortunately it does not seem to exist at this time.

NATIVE PEOPLES

FUNDING OF COMMUNICATION AGENCIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Native communications societies throughout Canada are suffering a severe hiatus because of the Government's failure to date to approve any form of advance funding for the 1985-86 fiscal year.

These societies perform a valuable and essential function for native Canadians, and enrich the ethnocultural mosaic for all of us.

If present uncertainties are allowed to continue, the state of anxiety and confusion permeating the directors and staff will deepen, impairing further their effectiveness and enthusiasm.

The Government must learn to play fair with the agencies it funds. Delay is a form of denial. Numerous bodies wonder if it is being used now to identify those programs which could later be cut without too much political backlash. It is time for the Government to put its money where the Prime Minister's April 18 statement directs.

SMALL BUSINESS

CAPACITY TO CREATE JOBS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in a speech to the Ottawa Social Planning Council, the Executive Director of the Canadian Council on Social Development cautioned Canadians about the role that small business could play in developing long-term employment and economic opportunities. Let me say I disagree, and I point to the facts.

For the past ten years over 70 per cent of new job creation in this country has been in the small business sector. Small business is responsible for 40 per cent of all employment, and for between 55 per cent and 60 per cent of private sector employment. Women now own 29 per cent of small businesses and are creating small businesses at three times the rate of men. Small business is also the largest employer of the youth of our country.

Yes, small business may not pay the highest wages, have long-term pensions, and job security, but Canadians with ideas and independence seek out the small business sector to fulfil their dreams. Many of the innovations and new products of our society are founded in garages or small laboratories, and grow into thriving small enterprises.

I can assure Canadians that this Government stands solidly behind the small business sector. Challenge '85 is a good example. We will continue to review our policies and laws, whether in the fields of taxation, pension reform, or encouragement of our financial institutions to meet the needs of small enterprises, to respond and to enhance the future contribution of small business to create jobs and keep the Canadian economy growing.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

HOUSING

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in answer to one of my questions, the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation said that I was not familiar with the programs I had mentioned to him. In Hansard, I mentioned to the Minister the "Programme canadien de rénovation et de construction de logement locatif et de logement social". I realize the Minister is not familiar with the French language, so I suggest he check the briefing papers provided by his Department. In English, the "régime de construction de logement locatifs" is: Canada Rental Supply Plan, and "logement social" is Social Housing.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore suggest that the Minister brush up on his programs before answering questions, so that he can give the right answers.

HISTORIC EVENTS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF VE DAY

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the ending of hostilities in Europe during World War II. For a great many Canadians, this day holds a special significance. It is a time for both remembrance and reflection.

Canadians have always played a vital role in the defence of democracy and freedom. Over half a million Canadians served overseas during the Second World War, most of them in Europe. From the submarine war in the Atlantic, to the Battle for Britain in the skies, to the liberation of the Netherlands, Canadians fought for the values and liberties that we now cherish so dearly.

The conflict in Europe, like all wars, was a terrible human tragedy for everyone involved; for those who went overseas, for their loved ones who endured many anxious years in Canada, and especially for those who suffered the supreme sacrifice and were never to see their homes again.

● (1415)

It is our duty as a civilized nation to ensure that no Canadian will ever have to endure what our brave veterans so unselfishly suffered for their country. If there is a lesson to be learned in our wartime experience in Europe, it would be to underline the need to commit ourselves to the peaceful resolution of conflict.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DR. GARRET FITZGERALD, PRIME MINISTER OF IRELAND

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. President of the Privy Council on what I understand is an agreement, may I indicate to the House the presence in our gallery today of some distinguished visitors. I had to decide in what order to do this, so I will do it by parliamentary seniority and start, if I may, by introducing to the House the distinguished Prime Minister of Ireland, Dr. Garret FitzGerald. We are most happy for him to be with us today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Accompanying Dr. FitzGerald is a very large delegation all of whom are equally welcome.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MR. HASSAN ALI, MINISTER OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE, REPUBLIC OF IRAQ

Mr. Speaker: In our gallery as well today we have the Minister of International Trade of the Republic of Iraq, Mr. Hassan Ali, and Mr. Shanta, a Member of the National Assembly of Iraq.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversry of VE Day, it has been agreed that each Party would have approximately five minutes at this point in time to pay tribute to the occasion and that the time involved would be added on to Question Period after the conclusion of the remarks.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF VE DAY

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, 40 years ago the war ended in Europe. This was a day of great significance because it represented a victory over the most pernicious evil ever known to man, Naziism. Naziism and its horrible work against humanity in general and the Jewish people in particular are and forever shall be an indelible stain on the conscience of history. For all those who died, this is a day of remembrance but it is also a day of hope and reconciliation and renewal.

[Translation]

Today we are commemorating the dedication of these Canadian men and women and the sacrifices they made. We remember especially those wives who lost their husbands and families that lost their loved ones in the war. Their sacrifice has made subsequent generations of Canadians realize that peace is our fundamental concern.

By participating in the World War, Canadians helped to liberate Europe. It is our duty today to work unceasingly for peace, on behalf of a generation of Canadians who died in combat.

[English]

In 1939, Canada entered the war immediately, convinced that our freedom and the Freedom of future generations had been gravely and perhaps fatally jeopardized by actions taken in Europe.

Although our population was relatively small at the time, Canada committed all its resources and a million people, all of whom performed with courage and sacrifice. Many were wounded, thousands were killed, the glory of our youth consigned to European soil. Those who returned did so having paid a very high price. It is to all of them—our veterans and their families—who served this country that Canada owes its greatest and its eternal debt of gratitude.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Some who returned are in this House today in all political Parties. One of those young Canadians who went to fight, as did those from other political persuasions, with the very clear vision of what he was fighting for—and he has preserved that belief in democracy and freedom, undimmed and undiminished today—is the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen). Because of his very distinguished record of service in the greatest of wars, I invite him to speak now to Parliament on behalf of the Government of Canada.

● (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: —it was only nine days after the invasion of Poland that this House of Commons 45 years ago, without a single dissenting voice, declared war on the totalitarian state that brought it about. Before it was over there were 57 countries around the world involved on one side or the other.

A mobilization was seen here at home in Canada, the like of which has never been seen before in that kind of cause and hopefully will never be seen again. A navy was created in 1910 which, because of the foresight of the planners of the early twenties and thirties, was ready to go to meet the crisis at once and grew to be the third largest navy in the world; an air force was created in 1924 that was the scene of one of the greatest air training plans that the world has ever seen, turning out pilots from every Commonwealth country and others that were engaged in that conflict; we had an army whose roots reached deep into the past history of this country.

Today, ironically, as we move into this period of reconciliation that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke of, we have now as our staunch allies those who were enemies during that conflict of 40 years ago.

If the House might permit me for a moment to focus on some of the words of the Prime Minister with respect to the reason for Canadians going to war, there appears to be an impression in some quarters that those who left their farms and factories, their books and their futures in 1939, 1940 and after, had no clear idea what they were fighting for. I want to tell you, Sir, that that was not the case. You do not mobilize millions of men and women in a cause in free countries around the world without a very powerful motivation. Most of us knew precisely what we were fighting for.

As the Prime Minister mentioned, there are men and women in this House who served. The present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) is in Europe today participating in the commemorative services there to mark this occasion. The distinguished Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) and the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), who sit with us today, knew exactly what they were fighting for. Nor can we forget the role that was played by 50,000 women and the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who contributed as effectively and as fully on the home front as those of us who were there.

• (1425)

To say that those who took part in this tremendous conflict, this tremendous outpouring of blood and resources that was the Second World War, did not have a clear idea of what it was about is to betray that for which they fought: the right to choose our own form of government, the right to free expression, the right to reject a form of government and philosophy that was anti-human and anti-democratic. We were aware of the anti-Semitic foundation of Hitler's philosophy but we were not aware, as we could not be, of the inhuman and lunatic extent to which those philosophies were pursued.

The Holocaust to which the Prime Minister referred, that crime against humanity, could only be possible in a totalitarian state where the truth was kept from the people. At that time we perceived very dimly, it is true, the face of totalitarianism in the face of Naziism, but we perceived that neither could live in a world where freedom was cherished. The concept of freedom is based on an appreciation of the human personality.

Over vast regions of the earth today and throughout widely separated parts of the world, humanity is subjected to indignities and horrors which reveal that totalitarianism, the subjugation of the individual by the state, still lives and breathes. In police states where freedom depends on the colour of skin or racial origin, totalitarianism continues to hold sway. We fought in those days to push back the creeping incubus of totalitarianism and the crushing out of the human spirit. Since the end of the war in 1945, this day 40 years ago, it has been creeping forward. That is what the war then was about and that is why young Canadians went out to serve.

Last month during my visit to Europe to discuss NATO affairs, I could not help but remember the magnitude and magnificence of the effort made by those committed to the concept of freedom, by those committed to the conviction that totalitarianism has no place in any free society.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: So yes, Mr. Speaker, it was worth doing. To remember that is something that we owe to the members of that generation whose like we shall not soon see again. They went out with a smile on their lips to face death in a multitude of forms. They went out because they wanted a world in which children could play on the lawn of Parliament Hill and in which the divine spark of creation in every human being was respected. They went out because freedoms were at stake.

Those freedoms cannot be taken for granted. Every diligence is required by all Canadians in order to ensure the maintenance of their continued existence. It should be the dedication of all Canadians, not just that of those who lived and acted in those days, to show how easily the tragedy of war can be prevented, as World War II could have been prevented, and how the malice of the wicked is reinforced by the weakness of the virtuous, as was the case then and as should not be repeated.

We remember 40 years ago. We remember those who made possible our existence as we should be straining and are straining with every fibre of our being to see that war does not happen again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the excellent remarks which were made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and particularly to the very eloquent speech which was made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) who spoke on behalf of the generation, both in this Chamber and throughout the country, which went to war. I want to salute him personally for his very remarkable war record and the Distinguished Flying Cross which he was awarded. It is no accident that he chose to wear that tie this afternoon and he is entitled to it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister can recall the moment when he learned that the war in Europe had been declared over. It was one of the occasions in the lives of those of us who were living at that time when I am sure each of us remembers just what he or she was doing when the war's end was announced. I was in my final year of high school in Ottawa. Immediately the schools were let out and the whole city spontaneously moved to what is now called Confederation Square to celebrate with joy, pride and relief the ending of that terrible conflict.

Forty years and victory in Europe is at one time and the same time so very close over the millenium of human experience, yet so very far away. The names of Dieppe, Normandy, the campaign in Italy and the Netherlands will always be inscribed on the battleshields of our forces. We remember the valour, pride and suffering. In our gallery today there are some very distinguished representatives of our forces, including one of our very distinguished Field Commanders.

A whole generation went to war and we are grateful to them. I want to assure the House that we shall not forget. We shall not forget our dead, those who threw the torch from failing hands, our wounded, and those men and women who, because of active service, have remained disabled for the past 40 years. Their lives have been curtailed and they have had to struggle against deep physical problems. In his absence, I also want to salute the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) who ably represents those men and women.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the vast majority of Canadians were not even born 40 years ago, but for the hundreds of thousands who were, the sad memory is still alive of relatives and friends who fell at the front.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind young Canadians that like the generations that went before, we must always be prepared to defend our freedom. Freedom is not something that just happens. We must fight for it continuously. During the two World Wars, two generations of Canadians left this country to fight for the cause of freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I would also mention that Canada came of age during the Second World War.

[English]

This nation came of age. We entered the war in 1939, primarily as a dispersed agricultural country. During the war we mobilized an unprecedented war effort. We became an industrial nation. Our high sense of unity and purpose during the war years has never been duplicated in the history of this country.

As a young boy, I can recall that my mother worked as a public servant in this town. I recall the hours which the men and women worked who were not fighting, but who came from all corners of Canada to contribute their services to mobilize the war effort. They gave this country standard, distinction and reputation world-wide. They gave Canada its current good standing in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As we stand on a nuclear threshold, let us show fidelity to memory and truth. Let us acknowledge that human history is replete with examples of brutality and inhuman behaviour which result when bigotry, fear and hatred are allowed to guide governments or groups of individuals.

I can recall the fortieth anniversary of the Holocaust which took place on Parliament Hill ten days ago, a day when those memories were very, very vivid in the minds of those who survived those terrible moments and years. We must strive desperately for peace.

[Translation]

Canada is privileged to be living in peace, protected from the physical and psychological ravages of war, but these are very agitated times we live in, and war continues to be a daily reality for millions of people throughout the world.

[English]

Let us realize that we enjoy the comforts, safety and peace of this country. That we must do because we have to maintain the determination, courage and will to meet the challenge of our times the way that an earlier generation met the challenge of those times. If we do not do that, then we will not, in fact, be keeping faith with those who made the ultimate sacrifice which we recall this afternoon. That sacrifice ended in victory, happily, 40 years ago today. We must keep that faith.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to say a few words on this important and historic anniversary.

Forty years ago, the Allies won final victory over Naziism in Europe. Today is a day for remembrance of that great achievement by the united citizens of many nations; it is a day for the celebration of the greatest popular victory of our times, and an occasion for reflection on where we stand in the world 40 years later.

[Translation]

The Second World War was unique because it was a genuine war of the people. We are not celebrating the victory of one group of nations against another, but the victory of democracy over fascism. It is important to remember that, in the battle for democracy, not only the Allies but also the people of occupied Europe were united, including those who fought courageously underground against the fascist powers in their countries.

[English]

VE Day opened up a new era of democratic possibility and promise. The aftermath of the war saw the successful establishment, not only of new democratic institutions throughout western Europe, but also of the beginning of the end of colonialism throughout the world.

[Translation]

Today, we ought to celebrate the fact that democracy is firmly rooted in Western Europe and that both victors and vanquished can celebrate the results of 40 years of democracy and friendship. Formerly victims of fascist rule, Germany, Italy, Spain and Portugal are now genuine democracies.

• (1440)

[English]

We must also remember today, Mr. Speaker, on this important anniversary, that the democratic nations achieved a victory in alliance with the Soviet Union, whose peoples experienced unimaginable horror. While we lament the fact that victory for democracy in 1945 was not completed in eastern Europe, we should recall, particularly in these very difficult international times, and recall with appreciation, the shared victory of the Canadian, European and other peoples with the people of the Soviet Union in that historic battle against fascism.

[Translation]

Today, we should commemorate the tremendous contribution made by the Canadian people to the victory of democracy over Nazism. For five long years, Canadians fought spiritedly for a cause that revived and restored our own sense of identity and brought a new dimension to the national ideals we share. Above all, today is a day of commemoration of the ultimate sacrifice Canadian men and women made by giving their lives for freedom.

[English]

To remember the spirit of VE Day 40 years ago is to remember a sense of relief, as some Hon. Members who are a bit older than the rest of us have indicated here today, of pride in the achievements and sacrifices of Canadians and of all other members of the human family. They fought in one of the few just wars in history in order to procure freedom. Millions lost their lives.

I would like to conclude with the observation that it is up to our generation to honour those who died by using our talents and energy to extend freedom to all, and to take all the steps now necessary to head off another global conflict in the grim knowledge that such a conflict could be our last.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to our understanding, the Oral Question Period will start now and continue for the normal 45-minute period.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

MEDICAL CARE

PROPOSED BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will understand if we have to change the mood. He will know that the Chief Justice of the British Columbia Supreme Court recently ruled that the Government of British Columbia is in violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and of the Canada Health Act in its actions to restrict billing numbers for doctors.

I put the question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The actions of the Government of British Columbia were described by the Chief Justice as "Orwellian", "draconian", and "the antithesis of fundamental justice". In an arrogant response to this judgment of the court, the Government of British Columbia has tabled Bill C-50, the Medical Services Amendment Act, which attempts to do what the Chief Justice said was illegal and against our Constitution. This Bill is a blatant violation of the rights of individuals, and a vicious assault on our national medicare system.

What will the Prime Minister, and his Ministers, do to respond to this blatant attempt by the Government of British Columbia to savage our national medicare system in that province?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He would, no doubt, be able to provide a more specific response to my right hon. friend. I can, without commenting on what transpired in other jurisdictions, certainly acknowledge the legitimacy of any concerns which my right hon. friend may have in regard to our national health plan. I think on many occasions members of all Parties in this House have made firm their commitment to the integrity of the health care delivery services in this country which are so important to all of us. And I make that commitment again to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition today. The federal Government will maintain the integrity of that system at all times.

CURTAILMENT OF SERVICES AND BENEFITS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this situation has persisted for a month or two. The Government of British Columbia has introduced this Bill which, and I quote from one sentence in that Bill, "imposes limits on services and benefits available to different classes of insured persons". It goes right to the heart of our medicare system in trying to destroy it.

The federal Government should have already acted, in our opinion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is the responsibility of the Government of Canada to ensure and sustain the integrity of a national medicare system which the Prime Minister contends he supports. I ask the Prime Minister once more, would he instruct his Minister to take action in response to that particular piece of legislation, and use what weapons there are available under the Canada Health Act?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend can receive the assurance that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will have been monitoring this situation, of course, very carefully. My right hon. friend is aware of his commitment to the values contained in the legislation which we have all defended here in the House of Commons.

In a federal state there is a matter of provincial jurisdiction in terms of it coming before the House of Commons—the manner in which it is raised. But I give my right hon. friend the assurance that we shall maintain the integrity of our much admired—and properly so—health care system in this country at all times.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would like to remind the Prime Minister that the Canada Health Act is a federal piece of legislation and he has a duty to defend it.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF ERDA AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, now that I have managed to persuade the Prime Minister to focus on the affairs of British Columbia, let me tell him that the people of my province are getting a little tired of the stalling by his Minister, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, particularly on the renegotiation of the ERDA agreement. Would the Prime Minister tell his friend, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, to get the lead out, to come to grips with the problem, and to complete the negotiations? Don't give us the kind of answer you gave one of our colleagues yesterday. He should really try to resolve this problem, sign that agreement, and put the money into the hands of the people of British Columbia.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Leader of the Official Opposition may I say that I am very pleased that he has now joined us in pressing the Province of British Columbia—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: —to conclude an agreement. The Leader of the Official Opposition will be very pleased to know that I had a very worth-while conversation with Mr. McClelland only last night, and I anticipate an early response from him concerning our suggestions.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On November 16 I found that the Deputy Prime Minister announced that six of his 11 teams which are working to find cuts in government programs would report their findings by April 30, 1985. One week ago the Deputy Prime Minister told this House, and I quote from Hansard, that he would be "making announcements about the results of the task force on program review when they are ready". It is clear from the leaked document from Indian Affairs, about which we learned yesterday, that at least that report was ready on April 17. Will the Deputy Prime Minister, who, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is known for his velcro lips, soon to be known for his teflon hands, please table that report immediately?

Mr. Mulroney: That's awful.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I guess things must be pretty slow in the practice of law for the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1450)

Mr. Nielsen: Indeed, if he has been following the very energetic activities of the work that we are undertaking in program review, he will have read with care the speech that I made to the Canadian Club which set out in some detail the timetable that we expected to meet in program review. As those reports come forward they will be considered by Cabinet, as they have been and continue to be. Any government policy which arises from them will be announced in due course.

REQUEST THAT REPORTS BE TABLED

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): As I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, we know that at least one of those reports is ready. The timetable I read shows that reviews were to have been reported by now on services and subsidies to business, job creation, training programs, agricultural programs, real property management, and regulatory programs.

Out of courtesy to parliamentarians and to those hard working members of the committees to which he made reference, I suggest that the Deputy Prime Minister immediately table the reports which are ready so that they can be reviewed by Members of the House.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who is a former Minister of the Crown, knows, or should know, that those reports are in the form of advice to Cabinet Ministers. The contents of those reports, along with all other useful and constructive suggestions, will be taken into account in our work on program review. If the Hon. Member has any constructive and earth-shaking suggestions to make, as I am sure he has, because he certainly addressed them during the last election campaign, I would invite him to send them along.

NATIVE PEOPLES

FUNDING OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Native Canadians have the poorest health, the lowest level of education, and the most impoverished housing standards of anyone living in our land. Yesterday I released a report produced by the Deputy Prime Minister and supported by 11 Departments which recommended that the Government cut back, as incredible as it seems, some $300 million in spending affecting all of these areas of social policy for native Canadians. My question to the Prime Minister is straightforward. What is the status of these recommendations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the status of the recommendations is unchanged from yesterday when I mentioned our deep commitment to the native people and gave the assurance that, if the Hon. Member believed they were going to be treated any way other than very fairly and generously, he will be disappointed. Our intention is to work very closely with the native communities across the country to correct the abysmal statistics which my hon. friend quite properly points out. We believe in helping the natives help themselves. That is what it is all about.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the answer might be of interest to some people, but it did not deal with the question that was asked.

PREPARATION OF REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): People in the House, including the Prime Minister, if I have understood his statements in the past, take the condition of our native people very seriously. Will the Prime Minister now acknowledge that the report in question was prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada and had the support of 11 Departments? Will he now respond yes or no to that question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report that my right hon. friend referred to in the House yesterday is one that I had never seen. It may very well be part of a task force review. I do not think anyone would quarrel with the obligation of a society to make an objective review. In this case, with the help of labour, the private sector, and public service officials, a review was made of all ongoing programs.

Having said that, I can assure my hon. friend that any staff work, study group, or ideas floating around that might be unhelpful to the native people will, under no circumstances, be accepted by the Government.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about a report prepared by labour groups or other interested people. We are talking about a report that was prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada. That is what is under discussion here.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has skated around the question again, I will address my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. We were told that the report was in fact prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister and had the support of 11 Departments. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether or not he was responsible for this report?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering when the hon. gentheman was going to get around to me, the work being my responsibility. I apologize for being a little late coming into the House yesterday. Apparently the matter was raised yesterday. I still do not know what "report" the hon. gentleman is referring to. If it is the one that was raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena—

Mr. Broadbent: No it wasn't, and that was said yesterday.

Mr. Nielsen: —in the first part of April, the question has been answered. The Prime Minister issued a press release on April 18 setting forth the very clear principles upon which the Government intends to approach the problem. In any event I can see no purpose in the hon. gentleman's questions because, as he knows, the whole broad range of native policies has been referred to a Cabinet committee chaired by the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

THE ADMINISTRATION

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD APPOINTMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is with regard to Marcia Clark, the wife of government appointee and Tory bagman, Peter Clark, and sister-in-law to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is with regard to her appointment to the National Parole Board on December 23, after the lights had dimmed on Parliament Hill and everyone had gone home for Christmas.

In a campaign promise on patronage made on July 9, 1984, the Prime Minister said: "We are going to reform this instrument of our national life". In view of that, can the Minister tell us specifically which reform criteria were used in selecting this particular candidate, if any? Or is this just another example of patronage being a "relative" expression?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to read the report of an independent public servant quoted in one of our leading papers this morning. It described Mrs. Clark as one of the most outstanding and best qualified people ever to serve on the Board. We are honoured to have made that appointment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Now, I also received the black paper on Tory patronage by Don Boudria, M.P. The most devastating criticism was of appointment No. 1, John Bosley, appointed Speaker of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This will indicate the reliability of this list. However, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, quite properly and enthusiastically, seconded your nomination for Speaker, and we are proud of that. Therefore he should dismiss this list and the Rat Pack that prepared it, right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: You're nothing but a bloody hypocrite.

REQUEST THAT LIST OF APPOINTMENTS BE TABLED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, not only does the Government partake in porkbarreling, but it has no manners at the trough.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. In keeping with the commitments he made last summer to the Canadian people, is he prepared to table in the House, within the next 48 hours, a complete list of relatives of Ministers of the Crown who were awarded contracts or given political appointments, just so everybody will know the truth about this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): A Liberal who is talking about patronage, what a lot of nerve! They used to be in it up to their necks, talk about nerve!

● (1500)

[English]

In the black patronage list, number 2 is Lloyd Francis, appointed Ambassador to Portugal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I just want to say to my hon. friend, who takes such pride in being a member of the Rat Pack, that rats usually come to an abrupt and inglorious end.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is everyone finished? The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LAND CLAIMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The memorandum from the Deputy Prime Minister points out that its recommendations were acceptable to DIAND, so I presume that they were to the Minister as well.

The Minister knows that Indian self-government depends upon a land base, and that without a proper land base Indian self-government becomes a kind of meaningless concept. How can the Minister agree to any recommendation that would defer comprehensive land claims? Will he assure the House and Indian people that comprehensive land claims will not be deferred?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, since it was stated in the House yesterday, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that the matters which the Leader of the New Democratic Party raised in the House yesterday do not constitute government policy. With particular respect to land claims, the Hon. Member should know that I met approximately five weeks ago with all of the land claimant groups. We have embarked upon a policy of review which we are just beginning now. The commitment of the Government to land claims is as strong as it always was, and indeed I think it will result in a policy of which the Hon. Member will be proud.

HOUSING ON RESERVES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing. Given a continuous shortfall of some 10,000 houses in Indian communities, why would the Minister agree to recommendations that would cut the reserve housing program and force Indian people to move from their traditional homes?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure to what the Hon. Member is referring, but I can assure him and other Members of the House that this Minister did not agree to any such thing in any form. I have no idea what the Hon. Member is speaking about.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRAINING ON FLIGHT SIMULATORS—TRANSFER OF SUPERVISORY POSITION FROM MONTREAL TO TORONTO

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport.

The Minister recently bragged publicly about imposing a moratorium on Air Canada concerning the decentralization of pilot training. Can he explain to the House today why, last month, the job of supervisor in the flight simulator crew assignment service was transferred from Montreal to Toronto?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we did not brag about imposing a moratorium, we simply stated that there would be no unnecessary transfers to Toronto while Air Canada discussed flight operations.

Still, Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the question and I will get back to the Hon. Member concerning the specific job he is referring to, because I obviously do not have the particulars in mind right now.

AIR CANADA REQUIREMENTS—PURCHASE OF MODERN FLIGHT SIMULATORS FOR USE IN MONTREAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister should want to check his files, but at the same time I would ask him to make sure that he will at least try to keep his promises to the Association des gens de l'air. More particularly, when he does answer my first question, I would like him to tell me when the Department of Transport intends to buy modern flight simulators to meet Air Canada's current needs in Montreal.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I might tell the Hon. Member for Papineau that it is up to Air Canada to decide when to buy the flight simulators mentioned by the Hon. Member, keeping in mind its budget priorities and its operations. Since company management are expected to make profits, the Government does not intend to intervene directly and tell them exactly when they ought to make the purchase. However, we have said it before and we say it again, whenever the company decides to buy flight simulators, it will do so while keeping in mind all commitments concerning bilingualism.

ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to be very specific. I am not referring to the 395-page "Buffalo Jump of the 1980s" task force report, but to the document which we released outside the House yesterday and that he refused to take birthright for yesterday. He refused to do so again today in the House. It is called "Memorandum to Cabinet: Report of the Ministerial Task Force on Native Programs. April 12, 1985. Deputy Prime Minister". It lists 11 Departments that are in support of the recommendations within the 61-page document.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister show some openness and honesty, either here in Parliament or outside the House, and tell us whether this is the document he produced to go to Cabinet?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Member is waving a document around. I don't know what document he has in his hand—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, come off it!

Mr. Nielsen: I have not seen the document. If he wants to sent it over or send it to my office, I will be happy to look at it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An Hon. Member: Bow when you go past the Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister issued a press release on April 18, and set forth four principles which were being followed in our addressing the native policies in this country which are under review by a special Cabinet committee. That committee has been set up for the purpose of addressing that broad policy question and is chaired by the Minister most responsible, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Fulton: It is an interesting turn of affairs. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development came to my Leader's office yesterday to get a copy. I have now provided the Deputy Prime Minister with a copy. I am sure he recognizes it.

ORIGIN OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, all the deputy heads of those 11 Departments have concurred with the recommendations in here. Senior deputies in selected provincial Governments have concurred with it. I think the Deputy Prime Minister has the responsibility to tell Members of the House and native and Inuit people whether or not the recommendations contained in here have come from under his pen.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in what can hardly be called traditional conduct by the Hon. Member, he has thrown a copy of a document on my desk which, quite frankly, I cannot even read because of the atrocious material. It is an unsigned document and it is fairly bulky, so that even I would have to take the opportunity to examining it to see if I recognize it. But right now I cannot even read it.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

NOVA SCOTIA—CAPE BRETON COAL RESOURCES

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Like the people of British Columbia, the people of Nova Scotia are getting quite fed up with the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion and his stalling on various economic development projects for the Province of Nova Scotia. As the Prime Minister knows, in 1981 the Primier of that province issued his policy paper on energy. It said very clearly that it would provide for the high utilization of Cape Breton coal. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether he is in favour of such a policy and, therefore, will he instruct his Minister to get on with providing moneys for new coal development on the Island of Cape Breton?

• (1510)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I don't believe the Hon. Member was in the House last Friday when I gave the good news about the Cape Breton Development Corporation now being in the black for the first time in a decade. In fact we have decided to divide the profit on a profit-sharing basis with the employees of that fine company.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I could add that the Hon. Member will be also pleased to learn that we have given an authorization to proceed with the second tunnel that is required with respect to one of the mining operations.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my point is well made. The Cape Breton Development Corporation has turned a profit. That is all the more reason for the Minister to continue with new economic development on the Island of Cape Breton.

Will the Minister provide new moneys for new coal mines on the Island of Cape Breton, thereby supplementing the energy policies of the Government of Nova Scotia, or is this a repudiation of John Buchanan and his Tory Cabinet?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member does not understand it costs money to open new tunnels. I have announced a new tunnel is going to be opened.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EUROPEAN LOW LEVEL AIR DEFENCE SYSTEM CONTRACT

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): My question is addressed to the Minister of National Defence. As a result of a recent government announcement, this summer a large number of the additional 1,200 soldiers assigned to foreign duty will start deploying to Europe. In addition, the first CF-18 Squadron will arrive in Baden, Germany.

Can the Minister tell the House whether a decision has been made by the Government on a short list of the companies that will participate in the final phase of the competition which will provide low level air defence for our forces in Europe?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, let me say that the low level air defence system is very vital to protect our air bases in Germany. We are proceeding with a short list. There will be a minimum 70 per cent spin-off benefits to NATO countries. We are now proceeding with the final selection from a short list of three. Representatives of the interested countries have been briefed on the Canadian Government's decision. In addition, briefings have been offered to companies that were not successful. Letters have been sent to the Secretary General of NATO and the Ministers of Defence in the United Kingdom, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany, and France.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR EXPANSION OF EXPORT CREDITS TO NICARAGUA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday I asked the Minister whether the Canadian Government was prepared to extend export credits to Nicaragua, and indeed also to send a special envoy there. In demurring, the Minister said he was not prepared to say yes on a Tuesday. Let me quote what he said. He said that he wanted to see the exact nature of the sanctions that are being imposed by the United States on Nicaragua.

Now that it is Wednesday, and now that the Minister has seen the exact nature of the sanctions, namely, a total trade embargo against Nicaragua by the United States, will he reconsider the request I made yesterday about enlarging export credits, and immediately send a special envoy to Managua to assess the situation there?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity to look at the detail of the sanctions which, as the Hon. Member will know, is what is important here. Naturally, Canada wants to continue a policy of being helpful to the people of Central America. We are looking at the situation in the context of two decisions. One is a decision by the Government of the United States to impose sanctions. The other, of course, is the decision of Mr. Ortega to deepen his relations with the Soviet Union. We will be reviewing appropriate Canadian policy in the context of those two decisions.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that Mr. Ortega is also deepening his relations with Spain and France, and would like very much to deepen them with Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONTADORA GROUP'S SUGGESTION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since the Minister is a strong supporter of Contadora and indeed only yesterday repeated his support, will he endorse the Contadora group's call on the United States to resume bilateral talks with Nicaragua? Will he offer Canada, should this be suitable, as the host country for those talks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is full of suggestions today. I welcome them.

Ms. Jewett: I don't get anywhere.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Government of Canada, which has mounted a successful aid and development program in Nicaragua which has made it clear that we want to contribute in every possible way to the development of stability and peace in that area, is now reviewing what it is most effective for Canada to do in these circumstances. Naturally we will be consulting with members of the Contadora group, as we will be consulting with countries in western Europe which share our interests, and with countries in Central America.

Ms. Jewett: We can do things ourselves.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will consider the Hon. Member's suggestion as I will consider the recommendations and the advice that come from others with whom we will be consulting.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

MANDATE OF ARTHUR KROEGER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister.

In the light of a recent report made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the House, according to which the Government did not intend to meet the deadline set by the Americans on Star Wars, and in the light of the Government's decision to appoint Mr. Arthur Kroeger to examine this matter, does the Secretary of State intend to let Mr. Kroeger receive representations from the public before the Government makes a final decision?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kroeger's mandate is to look into specific information concerning the U.S. Government's invitation to Canada and the other Allies. That being the case, I do not think there is much the Canadian public or a series of public hearings could add with respect to the details of an invitation by the U.S. That is what we are talking about. We want to have further details regarding the content and implications of the U.S. Government's invitation.

[English]

REQUEST THAT DR. KROEGER APPEAR BEFORE LIBERAL PARTY COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am astonished that the Canadian public cannot participate in that process. Can I make just one simple request of the Right Hon. Minister? As our Party has received hundreds and hundreds of letters on these problems, we have decided to establish a Committee on Security, Peace, and World Disarmament. Will the Right Hon. Minister permit Dr. Kroeger to appear before the Liberal Committee on Security, Peace, and World Disarmament?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the Hon. Member who, I know, has been away and busy, has not had an opportunity to understand exactly what it is that Dr. Kroeger has been asked to do.

Mr. Chrétien: I am here all the time. I am here more than you.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have received an invitation, as have other countries, from the United States to consider participation in and research into the Strategic Defence Initiative. Some people are prepared to come to a judgment on that question without knowing its details and without knowing its implications. We are not. We want to know the implications.

Consequently we have asked Dr. Kroeger to go to the United States to get details about exactly what is being offered by the Americans to the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada will then come to a decision on the appropriate policy that we should follow.

As to the role of Members of Parliament, we would be quite prepared to have Dr. Kroeger provide a briefing upon his return, at the end of his conclusions, to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons, but it would be most inappropriate to have him take part in some Party's study of another question.

NATIVE PEOPLES

PREPARATION OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Earlier in the Question Period we had the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing all refusing to answer directly a question about a certain document. To my knowledge there is one Minister who has had it overnight because he got it from my office. I will direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Considering that it is indicated in the document that his Department supports the recommendations but that it is concerned about the reaction of native peoples to them, will he confirm that this document was in fact one prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister?

● (1520)

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the document to which the Leader of the New Democratic Party refers was obtained by my office, because we have adjacent offices. It was an unusual document because it did not contain the normal regal things which one finds on Cabinet documents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: It didn't; that is the fact of the matter. It was very difficult to tell exactly what it was. In so far as the subject matter relates to any policies, my Department and I would only support those policies which conform to the principles laid out by the Prime Minister and are helpful to the Indian people, and support and strengthen Indian communities. That is the policy of this Government, and it will continue to be.

DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has had up until now—and I hope it will continue—a reputation for candor. He knows that he did not answer the question. In that he has had the document since last night, has he checked with his officials and have they confirmed that this was a document to which they lent their support in terms of the recommendations in it? Will he tell us whether he checked with his officials, and is it the document prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister, which we claim it is?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, with great respect, I do not think, even if I read Hansard tomorrow, I can follow exactly what it is the Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking. I do not know exactly what report you have that you think he had. Therefore I can't tell you whether the one I got is the one that goes with it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HUMAN RIGHTS

ACCESSIBILITY TO CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The CSCE Conference on Human Rights has begun by denying a right, the right of people to know what is happening in oppressive countries. I have been advised that the media have been excluded. Yesterday visiting parliamentarians were ordered out after the opening ceremonies. In view of the status of parliamentary observers being clarified as recently as this morning, would the Minister use his good offices to persuade other Governments to support the opening up of this conference so that the truth can come out to the world?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, through discussions which literally lasted all of the night before last, Canada and other countries argued precisely that case. As Members of the House who are seriously interested in human rights will know, the CSCE conference is one that is governed by a rule of consensus. The host country, in this case Canada, is not in a position to impose its standards upon that conference simply because it is the host. We could make a great fuss about it. We could make a great Canadian public issue about it.

An Hon. Member: Why don't we?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): An Hon. Member from the other side asks: "Why don't we?" I will come to that. I think there is an obligation upon all of us who are seriously interested in human rights to make a choice. We have a choice to make between seeking a public tribune where we can express our unhappiness, our deep dissatisfaction with human rights situations in the Soviet regime. However, if we do that, we do it knowing that it is at the cost of the success of the conference. The other choice is for us to respect the procedures of the CSCE conference which have been set down and respected by other countries over the years. The Government of Canada wants solid progress on human rights. The best way to achieve solid progress on human rights is to respect the processes of the conference. That, as host, we propose to do.

MULTICULTURALISM

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It concerns statements which he made as reported in today's edition of The Toronto Star. He said:

> The Progressive Conservative Government's approach to multiculturalism will be a bid to persuade minorities to consider themselves Canadians first and foremost . . . Anything done in the multicultural area has got to be done on the basis that you're a Canadian.

The fact of the matter is that ethnic minorities have always considered themselves to be proud and loyal Canadians. It is only this Conservative Government which has had problems in recognizing that reality, and now it raises redundant and dangerous theories.

Is the Minister trying to usher in the concept of a melting pot theory like that of his American friends, which says that, if one is of a heritage other than English or French, one is somehow un-Canadian or less Canadian than one's neighbour? Canadians are awaiting a clarification, and I invite the Minister to provide one.

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, of course we are not talking about a melting pot theory. The Hon. Member knows that, and should realize that. Ethnocultural groups in this country are the best Canadians. We are all from different cultures. The point is that under the previous Government the multicultural policy always tended to ghettoize various ethnic communities. We are trying to reverse that trend or thrust. We are doing it under the auspices that we are all Canadians first and foremost, but that we will allow our culture, heritage, religion, and colour to flourish under the guise of being Canadians first.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, this Party and this country are not ashamed of a progressive policy which was undertaken in 1971. This Party also recognizes that we have to be Canadians first and foremost. However, I give the Minister another opportunity to retract the assumption that ethnic minorities were not Canadians until today, and I challenge him to do so.

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I am not retracting any assumption which the Hon. Member may make. My answer to his first question still stands. We are proud of what we are doing in this Government, and by God, we are going to do a better job than the Liberals ever thought of doing.

AGRICULTURE

DUAL LABELLING OF HERBICIDES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. It concerns some confusion surrounding voluntary labelling, metric and imperial, of herbicides for agricultural use.

Farmland in the West is laid out in square miles and acres. Chemical containers are metric. Therefore the farmer in the field requires usage instructions in acres per litre. Could the Minister assure the agricultural industry that blended information, utilizing elements of both imperial and metric, can legally be placed on herbicide containers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, on February 28 the Minister of Agriculture announced that his Department would be changing the regulations to allow for dual and voluntary labelling in metric or in imperial for farm chemicals, fertilizers, and pesticides. That process is well under way, but not yet completed. The Minister has given assurances that in the meantime there will be no prosecutions. In direct answer to the Hon. Member's question, farmers can ask for labelling in litres per acre, or in any other combination they want.

As a result of the policy announced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Government is moving away from the heavy-handed and forceful tactics of the previous administration.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of 47, presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, May 7, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Certain petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on eligibility for spouse's allowance, the petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East on the steel industry and employment, and the petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on nuclear disarmament do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

EUROPEAN LOW LEVEL AIR DEFENCE SYSTEM CONTRACT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to an exchange which took place during Question Period. It refers to my response with respect to the low level air defence system. It would appear that some may have heard me use the figure of 7 per cent when I referred to the industrial and spin-off benefits to NATO countries. The figure which I used, should have used or intended to use was a minimum of 70 per cent to NATO countries.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to fulfil my duty as a Member of this House and defend the interests of my fellow citizens. More specifically, I have a petition signed by the people of the riding of Gatineau, and since their Member is not there to defend them, the people of the riding of Gatineau—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that since yesterday, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that he may give just a summary, and I think he knows what I mean.

I am not referring to a summary of the problem, but to a summary of the petition.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important subject and concerns the elderly.

The people of Gatineau have asked me to table a petition asking the Prime Minister to extend the spouse's allowance to all persons in need who are living alone, whether they are single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition today from the people of the riding of Restigouche in New Brunswick.

They urgently request the Government and all the Members of this House to ensure that the House does not discriminate against the elderly, and they particularly urge the Prime Minister to consider the elderly, in connection with Bill C-26.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by another group of citizens who live in the constituencies of London East, London West and London North, in Ontario, and who are just as important as the others. In my opinion, the people of those ridings are entitled to voice their views.

They are asking the Government, and more particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), to consider their representations concerning single, separated and divorced persons, and the petitioners expressly urge the Government to make sure that such persons are not disregarded under the provisions of Bill C-26.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a request from other very important citizens of Calgary Centre, in Alberta, which is a long way from here.

Those people have asked me to express their viewpoints, to be here to make sure that the Government listens to their representations to have amendments made to Bill C-26 now under committee consideration so that all needy senior citizens aged 60 to 64, be they single, separated or divorced, are eligible for the spouse's allowance program.

GOVERNMENT AID

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the residents of Gatineau came to see me too and asked me to present a petition to remind the House, and particularly their Member of Parliament, that needy single, separated and divorced people aged 60 to 64 are among those who most need Government assistance. To those people, it seems unwarranted to assess eligibility for a social program on the strength of the marital status of a person.

To their mind, the Government policy under which eligibility for the spouse's allowance is restricted to needy widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 amounts to discrimination, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is allowed to make a very brief summary, and I think he is perfectly aware of that.

Mr. Lapierre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I might add that there are some more people who have asked me to table a petition, namely the people of the riding of Rosemont, who said they would like to ask the House more or less what the people of Gatineau are asking, but I promised them I would make a special request for the people of Rosemont and that I would inform the House that they also feel that people between the ages of 60 and 64 who are single, separated, or divorced and who are in need, are among the groups that are most dependent on government assistance. Mr. Speaker, the people of Rosemont have asked me to say that the Government's decision to make the spouse's allowance available only to widows and widowers in need between the ages of 60 to 64 discriminates against people in need who are single, separated or divorced and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well he may give a short summary and that speeches are not permitted at this time.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I agree, and I am sure that after I have tabled all these petitions, you will agree that the people of the riding of Edmonton South also have a right to be heard here in the House. These people have also asked me to inform the House that it is unconscionable for the Government to limit the spouse's allowance to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. They feel that those people who are single, separated or divorced are being discriminated against, and these people in the riding the Edmonton South have asked me to advise the House of that fact, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to table a petition on their behalf.

Mr. Speaker, this concern is felt not only in Edmonton but also in Calgary West, Calgary North, Calgary South and Calgary Centre. The people in these ridings also believe that the discrimination that will result from Bill C-26, more specifically with respect to people who are separated, divorced or single, is unacceptable. People in that part of the country have also asked me to request that the Government of Canada extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all persons in need between the ages of 60 and 64 who are living alone, whether they are widowed, divorced, separated or single.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a number of petitions.

I have received a petition from the residents of the New Brunswick federal constituency of Restigouche who wish to petition the Prime Minister to accept the amendments to Bill C-26 so that Canadians aged between 60 and 64 who are single, separated or divorced will be able to reap some of the benefits therein.

I have another petition to present from the constituency of the City of Montreal. Individuals in that area of the Province of Quebec wish to petition the Prime Minister as well with regard to those individuals who are aged between 60 and 64 and are single, separated or divorced so that they too may avail themselves of the benefits which are tied in to the amendments to Bill C-26.

I have another petition from the federal constituency in the great Province of Manitoba of Winnipeg-Fort Garry. Canadians in that province wish to petition the Right Hon. Prime Minister with regard to single, separated and divorced individuals who are between the ages of 60 and 64 availing themselves of the amendments that we have submitted with regard to Bill C-26.

My final petition comes from the great Province of British Columbia where they too are somewhat fed up with some of the stalling tactics by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). This petition concerns amendments applicable to Bill C-26 so that those individuals between 60 and 64 years of age who are divorced, single or separated will be able to have the benefit thereof.

I see that you are waving, Mr. Speaker. I do not know if you wish me to continue on with additional petitions. If you so desire, I can accommodate. If you will give me a few moments, I can go back to my office and retrieve additional petitions, if that is what your body language and motion is exhibiting here.

Mr. Speaker: I was only indicating to the Hon. Member that I presume he was petitioning the House in his petitions. I am sure he would want the House to be petitioned, not an individual.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from the residents of my riding of Outremont. They are asking me to put pressure on the Government so that the spouse's allowance, which will now be granted to widows and widowers, can be extended to people who are separated, divorced or single.

I also have a petition from the residents of the constituency of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, who ask me to put pressure on the Government so that the allowance paid to widows and widowers can be extended to single, separated and divorced people between the ages of 60 and 64.

In addition, I have a petition from Richmond, whose residents are asking me to put pressure on the Government to extend the spouse's allowance to people who are separated, divorced or single.

I also have a petition from Chibougamau, in Quebec, asking the same thing. The petitioners urge the Government to change its spouse's allowance policy for people aged between 60 and 64, so that there is no discrimination against those who are single, divorced or separated.

I have another petition from Chicoutimi. It asks the same thing, namely that there be no discrimination against people who are separated, divorced or single, compared with widowers and widows between the ages of 60 and 64.

The last petition comes to me from Lotbinière. The residents of this area also ask me to put pressure on the Member of Parliament for this riding and the Progressive Conservative Government so that there will be no discrimination against those who are single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, at the request of a group of citizens of the City of Saint-Léonard in the constituency of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, I have the honour to present to the House a petition urging the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to extend the spouse's allowance program to all needy persons living alone and aged 60 to 64.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from a group of citizens of Ville d'Anjou, again in my constituency of Saint-Léonard-Anjou urging the Right Hon. the Prime Minister to extend the spouse's allowance program to all needy single, separated or divorced persons aged 60 to 64.

I have another petition from the City of Montreal in the western sector of my constituency, and the petitioners also urge the Right Hon. the Prime Minister to extend the social security program to all single, separated or divorced persons.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I want to know very clearly whether or not the Hon. Member realizes that petitions to the Prime Minister himself are out of order. If he is presenting petitions to the Prime Minister, it should be done at a different place in the building.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: These requests to the Right Hon. Prime Minister are addressed to the House.

Mr. Speaker, my last petition is also from the people in northern Montreal. I therefore have the honour of tabling in the House a petition that again asks the Right Hon. Prime Minister to have the Old Age Security program cover all persons in need between the ages of 60 to 64 who are single, separated or divorced. It states that social injustice and discrimination will be the result for 80,000 people, if the Right Hon. Prime Minister does not make the suggested change in Bill C-26.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour of tabling in the House a petition signed by a group of residents in the federal riding of Victoria in British Columbia, who, with so many other Canadians, deplore the fact that Bill C-26 blatantly discriminates against people between the ages of 60 and 64.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a group of residents from the ridings of London East, London West and London North in Ontario, who deplore the discrimination with respect to people between the ages of 60 and 64 and more specifically those who are single, separated or divorced. These people would like to see the provisions of Bill C-26 expanded to cover them.

I also have another petition, Mr. Speaker, this time from residents of the constituency of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine-East, Quebec, in which the signatories deplore the blatant discrimination against people aged 60 to 64, specifically separated, single and divorced people.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from the constituency of Timiskaming, Ontario, where 18 signatories petition this House to extend the provisions of Bill C-26 to single, unmarried and divorced people in the 60 to 64 age bracket.

A last petition, Mr. Speaker, this time from the riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie, whose Member is a staunch advocate of the rights of single, unmarried and divorced people, and which stresses once again that unmarried, single and divorced people aged 60 to 64 are discriminated against and unfairly treated. These petitioners, like all the others, strongly protest against such discrimination.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, a petition from residents of the constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth, Ontario, who petition the House to take their views into consideration, namely that it seems unjustifiable to determine the eligibility of an individual to a social program on the basis of his or her marital status. They request that the spouse's allowance be extended to every single needy person.

I also have another petition to present to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, from residents of the federal constituencies of London East, London West and London North, Ontario, who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted rights to ask this House to extend the spouse's allowance to every single person in need and to amend Bill C-26 accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, I have a third petition to present to the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, from residents of the federal riding of Thunder Bay-Nipigon, Ontario, who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted rights to present a grievance to this House. They are asking that the spouse's allowance program be extended to all single people in need to correct the social injustice and discrimination they are subjected to.

I have a fourth petition, Mr. Speaker, to present to the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, from residents of the federal riding of Timiskaming, Ontario, who ask the House to extend the spouse's allowance program to all single people in need and to eliminate any social injustice or discrimination against them in Bill C-26.

I also have another petition, Mr. Speaker, to present to the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, from the residents of the riding of Peterborough, in Ontario, who are asking that the unfair practice of determining access liability to a social program on the basis of the marital status of the applicant be eliminated in Bill C-26 and that the spouse's allowance program be extended to all single people in need.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this petition meets the requirements as to form, and as we promised yesterday, we shall continue tomorrow.

[English]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, in the name of the residents of Calgary Centre, I have the honour to present a petition regarding Bill C-26. The residents of Calgary Centre humbly ask Parliament to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance which has been granted to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 to all other Canadians, whether they are single, separated or divorced, who have identical needs. Some 80,000 people will be discriminated against if the Prime Minister overlooks the proposed amendment.

The residents of Saskatchewan East are also asking me to table in their name a petition to the Government of Canada asking that it include the single, separated and divorced people in Bill C-26.

● (1550)

The residents of North Vancouver, Burnaby, Capilano and Vancouver-Kingsway are asking that the pension benefits which have been granted to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 be extended to include single, separated and divorced people in this country. If that is not done, 80,000 persons will suffer from that discrimination.

The residents of Thunder Bay-Nipigon, in Ontario, are also asking the Parliament of Canada to extend eligibility of the spouse's allowance, which has been granted to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, to all other Canadians who are either single, separated or divorced, who have the same needs.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of Bills.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions to present to the House.

Mr. Speaker: I have not seen the Hon. Member rise before. For now, the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) has the floor. He is the last one I saw and was the last one to rise.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present to the House, and I thank you for your patience and understanding, a petition signed by residents of Barachois, Robichaud Office and Shediac, who deplore the injustice that will be done to 80,000 people if Bill C-26 is introduced without the suggested amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I have yet another petition, signed this time by residents of the charming town of Bas-Cap-Pelé, who also demand that Bill C-26 be amended so that all needy people between the ages of 60 and 64 are extended the benefits of that Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by some good people from Haute Aboujagane and Scoudouc, two beautiful towns in my own riding who also demand that Bill C-26 be amended so that people between 60 and 64 not included in this Bill will not be treated unfairly if it is passed without amendments.

Mr. Speaker, without abusing your good disposition, I have still another petition from residents of Moncton, New Brunswick, who deplore indeed the injustices that will be done to some 80,00 people if Bill C-26 is not amended.

Mr. Speaker, here is another petition signed by residents of Shemogue and Shediac who also humbly ask that the spouse's allowance be extended to needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 years.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: No, I indicated that that was the last Member I had seen rising on petitions. I am sorry. I indicated that no one else had risen and I proceeded to Introduction of Bills. The Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) said that he had risen and I agreed to recognize him.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but still, I rose when there was not even—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the Hon. Member did not rise when I said "Introduction of Bills".

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member did not rise, nor did the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Let's not bother with it. I realize what is going on. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques on petitions.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I rise on petitions, Mr. Speaker, but all I am trying to do is—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising to present a petition?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): No, Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Member's point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I appreciate that the Chair, at the swift pace at which it is proceeding, may have had difficulty seeing my colleague from Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud), but he was allowed to present petitions just the same. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) must wait until the previous speaker is through before presenting his own petitions.

Therefore, since we are still on petitions, I simply submit that the Hon. Member for Bourassa has the right to present petitions, and besides—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I interrupt the Member with great respect, but there is a limit to my patience. When petitions are called, Members should be in their place and ready to present their petitions. Members who arrive later—in fact, 20 minutes later—it would seem were not in their places when petitions were called.

I indicated that I did not see the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent, but I know he was here. He rose. I am prepared to recognize the two remaining Members who have indicated that they have petitions to present. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques and the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I rose after.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not listening to me. If I call something in this House, whether it be statements or whatever, Members must rise and indicate their intention to the Chair. Members who have not risen when I say "Introduction of Bills", which I have already said once today, cannot later inform the Chair that they wish to present a petition.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, they can.

Mr. Speaker: No, they cannot. The petition must be presented before Introduction of Bills is called. Members who have not risen prior to Introduction of Bills being called are in some difficulty. I am now willing to accept petitions from the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques and the Hon. Member for Bourassa. However, I suggest that in the future Members who wish to present petitions ought to be in their place when petitions are called. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Bourassa, then the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques and those are the last petitions I will receive today.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of the federal riding of Rosemont, in Quebec, who oppose the government's decision to restrict eligibility for the spouse's allowance to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. They believe it is a social injustice toward the people who are single and they ask that the Government extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people between 60 and 64 living alone, who are either single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition on the same subject from the residents of the federal riding of Restigouche, in New Brunswick, who ask the Government of Canada to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people living alone, who are either divorced or separated.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the residents of the federal ridings of Calgary West, Calgary North, Calgary South and Calgary Centre, who ask the Government to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance, which has been restricted to widows and widowers, to all Canadians who are either separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of the federal riding of Saskatoon East who exercise the same right and ask that the spouse's allowance be granted to all Canadians who are either separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which comes from residents of the federal ridings of North Vancouver-Burnaby, Capilano and Vancouver-Kingsway, who ask the Government to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people between 60 and 64 living alone, whatever their marital status.

Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which comes from the federal riding of Rosemont, in Quebec asking the Government of Canada to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people between 60 and 64 living alone, irrespective of their marital status.

I can see the Minister of Finance making faces, but we shall see what he does May 23, which is Budget night.

Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Thunder Bay-Nipigon, in Ontario, asking the Government to extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all needy people between 60 and 64 living alone, irrespective of their marital status.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

• (1600)

Mr. Lapierre: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I listened carefully to what you said earlier regarding the point of order, as well as to your response to the point of order raised by my hon. friend from Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) when you said . . . What I am asking, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not I can ask for information. My point of order is . . . You stated that—

Mr. Speaker: A Member is not allowed to make comments on a point of order on which the Chair has already ruled.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order raised by the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the Member, according to you, must be in the House at all times if he wants to speak on a motion, on a speech or on anything else. This is absolutely—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member pushing? If Hon. Members want some clarification of what I have indicated, they have the right to come and see me about it. I invite them to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I will push if it is necessary.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: They cannot come and see me until I leave the Chamber. I cannot leave the Chamber until the petitions are finished. It is up to Hon. Members.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques on petitions.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if the House could be quiet, I would draw to its attention a petition from residents of the Montreal area who want to exercise their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance to Parliament.

Those people humbly state that single, separated and divorced individuals in need, from 60 to 64 years of age belong to the groups most dependent on government aid and therefore call upon the government of Canada to extend the spouse's allowance program to all needy persons 60 to 64 years of age living alone, whether they are widows, divorced, separated or single.

I have another petition also from the Montreal area, more specifically from the constituency of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve whose petitioners state that they think it is unjustifiable to determine the eligibility for benefits under a social program on the basis of marital status. Those people maintain that the government decision to grant the spouse's allowance exclusively to needy widowers and widows 60 to 64 years of age is a social injustice and discriminates against the single, separated and divorced persons with the same needs and belonging to the same age group.

I have here another petition from the Montreal-Sainte-Marie riding in which the petitioners state that needy people between 60 and 64 years of age, either single, separated or divorced, are among those who are most dependent on government assistance, and that they consider it totally unacceptable that the eligibility of an individual for a social program should be based on his or her legal status.

I have another petition, this one coming from my own riding of Saint-Jacques, whereby the petitioners exercise their right to present a grievance to the House, with the assurance that the House will remedy the situation.

These petitioners claim that the government's determination to extend eligibility for spouse's allowance only to needy widows and widowers between 60 and 64 years of age is discriminatory and socially unfair to people within the same age bracket and having the same needs who are single, separated or divorced.

These petitioners humbly call upon the government of Canada to extend eligibility for spouse's allowance to all needy people who are single, irrespective of their legal status.

Those are the petitions I had to present today, Mr. Speaker.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 68 and 100.

[Text]

SOLICITOR GENERAL—INDEPENDENT ADVISORY BOARDS

Question No. 68—Mr. Nunziata:

1. In the Department of the Solicitor General, what specific independent advisory boards exist and how many members are on each board?

2. For (a) 1983-84 (b) 1984-85, what were the expenditures including salaries of each board?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. The following lists the Ministry's independent advisory boards which report directly to the Solicitor General:

Advisory Committee to the Solicitor General on the Management of Correctional Institutions (Carson Committee). There are six members (one chairperson and five members under contract). Expenditures in 1983-84 were nil; 1984-85, $350,000.

Dangerous Offender Consultation Committee (15 members, including officials and private citizens). Expenditures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 were $30,000 each year. There are no salaries or honoria paid to the private citizens. The only expenses of the committee are the annual travel and living expenses.

National Advisory Council on Firearms (25 Members). The Chief Provincial and Territorial Firearms Officials are ex-officio members. This is not a salaried council. Each member is reimbursed travel and living expenses while absent from his/her ordinary place of residence while on official duty for the council, in accordance with the Treasury Board Directive on duty travel in the Public Service.

2. (a) and (b) See above.

SSEA—STATIONERY

Question No. 100—Mr. Deans:

1. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs order special gold embossed stationery and, if so, what was the cost over and above standard House of Commons issue?

2. Has any other Minister ordered such stationery and, if so, how many and at what additional cost?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): 1. It has always been the standard practice for the Department of External Affairs to provide Ministers with gold embossed stationery.

2. To date, seven Ministers including the Prime Minister are using new or existing gold embossed or thermographic printed stationery.

Furthermore, please refer to the most recent directive from Treasury Board issued under Circular No. 1984-74 dated December 21, 1984.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Should all Notices of Motions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 7, consideration of Bill C-30, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and to repeal the International Development Association Act and amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motion No. 2 (Ms. Jewett).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today, Bill C-30, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and to repeal the International Development Association Act and amend certain other Acts, is a very serious matter in the development field. The Bretton Woods Agreements, of course, arouse all of our highest expectations for aid by way of loans to the developing world. We are dealing today with an amendment which attempts to deal with some very serious problems in the actual functioning of world credit agencies at the present time.

The motion before us that Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 7 would require the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to provide a detailed review of Canada's participation in lending as a member of the World Bank group and the International Monetary Fund and, in particular—and I want to go through this in some detail—there are four criteria which would add considerably to the functioning of the World Bank group in order to have it achieve the objectives which were certainly set out in spirit for it. These criteria are: (a) Canada's use of its voice and vote to promote internationally recognized human rights; (b) Canadian initiatives to promote the use of loans to meet the basic human needs of the poorest and to provide for an equitable distribution of income in recipient countries; (c) policy actions taken by Canada to protect the neutrality and multilateral character of the World Bank group and International Monetary Fund and to resist the excessive pursuit of rigid bilateral policies by other member nations; and (d) Canadian initiatives to promote financial adjustment policies that do not impose additional hardship on the poor.

Why are these amendments needed, Mr. Speaker? Let us go to the issue of human rights. Canada's record on this issue is not particularly good. We have not opposed, for example, a loan to Chile, to a very repressive military dictatorship there, when even the United States Government abstained. Chile has one of the most atrocious records but even in this extreme case we failed to speak up on human rights issues. The demand here is that Canada use its opportunity and its vote to speak on these crucial loans in order to give better recognition to human rights issues.

Let me be clear as to what is meant by "internationally recognized human rights". We are not talking about an elaborate and difficult test of democratic rights. This is getting down to what is very, very minimal. Let me refer to what the Interchurch Task Force on the Churches and Corporate Responsibility have proposed as internationally recognized human rights. There are three points: freedom from arbitrary arrest, detention and execution; freedom from torture or cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment; and freedom from internal or external exile.

These are all perfectly obvious and it is quite clear that we are not talking about the imposition of certain democratic traditions or certain cultural expectations by our country on countries which do not have them and which, nevertheless, have their people in need of development aid and loans.

The second criterion is Canadian initiatives to promote the use of loans to meet the basic human needs of the poorest. It is necessary to specify this because, unfortunately, the very poorest countries are sometimes unable to get loans, and sometimes loans are used to divert resources and develop aspects of the economy which profit the better-off members of the country rather that the poorest. We must provide for an equitable distribution of income in recipient countries rather than merely promoting the strength of powerful groups within those societies, assisting them to get economic advantages which further entrench their power.

This money comes from public funds to which all Canadians have contributed. Canadian standards of decency and sharing should be respected in the according of loans, in so far as that is possible. I would like to make it very clear that the recommendation is that even in countries with bad human rights records, where the money is for the purpose of meeting basic human needs such as food and shelter, it should go to all people. Otherwise we should be demanding and encouraging respect, at least for these very basic human rights.

The third criterion deals with the issue of politicization. We do not want these funds to be politicized in any possible way. The amendment reads in part, "Policy actions taken by Canada to protect the neutrality and multilateral character of the World Bank group". This amendment arises from a number of very specific examples of abuses in the management of these funds. I refer particularly to American pressure to stop a loan to Nicaragua. This is in furtherance of American policy, which is an affair of the United States. However, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank are international multilateral agencies which gave different economic criteria. If those economic criteria are respected, that loan should have gone through.

If one is going to argue, as the United States has, that Nicaragua's abuse of human rights is so excessive that it should not get a loan, then we must ask why El Salvador, Honduras and South Korea are getting loans. Should there be a number of different standards depending upon the politics of the regime in question? If these countries can get loans it demonstrates that the human rights standards are not very good. To bar another country from getting loans by applying different standards is absolutely unacceptable. I am sorry to say that Canada did nothing to object to the dropping of the Nicaraguan loan. Canada did not protest.

The fourth matter, Canadian initiatives to promote financial adjustment policies that do not impose additional hardships on the poor, comes once again from hard experience. We have a number of recommendations from the Task Force on Churches and Corporate Responsibility. They refer to the long history of the International Monetary Fund imposing very severe conditions on debtor countries. The debtor countries must then cut back on Government expenditures. They may cut back on social, health and food expenditures. They have often been required to increase food prices. The result is great hardship for the poorest members of those countries.

The Interchurch Task Force recommended that social impact criteria be an integral part of the adjustment measures that are negotiated. In other words, when negotiations are ongoing, the country should be asked very specifically how different groups within that society would be affected by the various cut-backs that would be required. This process would ensure that the burden not fall as much as it has in the past on the poorest members of those countries. Unfortunately, this has not been the case before. These criteria must be spelled out concretely in order for them to be taken into account.

One of the results of the imposition of very severe measures in a country is that people resist. There have been food riots and other kinds of disturbances as a result of these repressive measures in very poor countries. Governments then have to react to that and there is an escalation of repression as a result of the imposition of what was supposed to be a measure of aid to the country in question.

The Task Force on Churches and Corporate Responsibility, which appeared before the standing committee, made a number of comments and very good recommendations on these various points. I would like to quote from their testimony on these basic issues. They refer to the social tensions which in turn have given rise to repression on the part of the state. The testimony reads in part as follows:

> Where debtor countries are already ruled by repressive dictatorships, repression is often severely increased and potential for a return to democracy is diminished.
> We therefore recommend to the members of the standing committee—

—and I recommend in turn in passing on these remarks, that the economic analyses and adjustment recommendations should include a projection of the distribution relative to the income distribution of the debtor country.

The testimony continues:

> Where such projection indicates that the main economic burden will fall upon those with the least income, adjustment measures should be revised to correct the balance and to safeguard the living standards of those most vulnerable.

These are extremely relevant words of counsel, Mr. Speaker. We want humane policies. We need specific criteria to change the rather sorry record we have had. I hope Hon. Members will support this motion of amendment to bring provisions into effect which would respect the humanitarian concerns that we all share.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Motion No. 2 of the motions put before the House by the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). This set of amendments is designed to bring about more openness in government and to provide the recognition of parliamentary control of spending.

Motion No. 2 would make the permanent requirements part of the annual report. The annual report of an agency such as this is quite important because it presents the opportunity for the provision of a great deal of information about the agency and about the way in which Canada's role is being carried out in supplying moneys to the World Bank group, the International Monetary Fund, and related agencies. This amendment requires the annual report to spell out four or five definite items which would be reported on annually.

Some of the Government Members who spoke on Motions Nos. 1 and 2 seemed to think that the purpose of the motions was to provide an opportunity for Opposition Members to hold up the amendment of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act each time it came before Parliament. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, this amendment would provide a series of pertinent information in an annual report. In that way Members of Parliament would have that information available to them and would not have to use the guise of a parliamentary debate to attempt to get information concerning this particular agency. We would not have to force it into committee so that witnesses could be called and information could be gathered.

In addition to the information required by the amendment of the Government, our motion would require the inclusion of a small report on the use of Canada's voice and vote to promote internationally recognized human rights. That is something that coincides with international funding. Many cases have been outlined during this debate where the influence of some countries on the boards of these financial institutions has meant that moneys end up going to Goverments with repressive regimes that do not live up to the international requirements for the recognition of human rights. However, money is granted to those countries in any event. Therefore, I think it only fair that Canada should annually report its stand with respect to votes regarding loans to those kinds of regimes.

It is my hope that Government Members have seen the light, will understand the importance of annual and full reports and realize that it reflects their commitment to an open government that will keep citizens and parliamentarians fully informed.

Therefore, in terminating this debate, I hope Hon. Members will support this amendment so that information may be made available through an annual report rather than forcing the Opposition Parties to bring the Bretton Woods Agreements Act before committee to obtain this information at committee stage each time it comes before Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

That being the last motion for debate, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of C-30. The first vote will be on Motion No. 1. Ms. Jewett, seconded by Mr. Murphy, moves:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-30, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 12 to 20 at page 3.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Ms. Jewett), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe if you were to test the House, you might find a disposition to have the vote that was just recorded similarly recorded for the next motion, which also stands in the name of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is a disposition with the addition of one Member rising who chooses to ask that his vote be added to this vote. There are two. There was one on this side. The Clerk will note that. There are three Members to be noted by the Clerk. It is assumed that they are voting in line with their friends.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The next question is the following one: Ms. Jewett, seconded by Mr. Riis, moves:

That Bill C-30, be amended in Clause 7

(a) by striking out line 32 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"including the resources and lending of the International Monetary Fund and the".

"goods and services and also including a detailed review of Canada's participation in the lending activities of the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund, with particular attention to: (a) Canada's use of its voice and vote to promote internationally recognized human rights; (b) Canadian initiatives to promote the use of loans to meet the basic human needs of the poorest and provide for a more equitable distribution of income in recipient countries; (c) Policy actions taken by Canada to protect the neutrality and multilateral character of the World Bank Group and International Monetary Fund and resist the excessive pursuit of rigid bilateral policies by other member nations; (d) Canadian initiatives to promote financial adjustment policies that do not impose additional hardship on the poor."

I take it there is agreement on the way the motion shall be tabulated.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is therefore lost.

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is consent that the Bill be read the third time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of State for Finance) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that this is really a very sad day. This is the last time, the last day that this Parliament will have an opportunity, as it has had today and yesterday, to engage in a debate on the activities of the World Bank group and the International Monetary Fund. We lost the power to debate the other financial institutions here in the House a year or so ago. Now we have lost the power to debate the International Monetary Fund and World Bank activities. We have lost the power to add any new criteria for them. I only want to commemorate this as the last day on which we will be able to do this and to say to all Hon. Members that when the New Democratic Party forms the Government of Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: —we will restore the authority of the Parliament of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a short comment. I want to know what members of the NDP are having for breakfast these days as it is affecting their ability to think clearly.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

MEAT INSPECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-33, an Act respecting the import and export of and interprovincial trade in meat products, the registration of establishments, the inspection of animals and meat products in registered establishments and the standards for those establishments and for animals slaughtered and meat products prepared in those establishments, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

• (1700)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to speak very briefly on this Bill. The House will recall that when we discussed this issue some time ago, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) made an address to the House indicating that he was informing Hon. Members that Canada had one of the finest meat inspection systems in the world. Hon. Members on all sides of the House acknowledge that. At the time this issue was discussed previously, one Hon. Member across the way insinuated that Liberal Members were not of that view. Of course, that was utter nonsense. Liberal Members do in fact acknowledge that the meat inspection system in this country is indeed excellent.

In the speech he made, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture seemed to describe this Bill as though it contained a major new discovery and a major new area of policy. However, most of the things contained within this Bill are simply to ensure that the Act will conform to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If one were to have read the speech as it was made by the Parliamentary Secretary without knowing better, one would have thought that the greatest thing ever to happen to agriculture would be the passage of Bill C-33.

When discussing in this House the entire issue of meat inspection, I think it is incumbent upon us to remind the Government across the way of what it is doing regarding inspection fees as they relate to the agricultural sector. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and, more particularly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are perpetrating an increase in these fees on the people of the country.

We all know that the agricultural industry is indeed in very serious difficulty. It is suffering and in general has fallen on very hard times. I see many Hon. Members across the way who are members of the Agriculture Committee as I am. Lately, the Finance Committee, which at the time was composed of most of the members of the Agriculture Committee, met in order to discuss the problems of farm financing. At that time we discovered that the farming industry is indeed in bad shape. I bring this to the attention of the House to indicate that the farm community is least able now to support major increases in inspection fees.

The Minister of Agriculture has told us that he has finally succeeded in coming to an agreement with a few commodity groups though not all of them. I frankly wonder how the Minister of Agriculture managed to come to this agreement. I suppose he probably said to the farmers: "You either take this agreement or you will not get anything else," and the farmers had to agree with him. I know that the farmers would have preferred seeing no increase in fees and no implementation of fees where they did not already exist. That is what the farming community really needs.

While discussing meat inspection, I think we must also seize this opportunity to talk about the whole problem not only of meat inspection but of meat imports. I see that the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) is sitting across from me. I know he is quite involved in agricultural matters and I am sure the farmers of his constituency, like the farmers of my own, have discussed with him the very important issue of meat imports from the European Economic Community and, more particularly, those from Denmark and Ireland. These imports will very shortly be invading the Canadian market again at below the fair price.

Over the last three or four days, I have been receiving calls at the rate of about a dozen a day from the beef producers of my riding, each one asking me to voice the message to this Government that the beef farmers need to be protected. Of course, Mr. Speaker, you will probably tell me that that does not directly relate to the subject at hand, and perhaps you would be correct in so stating. However, we are discussing agriculture, the meat sector and inspection fees. I wonder if the Government would not consider a whole variety of measures to ensure that there is no unfair competition in the Canadian market-place caused by the subsidized imports invading our market. This unfairness is now compounded by the fact that Canadian farmers will have to pay higher inspection fees, thus making it more difficult for them to compete with imported products.

When we spoke of this Bill previously, I asked some questions regarding it. I hope I will still have the opportunity to find out about the state of certain clauses of this Bill and, more particularly, those that apply to the penalties for infractions against this piece of legislation. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to tell us exactly what penalties will be imposed upon those who choose not to respect this new law.

As the Bill was originally drafted and presented in the House, offenders against the legislation would not have been subjected to jail terms, and that was specifically stated in the Bill. The concern that I had at that time, and that I still have to a certain extent, was the fact that the Bill almost contained an advertisement saying: "If you do not respect the law, do not worry about it because we cannot put you in jail anyway". I cannot help but feel that that is not a good signal to send out. It does not provide the kind of motivation necessary to ensure that the very good and stable reputation that our Canadian meat inspection system has enjoyed throughout all these years will continue.

I am not saying that all people who are in the meat processing business are not trustworthy. That is not the case. Of course, most of them are good business people. The ones who are good business people want to ensure that the law is strong and powerful and that it protects them in case people entering the business are not as trustworthy as they are.

Again, we want to be assured that the law protects our good meat processing plants and mostly that the law protects the inspection system. The inspection system is what retains credibility in the fine products produced by our farmers and, more particularly, in the meat products that are stamped and have enjoyed throughout the years a high degree of credibility.

Those are the words I wished to put on the record regarding this Bill. To reiterate what I said in the beginning, I would like to remind the Parliamentary Secretary of the very lengthy and decided speech he made when this legislation was introduced. In his speech, he almost claimed that he had written this legislation himself and that he had saved the farming industry by changing the meat inspection system to make it adhere to the Charter of Rights. Of course, the Bill does not do all the things the Parliamentary Secretary said it would do. However, we want to ensure that the Bill is as good as it can be in order to retain and protect the valuable and trusted meat inspection system which we have enjoyed in Canada for many years. Hopefully, we will enjoy that for many years to come.

• (1710)

Finally, I hope that the red meat industry, and more particularly the beef industry, will still be there. There will not be much to inspect unless the producers are protected from the foreign imports which I described a few minutes ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to complete very briefly the parliamentary activity on this Bill. What we have with this meat inspection legislation of 1985 is a combination—excuse me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member wish to speak on debate?

Mr. Althouse: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does anyone have questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria)?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) on debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, what the House is doing today is the last parliamentary step in making the new meat inspection legislation of 1985 law. After this, it will simply have to be proclaimed by the Government and signed by the Governor General.

This Bill did nothing terribly radical. In fact, only one or two minor changes were made in this Bill that was taken from the three old Acts. The only difference is that it is now easier for people to check the law because it is written on one piece of paper. The new activity is not very radical. It simply spells out the procedure which a meat inspector will have to go through if he wishes to enter a dweiling house in order to get evidence or inspect meat which he feels is within his ambit. The inspector will now be required under the Charter of Rights to obtain a warrant for such an activity. That is a very minor change and probably it would have been upheld under the Constitution without the change being made to the legislation. Basically, we are left with a peice of paper which contains three laws.

The process did not receive a lot of debating time, nor did it deserve a lot of debating time. Members of Parliament, farmers, meat packers, processors and consumers are convinced that we have the makings of a very good meat inspection system. If it is not the best in the world, it is certainly among the best in the world.

We heard witnesses in committee who were inspectors and we heard witnesses from the Canadian Meat Council, which represents 70 or 80 of the 530 or 540 meat processors whom we have in Canada. The Canadian Meat Council generally represents the larger of those operations. We also heard from departmental officials whose responsibility it is to carry out the inspection service.

In second reading debate it was noted that this law provides, in very broad terms, the power to the Ministry of Agriculture, and to the Minister of Agriculture in particular, to make regulations. It is the Minister of Agriculture and the Cabinet who will ultimately set out the regulations which will decide whether the high standards in the meat inspection service will continue or whether they will be downgraded. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will decide whether the frequency of the inspection level program, which began under the last Minister of Agriculture, will continue, and whether the attitude under that program, which allows plants some discretion in the amount of time in which they will be inspected, should be extended further, or whether inspection periods should be relaxed.

The legislation gives responsibility to the Minister of Agriculture and the Cabinet to set the fees and charges for inspection services, whether the product is being imported or whether it is being inspected at the first slaughter or at the processing level. It also gives the Minister of Agriculture the responsibility to designate the various categories of plants and the establishment of standards for those categories.

Likewise, this Bill sets out who is the operator. In the process of hearing witnesses before the Standing Committee on Agriculture, we did not receive a particular definition of who would be considered to be the operator. That becomes very important with the new levels of penalties and fines which can be put into effect by the Minister of Agriculture. It begs the very serious question as to who is responsible if an inspector finds that someone in a plant is breaking the law. Is it the responsibility of the plant's management or the plant's ownership? How does the inspector trace whether the worker was simply carrying out a verbal order from head office or whether he was acting of his own volition? We will not know the answers to those questions until such time as inspectors take the cases to the courts. I hope the Minister of Agriculture and the Cabinet will tighten up those definitions in such a way as to permit the meat inspection regulations to be carried out so that the operator and owners of the plants will be made responsible for the way in which they instruct their workers to behave in those plants.

Basically, we have the same framework and guidelines which were set forward by Parliament for the meat inspection service to operate. We have given, and continue to give a great deal of discretionary powers to the Minister and the Ministry. I hope they continue to carry out those responsibilities in a fair manner and in the best interests of the farmers, processors, workers in the processing plants and ultimately, the consumers who eat the meat. We are vesting a great deal of responsibility with the Minister of Agriculture. Parliament is passing the responsibility to the Minister and I wish him well in carrying out those responsibilities. I hope that he will continue, as have previous Ministers, to carry them out in the best interests of all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of points concerning the difficulties which people in the Territories have experienced with meat inspection in the past. One problem which has occurred is the difficulty of shipping meat, particularly beef, from northern Alberta into the southern Territories. For instance, there were no federally-regulated slaughterhouses in the High Level area. Federal plants are located in the more southerly part of the province. So if one wanted to bring meat into the Territories across the provincial border, one had to bring it in from southern Alberta rather than from northern Alberta. That is a problem which caused us some concern.

Another problem was what to do with wild game products, particularly musk-ox. There is a lot of interest in the commerce in musk-ox meat, in buffalo, in reindeer and in caribou, and it is not possible in many circumstances to comply fully with the requirements of the Department of Agriculture. But there is no reason why that type of trade should not be engaged in. Of course, there has to be a system of some kind of inspection. Everyone knows that. But we might not be able to do that in a plant which meets all of the special requirements.

• (1720)

So I am pleased that in the Bill with which we are dealing today there is, in subsection 20(r), a provision for the exemption of certain of the requirements. I am sure that many of my constituents will be pleased to see that that provision is there and that the Governor-in-Council can make regulations pertaining to these exemptions so that in the future we will be able to bring in beef from northern Alberta and we will be able to encourage the trade in wild game meats.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate, and I shall, if I may, express to the House a certain number of concerns. First of all, I think everyone will agree that our Canadian meat inspection system is one of the best if not the best in the world. Over the years, Canada has acquired an enviable reputation in this area, and the legislation before the House today may affect this well-deserved reputation, a reputation that has taken years to build up.

Everyone will also remember that not very long ago we had a rather embarrassing and even dramatic situation in Quebec, and quite recently, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Garon, said:

> I do not see why some people insist on having "Canada inspected" beef, since Quebec's inspection standards for beef are just as strict if not more so than Canada's.
>
> When people think that "Canada approved" means that the standards are stricter, they are wrong. Standards are actually stricter in abattoirs built according to Quebec regulations.
> We must have these standards to make a good product. We start with the proper conditions. We cannot produce a good product in a shack.

I think this is a rather significant statement that shows even the Quebec Minister of Agriculture acknowledges the enviable reputation of our inspection system.

The purpose of the Bill may be entirely praiseworthy, and I support its objectives in principle, but practically speaking, I think the Bill is going to make for a relatively confusing situation and will, in the final instance, make the Canadian consumer feel pretty insecure. There may be something behind all this, and it is probably the Government's resolve, which it has demonstrated several times, to reduce spending, which in itself is important and entirely praiseworthy, except that I think I would like to consider for a moment what the consequences might be. I think that our reputation on local, provincial and foreign markets has gained ever wider currency over a number of years. This sector makes a very significant contribution to the Canadian economy. I would suggest that anything at all to do with inspection must remain under Government jurisdiction, and I find it hard to believe that our inspection system will ever so slowly be dismantled piece by piece so that it will eventually be taken over by private interests.

The ultimate aim of this inspection process would likely become rather fuzzy if people were to question our objectivity, and I think that consumers and buyers of our products would rightfully express doubts about our standards, which in turn would be considerably lessened. That is why I fail to see the rationale behind a measure such as Bill C-33 which, in a way, will lead to insecurity and confusion, when we are talking about a sector that is running very smoothly and that has gained wide-ranging acceptance.

The private sector is here to stay, of course, it has earned its laurels and, oftentimes, private enterprise will give much better results than will any public agency. But when we are talking about security and consumer protection, I do think that the Government must play a leading role and resort to every means at its disposal to improve consumer protection mechanisms.

I am not at all sure that, from a structural standpoint, results will not be short of disastrous. If I may, I should like to mention some of the consequences which, I think, might result from the implementation of this Bill. What guarantee do we have that this will not result in an inadequate control over quality inspection and appraisement of meat and meat products? I am almost certain there will be an immediate reduction in inspection standards. Probably, there will also be a definite drop in the quality of all food products, especially meat products. Most certainly, there will also be a lowering of sanitary conditions in industries. Clearly, there will also be inadequate control over meat and meat product receiving or shipping. I am not sure there will also not be inadequate monitoring of the preparation of processed meat products. There will certainly be a quality decline in the production of processed meat preparations, a lack of control over the export of meats and meat products.

I could go on and on and show that our success on the markets has been due definitely to the reputation we developed over the years, our excellent reputation in terms of extremely drastic standards. At this important juncture, where we do have as great a need for our agro-food economy as ever, it seems to me both ill-advised and extremely dangerous to tamper with anything that has proven effective.

Let me tell you that meat processing is the major manufacturing industry in many provinces, and the fourth one nationally in terms of shipping value. This in itself is the most convincing proof that here is an industry that is vital to the Canadian economy.

Also, the Canadian Government has contributed over these last few years to the expansion and growth of this industry, not through direct intervention on the market place, but rather by supporting the infrastructure that links the various components, which allowed Canada to enjoy a respected worldwide position as a supplier of meat.

The help provided by Agriculture Canada in the carcass grading system also served Canadians well in the industry, because it has provided them with a quality product that is still envied in the world at large.

Such are my concerns, Mr. Speaker, and I very sincerely believe that Bill C-33 could threaten the objectivity of a system that has proven itself over the years. The whole aspect of consumer protection, the concern for consumers has been left aside. In other terms, they have been completely ignored, although the vivid recollection of past experience still raises fears, and I am referring of course to the situation we have experienced in Quebec. Under the circumstances, it seems to me very dangerous to give the Minister absolute, unrestricted control over an area as important as our meat market.

• (1730)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments, debate. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Thank you Mr. Speaker. I also welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on second reading of Bill C-33, respecting meat inspection in Canada. I am especially pleased to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais), in the absence of the Minister, because the Parliamentary Secretary made a very eloquent speech, and I would like to ask him to congratulate the public servant who wrote it for him. However, I must add that the officials who wrote this elegant prose may have forgotten to inform the Parliamentary Secretary that Bill C-33, which was based on very worthy principles—and who is not for virtue and motherhood—and I think the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette), who, I am sure, is very familiar with this area, could tell us that the objectives of the Bill are praiseworthy, and I think that Hon. Members on both sides of the House agreed that the Bill, also thanks to Hon. Members on the Standing Committee, is well drafted.

I think the Minister of State for Small Businesses is referring to the Committee on Agriculture, and of course as the critic for external trade, I do have other obligations and I have to rely on the experts. Unfortunately, I am just a country lawyer, and I have not had the honour and the privilege of being involved in the agricultural industry like the Minister of State for Small Businesses. However, Mr. Speaker, I do know that under all the praiseworthy principles, the reality is not as rosy. With all its principles, the Government is in fact undermining the intrinsic value of the Canadian inspection service.

It is common knowledge that as a result of a policy referred to as the reduced inspection system or inspection frequency, the Government is undermining the whole credibility of "Canada Approved". This concern is shared by the inspectors themselves, who have to live with the practical implications of Bill C-33. I would like to remind the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister that even the Canadian Meat Council said not long ago, I think it was on June 13 last year, that Canadians depended on Agriculture Canada's help in providing a system of carcass grading, and so on, and the Council said: Although we understand that the Federal Government is going through a difficult period financially, and that it is looking at every way it could possibly save money, we must also understand that meat inspection, grading services, and the like, are in the national interest and must continue to be financed from the public purse.

This is the reason why, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stir up the interest of my good friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, and congratulate him for his work. Nonetheless I would like to obtain his assurance that once this legislation is passed it will not be shelved but that indeed it will be enforced and even extended if possible. It would be terrible to alter among other things the various groups, the A, B, and C assessment system advocated for processing plants for example, when we know that the Department wants to compel all plants in the C group to pass in the B group thus reducing inspection services and in the short term to compel all plants in the B group to move into the A group thus reducing the inspection. In the end, the industries are entrusted with the responsibilities of sanitation and inspection. In fact, the concern which has been expressed, especially by inspectors, is that this could pose a very serious danger for the Canadian public. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to assure us that this Parliament is not being used only to pass a Bill which will not be actually implemented. I know very well, Mr. Speaker, that you would not be happy yourself to witness passage of a Bill which would not be actually implemented. As you know, we all feel very safe when we see the "Canada Approved" stamp on a cut of meat, and if this stamp were to be used without any effective control, it could become very worrying for consumers. The inspectors therefore met last weekend to express their concerns to some of our colleagues, and they took due note of the absence of 25 of the 26 Progressive Conservative Members they had invited. I think there will be other opportunities in the next few weeks to hear the same inspectors express their concerns and I hope that, before asking us to agree to this Bill, the Parliamentary Secretary will take all their grievances into consideration. They are the most knowledgeable in this area. For our part, we can certainly talk about the principle of the legislation, on which everyone agrees. However, as far as the actual administration of the act is concerned, the revelations of Agriculture Canada inspectors are disquieting, Mr. Speaker. For instance, they say that, if this policy is pursued, the quality control and assessment of meat and meat products through inspection will be inadequate. They say that inspection standards are about to be lowered. They even say that the quality of all food products, especially meat, will be lower. I know this is of particular concern to the Minister of State for Small Businesses.

I am convinced that the possibility of lower health standards within the industry is also of concern to the Parliamentary Secretary. Should the lack of control over the shipping and delivery of meat and meat products not give the Parliamentary Secretary something to think about? I think that no one would tolerate a lack of control over the preparation of processed meat. Mr. Speaker, who would accept lower quality control in the production of processed meat preparations? It is therefore my view that no one would agree to any lack of control over the export of meat and meat products.

Mr. Speaker, I think—the Minister of State for Small Businesses is telling me I have said that three times already—I will have to repeat it again and again in order to get him to understand. This is worrying all those involved in the area of inspection. They know very well that the Minister of State for Small Businesses, despite all his good will, did not understand their brief.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that inadequate control over imported meat products is also a genuine concern for inspectors. Worse still, they are telling us that this could lead to no control at all on stamped meat and meat products. If this were to happen, I think our stamp would lose much of its credibility, for it is now well looked upon not only across Canada but around the world. We are even warned about a sharp decline in the nutritional value of meat and meat products. Imagine that! I hope there is nothing in that legislation that could bring about such nefarious results.

Mr. Speaker, there is even the prediction of a significant increase in black market operations. I know that no Member of this House could support such practices.

Of course, we are told consumers should be on the alert, we are told that if the process is allowed to continue, there may be a significant increase in the volume of meat and meats products on the market unsafe for human consumption.

Mr. Speaker, we have all lived through the times when tainted meat was sold openly, we were very concerned about the findings of some Quebec commissions of inquiry, and nobody would like to see a return to such dark days in the history of Quebec's food industry. Unfortunately, those incidents were attributed to the private sector, which the Minister holds in such high esteem.

Mr. Masse: They were Liberals.

Mr. Lapierre: I think the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) should continue to read his documents instead of indulging in petty politics, it would be of great help to him when he has to answer questions.

Mr. Masse: A flashback to history.

Mr. Lapierre: You know, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications keeps interrupting me because he knows that if any such thing were to happen again he would be blamed for failing to take part in today's debate.

Meat inspection services are of course reduced and finally we are informed by meat inspectors of the danger of the situation because the Canadian public is less protected in an environment described as open to fraud. And I know that the Parliamentary Secretary would never want that to happen. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to dispel all those concerns before we have the final vote on this bill because we . . . This bill was not drafted by people who were unaware of the situation; this information came directly from the inspectors involved. This is why I am anxious to get assurances from the Parliamentary Secretary before a vote is called on a bill of such significance to the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions. Comments. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

• (1740)

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm what was said by my colleague, the Hon. Member from Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). During the weekend, I attended a meeting in Notre-Dame-du-Bon-Conseil with about forty people who work in areas covered by this legislation. Forty persons who wanted to meet with their elected representatives, something quite normal in my opinion. They wanted to meet the members from ridings which are mostly rural.

To my surprise, Mr. Speaker, out of 26 invitations, including the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent), only one Conservative showed up. This is an important question, and the people working in the field, who have the best possible knowledge and expertise of the application of such a legislation, wanted to meet their elected representatives to inform them of the possible, or even probable, consequences of the legislation. They were told that it is none of their business. All they wanted to do was warn the Members of the possible dangers of such legislation. That is the attitude of the Minister of State, the attitude of the Parliamentary Secretary. They draft a bill which, in theory, might be excellent, but which is in fact very dangerous for the Canadian consumers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it will take me 30 seconds to reply to my hon. colleague. Instead of having lunch with the meat inspectors in the Quatre Saisons Motel in Drummondville, the Hon. Members for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) would have been better advised to appear before the Standing Committee where I heard representatives of the meat industry as well as representatives of their party and of the New Democratic Party who did agree with me.

But I am now somewhat surprised to see that they seem to have changed their minds this afternoon. You may be sure, Mr. Speaker, and the opposition can be sure as well regarding the main concern of the meat inspectors whom the hon. members met but who actually invited me 48 hours in advance. I am not sure that they sent a letter of invitation to everybody for their meeting and even though I am not such an important person, I still expect to receive my invitations early enough. As I said, they had the opportunity to state their concern and they suggested that they were worried about their jobs. We provided them with figures showing that their jobs were not at stake at all and that we were simply streamlining the industry, something that has not been done since 1905. I believe now that at this very moment everybody supports that legislation and that we must go ahead with it, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that meat inspectors will carry on their work so as to preserve a reputation that Canada has had for years in that area and that we will continue to enjoy for years to come.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say briefly to the Parliamentary Secretary how pleased I am that he was able to assure us that no jobs are at stake, that in fact it is strictly a matter of streamlining the industry and that inspection standards will be as good as they have been since 1905.

However, I would like to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that he should not blame Hon. Members for not sitting on the Standing Committee of Agriculture. The Parliamentary Secretary should understand that within our party, we have a right to speak whatever the opinion of our colleagues may be. I can assure him that nobody could prevent me from making representations on the floor of the House on behalf of the constituents of my riding of Shefford. I know that the Hon. Member has not enjoyed the same kind of right since he entered politics, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary should know that on this side of the House, even when we were sitting on the other side, we were never afraid to express our views on behalf of our constituents, and that is my main concern, not the commitments of the Parliamentary Secretary.

[English]

Mr. Althouse: I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. While we are not able to ask questions directly of him or of the Minister, I have a question that arises from the testimony during the committee process. This matter has disturbed me since before the committee process when the new frequency of meat inspection was instituted approximately a year ago.

The Parliamentary Secretary will know that under that program the meat inspector is responsible for the stamp that goes on the meat carcass. However, with the new frequency of inspection, employees in some plants are apparently applying those stamps under the aegis of the inspector even though he may not be there because of his responsibility for inspecting several other plants.

Should the meat that bears the stamp be found wanting at a future date, who is responsible? Is it the plant operator, is it the employees, or is it the inspector? It is our understanding that the inspectors will be held responsible, but their instructions from the Department make it virtually impossible for them to be on hand to inspect the use of those stamps. Is the Department proposing any regulations to make this procedure more fair to the inspectors as well as to the consumers of Canada?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, it is a question of liability. My hon. friend knows that this problem was dealt with in the standing committee. Dr. Anzengruber had the responsibility of answering for the Department on this question.

It is impossible to say what will happen in a month or two if such a problem arises or to know exactly who has the responsibility.

● (1750)

[Translation]

We will see at that time. It is a very hypothetical question for which we had no answer and Dr. Anzengruber answered the best way he could at that time.

As our colleagues, the Hon. Members for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) have indicated earlier, we have trusted for many years our inspectors and our inspection system. We cannot either solve all the problems of the world, today, but we will attempt to respond—

Mr. Boudria: What kind of response is that?

Mr. Blais: Of course, had he been present earlier, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) would perhaps know. I cannot start over again every five minutes, each time someone enters the House. All I can say is that the Government will take on its responsibilities in this area as it did in the past and should a particular problem occur and should we have to determine whether the inspector or the company is responsible for some damage, we shall investigate and the responsible person or organization will pay the bill, which I suggest, is the normal thing to do.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, we had a reputation of passive spectators but we are now faced with representations of very silent mummies when it comes to defending the consumer's interests.

I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. If this legislation is so open, why did 26 members of your party refuse to meet with those people who work in the field? That is the first question.

Second, should an institution which is now controlled seven hours a day, five days a week be controlled one hour a day, five days a week, because in my opinion, inspection means control, and when there is less control, there is less inspection as well and we are now substantially diluting the meaning of "Canada Approved".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Blais: Regarding the first question asked by the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), he could put it directly to the 26 members when he meets them. As for me, I said why I was not there. I had been invited two days in advance and I had the opportunity to meet those inspectors here in Parliament when they had the opportunity to explain their position.

As for the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I cannot make an analysis of the hundreds and the thousands of businesses working in the meat sector in Canada today; it is absolutely impossible to take specific cases, and my honourable friend knows it full well. The departmental officials have answered all the questions, to the satisfaction of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), one of your colleagues and a member of your own party. He expressed his agreement on the legislation, on the guarantees given to him by the departmental officials about the follow-up to this Bill. I cannot elaborate further today, I refer hon. members to the guarantees given in committee. It is pointless to set up standing committees and have them sit for days to study a legislation if we are to take up the whole debate again in this House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) on a supplementary question.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, when we have to pass legislation, it is here in this House of Commons that it is to be done. I would like to ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary a question since he claims to be on top of the issue. Could he tell this House how many packing plants and processing plants there are in Quebec? Since he knows all the facts of the matter, those are figures he must certainly know—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Blais: My hon. colleague can put his question on the Order Paper. I will enquire and I give him an answer in the next few days, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a question or comment.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I recall, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated earlier, in answer to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), when he asked to what extent the system would be damaged by the fact that inspectors would not be on the premises as often as previously, that he could not deal with that hypothetical question at the present time, and that he would deal with the case when an infraction occurred. However, would he not agree with me that for instance when there are fewer inspectors in the field, when the inspectors are not on the premises all day long as most of them are presently, it is much more likely, or if you will, there are many more opportunities to break the law? Does he not think that the inspection system, which he praised in his recent speech, saying that it was very good, which it is, does he not think that it will be damaged by the action of the government?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on this particular matter, again, if the Hon. Members who just spoke, the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) had been there, they would know that the figures show that, in the last year alone, there were 32 more person-years than the previous year, strictly at the inspector employment level. Thus, far from decreasing, the maximum standards for the protection of slaughterhouses and meat inspection have increased.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-25, an Act to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although Bill C-25 is the next order of business planned for the day I see that it is about 5.57 p.m. I presume we can call it six o'clock and take up this Bill at the beginning of the next day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6 p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 5.58 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—CANADIAN ARTS COMMUNITY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to support the Canadian arts community, specifically by,

(1) cutting funding to independent cultural agencies, leaving artists in poverty;

(2) compromising the arm's length principle in relations between Government and funded agencies; and

(3) increasingly bringing arts funding under direct ministerial control, and making partisan appointments to cultural agencies.

She said: Mr. Speaker, this debate we are holding today on the failure of the Government to support the arts community reflects a growing recognition of the importance of the arts community to Canada. It reflects a growing strength in the arts organizations which came en masse to Parliament Hill to lobby for the arts, and it reflects a growing disgust on the part of the Canadian public at Government policies, at broken election promises and at the unmitigated gall of this Government in its appointments to arts agencies.

[Translation]

Today we are launching a historic debate on the situation of the arts and the plight of artists in Canada. For the first time, Government policy with regard to the arts is the subject of a full day's debate in the House. The New Democratic Party moves that the House condemn the Government for its failure to support the arts community. Specifically, we condemn the Government for its budgetary cut-backs; we condemn the Government for failing to live up to its election promises; we condemn the Government for interfering with agencies which are supposed to be independent; we condemn the Government for its policy under which reductions are imposed to independent agencies with a view to giving the Minister greater control over the purse strings; and we condemn the Government for outright patronage in appointments to agencies. On the contrary, we advocate the appointment of artists and public representatives of every political stripe who are knowledgeable in the arts, not only those of the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

We have in Canada an arts community of which we can be proud. In all parts of the country music, dance, visual arts, theatre, writing, film, cartoons, crafts, are flourishing in the sense that good work is being done. It is increasingly being appreciated by Canadians who buy the works and attend concerts and performances. The paradox is that while the arts are thriving, very few artists are. They are still living in poverty. Why?

• (1110)

When the Canada Council began in 1957 it had enough money that roughly an eighth of the applicants could obtain grants. It was not a large number, but it was very competitive. A large number of artists could expect, fairly often, to obtain grants from the Canada Council. Now the odds are one in 40 or one in 50 that artists will obtain support. The Canada Council is just not supporting the vast majority of our artists due to lack of funds.

The money available to the Canada Council has decreased in real terms over the last number of years. This decrease began with the Liberals, but the point here today is that the Conservatives have continued this trend, indeed entirely contrary to specific promises to keep up funding at least with the cost of living during the election campaign. Instead, money is going into funds under the Minister's control. If we look at the proportions, they are very large; over $30 million in arts funding. This is not much for national defence but a great deal of money for the arts under the Minister's direct control without specific criteria, without guidelines, without accountability to the arts community, with a jury system. The Canada Council itself has roughly $70 million. The amount of money available for patronage expenditures is increasing and is sizeable, compared with what is available to regular cultural agencies.

This Government in opposition promised support for traditional agencies and the arm's length relationship. Let me quote what its Members said at the time of the election:

We are committed without question to the arms length principle ... The cultural agencies and councils are more able than politicians and bureaucrats to assess the needs identified by the cultural sector, and must be assured adequate resources to respond effectively—

We say "Amen". They continued:

We are convinced that the agencies and councils must be independent from shifts in political perspective ... We are prepared now to translate our efforts in opposition into action, through implementation of five-year financial plans, formal structures for advice from agencies and councils, and legislation which embodies the arms length principle without question.

However, what has happened? The arm's length principle has been eroded. The lottery money which goes into cultural initiatives is at the discretion of the Minister. It does not come from general tax revenues; it is from lotteries. How could it best be spent? I proposed that it go to the Canada Council directly so that it would come under the jury system and there would be some accountability.

Let us look at the proposal which the Conservatives made while in opposition. They said:

> We will consult with the agencies, councils and cultural community to determine whether there is a better way to allocate these funds.

Yet when I raised this matter in committee only last week, the Minister said that it would be undemocratic to have more funding go to the Canada Council because it was not under his control. He got elected, he is the Minister responsible, and therefore somehow that makes it democratic. In other words, respecting Conservative election promises would be undemocratic. That is how ridiculous that is. Surely the essence of democracy is that voters know for what they are voting and that there is respect for promises after the election campaign. The Minister tells us that he has a different plan. It is not that he is against the arts or artists; he has another idea on how to make it work, that is, the private sector. Unfortunately we have no evidence to believe that the private sector will ever give away enough money. There is not that philanthropic tradition in canada which other countries have. Unfortunately, if we give it more tax incentives, it means the public would be paying indirectly but the private sector would be getting veto power over what is actually produced.

I suggested that the Minister ought to be advancing the promises and finding more funding as was recommended in the Applebaum-Hébert report. These were discussed subsequently in committee. The Minister's response to these positive recommendations was: "Well, they are not in the Bible. Election promises are not the Bible". One would hope they would have more respect for their own election promises. To continue with his notion that the alternative is a better one, that the election brought in a Government devoted to the private sector, and that that is really what counts, I will quote what the Minister said in committee last week:

[Translation]

> Under the new course we are recommending, there would be more measures designed to promote and spur private sector investment in arts and culture.

● (1115)

[English]

It is quite clear what they want. Let me point out that this investment in the private sector has been tried. It has been the response over the decades. A lot of money has gone into capital expenditures. We have had tax incentives for films. People have certainly made money. We have had lousy films. Canadian performers have received very little of that money which comes out of general tax revenues. The quality of the product has been bad. They have not been Canadian films. They have been money-making schemes.

In broadcasting, we have an average of 33 per cent returns, according to the CRTC, in the private sector. They are making money. The plant is there. The artists are still starving. The majority are still living under or at the poverty line. We have had an enormous expansion in the capital plant for culture in Canada. Let me quote George Woodcock from his book on the arts and Government called Strange Bedfellows:

> Often the arts, as distinct from the artists, seem to be flourishing financially. The last 20 years have seen the building of fine theatres and resplendent art galleries in many Canadian cities, so that the performing and the visual arts often have palatial house-room.

That is true. We have palaces. A lot of that has come out of public funds. We have palaces for the arts and the artists have been reduced to beggars.

Those who make a living in the arts are the investors, administrators and art consultants, not the artists. The corporate investor buys a piece of art when it is cheap and the artist is starving. It accumulates in value. The investor gets the money, not the artist. Technicians make more than the writers and playwrights whose works are being performed. All of the people in these industries depend upon the creative work of artists. They live off of it, but where do the profits go? Not to the artists. We have not had concrete measures from this Government to address the problem of the poverty of artists, their desire to work and make a contribution. Artists in Canada are poor while the arts are thriving.

Canada Council appointments, as other Conservative appointments, have reflected an even greater concern and devotion to the patronage principle than the Liberals had, and that was a tough act to follow. We have seen some scandalous appointments. There have been very few appointments of artists. Recommendations from the Canada Council have not been respected and have not gone through. I might point out that I put in my own recommendations from the arts community, non-political people with a lot of experience. They did not go through. Instead, political supporters of the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Tory bagmen, people with political connections, have been appointed.

The Canada Council chairperson was not even consulted on the appointments. To add insult to injury, in the case of some appointments, she found out second-hand who they were. The result is that we have members who are not sufficiently knowledgeable about the arts. In some cases they are hostile to the agencies. They are not advocates for the arts but are defending Government policy and not speaking up for the artists, something they should be doing.

I do not say that the Canada Council is perfect. I would like to see its theatre programs changed. I would like to see Canadian theatre promoted and more money going to individual artists. Roughly 12 per cent of the budget has been allocated for individual artists. All kinds of changes could be made. These are not the questions being addressed. New groups are not being funded. I suspect if they had more funding, they could be addressing and solving the real problems of artists instead of having to figure out where to make cuts that will cause the least hurt.

[Translation]

In a sense, the arts are an industry which provides employment for an ever increasing number of people. An investment in cultural endeavours will create six times as many jobs as the same amount invested in manufacturing. Even at that, the arts cannot be considered only as an instrument of economic recovery, for one needs the arts to gain insight into oneself and enjoy living. Chances are some arts will never be financially self-sustaining, just as financial success will never be known in certain arts fields and by certain artists. Even those artists who are now in the limelight had a hard time in their lives when their works did not sell. Mozart was destitute when he died, but today's musicians and record stores are making money because of him.

Financial success therefore does not reflect the merit of an artist. We must face the fact that certain things will never be profitable, yet humanity as a whole cannot do without them. The arts need our support, but not for commercial purposes. Unfortunately the Government has shown an almost total lack of understanding in that respect. We do not live by GNP alone.

• (1120)

[English]

My call today is for an end to crass political patronage appointments, an end to ministerial empire building and an end to ministerial control over important arts funds that should go through the traditional agencies with their systems of accountability. My call today is for vigorous new policies of support for our artists and arts agencies. We do not live by GNP alone. Justice for artists and support for the arts must continue to be a concern for the Government and the House.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to clarify matters by saying that I am absolutely certain that our Government is not hostile to the arts. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) made reference to the private sector. She said that she did not feel that the private sector could provide what is required in the way of assistance to the arts. The private sector has traditionally played a role in supporting the arts and I am thoroughly convinced that the private sector, which gains so much from this country and is prepared to recognize the benefits it receives from our resources, just to mention one particular sector, is prepared to put something back into this country by way of supporting the arts, the sciences and the varied cultures of this country.

Several artists have appeared at my constituency office. They have said that the form of assistance they want is for the Government to create tax incentives in order that people will buy art so artists do not necessarily have to live on what they call government hand-outs. I think this is the way we should involve the private sector. I believe that the Hon. Member should not exclude the private sector from supporting the arts. I honestly believe that as we evolve as a nation and as we deal with the economic plight of meeting the needs of the poor, we are going to have to look to the private sector for more participation in supporting the arts.

Very early in this debate, I would like to set the stage by saying that the private sector has an important role to play in supporting the arts. There are numerous ways of attacking this question. I am sure that the Hon. Minister who is responsible can speak for himself. However, I think the Government is saying that the private sector has a role to play.

From the Hon. Member's presentation this morning, I felt that she was excluding the private sector. I would hope that she would be prepared to recognize that it most likely has the largest role to play in the future development of the arts in Canada.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the chance to clarify that point. In a 20-minute speech, one does not have the opportunity to deal with everything in detail. Certainly there is a role for the private sector to play. I am concerned, though, that it is used as a cop-out for public expenditure. When the Conservative Party was in opposition, it made it very clear that it would stimulate private donations for one thing but that it would not hold back public expenditures. It indicated that public expenditures on the arts would at least keep up with the cost of living. Now we have seen cut-backs and the excuse is that the private sector should do more.

Of course the private sector should do more, but it should not do so by way of grants which, in effect, mean a reduction in taxation which in turn means that the public is putting a great deal of money into this, thereby giving a veto power to the private sector. We should not have additional incentives for that to happen because that is already a factor. We should not be moving in that direction because it gives control to companies, and this control would mean that companies would not have to support something that they did not like. In effect, it would give them too much interference in the artistic decisions which would be made. I believe that would be wrong.

I would very much support tax measures which would not involve government interference, but would provide a means of obtaining public expenditure. One proposal suggested that there should be a tax credit for the purchase of Canadian concert tickets, books and periodicals. That would leave the decision as to which ones were worth buying with the public and not the agency. If there was a measure to provide a tax incentive for the purchase of Canadian products, I believe that would be good.

Another measure which I have proposed a number of times is that the Government should engage in a more vigorous purchasing program. Both federal and provincial Governments should purchase books, periodicals and films for school systems, public institutions, hospitals and other places in which they could be used. If that were done, there would not be a need for subsidies. If the sales were adequate, a book publishing company would not need a subsidy to pay for the run. It could count on those sales. I believe that that measure would be very welcome to the arts community.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) on her impassioned plea for Canadian culture. However, I do not agree that a cut of 2.9 per cent to 3 per cent across the board means the end of culture in Canada.

Her attitude seems to be that if we did not cut the funding, everything would be well. We could look at it on a per capita basis. In the United States, approximately $10 per person is spent on cultural funding. In Great Britain it is approximately $20 per person, and in Canada it is approximately $30 per person. Could the Hon. Member tell us what is the magical figure in Canada? How many dollars per person should we be spending on Canadian culture before we see a Canadian Dickens, Hemingway, Alexander Korda, Cecil B. de Mille or Mozart? How many dollars will it take to achieve the goals which she has outlined?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to put a dollar value on how much it would cost. I would suggest that in some fields, particularly writing, we certainly have people of the calibre which has been mentioned and we do not have to wait for them to appear.

The cuts in percentage terms, depending upon what denominator we use, are not very large. But to a community which has been starved for a long time and has not received real increases in funding for a number of years, those cuts are very significant. That cut in a big budget would not mean the same thing. I believe that it is unfair for the arts community to be cut back in a time of restraint when that community never enjoyed the times of non-restraint. The people who profited from expansion are the people who should be cutting back. The arts have not profited. Those people are still at the same poverty level at which they were 20 years ago.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a brief question. I would like to echo the thoughts of my colleague with respect to the comments on culture which the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) raised.

I noted with some regret her comments about the nature of political partisanship and appointments. I think the House would agree that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has been renowned thus far for his appointments of competent and capable Canadians to positions within the arts community.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gormley: I believe the Minister should be lauded for that. I can think of his appointment which was made yesterday and the announcement of the broadcasting task force. He appointed one Gerry Caplan. In the Member's opinion, is Mr. Caplan another Conservative at the trough?

• (1130)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that all the people who were appointed were incompetent and that all the appointments were political patronage appointments. I said too many are. I said that is a tendency which is increasing. Let me point out in the case of Mr. Caplan, who I think is a good appointment, that to have one member out of seven members of a task force—

Mr. Masse: Give us one name.

Ms. McDonald: —as a New Democrat—one out of five Canadians vote New Democrat—is not excessive. The record of the Conservative Party with respect to appointments is atrocious.

Mr. Masse: One name?

Ms. McDonald: I have asked the Minister to specify the political affiliation of the appointments so that we can see the percentages.

Mr. Masse: Give us one name which is not good.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, if the dogs would stop barking perhaps I could put a question.

I would like to have the Hon. Member's comments with regard to the economic impact of the cuts in the arts. Clearly that has had a devasting impact upon arts in Canada and upon artists. For every public dollar which goes into the arts, there is a creation of employment. I understand that dollars invested in the arts create more employment than dollars spent in other sectors of the economy. The Government said it was committed to employment when it was running in an election campaign, and then it cuts funding to the arts, which is also having a detrimental effect upon the economy and upon the employment of people. I wonder if the Hon. Member could comment on that.

Ms. McDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker, investment in the arts is a very good way of creating jobs because—and this is a very sad fact—wages and salaries in the arts are so low that a job can be created for very little money. With most of the arts it does not require a great deal of capital expenditure. There is a ripple effect from the cut-backs we have seen. For example, Radio-Canada fires people but it also cuts back on its contracts. So that free-lance artists have been very badly hit by these cut-backs and that is not quite so visible because they are not in actual positions in an agency. We have had a terrific outcry from artists because they are suffering as a result.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Hon. the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly anxious to speak to the motion before the House today because, and this will come as no surprise, I intend to deny the allegations made in the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). The substance of this motion is to condemn our Government for failing to support the Canadian arts community.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I cannot agree at all with the three allegations which I find exaggerated and unfounded, the very shaky foundation, as it were, of the motion before the House today. However, I do find some satisfaction in the realization that this motion marks the first time the issue of the arts has been placed on the agenda of the House for an Opposition day. I sincerely hope it is not just a premiere, and that in future, the Opposition parties will contribute further by giving more consideration to the arts and that in doing so, they will follow the example of this Government and show that they are prepared to use the means at their disposal, in other words, to bring the debate into the House of Commons and give this question the consideration we believe the arts and culture community deserves.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the substance of the motion, the argument used by the Opposition to buttress its motion is the allegation that this Government has reduced funding to cultural agencies, leaving artists in poverty. I agree that on the face of it, nothing would seem more logical than to proceed along the lines of cause and effect, especially to the New Democrats whose causes, as we all know, are many, their effects earnestly hoped for but fortunately, in the opinion of many Canadians, the results are very scarce.

It is of course accepted practice to accuse the Government of breaking its promises, and when no attempt is made to look at all aspects of the question and to judge fairly, as is the case with the motion before the House today, Mr. Speaker, it may seem easy to shout "haro sur le baudet", to look for a scapegoat, but of course my hon. friend opposite is not La Fontaine far from it. Must I remind him, Mr. Speaker, that as in the fable, the pest was wiped out last September?

Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has raised the issue of election promises several times. Well, we know what the New Democratic Party's election promises are worth, because in any case, there is a very wide gap between what they promise and what they can deliver, if they are ever in a position to do so.

When the Progressive Conservative Party made its commitments during the election campaign, in my sector as in others, it made commitments to be met within its term of government, and that is the spirit in which these commitments were made to the people, who knew perfectly well that after the election, the government would have the usual term within which to govern, that is four or five years, according to our parliamentary tradition. The people know perfectly well that a government needs a certain amount of time to apply its policies, that it needs a certain amount of time to prepare legislation, and that it needs time to introduce the technical and administrative measures that will implement its election promises. It was with this in mind that the Government, the Progressive Conservative Party, committed itself, and I can give the House the assurance that at the end of our term, the people of Canada will realize that the Progressive Conservative Party was able to deliver on the commitments it made to the Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, it really takes the mentality of a socialist party, and we in the Western world know what that means, to believe it is possible to turn Parliament upside down, to upset bureaucratic traditions and to impose—as I am sure they would if they ever came to power in Canada, which would be a catastrophy for this country—to impose their dictatorship on this country's government and administration. That is the vicious philosophy behind the motion of the Hon. Member, that smacks of the habit socialist parties have of wanting to impose their ideology on a population that refuses to accept it, Mr. Speaker.

We know that the socialist party, with its grand speeches in support of the union system . . . show me a country where they did not abolish unions as soon as they came to power! It has been like that everywhere in recent history, and Canadians know exactly what to expect from the proposals, projects, programs and ideology of the socialist party, Mr. Speaker. That is why in a country like Canada, they object to bringing in the private sector to help the arts community.

The barking dogs are on the other side now.

They are part of an ideological tradition that most Western countries will not accept because they know full well that to apply their socialist theory would diminish our freedom, and Canadians know that, Mr. Speaker.

The Government has made commitments to the people of Canada, and it will respect those commitments, and it will do so for the benefit of the people and not in order to diminish their freedom as the case would be with the New Democratic Party's program if that party ever came to power in this country, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, this Government set its priority from the very beginning, and Canadians knew what that priority was, and that is why the Progressive Conservative Party was able to obtain such a high percentage of the popular vote. The Government's first priority was to regain control over the budget deficit. Our ever increasing indebtedness has taken alarming proportions and is a load which the Canadian people can no longer carry. Barely ten years ago Canada's public debt service cost only one-eighth of each dollar collected by the State. It has since soared to one-third. The budget deficit is growing so fast that expanding our whole economy would and will not by itself solve the problem. The public debt went up 22 per cent last year, whereas real economic growth was barely 4.7 per cent. Such administration of public funds is therefore irresponsible. Getting a handle on the deficit is not an objective in itself, Mr. Speaker, it is only a way to reach our goal, which is the sustained creation of jobs and wealth. All Canadians must do their fair and equitable share to set the economy back on the right track. Mr. Speaker, all of us have benefited from the fallout of the higher deficit, so all of us must now make fair and equitable sacrifices to restore order in public financing.

• (1140)

Over the past few months I explained what I intend to do in those sectors which fall under my Department's jurisdiction. I am firmly committed to promoting the development of artistic and cultural activities. But as Government policies must be fair to all Canadians, we also have to come to grips with economic realities. In my opinion, the State must nurture the arts community and do its share to create the climate and infrastructure which artists and creators require. More specifically, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to create an environment in which the cultural sector will thrive, thus supporting the development of an economic environment where the arts will indeed rest on a sound base. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I will take every initiative to make better use of public funds.

It was therefore in the challenging context I have just described that budget restraints became the order of the day, including everything within my responsibilities and under my jurisdiction. Anything less would have been unfair to all Canadians. I want to explain the full scope of those budget reductions.

While during the 1984-85 fiscal year cultural agencies had a total funding of $1.347 billion, for the 1985-86 fiscal year the Main Estimates will allow them a total of $1.317 billion. This is a $30 million reduction, or something like 2.2 per cent of the total funding for cultural agencies. I have had no pleasure implementing those cuts. However, I must indicate to this House that on the average, these are much smaller than the cuts applied generally to other Government services and portfolios. Again, I have felt no pleasure implementing those cuts. I am aware that the impact on the cultural community will be severely felt, just as implementing budget cuts where farmers are concerned has been severely felt in the farming industry. It is the same story throughout Canadian society. Indeed, the vulnerability of the cultural and artistic industry was taken into account when I asked agencies to cut overhead in order to reduce as much as possible the impact of budget reductions on their programs.

Agencies do not exist for their own sake. The cultural bureaucracy does not exist for its own sake, but first and foremost for the purpose of satisfying the needs of the artistic and cultural community. It is in that spirit that I have undertaken, in co-operation with my colleagues and my provincial counterparts, a number of initiatives likely to bring a significant and sustained improvement in the opportunities for the future and the development prospects of the cultural community because of our national make-up. Ours is not a centralized or monolithic nation. We are a nation which is made up of provinces and with a national government. If there is one industry in which the dialogue is essential, in which co-operation is essential, it is first and foremost the cultural industry. I have always recognized, and maybe the NDP never did, that Canada is a nation made up of provinces and that the latter have an essential, important, basic and specific role in the area of culture. This the Canadian Government must recognize not only in speech but in deeds. It is in that spirit that as early as September, we entered upon a positive dialogue with the Provinces, because within the very principles of the Canadian reality, compounded with the current economic difficulties, it is essential that we improve our own management of cultural activities, and in that sense, the Provinces are a basic component.

I do not believe there is any need for me to try and convince you of the importance to this Government of the artistic and cultural community, because you are aware of it, Mr. Speaker. For each and every Canadian, the collective, cultural life is essential to the very existence of this nation. Modern technology enables us to transmit in a few seconds thousands of data, and this is also a part of my portfolio which I have to look after. But that transmitting speed can never outdo the wealth of the message that may lie in a poem, a novel, a painting, a concert or a play, for instance. And I have stressed over these last few months the economic impact of artistic and cultural activities. In terms of income, culture is the eleventh largest industry in Canada. It is the fourth largest supplier of jobs, it also has the fourth biggest bankroll. On the basis of the most recent statistics, between 1971 and 1981, according to the latest census, the number of jobs in that industry had even increased by 74 per cent, nearly twice the growth of the general labour force.

I am quoting those figures to prove two things: first, the economic significance of the cultural industry, and, second, the fact that the Government recognizes it. When the Prime Minister convened the Economic Conference Summit in this country, we made sure for the first time that the cultural and artistic community would be represented, because in this Government's view, that industry does not rank second in the nation's activity, but is at the very heart of the nation's activity and thinking.

The artistic and creative community already is considered by this Government as a full-fledged partner in our society. Such an approach has always been productive. There was the Cultural Affairs Ministers' Conference, which had not met for years because of the frustration and distrust that existed between the Provinces and the Canadian Government. That conference was held; there will now be another one in Halifax. That conference went along in an absolutely normal way in a spirit of co-operation, but we have agreed on the importance of the economic aspect of artistic and cultural activities, and we have shared the cost of an in-depth study of the issue of economic spin-offs with my provincial counterparts.

Several ministers and government members have agreed to take part in the dialogue and to have some input in cultural activities, either in the area of tourism, in the area of employment and immigration together with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), in the area of taxation together with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), or in the area of regional spin-offs together with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). We have made sure that members of our cultural community can avail themselves of the whole range of government programs and are not limited to a definite sector of the government bureaucracy, that for all practical purposes they can participate fully in a multiplicity of programs, because I feel very strongly, contrary to the socialist party, that the multiplicity of sources in the cultural area increases creativity. I am not sure that the New Democratic Party believes in this approach to the organization of the state, and that is why we have opened, multiplied and will continue to multiply the provenances and sources. It is with this objective in mind that we are going to review the Canadian tax system, for I believe that such a review will allow us, through imagination or comparison with other countries, to make the necessary improvements to our tax system which will make it possible for Canadian creators not to depend entirely upon a single source, but to count on a multiplicity of sources throughout the provinces, through governmental departments, private corporations or individuals, that this multiplicity will increase freedom and reduce red tape in the area of subsidies, so that our creators will spend less time filling out applications forms and more ensuring the development of culture in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the House that this government is very much interested in the cultural and artistic sector, that this government has been elected to bring about changes, that this government will make sure that changes do take place in co-operation with the provinces—as the reality of this country will have it—and private corporations—as the reality of our economic philosophy will have it—while respecting existing institutions, something to which the Prime Minister has committed himself. I would remind my hon. friend opposite that the Progressive Conservative party created the CBC as well as the Canada Council.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

• (1150)

[English]

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments and a question to put to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). I noticed that most of his speech was rhetoric. He moved quickly from defending the arts, without spending much time there, to spending most of his time on Conservative ideology.

He made remarks about the multiplicity of funding sources and quite misrepresented the position of my Party and myself. We are entirely in favour of using Employment and Immigration, Tourism and Taxation so that there will not be bureaucratic control. Where we differ is that these should not be in place of funding for the traditional agencies but in addition to it, which was the promise of his Party.

He made very rude remarks about socialist governments. Let me note that we have one in Canada at the provincial level in Manitoba. It increased its spending for the arts, even though it is going through the same tough times as every other province. It made promises in its election campaign to the artists and kept those promises. We have had the experience of NDP Governments in Saskatchewan as well. Saskatchewan would be a very good model for the Minister who is so concerned about the deficit. We had the pioneering of social programs in Saskatchewan and arts programs operating in Saskatchewan without a deficit. We have shown that it can be done and we can show good government.

The Minister did not reply to one of the major parts of my motion concerning appointments. He did not deny that the Canada Council proposals for appointments and proposals from the arts community and other persons have been refused. Would he confirm that he has refused all of the appointments coming from the Council and from the arts community itself? Will he undertake to consult the Canada Council and make a substantial number of appointments of artists who represent the arts community and are nominated by arts agencies?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, obviously, we have not been able to deal with all the issues during the 20 minutes or so set aside for our reply. Naturally, I would have preferred having more time to show how the Minister of Communications answers for the agencies. The Hon. Member keeps saying that the agencies are everything in the arts world, but the provinces have also an important role to play, as well as the Department of Communications, which has to establish contacts with the arts world and promote a continuing dialogue because its first responsibility is to develop the policies of this Government. I feel that the Hon. Member finds it hard to distinguish between a democratic system and an agency, which is a bureaucratic body. The Government has the democratic responsibility to develop policies. The agencies are responsible for implementing the directions and policies developed by the Government and the Department of Communications.

The Hon. Member also praised those government appointments with which he agrees and generally commented on them. I would like to inform him that the law of the land, which we must respect since we live in a democracy, provides that the Government shall make those appointments. It is in this spirit and in compliance with the law that the Government makes those appointments. Since this debate started, the Hon. Member has had a great deal to say about Government appointments, but I would like him to mention a few cases where he disagrees on the ability of the appointees to do their job.

We took steps to appoint people from all sectors and all regions in Canada, and I hope that they will be able to fulfil their responsibilities on these boards, which are, first, to act for the Canadian population in managing these public funds, and second, to make recommendations to the Department and the public on behalf of the cultural sector. The system works both ways. The agencies are not lobbies putting pressure on the Government. They are part of a system of public funds management, and to my knowledge, the directors of these agencies act within their responsibilities and with great ability to protect both the cultural sector and the tax dollars of the Canadian public.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I was not in the House, I was in my office when I heard the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) make his astonishing speech. I am not here to defend the New Democratic Party, the socialist party, but I must say I found the Minister's attitude more than a little amazing. The Minister comes from one of the old parties which Quebec has banished from the political scene, the Union nationale, a party of which Quebecers were ashamed. He was a member of a party that was declared corrupt and he has now come to the Progressive Conservative Party to help make it go the same way.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that he would meet his commitments. Earlier, the Minister asked the author of the motion to name names, in referring to the appointments. The Minister hid hypocritically behind the laws of this country, saying that the appointments were perfectly legal. May I also remind the Minister of Communications and all Hon. Members that it is absolutely shocking to see how the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) and the Hon. Member for Drummond are walking around to make sure they are on TV. They are not even in their seats. In fact, it seems to be their sole occupation in this House.

I wish the Minister would inform the House why he has not asked the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to keep his promise that a committee of the House would make these appointments. And I also want to ask the Minister why he is so reluctant to have Mr. Sherman appear before the Committee on Official Languages. After all, as a Member from Quebec, the Minister is well aware that the directors of the CRTC are very important people. He also knows there was a time in Quebec when there were more licences for English-speaking radio stations in the Montreal area although the majority of the population was French-speaking. He knows perfectly well what the consequences could be of appointing a person who took the position that he did on the language question in Manitoba, considering the potential impact on the province of Quebec. I wish the Minister would tell us why he is so reluctant. If he has nothing to hide, if he is being honest with himself, the Minister would have to answer: Yes, Mr. Sherman will appear before the Committee on Official Languages; yes, you may question him and you will see his views are not what everyone believes them to be. However, if the Minister continues to say no, I will maintain what my colleagues, the Hon. Members for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said, which is that Mr. Sherman is prejudiced against Francophones and that, nevertheless, the Minister appointed him to that position.

• (1200)

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, there are two points in my colleague's statement which I would like to bring out. In the first place, in connection with the political history of Quebec, I would like to remind him, in case he is unaware of it, that historians think the most corrupt political party ever in power in Quebec was the Liberal party under premier Taschereau. That is what I was taught.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masse: Unity was made in the province in order to get rid of that corrupt party which was in power during some 20 years. You should know your history better before throwing mud. The Union Nationale Party, although this may be neither the time nor the place to defend it, had an autonomist, constitutional, social and economic position which allowed the Liberal Party under Jean Lesage to build on a good budget and a sound economic policy which allowed it to adopt a certain number of policies, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is the end of the period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

[English]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, for a Government that talks about national reconciliation, I must admit that I am very disappointed at the tone of the debate, especially the tone of the reply of the Hon. Minister to the Hon. Member who proposed today's motion.

I cannot do otherwise but recall that in 1958 to 1962, under the very great Prime Minister, the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker—and I say "great" Prime Minister—the Province of Quebec sent 50 Members to this House. The tone of the debate I have heard today is exactly the same tone I heard then when I was student president at the University of Ottawa. I watched from the gallery, and I remember very clearly how apprehensive and how almost devoid that group of Quebeckers were of anything that had to do with the arts. They used to be called leftists. They were all leftists.

The unbelievable speech I have just heard against the danger of socialism in Canada has made me very sad. I am not a socialist. I am a man of the centre. I cannot defend them but I must object categorically to that kind of tone on the part of a Minister of a Government that talks about reconciliation in this country. I am sad, I am disappointed and I am sure the Minister did not address the real question today of what his role is as a Minister responsible for culture in Canada. I see the Minister is leaving, probably for a smoke, but it is all right.

Is the Minister's role to communicate to the arts people, to the cultural community of Canada, the messages of gloom and doom of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? Or is the Minister's role to be a defender, a hero? The Minister talks about his great past. We all know he is highly cultured. I give him credit for that. He always quotes people such as Pope Jules II, Francis I and Louis XIV of France. That is not what the people of the artistic community want to hear today. They want to know if they have in this House a spokesman, a defender—

[Translation]

. . . a champion, as we so aptly say if there someone in that government understands what the Canadian culture is all about? I know that the minister understands quite well what is involved in the survival of the French culture in Canada. However, does he really understand the fear, the distress of the Canadian artistic community, more especially of the English-speaking artists? Does he understand the great danger which our English-speaking friends and compatriots have to face as much as Quebecers—

[English]

—as well as our English-speaking compatriots who have to face the danger of Americanization. The role of the Minister is to defend in this House and to fight in Cabinet to make sure that those who contribute the most to this country, those who cost the least to this country, will have a spokesman in this Government. We believe that is the role of the Minister.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): We have, Marcel.

Mr. Prud'homme: We only received this motion last night, Mr. Speaker. We worked all night and this morning. We could quote what the artistic community is doing for our Canadian identity. We could be on the same level as the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). We could be a friend. He wants to create jobs, jobs, jobs. The Minister of Finance wants to reduce the deficit. He wants to have less unemployment. But don't the Conservatives realize that in this country those who cost the treasury the least are the artists? Those who produce the most and those who create the most jobs are the people who work to make us proud to be Canadian——artists, authors, ballet and theatre companies that create jobs, those people take almost nothing out of the Canadian economy and they want an advocate, they want someone to defend them within the cabinet, because they are almost helpless. Surely, the Canadian bankers are quite able to fend for themselves, Mr. Speaker, because they have a lobby.

[Translation]

[English]

Surely the oil and gas people have their champion and their lobby. The very important Chamber of Commerce of Canada has its lobby. The Chamber is well defended. But who can speak for these little people in the Maritimes? Who can speak for these people in Halifax who wanted a spokesman, a defender? I have letters here. I will not read them, but I could put them at the Government's disposal. I have received over one thousand letters. I have not had time to reply to them and I apologize publicly to those who have written to me. I have taken samples from Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Alberta, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, B. C., Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Newfoundland. These were not only from the CBC but from playwrights, the national president of the music for children association, the president for the western Canada Art Association—

[Translation]

—the general coordinator concerning the cuts, Mrs. Hélène Dumas, from Quebec, the President of the Saint Thomas Aquinas Society, our friends from Prince Edward Island who need every day the little amounts which are cut off. Mr. Speaker, those are the people who create jobs. I wish I could read these letters, but I will not.

My hon. friend—I am trying to respect the dignity of the House—said a while ago: What is 3 per cent, a mere 3 per cent? It is not much.

[English]

Yet it was easy to find $50 million in new money to deploy an additional 1,200 soldiers to Germany. If it was not new money that money could have been directed to the arts. It was easy to find $50 million this year.

[Translation]

—$100 million next year and every year after that. This year, $50 million to increase by 1,200 the number of our military personnel in Europe. That is very important.

[English]

I believe in defence. I believe in what we stand for in the western world. They found $50 million. My hon. friend, the ex-Minister of National Defence, fulfilled his promise. I stand by saying "my hon. friend" because he is a friend. He said: "We will fulfil our promises". He fulfilled his. He found the money for new uniforms.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Coates, the former Minister of National Defence, once said: "We fulfil our promises". They have found the money they needed. It will cost $35.1 million this year. It will cost $22 million more next year. Some $55 million for new uniforms to satisfy a number of individuals who feel nostalgic about the past. Well, Mr. Speaker, if they could find money for that, I wonder why a colleague of ours asked: "What is a mere 3 per cent?" That is what I am trying to understand and to convey to the Hon. Member as politely as possible under the British Parliamentary system which encourages sharing, listening and trying to convince. It is not an all-out attack against the Minister. I regret his attitude. I regret his inability to understand. I am sorry that what he said is the repetition of what I had heard as a student.

[English]

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, who answered these 50 members from Quebec who arrived here and started saying: "Cut the CBC"?

[Translation]

—they are socialists or leftists, as they were called when I was a student.

[English]

It was the late George Nowlan. If my memory serves me well, he was the then Minister of National Revenue. He was like the tutor of the CBC. He turned around to his own people and he said: "Don't ask me to be the censor of the CBC, do you hear?" He understood the concept. He understood what the words "arm's length" meant. They mean hands off. Is that clear? That was the spirit. I am talking about a great gentleman, the late George Nowlan. I hope the Conservatives will at least agree with that part of my speech. He was a gentleman. I was a friend of his. I used to spend a few evenings socializing with him. He was the father of our distinguished colleague, Mr. Pat Nowlan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is "the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants".

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I should have said the father of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants. He understood the words "arm's length". He understood that we must not intervene. I will not deny the right of the Hon. Minister to know what they do with the money. Certainly, certainly, but he should not go as far as to say that he will appoint someone to tell them what to do. Jacques Lefebvre was appointed as the new vice-president of the Arts Council. Instead of defending the arts and defending the rights of these people, what did he do? I repeat again that these people do not cost much. They give me my pride in being Canadian. I say it in English, and I will repeat it in French.

[Translation]

It is thanks to these artists that I am proud to be a Canadian and to maintain my French identity in this country. Helping these people would cost almost nothing. There is a Mr. Jacques Lefebvre whom I do not have the pleasure of knowing. No sooner was he appointed to the Canada Council that he acted as a spokesman for the Minister of Finance and told us to lower our apprehensions. If cuts have to be made, they should be made at the right places, Mr. Speaker. The government should not claim that a 3 per cent cut across the board is fair, that it is not much, that every Canadian should do his or her part to help our economy recover. That seems logical.

[English]

It seems logical to say that it is only a little 3 per cent, that it is only a little amount. However, it is only a little for artists who cost so little and create so much. They create many jobs. I would like to have the time to read all the letters, pathetic letters, which ask: "Do you understand what we are trying to do for the country?"

[Translation]

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize two points which people do not seem to understand: at a time when the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) is advocating closer economic ties with the United States to create more jobs—

[English]

Canadians have chosen a new Government. The new Government says that we will have a very close relationship with the United States, that that is the only way to recover and to have jobs, jobs, jobs. I respect the point of view—and Canadians have spoken loud and clear—that it will give us a chance to renew ourselves. However, they must understand that the closer we are economically to the United States, in the hope of possibly having jobs, the more careful we should be culturally. The closer we want to be on one hand, the more careful we have to be on the other hand.

[Translation]

The closer we get to the United States, and this is the choice made by this newly elected, strongly elected Prime Minister, and I respect that Canadian choice because I believe in democracy, but I urge the Minister to realize that he has a mission, which is in the first place to use his influence with his colleagues, with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and with the Prime Minister, to be doubly cautious because our culture and identity are threatened.

Mr. Speaker, as I said in committee when the Minister appeared on May 3, I urge my colleagues to think twice. I have no inclination for partisan politics, but I want us to reflect together on this. The average Canadian watches television 23.4 hours every week, the average American 40.4 hours. The average Canadians spends more time before his TV set than in the movie theatre, attending sports activities and so on. Are we aware that a child between the ages of two and twelve over his lifetime will be watching TV for 12,000 hours? Of those 12,000 hours, 10,000 will be spent watching American programs. How do we expect to create a Canadian identity that will be different?

[English]

Children from two years of age to 12 years of age will watch 12,000 hours of television, 10,000 hours of which will be American programming. I have nothing against American programming. I watch it. It is well done. However, there is a danger of Americanizing our culture in Canada. For English children from two years of age to 11 years of age in Canada, 80 per cent of the drama they watch is American. French Canadians are privileged. I know the Minister is a great protector of the French culture. He will understand that we are more protected because we speak French. Only 50 per cent of French Canadian children from two years of age to 11 years of age will watch American programming.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think I have . . . I realize I have been carried away, but I have so much faith in Canada. And why am I sitting here as a Member? And why is the Minister here in his capacity as a Minister responsible for protecting, sponsoring culture? I want to help him not to fight the Government, for fighting achieves nothing, but to convince the Government that culture is different from agriculture. The Minister has referred to onions and other things. Culture is important for its art, its influence. This must be understood by the Cabinet, by this House and by Hon. Members. If not, why are we fighting to build a country?

[English]

Why am I so proud to have voted for the Canadian flag which was raised for the first time on February 15, 1964? My first vote as a young Member of Parliament was on the Flag in 1964. I was proud because it was a Canadian flag. I am proud of the Canadian identity. When Mr. Pearson was Prime Minister, I sat on the committee to choose a national anthem. We recommended O Canada. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and I are the only two survivors of that committee. We recommended that in 1965-66. It was proclaimed in 1980. Why did we fight vigorously and democratically under the British parliamentary system, which I like, respect and will defend? Together we defended a new Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the right of having our Constitution amended in Canada. I wish the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) good luck in getting Quebec in.

• (1220)

Why are we doing all that? Because we believe we are Canadian. I am not here as a French Canadian or an English Canadian. I am a Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: However, I am proud of my French culture.

[Translation]

I am French-Canadian, but here I am a Canadian. And what is in my view the first duty of a Canadian? It is to have an identity. How can we have an identity? By having a culture. And how can we have a culture? By protecting it, fostering it, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, it is my hope—

[English]

Mr. Crosby: There are 1.5 million unemployed.

Mr. Prud'homme: My friend says there are 1.5 million unemployed. If he does not understand that we have to protect the arts, we will have more unemployed because these people create the most. The facts are there to prove that. These people cost less—

Mr. Crosby: Put the facts on the table.

Mr. Prud'homme: I do not want to quarrel with the Hon. Member. I want to try and convince him. If I yell at him, I will not convince him. I will try kindly to convince him that he and I should join our efforts to convince this Minister to be the champion, and not the Minister of Finance. We should convince him that he will have our support. He will have my support, and my colleagues in the Liberal Party better follow me on that or they will have to find another critic on culture. He will have my support if he wants to become the champion and tell his colleagues that the little bit of money that it costs for keeping our Canadian identity is nothing compared to the good it will create to save these people.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to comment briefly and say at the outset that I thank the Liberal Party critic for his support and co-operation. I hope both of us will be able to look favourably upon certain aspects of the cultural policy so as to improve this sector of our national and economic activities, and even to a certain extent, of our civilization.

I should like to remind him that, on February 5, 1957, the House was considering the creation of the Canada Council and I said earlier that our Party then had supported Prime Minister Saint-Laurent's proposed establishment of the Canada Council. The Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party at the time was also Leader of the Opposition—he became Prime Minister a few months later—and he had this to say:

[English]

I certainly am in favour of the setting up of this council. It is needed. The work it will do is necessary for Canada and its prestige; but there is no need, however beneficial the organization may be and will be, to set aside parliamentary control.

This is very important.

[Translation]

Then as now, the Conservative Party gave its full support to the creation of one agency among many others, namely the Canada Council. I might remind the House that the same Party had also created the CBC. But we do not see parliamentary control in the same light as the Liberal Party.

The Liberal Party now has words of praise for the agencies, but perhaps it has no more faith in its future than memories of its past, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the same Party was then under the direction of Prime Minister Trudeau who, not at all pleased by certain remarks made by the CBC, had publicly threatened to lock up the place and show a Chinese urn on TV screens as the symbol of the CBC.

I have the impression that the Hon. Member forgets the history of his Party. He forgets that, last June, the most vicious attack against cultural agencies was launched by the Liberal Party and that, thanks to our current Speaker, to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and others, the Government was forced to backtrack, and we now have a system which remains independent while still being accountable to Parliament. It is within this framework that, as Minister of Communications, I intend to make sure that agencies will be accountable to Parliament while remaining autonomous, Mr. Speaker.

I might also add, if need be, that the Minister of Communications is the person responsible for and, whichever way you want to put it, the defender of the cultural sector.

[English]

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that this period for questions and comments is to allow a number of Members to take part. It seems that we are getting another speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the Minister rose there was only one other Member that I could see.

Ms. McDonald: I rose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary rose at the same time. I recognized the Minister because I thought the exchange would be proper. I will recognize other Members. There are still three or four minutes remaining. I am sure the Minister will allow questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the fact is you said that when you recognized the Member, only the Minister of Communications and the Parliamentary Secretary had risen, but I want to confirm that I had risen and the NDP Member—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Minister has the floor. If he would like to complete his comments and ask a question, I will recognize him.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: I am trying to come to a speedy conclusion, Mr. Speaker, and in doing so I will ask a question as provided for in the rules.

Does the Hon. Member not believe that a Government is first and foremost a team rather than a coalition of interests? In that spirit, as Minister of Communications, I am just like the Minister of Finance, of the same team, and in that sense we decide on Government policy and we implement it in our respective departments. We are a Government working as a team rather than a coalition, and does he not agree that this is the way any Government should do? Within that mandate, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that I have acted and that I will act to the end of my responsibilities as a champion, the champion of those I have a responsibility to serve in my portfolio.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss, and I know that all Members of this House share the feeling I am about to express, if I did not state that I have just witnessed the most eloquent and passionate speech by my colleague, the critic for the Liberal Party on communications, that I have ever heard in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I have not been here that long, only five years. What was particularly appealing about the Hon. Member's speech is that somebody spoke to us not from a script, but from his heart. We had somebody talk about the importance of the arts not from an economic point of view. That is where the whole matter has got off the rails. The artists themselves, perhaps with good intentions, tried to communicate with this Minister and this Government and talked about their value from an economic point of view, $7 billion in 1981; but that is not the issue. It was refreshing to hear somebody speak in this House of his passion and his identity as a Canadian, his love of this country and his appreciation for the people who communicate what we are as Canadians, those who do it every day of their lives, those who work eight hours so they have enough money to live and then work eight hours at night so they can portray and paint the image of this country. Those are the artists of this nation. Their value cannot be measured purely in dollars and cents. That is why we rise today in their defence.

• (1230)

I would like to say to the Hon. Member that I appreciated his comments. They indeed moved this debate beyond a debate regarding dollars and cents and beyond a debate regarding how many jobs will be created, to a debate regarding the fundamental understanding that if we do not have a vibrant, healthy, alive artistic community in this country, then we do not have the kind of identity and pride in being Canadian that will allow us to distinguish that border that runs from the Maritimes all the way to Vancouver. We do not deserve to feel the pride that comes with being a citizen, the pride that comes when we see the flag going up and hear the singing of our national anthem. That is what our artistic community means to us. The Hon. Member has said that in such an eloquent and passionate way that I myself, seldom eloquent and passionate, was moved to rise to express my thanks.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to react to the concept of national reconciliation. I am a Manitoban and a Franco-Manitoban. I would like to point out to my colleagues opposite that their constant reference to the appointment of Bud Sherman does very, very little for national reconciliation.

Mr. Keeper: What did Bud Sherman do for national reconciliation in Manitoba?

Mr. Duguay: We in Manitoba have entered a period of healing and of national reconciliation which is not at all helped by the reopening of old wounds.

The gentleman opposite has referred to Manitoba. Perhaps he would like to talk about Manitoba's contribution to the arts. The deficit of the Government of Manitoba has increased incredibly in the last four years and the appointments to the arts in the Manitoba community are such that that Party opposite has no lessons to teach anyone when it comes to patronage.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member opposite refers to the community needing a hero, a defender of the arts, let me make it quite clear that this Government and this Minister are so convinced of that that we refuse to waste today's money to ensure the future failure of the arts.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. As we know, in the United States direct Government per capita expenditures in the cultural industry are much less than in Canada. A few estimates suggest indeed—they are not perfect estimates—that in the United States in 1983-84, those expenditures amounted to $3.00 per capita while on the other hand, in Canada, in 1981-82, they were $32.00. Looking at this, I certainly believe this is due to the fact that in the United States the private sector is contributing tremendously more than in Canada, because over there they get income tax credit. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has any practical suggestion for encouraging Canadians to support the arts themselves rather than always relying on their Government.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on the record that I have not heard a speech from any Liberal Member that I appreciated more and with which I agreed more than the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I listened for the second time with great interest in committee the other day to the statistics regarding the number of hours that children spend watching television. I do not believe there are any greater defenders of Canada's distinctive cultural identity in this House than the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis and my Minister. I feel exactly the same way.

I hope the Hon. Member will remember as far back as yesterday when the Minister set up a task force to review the whole system of Canadian broadcasting. One of the prime mandates of that task force is to preserve and protect the Canadian cultural identity. I hope that the Hon. Member, along with his colleagues, will participate in presenting their views to that task force to ensure the kind of distinctive Canadian cultural identity that we all wish to see and will cherish.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, may I first say that I was very happy to receive a question from my distinguished friend, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), because when I was young I served in the Canadian Armed Forces COTC in Shilo, Manitoba, as a cadet officer in the provost corps.

[Translation]

I think that you have asked an excellent question. The public sector obviously has a role to play, but I am very apprehensive about your always harping on about the private sector, but God knows that it suits your Government! It has gotten to the point where my hon. friend, the Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), says that the private sector should do more. My hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), says that the private sector should do more. We could discuss this at length, but everything cannot be left to the private sector. With regard to cultural matters and Canadian identity especially, the Federal Government has a role to play, and the Provincial Governments certainly have also, but they all have the same approach and want to cut back on everything. What I want to tell the Hon. Member is this: Why not co-operate on a national information campaign for the Canadian people who readily make scapegoats of artists without seeing all the consequences of such an approach? I would be willing to co-operate with the Hon. Member and all those who would like to come with me and my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, whom I want to thank, which happens rather rarely in this House. However, this is the type of politics that I like and I would like to thank him very sincerely.

[English]

I wish to thank him very sincerely for his good words.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the period for questions and comments is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my comments by dealing with a point made by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) during his speech. Unfortunately, I was not present to hear it as I was at another meeting. However, I was given a summary of one of the points he made and I think it is incumbent upon me to set the record straight.

The Minister apparently accused my Party of being a socialist Party and I accept that as a fair definition of our position. However, he went on to imply that socialists believed in controlling everything and that if we were in office, we would insist on controlling all or most facets of the arts and cultural activities. I do not know about what kind of socialist the Minister was thinking but I would like to tell the Minister, in case he does not know, that there is a Labour Government in Australia and a Labour Government in New Zealand at the present time. There is a socialist Government in Spain, a socialist Government in France and a Social-Democratic Government in Sweden. There has been a Social-Democratic Government in Germany recently and many times there has been a Labour Government in Great Britain. Those Parties are all socialist or Social-Democratic Parties and the Governments which they lead or led administered their countries and dealt with arts and cultural communities without imposing their will on them and without giving them orders. Those Governments that are not now in office but will be in the future will not do those things.

I say to the Minister that when there is an NDP Government in Canada, as there has already been in three provinces, the arts and culture community will be free. It is free under those provincial Governments and has received a great deal of support from them. I do not mind that the Minister criticizes or attacks us when he feels there is a legitimate reason, but I would hope that he would at least be fair.

This Government said before it took office, and continues to say, that the people of Canada ought not to depend entirely or to a large extent on Governments for the support of arts and other activities. The Government feels that we ought to expect and receive more support from the private sector. I wish that was possible.

In many cities in the United States there are museums, concert halls and art galleries which were built by a private individual, or some foundation such as those established by the Gettys, the Rockefellers or the Fords. I must ask the Minister: Where can we find a comparable situation in Canada? We have the Roy Thomson Hall and one or two others, but that is about it. I have to say that I would not count on as much support from the private sector for arts and culture as does the Minister, because we are getting very little from the private sector.

I would like to put on the record what is happening in the United States and quote from an article which appeared in The New York Times on April 22, 1985. The headline is "Private Contributions to the Arts Increase", and the article reads in part:

> Eugene R. Wilson, president of the Atlantic Richfield Foundation in Los Angeles, said, "The endowment is a benchmark for us to help establish quality"—

It continued:

> —his foundation had decided in 1979, when it gave a total of $13 million, to substantially increase its philanthropy. His foundation's expenditures showed a steady growth—with $35.8 million given to various organizations in 1984, including $6.1 million to the arts—

The article continued:

> Chemical Bank estimated recently that such total private giving, which includes some for the humanities as well as the arts, had doubled from $2.7 billion in 1979 to $5.4 billion in 1984.

I could go on citing examples from the article, but I would say to the Minister that if he and his Government believe that the private sector should do more, then I wish the Government would convince the private sector in Canada that it is not doing enough.

It is the view of this Party that it is essential for a country like Canada to give special consideration and assistance to arts and culture. Canada has a population of 25 million people. Canada is situated next door to the largest and most powerful country in the world. The United States is ten times our size in population. Fortunately, or unfortunately, we speak the same language in Canada as they do in the United States. Consequently, what is done in the United States flows over the border into Canada. I am not saying that is bad, but U.S. television, radio, newspapers, magazines and books pour into Canada. Unless the Governments of Canada, federal, provincial and municipal, do a great deal more than they have done, we will drown in American production and become a country without a culture.

There is another problem about which the Minister knows better than I. Canada has a substantial francophone population. There are six million French-speaking people living on a continent which has 250 million people. Unless Governments are ready to support, maintain, develop and improve the francophone culture and arts community, it will not survive. The Government must do much more than it has done in the past.

Canada has lost much of its economic sovereignty. That appears to be accelerating as the advocates of free trade with the United States gain ascendancy in the federal Government. As free trade develops, the free flow of arts and cultural activities will come with it. If that happens, arts and cultural activities in Canada will be in peril.

I would like to compare the promises of the Conservative Party when it was in opposition to the actions of the Conservative Party now that it is in government. In the years preceding the last election, the increase in assistance which was given to arts and cultural activities in Canada by the federal Government was less in real dollars than earlier increases. The increases for culture and arts never matched the increase in the cost of living. The arts and cultural organizations were getting less in real money, in the three or four years before the last election, from the Liberal Government.

What was said by the Conservative Party about that during the election campaign? I remember attending a forum in Winnipeg at which the present Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) spoke on behalf of the Conservative Party. He said that a Conservative Government would maintain the funding at the current level and that the funding for arts and culture would be increased each year to match the increase in the Gross National Product. Speaking for the NDP, I said that was not good enough. However, that was the commitment which was made by the Conservative Party during the election campaign.

The Conservative Party also said that cultural agencies would be free from government interference. It also said that a five-year spending plan would be developed for arts agencies, and that separate incentives would be developed for private investment in the arts. Those promises sounded good. They were modest, but positive. The linking of the increase in arts funding to the GNP, for example, would not break the private banks, nor would it break the Government's bank.

• (1250)

Let us look at what has actually happened since the Conservative Party won the election and formed the Government. Let us look at the present spending estimates for the cultural agencies which the Government has under its direct control and see how many of them received increases for the coming year equal to the projected rate of increase in the Gross National Product as promised. The Canada Council budget increase is close to the GNP projected growth. The Canadian Film Development Corporation's increase is well above the GNP projected growth. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had its budget decreased from the 1985-86 GNP growth rate. But we know that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was cut by $75 million and I think another $10 million for a special fund. So instead of getting the same money plus the increase in GNP, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation received a very substantial cut. The National Film Board, the National Museums, the National Arts Centre and the CRTC received decreases. So in fact, Mr. Speaker, of the eight agencies which the federal Government funds directly, five will have either cuts or very small increases in their 1985-1986 budget. This is hardly what the Canadian Council of the Arts had been led to believe would happen and, further, it sets the example for small increases or cuts to other arts activities.

I know the Government tells us it has a huge deficit and we cannot afford that but, Mr. Speaker, the deficit was not unknown at that time. The Conservative Party knew that the Government of Canada had a deficit. The Conservative Party had task forces working in all of these fields and if it believed that the deficit, which it knew about, was so serious that funding for arts and culture would have to be cut or its increases minimized, then I say that it had no right, and it was, to say the least, less than honest, to make the kind of promises and commitments which it did in every part of this country.

The second commitment made by the Conservative Party was that it, as the Government, would not interfere with the day-to-day operations of the cultural agencies. That is a worthy principle. The Conservatives were right in espousing that principle along with Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party when both of our Parties were in opposition. We attacked the former Government very strenuously with respect to a Bill which was going to change the system so that Crown Corporations and agencies were administered much more closely by the Government, along with the Canada Council. When representatives of the arts and cultural community mounted a very strenuous attack on that proposal by the then Liberal Government, they were joined in that criticism by Hon. Members of both the Conservative and New Democratic Opposition. They were right and we were right then, Mr. Speaker. But what has happened now? What has happened to the principle espoused by the Conservatives now that they are in government? As I have said, the Conservatives joined in opposition to Liberal attempts to control more directly those Crown Corporations which were involved in cultural activities. But that was when they were in opposition. It has proven more difficult for the Conservatives to keep to that commitment now that they are in government.

There is scarcely a day goes by where there is not another example of the Government's interference. Today we learned that the Government no longer consults with the head of the Canada Council on senior appointments. This has already been roundly condemned by those in the arts community and by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). We have as Chairman of the Canada Council one of the most distinguished artists in this country, Maureen Forrester, who has an international reputation. She has been acclaimed in almost every part of the world, not just for her ability to sing but for the work she has done in support of artistic endeavours and for teaching younger people. Does Miss Forrester deserve the kind of treatment she is apparently receiving? I am told that her advice is not only ignored but is no longer even sought. I don't know what words I could use which would adequately convey the feelings of so many Canadians, particularly those who are involved in the arts in this country, when they learn that such a wonderful human being is being treated in the way in which she is by the Minister in charge of culture. I say that that is a disgraceful situation.

We might ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, what this means, because the snubbing of Miss Forrester is not the only example with which we are dealing here. We have seen questionable appointments which dramatically shorten the arm's length relationship which was promised by the Conservatives when they were in opposition and which should exist between the Minister and the cultural agencies. We are seeing grants being made out of the Department of Communication's cultural budget which would be much better handled by the Canada Council. For example, the grants for the Stratford Festival tour of the United States is a perfect example of the Department of Communications serving as the patron to the company when really this should be a function of the Canada Council.

What this says to me, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) really wants to do exactly what he suggested and implied we would do if we were the Government. He suggested that we would want to control the arts and communications efforts. But it is pretty obvious to me that what the Minister wants is to be the czar of culture in this country. It seems to me that it is no accident that the cultural affairs budget was increased by more than 4 per cent, and I suspect that it will be much larger by the time the supplementary estimates for 1985-86 are in. He will then have the personal power and resources to fund the cultural causes in which he happens to believe, not what the arts and cultural community believe in and desire.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North (Mr. Orlikow) referred to me in his speech, I would like to comment. I do not think anyone would deny my attachment for the arts in this country, anymore than I could ignore a career of nearly 30 years in this field.

I have always stood up for the rights of artists, and I think they realize today that they have both rights and responsibilities. As the Minister said earlier, this Government is trying to make available to artists funding never available to them before through other departments. I can name several. We are working very hard on this.

I realize I have very little time, but I would like to take this opportunity to say that in my department alone, during international youth year more than $2 million will have been distributed to cultural groups across the country, whether francophone, anglophone or multicultural, but in any event, cultural groups, and I think that is one example of what the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has in mind. After all, culture is not the preserve of the Minister of Communications. It involves every single one of us, as human beings, as Ministers, and as Members of this House. We have been here for less than a year, and I think that instead of constantly criticizing the tremendous efforts being made to give artists access to funding they were never eligible for before and to open new doors, the Government should get credit for its efforts and be given a chance to implement all its plans, and I think that in the weeks and months—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT—CUT IN FUNDING TO UNITED STATES MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, a United States Senate Committee has voted to cut up to $175 million in grants to municipalities bordering the Great Lakes for the construction of sewage treatment facilities. Mr. Gotlieb, our very capable ambassador in Washington, has protested the committee's action and stated that the change "could jeopardize the U.S. ability to meet its commitments under the 1978 Canada-U.S.A. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement". But that is not enough. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has boasted about his special relationship with President Reagan. Therefore, he should personally intervene by calling the President with a strongly worded request that the Senate Committee proposal be rejected.

The Great Lakes are not a septic tank. They are a vital resource for 35 million Canadians and Americans. The proposed cuts by the Senate Committee are a threat to the health of people and wildlife who depend on clean water. The time has come for the Government to fish or cut bait in protecting our natural environment, since any cut would lead to greater water pollution. That in turn means there may be neither fish nor bait for the Government to deal with, if it continues to dither.

It is an accepted fact that the U.S. is the greatest contributor of pollution to the Great Lakes. It is up to this Government to make it clear, in the strongest possible terms, that Canada expects our shared waters to be protected.

MINES AND MINING

FIRST PRODUCTION AT HEMLO GOLD MINE

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, recently the first thousand ounce gold bar was poured at the Hemlo gold mine in northwestern Ontario. This was an historical occasion for the Canadian mining community. When the mine reaches full production, one of these thousand ounce bars will be produced daily.

This new mine, discovered just three years ago, with construction and development starting two years ago, is coming on stream with state of the art plant, equipment, and mining techniques. From discovery to production in three years for a world class mine is a feat rarely achieved. This mine is the biggest gold discovery ever made in our country. Ore reserves are estimated at 23 million tons, grading 0.3 ounces per ton. Within the year the Teck-Corona mine will come on stream, to be followed later by the biggest of them all, the Lac Minerals mine.

What is of particular importance to all Canadians is that the Hemlo mine will be among the most efficient gold producers in the world. Some 3,000 new jobs will be created, and all of this has been done without government funds or subsidies.

I join my fellow Canadians in applauding Noranda's initiative and Canada's mining expertise. It is a splendid example of free enterprise, and is what Canada is all about.

MARINE TRANSPORT

CN MARINE—REPORTED LEASING OF VESSELS FOR FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, last November the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) assured the House that CN Marine would build another three vessels in Canada which it needed for Atlantic service. Now we understand that CN Marine officials, including President Rupert Tingley, are in Europe considering leasing existing vessels. The Canadian shipbuilding industry is facing its worst crisis in half a century, with plunging order books, so the Minister should stick to his word and guarantee these vessels will be built in Canada.

CN Marine and the Tories must be taken to task. They pulled the same stunt under Joe Clark when several Swedish-built ferries were imported into Canada rather than being built here. This Crown corporation has a duty to seek Canadian-made vessels and not slip foreign vessels in through the back door. The Government must make good on its commitment to the Canadian shipbuilding industry, and the promises the Tories mouthed during the last federal election.

POLITICAL PARTIES

WORLD WAR II—CCF PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, during the past 10 days this House has heard much about the liberation of the concentration camps and the termination of the European war. It is interesting to listen to the pious statements of the NDP. However, historical accuracy demands that the true record be stated.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell and Mr. J. S. Woodsworth both spoke against the 1939 declaration of war. Mr. Woodsworth was the leader of the CCF Party, the Co-Operative Commonwealth Federation, predecessor of the NDP. His associate, Mr. Coldwell, would have supported the declaration of war if Canada's assistance was limited to economic aid only.

When one listens to the NDP today, one feels that they were leading the fight against fascism and oppression. But the record shows that they did not want to fight; they wanted to allow Hitler to ravage Europe. That, Sir, is the hypocrisy of the NDP.

Mr. Skelly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, what rubbish! Have that man sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic.

Mr. Domm: History hurts.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CREATION OF NUCLEAR WASTE DUMP IN VERMONT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, last week, several Quebec residents of the Stanstead and Sherbrooke area went to West Charleston, in Northern Vermont, to advise the American Energy Department representative that they do not want nuclear waste to be buried in their region.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is that those responsible for the American project cannot guarantee that there will be no danger for the neighbouring population. They have tried to calm down the public by telling them that the project will not begin before the year 2002. However, as early as next November, the number of possible sites will have been reduced from 236 to about 15. In 1991, the selection will be made from a short list of three sites and the President of the United States will make the final recommendation. The governor of the state selected will have a right of veto which may only be overruled by a majority vote in both Houses of the American Congress.

Mr. Speaker, we of the Liberal Party ask the Government to follow closely all the steps taken by the American Government to locate a nuclear dump in Vermont. The Canadian Government must oppose any project likely to threaten the life of Canadians in this and future generations.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PRESENCE OF SNOWBIRDS AT LONDON, ONT. AIR SHOW

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, the London, Ontario, International Air Show, held each June, is one of Canada's biggest air shows. It brings together displays and aircraft from all over the world, and especially from Canada. It serves as a showcase for skill and science in the air.

For many years the Canadian Armed Forces crack air touring team, the Snowbirds, have been one of the major features of this show, impressing everyone with their skill and precision. There have been concerns that they might not fly at this year's show, and I want to thank the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) for his assistance in assuring that they will be flying. This is great news for all of us in southwestern Ontario, and a symbol of our Government's commitment to the Air Command and to the London Air Show.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ANTICIPATED SETTLEMENT OF EATON'S STRIKE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak about the tentative agreement between Eaton's workers, their union, and the company. Many of the workers in that company are middle-aged women who are underpaid, who receive unfair benefit packages, and who face retirement with inadequate pensions.

I think this House, regardless of political affiliation, should congratulate the workers at Eaton's stores for finally obtaining a chance to have a say in their own future so they can ensure that the middle-aged workers and part-time workers of Eaton's will not have to face the problems they have faced when dealing with a family run firm which has shown absolutely no concern for the future and livelihood of its own employees.

NATIVE PEOPLES

USE MADE OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the recently leaked document, so called, dealing with native programs is being treated as gospel by our communications networks in the Northwest Territories. I find it disturbing that the opposition Parties would use the native people to try to undermine growing understanding and co-operation with the present Government, thereby creating an indirect form of racial tension.

Having recently returned from South America and a convention on trade in endangered species, I have seen how pampered we native people, indeed all Canadians, are by our Government. This attempt to exploit the ignorance and gullability of some people is, to me, repulsive, and something which was rejected by the Canadian people last September.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Suluk: Coming from a region of Canada where the majority of the population is supported by government programs and services, and listening to accusations based on leaked documents alleging cut-backs in services to native people, is like telling your children that you are cutting off their candy supply. In the end, it causes tooth decay. This is what too much government has done, not only to native people but to many Canadians who make a living by biting the hand that feeds them.

• (1410)

I urge all native people in Canada to change with the times; ignore figments of radical reporters' imaginations and opposition disruptive tactics, and work with us instead to tackle problems plaguing native communities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL DEVELOPMENT BANK DANGER OF DISSOLUTION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): For the past week, Mr. Speaker, various Quebec newspapers have been reporting the Quebec people's concern about the possible dissolution of the Federal Development Bank. The government would have a hard time justifying the dismantling of the Bank. As of March 31, the Federal Development Bank had granted some $85.3 million to 4,571 customers.

Moreover, the Bank will be holding a series of six seminars between April 30 and June 4. These seminars, which are intended for operators of small- and medium-size businesses, are very practical in nature and deal with business administration, personnel hiring and tax issues. As Jean-Louis Roy was commenting in the April 22, 1985 issue of Le Devoir daily, and I quote:

> Those who favour the dissolution pure and simple of the Federal Development Bank will have to establish clearly the connection between this dissolution and the economic objectives of the Mulroney government. They will have to provide alternative solutions to small- and medium-size businesses which, for whatever reason, cannot secure financing from the private sector, and make sure that they are not left high and dry, doomed to stagnation and extinction, and forced ultimately to lay off their personnel.

PENSIONS

PLIGHT OF ELDERLY SURVIVOR OF HALIFAX EXPLOSION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, our Canadian society and Parliament will be judged by how we treat those in need who deserve assistance. I want to take you back to 1917 when there occurred in the City of Halifax a gigantic explosion which caused the deaths of some 2,000 people and injured 9,000.

The world responded by creating a relief fund, which was then used to assist victims of the Halifax explosion. But shortly thereafter, in 1920, a young lady was asked to sign over her rights to relief for the gigantic sum of $400. The Halifax Relief Commission then went on to provide thousands of dollars worth of housing assistance and other kinds of assistance to victims of the Halifax explosion.

Today, that lady, Mrs. Bertha Robar, lies in a nursing home bereft of all government assistance. She is 97 years old, and was partially blinded in the Halifax explosion. Our government officers in the Canada Pension Commission will not move to help her. If that isn't a deserving case, I don't know what is. So I enlist the assistance of all Members of the House of Commons to come to the aid of Bertha Robar and insist that the Canada Pension Commission seek changes in the law that will allow such a person to be helped, notwithstanding that she signed over her rights as a young lady in 1920. If we can't solve a case like that, we can't solve any cases.

AIR CANADA

ISSUANCE OF FREE FLIGHT PASSES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada's ticket agents are currently walking picket lines as the airline is attempting to replace full-time workers with part-time help.

The airline is claiming that it must destroy people's lives as a cost cutting measure, yet at the same time that Air Canada is crying poor it is giving out free first class airline passes to any part of the world where Air Canada flies, to failed Liberal hacks and flacks and party bag persons appointed by the previous Liberal Government.

This Government has reached new heights in patronage and it has given new meaning to severance pay arrangements when free air flights are also included when these hacks are booted out. The Government has failed to clip the wings of the high flyers on the Air Canada board of directors, and has instead chosen not to ruffle a few feathers. I urge the Government to suspend the free passes, and instead give these hacks free "Rat Pack" T shirts.

THE ECONOMY

WAYS FOR GOVERNMENT TO REALIZE ECONOMIES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister refused to reveal the recommendations made by his task forces. In fact, he himself invited me to submit our own ideas and suggestions on how the Government could save money. Well we have lots, Mr. Speaker, and it will be a pleasure to submit them.

[English]

Since he has invited these suggestions, why does the Deputy Prime Minister not arrest the haemorrhage of hard earned taxpayers' dollars in Ministers' offices; $3 million to $4 million on the Chiefs of Staffs which have been put in place; $2 million to $3 million on the Prime Minister's office; millions of dollars in patronage, and millions and millions on ministerial jet and Challenger air travel. These aircraft are plying the skies not only of Canada but of the entire world.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Johnston: Today there is an expensive investigation by the RCMP into a leaked secret documents which the Deputy Prime Minister himself could not recognize yesterday as even existing. If the Government spends this kind of money on non-existent documents, what will it spend on real documents?

Will the Deputy Prime Minister use his legal and moral authority to arrest this haemorrhage, to rein in his colleagues, and stop this shameful squandering of millions and millions of taxpayers' dollars?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, indeed we do intend to replace with moral judgment that area which was left in a total vacuum by the previous administration.

The $3 million to $4 million that he mentioned with respect to ministerial staffs—I can recall the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry having reached that amount almost entirely by himself in one Minister's office.

With respect to the use of jet aircraft, that which had been totally out of control is being brought under control. At least it will be our sincere endeavour not to have the same situation arise as did under the previous administration when three Ministers arrived in three separate aircraft, within one hour of each other, in the city of Winnipeg.

With regard to the matter of routine inquiries that are made with respect to documents, the Hon. Member, who is a former Minister, knows that that process is routine. When he speaks of a specific document, I still have been unable to decipher the mish-mash that was passed to me yesterday, the quality of the reproduction of which—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could questions and answers now become shorter, please?

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

AIR TRAVEL BY MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the skies were never as dark with JetStars and Challengers as they are today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: Even grounding le courant d'air national, the Minister of Communications, would save taxpayers hundred of thousands of dollars.

Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister will not ask the Minister of Communications to explain that waste—

[Translation]

—I would like to ask him myself. The Minister of Communications, who, for instance, roundly criticized the National Arts Centre for buying flowers for performers, a custom that is much appreciated . . . In fact, the Minister took a JetStar or Challenger to I do not know where, and that cost us $60,000. So how does he intend to justify this waste of taxpayers' money?

Some Hon. Members: Fly, fly away!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure what everybody had for lunch today.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this morning I had occasion to say, in another debate, that the party opposite is a party that has no memory of the past and no hope for the future. I think the same comment is appropriate at this point, since their references are irrelevant to the story, which I could tell when circumstances permit. Now seriously, on January 24 of this year, Mr. Speaker, the vice-president of Northern Telecom asked the Canadian Government, through the Department of Communications for which I am responsible, to accompany them on a trip to promote Canadian trade and industrial interests, which meant travelling to Algeria and Saudi Arabia. The projects in these countries included an Algerian request to the CBC for an investment—

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the interest of the Minister but his answer is now becoming a Statement on Motions.

Does the Hon. Member have a short supplementary question?

[Translation]

PROGRAM REVIEW TASK FORCE REPORTS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the answer was totally irrelevant to the question. But in any case, yesterday I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Masse: You do not want an answer!

[English]

Mr. Johnston: He said in his speech, which I have read three times: "Canadians have a right to know that these programs are administered to the satisfaction of the new Government".

In the name of open government and accountability, those things in which the Deputy Prime Minister believes, are Canadians entitled to know what are in those recommendations? Are they not entitled to know, unless of course the recommendations are so extreme that national security is at stake, which is suggested by the RCMP investigation into the non-existent document of yesterday?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, with respect to information in the form of advice to Cabinet, the Hon. Member, who is a former Minister, knows the answer to that question.

With respect to a definition of the programs themselves, there is a very excellent publication put out by the Department over which my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, has jurisdiction, listing all of the government programs that are available. I am sure if the Hon. member would take the time to read it, he would find it extremely interesting.

In addition to that, there is a further publication put out by FBDB which lists all of the programs that are available to small businesses and others in the country. If the Hon. Member wished to seek the information, all he has to do is a little more reading. If he wants an index, I would be very happy to supply it to him.

NATIVE PEOPLES

DISCLOSURE OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT—RCMP INVESTIGATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the important matter of openness and frankness in government. The Party now in government promised change, if elected, and to put an end to the old cover-up practices of the previous Liberal administration.

For the past three days we have been trying to get the Government to admit, specifically the Minister to whom I am putting this question, that his Department was responsible for a certain document. Considering that for the past two days, including, during that period, the submission of the document to the Minister himself, the Government has done nothing but evade the truth, and considering that now the RCMP has begun an official investigation into the documents in two Ministers' offices at least, will the Deputy Prime Minister come clean and acknowledge that the document in question was produced by his Department, and acknowledge that he himself is certainly responsible for it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and his colleagues are past masters at the art of evading the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps he has expertise in that. They have another skill as well, that is, total distortion of the facts in any given instance and in any given case.

With respect to what he calls "the document", I presume the Hon. Member means the document which the Hon. Member for Skeena brought across here yesterday.

Mr. Orlikow: Right.

Mr. Parry: Everyone else has one.

Mr. Nielsen: I still have been unable to decipher it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Get the original.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member would have a look at the quality of reproduction, he would agree that it is indecipherable.

As to identifying that document, I am unable to do that for him.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is why you have the RCMP. Call in the boys.

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member mentions an investigation. As I responded to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount a moment ago, if there have been any documents that have found their way into unauthorized channels, it is a matter of a routine inquiry that follows any such event—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the Deputy Prime Minister to complete his answer under Motions.

IDENTIFICATION OF DOCUMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister once again is evading the truth. I say to the Deputy Prime Minister that the Conservatives promised change. It is about time they delivered it. It is about time they delivered some openness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Deputy Prime Minister said yesterday, and I will quote with reference to the document that was given to him by my colleague, that he would "have to take the opportunity to examine it". Does the Deputy Prime Minister seriously want the people of Canada to believe that in the interval between yesterday and today he was unable to read that document, and unable to verify whether or not it was produced by his Department?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Yes, indeed, I do expect the people of Canada to believe that, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —notwithstanding the fact that I get rid of routine business in my office and other business which still keeps me here until the late hours of the evening. I can tell the Hon. Member, despite the fact that I arrived here at eight o'clock this morning, my entire morning was taken up with a Cabinet meeting and other urgent matters of business. I have not yet had an opportunity of examining in detail the document which was supplied to me yesterday. If the Hon. Member cannot understand that, he cannot understand a damn thing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister expects the opposition Parties on this side of the House to believe that, he would also expect the people of Canada to believe that the moon is made of green cheese. That is how much credibility the Minister has with that answer.

REASON FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister another question. Considering he has just said that a document that in a fundamental way really cuts into the rights of the native people of Canada, that says it has been endorsed by eleven Departments within the Government, has not been investigated by him, all I can say to the Deputy Prime Minister is that he has been ignoring his responsibilities—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question, please?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister has not taken the trouble, so he tells us, to examine the document himself, why was an investigation ordered by the RCMP into this document if there is no such document missing from the Minister's office?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I guess the Hon. Member was not listening, Mr. Speaker. He mentioned blue cheese and the moon. It is not the moon that is made of blue cheese; it is his mind.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: If he cannot understand, and he has been around here long enough to understand that it is a matter of routine procedure—

Mr. Crosbie: His mind is curdled.

Mr. Nielsen: —if any document gets into improper hands—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, there is a document?

Mr. Nielsen: The Member says "Oh, there is a document". I am not saying that at all.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: When any document—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I am trying to explain to the dense Leader of the New Democratic Party that it has been procedure around this place for years that when any document finds its way into unauthorized hands or improper channels, routine inquiries are made in every instance.

THE SENATE

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WISHES TO PROCEED WITH RAPID CHANGES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

Having introduced his motion aimed at turning the Senate into a reading club, the Minister of Justice told the media that the Government would push ahead with Senate constitutional reform before launching discussions with Quebec with a view to having the province sign the 1982 Constitutional Agreement.

Mr. Speaker, that is an insult to Quebecers whose Government has publicly indicated it intends to unveil, before the end of May, its proposals designed to straighten out its constitutional position within the Canadian Confederation.

Here is my question. Considering that job creation is the first concern of all Canadians, what emergency prompts the Government to proceed so quickly with changes which strike at the root of Canadian institutions, even before negotiations have begun with Quebec to set its constitutional status straight?

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the complaint from the Province of Quebec is the insult which they suffered from our Liberal predecessors in 1982 when the Constitution was adopted. There is no complaint from the Province of Quebec with respect to any of our constitutional discussions. They have engaged themselves in discussions on aboriginal matters. I believe them to be sympathetic to our position on the Senate resolution. They are not for an unelected group of Liberal hacks in any other legislative body being in a position to checkmate the elected House of Commons.

The Government of Quebec has no sympathy with the hon. gentleman's position, but it does not wish to take part in the constitutional amendments because of the way it was treated by the Liberal administration of Mr. Trudeau, whom the hon. gentleman also represents today.

[Translation]

POSITION OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I put that question to the Minister of Justice knowing full well the answer he was going to give me. It is too easy. The one thing which the Minister of Justice forgets is that, last January, the Quebec Government made a complete about-face and now wants to set aside its separatist option and sign the Constitutional Agreement. I want to know whether the Minister of Justice shares the view of his colleagues, Senators Asselin and Flynn, who claim that the proposed reform is quite superficial, and that no negotiations or discussions should take place before the Quebec constitutional problem has been settled.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I might remind the hon. gentleman that the constitutional resolution in 1982 was adopted unanimously by the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The negotiations were conducted by the hon. gentleman's Party, which apparently trampled on the rights of the people of Quebec, according to the Parti Québécois Government. With respect to this resolution, because of the fact that the Senate majority wilfully, and with no reason whatsoever, caused a long delay in a borrowing authority Bill, made necessary by their profligate ways when they were in government last year, before we took over, costing the people of Canada $15 million, we have to meet the issue now. We cannot wait any longer to deal with this question of senatorial Liberal obstruction.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXECUTIVES OFFERED EARLY RETIREMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns the early retirement incentives which the Minister is offering to senior managers and executives in the Public Service. Of the 400 retirements which the Minister is seeking, only 200 positions will be filled. The other 200 will disappear. Does the Minister have quotas for these new appointments—so many from the Public Service and so many from outside? Is this program another Tory job-creation program for Tory sisters, brothers, aunts and uncles—relatives? Is it the Archie Bunker program All in the Family?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the question of the Hon. Member, amazed that it would come from someone who has been around the House for so long. It accuses the Public Service Commission, the agency of Parliament which is responsible for staffing, of becoming a patronage institution. No, Sir. The jobs which will be filled will be filled according to the normal policies of the Public Service Commission, not by the Government as the Hon. Member would like all Canadians to believe. This is a management initiative which will follow the law.

REQUEST THAT OFFER BE EXTENDED TO OTHER GROUPS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister just told us that there will be no Governor in Council appointments. I do not believe that.

[Translation]

The Minister is holding out a carrot of $25 million to senior officials in the Public Service. Is he prepared to extend the same program to public servants in the administrative support and professional categories, so that these people will have a chance to take early retirement, or are they going to have to wait until May 23 when the Minister wields "the big stick" and eliminates their jobs.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to answer the Hon. Member's hypothetical questions. But I do want to respond to the statement he made in his preamble. Just so everyone . . . Why don't you listen? You might learn something . . . The program applies to 747 members of the senior management group and to 26 employees appointed by order in council. For those Hon. Members who were not aware of the fact, deputy ministers are appointed by order in council and will continue to be appointed by order in council. I can inform the House that the program is a management program, that it is fair and that it was introduced to open up new horizons to many of our younger employees in the Public Service.

NATIVE PEOPLES

PREPARATION OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns his memorandum to Cabinet, which on page 9 indicates:

> The analysis was carried out by a mixed study team, with input from program managers, federal economic development co-ordinators, deputy heads, and the Private Sector Advisory Committee to the Task Force. Additional input came from limited consultations with selected client groups and with senior deputies in selected provincial Governments.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister expecting the public and the House to believe that this document was prepared with the involvement of those officials and not a single member of Cabinet?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, to which document is the Hon. Member referring?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Let me explain the process. As the Hon. Member for Skeena goes at it, and as his Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, goes at it, I would urge them to harken—

Mr. Broadbent: Tell the truth.

Mr. Nielsen: I will tell the truth. I always tell the truth, and I cannot say the same for that Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The inference behind that sort of a heckle, which was sufficiently loud to be heard by Hansard, is repugnant and repulsive to me.

Mr. Broadbent: Touching.

Mr. Nielsen: He would do better, as he plays his imaginary violin, to listen to the words of the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq who put his finger directly on the motivation and the purpose of this kind of question by those Hon. Members.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Referring again to page 9, it indicates: "The purpose of this Memorandum is to ask Ministers to approve recommendations". There is one Minister in the House who has in fact already approved the recommendations, and that is the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like him to rise because he is quoted in the document and is known around the House as being an honourable person. In part the document reads:

> —Mr. Epp has concerns about the means supported to control costs of non-insured medical benefits.

The Minister has dealt with it. Will he rise in the House and tell Hon. Members, members of the native community, and Canadians generally, whether he has seen this document and whether he has been involved in it? Yes or no.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member that Cabinet documents which come to me are just that; they are confidential to me as a Cabinet Minister. Until they are made public, that is how they stay.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES CONCERNING SUPPOSED ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada.

We have learned today that the RCMP has prosecuted and laid charges against an immigrant who had taken advantage of the amnesty made available to illegal immigrants under a program in effect for two years. Now, there is a contradiction between the statement made by the RCMP that it has acted upon the request of the Immigration officials and the statement made by an official of the Department of Employment and Immigration who assures us that the RCMP has acted against the instructions and recommendations of his department. Now could the Solicitor General explain how such a blunder could be made and what orders are given to those officers investigating illegal immigration cases?

● (1440)

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my colleagues that if this is the case of which I believe she is speaking, the charges will be withdrawn. The information did not emanate from a program that would be affected by the amnesty. I believe my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, may wish to elaborate.

REQUEST THAT HARASSMENT OF IMMIGRANTS GRANTED AMNESTY BE STOPPED IMMEDIATELY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Speaker.

I think that the situation reported in the newspapers this morning shows that the Progressive Conservative government has betrayed the immigrants who have filed in good faith their applications under the amnesty program. Can the minister assure us that the harassment and proceedings against amnestied immigrants will immediately come to an end?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is totally wrong in her information, as she so often is. I would like to inform the House that the individual in question, Mrs. Ellis, had her case come before the illegal migrants program during the time the Liberal Government was in office. It was this Government that granted amnesty to Mrs. Ellis. I can also assure the Hon. Member that there was no information that was passed from the illegal migrant program to the RCMP. That is the policy of this Government.

NATIVE PEOPLE

ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT—RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Earlier in the Question Period, with regard to the document that we provided to the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday, he stated that it is routine when a document falls into the wrong hands for the RCMP to launch an investigation.

Mr. Nielsen: That's not what I said.

Mr. Deans: Whether he used those exact words or not, that certainly was the intent of what he said. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether in fact the RCMP would launch an investigation into a leaked document, attempting to find the source of the leak, without first determining whether or not that was a Cabinet document.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that would be a first step. The hon. gentleman, when he puts this question to me, should not do me the disservice of assuming what I said is what he intended I should say. What I said, and I said it three or four times already, was that it is a matter of routine inquiry whenever any document finds its way into unauthorized hands or finds its way out of the system. That is routine. It has been going on around this place ever since I have been here, which has been a few years.

ORIGIN OF DOCUMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to try to misquote the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it reasonable now to conclude that the document that the RCMP are investigating, with regard to where the document came from and how it got into the hands of people in this Party and others, is in fact a document that belonged to the Government of Canada and that was in fact a Cabinet document? If the answer is no, why then are they investigating?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is the hon. gentleman and his colleagues who have been telling the House that the RCMP is investigating.

Mr. Broadbent: The RCMP announced it.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, if the RCMP have announced it, I have not heard that announcement.

Mr. Broadbent: We did.

An Hon. Member: Where have you been?

Mr. Nielsen: I am asked where I have been. I say, for the fifth or sixth time, that I would expect the RCMP to make an inquiry. It is a routine inquiry with respect to any document that finds its way into unauthorized hands or outside of normal channels.

THE AUDITOR GENERAL

ALLEGED HIRING OF TWO FORMER LIBERAL MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. It was reported yesterday in La Presse that the Auditor General of Canada had hired Mr. Pierre Deniger and Mr. John Evans to make a study of the format for submitting Government financial statements. Those are two former Liberal MPs who were defeated in the last election. Can the Minister give us some information on such an incredible story, can he provide further details?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is somewhat incredible in my view. To continue in English, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

—I am surprised at this revelation. I know nothing of this. The Auditor General, of course, should be able to carry on an independent operation. He should not only be independent, but be perceived to be independent. I find it passing strange that these people would be employed. I will inquire of the Auditor General and report back to the House at the earliest opportunity.

MARINE TRANSPORT

CN MARINE—CANCELLATION OF SERVICES TO NEWFOUNDLAND COMMUNITIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely incredible to witness the spectacle of the Deputy Prime Minister wasting the taxpayers' money by having the RCMP investigate his staff.

Some Hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know how much louder I can say order. I do not know what has happened to the House today. It seems appropriate that I at least, if nobody else wants to, should be able to hear both the question and the answer. Question?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, my constituents did not send me here to be a meek and mild mouse like the back-benchers on the government side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: The Government is engaged in a policy that deliberately and soberly seeks to destroy a way of life that is unique and distinctive in this country. My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that, effective May 1, CN Marine has cancelled passenger and freight service to five isolated communities on my provinces' south coast, Hermitage, English Harbour West, Belleoram, Pool's Cove, and English Harbour East. Did CN make those cutbacks, that cancellation of passenger service and freight service to those five isolated communities, with his approval?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is true that there has been some reduction in services in the area to which the Hon. Member has referred. On examination, and I am sure the Hon. Member will want me to point this out, some of these points are served by provincial ferry services. In fact some 90 per cent of the traffic in some cases is handled by provincial ferries. In other cases these services can be provided by highway. I also want to inform the Hon. Member that there is a re-examination of some of the services, particularly the one respecting Hermitage. That is under review at the present time.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer indicates that he is beginning to understand the very severe hardship that these cut-backs are imposing on these communities. He knows that the so-called road service to those communities is impassable in winter, and nearly impassable in summer under the best of circumstances. He knows that the provincial Government cannot be counted upon. In the name of avoiding a forced resettlement out of those communities and a forced abandonment of a way of life that is unique in this country, will the Minister reconsider and instruct CN Marine to restore passenger and freight service to the people who live in those isolated communities on Newfoundland's south coast? I ask him that in good faith.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will not ignore some of the facts that I presented in response to his earlier question. I think they are accurate. On the second part of the question, I will take his question as a representation. As I have indicated, there is reconsideration of the service to Hermitage. We are taking a second look at it. However, I do not want to create any false expectations, because the fact is that most of those areas are well and adequately serviced by provincial service.

Mr. Tobin: No way. We won't be quiet until you restore the service.

Mr. Mazankowski: Furthermore, this Government just signed an ERDA highway subagreement which will do very much to improve the highway service within the Province of Newfoundland.

DIVORCE

PROPOSED CHANGE IN WAITING PERIOD

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice concerning the proposed changes in divorce legislation. I wholeheartedly endorse many of the excellent proposals, such as stronger enforcement of support and custody orders. My question, however, concerns the proposal to reduce the waiting period when there is a marriage breakdown from three years to one year. Would the Minister consider meeting with interested groups about this one major area of concern so that other alternatives could be examined?

● (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, if the House adopts the legislation proposed at second reading, it will be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice. I know anyone interested in this subject will be able to make their views known there.

The principle of the legislation is not to make divorce any easier but to make it easier for the parties involved, and particularly their children, who are innocent parties, to bear the consequences of marriages which have already broken down irretrievably, and to allow them to sever their legal relationship with as little stress and acrimony as possible. I think that is a very worthy objective for the legislation.

NATIVE PEOPLES

"OPERATION BUFFALO JUMP" INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The code name used in the report prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister's task force was "Operation Buffalo Jump of the 1980s". Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware of the meaning of this term and its symbolism? Could he tell the House whether or not he thinks that this term is an appropriate one for a paper describing government policy for native people in 1985?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there are no code names used in any of the work that I and my ministerial colleagues are undertaking regarding program review. Any code names are the product of the rather overactive imaginations of the members of the Party opposite.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is he denying categorically that the term "Operation Buffalo Jump of the 1980s" was used in the report? I would like to read the following and ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether or not he would confirm it.

The analysis was carried out by a mixed study team, with input from program managers, federal economic development co-ordinators, deputy heads, and the Private Sector Advisory Committee to the Task Force. Additional input came from limited—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. The Hon. Member has asked his question. I simply cannot allow him to read into the record a great deal more material. The Hon. Member has asked his question.

Mr. Manly: May I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether or not he will categorically deny that that phrase was used?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that sounds suspiciously familiar. I believe it was included in the terms of reference that were made public preceded by an over-view to the terms of reference which were given to the study team which we asked to undertake the work. Again, the Hon. Member is reading from a document, a copy of which he might wish to provide to me so that I could make the same kind of comparison in which I said I would engage, in my response to the question put by the Hon. Member for Skeena yesterday.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

WILDCAT STRIKE AT OTTAWA TERMINAL

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will try not to be too meek or mild, and I will not shout either. My question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue who is responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. As we all know too well, the country is continually plagued by postal disruptions. Last Friday's wildcat strike at the Alta Vista postal terminal was no exception. Is the Minister prepared to investigate what disciplinary action may be taken against those who were involved in the strike?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I too will try not to be too meek or mild, nor will I shout. I can indicate to the Hon. Member that the people who did not report for work at the Atla Vista plant will be docked a day's pay for not appearing. In addition to that, I can certainly indicate that from the Government's point of view all parties in the Post Office, both labour and management, have a responsibility to the people of Canada to provide a service. The Government is deeply disappointed whenever that service is not provided.

MARINE TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NOVA SCOTIA AND MAINE

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the reduction in service by the Bluenose ferry from Yarmouth to Bar Harbour. As the Minister is well aware, this reduction in service impacts negatively on the economy of Nova Scotia, so much so that the Premier has used the figure of $30 million. Could the Minister indicate to the House whether or not he has done a cost benefit study and, if so, will he be tabling that study before the Standing Committee?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yes, there has been an assessment done by a party commissioned by Transport Canada. It certainly does not bear out the figure to which my hon. friend alluded. I should also inform the House that I met with the Premier of Nova Scotia this morning to discuss this very important issue, and I am quite confident that there will be a satisfactory conclusion brought about with respect to the future of the Bluenose ferry. The Premier of Halifax—of Nova Scotia—

Mr. Tobin: You got it right the first time.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Premier of Nova Scotia has indicated that together, in the spirit of federal-provincial co-operation, we will be able to ensure that adequate service will be maintained.

IMPACT OF SERVICE REDUCTION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister of Transport that this reduction in winter ferry service will be harmful to fish processors, textile manufacturers, and Christmas tree shippers. Is it fair that the citizens of that part of the country must sustain further economic hardship when the Government has piled in excess of $1.3 billion on the multinational oil companies?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed aware of the economic impact and that is why we are taking all these matters into consideration. The fact of the matter still remains that we should not be precluded from trying to be cost efficient and cutting out waste in order to provide a sustainable, viable, and economic service. That is precisely what we are determined to do.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Earlier today the RCMP announced that they are carrying out an investigation into the ways and means of a document being routed into unauthorized hands. I would simply ask the Solicitor General who requested that this investigation take place.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I intend to follow the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition last November when he reminded me that it was a tradition in this House not to comment on details of investigations unless and until changes are laid.

INQUIRY OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Did the Deputy Prime Minister request that this investigation take place?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the same answer pertains as that which has already been given. I do not think that it would be in the public interest to be announcing to the House of Commons every single investigation that is undertaken. If results of any investigation—

Mr. Broadbent: You're hiding.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not hiding anything. It is simply common practice in this place to make any such announcements if and when charges have been laid as a result of any investigations.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING BY WEST GERMAN FLEET

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Monday, May 6, the Prime Minister advised the House that he took a very strong position in discussions with an EEC member country concerning blatant overfishing under the Canada-EEC fishing agreement, on the East Coast of Canada. In view of the fact that this overfishing is still going on and that these boats were still there as of yesterday, I would like the Secretary of State for External Affairs to tell the House what strong words were used, and what strong position was taken that had such little effect.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. gentleman will not mind me answering his question as the Acting Minister of Fisheries. I am delighted that, after eight years, that hon. gentleman is finally speaking up and asking questions in the House of Commons about fishery matters in Newfoundland. I congratulate him on his new-found awakening.

The Minister of Fisheries met yesterday with Mr. Kiechle, who is the Minister of Fisheries for the Federal Republic of Germany, and underlined to him the very serious way in which Canada takes the overfishing that occurred on the nose of the bank. Unfortunately, the nose of the bank is not within the Canadian 200-mile economic zone. So, we have no legal powers to act on the nose of the bank. But we have left no doubt in the minds of the German authorities that this kind of action, if continued, will have serious consequences with respect to fishing inside the Canadian zone. I would also tell the Member that under—

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FRENCH AND BRITISH LICENCES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that, before the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans left to meet with the EEC, he issued another licence, this time to the French fleet. They started fishing today in the same zone, and under the same quota. The U.K. has applied for a licence and it has been told that a licence will be granted. Where is the strong position which this Government is taking? Or does it have a magic formula to multiply the fishes, something which has not been done in 2,000 years?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as a fellow Newfoundlander I am proud of that dramatic performance. Erle Stanley Gardner would have been proud of you, lad.

The United Kingdom and France have quotas remaining which total 1,530 tonnes. The United Kingdom is not Germany. France is not Germany, unless something has happened lately and they have amalgamated. Therefore, we will have to deal with the Federal Republic of Germany and hold it responsible for its actions.

When it comes to negotiating European quotas, we will certainly keep that in mind.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader the customary question about the business which he is proposing for the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, I have been attempting to sit down and identify what items of business we can make progress on. There have been certain discussions and, I understand, undertakings with respect to progress. We were a bit disappointed yesterday that we did not get as far as I had been led to believe. I think we will continue with those discussions. There are still some matters which I must discuss with my colleagues.

We have a requirement to deal with a number of Allotted Days to give the opposition Parties an opportunity to consider and put forward resolutions which may be on their collective minds. For the present time, and until further notice, I would designate Monday as an Allotted Day. I will bring the business for the rest of the week to the attention of the House at the earliest possible date, once we have been able to obtain a clear understanding of our ability to make progress.

PETITIONS

SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this point to table a petition that is very important to all Canadians. It is signed by a very important group, the Executive Committee of the Canadian Action Committee on the Status of Women.

Mr. Speaker, all the members of that group representing all Provinces of Canada, all regions and all walks of life are urging the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who is in this House to extend the spouse's allowance benefit to all persons living alone whether single or separated.

AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by the students of Laval University. This petition deals with the first part of the auditor General Act, Chapter 34: the Auditor General has the right to audit all the public accounts of the Government.

SUPPORT FOR CLOTHING FOR HANDICAPPED ORGANIZATION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition which was signed by some 7,000 Canadians, many of them constitutents of the riding of Nepean-Carleton, encouraging Government support for On the Rise Association Inc., an organization which designs and manufactures clothing for handicapped and physically disabled persons.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from the great riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, from the citizens of Clarence Creek, Ontario. The petition was signed by 77 people—

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by the electors from the village of Casselman. It is signed by 61 residents of the village of Casselman who also protest against the discriminatory provisions of Bill C-26 as imposed by the government.

Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 33 residents of the senior citizens club, Le Réveil, of Fournier, Ontario; those people also express their disagreement with the discriminatory provisions of Bill C-26.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition which was signed by 15 residents of Lefaivre, Ontario. They, as well, are expressing their extreme displeasure with the discriminatory provisions of Bill C-26.

Petitions

[English]

I also have a petition which was signed by 52 people from the great village of Cumberland, in the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. These people, as well, would like to express their displeasure with the discriminatory provisions of Bill C-26.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the Hon. Member now knows the tradition and I suggest that if he has any other petitions on the same matter he may want to table them. He may, however, have other petitions which he wishes to present on different subjects.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, all the petitions come from different villages; therefore, I will present the others some other day because they are not all the same and, as I said, they are clearly indicated and come from different communities; it is not the same petition. However, if you think that no more than a certain number of petitions should be presented every day, I reserve the right to present the others another day.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows full well that he has the right to stand in the House and say that he has petitions from a number of counties, and simply read the names of the counties, and table the petitions. That is one way of presenting them.

PROPOSED CANCELLATION OF CBC PROGRAM

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition on behalf of over 200 concerned parents, students and teachers of Rothwell/Osnabruck School, Ingleside, Ontario. The petitioners are expressing their regret over the proposed CBC cancellation of the valuable program Reach for the Top, which has become an example of educational excellence for the participants, the school body and the entire community.

Those people too would like to see the provisions of Bill C-26 extended particularly to those people between the ages of 60 and 64 who are single, separated or divorced.

I have a second petition from the riding of Drummond, signed by some 40 people who draw my attention to the fact that it is totally unfair and definitely unjustified to exclude single, separated and divorced people between the ages of 60 and 64 from the provisions of Bill C-26, and who would like to benefit from those provisions.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition signed by hundreds of individuals in the Windsor and Toronto area, in which they protest the severance pay changes which will affect their collection of unemployment insurance benefits. The petition calls upon this House to make sure that all laid off employees who receive severance pay will be able to keep their severance pay and also collect their unemployment insurance benefits without the one affecting the other.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition signed by residents of Ottawa Centre dealing with the effects of the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance contributions which will treat returned pension contributions as income for the purpose of determining eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits. The petitioners point out the hardship this would cause and request that this action be reconsidered.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which concerns Bill C-26. It is also signed by residents of Ottawa who would like to see the extension of spouse's allowance to all single persons in need. They point out that it is discriminatory to limit it to widowed people and that there are many people between the age of 60 years and 64 years who are also in need of similar provisions.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition signed by Ottawa residents which concerns the recent administrative changes which treat severance pay as income for the purpose of determining eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits. The petitioners point out that this causes severe hardship, particularly in areas where laid off workers have no hope of finding work easily and they request that this decision be reconsidered.

THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POWERS OF SENATE

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions:

That:

Whereas the Prime Minister of Canada is committed to convening before the end of 1987 a constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces to consider proposals for the reform of the Senate;

And whereas it is expedient, at this time, that the powers of the Senate with respect to bills that are passed by the House of Commons be limited;

And whereas sections 38 and 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provide that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

Now therefore the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE
AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following sections:

"54.1 (1) Where a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons, is presented to the Senate at least thirty days before the end of the session but is not passed by the Senate without amendment within thirty days after it is presented, the bill shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

(2) There shall be endorsed on every money bill when it is presented to the Senate and when it is presented to the Governor General for assent the certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons signed by the Speaker that it is a money bill.

(3) A certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons given under subsection (2) shall be conclusive for all purposes, and shall not be questioned in any court of law.

(4) In this section and section 54.2, "money bill" means a public bill that, in the opinion of the Speaker of the House of Commons, contains only provisions dealing with the following:

(a) the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation;

(b) the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on the Consolidated Revenue Fund or on money provided by Parliament, or the variation or repeal of such charges;

(c) supply;

(d) the appropriation, receipt, custody or issue of public money;

(e) the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; or

(f) subordinate matters related to any of the matters set out in paragraphs (a) to (e).

54.2 (1) Where any bill, other than a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons, is presented to the Senate at least forty-five days before the end of the session but is not passed by the Senate within forty-five days after it is presented, the bill shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

(2) Where any bill, other than a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons and presented to the Senate, is passed with amendments by the Senate, and the House of Commons does not concur in the amendments within fifteen days after the bill is passed by the Senate, the bill, in the form in which it was presented to the Senate but with such amendments made by the Senate as are concurred in by the House of Commons, shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

54.3 (1) In every bill presented to the Governor General under section 54.1 or 54.2, the words of enactment shall be amended by striking out any reference to the Senate.

(2) Any alteration of a bill to give effect to this section shall be deemed not to be an amendment of the bill.

54.4 Any law made pursuant to section 54.1 or 54.2 shall be deemed, for the purposes of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada, except Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982, to have been made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons.

54.5 For greater certainty, nothing in sections 54.1 to 54.4 shall be construed as amending Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982.

54.6 Nothing in sections 54.1 to 54.4 diminishes or qualifies the rights and privileges of the House of Commons."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and section:

"XII.—REFERENCES

148. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

CITATION

3. This Amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, year of proclamation (Powers of Senate).

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section (2) of Standing Order 25, the Notice of Motion standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of Justice is transferred to, and ordered for consideration under, Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 235 will be answered today.

[Text]

GRANTS TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 235—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1984, did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make any grants to persons in New Brunswick and, if so, to whom and in what amounts?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not award grants to individuals but rather to consumer organizations at the beginning of a given fiscal year. For the period January 1, 1984 to January 24, 1985, which encompasses two fiscal years, grants were awarded to the following consumer organizations in New Brunswick:

Supply

1983-84	Comité d'action sociale, Projet de justice sociale, Brantville, N.B.	$3,000
	Oromocto Information Service Centre, Oromocto, N.B.	$4,000
	Family Enrichment and Counselling Services, Moncton, N.B.	$10,000
1984-85	Comité d'action sociale, Projet de justice sociale, Brantville, N.B.	$4,000
	Oromocto Information Service Centre, Oromocto, N.B.	$4,000

The UFFI Assistance Program make payments to home owners in respect of dwellings insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. For the period January 1, 1984 to January 24, 1985 a total of 2,535 home owners in New Brunswick received assistance payments. The average amount for an individual claim in this province is $4,939 and the total amount of assistance paid for the period in question is calculated to be $12,503,026.

Metric Commission Canada

Metric Commission Canada had no mandate to provide grants. However, under the Commission's Assistance Program—Worker's Metric Tools, contributions were made to 353 individuals in New Brunswick, for a total of $155,418.04, during the period January 1, 1984 to January 24, 1985.

[English]

Mr. Dick: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—CANADIAN ARTS COMMUNITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to support the Canadian arts community, specifically by,

(1) cutting funding to independent cultural agencies, leaving artists in poverty;

(2) compromising the arms-length principle in relations between Government and funded agencies; and

(3) increasingly bringing arts funding under direct ministerial control, and making partisan appointments to cultural agencies.

Mr. Speaker: I am given to understand there are eight minutes remaining in the question and comment period. I believe the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is replying at this point to a comment or question.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in the course of my short speech, I made reference to the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). I want to make it clear that nothing I said or intended to say should be taken as any criticism of the Minister of State for Youth. I mentioned her name because in the previous Parliament when you, Mr. Speaker, and myself were part of a sub-committee looking at the problem of the taxes of artists, writers and musicians, the present Minister of State for Youth was one of a delegation which appeared before us. I knew that before she became a Member of Parliament the Minister had worked in the artistic field. So what I was trying to point out was that she understood the problems of artists and writers.

The Minister of State for Youth suggested that not all of the funds available for arts and culture came through the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). That is true. She suggested that, for example, her Department was responsible for the funding of some artistic and cultural activities. I know that is true. And I say to the Minister that when we have all of the reports and have seen the final figures, if the allocations for arts and culture from all Departments and agencies actually equal the amount expended last year, plus the increase in the Gross National Product, I will be the first one to stand and congratulate the Government for meeting the pledges it made. But I do not believe that will happen and I think all of the figures we now have prove that that is not going to happen.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member was not here when the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) made his speech, but I was here and the Minister of Communications went into a tirade about socialism. He criticized the New Democratic Party and said that the NDP in government, or socialism, would lead to a loss of liberties.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the history of this Party as it affects civil liberties; for example, with regard to the Japanese. Could he comment on which Parties in this House stood up for the Japanese historically with respect to the War Measures Act? It was this Party which stood against the War Measures Act and a piece of legislation which, when activated, did great damage in the Province of Quebec, the province of the Minister of Communications. It was a piece of legislation which was used in an arbitrary fashion to harass people from all sectors of society. I would like to hear my colleague's comments with regard to the Minister's claim that our Party represents a loss of civil liberties.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with the charges of the Minister when I pointed out to him that Parties such as ours in Great Britain, Sweden, Norway, Holland, Belgium, Australia and New Zealand, are social democratic Parties, and they, like ourselves, belong to the Socialist International. Freedom is alive and well in all of those countries in which Parties such as ours are the Government or have been the Government.

• (1520)

It is easy now to wax eloquent about what happened to the Japanese in Canada during World War II. The fact is that it was a Member from Vancouver—I cannot remember the riding—Mr. Angus MacInnis, who, despite the fact he knew about the feelings in British Columbia against the Japanese, made it very clear that they were being mistreated, harassed and moved just because they were Japanese and their colour was different from that of the rest of us.

In so far as the War Measures Act is concerned, there are Members on the Government side who I am sure know better than I do that hundreds of people were arrested and incarcerated on the orders and by the direction of the then Liberal Prime Minister. They were not permitted to see a lawyer and not one of them was ever charged, let alone convicted, of having been disloyal to this country. We were the only ones who spoke up against that.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Early on he referred to the erection of Roy Thomson Hall in Toronto as an example of what the private sector can do. However, he looked upon that as a rare, even isolated example, and invited us to suggest others.

Taking him up on that invitation, I jotted down a few which are within walking distance of the Roy Thomson Hall, and which have been constructed either partially or wholly with private funds. For example, the O'Keefe Centre; the St. Lawrence Centre, which received public money but also contributions from a very large number of private donors; the Gardiner Ceramics Museum which recently opened in central Toronto; the Sigmund Samual Canadiana Museum and the Sigmund Samual Library. These are examples of what the private sector can do.

Again, we need to recoginze that, properly stimulated and encouraged, the private sector can be a source of much vitality in the arts community, as it has been in the past and can be in the future. Many of the institutions to which I refer represent a combination of public and private money, and surely that is demonstrated in the policies of the present Government. In spite of today's debate, which implies that there will be no money given by this Government to the arts community, massive contributions will be made. On top of that, surely it is right that we encourage much more participation in the development and encouragement of the arts by private donors.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great honour to follow the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in the debate on this motion. Although we share a table in the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, I have not yet had a chance to tell him that when I was growing up in Winnipeg in the 1950s he was my Member of Parliament. So that makes me either very young or him very old, I am not sure which.

The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) suggests that our Government is cutting funding to cultural agencies and leaving artists in poverty. That is based on the assumption that we may be throwing out the bath water and leaving the baby struggling to survive. Well, if one wanted to agree with that assumption, one would have to assume that the baby, the Canadian cultural community, is healthy in the first place, and I submit that it is not.

In my earlier intervention this morning, I mentioned that we in Canada spend more on culture per capital than the British and Americans combined. What is the result? A strong publishing industry with a gallery of artists of international renown? A thriving motion picture industry which dramatically reflects our nation's identity? Plays and poems and artists who can stand on their own? Or simply survive on the Government teat, continually demanding more and more money just to survive?

The situation is ridiculous. We have to send 40 CBC employees to the Cannes Film Festival to peddle our cultural product. That tells you a lot about the quality of that product. I submit that the world film community would come to us if we simply produced a better product.

In my view, the reality of restraint gives us a unique opportunity to address afresh, systematically and creatively, the issues which face us in the broad arenas of communications and culture. As a fiscally responsible Government we cannot afford to throw money at the problems. It did not work in the past and it will not work now. Most important of all, we owe it to the people of Canada to give them value for their tax dollars. You do not necessarily produce a better product by throwing more taxpayers' dollars at the cultural community of this nation.

Right now in Vancouver, British Columbia, a movie called "Rocky IV" is being produced. They have recreated Russia in the PNE Agridome. There is absolutely nothing Canadian about that production except for the fact they are throwing a few dollars our way. It is a ridiculous situation. How many times have we seen a Canadian film or television program where they change even the licence plates on the automobiles so that the poor viewer does not confuse Vancouver or Toronto with New York or Los Angeles? Our theatres are owned and controlled by Americans showing excellent films which are not Canadian.

We had our chance to change that 40 years ago. The Liberal Government of Mackenzie King saw the problem and decided to act. It wanted to restrict the number of American movies which were coming into our nation, and try and build up, in the National Film Board, our own national film industry. But they were wined and dined by the Hollywood moguls and the decision which was eventually arrived at was if Gary Cooper or Jimmy Stewart every now and then mentioned Canadian geese in a western flick, then it was all right and the film could be shown in Canada. We sold ourselves short. We sold our National Film Board short and we sold our artists short as well. That was a watershed in Canadian culture, the 1940s, and that was when the bath water and the baby were thrown out, in my opinion.

So we have a 2.9 per cent cut in funding to Canadian cultural agencies, and Pierre Berton is going to starve. That is absolute nonsense, Mr. Speaker. The real shame, the real crime, is that we have so many good stories to tell and we are not telling them. The intense drama and tension of the life of Louis Riel; the incredible discoveries of Simon Fraser, David Thompson and Alexander Mackenzie; the saga of our Indian peoples, or the miracle of Steven Fonyo's run. From the struggles of our forefathers to create this nation, to the high level adventures of an astronaut, our first astronaut being Marc Garneau, we have so much to share with each other and we are just not doing it through Canadian cultural activities.

The lack of a distinctive Canadian culture is particularly evident, as my friend the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) mentioned earlier, in English Canada where I come from. English Canada is threatened, and it is a real threat, with inundation by American culture. The simple and straightforward solution is to cut along the 49th Parallel and float away. Or we could jam the skies and keep out those alien satellite signals which are inundating our homes in Canada. The most difficult solution for us as a government and people is to create some sort of incubation system to help our artists along, to learn from the best and to create the best. I do not care if you call the agency Culture Canada or the National Film Board or the Canadian Identity Agency, but what we have been doing up till now has not been working and we have to change the mechanism. We have to involve the public and private sector and the artists of Canada in order to produce a better product.

Let us acknowledge right here that the Beachcombers cannot compete with Dallas, so let us not try to compete dollar for dollar. Let us try and do what we do well: animation, documentaries, television drama. We cannot compete with American or British productions dollar for dollar. Therefore we should try to find a way to tell our story well and not prop up an inferior product with more and more money that has to be borrowed in the first place.

Time is critically important. The skies are full of satellite signals that are entertaining and informing Canadians. They are entertaining and informing my children and others. But the majority of those signals are not mirroring the interests, the concerns or the desires of our fellow Canadians.

As the mover of this motion stated earlier, we have artistic palaces all over the country while our artistic community struggles to survive. Therefore, I suggest that we must change the delivery system. That is why our Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has criss-crossed the nation to learn the best way to bring about change. The same kind of Conservative Government that created the CBC is now going to initiate a new mandate for the Canadian cultural community.

It will not do so at any cost. It is not doing it in the old way by throwing money in the hope that it will stick somewhere.

Rather it is doing it through a new incubation system to do what we should have done decades ago. We should fertilize the field and build a better product that people will buy, and we will encourage our best to create the best. Only then will our artistic community as well as our national culture survive.

One suggestion from the Applebaum-Hébert report and from some independent producers as well is that CBC drama production should be taken over by the independent production centre. That is an interesting idea that has not been acted upon.

Another concept of which I am more aware is the Shakespeare Plus Festival in Nanaimo. This concept came from the grass roots when someone thought it would be a good idea and acted upon it. Local artists are encouraged to take part, and now that festival provides a fair monetary return to the community in tourism.

This was not an idea of CBC in Toronto, but simply a case of a group of people from my community who saw a cultural need and answered it. That is the kind of cultural endeavour that we should be encouraging as a Government.

With these kinds of opportunities for our artists, people like William Shatner, Robert Goulet, directors like Norman Jewison and Ted Kotcheff, actors like Margot Kidder, Lorne Greene and, dare I say, Leslie Nielsen, and writers like Arthur Hailey and Bernard Slade would all stay in our nation.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What was that name?

Mr. Schellenberg: Leslie Nielsen. You may recall the name, Mr. Minister. These people would stay in our community in order to produce the product that we need.

On March 20, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said in this Chamber, "I am convinced that the Government is prepared to preside over a massive erosion of this country's impressive cultural achievements". I submit that just the opposite will prove to be the case. To paraphrase the former Leader of his Party, "Just watch us".

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made a number of apt remarks about the film industry and its sorry history in Canada. While I heartily agree with him, by and large he has not really debated the motion. Indeed, he has made throw-away comments that quite misrepresent the point that I was trying to make. He made allusions to the proposition in the motion that artists have been left in poverty by the Government's policy. I meant "left in poverty" very precisely and clearly. Many were in poverty before, and it is not that this is something new. Artists have been living in poverty under previous Governments' mismanagement and they are continuing to live in poverty. It is not that the changes are so radical that suddenly artists who were not poor before are now poor; it is that the Government has failed to act to improve their situation, having promised to do so.

I did not suggest at any point that all artists are poor. Obviously, that would be a preposterous assertion. Pierre Berton and a number of other artists do very well. Nevertheless, the average income of full-time writers in Canada is $7,000 a year. That is an average which means that many writers are earning much less. For example, poets are earning very much less.

Is the Hon. Member satisfied with those results and content just to make the throw-away statement that Pierre Berton is not suffering, as if that were supposed to cheer up those who do not have the same kind of advantages as Pierre Berton?

Finally, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has not only criss-crossed the country to talk to provincial ministers of culture, he has criss-crossed Europe to go to Madrid, Athens, Algeria and many other places.

We are not entirely sure why he has visited those places but it has cost a lot of the taxpayers' money to send him there in a private jet. It is not clear if this has advanced Canadian culture or served the ends of consulting the Canadian arts community.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my hon. colleague misunderstood my remarks. I was addressing the larger question. I was not agreeing with her supposition that the decrease in funding to the cultural agencies results in poverty or has increased the poverty of our cultural community. I am saying that we have an idea which will let us do what we can to build a better product that will sell so that our artists do not have to come continually to the government trough in order to survive. We would raise that $7,000 to the $20,000 or $30,000 that the American artists make because they are building a better product.

There are ways for the Government of Canada to encourage this. Previous Governments have done this by throwing money at the problem, and I disagree totally with that concept.

The Hon. Member commented on the fact that the Minister of Communications has travelled throughout the country talking to ministers of culture, Conservative or otherwise. May I remind her that he held the first meeting of ministers of culture in this country in over three years. That is something the previous Government could not even attempt to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Further questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, when the Tories came to power in Ottawa last fall and slashed the budgets and grants to the arts and entertainment industry, slammed the CBC and intimidated the media, they did so under the guise and in the name of economy. They said that it was done in order to economize and cut out the fat. However, we know that there was far more to their agenda than that.

We know that what the Government did was grave and serious. It caused consternation, sorrow and confusion in every quarter of every province. We know that this has been so in the entire cultural and arts community.

After listening to the comments of the Minister this morning and watching his reaction of apparent surprise at all this concern in this resolution, as well as listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberger), one would think that we were debating something about mouse traps.

However, we know that this is far more serious than that because mass meetings have been held in a way that has never occurred in the history of this country in the arts and cultural field. Never before has there been such an expression of spontaneous outrage in place from British Columbia to Halifax. I suggest that the Government is playing at pretense when it acts surprised that there is some kind of problem here. It is not taking seriously the issue that has been put forward today, the issue about which the public is concerned and, above all, about which the industry and its people are concerned.

The outrage goes beyond the entertainment industry and to the public because finally it is beginning to dawn upon the average Canadian that what we are seeing here threatens each and every Canadian, not merely the people in that industry.

The more people realize what is happening, the more they realize that this is not just simply a discussion about fat cats, power struggles or a group of 40 people who went to the Cannes Festival. It is not about wealthy performers and dilettantes. Canadians are beginning to realize that what is increasingly at stake is not only the survival of a few jobs or even an industry, but our entire nation as a culture and its survival.

National survival is at stake. I suggest that successive Liberal Governments over the decades have worked arduously to free Canada from foreign captivity, to overcome the doubt and confusion as to whether we are American, British or both. We have had to affirm that proud though we are of our heritage from Britain and France, and pleased though we are to be friends of the United States of America, we are neither French, British nor American, but Canadian.

We have had to battle enemies from within and from without. We were able to defeat separatism from within our nation by a referendum. We assured a large part of the population that they were not part of Britain or the United States but part of a nation called Canada, free and independent, a country where francophones could play a significant role. While we are a small nation we assured them that they had a part in it, and a significant part in it.

● (1540)

We also had to beat the reactionaries who wanted to cling to the past. Over the years the Tories persistently personified that reaction with their constant and sometimes hysterical resistance. As my colleague said so well this morning, there was a flag debate and we were finally able to get a Canadian flag. Then there was the battle with the Tories over O Canada, which would become our national anthem. Bit by bit the Tories retreated, and finally as the forces of Canadianism advanced, they allowed a Canada Day after some resistance. Their last battle was the Constitution and the Charter of Rights, a battle that was interrupted by rather noisy bells at times. I happened to be part of that debate but while a real rear-guard resistance was made, we made Canada a nation that had its own Constitution housed in Canada and its own Charter of Rights. We established the principles of a nation based on multiculturalism.

I suggest that Liberal Governments fought step by step to move us toward a Canadian identity. It is what the people wanted.

A Canadian identity demands Canadian independence. Unless we are masters of our own economy, of our own environment and our own way of life, free from external blackmail, bribery and takeovers, we cannot call our souls our own. That is why we moved as Liberals, to try to encourage Canadians into the energy field and we increased Canadian ownership of the oil fields from 25 per cent to 50 per cent. That is why we established FIRA to set up standards to make sure that foreign investment would not be detrimental to Canadians and would encourage a Canadian presence in business conducted in Canada.

When you realize that Canada, as Mel Hurtig has testified and proven, has a higher percentage of foreign ownership than any other nation, it is no wonder that we took steps to try to correct that imbalance.

Yes, we are a small nation and we are vulnerable because of our size. That does not mean we have to succumb.

While Canadian independence and Canadian survival depend on our ability to prevent encroachment and subservience to foreign domination, whether it is military or financial domination, the most critical area of all is our ability to maintain our cultural identity. Culture means not only music and fine arts. It also means media, entertainment, radio, television, books, journals, cable TV, advertising, and everything and anything that reaches the ears, the eyes, the senses and the minds of our children, of our seniors, of our young, and of our middle-aged alike. That is where our identity and our national soul is reached. That is true today even more than before.

Some people think we are making too much of some cuts to the CBC and cuts in grants to the National Film Board and the Canada Council, as well as cuts in grants to individuals and groups of artists across the country, but these cuts are cutting into the morale, the infrastructure and the survival of an industry with a great potential for the future both here and abroad. Broadcasting, media entertainment, information, art and culture make up the fourth largest industry in this nation. It has an important export market as well, one that is highly labour-intensive.

Contrary to the stereotypes that people have of rich actors, directors, fat cat bureaucrats, what the Tories have hit are the lowest paid in the economy, our artists and entertainers. Two hundred and seventy-three thousand Canadians identified themselves as holding cultural arts related occupations in 1981. The number being hit by this Government's policy is far greater than 273,000. This Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has destroyed jobs, not created them. It is not only the jobs that are being destroyed, but the industry itself. If you tear away such basic structures as the CBC, you tear away the infrastructure needed to maintain a viable, modern Canadian system of communications. When this infrastructure starts to weaken, this solid base, individuals panic or despair. They look elsewhere for other occupations or they leave for other countries. They leave the industry. This creates still further panic. It has a terrible domino effect. One job loss creates the next job loss. Worse yet, the damage is not only to the present generation, but it menaces the future. Young people who are considering a career in communications and culture look at what this Government is doing and witness the trembling of this infrastructure. They consider either going to some other country or not developing their talents at all. We saw this phenomenon take place once before when the Tories pulled the plug on the Avro Arrow airplane. It also was billed as an economy measure.

Yes, many interesting things are done in the name of economy. That was billed as an economy measure. Not only were thousands of Canadians thrown out of work then, but those people went to the United States or to Great Britain. A large proportion ended up in the American space industry and were part of one of the basic groups that formed NASA, all because we economized on the Avro Arrow rather than developing our own aeronautical industry. You need to have foresight Mr. Speaker, to be able to see that an industry has value. You need to have foresight, and rather than cutting back on it, you should increase it. You should put more into it because it has a future.

There cannot be many Members of Parliament in this House, Conservatives, Liberal or NDP, especially those from the larger population centres, who have not had letters and phone calls in their offices from people concerned about their future. A young woman expressed doubt in a phone call to our office about carrying on in the field of music because she depends on part-time work to help her while she studies and further develops her musical talent. Another one doubts whether she can stay in Canada and study here because if she starts out in Baltimore or Los Angeles she can grow up in the industry and be where the jobs are. A middle-aged couple are worried because if they encourage their children to pursue their artistic talents here, it will mean the certain loss of their children to the United States.

Those cuts are not measures that affect some closed system of bureaucracy; those cuts are measures that have a domino effect that hit jobs in a very labour-intensive industry, shearing away the infrastructure of that industry. This destroys morale, causes hurt, creates confusion, doubt, and pessimism, and discourages the development of talent.

You cannot underestimate that, Mr. Speaker. While it is not something tangible and able to be measured, it is a very real factor regarding the future. This is a time when in certain sectors, especially entertainment, information, and the media, we should be going forward, expanding and believing in the future. We should be investing also in research and development in the technical end of the communications industry. Hand in hand with that our entertainment industry should grow. We will then have not only a domestic market, but also external markets. We should think of our great Canadian artists, our bands, our orchestras, our painters, our television productions and our ballets. Canadians have excelled in many fields. We are proud of them. However, while we say we are proud of them, we allow the Government to cut back on the very forces which gave life to those institutions.

Tory times are times when we see regression. They are not times of venture or adventure. They do not have the minds of venture capitalists. They always want to shrink everything down to the size of their vision and mentality. It is regression, withdrawal and pessimism. Those are Tory times. As we lost the aeronautical and the space industries, we are now to lose the communications industry.

As I said in my speech in the House on February 1, 1985, the greatest danger of this Tory policy on communications is the loss of our identity, the loss of our soul. Three-quarters—and in large metropolitan areas it is as high as four-fifths—of our television time is taken up by American programming. The protection of FIRA is being ripped away by Bill C-15. The Americans will be able to invade not only our airwaves but will be able to take over many of our companies dealing in communications and culture. At a time when our identity as Canadians is most threatened, we should spend more money, not less.

It appears that the Tories have mesmerized many people with the seductive appeal that to obtain more jobs we should sell out, attract more American investment and more multinationals to Canada. They tell us that we should be more patient and quieter with the Americans about our ecology, our environment and our foreign policy, that today it is "in" to favour being part of the great American continent and enjoying the fruits of American continentalism. That is Tory policy.

As I said at the outset, a great deal is at stake. Down through the years, until now, Canadians of all Parties agreed that it would cost a premium for Canada to remain a sovereign nation. In the past there was always a temptation to sell out to the colossus to the south. However, we know that our history has been one of resistance to that seductive, simplistic solution. I believe Canadians are prepared to pay an additional $10 or even $20 each per year to invest in our culture and our communications once they understand what is at stake. When they understand what is at stake, they will be prepared to pay far more per person to stop the Tory policy of cuts to that basic industry. Canadians will believe that it is worth paying the extra price, a premium, to remain independent and free.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) realize that he just advocated an additional tax of $500 million? Does he really think that Canadian citizens are ready, willing and able to pay that?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I was actually being facetious, in a way, in pointing out that the average Canadian, for the paltry few dollars required to make up the $80 million which was cut,—and it would really mean about $4 per Canadian—would rather have that than the kind of Tory policy which is slashing away at the very infrastructure of Canadian culture and an industry which is Canada's fourth largest. That is my first point.

My second point is that Canadians must understand the gravity of the situation which has been created by the Tories. By undercutting FIRA, by eliminating the protections to our economy from foreign investments and takeovers, for example, the takeovers of some of our companies in the communications field, Canadians should realize that we are facing very dangerous times and that perhaps we require some extra investment to overcome what the Tories have done by their policies. They have handed over to the multi-nationals, to the seven sisters, that which was reserved as an opportunity for Canadians at last to invest in their own country. When Canadians begin to understand the ramifications, they would rather give a few bucks more than allow the destruction of their soul.

Mr. Boyer: If the Hon. Member was being facetious when he made that point with great vigour and seriousness showing on his face and in his words, was he also being facetious, or was he just misinformed, when he referred to the change in the foreign investment review legislation? He paraded before the House his view that there will no longer be any protection for cultural agencies in this country. Over the past many weeks has he not familiarized himself adequately with the new legislation our Government brought in which requires special protection in the case of communications agencies from foreign takeovers?

Mr. de Corneille: I said that I was being facetious when I used the figure of $10 because $4 would do it. I am sure the people would be willing to spend quite a bit more per person if they realized that their Canadian survival was at stake.

Mr. Boyer: $20 per person?

Mr. de Corneille: Regarding the Investment Canada Bill, Bill C-15, it does not guarantee any protection of the cultural industry. It indicates that the Government may review it. When we see the size of the loopholes, through which a truck could drive, for foreign companies to enter into the field and take over Canadian companies, it seems as though there was no sincerity in terms of trying to prevent foreign investment and takeovers of Canadian firms, which might result in the loss of huge numbers of jobs to foreign investors who might take them elsewhere.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment, followed by a question. Indeed there is a great deal of evidence that Canadians are prepared to pay more to support public expenditure in the arts field. However, Canadians underestimate what is needed in that field. Because they always hear about hand-outs, they think that in fact more is going to artists than is the case. When they hear how little it is, they are prepared to pay a great deal more. A lot more could be done along those lines.

The Hon. Member made a number of eminently sensible remarks in his speech, but I think he evaded one of the main points of the motion before us. I am very critical of what the Conservative Government has done for the arts, but let us be very clear that it is a slippery slope. We see the Conservatives behaving in a manner that is worse than the Liberals. The Liberal record is not very good either. Would the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) care to comment on that? Under the Liberal Government, federal spending for the arts declined in real terms in the last 10 years. The Liberal Government did not do any of the practical things he suggested which might help artists. Now that he is in opposition he sounds very nice when he supports artists. But where were they when it counted?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add to the comments and the question of the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). If we calculate how much $4, $5 or even $10 per person would be, we would realize that it is the cost of a couple of movie tickets. We realize how much we benefit from the CBC and from Canadian artists. Canadians are prepared privately to pay quite a lot for a seat in a movie-house, a seat at a baseball game and so on. In fact, such a small amount to salvage or save our industry would be well worth spending. I believe Canadians will make it known to their Members of Parliament, especially to those on the government benches, as they understand more clearly what is happening, that they want better from them than cut-backs in an important industry which is so vital to Canada's identity.

• (1600)

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have one brief comment and a question for the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille). The comment is that it is almost beyond belief that we have an Opposition Day today and we have one, two, three New Democrats present, one member of the Official Opposition present, the Member who has just spoken—

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that it is inappropriate for a Member to make reference to those in or out of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If he did say it, he should not have said it.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should not have said it.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to point out to the Hon. Member that the count is four New Democrats and one Liberal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have said this once before. Members should know very well, particularly those who have been here for quite a while, not to reflect on who is in the House and who is not in the House.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I promise not to get into the numbers game in any further comments. I would, however, happily record the fact that the numbers have swelled in the last minute by about 25 per cent.

The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence said quite correctly that mass meetings concerning the arts have been held right across this country. He is absolutely correct. I would call them Marcel Masse meetings with the cultural community. I have attended such meetings. I am wondering if the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence will give some credit to my Minister for being the very first Minister in a long line of Ministers of Communications to sit down with his provincial counterparts and map out Canada's future policy on the arts and culture, or does the Hon. Member still adhere to the old Liberal Government philosophy that the provinces do not count and that they should not be consulted?

Second, will he agree that, while the arts and culture community in this country is extremely fragile and susceptible to any cut-backs in funding, no sector of the Canadian economy can be exempted from this necessary attack on the Government's deficit? It is fine when people say, "Let's tackle the deficit, but don't touch me. Anybody but me." I just wonder if the Hon. Member will realistically consider the fact that the message has got through to my Minister, to me and to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We know how susceptible and vulnerable the arts community is, and I would like him to explain how you can exempt any one sector of Canadian society when you have to launch an all-out offensive on trying to reduce this deficit.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I am very interested to hear that now through the eyes of the Tories they see a lynch mob as being a tea party. First of all, when the Minister visited, those visits followed mass meetings of protest. There was a need for him to find out and to show his presence. It was a good idea to let people know that he was actually concerned about the fact that in his own area there were mass meetings for the first tie in the history of that community at which people raised protests and expressed their anger at the situation that had developed. I would not call a lynch mob a tea party.

There is a second part to the question which has to be addressed. The Hon. Member asked whether we should be addressing ourselves to the future. I believe it would be a very good idea for us to address ourselves to the future, but the present cuts are cutting into the people. He asks whether every group should not have to suffer. Does the Hon. Member believe that those in the oil patch who are benefiting, the large oil companies with their sudden huge findings of windfall money, should not also pay through the nose? Why should the little people earning $7,000 a year or less have to pay when they don't have those profits?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments are now terminated.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Young Offenders Act—Request for comprehensive review; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation—Committee study; the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault)—Textile Industry—Government position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—CANADIAN ARTS COMMUNITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to support the Canadian arts community, specifically by,

(1) cutting funding to independent cultural agencies, leaving artists in poverty;

(2) compromising the arms-length principle in relations between government and funded agencies; and

(3) increasingly bringing arts funding under direct ministerial control, and making partisan appointments to cultural agencies.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to react to the Hon. Member opposite who pointed out the number of New Democrats in this House. I do not want to do that. It would be wrong for me to point out that percentage-wise there are—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I think that whole issue was dealt with by the previous Speaker a couple of minutes ago.

Mr. Keeper: I will not mention that proportionately there are fewer Conservatives.

I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate. It is good that we have Opposition Days in this House. Otherwise the question of culture and the arts would not come to the attention of the House of Commons. The priority that has been placed on culture and the arts by the Government is so low that the only way we can have a serious debate about culture and the arts in this House is through the vehicle of an opposition motion. The Government has moved to cut public expenditures in the field of arts and culture. We have yet in this debate to hear a credible reason for the cuts it is carrying out in culture and the arts. In the absence of a credible reason from the government side, I will have to pose some questions as to why the Government might be cutting in these fields.

For example, have Canadians been demanding cuts in the arts and in culture? Have Canadians been saying to the Government that we are spending too much on arts and culture? We should examine a few facts. We should look at the attitude of Canadians with regard to the arts. Something like 82 per cent of Canadians believe that it is important to promote, encourage and develop talent and artistic activities, and 78 per cent of these Canadians think that federal dollars should support the arts.

Does the policy adopted by the Government that means cuts in spending for arts activities reflect the attitude of Canadians? Quite clearly, no. This is sad. When the members of the Party opposite ran during the election and sought the confidence of Canadians, they promised to be more sensitive to public attitudes, to listen to people and to do what the public wanted. They contrasted their promises with what the previous Government did. Now that they are in office, they are doing just the opposite of what Canadians desire as it affects arts and culture.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What percentage of the vote do you have?

Mr. Keeper: I had enough to get here, and I intend to stay here.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): By Stanley Knowles' skirts.

Mr. Keeper: In no way would I be ashamed of Stanley Knowles' skirts. I hear the heckling from across the way. I am tempted to react to it, but I will restrain myself.

The Government should realize that Canadians are strong supporters of the arts. They illustrate this not only in their attitudes and desires, calling upon the Government to spend and support the arts, but with regard to their activities and attendance at activities. For example, the attendance at cultural events from 1971 to 1980 increased by 121 per cent. That shows a broad support among Canadians for cultural and artistic activities. In fact, more people in this country attend cultural events in a year than attend sporting events. The Government should respond to the priority of Canadians rather than cutting back on it.

• (1610)

What other reason could there be for the Government to make cuts when it comes to arts and culture? Perhaps we are already spending too much on arts and culture. Perhaps the federal budget for arts and culture is too large and needs to be cut back. Let us examine a couple of facts in that area. In 1982-83, federal expenditures on the arts were 1.8 per cent of the total federal budget. That does not mean a great deal by itself, but when that is compared to defence spending which was 10.6 per cent of the federal budget, we begin to see that the priority the Government places on arts is much less significant than the priority the average Canadian would place on arts. Consider that we spend 10 times as much on defence than we do on arts and cultural activities.

Mr. Holtmann: That's not a good comparison.

Mr. Keeper: I hear from across the way that that is not a good comparison. It is an objective comparison and these are facts. In the absence of a rational reason for the Government to cut spending, I present these facts and challenge the Hon. Member opposite to enter the debate and to put forward his reasons for cutting expenditures on arts and culture. Could he justify the feeling that we are spending too much on arts? I say that when we spend 10 times as much on defence spending as we spend on arts, there is no objective way we can say we are spending too much on arts.

Between 1971 and 1980, government support to the arts in constant dollars, taking into account inflation, declined each year. Spending on the arts over that decade has already declined. How can one put forward the notion that we are spending too much on arts? Why would the Government be cutting if we were not spending too much?

I would point out to my colleagues on the right that the years 1971 to 1980 were years in which the Liberal Party was in office. While I hear my Liberal colleagues rise in the House to criticize the Government sharply for cutting spending in the area of arts, and deservedly so, I must question the sincerity of Members who so recently were in office and Members whose own Government, throughout a decade, decreased public spending on the arts.

What other possible reason could there be for the Government to be cutting in the area of the arts and culture? Would it describe arts and cultural spending as being a waste or a mere luxury? When government Members were running for office, they said that they would cut the waste out of public spending. Is that what this means now? Does it mean that when cutting back on the arts and culture, they are cutting out the waste? Let us examine spending in the area of the arts from the point of view of its value and from the point of view of investment. I would make the argument that spending on the arts is a good investment rather than a poor one, and I will back that up with facts.

Spending in the arts sector directly increases government revenues. It increases revenues through sales taxes, property taxes, income taxes and unemployment and health insurance premiums. It increases government revenues in an amount which equals or exceeds grants to the arts. How could spending in the arts sector be considered a waste or a luxury when it increases government revenues?

Looking at economic activity in the arts, in 1982, for the 136 theatres which were related to the Canada Council, there were something like 5.5 million spectators and total expenditures of some $67 million. Keeping in mind that every time there is a dollar spent on ticket sales for artistic endeavours, at least another dollar is being spent on related items such as drinks, food, babysitters and parking, then public spending in the arts becomes a very good investment rather than a waste or a luxury.

We should remind the Government that when it makes grants to the arts and culture, these grants result in local expenditures of up to 10 times the amount of the grant itself. By any objective measure, money spent on the arts is a good investment. It not only affects the domestic economy but it also affects our balance of trade. As our arts and cultural activities gain greater international recognition, there is then a greater capacity for exports in this area.

What other reason could there be for the Government to cut back on grants and public expenditures to the arts? If we look at the arts as being an industry, we have to realize that it is an important industry. When members of the Government were seeking the confidence of the public, they said they would deliver a new economy. Have they delivered such a great new economy that they can abandon the arts as an industry? We need to remind government Members that arts and cultural industries are very important. They accounted for something like $7 billion within the Canadian economy in 1981. Relative to the 20 largest industries in the country, the arts industry is largest in terms of employment. It is sixth in terms of salaries and wages and eleventh in terms of revenues.

It is very important for us to take care of the arts industry because the arts industry is an important sector of our economy and has a lot to do with the over-all health of the Canadian economy. Every time the Government cuts its own expenditures to the arts, it is damaging the Canadian economy.

It is important to remember that the arts are also important as an employer, because unemployment is still our number one economic problem and is still at historically unprecedented levels. Arts and cultural agencies spend most of their revenues on employment. Arts-related employment in the Canadian economy is nearly as large as the labour force in the agricultural sector of the economy. As an employment creator, it is very important to us as Canadians. The labour force in the arts sector has increased over the decade from 1971 to 1981 by some 74 per cent, and that is just about twice as fast as the increase in the labour forces of other sectors of the Canadian economy.

In the performing arts sector, 66 cents out of every dollar it receives goes to salaries and wages. Most of the money that goes into the arts goes to the creation of employment. In manufacturing industries, the comparable figure is 20 cents per dollar. The reason that most of the dollar in the arts field goes to employment as opposed to other aspects of arts activities is that artists are paid a very low wage. While it makes a great deal of sense for artists to be paid a more just wage, given the present circumstances in which artists find themselves in our community, it would make more sense to support artists by giving them grants so that they can carry out their artistic activities rather than to reduce the spending in this area, thereby forcing them on to public assistance. Since we pay so little to the artists to do their creative work, if one looks at it in economic terms, it makes more sense to support them in their artistic activities than to cut them off, by cutting back on public spending, and force them on to welfare. Welfare can be very debilitating to a person, but carrying on activities as a professional artist can lead to personal self-fulfilment and a richer community.

I would like to talk about the impact which these cuts have had on specific Canadian agencies. For example, the Canada Council is losing something in the order of 5 per cent of its budget. That means that less money will be available for grants which could be given to individuals and different cultural agencies. We need more money rather than less money for Canadian artists.

The cut-backs are damaging the Canada Council in another way. A toll-free telephone service has been available through the Canada Council. With the cut-backs, that service will be gone. That means that it will be much more difficult for any artist who lives outside of the Ottawa area to deal with the Canada Council. It is unfair to most artists who live across the country.

The Canada Council has also provided fund-raising advice to various artistic organizations. The cut-backs have meant that a decreased amount of advice will be given to the organizations. Of course, that will mean fewer private sector dollars in the arts, not only the loss of public sector dollars.

In addition, the CBC has been hurt by the cut-backs. For example, the CBC has lost 1,500 jobs. As well, the CBC has lost in the order of $15 million in programming money. That money would have been used to produce Canadian programs. Canadian programs are crucial at a time when Canadian airwaves are mostly dominated by American programs which are very easily dumped into the Canadian market. It is very difficult for Canadians to compete with that.

There have been a couple of program cuts in the CBC which I find particularly disturbing. One of them is Our Native Land and the second is the program called Identities. Those programs have been very important to native Canadians and Canadians of ethnic origins. The programs worked to increase understanding and tolerance in our society. The cuts which the Government has made in the area of arts and culture have led to the cuts of these programs.

I do not know how the Government justifies the cuts. I do not know why the Government is making these cuts. The Government has said that it needs to reduce the deficit. That is the only argument which I have heard for the cut-backs in these areas. When cuts in the name of reducing the deficit result in fewer jobs in the economy and less revenue for the Government, I suggest that rather than reducing the deficit, the cuts in the arts area may lead to an increase in the deficit. The artists who will find themselves unemployed will be forced to go on welfare. They will be supported publicly. The reduced arts activities will simply mean that there will be reduced public revenues. Every time that a public dollar is cut, the private dollars which go along with that public dollar are lost. In the arts field there is a very high ratio between public dollars and private dollars. So a lot of economic activity and wealth is lost when cut-backs are made in the fields of arts and culture.

I could think of other areas in which the Government could choose to cut back that would make more economic sense and allow us to continue to support the artists in this country, that would allow us to benefit from their creative talents and the richness which they provide to our culture.

In conclusion, I would like to challenge Members opposite to explain why these cuts are being made. I have heard no rational reason that could be backed up with facts for making cuts in the arts field.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the Hon. Member's speech. Very near the end he mentioned the fact that he could suggest several other areas in which the Government could cut back. He said that 78 per cent of the people want federal money for the arts and culture. Of course, the majority of the people of Canada said that they wanted a cut in the deficit. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should cut into our social programs, that we should default on paying off the debt, or that we should not give any more money to higher education? In which areas is he suggesting the cuts should be made?

He also pointed out that 1.8 per cent of the budget goes toward culture. It should be noted that the agricultural area, although it employs more people than the arts and culture fields, receives a lesser percentage of the budget. Can the Hon. Member tell us where he would make those cuts in federal programs in order to leave the culture budget as it is?

I should also point out that $75 million of that money went toward the CBC cuts. The CBC indicated that 1,500 people would have to be laid off when the original cut was announced. However, fewer than half that number have been laid off. I believe the CBC has done a commendable job in ensuring that as few people as possible have been eliminated.

Where does the Member see the great gaps which are being created in our cultural mosaic? Where does he think we should make the cuts?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a couple of points which the Hon. Member raised. First, he said that Canadians asked for a reduced deficit. If I remember accurately what went on during the election campaign, the Conservatives said that the deficit would be reduced by cutting out waste. The Conservatives said that they would not cut any useful programs or worth-while activities. That is the kind of deficit reduction for which Canadians voted. Now that the Conservatives are in office, they are cutting into very valuable public spending which affects the quality of life in Canada and the level of employment. That is not what the Conservatives promised when they were running for office.

The Hon. Member asked where we should cut. We could examine the tax expenditures which take place in Canada. How much money goes out by way of tax write-offs to large corporations, in the name of economic development or job creation, which are effective and result in the corporations' stated objectives? We could examine that area. We could also examine the whole question of the oil industry, which continues to receive windfall profits and grants from the Government. What about the money which was spent on new military uniforms? Was that a necessary expenditure? Was that expenditures preferable over cuts in the arts?

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I have a great respect for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), being a Manitoban by birth. However, it always bothers me when NDP Members rise in the House and fail to recognize fiscal responsibility. If the NDP and the Liberals had continued with their coalition programs of fiscal irresponsibility, there would be no arts in this country. There would be absolute devastation as far as the economy is concerned.

• (1630)

Those Hon. Members are continually saying that they want to tear down the successful to build up we don't know what. They advocate an equal distribution of nothing. The arts in this country have not and will not be neglected by our Party. We will stand front and centre in support of them, but we have to be responsible. The type of irresponsibility which has led us to the brink of financial disaster could totally destroy any possibility of a future for any Canadian, let alone the future of the arts.

I don't know why the Hon. Member—and I would like him to respond to this—and his Party are so afraid of the private sector, of private people becoming involved. This great country evolved and developed not because of socialistic ideas or government involvement, but because people had a hope and a dream.

Mr. Keeper: What about the CPR?

Mr. St. Germain: The Hon. Member cites the CPR. The CPR operates, as he well knows, on the basis of a free enterprise system.

Mr. Keeper: That was public funding.

Mr. St. Germain: I ask the Hon. Member why he and his Party are so afraid of ordinary Canadians, ordinary people, building businesses?

Mr. Keeper: Give me some time to answer the question.

Mr. St. Germain: I'll give you a chance to answer the question. I would love to. Why are you afraid of the private sector?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I will deal with the question asked by the Hon. Member as to why we are afraid of the private sector. We are not afraid of the private sector. We believe in a mixed economy.

Ms. Copps: That's us.

Mr. Nunziata: That's us.

Mr. Keeper: Let me say this about public spending in the arts field: the reason that cuts in public spending are damaging both to the economy and to any deficit reduction is that spending in the arts is a private and public mix. Every dollar we put into the arts creates $10 in the private sector as it turns over through the economy. Spending in the arts is a statement of faith in the private sector. So we on this side of the House are saying, let the Government support private sector activities, and it can do so in the arts field by continuing public spending. But if it cuts back on public spending, it is going to lose the private sector activity in the arts field.

The Hon. Member talks about fiscal responsibility. How can it be fiscally responsible to cut back on valuable activity which is in fact an investment in the economy? If we cut back on public dollars in the arts field, we also lose the private sector investment which would otherwise be there. As a result, we lose revenues and we might end up with a higher deficit and higher unemployment than we have now. Fiscal responsibility means that we have to look at the over-all economy and not just at a balance sheet for the federal Budget.

The Hon. Member took a swipe at equal distribution of income. One of the ways we can have a healthy economy in this country—

Mr. St. Germain: I said equal distribution of nothing is what you advocate.

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member calls it "equal distribution of nothing", but he took a swipe at equal distribution, Mr. Speaker, and let me say that one of the ways we can have a healthy economy is to have a rough equal distribution of income in this country, in other words, that people have enough to meet their basic human needs. When we have that, we are going to have a stronger economy.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). I don't agree with them all, but I listened attentively. There is one thing I would like to make clear for the record. As much as I disagreed with the cutting of Our Native Land, and I hear almost daily from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), about the cutting of The Friendly Giant on CBC, neither of those programs was a victim of government cuts. The corporation had announced the cuts of those programs before the budgetary deficit manoeuvres made by this Government. I just want to make sure that the Hon. Member knows that it had been decided that those programs would be cut by the President of the CBC and his officials prior to the November announcement of the budgetary cut-backs. The President of the CBC said that before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture last week.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Given the fact that somehow we had to trim the fat from these expensive Crown Corporations and agencies in this country, but that we could not tell anyone, particularly the CBC, where to cut back on their budgets, does the Hon. Member seriously suggest that we should now become involved as a government in terms of deciding about programming cut-backs? Does he think we should tell the CBC want programs to eliminate and what to keep? Does he not consider that that would be a pretty dangerous role for the Government to play in terms of instructing a publicly owned corporation what it should or should not be able to broadcast?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has 30 seconds.

Mr. Keeper: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the CBC managed to reinstate The Friendly Giant. Why could it not also reinstate Our Native Land? Thirty seconds is not enough time to deal with the complex issues raised by the Hon. Member. It is an important issue and I do not want to give it short shrift.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the Opposition motion before the House today. In the course of the day, and especially this morning, I was able to listen to what my Hon. colleagues had to say, and especially the formidable speech made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), who styled himself the defender of arts and culture. In fact, the Parliamentary Secretary acknowledged as much.

Ms. Copps: Such talent!

Mr. Hamelin: The Hon. Member has made himself out to be the great defender of arts and culture in Canada. In fact, he spent a lot of energy expressing his desire to promote our Canadian identity.

Mr. Gauthier: Excellent!

Mr. Hamelin: He even accused the present Minister of failing to stand up for arts and culture—

Mr. Gauthier: True, true!

Mr. Hamelin: —so much so it made me wonder if this heroic role of champion of arts and culture was his and his alone. Surprisingly, as was in fact mentioned several times by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), in all the 20 years the Liberals were in power, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis did not get his act together as the defender of the arts since, as the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood indicated, the situation for artists had deteriorated during this overly long Liberal regime. It was rather astonishing to hear all this from the Hon. Member from Saint-Denis. Are we also supposed to consider today's motion, not its form but its substance, as a plea to defend arts and culture in Canada? I think that all of us here are defenders of arts and culture.

• (1640)

I am from a rural riding where arts and culture play a major role, where painters and writers and other artists have a vitality all their own. Charlevoix has often provided a background, both literally and figuratively, for very substantial works of art and it has presided over the birth and development of some truly exceptional painters and artists here in Canada.

As Members of Parliament and representatives of our ridings, we are supposed to defend not only arts and culture but also health, agriculture, finance and regional development. We have those mandates as well. And we could expatiate on those subjects as well. We could do so and it would be our right to do so. All of us here, Quebecers and Canadians, are defenders of arts and culture, and we have all noticed how difficult it is to promote our identity and our culture. It is difficult for us Quebecers, and it is even harder for the anglophone community, against 220 million Americans who are also English-speaking. We understand. We also know that our governments have spent considerable sums of money to try and promote this collective resistance and affirm our identity as Canadians and Quebecers.

Like many regional Members, I represent one of the smaller, distant ridings. I suppose I could make a fuss and roundly criticize what is wrong with cultural development, regional development and health services. If we just consider our major Government agencies, for instance Radio-Canada, in my region, we do not have the resources, in spite of the Corporation's $800 million budget, to cover regional news adequately. We are being subsidized piecemeal, with a part-time reporter and a part-time team who work more or less freelance as events come up. For years we have been asking for a small fraction of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's $800-million budget. We have yet to receive it.

Often what our Government is asking us to do about communications, arts and culture is that a more rational use be made of the resources made available to these large agencies. It is a pressing issue, because in my riding, which covers a vast territory but has a population of only 75,000, we have not had what we feel we are entitled to in terms of communications, arts and culture. We would probably be the first among the Members of the Quebec caucus and in fact among many other Members in Canada to criticize and to ask for more. We are as much in favour of arts and culture as the next person. There is an insatiable need generally and especially in our region for resources which are unfortunately very limited. And our Government has asked the various departments to participate in an exercise to rationalize their spending, and this applies to all the departments, including Health and Regional Development, and this exercise in rationalization applies both to staff requirements and the way resources are used.

We are also interested in developing our culture and in safeguarding and affirming our identity. We certainly are. Unfortunately, we are faced with the very pressing need to reorganize Government finances. We are facing, as several Members said before, a deficit of astronomical proportions which, if left to grow unchecked, would leave us no arts or culture or communications or agriculture or health to talk about. We would be absolutely incapable of carrying out our responsibilities in these areas.

I think that we should consider this motion moved by the opposition as a way to re-affirm the important contribution of the arts and culture industry in Canada. I agree with the dear colleague the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood and the other members who have insisted on the need to promote both arts and culture in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, but I think they went a little too far when they blamed the government for not supporting the artistic community in Canada. They quoted some figures concerning the workers within this industry, indicating that writers apparently earn an average of $7,000 a year, poets of course earn even less, and some song writers maybe a little more or a little less, but we could quote other figures concerning other categories of workers, the tinplate workers for instance, and end up with equally distressing results. I think that the problems we are faced with in the area of job creation affect Canadian workers generally, both men and women, and not specifically those who are involved in the arts and culture industry. On the other hand, I think that the individuals who are involved in this industry and who demonstrate a very high level of creativity—the real artists and communicators—will usually resist excessive government assistance. They will insist on the need for them to protect their freedom, expression, initiative, leadership and creativity. Together with several of my colleagues, I feel that the very small cut which the government has decided to make maybe one of those that will hurt the least throughout all departements generally. I think that this effort of rationalization must apply also to the communications and culture community. It does not mean that we are against arts and culture. On the contrary, during the forthcoming year, we are going to ask the Canadian people to make an extraordinary effort of rationalization in the best interests of arts and culture and all the other areas of economic life in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we should not consider this motion as one of censure, but rather as an effort on the part of the opposition parties to emphasize the importance of the arts and culture industry in Canada. Such a motion I could heartily support. We, on the government side, also believe in the promotion of this industry. Some have insisted on the need to fight as Canadians and Quebecers to preserve our identity. I think it is a never ending fight. However, I believe that it is not a fight that can be won merely by throwing money at the problem or by having automatic or statutory subsidies. This is a responsibility we must assume both individually and collectively. And should we measure our interest in an issue on the unlimited amounts of money we are willing to spend on it? I do not think so, and that is the source of our creativity and strength in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, I mean, the need to resist outside overwhelming influences and especially to promote the best and most beautiful things we have.

I feel, therefore, that this motion of the opposition goes far beyond its objectives, and probably like most of my colleagues, I am not prepared to support this proposal.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I say that state patronage in the area of arts and culture is highly desirable, but it will have to be critically examined in the best interests of those men and women it is meant to support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

• (1650)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) said that the artists have insatiable needs. Could he tell us whether an artist who, according to what he said himself, earns about $7,000 has insatiable needs or makes insatiable demands? Considering how much we earn in this House, it is ridiculous to tell the public that an artist is insatiable if he wants to make $8,000 or $9,000 instead of $7,000. I would ask him to explain what he means.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, of course, I said: when the needs are insatiable. I would like, my dear colleague, to tell you about the dozens of grant applications I personally receive from cultural groups of all kinds and from artists who ask my Government and the Department for all kinds of subsidies. I certainly do not think that $7,000 is enough for a writer, a poet, a musician, or another artist who tries to live on his work. That is not what I meant. What I want to say is that, in this field, like in any other, in spite of the best of intentions, we are short of resources. If we keep on borrowing on the future at interest rates of 12, 15, 20 or 22 per cent, as you did yourselves, we shall be mortgaging the future of tomorrow's artists, writers and other Canadian workers.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix would also have us believe that he understands the problem of anglophones in Canada. As an English Canadian, I would not presume to say that I understand completely the language problem in Quebec. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that the province of Quebec, its culture, the French Canadian culture has a major advantage over English Canadian culture which the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) does not seem to understand. Our problem is that we are so close to the United States. I myself live about 45 kilometers from the border. There are six million people living around what is called the Golden Horseshoe in southwestern Ontario. These people are bombarded day and night with the so-called American culture. I do not know whether William Shatner and Lorne Greene are true culture symbols, but people like them have gone to the United States to work on television, on radio, and so on. Because of the unique situation of Quebec, of which the Minister of Communications and the Quebec Members are aware, it is much easier to promote French culture and language throughout Canada because you are a tight-knit group, and linguistically, you are the only ones who can protect yourselves in North America. English-speaking Canadians, however, have to fight not only to protect their language, but also to put some distance between themselves and the United States. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Charlevoix how he can claim to understand the situation of English-speaking Canadians who live so close to the United States when his situation is quite different.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I feel the same as you do. You know our problems as a French-speaking community. In Quebec, I would point out that we are just as much invaded. We are a just a tiny community of six or seven million people as against 200 or 250 million giants, and our own Quebec also is invaded by American programs because of the cable communication explosion, a normal and desirable phenomenon in itself. We have in Montreal, in Quebec City and elsewhere dozens of TV stations which night after night are bearing down on us and foisting a culture that is foreign to us. I easily relate the problems that are experienced, even though our language is helping us protect our culture—

[English]

I know that our language protects us against this powerful mass of an English community.

[Translation]

But you will admit that I can also claim to appreciate the difficulties faced by Canadians living very close to American cities, near the 40th parallel, and who are constantly under American influence. I also appreciate the importance to the English-speaking community of maintaining close links with the French-speaking and other communities because Canada is a mosaic and of course we should stick together. This attempt at rationalizing must also obtain on the fiscal level, so that Government agencies can redirect their objectives, reconsider their actions and ensure that they maximize the objectives we both share.

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member has suggested that the arts and culture sector is less affected by cuts than other areas of the economy. Is he aware that on the average, there are 5 per cent cuts in the arts, while in other areas, the figure is 3 per cent? How can he say that the arts are less affected than other sectors, when they have to cope with heavier cuts?

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I think that an analysis of the figures and the new budget that should be tabled . . . because actually, reference is made to a number of rationalizations that are forced upon some departments, I think the next budget will clearly establish the extent of the effort that will be requested from each department, in every area, and we can then make comparisons, favourable or otherwise, with the arts and culture sector.

[English]

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, my question is more of a follow-up to those posed by the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Does the Hon. Member's area feel threatened by the actions of the Government in the field of arts and culture?

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I think that our area, under the previous Government, never did receive much of the Government's generosity in terms of arts and culture development. And even the CBC never carried out its mandate or played its role. But along with you, I will go on fighting with the Corporation, and I am doing so in order that finally, after that attempt at rationalizing its budget, its staff, it can provide a small permanent information team.

Of course there are other departments which helped me recently, with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald); very little seems to have been invested, some $70,000 in a music school that will operate all summer. And, of course, I also accept, my dear colleague, the rationalization effort that is requested from every level of this Government, so that later on we may in Charlevoix and elsewhere maximize Government initiatives in favour of arts and culture.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have hundreds of files. I believe a number of Hon. Members have spoken about the economics of supporting the Canadian cultural community but I can say that the question of arts funding and the question of cut-backs is far more fundamental.

• (1700)

The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) asked us whether we should mortgage our children for the sake of the arts. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if this Government continues to pull out the financial rug from under cultural organizations and individuals, there may simply be no country on which to take out a mortgage. That is the basic issue. It is an issue which has unfortunately escaped the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

I would like to take a few moments to read from some notes for a speech made by the Hon. Minister of Communications when he was looking at his own Department's performance. Just read through the plan, Mr. Speaker. It says that the arts and culture sector investment strategy is an indicator of sound management; that support for artistic and cultural activities should take a new direction; that through regulation a climate favourable to economic growth can be restored; that a return to basic objectives is one of the Government's economic priorities. Throughout this discussion we have heard about the Government's economic priorities.

I would like to speak for a moment as an English Canadian living very close to the border of the United States. When I see suggestions in national newspapers by economists and others, whom I would have thought had a stake in this country, that we should sell our water to the United States to encourage the U.S. to get into a free trade deal, or that we should throw in our lot with the United States because, after all, we are all really one and the same, one big happy family, that makes me uncertain, uncertain not only about my future but about the future of my country. If there is one instrument, one tool, one resource to which we Canadians can look for the ability to fashion our own future, it is the cultural and the artistic community.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he went to Bonn, sold himself as the great negotiator and spoke about the unique Canadian heritage which allowed him to speak to Mr. Mitterrand in French, to Mr. Reagan in English and to play the role of the third party as it has so often been played in Canadian international affairs. That kind of heritage and culture is under severe threat as a direct result of this Government's attempts to abort the kind of financial initiatives that we will need to secure the future of the artistic community, in particular the artistic community within English Canada.

I have had an opportunity to speak with artists from coast to coast. They have begged the Minister of Communications to look not only at the situation and the cultural integrity of the Province of Quebec but elsewhere. I believe the situation of Quebec is unique, and I think the people of Quebec are very lucky because their language allows them to provide a buffer between themselves and that most populated country to the south of us. We in English Canada do not share that buffer. One of the government Members stood up and cited Canadian culture through William Shatner and Lorne Green. I thought I would have heard about Paul Anka and all of those other great Canadian artists who have made their fortunes through Americanization and who have gone to live in the United States. As a Canadian, I do not see our being in competition with Dallas. A reference was made earlier today in the House to the fact that the Beachcombers can compete with Dallas any day. I do not want my country and my culture to be in competition with Dallas.

I think we have a very unique culture which has been developed as a mixed approach of public and private sector intervention. We can get mired in financial arguments. I have made them and other Members have made them. We have said what kind of intensive job-creative potential the cultural industry has across the mosaic of Canada. We know through the development of tourism that this country has the capacity to compete on an international scale for tourism dollars. These dollars come into Canada because of our cultural mosaic. But it is more important than that. It is the very heart and soul of what has made this country great.

A reference was made earlier to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the lines that forge this country from coast to coast. Canada does have a unique history which has allowed us, through a mixed economy and a mixed approach of government intervention and private sector involvement, to build along the rail lines, along the lines of communication. But now we see a Government that says it wants to privatize. It says, "We do not believe the public sector and the Government have a lead role to play". We have a Minister of Communications who said in his own statement in his annual report that he is not interested in fighting for the people he should be representing, namely, the cultural community of Canada. He is too busy justifying the Government's initiatives in the area of deficit reduction, which was certainly not made clear to the Canadian people before September 4.

When the Prime Minister was the esteemed Leader of the Opposition, he was asked by the cultural community to comment on his Party's initiatives if and when the day comes that the Tories should form the Government. We heard then statements of cultural intent and principle, principle which, I believed as did other Canadians, the Prime Minister would stand by. I believe principles still mean something in politics. When I look at the principles endorsed by the Conservative Party before September 4, it is a shocking about-face.

The job of the Minister of Communications by definition, just as it is our job on this side of the House as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to oppose, is to speak first and foremost in Cabinet and to fight for his constituents. You saw the Minister in the House the day that the cultural communities from across Canada came to plead their case, Mr. Speaker. They asked and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) asked the Minister whether he would speak for the cultural communities. In fact, the Minister refused to reply. I am not surprised that the Minister refused to reply. If you look at the statement and declaration of principles of the Conservative Party, it is clear, as it is clear with so many of its other "statements of principle" that they are not worth the paper they are written on.

The Tories talk about the Applebaum-Hébert report. What about their statement, "We will begin immediately to consult with groups and individuals in the cultural sector on all aspect of policy development"? Did the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) consult with the cultural community when he moved in with cut-backs that were going to justify the very survival of public broadcasting in this country? No, the Minister of Finance moved immediately in a wholesale and arbitrary fashion. Not only did the Minister choose to allow the major cut-backs to impact on the arts, but he also said that the art community was not capable of cleaning up its own house and that he was going to appoint his own hit men to go and clean up in organizations such as CBC.

Mr. St. Germain: Hit men? I do not remember the Minister saying hit men. Let us keep the record straight.

Ms. Copps: The Progressive Conservative Party of Canada believed in the arm's length approach to the arts community. The Hon. Member says he does not recall the Minister saying hit men. He didn't say hit men. I said hit men.

Mr. St. Germain: You said he said that.

Ms. Copps: The reason I said hit men was because the Conservative Party said it was going to maintain an arm's length approach to the arts, and directly upon the Finance Minister's cut-backs, he appointed his own team of hit men to go in and clean house in the CBC. That was in direct contradiction to the expressed statement of principle in which they indicated that they were committed to improving the quality and quantity of employment in the cultural sector, in which they were committed to the arm's length principle for the arts, and in which they were committed, according to their own statement, to real growth in federal contributions to this sector. That was the statement of principle of the Progressive Conservative Party before September 4.

• (1710)

However, something strange happened between September 4 and September 5. We have heard it expressed in the House of Commons today. What happened, in the words of the Hon. Minister of Communications, was called economic priorities, departmental priorities. Rather than following through on its promise to maintain an arm's length approach and allowing the arts community to flourish with increased funding, the Government decided that it was more important to cut the deficit than to save Canada's culture. Its members moved in, without consultation, without the kind of discussion promised by the Prime Minister, without the promises which were made in the little PC promise book. One of its campaign promises was that the PC Party was committed to maintaining federal funding for the arts, agencies and councils in line with inflation.

We heard a very impressive plea today from the Hon. Member for Charlevoix who called upon Canadians to understand that it was not only the Parties in opposition who were interested in preserving and aiding the flourishing of Canadian culture, that it was also the government Party. I sympathize with him, sitting over here on this side of the House. Unfortunately, the voice of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix is not being heard. It is not being heard in his Party. It is clear that his own Cabinet spokesman is not prepared to speak out for that constituent group. I am sure the Hon. Member for Charlevoix must be feeling a little down and out, in that the promises which he and his Party made in the pocket planner of Tory priorities did not tell the Canadian people in advance of September 4 what they were telling the Canadian Council on the Arts and artists from coast to coast, that they would keep up their funding in line with the rate of inflation and that they would maintain the arm's length principle. But the moment they were elected they reversed all the principles they espoused with regard to arts and cultural groups across the country. The Hon. Member must be somewhat embarrassed to discover, to his own dismay, that they have succeeded in reversing all the principles espoused during the election campaign.

I am glad the Minister is here because I want to speak to him as an English Canadian, one who has lived in the most populated area of Canada closest to the United States of America. I feel extremely threatened by what his cuts will do to our culture, particularly the culture in the English speaking community in Canada. I am not sure the Minister has an understanding of the kind of assault on Canadian identity which occurs every day through the public airwaves, arts and literature, theatre and all forms of communication to which we are subjected from the United States of America. In reconsidering his role, which he tends to see as one of fiscal manager, I want to indicate to him that we have a fiscal manager or an alleged fiscal manager in this House. We have the Minister of Finance who brought in his private sector buddies to try to tell him how to clean up his house. We need a fighter, a fighter for arts and culture in Cabinet. There are many people across Canada who are looking to the Minister to provide that leaderhsip. Unfortunately, what we see instead are statements like the one he tabled in the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture wherein he indicated that his number one initiative was an expenditure plan reflecting priorities, government economic priorities, departmental priorities.

Does the Minister talk about what it does for Canadians to have a publicly financed, publicly accessible nation-wide broadcasting system? He talked about investment strategy as an indicator of sound management. The Minister himself, not only today in the House but on a number of other occasions, clearly showed Canadians that he is not prepared to apply sound management principles to his own travel practices, yet he expects the Canadians arts community to bite the bullet on $7,000, $8,000 or $9,000 per year. He expects the Canadian arts and culture community to apply for welfare so that its members can apply whatever abilities they have out in the cultural community. He expects the arts and culture community to stand back while Cabinet Ministers are flown from coast to coast and internationally at a cost literally of thousands and thousands of dollars. Yet that same Minister tells the arts and culture community that he will not speak for them.

Who is speaking for those people? Who is speaking for Canadians who feel that the very future of this country is at stake? Who is speaking for those Canadians who understand that it has been through a mix of private and public sector involvement that we have been able to develop national institutions of which this country can be proud? Who in Cabinet will be speaking for those people? Are we merely to follow the line we have seen expressed so ably by the Prime Minister of Canada? The Prime Minister seems prepared not only to sell out our economy but to sell out our culture because, after all, we can watch American television, we can buy American books, we can have that assault of English culture from the United States, we do not need an indigenous Canadian identity in which the Government is used as an instrument of public policy change and the Government plays the lead role in ensuring that Canadian culture not only survives but thrives.

A number of Members here from the Province of Quebec should congratulate themselves. I think they have done an incredible job against very great adds in ensuring the growth and the flourishing of the Francophone culture in Canada. That same capacity or same availability in the English Canadian community is not as apparent. I am frightened as a Canadian that if the Government persists in cutting back and in refusing to play the lead role in the development of Canadian culture in an ongoing process, we will in fact become mesmerized by our neighbours to the south.

The development of massive telecommunications within the last 20 years has played a vital role in allowing Canadians from coast to coast to see and hear each other. I love to listen to Cross Country Checkup so that I can hear what is happening, what people are thinking in Newfoundland and what people are saying in Victoria. That program allows me an access to the hearts and minds of Canadians from coast to coast. However, that is not a role which should be played by the private sector. The private sector does not have as its responsibility, as its raison d'être, the development, the flourishing and the sustenance of the Canadian culture. The private sector has profit as its first motive, and more power to that sector. Profit is not a dirty word. At the same time, we cannot allow the institutions upon which the country was built and upon which it will flourish, the culture and arts of our community, to be thrown to the wind by saying that the private sector can carry it on. We need to work together. We have had a mixed economy approach and a mixed cultural approach, which I believe have been effective for all Canadians. I believe the Government should support that policy, not the policy of annihilation upon which it has embarked since September 4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

Mr. Masse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

First I would like to tell my colleague that, unlike most Members of the House, I admire her personality to a certain extent. She is energetic and dynamic, but I am not overly impressed by her intellectual honesty and her knowledge of history. I must point out to her that since about 1920, for nearly 50 years, her Party has been responsible for administering this country and I share the concern she has expressed today about the urgency of promoting the cultural interests of all Canadians. Today's concern stems mostly from the leadership of her Party over the last few generations, and if we now find ourselves in a difficult economic situation we owe it primarily to the economic mismanagement of the previous administration. In that context and regardless of the harm that may have been done by the Liberal Party at the economic and cultural levels, it is difficult today to make a fresh start towards more challenging cultural objectives. I can assure you that if our predecessors, the Members of her Government, had been as deeply concerned as I am about the future of Canada's cultural community, she would not have spoken as she did today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would rather not comment on the integrity of this Government because it would take more than ten minutes. Unfortunately the Minister was not here when I mentioned the promises made by his Government this year and last year, over the last seven or eight months, and in their quest for the crown which they finally got with a majority of 211 Members. The representatives of the Progressive Conservative Party did make promises to the cultural community, but who cares about promises now! The Minister himself lacks the courage to speak up in Cabinet and remind his colleagues of the promises made to the cultural community. I am a woman of my word and I will keep my promises. You have no right to talk about integrity, for I have kept my promises, but broken promises is all we have had from the Progressive Conservative Party since September 4.

I can assure the Minister that the Liberal Party is a new Party, but he is not aware of that phenomenon. I know he is old, Mr. Speaker, he is talking about events dating back 60 years, I know he is old. Well, I was born in 1952 and I will tell you about something that has radically changed the image of Canada—the age of telecommunications which began in the 1960-70 decade, that has changed the image of Canada, and it is in that respect that we feel threatened by the United States. It has nothing to do with literature dating back to 1920, as the Minister claimed. I could take it upon myself to suggest that he might review his historic facts before talking about an artistic revolution that began way back in 1920. Indeed the problem created by the American threat began with the advent of television, but I realize he is much too old to appreciate that.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, what encouraged us today to put forward this motion for debate, which has been an excellent debate from what I have seen and heard over television, was that it had become clear over the years that the state of the cultural community in Canada had been deteriorating. I am not prepared to point fingers at a particular Minister, but I do point them at the Government generally. In the economic statement of November and the general discussion, the cultural community has, by and large, lost any faith it had in the Government in terms of supporting it in any real way. Having said that, I want to direct my comments to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) along the same lines as the Minister.

Over the last five years, I do not know if there would be hundreds, but there would certainly be dozens and dozens of groups of artists of one kind or another who came to Parliament Hill, lobbied and made the case that most of the members they represented were living in a state of poverty. That went on for years and years. I support many of the points the Hon. Member made, but what does she have to say about the fact that it was the Party that she represents today, when it was in government for many years, that had these delegations coming time after time, month after month, year after year, explaining how their members were living in poverty as they tried to develop their artistic talents and to provide the cultural fabric for Canadian society. Does she not find herself to be a little bit hypocritical today by standing up and not accepting some of the responsibility for the fact that these cultural agencies are in such turmoil?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think there are two fundamental issues that the Hon. Member is forgetting. First, the statement which was issued by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) deals with a direct cut to the artistic and cultural community which is almost double that which is being levelled at other communities across this country. That is the substance of the motion introduced by the Hon. Member's Party and that is the substance in part of what we must address today.

The second issue, one which unfortunately no government Member has had the courage to address today, is the issue of the arm's length relationship which was sacrosanct. Liberal Governments did not interfere with the arm's length relationship between the arts community and the Government. In fact, it was through the initiative of the Minister of Finance that the federal Government is now setting up a hit team to go into the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to determine where the cuts will be made. That arm's length principle is a principle which this Government guaranteed in its promises to the people before September 4, of which this Party is proud. That is the sum and substance of what we have to discuss today, the arm's length relationship and the Conservative Party's move to make cut-backs to the arts community that are double those he is making to other communities.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that it has been an interesting debate. However, it absolutely amazes Canadians right across this country when somebody like the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) gets up and says that her Liberal Party operated at arm's length. I question the integrity of anybody who would make a statement like that. That is irresponsible.

Ms. Copps: Put the facts on the table.

Mr. St. Germain: I was in this House. I saw what happened. I saw the appointments.

Mr. Gauthier: Put the facts down.

Ms. Copps: Put the facts on the table. Don't challenge my integrity unless you are prepared to put the facts on the table.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Ms. Copps: Don't challenge my integrity unless you are prepared to put the facts on the table.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, an arm's length approach is something for which this Party will strive. It will be seen in the near future. It is being seen right now. Let's go back—

Ms. Copps: The only arm's length you know is amputation.

Mr. St. Germain: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East alludes to the fact that whatever happened in the past she is not responsible for. The people you associate with—

Ms. Copps: I am proud to be a Liberal.

Mr. St. Germain: The people you associate with and organize with is what you are judged by. The history of the Liberal Party in this country has totally devastated the economy and that is why this debate is taking place today.

Mr. Gauthier: Tell Frank Miller that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. St. Germain: Obviously we have hit a sensitive spot. They know how badly they have destroyed the arts and the economy which has supported the arts to a degree and which we are prepared to continue to support in a reasonable—

• (1730)

Ms. Copps: He can't make a statement.

Mr. St. Germain: I can make a statement, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. May I remind the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) that in this very specific case, while she made her speech, no one from either side of the House—

Ms. Copps: He's not asking a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): No, nobody interrupted the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mind your own business!

Mr. Rossi: Those are partisan remarks, you have no right to say that.

[English]

Mr. Towers: If you can't have respect for yourself, have some respect for the Speaker.

Mr. Rossi: Yes, that's very partisan what he is doing.

An Hon. Member: He's the Speaker.

Mr. Rossi: Never mind, he's not allowed to be partisan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Hopefully it is in everyone's interest that one way or the other, the period allowed for questions and comments is now over. We shall resume debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to support the opposition motion. I would like to touch on two areas. First, I would like to deal with the need for cultural services in the regions of our country, and, second, I would like to deal with the delivery of those services by radio.

Since September 5, we in this House have heard much about the deficit. We do have a deficit; we have a cultural deficit. That deficit is very predominant in areas like northwestern Ontario, the far North and all of the northern parts of our provinces where there are small population groups that do not have the wherewithal to support the kind of things that people in Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver take for granted. My home community of Thunder Bay is sometimes referred to as the "Hogtown of Northwestern Ontario" in relation to how Toronto is seen by others. Thunder Bay is ripe with culture. There is the Thunder Bay Symphony; Magnus Theatre; Kam Theatre; Cambrian Players, an amateur theatre group; the Lakehead Choral Group which I will be seeing tomorrow night; the Vesnyanka Dancers, a local Ukrainian group; and the Lakehead Mandolin Orchestra.

We in Thunder Bay have a lot of the same opportunities as larger cities but the problem that exists in northwestern Ontario, as can be attested to by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry), is that the small communities that are 60 miles, 120 miles or 240 miles away from Thunder Bay or Winnipeg do not have that kind of access to the arts. They do not have the opportunitity to see a symphony play. They do not have the opportunity to see a dramatic play or a musical unless they travel great distances and stay overnight in communities like Thunder Bay or Winnipeg.

Instead of cutting back on support for the arts and culture, we should, on the one hand, sustain what we have so that the existing groups and services remain available, and, on the other, we should provide the funding that will do some outreaching. We need funding to take the Thunder Bay Symphony across northwestern Ontario. It has been able to go across northwestern Ontario for a number of years because of Ontario Government funding, but that funding has now been eliminated. Arts organizations should be brought to the schools in Atikokan, Fort Frances, Ear Falls and Red Lake. They should be brought to these places so that our children can be exposed to something other than country and western or rock music.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about Friendly?

Mr. Angus: We will come to Friendly. We should bring our theatre groups, our painters and our sculptors to the outlying areas. Some of the static displays should be put on the road so that they can be made available to people throughout the regions. That is what is important and that is what we should be doing in order to promote our national identity and to make sure that we do not isolate ourselves in our own little bailiwicks.

That, Mr. Speaker, brings me to my second point, which is the question of delivery of services by electronic means. In northwestern Ontario, we have been extremely fortunate for the past 10 years to have had a radio station which is an arm of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, namely, Radio Station CBQ. This radio station is based in Thunder Bay but provides a regional focus. Prior to the Government's massive cut-backs and indirect interference in the operation of the CBC, the services of CBQ were reduced.

At one time, there was a program in the morning that was broadcast throughout northwestern Ontario by CBQ. Simultaneously, there was a program that dealt with the city and the immediate area of Thunder Bay itself. We were able to provide a regional information network that was truly regional at the same time as we provided a Thunder Bay focus. The Corporation, in its wisdom, decided that it had to make some cuts and it merged those two programs. There was a dilution of the services to the region. The time of the announcers, the research staff and the news people had to be spread so thinly that if something was happening in Ear Falls, for instance, it got covered only half of the time.

As a result of the $85 million reduction in the CBC budget, there have been serious reductions in service. These reductions may not equate the kind of reductions we saw in Ottawa, Windsor or Winnipeg, but for northwestern Ontario they are vital. We lost three full-time people and three part-time people at the radio station. In terms of numbers, as compared to 1,500 jobs as we were originally told or 700 jobs as was suggested today, the loss of those six jobs is not that great, but it meant that six services would no longer be available to northwestern Ontario.

In a community that has the only permanent international world-class sporting facility, we no longer have a dedicated sports editor. There are international events which take place in Thunder Bay like the Big Thunder Ski Jump. The whole world pays attention to us but CBC does not have a permanent news person in that community any longer to cover those kinds of events.

One of the things of which we in northwestern Ontario are proud is our ability as a broadcast centre to go beyond our own boundaries and to reach out across the country. We were able to do that through the personality of Arthur Black, an announcer who was not native to northwestern Ontario but moved there a number of years ago. He developed a style and manner that gradually grew to the point at which he was syndicated across the country, and then to the point at which the network finally decided that it made sense to originate network programming from a community like Thunder Bay. Thanks to the CBC cuts, Arthur Black's Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario show was cut in half and, for a number of reasons, he was in effect forced to go elsewhere. Beginning this summer, he will be based in the Toronto area. No longer will the show have the northwestern Ontario flavour. The longer Arthur Black is away from northwestern Ontario, the less able he will be to continue picking up on the sense of the environment and the people of the area.

My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and myself entered into a campaign designed to make sure that the CBC management, the Minister and the bureaucracy of CBC knew that we did not like this tampering with our service. We had well over 1,000 replies to our campaign, and as all Hon. Members know, we tend to measure the importance of an issue by the number of pieces of paper that come across our desks. Very clearly we were gratified by the very wide regional response we received. I would like to read into the record some of the responses we received:

Keep fighting for CBQ, the CBC and Canadian culture. The moment we stop supporting our cultural identity is the moment we start becoming Americans.

● (1740)

We are very disappointed in the cut-back, we live in a rural area and this is the only radio station (Canadian) we can get all the time—

Arthur Black is excellent! Thunder Bay CBC is a well done program given the size or lack of—

Please do not foist a centralized CBC on us! I like to think there is sufficient Northwestern Ontario information to warrant continuing CBQ regional programming!

Over the years we have noted with interest and approval the improvement in CBC radio coverage of events in the Northwest. We are saddened, concerned and somewhat angered by the current cuts as they affect CBQ—

The new Government of Canada is turning into a destructive machine not a constructive unit as the Canadian people had hoped.

We are insulted enough in this area without this cut.

Notwithstanding the popular position Arthur Black holds in our spread out community, we don't want our CBQ station slipping at all! What good would a phone-in program be to us people (in the summer months when we move to our summer homes with no phones). That so-called $75 million saving will most likely be spent on some cock-eyed stunt that will never benefit the people in the North and all.

Those are some examples of what individuals have said to us. I would point out that copies of this material have been forwarded to the Minister, to the President and to CBC officials as well as to the station itself.

We also received correspondence from the Thunber Bay National Exhibition Centre and from the Centre for Indian Art. The letter reads:

We believe that these cut-backs will affect the quality of public programming in general, and as well, will reduce the opportunities which non-profit groups such as ours will have to inform the public of the Northwest about the many government-financed services which our institution provides for this area.

The Senior Citizens Intergroup Council passed the following resolution:

Whereas: CBQ Radio plays a major role in tying together Northwestern Ontario by attempting to provide local information and programming to all parts of the region, and,

Whereas: recent cut-backs in staff and programs at CBQ Radio will impair the ability of CBQ to fulfill this vital role as the voice of Northwestern Ontario,—

Therefore, they oppose the reduction of service. The Thunder Bay Multicultural Association wrote:

We believe CBQ Radio plays a vital role in bringing together small communities by broadcasting regional news, events and activities. Awareness of the history and uniqueness of Northwestern Ontario is increased through such programs as "The Great Northwest", "Radio Noon" and "The 4 to 6 Show" which features profiles of area personalities, histories of communities and other topics of local and regional interest. These cut-backs will hurt Northwestern Ontario by reducing or eliminating regional content.

The Cambrian Presbytery of the United Church of Canada wrote:

The reduction of Radio Noon and replacing this with a direct Toronto feed is contributing further to a feeling of isolation, and being resident of an unimportant part of our country.

The International Association of Business Communicators, a group of people who are not predominantly involved in any one of the communications industries, wrote:

We believe that CBQ Radio has a vital role to play in the geographically large and sparsely populated area of Northwestern Ontario.

We have received comments from co-op housing residents and the Thunder Bay Potters Guild. All of the correspondence we have received indicates clearly the broad-based support which regional radio stations have. We had a furore in the House over the whole question when we heard that the station in Gander, Newfoundland was being closed. We heard about the campaign which was launched to protect that station and to get it back on the air. That campaign was successful, and I am very pleased about that. But that campaign reached into Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario. People followed that campaign with keen interest. They knew that there was a danger, should members of the Conservative Party who have it in for the CBC continue to get their way, that CBQ in Thunder Bay might become nothing more than a repeater station for network programming. CBQ would then lose the regional aspect and the news-gathering function which it has.

For example, in the recent provincial election in Ontario, CBQ did not do local reporting. It relied on network programming. It sent a person from Thunder Bay to Toronto to cover northwestern Ontario, which is anywhere from 800 miles to 1,500 miles away from Toronto. I realize that electronics are wonderful these days, but I think to have a number of people in a studio in Thunder Bay reaching out to northwestern Ontario for local coverage makes a lot of sense.

The people of Thunder Bay want to ensure that they can keep in touch with each other. By "each other" I mean the communities around northwestern Ontario. So much of what happens to one community happens to another. Therefore, it is important to know what happens.

For instance, five or six years ago the mines were closed in Atikokan. That is being relived today in Ear Falls. That situation will be relived in other communities as the years go by. It is important for those communities to hear what is going on. If there is only a network service with no local programming, the people will not know to the same extent what is happening at the time it is happening. They will feel much more isolated.

There is another danger. There is the danger of the influence of American radio and television which comes into northwestern Ontario. If we do not have the counterbalance of CBQ to ensure that regional programming and information as well as network information are available, we will become closer to the Americans and we will disappear as a nation.

There is a danger also within the context of provinces. A major portion of northwestern Ontario, particularly Atikokan which is on the Manitoba border, receives much of its information from Manitoba and the City of Winnipeg. We in this Party are quite pleased because most of the information that is received is about the NDP Government. However, in the context of Ontario, it is important for those people to know what their elected people are doing and what decisions are being made which affect them.

We know that there are those in the Conservative Party who would like to see the CBC totally dismantled. I hope they never have their way. I believe they are misguided. It can be compared to people who do not like a symphony. They say they will not spend any money on the symphony because they do not like it. However, those people forget that there are a lot of people who enjoy a symphony and need it for their own mental survival in society. I believe that we must recognize the CBC, in the broadest sense, as part of that mechanism which allows us to be sane and to remain Canadians. Private networks cannot do that. Private networks will not do that because they are in the ratings game. Every time the BBM is prepared to do a study, where do the electronic commercial stations turn? They turn to newspaper advertising in an attempt to entice people over to their stations in order to get their points up so they can sell advertising.

The CBC has never been in the ratings game. It is there to provide a balanced service to a cross-section of society. If it was not there for that purpose, we would not have French-language programming in some Ontario communities where the French population is small. However, it is seen as a necessity to provide those links.

We must reverse this trend. We must put the supports in place so that we have the kind of cultural milieu which we need. We must encourage it, not discourage it. Also, we must ensure that our communication tools in the public sector are there so that Canadians will know what is happening all across the land, while at the same time they know what is happening in their communities and regions.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this matter and I look forward to questions and comments from my fellow colleagues.

• (1750)

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I share with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) his great admiration for Arthur Black. I like to drive my son to hockey on Saturday when Arthur Black's program is on the radio, and my son learns from it as much as I do. I hope that the Hon. Member is not suggesting that he would like to see the arm's length relationship change in such a way that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) could bring Arthur Black back to Thunder Bay, back to the same program and the same format. I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he believes in the arm's length relationship? It seems to me that he is essentially asking the Minister to reach out at arm's length and put Arthur Black back into his previous program. That would concern me because that would not be an arm's length relationship he is advocating. So I do want to know the Hon. Member's Party's view on that question.

The previous speaker alluded to the same subject with comments which are far from accurate. I think of the President of the CBC, Mr. Juneau, who was a Minister in Mr. Trudeau's Government and a great friend of his. Is that an arm's length relationship? The head of the National Film Board is a relative of Mr. Juneau's. Is that an arm's length relationship? One of Mr. Trudeau's major aides, Mr. Porteous, was put into an important position in our cultural life in Canada. Is that an arm's length relationship? The granting councils for culture were put on a very short time and planning budgetary cycle in order to keep them in line. Is that an arm's length relationship? I am suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, that an arm's length relationship never existed with the previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hockin: And if we are going to change it—and that is an interesting question, perhaps we should change it—we will at least be honest about it. I ask the Hon. Member what his Party's position is on this particular subject?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. Let me respond in two ways; first, even if this Government were to put the $85 million back right now, Arthur Black is gone from Thunder Bay. That is one of the unfortunate realities. But I raised the whole aspect as an indication, given the arm's length relationship you talk about, that economic decisions made by the Minister and the Government do create programming decisions. I know that the Minister did not make the decision to cut Arthur Black's show in Thunder Bay in half. Nor did he make the decision that three full-time positions and three part-time positions will be cut. We have to recognize, however, that when decisions are made to reduce or increase budgets, those decisions do affect people. It is a fine line in terms of the arm's length relationship and I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying. I would love it if the Minister had the power to put Arthur Black back in Thunder Bay, but that is not possible or practical at this point.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus). I believe the Minister should be complimented for the way in which he has adjudicated the cuts which he has had to make within his Ministry. The motion with which we are dealing today talks about the cultural community and the tremendous cut-backs which have occurred, but the Minister has definitely taken a very minor portion of funding from the cultural groups. I think that if the Hon. Member were to look at the principal budget for the arts council, he would find that the cuts are less than 1 per cent. Why would the Hon. Member not think that perhaps that is appropriate because he knows we are in a deficit situation and people are looking for a judicious way of spending one's dollars? I would like to hear the Hon. Member's comments on that.

I would also like to echo the remarks of former speakers with respect to the arm's length relationship. I am sure we would all applaud the Minister for his approach in not interfering with how the CBC makes its cuts.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question relates in effect to the need for cuts. The Hon. Member pointed out the small reduction in terms of percentage. But I would suggest to him that his Government per se, and not just the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), has not looked at the areas it should have started from. One appropriate example, given the fact that we have been talking about the communications services in northwestern Ontario, and keeping in mind the price tag of the cuts, is that Great Lakes Forest Products Limited, a company whose major owner is Canadian Pacific Investments, owes the Government in deferred taxes $125 million. Surely some of those taxes could have been brought into the public Treasury in order to prevent, at the very least, the reductions in the CBC budget. I know the Hon. Member cannot respond to me, but I ask him rhetorically whether or not that would be a more appropriate way of getting our house in order?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed listening to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus), especially because, like other Hon. Members, I am a fan of Arthur Black. I want to point out to the Hon. Member, however, that Arthur Black is moving to Toronto. He is not really leaving Canada. Toronto is still part of this country. The loss is really not of the enormity suggested by the Hon. Member, and it is not unique. Larry Zolf is in Toronto and not in Winnipeg because he is another example of a success moving to a larger market. Pierre Burton is in Toronto and not in the Yukon. It is characteristic in any country that artists who succeed in one place may well move to where there is a larger market or audience for them.

Second, I want to say that the suggestion that members of our Party want to dismantle the CBC ignores the fact that the CBC was established by a Conservative Government. It has been substantially financed whenever a Conservative Government has been in office. The Conservative Party, under the Diefenbaker administration, for example, steadfastly defended the independence of the CBC in the face of many who suggested that the CBC was showing a political bias against the Government. All that is a part of history. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has recommitted his Party and his Government to the continuation of the CBC as part of the cultural fabric of Canada. But I think we should face the reality and the logic that it is inconceivable that the various institutions, Departments and agencies of the Crown should be asked to take reductions in their expenditures, so that we could at least begin to address the deficit crisis, but that we should not ask the CBC to take a modest reduction in its expenditure. Indeed, it was much lower than it might have been. I think that in itself, plus the fact that, under this Government, the CBC will be receiving a subsidy approaching $1 billion, indicates the commitment of the Government and of this Party to the ongoing work of the CBC and what it contributes to Canada. I respect the intentions of the Hon. Member as one who values the CBC. I join him in that respect. But let us face the facts and draw conclusions which are upheld by logic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) on a point of order.

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take advantage of this point of order to thank those who took part in the debate, to acknowledge the quality of the speeches and to apologize for having been away during a few hours, because I had to testify before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. I had to introduce a government bill on copyright which is, you will agree, a very important question for Canadian artists and cultural industries.

I hope that parliamentarians will have more opportunities of this kind to state their views on the Canadian cultural policy and that from those proceedings will emerge some directions which the Government will be pleased to follow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order please. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that in accordance with Standing Order 62(11), the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT—REQUEST FOR COMPREHENSIVE REVIEW

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on May 7 I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) a question pertaining to the Young Offenders Act because I am concerned about some aspects of this legislation. As of April 1, 1985, the minimum age for trial in an ordinary or adult court was raised to 18 years. Previously, under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, the minimum was 16 years. One of the serious consequences of this revision is that a person aged perhaps 17 and a half years who killed a person would, under the Young Offenders Act, only be sentenced to a maximum of three years. This is indeed disturbing news. Not only am I concerned about this situation, but in conversation with law enforcement officers I find my concerns are shared.

I am aware that Section 16 of the Young Offenders Act provides a safety valve for dealing with difficult cases, especially where public protection is the key issue. That section provides that, in limited circumstances, with the interests of society in mind, a young offender could face having his case transferred to an ordinary court. It is my understanding that a request for such a transfer could come from the youth court on application of the young person, his counsel or the attorney general or his agent, but not a private prosecutor. A judge may not initiate such an application on his own. The young offender, the parents and the attorney general must first have the opportunity to be heard. If the court was of the opinion that in the interests of society, and having regard for the needs of the young person, that young person should be proceeded against in an ordinary court, then the young person would be tried in an ordinary court and treated as an adult.

What disturbs me, Mr. Speaker, is what happens to those cases where the young offender should be tried in an ordinary court, yet no application for a transfer is made? For example, recently a woman was brutally and viciously raped by a 17-year-old. The offender pleaded guilty and is awaiting sentence. It is anticipated that, in accordance with the Young Offenders Act, he will likely be sentenced to the maximum of three years. Part of this process apparently includes a mandatory requirement for a review of the sentence every six months or every year. Therefore, it is possible that through such review the victim could be recalled. Is it really fair to the victim to initiate all over again the pain and suffering he or she experienced during the commission of the offence? I hardly think so. If this case was tried in an ordinary court, could there not be different results and a different process?

Another point I would like to raise concerns the young offender who is under the age of 12 years. According to the Act, a child under the age of 12 is not subject to prosecution. Let me illustrate my point with an example which occurred in my home city of Toronto. A 10-year-old was caught in a high speed car chase. Because of his age, and in recognition of the Young Offenders Act, there was literally nothing the law could do to him. Perhaps his behaviour could be attributed to a one time occurrence of mischief. However, just this morning the same "child" was caught pulling a fire alarm without reason. The child has admitted that he is aware that because of his age there is nothing the law can do to him; the most he will receive is a slap on the hand.

• (1805)

In Toronto, the Young Offenders Act has left the Toronto Police unable to deal with over 300 cases of burglary, arson, sexual assault and assault because the suspects are all under the age of 12. Apparently, the frequency of violence in this age group is increasing, according to police. This is most distressing. The police feel that their hands are tied.

I am not suggesting that impressionable under 12-year-olds should be detained with older youths, but my question then is how can we deal more effectively with these children without our hands being tied by the Young Offenders Act? It seems to me, though, that there is a great possibility that these child criminals can easily grow up to be hardened street-wise, vicious adult criminals if all they get now for criminal behaviour is a slap on the wrists.

I realize that some changes in the Act were necessary to achieve consistency with provinces where different age categories existed. However, we must be concerned with protecting individuals in society against crime and violence.

We must also treat younger offenders with the greatest care and concern possible. That does not mean we should be too passive or indulgent. We all know what the overly permissive society of the 1960s and 1970s brought us, and I do not think we did that generation any favour.

In summary, my question is to the Solicitor General, asking him to agree to implement a review of the Young Offenders Act, taking into consideration the points I have raised now and the points that colleagues have also brought to his attention.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the genuine concern of the Hon. Member with this very important matter and I congratulate him for expressing his interest.

The Young Offenders Act, proclaimed in force on April 2, 1984, constitutes a major reform of the juvenile justice process in Canada. The most fundamental reform, in my opinion, is its clear recognition that young people are responsible for their conduct and thus should be held accountable for their criminal transgressions. The Act also recognizes, however, that young people should not be treated the same as adults; that because of their immaturity and dependence they require specialized services and dispositions that allow for flexibility and compassion, if the situation necessitates it.

In establishing the uniform maximum age of under 18, the Act clearly recognizes that young persons can commit serious crimes. Although three years is the maximum sentence possible under the new legislation, Section 16 allows for the transfer of young persons aged 14 years or older to the ordinary courts where they are subject to the full sanctions of the Criminal Code.

The Young Offenders Act requires that the youth court consider a number of factors in determining whether to order a transfer to the ordinary court, including the seriousness and circumstances of the offence, the background and criminal record of the accused, the capacity of the adult system as opposed to the juvenile justice law and system to deal with the accused if a transfer is ordered and submissions made by the Attorney General. As such, the Act contains a "safety valve" for the handling of serious offences. In short, it enables the Youth Court Judge, with full knowledge of the circumstances surrounding a specific offence, to select court procedure which will most appropriately balance the needs of the community and those of the accused.

• (1810)

I believe that the Young Offenders Act is a positive, not a negative, step which has balanced the rights and responsibilities of young people with a full and clear recognition of the rights of the victim and the community at large. In stating this, I do not preclude the possibility that future changes to provisions of the Act may be required. In January 1985 the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) met with the provincial ministers responsible for the administration of juvenile justices. It was agreed that our respective governments would establish a continuing federal-provincial mechanism to carry out a variety of co-operative tasks, including the consideration of amendments to the Young Offenders Act which the Hon. Member requested.

To aid in this process, the Ministry of the Solicitor General is, on an on-going basis, evaluating the effectiveness of the new legislation.

As the Act is thoroughly tested and new provincial programs and statutes are fully implemented, the information needed to assess the effectiveness of our new juvenile justice legislation will become available. Where problems are clearly identified and solutions become known, amendments will be brought forward for consideration. In this way, the best interest of young people, the community and the administration of justice will be served. I am sure the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) will continue to be a part of the process.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—COMMITTEE STUDY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, recently I addressed a question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) about the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Minister had appointed a private sector firm to review the corporation and to make some recommendations for change. I asked whether these recommendations would be in our hands soon, because with two recent financial institutions having made heavy demands on that corporation it seemed important that we get on with making whatever changes are necessary before we are further overtaken by events.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is generally known as the CDIC, was established in 1967. All chartered banks and federally incorporated trust, mortgage and loan companies must be members. In addition, provincially incorporated trust and loan companies can apply to be members. The main purpose of the corporation is to maintain an insurance fund as a protection of savings of Canadians held in member institutions.

At the end of 1983 there were 137 federal member institutions and 51 provincial member institutions. By law members of the corporation have to remain members; if they are undergoing a difficult time they simply cannot withdraw.

The CDIC now insures savings to a maximum of $60,000 per depositor per institution, that ceiling having been introduced in the last Parliament in response to failures of trust companies in Ontario. Since this enactment in 1967 the CDIC has stipulated that deposit instruments for periods of longer than five years are not protected by deposit insurance. One situation arose recently when some depositors who had certificates with a six or seven year term thought they were insured and found to their distress that they were not.

The by-laws of the CDIC stipulate that uninsured instruments should be clearly marked on their face: "This is not an insured deposit as defined by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act". Unfortunately, the Act does not impose any penalty for non-compliance with the by-laws.

• (1815)

Member institutions contribute to the insurance fund based on the amount of insured deposits they hold. This has created some tension among member institutions in recent years. The banks complain that they make the largest contributions, while the trust companies create the problems that result in a drain on the insurance fund. For example, when the Government of Ontario took over three Ontario-based trust companies—Crown, Greymac and Seaway—the CDIC decided to wind the companies down slowly instead of closing them and liquidating their assets. As a result, some deposits were insured over the $60,000 limit. As I said earlier, the limit in fact went from $20,000 to $60,000 precisely in response to that situation. In the case of those three Ontario-based trust companies, the CDIC made loans of almost $950 million, and the losses from that were somewhere around $650 million.

On March 25 there were further demands on the CDIC because of the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank. The CDIC contribution to that rescue package was $75 million. Because of the legislation governing the CDIC, there is no threat to its ability to guarantee savings deposits, because the corporation has what amounts to a $1.5 billion line of credit from the federal Government.

In winding up my remarks, may I say that I have pointed out two problems with the CDIC which need to be addressed rather quickly, the question of premiums and the question of membership. The Minister appointed a private sector committee in January which has been examining it, as well as the question of disclosure requiring member institutions to disclose accurately to customers what is insured. Since January we have also had the failure of Pioneer Trust with further demands on the CDIC.

The Minister has said that she received the committee's draft report and that she hopes to table it soon. I would like to express the hope that we have that report in our hands as we begin our study of the green paper on regulation of Canadian financial institutions. It seems to me that the two documents will have to be considered together.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question raised by my colleague from Trinity (Miss Nicholson) concerning deposit insurance, I emphasize that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has appointed a private sector committee to review the Act and the operations of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Mr. Robert Wyman of Vancouver, Chairman of the Board of Pemberton, Houston and Willoughby Inc., will head the committee. The other members are Mr. Colhoun, National Victoria and Grey Trust Company Vice Chairman, of Toronto, and Mr. André Bédard of Montreal, First Executive Vice President of the National Bank of Canada. Mr. Hugh Brown of Toronto's Burns Fry Ltd. will assist the members of the committee.

Mr. Wyman has many years of experience in the financial market sector. He is also Chancellor of the University of British Columbia. Mr. Colhoun is the former Chairman of the Board of the Trust Companies Association of Canada and outgoing Ontario Heart Foundation President. Mr. Bédard is quite knowledgeable in the financial market sector and sits on the boards of many companies.

The terms of reference of the committee will be to examine the current deposit insurance system with respect to the CDIC's increased workload and its relations with insured depositors, member financial institutions and provincial administrations. The committee will undoubtedly look into the matter of existing deposit insurance coverage.

As to Pioneer Trust customers who claim that they were aware their deposits were not insured, as it was mentioned in the House earlier today, the Minister of State for Finance has specifically instructed the committee to consider measures that might be taken to make sure that depositors are adequately informed.

The Hyman committee is expected to complete its final report within a month, and the Minister of State for Finance has given the assurance that it will then be tabled in the House.

In the meantime, the Minister has also asked the CDIC to give priority to the implementation of communications with member institutions and their customers so that depositors know which deposits are insured and which are not. I know that the CDIC has already taken action in that respect.

Finally, I can only repeat the remarks of the Minister, namely that every aspect of deposit insurance will be fully discussed once the Wyman committee report has been tabled.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I seek the floor today on a question that was raised in this House on May 1st, 1985, during the Oral Question Period, and that was addressed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). It dealt with my concerns about the viability of the textile and clothing industry, not only in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, but in my own city of Drummondville. Right now, in May 1985, the primary textile and clothing industry is in a critical situation. It can even be said without exaggeration that the very survival of the industry is in jeopardy, as are the major investments made over the last ten years and the thousands of jobs in that industry.

The situation is extremely critical. Since 1974, Canada has lost nearly 35,000 jobs, of which 15,400 were in primary textiles and 19,000 in clothing. Over the same period, plant shutdowns were too numerous to be counted. This is due to the chaos in world economy, the structure of which is undergoing a mutation. There has been a significant redistribution of industrial power to the benefit of the Pacific Rim exporting countries. In brief, the race for competitiveness has accelerated, while global economic growth has receded.

To fight that kind of dysfunction, it is essential that there be a sound utilization of macroeconomic policies, in order to create an environment in which the private sector may confidently plan and invest. This is what the Canadian textile and clothing industry is in need of during these difficult times. The industry is asking for restrictive import measures. Let us not forget that each hour of each day of every year, 27,000 pieces of clothing are entering Canada. Such special border protection is needed to plan industrial reorganization in such a way as to lessen the problems linked with that process and to prevent exaggerated social and community disruptions.

Over the past few years, we can see the efforts made to negotiate a reduction of agreed levels of clothing imports, better control of import movements and a tightening of provisions concerning over-exports from the four major suppliers, China, South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong.

Although those efforts have failed, Canada is applying restrictions on imports from low-cost supplying nations under the international textile trade arrangement (AMF) negotiated under the General Agreement on Tarifs and Trade (GATT).

On the basis of that agreement, it has become possible to reach bilateral agreements or take unilateral action on reducing the disruptions on our domestic market caused by the influx of imports. That separate agreement, the Multifiber Agreement (AMF III), will expire in July 1986.

Mr. Speaker, after outlining the general problems, I would like to come to specifics by supplying factual empirical data.

First, let us point out that the textile and clothing industries are not declining, unproductive and obsolete industries. So much for the myths. These industries are interdependent. In fact, some 40 per cent of the total textile industry production is going to the clothing industry.

● (1825)

This sector has always been a key industry in the Canadian and Quebec economy at least in terms of employment. Thus in Quebec there are 22 communities where the textile and clothing industry provides between 20 and 75 per cent of all jobs in the manufacturing sector. In addition, there are 55 constituencies in Quebec where the textile and clothing industry is present. In 1983, some 170,000 persons had jobs in the textile and clothing industry. Moreover, it is estimated that those industries also indirectly provide some 275,000 additional jobs. In 1984, the production value was over $12 billion in both sectors. During the last decade, more than $2 billion have been invested in the upgrading of plants so that the textile industry uses the most advanced technology. Indeed, the Canadian industry is as well equipped in that respect as any other textile industry throughout the world. Between 1970 and 1980, the productivity gains of the textile industry were higher than those of the manufacturing sector. Moreover, that industry requires substantial investments. To create one job in this sector now requires an investment of $250,000. In addition, every year except one between 1977 and 1981, investments per worker in the Canadian textile industry were higher than those in the American industry.

In closing, I would like to deal with matters related to the textile and clothing trade policy. The current system of bilateral restrictions has not been very successful in preventing low cost textile and clothing imports from entering Canada, even though 7 per cent of all textile imports and 80 per cent of clothing imports are subject to restrictions. Imports in these sectors represent over 60 per cent of the domestic market, in spite of the multi-fibre agreement. A major, efficient and productive sector of the Canadian industry is being threatened by uncontrolled imports from countries offering low wages which disrupt markets. Many jobs have been lost and others will certainly disappear if the present situation continues. The thing to do would be to stop the erosion caused by foreign producers in the Canadian textile and clothing markets, but also to recover the share of the market taken over by imports. To do this, we have to reduce present import levels immediately and in the short term.

On the other hand, I suggest that the Canadian Government take a firm position on extending the multi-fibre agreement after July 1986, improving it and including fibres such as silk, ramie and linen, as well as retaining the special protection measures until December 31, 1996, and I also suggest that, in the future, special protection measures be applied with a maximum of effectiveness to take full advantage of the international rights enjoyed by Canada in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, these are the conditions required to ensure the survival and the long-term development of the Canadian textile and clothing industry, which is very dear to my heart, as I worked in this industry for 13 years myself before becoming a businessman.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, to answer the question put by the Hon. Member for Drummond, I would first like to go back to the main instrument and measures that constitute the operational framework for the Government's present policy, which expires in 1986.

The GATT Multifibre Agreement, under which all restriction agreements are concluded, is now being reviewed by all member states, with official negotiations starting in July to determine the future form of this important instrument. A new agreement will inevitably have a vital impact on the development of our national industry. The financial assistance measures and bilateral restriction agreements now in effect will also expire in 1986.

In view of possible changes affecting the economics of these sectors, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has asked the Textile and Clothing Commission to review the situation in these two industries and to report by the end of October. The Department has also had meetings in recent weeks with representatives from the textile industry to discuss the present situation, to hear their views on the main aspects of the policy and also to prepare a development agreement aimed at promoting stability in the industry in both the short and long term. Since the present operational framework and implementation techniques will be reviewed and options for a new policy are to be considered during these discussions, the result will be increased co-operation among the main parties concerned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.31 p.m.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

PATRONAGE IN CHARLEVOIX CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), who is a past master at this sort of thing, has brought an entirely new dimension to the patronage system in his riding.

The Hon. Member is refusing to negotiate with the municipal representatives elected by the people of the North Shore, and letting political organizers decide which municipalities may benefit from federal grants.

These organizers not only decide which municipalities are going to get the grants, they also oblige these municipalities to hire staff from a list of names they provide, the point being that the grants will be withdrawn if they do not comply.

Mr. Speaker, needless to say, the mayors in Charlevoix heartedly disapprove of the Hon. Member's approach and have sent him a letter to that effect, and I quote:

> In recent months, since your election as the Member for the riding of Charlevoix, it has been noted by the mayors that the political organizers in each municipality, meaning those belonging to the party in power, take precedence over municipal representatives who, like yourself, were democratically elected.

I would be curious to know how many ridings in Quebec are seeing the same patronage game being played by the Progressive Conservatives.

FORESTRY

SEPARATE DEPARTMENT ADVOCATED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in tribute to National Forestry Week, the New Democratic Party fully recognizes the importance of our forests to our economy and our communities. Canada's forests generate an industry worth $23 billion and contribute to our country's trade balance more than agriculture, mining, fishing, and petroleum combined. One in every ten jobs is dependent on our forests, and over 300 communities are solely dependent on the forests. On a world scale, Canada has more than 10 per cent of the woodland resource.

Despite the overwhelming value of our forests, through government neglect they are in a state of crisis. They are being mined rather than harvested. They are being attacked by acid rain. They are not being rejuvenated through replanting and intensive silvaculture. The federal Government spends less than a nickel on our forests for every dollar it extracts in taxes. We are like robbers looting our own bank account.

If the Government is ever to recognize the importance of our forest resource, it will appoint a full Minister of Forests rather than continue to bury the Canadian Forest Service somewhere deep within the Department of Agriculture. The New Democratic Party demands that the Government immediately embark upon broad-based consultations with the industry, communities, and workers that depend on our forests, and create a national forestry Act.

A national forestry Act would give a legal guarantee to all Canadians that our forests will be replenished so that they may flourish for future generations to enjoy and use. A national forestry Act would consolidate the federal responsibility that is now spread out among a dozen government Departments. A national forestry Act would address the needs of private woodlot owners, loggers, environmentalists, the industry, and communities which have no other economic base. A national forestry Act would ensure that Canada—

CANADA POST CORPORATION

IMPACT OF PROPOSED POSTAGE INCREASES ON PHOTOGRAPHY INDUSTRY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that there is a gaping and dangerous loophole in the proposed postal increases as they appear in The Canada Gazette. The photography marketing industry in Canada could be devastated if third-class mail is replaced by first-class restrictions on packages measuring over two centimetres thick. The current mailing charge of $1.15 will soar to $4.19 or more to send a 35-millimetre film and have the photos returned.

This price spells disaster in an industry mailing packages with a billed price of between $6 and $9. Some 6,000 Canadians are employed in this $600 million a year industry, and roughly $100 million of that is mail order business. The Photo Marketing Association International estimates that 500 jobs will be immediately wiped out if the mail increase for packages is approved. The crippling price hike would also give a great advantage to foreign mail order photo finishers who need not pay Canadian federal sales tax or customs duties.

The Government is committed to making life better for Canadians, not worse, so we must abort these cruel measures as they pertain to the photo marketing industry.

BANK OF CANADA

CAFETERIA PRICES—SUBSIDIZATION OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in December I rose in the House and asked the Governor of the Bank of Canada to end the practice of subsidizing staff cafeterias at Bank of Canada offices across the country. The Bank's out of date pricing policy at these cafeterias has cost Canadian taxpayers over $2 million in the past five years.

I have since discovered that the prices in these cafeterias have doubled since April 1. However, I have also learned that Bank of Canada employees have been given a $250 raise to compensate for this price increase. This clearly defeats the whole purpose of raising the prices in the first place. In effect, any savings from any increase in cafeteria prices are going in one pocket and out the other.

This indirect subsidy to Bank of Canada employees will cost Canadians almost $500,000 per year. I urge the Governor of the Bank of Canada to stop this deplorable practice. I wish to remind him that it is not up to the people of Canada to ensure that Bank of Canada employees are well fed.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

SUPREME COURT'S RULING ON REVIEW OF CABINET DECISIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has seen its finest hour. Since 1867 our constitutional development as a nation has been shaped by numerous court cases which have had a dramatic impact on our society. Federal-provincial relationships, economic development, human rights, language, and culture have all been profoundly affected by court cases such as Russell v The Queen, The Queen v Drybones, and The Attorney General of Quebec v Blaikie. Yesterday a decision was handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada which places a very significant limitation on the use of executive power in Canada.

The Court ruled that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is supreme and that Cabinet decisions are reviewable by the courts. The Charter's supremacy is now unquestioned. This landmark decision has blazed a constitutional trail which helps define the relationship of the citizen, the state, and the Constitution.

• (1110)

This is a victory for Canadian civil liberties and a victory for Canadian civil rights. In every sense it is a victory for all Canadians. Operation Dismantle should be congratulated for its courage in challenging the Government of Canada, thus allowing the Supreme Court to render this momentous decision.

This organization now faces a substantial legal bill which threatens its continued existence. Because this court decision benefits all Canadians, I call on the Government of Canada to pay the legal costs in this case. It is indeed a small price to pay for what every Canadian has gained.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE SENATE

CALL FOR ABOLITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, to no one's surprise we have recently learned that there were no responses to a questionnaire circulated in the Senate by one of their own concerning the duties of a Senator. The invitation to justify their existence was met with, to quote the Senator who sent it around, "unanimous silence". All the more reason to abolish the Senate.

What the Government currently proposes is that the Senate be reduced, through limiting its power, to its essence, i.e., a house of political patronage. Gone will be the facade of real political power. Only the pork barrel will remain. Also gone will be anything left on which to justify the continued existence of the Upper Chamber, except the uses the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has for it in making political pay-offs.

Perhaps the Prime Minister would be induced to abolish the Senate if we agreed to let him use it as his personal lounge. Given his recent refusal to stay in a hotel that was good enough for Cabinet Ministers but not for him, the presidential style of this Prime Minister is on the verge of becoming monarchial. The Senate Chamber would make a perfect place for the Prime Minister to retire in the evenings to enjoy his delusions of grandeur, a place where so many have been deluded by so little for so long.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTIONS IN INTEREST AND MORTGAGE RATES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, in the last few days we have seen the Bank of Canada rate fall below 10 per cent, a six-year low, and the Governor of the Bank of Canada is suggesting the possibility of much lower interest rates if the deficit is reduced. We have also seen, for the first time in decades, the reintroduction of mortgages with terms of seven to ten years. Our unemployment rate has fallen below 11 per cent, and we have had a significant increase in our trade surplus. In the first quarter of 1985 the Canadian economy grew at twice the rate of the United States.

On November 9 last, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), on behalf of the Government, put forward the agenda for economic renewal. Many decisions that have been taken in the past seven months have not been easy ones. There are no simple, quick solutions to a legacy of financial ineptitude. There will be further hard decisions made in the upcoming Budget. The balanced approach to reducing our debt will be fair and equitable to all regions of Canada. Less debt means more jobs.

The country is responding with confidence to the leadership of the Government. Confidence is growing, confidence that through the principles of the work ethic and less government hand-outs, economic recovery can be achieved, at the same time being confident that this can be achieved while ensuring that those in need are cared for. This is what the Progressive Conservative Government is all about.

THE AUDITOR GENERAL

HIRING OF FORMER LIBERAL MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. My remarks are directed to an official of this House whose behaviour astonishes me and, as I see it, belittles his important responsibilities. According to the Auditor General Act, the Auditor General shall report annually to the House of Commons and its Members on the work of his office and on whether, in carrying on the work of his office, he received all the information and explanations he required.

He must discharge his duties respecting fully our laws, our customs and our Canadian traditions.

Resorting to the courts without such specific instructions was definitively not the best nor the cheapest approach Mr. Dye could have taken to fulfil his duties. His personal decision to hire former Members to lobby through elected Members of this House, and the fact that these are Liberal Party members add insult to injury since the latter are not particularly conversant with accounting principles. The Auditor General truly overstepped his authority. In so doing he may have shown a propensity for grand-standing and sensationalism, or wanted to challenge openly the Conservative Government. Most certainly, such action lessens the confidence of the House in this official and, by the same token, undermines the institution he represents.

Just before graduating from Montreal's École des hautes études commerciales—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COST OF TELEVISION GALA AT QUEBEC SUMMIT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister deliberately excluded the Governor General from his meeting with the President of the United States in Quebec City last March on the grounds that it was only a working meeting. What work was being done at the television gala held during that meeting where the Prime Minister sang along with the President, which justified the Canadian taxpayers paying more than half a million dollars for the bill from the CBC for that television extravaganza?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like my hon. friend to know that, with the implications of that question, he has offended two million Irishmen in this country. I want that to be known. He will pay a handsome price for that.

We have not received the bill for the event that was put on, or at least I have not seen it, but it involved a showcasing of Canadian talent and young Canadian artists, both French and English, on Canadian and American network television. Every time that we have an opportunity to display such magnificent Canadian talent around the world and encourage Canadian artists, we will do so with great pride.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY PAY COST

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that that television extravaganza was put on principally for politically showcasing the Prime Minister and feeding his ego. Therefore I would like to ask the Prime Minister to make a commitment to have the Conservative Party pay the cost of that extravaganza rather than the Canadian taxpayer. Will he make that commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that such a thing is a tradition as, for example, I remember such an extravaganza to which I was invited when the President of the United States came to Canada and the then Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, hosted a gala at the Arts Centre. It featured Canadian talent, both English and French-speaking. It was a marvellous display of Canadian talent, in the same way as was the reception for President Reagan in Quebec City. I think that Canadians are proud of their artists, their entertainers, and their cultural communities, and we were honoured to have the opportunity to showcase them in such an international manner.

ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, almost eight weeks ago the Hon. Member for Gengarry-Prescott-Russell raised 20 specific questions regarding the cost of that extravaganza and the cost of the summit meeting with President Reagan in general. Why, after a delay of almost eight weeks, have these questions not been answered? What does the Government have to hide? Is it the cost of the quail, is it the cost of the imported wine, or is it the cost of the caviar that was served to more than 1,800 Tory friends and relatives at functions connected with that extravaganza?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one can see the priorities of the Liberal Party and one can see the line of questioning, because this morning Statistics Canada announced that since we came to office 201,000 new jobs were created in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Statistics Canada announced that in April, 89,000 new jobs had been created, the largest single monthly increase in five years, and that is what this Government is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1120)

Mr. Mulroney: While they are talking about rats and rat packs, we are talking about jobs and hope for Canadians. That is what this Government is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VISIT BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT—ASSOCIATED COSTS INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Prime Minister deliberately left Newfoundland out when he was flinging around the jobs, because unemployment in Newfoundland has gone up.

I am tempted to move a motion of censure against The Globe and Mail for challenging the Prime Minister for throwing Canada's Ambassador to West Germany out of his home. Any Prime Minister worth half a million dollars of warble cannot be expected to stay in the same second-class hotel as Joe Clark and Michael Wilson. There can be no doubt about that.

In addition to the $500,000 cost of showcasing a frustrated young artist named Mr. Mulroney on Canadian television, while all the others have been cut off, what other costs were associated with the visit by President Reagan to Quebec City on March 17?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is true, unfortunately, that unemployment has risen in Newfoundland. We have made an historic effort to counter that by signing, after 13 years of Liberal indecision, the Atlantic Accord which will bring new hope and prosperity to Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Unemployment declined in seven other provinces. I think that is good news for all Canadians. I think that Canadians watching this are wishing that the Liberals would set aside their cheap partisanship.

I know that the Hon. Member, too, is a fine Irish tenor. And I know that he wanted to sing in Quebec City. But, I am sorry, the stage was not big enough. We are here to create jobs, and the significant figure today and every day is that—

Mr. Tobin: We want jobs.

Mr. Mulroney: He talks about jobs. In a comparable period in the previous year, 72,000 jobs were created, and we have created 201,000. That is our commitment to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESULTS OF MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, with an ego that big, no stage would be big enough for another performer anywhere in Canada.

As a good Irishman, as the Prime Minister pointed out, I am sad that the Prime Minister is living the life of Reilly while 32 per cent of the people in my riding are unemployed. I want to ask the Prime Minister a serious question. Has he ever, between mouthfuls of quail or tidbits of caviar, paused to wonder how the poor people of this country are living? Will he quit his presidential style? He is not a head of state; he is the chief executive officer. The people in the country want work and action. Jobs are created every spring. Quit gloating. Show us some concrete results.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Member quite properly asked for concrete results. This morning Statistics Canada announced that in the month of April we created the largest number of jobs in five years. The Liberal Party does not like good news for Canadians. They like cheap partisanship.

Statistics Canada announced that 201,000 jobs were created, two-thirds of them being full-time permanent jobs, since we came to office. Those are the tens and tens of thousands of jobs which we promised. Unlike the Liberals, we have delivered on our promise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIVE PEOPLES

ORIGIN OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, one of the promises of the Prime Minister, which he said he would deliver, was to provide more open government. I would like to ask him, in that context, concerning a document which the whole country knows very well came out of the Deputy Prime Minister's office recently, but about which the Government has continued to be evasive and refused to answer questions, has the Prime Minister undertaken an investigation into the origins of that document? Considering that the document refers to the fact that the Prime Minister was consulted on its contents, will he tell the House in a straightforward, open manner, that, indeed, this document was prepared in the office of the Deputy Prime Minister?

• (1125)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have told my hon. friend, and I think he will remember, that the document to which he refers is one which I have never seen myself. It has never been brought to my attention. I do not deny the possibility of task forces or study groups doing work in examining government programs. But in regard to native peoples we set out very, very clearly that, notwithstanding recommendations which may or may not come forward from various study groups, the Cabinet will decide at an appropriate time what the policy will be, and that we shall never do anything which is unhelpful to our native and aboriginal peoples.

REQUEST FOR ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF ORIGIN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, once again the Prime Minister continues his attempt to treat the proceedings of this House as some kind of charade. He knows, and the whole country knows, that he did not answer the question. I want to ask him again will he live up to what he promised during the summer election campaign on the question of open government. He will have consulted with his Deputy Prime Minister during the last few days, and with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, all of whose Departments endorse the recommendations which are outlined in this report. Will he now, to use an old phrase, "come clean" with the House of Commons and acknowledge that this document was produced by the Deputy Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know it is hard for the Hon. Member to get over his own self-inflicted sanctimony. I know it is. But I have told him point-blank that I have never seen this document. It has not come to Cabinet, and if and when Cabinet is seized of it and makes a decision, we will tell you in the House. Then it will be government policy.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that he is the last person to talk about being sanctimonious. It was he who made himself the white knight on the question of patronage, and then reversed everything he promised once he took office.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about Gerry Caplan? He used to work for you.

Mr. Broadbent: Go swallow your red tie.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I always put it in front of a bull.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Stay cool, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: If we can get some order, Mr. Speaker, I'll ask the question.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): In this document there are two key elements; first, a whole range of changes in native people's programs involving massive cut-backs and, second, something which pertains directly to the budgetary process which leads us to believe we are going to have one budget on May 23 and the real budget after. I refer to the fact that this document said that there are going to be cut-backs in native programs announced after the Budget, but not in the Budget. Will the Prime Minister acknowledge that the real reason the Government doesn't want to acknowledge the existence of the document is because the kind of duplicity which is involved in native people's programs is going to be carried over into virtually every program affecting every Department in the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend does himself and the House a grave disservice by that kind of unbecoming attitude. We have indicated that there will be a Budget. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and I have made formal statements in the House outlining the principles which will govern our conduct in regard to our native peoples. We were under the television lights in Canada—the Hon. Member talks about openness—where we conducted ourselves on the aboriginal issue in a manner which I think brings honour to this House. We tried to secure a deal with dignity for the native peoples of Canada. That's the way we feel about our commitment to helping the native peoples, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party does himself a grave disservice by this kind of unbecoming conduct in the House of Commons.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

PATRONAGE IN CHARLEVOIX CONSTITUENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns patronage.

Mr. Speaker, the mayors of the regional municipality on the upper North Shore recently sent a letter to the Member for Charlevoix, accusing him of usurping the rights of municipalities for the benefit of Conservative organizers, and of letting the organizers select grant recipients and the people to be hired for the various projects.

My question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister is as follows. Considering the kind of patronage being indulged in by this Member, by which certain municipalities or individuals are given preference, depending on their political allegiance, could the Right Hon. Prime Minister give the people of Charlevoix, the Members of the House of Commons and people in all ridings throughout Canada that are represented by Progressive Conservative Members, the assurance that this appalling practice will be stopped immediately?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the people of the riding of Charlevoix reversed the previous 16,000-vote majority of the Liberals and voted against a Liberal Minister because of the patronage practised by that party in the past. The people of Charlevoix and all Quebecers know perfectly well that we deal fairly and squarely with all our municipalities and with all Quebecers, unlike the Liberals who favoured their own party followers exclusively, at all times. You are hardly in a position to rise in the House on questions about Quebec. Shame!

• (1130)

QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, I did not expect the Prime Minister to accuse the mayors of the municipalities of Charlevoix of lying.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians found out recently that the Progressive Conservatives were setting up a big blue machine in Quebec. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether the tactics being used by some of his Members in Quebec will form the foundation of a big blue machine in that province? Is this the kind of tactics the Progressive Conservative Party is going to use to build the power base they utterly lack in that province?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that the Progressive Conservative Party has not always had an easy time of it in Quebec, and that we had to start from scratch. It took a lot of hard work to build up an organization that includes people from all walks of life in our society. It took a lot of hard work, that I admit, but we have a democratic organization that is highly representative, and the people of Quebec have come over to our side and will continue to do so in increasing numbers, because they are so fed up with your behaviour in the House of Commons. You had better change, because you are going to be in the Opposition for a long time!

CONTENTS OF ALLEGED CABINET DOCUMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There is a certain degree of hypocrisy in the responses coming from him and his Cabinet colleagues regarding this document. I would like to go back to the comment he just made that while he was under the bright lights with the Indian and Inuit leaders of this country, ferreted away in his office was the Deputy Prime Minister producing this document which is repugnant to Indian and Inuit people in this country and that is why the Government is finding it so sensitive.

Will the Prime Minister confirm what is stated in this document, that he met with the ministerial task force on native programs and that he confirmed the recommendations contained in this document?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That's false.

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, page 17 of the document says the Prime Minister has been consulted regarding his prerogatives on mandates. It is very clear in the—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Is that it?

Mr. Fulton: I am not going to quote from the whole of the document. My supplementary is directed to the President of the Privy Council. It is reported today that he or his Department has ordered an RCMP investigation into who leaked this document. If it is not a Cabinet document, and none of you will stand up in this House and show some gumption and admit this document has reached the point it has in going to Cabinet Ministers, why have you ordered an investigation into it?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times you have to repeat something for the NDP. Obviously you have to repeat it for one or two days consecutively.

Mr. Broadbent: Tell the truth once.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The fact of the matter is that if there is any document which comes into unauthorized hands, there is a routine procedure—and this has been repeated by the Deputy Prime Minister—under which the RCMP make an investigation. I am sure the NDP would approve of that; in any province where they have been in power they want to make sure that Cabinet confidences are kept within the Cabinet and no place else.

Mr. Broadbent: So it is a Cabinet document? Thank you very much.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I just said it was routine procedure.

THE AUDITOR GENERAL

HIRING OF FORMER MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Andre: Don't let the truth get in the way of a good issue, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: Do another poll on that one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Wednesday came late this week.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will know that the office of the Auditor General is conducting a joint study with the United States General Accounting Office to identify needs of users of federal government financial information. The international advisory group includes the Comptroller General of the U.S., the president of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, and many distinguished academics and public servants. As part of this study two former Members of Parliament, a lawyer and an economist, were hired to help interview present Members of Parliament on their informational needs. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has been quoted using the term "Gestapo tactics" to describe the project. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that the Parliamentary Secretary's total misunderstanding of the project is unique to that Member and not to be taken as a reflection of government policy or as discouragement of this very important initiative?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this matter arose yesterday through the Hon. Member for Drummond who asked me to inquire of the Auditor General with respect to the rationale of the Auditor General's position which, as the Hon. Member will know, should not only be independent and accountable to Parliament, but should be perceived as being totally independent from partisan participation by active politicians of any political stripe. I have spoken with the Auditor General and he has indicated that Mr. Deniger had already decided it would be appropriate for him to resign his position.

All I am saying is that I am discussing this matter with the Auditor General who agrees with me that there should be no suggestion of partisanship in the performance of his duties. He is an officer of the House of Commons.

SUMMARY FINANCIAL REPORTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I find that answer astonishing in view of the fact that a very well respected former Leader of the Opposition in this House, Mr. Robert Stanfield, is a consultant to that project, as is Mr. Huntington, a former Conservative Member of Parliament and chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and co-author of the Huntington-Lachance report on accountability.

If we are ever going to get what we want in the summary financial reports, and bear in mind this project particularly gears into the summary financial reports, if we are going to get the kind of information which assists parliamentarians to do their job of looking at government reports, surely former Members of Parliament are the obvious people to be involved, and I am delighted to see Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Huntington involved. But surely the Minister is not saying that only Conservative Members have anything to contribute to this House?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is quite simply that, with respect to advice the Auditor General received concerning this project, he may have consulted a variety of people on a non-paid basis. Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Huntington were simply consulted, they were not paid $80 or $90 an hour as consultants.

The question is, I suppose, whether or not the Auditor General, who, I know as an officer of the House wants to be completely apart from any suggestion of partisanship—the whole question is whether or not with these people, who are former Liberal Members of Parliament, still active in the Liberal Party, there is a perception that they are paid consultants to the Auditor General, an officer of the House, and whether this is appropriate. The Auditor General is giving that matter consideration, and I expect he will reply to the appropriate committee.

Oral Questions

BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER—USE OF EMBASSY RESIDENCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He attended the recent Bonn conference, and in order for him to do so the Ambassador, his wife and daughter, were forced to leave their residence and move into a hotel 30 kilometres away from Bonn. The Hotel Koenigshof was not good enough for the Prime Minister, it was supposedly second class, but it was good enough for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance.

• (1140)

Why was it necessary for the Prime Minister to place this inconvenience on a family when the Hotel Koenigshof was good enough for his key Ministers? Why could the Prime Minister not have stayed there as well? Or are we seeing the arrogance of Pierre Trudeau all over again?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise and defend Pierre Trudeau against that unfair attack from the NDP. In point of fact, Mr. Speaker, the statement is completely false. Government officials in Bonn sought out an area where we could meet with Ministers and with Dr. Sylvia Ostrey and her group nightly, and every morning before breakfast. Such an area was unavailable, given the extreme shortage of hotel rooms.

I had no contact myself with the ambassador, nor did I express any wish one way or the other. However, my understanding is that our excellent ambassador in Bonn offered his residence, which has a large dining room which we used as a meeting room. Security considerations entered into the matter as well. There were security recommendations made.

The situation in Bonn was really so bad that when our team went over there they wanted to instal the Canadian journalists on barges. Only the diligence of Bill Fox and his colleagues got these distinguished journalists from a position on the river into an hotel.

ATTENDANCE AT FUTURE CONFERENCES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in effect the Prime Minister is saying that there was no room at the inn. It is inconceivable that all the other delegations from France and the United States made proper arrangements and had room at hotels for that sort of thing. The Prime Minister should stand in the House and give his assurance that that kind of insensitive action on his part will not be repeated again.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, most of the other delegations took over entire castles and moved right in. I took advantage of the hospitality of our own ambassador who was kind enough to offer for 48 hours, or whatever it was, the use of the Canadian government residence in that place. He made the offer. I thought I would accept it because, if I were to accept a castle, the NDP would criticize me. I thought they would salute me for being this modest and for saving money in the process.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED POSTAGE INCREASES ON PHOTOGRAPHY INDUSTRY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. I have had lengthy conversations with persons involved in the photography business. Five hundred jobs in the photo finishing industry will likely be lost if the proposed postal increases for packages are approved. Bearing that in mind, would the Minister reconsider those increases? While he is doing a reassessment, can he assure Canadian photo finishers that their $100 million a year mail order business will not fall prey to those proposed increases?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Finally, Mr. Speaker, a question on the great issues of the day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member, who is an inveterate photographer himself, that the corporation will be meeting with representatives of the photo finishing industry to discuss the rate proposals. For the 60 day period following the gazetting of the rate increase applications, Cabinet sits as a regulator. We will be receiving representations from photo finishers and others with regard to their concerns. We will certainly take them seriously. I have encouraged the corporation to meet with all interested people to see whether these concerns can be resolved.

Mr. Speaker: Despite the stoppage of the clocks, may I advise Members that, as usual, Question Period will go until twelve o'clock. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

LEGAL COSTS INCURRED BY OPERATION DISMANTLE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Supreme Court of Canada rendered a very important and historic judgment making Cabinet decisions subject to the Charter and reviewable by the courts. That important case would not have gone before the courts if it was not for Operation Dismantle, a voluntary, non-profit organization, taking the initiative of bringing that case to the courts.

Unfortunately, in rendering the judgment the court ordered Operation Dismantle to pay all the costs in the case, which could be quite high. Considering the very great value of that important and key judgment to all Canadians, and the fact that this is a voluntary, non-profit organization, would the Prime Minister consider forgiving the costs of Operation Dismantle in that particular case since it is one that benefits all Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice is absent, but I will discuss with him the suggestion made by my hon. friend. I am aware of the remarkable significance of the judgment. I take notice of the suggestion made. I will discuss it with the Minister of Justice and report to my hon. friend.

LITIGATION UNDERTAKEN BY VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's response. I would ask him also to consider that when voluntary, non-profit groups like this must go to court against the Government of Canada they are going to court against an opponent which is heavily financed by the taxpayers of Canada and whose lawyers are often on full-time staff. I think that if we are going to get the type of decisions that we need, we should not saddle these groups that are involved in important decision-making cases such as this, with expenses. I would ask the Prime Minister to convey that as well to the Minister of Justice.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are involved in a policy review of the progressively litigious nature of our society as a result of the Charter, and the extent to which the Government should and should not properly be involved in some of the funding dimensions. I think it is an important matter. I do not have the answer today. I think it is difficult to anticipate where we might be on these issues in four or five years, given the changes to the Charter. The courts' role will be a progressively important one. We live in the kind of a democracy for which we are all thankful. I will take that up as well with my colleague.

REFUGEES

REPORT ON METHOD OF DETERMINING STATUS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There are 20,000 refugee claimants in Canada waiting for the Minister to decide their fate. I understand that Rabbi Plaut's report on the method of determining refugee status, promised by the Liberal Government for December, by the Minister in her Estimates for January, and again by her five weeks ago for "in a few weeks", has in fact been received by the Minister in both English and French, along with new draft legislation proposed by the Department. Will the Minister table the Plaut report without delay to permit Members of Parliament and the public to respond with constructive suggestions?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that the report will be made public very shortly. I would welcome his response to it and that of other Members of Parliament.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, "very shortly" sounds like "in a few days" which I heard from the Minister on March 27, nearly two months ago.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, public debate on Canada's internal treatment of refugees has been stifled for several years by a chain of delayed reports. Is it now the intention of the Minister to delay the Rabbi Plaut report until nearly the end of this session so that she can ram legislation through Parliament without effective public debate, claiming that she has to hurry us up to help the refugees?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not. However, I understand that the Hon. Member always looks on the dark side of things. We want to ensure that those people who are in the refugee determination process are given justice and compassion. That will be the way in which we respond to the Plaut report. I trust the Hon. Member will do the same.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION RESULTING FROM PARCEL WEIGHT CHANGES

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. The reform undertaken by Canada Post management concerning the weight of parcels, among others things, is outright discrimination against some regional newspapers such as the Courrier du Sud in my constituency which is faced with a $24,000 annual increase since all subscribers receive their paper through the mail. I should like to ask the Minister whether he intends to bring pressure to bear on Canada Post management so as to make an exception in the case of regional newspapers which provide information because, should that newspaper cease publication, for instance, Canada Post would lose $150,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An Hon. Member: Do not bother to get up unless you have a question to ask.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85 PROGRAM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given that the Challenger '85 program which the Minister announced was designed to provide jobs this summer for students and that most students have now finished college, CGEP, or university, and given that the Minister knows students need a minimum amount of savings in order to qualify for loans and bursaries, depending on the province from which they come, to continue their schooling this fall, can the Minister explain to the youth of this country, and to this House, why the $30 million loan guarantee student entrepreneur program, which was to allow students to create their own jobs and demonstrate entrepreneurial spirit, is not off the ground as yet across this country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have one of the Members opposite raise the subject of Challenge '85. It is the most successful student program that has ever been introduced in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: It has provided jobs and is providing jobs for well past the target group that we suggested at the outset of the program. It has brought $100 million in additional funding from the private sector to the program, and some 60,000 additional jobs. That is a program which the Hon. Member should be standing up congratulating us on, and not criticizing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUTH

STUDENT ENTREPRENEUR PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Indeed, Madam Minister, I am glad for young Canadians, but still it is too late for those to whom you promised the entrepreneur program, which has yet to get under way. Please correct me if I wrong. Otherwise, I want to know whether the $7.5 million set aside for this program will be reallocated on a proportional basis to the various provinces where the program was to be implemented.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must say to the Hon. Member that the programs are off and running and working well. Just so she will be aware that that is the opinion all across the country, I can tell her that headlines from papers read: "Student Job Picture Brighter this Summer"; "Metro Centre Sees Big Jump in Summer Jobs for Students". Right across the country that is what people are saying. I think the Hon. Member should also recognize that students are finding jobs this summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINES AND MINING

BRITISH COLUMBIA NORTHEAST COAL PROJECT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): My question is for the Minister of State for Mines. It pertains to the $1 billion hole in the wrong place, specifically the Quintette mine in British Columbia. It is apparent that the federal Government spent a half a billion dollars on infrastructure for this project against the advice of the chief geologist of British Columbia and against the advice of other prominent geologists.

Would the Minister of State for Mines tell this House whether the federal Government conducted any studies into the viability of the Quintette mine before making the half a billion dollar investment in infrastructure?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question raised by the Hon. Member, the growing pains related to the start-up conditions of this mine in B.C. are being monitored by the Government of B.C. and by the industry that has invested in the project.

With regard to the studies that were done by the previous administration, I will make a full review of them and bring them to the Member's attention.

GOVERNMENT'S RELATIONS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Quintette mine was predicted to be a complete fiasco. Now that prediction is coming true.

Would the Minister indicate whether this Government intends to deal with the Province of British Columbia in a different way because of the fact the Government was duped into spending a half a billion dollars on a hole in the wrong place? Is there going to be a different way of dealing with that Government if it is going to continue to dupe the federal Government?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the investment made in infrastructure, the up-grading of the rail line to the ports and the ports themselves for handling the products of British Columbia, those facilities are in operation and are handling those products as planned. The full capacity of that mining development has not yet been realized, but there is confidence that it will be.

Mr. Skelly: Get your cue cards. You have the wrong hole.

Mr. Nystrom: He is talking about the wrong mine.

Mr. Layton: With regard to the arrangements and good will that exist between this Government and the B.C. authorities, I can assure the Hon. Member personally, Mr. Speaker, that in my dealings with the provincial Minister of Mines we are very confident the working relationships between our Governments will bring benefits to the citizens of British Columbia.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FEDERAL UNIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Last April 17, the President of the Treasury Board made a major statement in the House concerning four points under negotiation with federal labour unions. He stated there was agreement with labour on a master agreement, a dental plan, a revised pension plan and improved workforce adjustment procedures. Now we learn that the largest union, the Public Service Alliance, simply refuses to endorse the agreements—or to go along with the other unions—and rejects both the revised pension plan and the dental plan.

May I ask the Minister what he is going to do now that the largest union has refused to go along with that decision?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, what I announced was an agreement in principle which was to be submitted for concurrence to each union and, in our case, to the Cabinet. Quite obviously one of the 14 unions has revised its position since last month. I therefore intend to sit down with them for a new bargaining round, hopefully to reach agreement on issues raised in recent years which are of interest to our Public Service employees.

[English]

PENSION NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. There are two other items of the four remaining. I take it the Minister is telling us that he is going to proceed with those two items.

On the question of pensions, is the Minister willing to go back to the table now with Mr. Samson and others, Mr. Donegani and the two main unions, to discuss other modalities with them, since they have refused his plan as it is now?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the only answer I can give to that question is that, apparently, one of the unions is experiencing internal problems. I have no intention of getting involved. However, anytime Mr. Samson or representatives of the Alliance want to sit down with me, my door is wide open and they simply have to give me a call—as I told them at the very beginning. I will be pleased to sit down with them to see how things are going.

MITEL CORPORATION—TAKEOVER BY FOREIGN COMPANY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns Mitel, a Canadian high-tech corporation with a very high international reputation. The Prime Minister will know that tens of millions of taxpayers' moneys have gone into direct grants to develop this high-tech company. Furthermore, tens of millions of dollars in tax relief have gone to support the development of this high-tech company. It is now about to fall into foreign hands. Is the Government prepared to step in and take action, and will the Prime Minister use his supreme authority to stop this particular takeover?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, Mitel is now negotiating. We know what is going on. We are monitoring the situation very closely. The interests of Canadians, the Government's investment in the company, the millions of dollars that have been invested in Mitel, all this will be watched very closely, and we have things under control.

• (1200)

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question. Is the Minister saying that the Government will not allow the takeover to occur of this critical Canadian corporation which, in a sense, is a world leader in the development of telecommunications technology? Is he prepared to say that the Government will not allow this Canadian company to fall into foreign hands? Be specific.

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, the agreement between Mitel and the Federal Government includes an agreement on non-transferable technology. We know exactly what this agreement contains, we will examine it closely and keep a close watch on developments.

One thing we must not forget is that the agreement is not about who owns Mitel, but—

Ms. Copps: Answer the question!

Mr. Bissonnette: We know what the interests of Canadians are, and we are keeping a close watch on the situation.

PETITIONS

INDIAN PEOPLES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House today. It pertains to the adequacy of the housing situation for the Nuxalt Indian people of Bella Coola, British Columbia, and reads that whereas the past Liberal Government refused to provide adequate funds and support for proper housing to the Nuxalt people of Bella Coola, B.C., whereas the present Conservative Government also failed to provide the Bella Coola Band with adequate housing funds, and whereas every Canadian citizen—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is reading the petition. Could he just summarize it, please?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, basically it calls upon the House of Commons and the present Government to be more responsive than the previous Liberal Government in supporting the Nuxalt people in terms of adequate housing.

I have a second petition to present. It deals with the Sechelt Indian Band of British Columbia. As many Hon. Members of the House know, the Sechelt Band has been one of the leaders in the business of promoting self-government among Indian people. The petition requests that the present Government of Canada be more responsive than the previous Liberal Government in bringing forward legislation which would promote Indian self-government among the Sechelt people of Sechelt, British Columbia, and hopefully thereafter bring forward self-government in a rapid and expeditious manner for Indian people in Canada.

Also I have the honour to present a third petition today. It pertains to the Heltsuk Tribal Council of Bella Bella, British Columbia. Again it points out that the previous Liberal Government failed to support Indian people and that the present Conservative Government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is making an interesting comment. However, would he please summarize the petition?

Mr. Skelly: In an attempt to summarize the petition quickly, the upshot of it is that the Liberal Government failed to provide any support for them, the present Conservative Government has cut off an $800,000 grant for land claims research, and the Heltsuk people call upon the Parliament of Canada and the present Government of Canada to be more responsive than the previous Liberal Government in supporting native people in the business of developing research on their land claims proposals. They also call upon the present Government to restore—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is more than enough time to summarize a petition. Does the Hon. Member have any further petitions to present?

Mr. Skelly: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thacker: It is an Opposition Day today.

Mr. Skelly: Perhaps I will present the rest tomorrow.

Mr. Dick: That is Saturday.

Mr. Skelly: Hopefully on Monday, then.

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

Question No. 305—Mrs. Sparrow:

With reference to the answer to question no. 262, what were the specific amounts assigned to each designated initiative under the Western Development Fund?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Under the Western Development Fund, $345 million was assigned to Native Economic Development, $82 million was assigned to the Agri-Food Development Program, and $60 million was assigned to the Vancouver rapid transit system. Amounts assigned to western grain transportation related initiatives include $1,740 million, up to 1985-86, plus increased future commitments under the Western Grain Transportation Act.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its confusing and manipulative approaches to Indian and aboriginal issues in Canada, thereby fostering uncertainty, distrust, cynicism and outrage among native peoples by:

(1) turning the April First Ministers' Conference into an elaborately staged public relations exercise in an attempt to achieve a consensus with the Premiers which ignored the legitimate rights of the aboriginal peoples;

(2) developing strategies such as those outlined in the study known as "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", which run contrary to the unanimous report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government; and

(3) using the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as the frontline ambassador of goodwill, while surreptitiously preparing policies which will damage beyond repair the special trust relationship that exists between the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I present this motion to the House today with a considerable measure of sadness; sadness because we in Canada have at the present moment a glorious opportunity to work with the indigenous and aboriginal people of Canada—the Indian, the Inuit and the Métis—to show how self-determination and self-government for our original inhabitants can work in a settled federal state such as ours, how self-government for aboriginal peoples can end almost all long-standing grievances that still exist, how self-government can end gross injustices which have been imposed upon the Indian people and how we can chart a new course.

• (1210)

Mr. Oberle: Perpetrated by 50 years of Liberalism.

Mr. Penner: The Hon. Member opposite will have his chance if he is patient. If he stays around for most of the day, we will hear him.

We have to re-establish a very battered and bruised trust relationship and, now that we have the opportunity, end once and for all the totalitarian and colonial regime that has been imposed on Indians by the strong arm of the Indian Act, the federal bureaucracy, the Department of Indian Affairs. Self-government for the aboriginal peoples of Canada is the way that we must proceed. My hon. friend opposite, who was emboldened to interject, was a part of the special committee on Indian self-government helped to make it's report unanimous. For that I give him all the tribute that he deserves.

There are those who say that it will never work. The cynics say it will never work. When they say that, they never give any reasons why it will not work and they never provide any examples. I do not argue that it will work. I say that it does work. There are case histories and models in abundance. They have been mentioned often. There is no time to repeat them today.

Over and above those models and examples there is the historical argument, which is simply that Indian people governed themselves before explorers and settlers arrived in this so-called new world. When they came, they did not bring with them from Europe, that I am aware, any examples or models that were particularly useful to the new world. They brought with them a history of battles and blood-baths and the blatant abuse of power. That is why so many of these people who came to these shores decided to emigrate from the past and the dismal existence they had experienced there.

There are the skeptics who ask, "Who needs these little postage stamp provinces in Canada scattered from one shore to the other?" Whoever argued for that? Whoever put forward that proposal? What the report of the special committee argued for was a distinct order of government for the Indian people of Canada, not provinces or municipalities but distinct governments.

What form will it take? How often do we hear the statement that we must have every single detail before we can accept the principle? In the 18th century when the American Republic was born or in the 19th century when the Canadian Confederation was put together, did we have all the details? Was it all put together for us? Of course not. They were acts of faith. There were commitments. There was a belief that free people will strive mightily together to build a better future for those who follow after.

Then there is the concept that we hear from the Premiers of the provinces at the First Ministers' Conference that this is nothing but an empty box that is being proposed, that we should fill it up first, tell them what we have in mind and then they might be able to consider it. It is not what we have in mind. It is what the Indian people have in mind for themselves if we will stop stepping on their toes, if we will get off their backs, if we will halt our ceaseless meddling, manipulating, controlling, directing, reordering, rearranging and reviewing. How much longer are we going to persist in this madness?

Then we have those policy people in the Department of Indian Affairs who now say that they have embraced, like a lover that has been absent for some time, the concept of Indian self-government. They embrace it all right, but with great hesitancy. They say not yet, most people do not have enough education, they do not have an economic base and they have insufficient land. Let me ask my hon. colleagues through you, Mr. Speaker, what has been done over the years to correct these inadequacies? Who has been running this educational system except the Department of Indian Affairs? Who has been trying all these wonderful economic development schemes that have come to life? Not the Indian people, but one government Department after the other. Who took away the land? Do you remember Pauline Johnson's poem that she wrote in 1912 A Cry from an Indian Wife? I quote:

They but forgot we Indians owned the land
From ocean unto ocean; that they stand
Upon soil that centuries agone
Was our sole kingdom and our right alone.

They never think how they would feel today,
If some great nation came from far away,
Wresting their country from their hapless braves,
Giving what they gave us—but wars and graves.

One noted newspaper columnist believes that all of this concern for aboriginal peoples, aboriginal rights and Indian self-government is based on nothing more than one huge Canadian guilt complex. How irrelevant. Who needs in this important debate another amateur psychologist? I wish he would turn his attention to something he knows something about. The demand for recognition of aboriginal rights, including self-government, is historically based. In denying that recognition, we have stacked up in this country a dismal, dreadful record of failed attempts, attempts to assimilate, to integrate, to absorb into the mainstream, call it what you will, but always to dominate and control.

Our failures have not only been terribly destructive for a minority of people in this country, the original inhabitants, but also frightfully and increasingly expensive, a huge, inefficient bureaucracy wasting millions upon millions of dollars every year. So many of those efforts were so damnably well meaning, but what did they do? They created dependency. They were soul destroying. They crippled the ability of a proud, noble and able people to manage and control and direct their own affairs.

The Nielsen report, also known as "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", has as one of its purposes to save the federal Government some money, about $312 million between 1986 and 1988. Let's think about that for just a moment. The Grand Council of the Cree of Quebec who, incidentally, are the only Indian group in Canada to have Indian self-government legislation, indicated by a statement they made that they were not consulted at all during the preparation of the recommendations in the Nielsen report. They have this to say about the Nielsen "Buffalo Jump" report. I quote from a document sent to me by the Grand Council of the Cree:

It is unrealistic to expect the same bureaucrats who have administered Indian programs so poorly over the years to take responsibility for making recommendations to solve the very problems they themselves have created.

The recommendations do not even begin to address the real problems of inefficiency, incompetence and mismanagement that are responsible for the funds now wasted by Government on the administration of native programs.

Let us be clear from what they are saying who is wasting those funds. It is not the Indian people of Canada. It is the inefficient way in which they are administered by government; the way in which those programs are so ill-conceived and have been for a long time.

• (1220)

To conclude, the Cree argue that in the light of the Nielsen report and in the light of its admission that the Government's record in dealing with social and economic problems has been dismal, the conclusions of this report are cynical and racist.

There are also some ill-informed and probably not very interested observers who argue that the proposition of Indian self-government is nothing but a Canadian version of apartheid. Let us clear that off the decks right away. This is not at all so. Apartheid is what we have now, or something akin to it. In Canada now there are some 350,000 people who are governed by the Indian Act, an intolerable piece of legislation to which no other group of Canadians would submit. If we tried to impose the Indian Act on half a million other Canadians in any part of the country, just think of the demonstrations we would see on Parliament Hill. No group of people would live under a totalitarian piece of legislation like that one.

This all began a long time ago before any of us were around. However, we are the ones who are left with the problems. Perhaps there is a lesson there for Parliamentarians to learn. It would be nice if once in a while we solved a few problems and did not create so many problems for the future. The Parliamentarians of long ago assumed control of Indians and lands reserved for Indians under Section 91(24) of the British North America Act. In so doing, they completely ignored a guideline that was already there. There was a shining beacon telling the Fathers of Confederation, the Parliamentarians and the decision-makers how to proceed, and that was the Royal Proclamation of 1763 which was totally ignored. What was that guideline? It was not very complicated and not hard to understand at all. It was very simple and indicated that Parliamentarians should recognize Indian Governments; they exist already, recognize them. It told Parliamentarians to proceed by way of negotiations leading to agreement on a government-to-government basis. What is so difficult or hard to grasp about that? However, it was ignored.

It is only in this decade, the decade of the 1980s, that we have made even moderate and modest moves to bring the aboriginal peoples of the country into Canadian confederation as partners and as full participants. Is that not what we all want? The patriated Constitution recognized aboriginal rights but did not get around to defining them. The purpose of the constitutional process is to undertake the task of definition. That process too has failed. Why does everything related to aboriginal peoples in this country have to fail? We can succeed in so many other things but if we want to do something right for those people, it is failure after failure.

The last meeting of the First Ministers' Conference held in April of this year, as witnessed by those of us who were present or who watched it on television, was nothing more than a public relations exercise. We have to admit that the aboriginal peoples at that conference were used. They were like props in a play and the theme of that play was, "look how well our new Prime Minister can get along with the provinces". There is nothing wrong at all with getting along with the provinces, but for goodness' sake, don't leave us with the idea that the Premiers are the ones who are running the country. There is nothing wrong with getting along with the provinces provided that something tangible, concrete and useful is arrived at. If the result is nothing more than agreeing that we all love Mom and her cinnamon-laced apple pie, to what avail then is agreement and concord and goodwill?

There may have been some small measure of accomplishment at the last First Ministers' Conference, but if we look at it carefully, we will realize that the accord upon which a number of the Premiers were prepared to agree was so weak and watered down that there was nothing in it of any value or interest at all to the Indian and Inuit peoples and quite rightly they rejected it. Of course they rejected it. As a matter of fact, there are some who argue that it would have been a step backward instead of a small, modest step forward.

The theme of the last federal election was: It is time for a change. That is okay, but a change to what? The Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party who is now the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) acted like a real estate agent. He went around saying that we should move out of our house and into a different one. Perhaps it is a good idea to do that from time to time but there are a couple of questions that ought to be asked. What will the new structure be like? What plans are there for this new place in which the Prime Minister wants us to live? Incidentally, what are the costs?

During the election campaign, did we know about these plans for change? No, they were either not known by those who were advocating change or they were kept a dark secret. We still do not know the plans for the change but the Canadian people voted for change. Only now are some of the architects and their draftsmen beginning to leak out some of these plans. They are letting the blueprints be known and some of them, I suppose, will end up in jail because of it. That is how we got the Nielsen "Buffalo Jump" report on native peoples.

How different is the mood and temperament of the Nielsen report from the beautiful words of the Prime Minister spoken at the First Ministers' Conference? How different is the emphasis in this document from the responses of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), our happy wanderer who moves around the country responding positively to the aspirations of aboriginal leaders? The plans contained in the Nielsen "Buffalo Jump" report are quite different. They are sombre and more like a haunted house than an exciting new structure in which aboriginal peoples can live.

It is time for a change. So far we do not like the plans and blueprints we are seeing. As well we fear the costs. The costs will be made known on May 23, budget day. I would say that we should get ready to pay a lot more for considerably less.

I am sure my hon. friends on the Government benches are construing my remarks as being the negative-minded approach of an Opposition Member. This is not so. Let me refer the House to the press release put out by the Assembly of First Nations, one of the most distinguished of national Indian organizations in this country. A document that it recently released says the following:

> The Prime Minister, along with his government colleagues . . . , has a cynical blueprint for the elimination of the First Nations as unique peoples within the Federation of Canada. This plan is documented in a Cabinet Memorandum of April 12, 1985. The plan is characterized in that document as: "the Buffalo Jump of the 1980's". The Prime Minister stated on April 18, 1985 that he was disowning the Nielsen Report. The actions now being initiated by his government clearly show that he is not withdrawing the Nielsen Cabinet Memorandum.
> This Cabinet Memorandum shockingly outlines a strategy to assimilate Indian people beginning with the 1985 budget speech. The "Communications Strategy" outlined in the document indicates that the plan of the government is to tell the Indian people and the Canadian public one thing; and meanwhile to begin to implement the opposite.

A "buffalo jump" was a method of exterminating vast herds of buffalo to make way for colonial expansion.

Elimination of the buffalo was equivalent to elimination of the livelihood of Indian people—an act of genocide. The Prime Minister's initiative to take dollars away from Indian people is proof that the strategy outlined in the Cabinet Memorandum is being implemented. The object is clearly to kill the political effectiveness of the First Nations—to exterminate the "body politic".

The First Nations of this country have undergone tremendous political development over the past fifteen years. First Nations communities, tribal councils, regional and national organizations have steadily evolved to the point where they are beginning to tackle the many problems which beset the Indian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Could the Hon. Member wind up his remarks in a few seconds?

Mr. Crombie: Give him some time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the permission of the House to continue? I have only four or five minutes or even less than that left.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its graciousness in allowing me to conclude.

I shall continue to quote from the document of the Assembly of First Nations. It goes on:

This political development is graphically exhibited in the success of the First Nations' representatives in advancing their political goals in the First Ministers' Conferences of 1983, 1984, and 1985.

● (1230)

The Prime Minister has said many wonderful things to the public and to the Indian people in support of the unique rights of the First Nations. The initiatives of this Government, intended to stifle the political effectiveness of the First Nations, make a mockery of the Prime Minister's statements.

It is apparent that within the ranks of government Members an ideological struggle is taking place. An editorial in the The Micmac News described the Nielsen report as being "outrageous". The editorial read:

It's astounding that such reactionary thinking still exists in the federal Government during a time described by Prime Minister Mulroney as "a new era" in relations between Ottawa and aboriginal people.

The Micmac News editorial continued:

There is a major conflict between the two positions. Are the true colours of the Mulroney Government showing? What is the real position? All questions which demand immediate answers.

In conclusion, I would say to the House that the purpose of my motion today is to have the Government of Canada clarify its position regarding aboriginal peoples. A letter which the Assembly of First Nations sent to the Prime Minister said:

The level of goodwill and mutual trust that has emerged in our relations with your Government has been seriously undermined. The policy approach is in basic opposition to our objectives as unique and self-governing peoples within Canada. As the Assembly of First Nations, we demand a disclosure of the documents and full clarification of the status of the policy approach and recommendations contained in both the Task Force Report and the Deputy Prime Minister's memorandum to your Cabinet.

I call upon the Government and its members today to end the confusion, because it is fostering uncertainty, distrust, cynicism and outrage among the native peoples of Canada. Please stop it. Move with vigour toward solutions which are just and equitable for our first citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, it is with more than passing interest that I notice the motion which is before the House today concerning native people. I believe that the House will probably be treated to one of the most profound acts of hypocrisy that it has seen in many years. Even the most casual observation would tell a Canadian observing a native community that those communities have been deprived of adequate health care, housing and economic opportunities. In fact, the life expectancy of native people is less than that of Canadians. Their life opportunities are nowhere near those of many Canadians. I wonder how the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party of Canada, which is ultimately responsible for these acts, can stand before the House in open criticism and make these statements. Where was the Hon. Member when the previous Liberal Government was condemned for its failures to meet the needs of native people?

My only comment on what I see before us in the form of a motion, and what I perceive will be the note of the Liberal Party's presentation, is that it is an act of profound hypocrisy.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I feel very sorry for the Hon. Member who just rose. His partisan skin is so thin that it is shrinking and disfiguring him in a very grotesque way. He has my sympathy.

Injustices against the aboriginal peoples of Canada have been going on for a century. I praise no Government for its endeavours. We worked hard with one of his colleagues, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), for whom I have great respect; a respect which I do not have for the Hon. Member who has just spoken. We worked together to present a unanimous report which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development called the high water mark, because there is the period before the report and there is the period after the report. So I would ask the Hon. Member to mature, grow up and join with the rest of us in attempting to solve some of these serious national problems. He should get out of his narrow partisan skin, which is shrinking him into a small person, and become larger as a Parliamentarian. We would all appreciate that.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to have that deflection from the real issue. It is not an issue of partisanship, it is an issue of the previous federal Government. That Government was in power for approximately 50 years and it failed to meet the needs of Indian people. It played the game of divide and conquer, and it played the game of creating backlashes. It created, in many Indian communities which I represent as well as those which other Members represent, one of the most despicable pieces of Canadian history. I am very concerned. I would exclude the chairman of the committee who produced the task force report; however, I believe that the previous Government has a despicable record in this matter.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, of course when we deal with minority rights and the injustices which have lasted for a century, there is very little room for any praise to be given to anyone. I do not recall in my speech that I offered praise to anyone. The fact is that the last Government did start us down a route which we hope will be continued. Aboriginal rights were recognized in the Constitution, although they were not defined. Progressive steps were at least begun, if not completed. What we want to see in the next four years of this Parliament is the continuation of the good endeavours which were begun.

That is the impression which I received from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development when he began his task, and in the words which he has spoken across the country. Certainly, it is the impression which I received from the Prime Minister when he spoke at the First Ministers' Conference. But it is not the impression I get when I look at the document which was leaked to the New Democratic Party, called the Nielsen report or "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s". I get a completely different picture, which is more of a throw back. It suggests that the small, modest steps which were taken under the last administration are to be denied.

That is why we need a clarification that the foundation, even though it was not very high and about which none of us can feel very noble, will be continued. At least that foundation was a beginning. We want to build on that to have Indian self-government recognized and to have our aboriginal people become full participants in the Canadian Confederation. Surely, that is the goal of us all. I am not clear as to how partisanship enhances or furthers that to any degree.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) for his fine and vibrant speech. I would like to ask him whether the propensity of the Conservative Party historically to let provincial interests override national interests bodes well for the realization of legitimate rights for aboriginal people.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the only evidence which we have in that regard was the accord that seven Premiers agreed to at the First Ministers' Conference. I mentioned that in my speech. It was not an accord which the Indian people could accept, because it did bring into the process, to an unacceptable degree, the participation and involvement of the provinces. We already know from the First Ministers' Conference how frustrating that can be. I think at some point in time, if we want to make progress, we are going to have to move forward as much as we can based on a bilateral relationship. Some day we may have to have a resolution, supported by all Parties in this House, affirming that one of the aboriginal rights in our Constitution is the right to Indian self-government. But that, of course, leads to a very serious omission, that is, how will we do that and accommodate the aspirations of the Métis people of Canada? That is one problem which would be outstanding if we went the bilateral route.

• (1240)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), it occurred to me that none of us in this country, no political Party, has anything to be proud about with respect to our record on Indian affairs. I can recall when I was Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, there were New Democratic Governments in British Columbia and in Manitoba. In Manitoba, that Government flooded eight or ten of the northern reserves, disregarding the aboriginal rights of the people there. In British Columbia the New Democratic Government which was in power, after making a commitment to the Nishga that their claim would be settled, did not do so, and the member of the New Democratic Party from the area, I believe, resigned.

There is no doubt that we have blots on our copy as Liberals. So have all Parties. I think what we have to do today is to learn a lesson. I want to ask the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) about the lessons which many of us learned during the process of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government, of which he was the chairman, when we all travelled about the country for months. I think what we have to do is adopt a completely new attitude, admit that our Parties were wrong in the past and look to the future with a different attitude. I think the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior will confirm that in the process we undertook through the committee, that did happen. We saw many people in this House who first doubted the right of the aboriginal people to have self-government come around to a new way of thinking, and that is the way we have to move. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the process of the committee.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, when we think of the work of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government, we not only have to think of the recommendations but of the process itself. The process very simply was non-partisan. During that whole year in which we lived, worked and travelled together, partisanship never entered in any significant way into the work we were doing. In addition to that, we involved the recognized aboriginal organizations of this country who were concerned with this particular issue and they worked along with us.

I believe when people look at the report they will see not only the recommendations, the words on the page, but the process. There is a lesson to be learned there by Parliamentarians and by the Canadian people in general.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am both troubled and enraged to have to participate in this debate today. What I intend to do is to lay out the chronology of what has brought us to today, because I think it is important that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), who is going to speak following my remarks and the remarks of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), listen to the three very important parts of the motion before us today.

First, regarding the staging of the April 1 First Ministers' Conference, I don't think you could find an Indian or Inuit leader in this country who felt that it was anything other than a public staging of that conference. There was no legitimate forerunning of negotiations between the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to really get the kind of benefits out of such a conference which there could and should have been. That is well known.

Second, I want to deal briefly with the chronology of "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", but before I do that I think it is important to put certain things on the record for Canadians, so that they have some understanding of what kind of mentality has been involved in the task force and in the preparation of the Nielsen document.

I was surprised to learn that so few people in the news media knew what the buffalo jump was. Certainly people from the west who have travelled either on the Prairies or on the edge of British Columbia know that historically the Indian people used natural devices, natural forest breaks, or whatever, and either on foot or on horseback—particularly prior to the introduction of firearms—drove the buffalo to cliffs or river banks where they went off the edge and were killed by the fall. One has to try to understand for a moment what kind of mentality and approach was being taken to the 395-page report that the provincial and federal people involved, particularly members of the task force, would use the buzz words "buffalo jump" not only as a coffee table slogan, but actually put it into their report and then into a Cabinet document. One has to stop for a moment and go back in time to the 1969 white paper, which was known as an assimilation document, and various other measures which have been taken in the horrible treatment of our first citizens in terms of extermination policies, such as there were in Newfoundland of the Beothuk people.

We are talking in terms of this document of a kind of mix of assimilation, passing certain powers to provinces, and extermination of many Indian and Inuit cultures around the country. I find almost everything within the Nielsen document to be repugnant. I hope that this afternoon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will take the time to respond to the issues I want to raise with respect to this document because we have had no success during a whole week of questioning of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister responsible for housing and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development himself, in flushing out where they are going in this document.

When one reads the media strategy included in the document, it becomes clear that this process has evolved so far, that the Deputy Prime Minister has exercised so much power in terms of this task force process that it seems unlikely now that the Government will turn back. In fact, the media strategy talks about the possibility of some leaks and how to deal with them and to simply forge ahead and make what I think would be the most reprehensible and wrong-minded decisions on policy which would affect Canada's first citizens.

I would now like to take as a starting point, Mr. Speaker, something which is well known by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior and my colleagues who are here. When we are talking self-government, it is not enough to just put it on a piece of paper and then into the Constitution. Self-government has always existed in this country among the First Nations. If one goes back to the potlatch one finds that that was a parliamentary system. There are transmissions of title. They deal with the states. They deal with every imaginable law including property law, common law and criminal law. It is a very highly evolved process of Parliament which is still in existence. It was outlawed by this Parliament and by provincial legislatures. But I think we have to get down to the nitty-gritty. This document talks about the $3 billion spent by the 11 Departments which deal in one way or another with Indian and Inuit programs. It talks about delaying and deferring negotiations on comprehensive claims which would save $8 billion over the next five years.

We have to understand why the native communities in Canada have the highest rate of suicide, infant mortality, unemployment and the lowest life expectancy. Every negative sociological factor which you could possibly find amongst a minority group anywhere in the world is symptematic in the Indian and Inuit communities of this country. We have to ask ourselves why? They have been deprived of their traditional cultural livelihoods in many areas of the country. The people of Canada have to come to understand that title is the key, giving back to the Indian people their rights to their land. They need a natural resource base because self-government will flow naturally from title and having their rights again over the natural resources in their area. I do not think we should beat around the bush any longer about how to set things right.

I honestly believed the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development when he told me both in the House and outside of the House that he had not read this 395-page leaked document before it was leaked. He has read it now. It is unfortunate that he could not get himself enmeshed in that task force process and slow it down because I am quite confident in my own mind that the process which is now before this House is progressing and it is going to be very difficult for the Minister alone to stop it. It is going to require the mobilization of all of the honest, genuine-thinking Hon. Members of this House to bring pressure on the Cabinet, in order to bring that whole process to a screeching halt.

We have to stand still for a moment in time and ask ourselves how we can honestly deal with this. Not through the Federal Business Development Bank, not by transferring it to the provinces, not by going through a bunch of jiggery-pokery in assimilating Indian and Inuit people into the "mainstream" of Canadian society. There are pillars we can lean on. There is the Calder decision in the Supreme Court of Canada, the Nishga case, where the court split three-three on the issue of title. Half the justices who sat on the case agreed that the aboriginal people hold unfettered title to the land, but this Parliament continues year after year after year to say we will come up with some new programs, we will do this and that.

That is not good enough. Comprehensive and specific claims have to be dealt with up front. They may have to be amortized over a long period of time, but the negotiations have to go forward full force. The Meares Island case is not a joke; the Nuu-chahnulth case, the Gitksan Wet'suweten case, which will be before the Supreme Court of Canada during this term of Parliament, is no joke. It is going to deal with the issue of title and will allow tribal groups in British Columbia, Yukon and the Northwest Territories, as well as other areas of the country, to come forward with injunctive action regarding highways, hydro lines, transfers of property, you name it. The country will then be enraged and hostility will again be directed at Canada's first citizens.

We have a responsibility for once to try and direct that hostility away and keep it under control. That is supposed to be why we are here. That is why I believe I am still here. I get very frustrated at times being here and having to even read documents like "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", talking about closing schools, student residences, deferring comprehensive claims, deterrent fees, housing programs only in areas of low unemployment. That is absolutely preposterous and we have to get back to fundamentals and deal with title, natural resources and compensation. We have to go to the Canadian public but not by way of polls, as this document talks about. It says in here that the new Government has done polls which indicate that Canadians generally think it is good that some special rights are being given to Canada's first citizens. But now that there is some chatter about costs attached, people are getting a little nervous. Well, part of the responsibility of the Parliament of Canada is to deal with that. But not by way of polls which show a little bit of nervousness; not by fanning a bunch of partisan MPs out across the country saying that if there is an aboriginal settlement in Penticton, the city is going to have to move, and all that kind of irresponsible crap.

We have to understand the deep spirituality which still exists in the aboriginal communities of this country regarding the land. They do not have the affectations we have for flashy cars and all kinds of other things. They have a very specific, bonded relationship with the land and we are torturing them decade after decade, generation after generation. In what other group in Canadian society could you find 50 per cent of the population under the age of 20? We have to start grappling with what they are asking for and what they are due, not only morally and ethically but what they are due under British common law.

There is no question in my mind, or the minds of many people far more learned in constitutional and common law than I, that the title to the land in places such as British Columbia is the unfettered right of the aboriginal peoples of that province. If we do not start moving in that direction and say yes, the Nishga case has some meaning, and yes, Section 35 is a boxful of rights related to the fisheries and all kinds of things, rights to their own Parliament—and when we talk about self-government, we are not talking about implanting our parliamentary system on to tribal land. What they want is the right to have their own systems re-evolve and move forward.

Since I think I have touched at least briefly on title, let me spend a moment on the chronology of the events which have brought us to where we are today. There was a task force which started last November 8 under the leadership of James Collinson, and that 395-page report was provided to a number of bureaucrats and most Cabinet Ministers. It says it is available to any Minister who wants it. On April 18 that document was basically put back under wraps by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Prime Minister. They said in effect that there are some good ideas in there, some bad ideas, but that is not government policy and it is out of the way. However, this document, which left the Deputy Prime Minister's office on April 12 and went to at least the 11 Departments listed, is quite different. It has completed the process, as the House will learn from what I put on the record. Eleven Departments have agreed to it, although at least one member of Cabinet, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), had some continuing concerns about the effect of deterrent fees on some Indian and Inuit people. But the document is basically underway.

It states definitively that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) may point out on Budget night that the task force review on native programs is complete. It then goes on to say that that same night, and on into the debate, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) will take the lead, not the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. There is a wholly different strategy taking place here at the highest of levels. The Prime Minister has been involved; that is clear from this document. He tried to play fast and loose with the truth in the House today, saying the statement in this document is false. Well, we will find out quite shortly what exactly is going on.

It is important that the Canadian public understand the chronology involved here because of the "fuzzification" by Cabinet all this week in denying it is a Cabinet document, and then the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) ordering the RCMP to investigate. The RCMP have been up to their shoulders in investigations in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development trying to find the leak. They will not find out from me where the document came from, but I can tell you that the implications of this document include the possibility of this document coming forward. It has been a very carefully mapped-out strategy and I think the senior Members of Cabinet and the Prime Minister have said let's keep our heads down, this is part of the Budget process, and we are going to make $312 million worth of "deficit reduction announcements" over the next couple of fiscal years. There are no cuts right now, the Minister and his Prime Minister are correct, but that is not what this document deals with. It deals with how to wind down future costs and transfer most of the processes related to Indian and Inuit people to the provinces and territories.

The executive summary of this document discloses the rationale of this Cabinet process. The first is the potential fundamental change in the relationship between the Government and Canada's aboriginal people. It then goes on to say that 25 per cent of federal expenditures for Indian and native people are to meet legal obligations of the federal Government. That is a rather blunt statement, Mr. Speaker. Some 40 per cent relate to what would normally be provincial and largely statutory programs due to the federal responsibility for Indians and Indian lands under the Constitution Act. The remaining 35 per cent is discretionary. That leads on into the departmental position.

I see you are about to rise and perhaps I could continue at two o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) had the floor.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue with the quotations that I am taking from the memorandum to Cabinet now known across the country as "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s". The departmental positions are well worth putting on the record. I will not read it in its entirety, but the following Departments were and are in general agreement with the recommendations in the report: Transport, CMHC, Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, Fisheries and Oceans, Solicitor General, RCMP, Justice, Secretary of State, Employment and Immigration, Finance, and Health and Welfare. The final line is worth putting on the record. It says:

> The findings are acceptable to DIAND officials but they have concerns about the anticipated adverse reaction from native people toward any changes in programs.

It is laid out very carefully on the next page who else was involved in this process. I quote from the heading "Background". It reads:

> The analysis was carried out by a mixed study team, with input from program managers, federal economic development co-ordinators, deputy heads, and the Private Sector Advisory Committee to the Task Force. Additional input came from limited consultations with selected client groups and with senior deputies in selected provincial Governments. The Study Team report, a 395 page document informally referred to as "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", is available to any Minister wishing further background.

The document goes on to lay out the growth and expenditures within DIAND and then goes on to say the following:

> In addition, it is noted that the backlog in Indian reserve housing alone would cost at least $500 million in today's dollars to catch up to where current annual expenditures could keep up with demand. These figures are exclusive of land claims, both specific and comprehensive (except for some specific claims in an advanced stage of negotiation), which on the basis of average settlements to date could add another $8 billion to total expenditures over the next 5-20 years.

It is statements such as that within this document that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development needs to respond to this afternoon. On page 15 it says:

> It is important to distinguish between what is being done on the basis of legal obligations of the federal Government and programs grown up over time for social policy reasons so that discretionary expenditures can be evaluated against real need, not regarded as a "right" that must be provided.

I am sure the Minister will want to respond to that in terms of what he and others have said publicly regarding Section 35 of the Constitution. On page 17 it says:

> Devolution of native problems to native communities from the federal Government for resolution through negotiation of local community plans based on community priorities and funded on a multi-year block basis;

I think the Minister must respond to that as well. As I quoted earlier today in Question Period, Section 10 reads:

> The Prime Minister has been consulted regarding his prerogatives on mandates.

The document goes on to deal with financial considerations. It reads:

> Estimated savings from current projections in subsequent years are $133.9 million in 1986-87 and $178.4 million in 1987-88. The important financial aspect of these recommendations, however, is to contain the rapid escalation of future costs that would derive from leaving existing programs unchecked.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a few more selected quotes which I would like to put on the record if I could get unanimous agreement. I would like to put them on the record so the Minister could respond.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be as quick as I can. Under the heading "Federal Provincial" is an attempt to devolve what has historically been the relationship between the federal Government and aboriginal peoples of Canada to the provinces. It reads:

> —for defining a comprehensive agreement which would be custom tailored to address the particular needs of each province and territory and which would encompass all original native programs of both levels of Government.

These memoranda of understanding which are about to be negotiated between the Government of Canada and the provinces are being buzzed about the country right now.

Under "Priority Changes for Economic Development" it proposes to:

> —transfer all DIAND business development support and loans and loan guarantee activities to DRIE.

I am sure that Indian and Inuit people will be interested to know that that is a policy priority of the Government. On page 25 it proposes to:

> —terminate the separate Native Economic Development Program—
> —terminate support to . . . native economic institutions and administer native economic development programs using standard business criteria——decline requests for support for third party native financial or economic institutions—

● (1410)

If we are talking of self-government, how can this same Government at the same time be talking about declining any support whatsoever for native financial and economic institutions? All native loans would be transferred to the Federal Business Development Bank.

Under major resource development, in my area, Mr. Speaker, the Council of the Haida nations has made use of resource development impact funding to evaluate the effects of offshore oil drilling. The Nishga people have made use of these funds to study the impact of Amax on their traditional fisheries. The Gitksan-Wet'suwet'en have made use of that money to study the impact of Alcan's Keman project. Here is what the Government is proposing as a priority change. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development consolidates the resource development impact program with the northern participation and public review program. The resource development impact study program will go out of the window.

Under "Native Claims", Section 39 says:

—defer the negotiation of comprehensive claims until the Government's position on native self-government and control is determined.

Under Section 42, which is headed "Priority Changes", it reads:

—development funds, now expended on Indian political associations, directly to bands.

Under "Housing" we see one of the ways this approach would be used to force the assimilation of Indian and Inuit people, particularly from rural areas and urban areas, because it is recommended:

—programs apply equally on and off reserves in order to eliminate any incentive through housing assistance to remain in areas of high unemployment.

It is a pretty Draconian housing policy to be proposing to fund housing projects that are in areas of low unemployment only. I suppose all the native people in Quebec are supposed to live in Montreal and all the native people in British Columbia are supposed to live in Vancouver.

Under Indian and Inuit health services there are very Draconian proposals. Let me quote:

(1) reduce the costs of providing non-insured health benefits through deterrence—

(3) close certain Indian hospitals—

(6) and terminate consultation funding to native political associations.

Under Indian and Inuit education, priority change, we find:

(1) terminate federal operation of schools on reserves—

(2) terminate the operation of Indian student residences on reserves.

51.—eliminate the guidance and counselling program—

53.—review federal policy on financing of school construction with a view to providing some type of debenture repayments—

There is an interesting proposal! The federal Government would have Indian and Inuit people borrow money through debentures to construct schools.

Let me add a couple more, Mr. Speaker. We find under the communications strategy and I quote from Section 4:

News coverage has routinely been sympathetic and supportive of native concerns and aspirations. Conversely, the limited polling that has occurred suggests that while sympathetic to the economic hardship of native people and their struggle for cultural identity, most Canadians are not entirely persuaded by arguments for special rights. This reticence can be expected to increase as knowledge of the costs associated with new definitions of rights is brought into focus. News coverage of recent developments to eliminate sexual discrimination from the Indian Act and establish a membership basis for Indian self-government has featured these cost considerations.

It goes on:

—the message has been persistently critical; and it has not been countered publicly with a strong defence of either the role, the interpretation of jurisdiction or the administration of native affairs on the whole or of Indian Affairs in particular.

As I was saying earlier, that is part of the job of this Parliament. It is to get the right message out, not the message in this document but the message that is ethically, morally, and legally correct, rather than continuing to "fuzzify" around. Section 7 reads:

Native people are capable of mobilizing effective and highly-visible demonstrations of objection to change with which they disagree. Such demonstrations could not only impede the Government's action plan for native program changes, but could reflect adversely on the over-all Task Force process.

It goes under the heading "Strategy" to read:

It is especially important that early announcements relate to sectors where there is the strongest public support for change. Analysis in the framework communications strategy suggests that the business community's vigorous expectations for deficit reduction present a starting point—

I find that a particularly startling revelation, When we are talking about Indian and Inuit affairs the bottom line, the starting point, is the business community's vigorous expectations for deficit reduction.

Finally in the communications strategy it goes on:

At Budget time: except for an acknowledgement that the native program review has been completed, no detailed reference would be made to resulting action at the time of release of the pre-Budget "management package".

We do know from this quotation that those who prepared this document to go to Ministers considered that, at the time of the preparation of this document, native program review was complete. They put it in this document.

In the same section it reads:

While the Minister of Finance may make reference to native programs in the Budget speech or other documentation, Ministers whose portfolios are directly affected by the changes would be provided with briefings.

Consistent with the over-all strategy, the Deputy Prime Minister would take the lead in explaining the Status of the Task Force on Budget night and may do so during the subsequent debate. Ministers with a direct interest in native program changes should be prepared to participate in the Budget debate; they will require briefing to field questions from the media and others in the days that follow the Budget, whether or not it contains a direct reference.

I rest my case, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the document. I wish to say how pleased I am that the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior brought forward this motion to deal with "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", what happened at the April 1 Ministers' Conference and what is being done to the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, who I think all Members of this House would agree is an honourable and hard-working Member of the House.

It appears to be quite clear now as a result of the RCMP investigation, the content of the document and the strategy revealed regarding the Budget, that there is an entirely separate process going on within the Government that has excluded by design the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I think one of the most important things we can do to repair that special relationship which we have with our aboriginal peoples is for the Minister to rise in the House today and deal, if he so feels, point by point with what is in the document in terms of a media strategy, in terms of manipulating public opinion. Particularly I think the aboriginal people would like to hear him on the question of title and comprehensive claims, because self-government flows only from title and access to natural resources. If the Minister so wished, I know the Indian and Inuit people would like to hear his views on health matters, education, and what is contained within that document, because the document is a blueprint for probably the most Draconian attack that has ever been proposed to be launched against Canada's first citizens.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), a question about the memorandum of understanding that is being drawn up with the provinces.

Could the Member confirm that the document he has suggests that responsibility for drawing up that memorandum should continue to rest with the task force itself rather than with the Minister of Indian Affairs? Could he tell the House what the implications are?

Mr. Fulton: I will try to be brief. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) is correct that the task force has suggested a process for developing these memoranda of understanding which do propose the involvement of a Minister. The Minister who would do it is not named. The document leads into that by very carefully laying out that only 25 per cent of the existing payments, in the neighbourhood of $3 billion, is considered by the task force in its evaluations to be actual statutory obligations. Another 40 per cent in the document is claimed to be related to matters that are provincial. It mentions that it touches in some way on Section 91(24) of the Constitution Act.

I do not know of any Inuit or Indian leaders in Canada who would like to see a tighter relationship with the provinces within which they reside. They look at Canada as country wherein they have a very special and long-standing relationship with the federal Crown. In fact, some aboriginal people look beyond that to having a special relationship with the Crown of Great Britain. What they have made abundantly clear in their movement toward real self-government and the attainment of title and the attainment of their own government structures is that they wish to maintain a relationship with the federal Crown, but they do not want to become municipal-type structures in dealing with all the provinces.

It is clear within this document that one of the thrusts which is under way right now is to design these memoranda of understanding to transfer to the provinces perhaps 40 per cent—and the document does not indicate it specifically—and perhaps a chunk of the 35 per cent which is discretionary. Perhaps as much as 75 per cent of the programs with which they are presently involved would be delegated to provincial authorities through joint federal-provincial memoranda. Again that is the wrong approach to be taken. The devolution of block funding to bands at the tribal council level should go in stages—title must be resolved, access to natural resources, development and sustainability of their own economic institutions, education, health care and so on, and then a continuing relation much like a group of smaller provinces within the country with the federal Crown. That is the approach which aboriginal people hold very dear. I find that thrust to be one of the most negative principles alluded to in the document.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on the motion before the House today. I had some plans in other parts of the country which I cancelled because the motion of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) provides me with an opportunity to set this Government's response to it fairly, squarely, openly and frankly. Let me read, first of all, the preamble to the motion:

> That this House condemns the Government for its confusing and manipulative approaches to Indian and aboriginal issues in Canada,—

My submission is that if anyone has confused or manipulated Indian issues in the past week, it has been members of the Opposition. At least they are familiar with how our form of government works. They know that Members of Cabinet are not permitted to comment on matters before Cabinet. Cabinet Ministers can neither confirm nor deny. Had the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior been appointed Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by the former Prime Minister when his Party was in power, as well he should have been, he would have had to confront pieces of paper held in front of him and would have had to give the same essential response in carrying out his Cabinet responsibilities—"I can neither confirm nor deny". Hon. Members of the Opposition also know that officials in the Public Service draft, redraft and draft again memoranda and documents by the thousands. Some of them are signed by Ministers. Few of them find their way to policy. Most of them find their way to oblivion and most are rejected as government policy.

In our parliamentary system this whole process takes place within the privilege of Cabinet, and Members of Cabinet, whatever Party is in power, are bound to maintain that process in the most stringent and complete confidence. While we in the House are familiar with the intricacies of these parliamentary notions, many people in Canada are not. By using these tactics I hope the Opposition will not be guilty, even inadvertently, of doing the very thing which this motion accuses the Government of doing, that is, causing confusion and manipulating a system in which Cabinet Ministers cannot respond.

Also this motion mentions uncertainty, distrust, cynicism and outrage among native people. In my opinion—and I think it was amply noted by two previous speakers—that outrage, cynicism, distrust and uncertainty is the product of more than a century of bad policies by all Governments and Parties in this country. I hope the action of the past week and a half has not been so scary to Indian people as to make that fragile relationship even worse, when there has been no need to do so. The Hon. Member knows that while I cannot comment on Cabinet matters, I am able as the Minister to state what the Government's policies and directions are and will be. I thank him for his motion, for giving me that opportunity.

During the eight months of this Government, its policy for Indian, Inuit and Métis people has been made as clear as a bell. There are some more things we can do, and more will be done, but after eight months the Government can feel great pride in the manner in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), all Members of Cabinet and the caucus have worked hard to make strides and to push forward aboriginal policies which support aboriginal people. Those policies are a matter of public record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: There was a First Ministers' Conference in which the federal position—and I say this especially to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—was known in advance and discussed in three meetings prior to it. In that process the Prime Minister stated clearly the policies and attitudes of his Government, aspirations the aboriginal people have waited long to hear. The conference is a matter of public record; it was on television for two days.

Another ministerial meeting is scheduled for the first week of June to have another try at an accord and to discuss a work plan for the next two years which will result in some real accomplishment, in my opinion. It was a privilege to have assisted in this process, along with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), and to have the Prime Minister reaffirm the significant initiatives which I have taken on behalf of the Ministry and on behalf of the Government.

The attempt at reaching consensus with the Premiers was done with the consensus and the participation of aboriginal groups. When it was obvious that the best possible agreement still fell short of the mark set by aboriginal groups, the Prime Minister suggested a time for reflection, a space of time to allow for exploration on how to proceed. What Canadians saw from the Prime Minister was a magnificent effort at conciliation and diplomacy which cannot by any stretch of anyone's imagination be termed a public relations exercise. As the Hon. Member's motion indicates, certainly there was a sense of disappointment that a compromise did not emerge at that time. However, none of the aboriginal representatives can doubt, nor do they doubt, the sincerity, energy, effort and intentions of this Government to do so. Indeed, Hon. Members know that I could walk in here and read for an hour the comments made by independent third parties, aboriginal and non-aboriginal, as testimony to the way in which the conference went so well. But I will only bother the House with four lines from the Ottawa Citizen. Right after the conference this was said:

● (1430)

For the first time, the chairman of a conference was a man who knows how to negotiate. Prime Minister Mulroney's efforts to find consensus were a refreshing departure from Pierre Trudeau's confrontationalism.

The motion also says that I as the Minister have been engaged in creating goodwill amongst aboriginal peoples while the Government is preparing policies which would be prejudicial to aboriginal interests or to the special relationships which exist between them and the federal Government. Yes, ample goodwill has been created and more, I hope, will be created, not by any ambassadorial abilities which might be mine, but rather by the policies which this Government has begun to strengthen aboriginal communities, to remove obstacles which prevent them from controlling their lives and their destinies and to finally end colonial conditions which have resulted for them, the aboriginal people, in poverty and dependency.

As was announced in this House, the Prime Minister has shown the interest and priority which he attaches to the aboriginal peoples by asking me to chair a Cabinet committee on all aboriginal programs and policies. This committee will begin its work soon. I am sure there will be many items in the work plan, but there are three items on that work plan which I would like to make mention of in the House today and which I can mention specifically.

First on the work plan for the new Cabinet committee will be the Penner report. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior was the author and chairman of the committee that submitted that report. I also note Members in the House today from all Parties who formed the core of that parliamentary task force. The report of that parliamentary task force was tabled in this House in November, 1983. It was carried unanimously by all three political Parties. I am sure the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior has recognized many recommendations in that report which bears his name in the actions which have already been taken by this Government. The all-Party report recommended that the federal Government establish a new relationship which would have as a central element a recognition of self-government. He no doubt saw that as the central theme of the First Ministers' Conference.

The Hon. Member heard the Prime Minister mention pursuit of many processes leading to self-government, including developing the bilateral process which the Prime Minister committed his Government to at that conference. I am sure he has heard from his Indian constituents and others about long awaited policy changes which would enhance their community control. He has seen the introduction of legislation which asserts as a basic principle the right of Indian peoples to determine the membership of their own communities according to their own criteria. He has heard about new fiscal arrangements which are being developed leading to block multi-year funding for Indian governmental services so that Indian people can determine their own policies, set their own priorities and hold their own councils accountable.

I am sure the Hon. Member has heard of the review of the claims policy and a specific mandate to examine alternatives to the demand that aboriginal people must extinguish their aboriginal rights, the cornerstone of the policy developed by the last Government which has been so thoroughly condemned and rejected by aboriginal people.

I might add that he has no doubt heard of the initiatives taken by this Government to protect the special relationship between the federal Government and Indian people. The Hon. Member may recall the recognition given by this Government a few months ago, after years and years of waiting, to Indian communities in the Treaty Nine area which extends into the Hon. Member's riding.

Whether it is the issue of twin-tracking in British Columbia, the renovation of Treaty Eight, I have honoured and this Government has honoured its fiduciary obligations to the people of this country of aboriginal origin, and will continue to do so.

There are many other recommendations in the Penner report which I intend to bring before the new Cabinet committee on aboriginal matters and on which there will be, of course, full participation with aboriginal people concerned. I think this list is a better statement, the one I have just gone through, measured by the Hon. Member's own standards of the intentions of my Ministry and the support of this Government, than any document that the Opposition may wish to wave in our face at camera time. I am quite content to be judged by the actions which the Government has taken. The record speaks for itself.

The second matter which will be before the Cabinet committee will be the study team report. That is the matter which I intend to place before the new committee. We will examine it carefully. I assure Hon. Members of this House with regard to the recommendations contained in the report, which was done by a group of outside consultants and officials, that some of those ideas were wise, some were unwise, some were acceptable and some were unacceptable. As the Prime Minister assured the House, all of those recommendations, no matter what their origin, will be subjected to public open discussion with aboriginal people before policy decisions are made. That is the key. That is what has been missing in previous Governments. That is not what will be missing from this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Not only the Penner report, not only the study team report, but suggestions from aboriginal peoples will be discussed at that Cabinet committee. In dozens and dozens of meetings that I have been involved in across this country, east, west, north and south, I have been impressed with the considered suggestions which have been given to me regarding changes in federal practice and federal policy. At all of these meetings, which now involves contact with every Indian community, the meetings have been held, the minutes sent out and recorded, and I have instructed officials after each of those meetings to prepare policy options on workable suggestions so that consultations can be further extended and decisions made. That is how we build Indian policy in this Government.

I would like to mention the manner in which we moved on very positive suggestions we received from northerners, particularly northern aboriginal people, on the question of division of the Northwest Territories. I have been urged by northern peoples, particularly aboriginal peoples, to make sure that that debate is held first in the north and by northerners and not in the back rooms of Ottawa where it has been for so long.

When I opened the new legislative chambers in the Northwest Territories earlier this year, I promised on behalf of the Government to be fully responsive to the unique constitutional developments occurring in the north, developments which are important to all Canadians. At that time John Amagolik, president of the Inuit Tapirisat, was quoted in The Edmonton Journal as saying that it was "a very historic occasion for the Inuit people". In that same speech, I put on the public record that I accepted the suggestion that development and division should not prejudice land claims. No one can say that this Government has not been open and receptive to the long-standing, long-neglected positive ideas, aspirations and suggestions that aboriginal people have been pressing on the federal Government for generations.

● (1440)

Much more could be said, but I think the time has come when the Opposition should return to its responsibility of examining the actual actions and policies of this Government relating to aboriginal peoples. I welcome that challenge. The critical examination of real policies and real issues is what opposition and government are about. If the Government proposes and the Opposition opposes or criticizes real policies and recommendations, then the magic of the parliamentary system works and will work to the benefit of aboriginal people.

If I could put it in a nutshell, surely that responsible kind of debate is preferable to trying to examine the entrails of policies which have been found in the waste baskets of the bureaucracy. That responsible kind of debate is real discussion.

This Government will not give sympathy nor support to any policy which goes against its general objective of strengthening the communities and cultures of aboriginal people. The policies and principles upon which this Government will act were set out clearly at the constitutional conference and reiterated in this House by the Prime Minister on April 18. I am going to repeat those because they have not been heard. There are four very clear principles.

The first principle is that the special relationship between Canada and the aboriginal peoples will be strengthened. The Prime Minister said that the second principle was that the aboriginal rights and especially the right of self-government shall have constitutional protection. The third principle set out was that current funding levels of programs designed to correct the serious inequities which exist for native people and native communities will be maintained. Last, the Prime Minister set out on the public record the assurance that he would honour the principle that policies regarding aboriginal people will be made after open, public consultation, particularly at the grassroots level. He went on to say that all these policies are dedicated to enhancing the ability and power of aboriginal communities to control their own affairs. I assure the House that this is my personal agenda as well.

This agenda is important not only to aboriginal people but to all Canadians. If we continue to perpetuate policies which cause aboriginal people to become severed from their roots, policies which permit their communities to disintegrate and lead to the abandonment of their cultural values, Canada as a whole will be the loser. The Government will not let that happen.

Aboriginal people, like all human beings, must have a sense of their own independence, a sense of purpose in their lives, a sense of who they are and a sense of their own self-worth. Those things have been denied them by previous Canadian federal Governments. This Government is dedicated to changing all of that. That is why this Government's record is clear and, if I could be so humble, commendable. We stand ready to look at each Member of this House and at each aboriginal person and to receive their criticism on actual policies, actual procedures and actual implementation of government policies; not on illusions, thoughts, scraps and documents that are lost in a waste basket somewhere.

If I could conclude, what we need is for all Parties to remember that we have the obligation which both the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior and the Hon. Member for Skeena made as a charge on the House earlier, and that is the obligation of us all. That is why I think the ideas and notions contained in the motion put by the Hon. Member should be utterly rejected by the House.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make and one question to ask. I think the Minister understands from what he has heard from this side of the House so far that in fact it is the Minister's agenda that we want to see prevail. We have heard the Minister speak across the country. We have heard him respond to questions put in the House. We know that the reaction to his statements from the aboriginal community has been positive. It is his agenda that we want to see prevail. However, for the Minister to suggest that in some way the Opposition Parties have acted in an unbecoming manner because there came into the possession of one of those Parties a document which calls into question and undermines the Minister's own agenda, and we come to the defence of the Minister in this regard, is not fair. Surely that is a legitimate and fair role for Parliament to play.

The Minister has taken refuge in a system that allows him no comment, a system that allows an RCMP investigation to take place because a document has come into the hands of the Opposition. Surely what is happening here is further testimony and proof that our parliamentary system is desperately in need of reform. The fact that Parliament cannot participate in the formulation of public policy means that Parliament is not fulfilling its role and is not doing what those who elected us to this body wanted us to do. That is why I am delighted to be associated with the Committee on Parliamentary Reform headed by the Minister's distinguished colleague.

If the Parliament of Canada can only get involved after policies have become hardened and firm, when the Government must defend them even when they have inadequacies here and there which the Opposition must attack, there is a never-ending confrontation. No wonder the people of this country are asking what the parliamentary system is all about. The people of this country say that we only defend and oppose. They ask if they will ever see something that is mutually beneficial to a group of people like the aboriginal citizens who desperately need the concern of every Member of Parliament.

Will the Minister not agree that the system that binds him hand and foot by disallowing Parliament to be involved in the process of public policy formulation is wrong? Does he not agree that we ought to do something to change that?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that he has me on good ground. I have been a long and fairly vocal advocate throughout the years I have been in this House for drastic, immediate, boots-up, forever-and-a-day reform of the parliamentary system. My good friend the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is heading the committee on parliamentary reform. He has been making some advances on the matter and when the committee's report comes forward in its totality, I hope that its measures will be adopted by this House.

In answer to the question, quite frankly I do agree that this parliamentary system does indeed need reform. I think that we can do it during this term of office if the recommendations made by the Hon. Member for St. John's East are adopted by this House.

Could I hitchhike on the Hon. Member's question by responding to his comment regarding the Minister's agenda? As I have said in the past to the Hon. Member, I would certainly appreciate any support that he could give me with respect to the agenda and I would particularly appreciate support from him, an Hon. Member who is so well known by Indian people regarding these matters. I want to assure him that the Ministers' agenda is intact. I have exceedingly strong support from the Prime Minister, the caucus and all my Cabinet colleagues. We must ensure that we march forward together, and I appreciate the Hon. Member's willingness to do so.

• (1450)

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the matter which concerns Members of the Opposition, Indian and Métis people across the country, is the wide divergence between what the task force report said—the 396-page report which was leaked to the press—and what the Minister and the Prime Minister have said. Could the Minister tell the House what types of policy guidelines were given to the task force when it was performing its work? How was it possible for members of the task force to sit down and come up with a report which is completely at variance with everything for which the Minister and the Prime Minister stand?

I would also like to ask the Minister about the consultation process. He said that no changes would be made without a full and open consultation process. Yet in his press release of two days ago, when he spoke about the new funding formula for political organizations, he said that he would be consulting with Indian chiefs. But the only process which was stated in the press release was:

> The Ministers said letters were going out requesting written proposals addressing the principles of the new policy. The additional suggestions would be added to those Crombie received during an extensive schedule of meetings with chiefs across Canada.

Is the request for written proposals the full extent of the consultation? What process of consultation will be followed in the development of the new land claims policy about which the Minister said he would be very proud when it was released?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first question regarding the task force report and its terms of reference, quite frankly, I would have to ask the Member to direct that question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) because I am not involved in that task force. I might say that, at least, it showed that this is not a hidebound Government. We in the Government are willing to entertain a broad range of thoughts and options.

With respect to his question regarding funding, I can assure the Hon. Member that the whole purpose of my office sending out letters asking the Indian organizations to discuss among themselves considerations regarding funding was to elicit their views. The process began some months ago. As the Member will know, I went across the country from reserve to reserve and from assembly to assembly. One of the things about which we talked was the funding of Indian organizations at the band, tribal, regional and national level. That was the second phase. It was to say: "Thanks very much; there appear to be three principles upon which we can all agree". I think the Hon. Member would agree with those three principles which were outlined in the press released. The Indian organizations are to respond to me on those principles.

Following that, I will hold whatever discussions are appropriate. Those discussions may differ from one part of the country to another. For example, in British Columbia there is already a certain practice of band council resolutions, which practice will not be found in other parts of the country. Therefore, there will not be one response from coast to coast. It will very much depend on what I get back. If, indeed, I had already figured out the third part of the process, I would be denying the importance of getting their input in the second phase. I can assure the Hon. Member that nothing will be done until that has been completed. He is aware of that, as are other Members, as are the aboriginal people.

With respect to the third item concerning land claims, as I believe I mentioned in the House the other day to the Hon. Member, I met with claimant groups and we drew up some terms of reference and had some discussions as to whom we would like to have serve on a study group. Therefore. the process is contained in those terms of reference. It will take about six months. It is not finalized, only because we have not yet completed our selection of people. As soon as it is available, I will provide a copy for Hon. Members.

Mr. Moore: Mr. Speaker, what is the Minister's understanding of the legal and moral obligations which he as a Minister has toward the Indian people?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, it is tough to answer that question in a minute, but I can say that my first responsibility is, of course, to the Prime Minister and the Cabinet. However, I have an unusual responsibility which I believe is contained both in tradition and probably in law, and that is that I speak as an advocate and have what is known in the law as a fiduciary obligation to aboriginal people to ensure that they are dealt with, both individually and collectively, according to the highest possible standards which this country has.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today states:

> That this House condemns the government for its confusing and manipulative approaches to Indian and aboriginal issues in Canada, thereby fostering uncertainty, distrust, cynicism and outrage among native peoples—

It goes on to refer to three examples of the confusing and manipulative approaches. It refers to the First Ministers' Conference in April. Then it refers to the leaked document to which we have all referred as "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s". Third, it refers to situations in which the Minister says one thing, of which many of us on this side approve, about which other individuals in the Government are saying something else.

With respect to the First Ministers' Conference which was held in April, although it started well, that conference was a failure. We must admit that. The documents which were tabled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the statements which were made by the Prime Minister on the first day were good. As a matter of fact, I put them side by side with the documents which were tabled at the previous aboriginal conference by the previous Prime Minister, and they were pretty much the same. They were not perfect in either case, but they were something with which to work. They were something which the aboriginal people of Canada felt they could use as a base during the conference on which to build and improve. But during the process of the conference, the provinces which did not understand aboriginal rights and Indian self-government attacked the proposals of the Prime Minister and the Government. Those provinces would not give in. Finally, the Government went the way of those provinces.

I was at the entire conference and I watched what happened. Between the meetings, instead of the Government leaning on the provinces which were hesitant to agree, it leaned on the aboriginal groups to accept a weakened version of the proposals for self-government. It was a situation of big, strong, wealthy provinces with lots of resources going against the major aboriginal groups of the country which do not have many resources, but which do their best to get along. Instead of the Prime Minister taking the side of the aboriginal people and leaning on the provinces, he gave in to the position of the provinces and tried to convince the aboriginal organizations to accept what the provinces wanted in order to get an agreement so that the conference would be successful and the Prime Minister and the Government would look good. I believe that was wrong. It was a case of doing what was expedient rather than doing what was correct. The conference was a failure. It did not achieve agreement and it did not end with the goodwill which it had when it started.

● (1500)

With respect to the leaked report of the Nielsen review committee, or as it is called "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s", the Minister has just said that those of us in the Opposition who are familiar with the Cabinet system should understand that nothing is government policy until it is finally approved by the Government, and that this was probably one of many documents which was put forward but discarded, remade or whatever. He said that since it was not finally approved, it is not the policy of the Government. He said he did not approve it himself. That may be true, Mr. Speaker, but I served in Cabinet for seven years and I know that the very fact that a document like this got as far as it did, with so much support from various Departments, and that there are so many people within the structures of the Canadian Government who would support this type of document and these types of proposals, is a shocking and shameful thing. I feel that if the document had not been leaked, we would not have had a chance to raise this publicly before it went to Cabinet for final approval and it might well have been approved at least in part. So I think the Opposition did its job in raising this document at the time it did because it cut off at the pass the initiatives of those people in the Government of Canada—perhaps not the Minister—who wanted that kind of policy with respect to Indian people.

When we look at the composition of the task force set up by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), we find it included people who, as far as I can see, had no understanding or knowledge of Indian matters. There were no Indians invited to participate in that task force. It certainly was a complete violation of the bilateral process which was set up a few years ago and which was supposed to be the modus operandi between the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples. There was no bilateral process. And the principal criterion of the people who worked on that task force seemed to be financial savings. There was no human consideration and no social or economic criterion applied.

The question was just asked of the Minister if he had anything to do with the instructions to the task force before it started its work. He said he did not. I find that a surprising admission. Here we have a task force which is dealing with the survival of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and which is given instructions to examine that Department and make suggestions, but the Minister responsible is not even consulted on what the very basic criteria for the operation of that task force should be. In answering the question he said that it goes to show how open a Government it is. That may be so, but it is the type of thing which does lead to the confusion which is referred to in the motion before the House.

I would like to spend a few minutes speaking about the bilateral process. The bilateral process was started a few years ago by the former Government. It was something which it did not agree to immediately, but about which it was finally convinced. It was a process which was proposed by the Assembly of First Nations and other aboriginal groups, and the proposal was to the effect that changes in policy with respect to the aboriginal and Indian people of Canada should always be made nation to nation, Canadian Government to Indian nations, one on one. Nothing should be done in a unilateral way and then sprung on our native or aboriginal peoples. That was the process, Mr. Speaker, which was carried out at the time of the treaties. At that time the British Government, which preceded the Government of Canada, dealt with the different Indian nations in Canada as nations on a one-to-one basis and negotiated what the arrangements between the Crown and the Indians should be. But that approach disappeared with the passing of the Indian Act and the many other unilateral types of legislation which we have passed in this country over the last hundred years.

We have had in this Chamber hundreds of non-Indians, white men of various backgrounds, making laws which touched the very lives of these Indian people without even consulting with them. After coming to the conclusion that this was not the right way of doing things, we finally had a Government which agreed just a few years ago to the bilateral process. That bilateral process was followed to a great extent by the work of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government. We had on that committee three representatives of the major native organizations in Canada. While they did not have a vote, they participated fully in the committee. No proposal was put to the committee without their comments, criticisms, and suggestions. Although they did not vote, their views on the various proposals were taken seriously by the members of the committee. I cannot recall members of the committee pushing ahead with any type of recommendation or proposal which was not supported by those three native representatives. We often had a long debate when there was a disagreement, but we worked it out in due course and a consensus was arrived at. That process was started with the Burghardt committee which dealt with Indian women and the Indian Act. I believe three representatives were invited in that case, but only two participated. That was an offshoot of the bilateral process between Canadian Governments and the Indian people.

For the last few weeks, several of us have participated in the discussions with respect to Bill C-31 which amends the Indian Act, especially with respect to Indian women and discrimination. Unfortunately, the way that Bill is being proceeded with is in contradiction to the bilateral process. We are sitting around in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development with various Hon. Members putting amendments on the table, but there are no native representatives to give us their views with respect to those amendments, and in no way can we adjourn the committee continually in order to get their views. I proposed several times that we should have proceeded in the same way as the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government and have the main representatives sitting at the table with us, but that was turned down for one reason or another.

The problems we are having with Indian issues in this country are continuing. The same mistakes are being repeated over and over again because there are still too many individuals in the Government of Canada who do not really understand what aboriginal rights mean, and who do not really understand what Indian self-government means. When I say there are "individuals" in the Government of Canada, I do not mean only the elected Members; I mean senior officials, bureaucrats, some elected people and some Ministers. There are still too many of them. If we did not have so many of them, we would not see the kind of document which was leaked the other day. We also would not have the confusion where we get acceptable statements by the Minister on the one hand and the type of proposals in the task force document on the other.

I would like to repeat myself, Mr. Speaker, because I believe it has to be repeated over and over again. People ask what aboriginal rights are, what they mean in the way they are now recognized in Section 35 of the new Constitution. As far as my understanding of it is concerned, they are all those rights which the aboriginal peoples had on this continent prior to contact with the Europeans, related to their lands, languages, social and economic structures, customs, religion and Government. These aboriginal people, before contact with the Europeans, had all of those things. They had societies, they had governments, languages, economies and religion. Those were their rights and they did not cede them after the Europeans came. Nor were they conquered, although there were battles here in Canada. However, although we just remembered the fortieth anniversary of the end of World War II, I do not think we believe that if you conquer another people you have the right to take away their rights and impose on them your way of doing things. We fought that war because we did not believe in that way of life. We believe that people have the right to keep their own way of doing things unless they voluntarily give them up or make agreements with the other party to change them. But here we have a situation where the aboriginal people of Canada had these rights, these Governments, these languages, these lands and waters, and these economies which involve fishing, hunting and trapping, and they never gave them up. We should recognize that they are still there, and we have recognized them in Section 35 of the Constitution, in my opinion.

• (1510)

Indian self-government is one of those aboriginal rights and several Members of this House spent a lot of time on the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government pursuing that matter. As a matter of fact, from July, 1982, to October, 1983, we had 60 public hearings in many parts of the country, almost 40 of them were outside Ottawa, taking place on reserves and friendship centres, and we got the views of the Indian people. I think probably there was no other exercise in the history of Canada where a parliamentary committee or commission heard the views of so many Indians. There were 55 recommendations, and what is interesting is that all of them were unanimous. Seven Members of Parliament from three political Parties, as well as three native representatives, unanimously agreed on the recommendations.

Nevertheless, at the First Ministers' Conference, despite the process the special committee went through, we still saw provincial Governments and politicians who misunderstand what is meant by the self-government term and who fear it. They think it is in some way going to threaten them, their Governments and their constitutional structures. Unfortunately, colonialism still remains a fact of life in Canada because we see Governments and parliamentarians—although not all of them—who take the position that we must continue to legislate for Indians as if we knew best. We do not trust the Indians to do things for themselves. We feel they will not do the right thing, therefore we should do it for them. That is a very strange point of view on our part because we certainly made a mess of things for over 100 years. We set up a Department of Indian Affairs, passed the Indian Act, made amendments to that Act, and more than 100 years later Indian communities are living in abject poverty. The social conditions there are horrible in many cases, with high rates of suicide, alcoholism and imprisonment. And we are the ones running things, they are not.

It is evident to me that if there is going to be a basic change we must recognize the right to self-determination of these Indian peoples. We must grant them the self-government they used to have. In fact, they still have it but we are interfering with it. We must let them run their own affairs and their own lives. They must have the right to make their own mistakes. Surely they will not make as many as we have. We all know that when you run your own affairs you make mistakes from time to time, but we have to recognize that we made more mistakes and that half-way measures will not work.

Bill C-31, Mr. Speaker, is an example of a half-way measure. We recognize the right to Indian self-government to a certain extent, but not fully. As a result, we get into all sorts of complex problems. Simply to throw money at the problem will not work. Funding is necessary for Indian Government, just as it is for provincial Governments and federal Governments, but they have to control those Governments themselves and set the priorities themselves.

I would like to conclude by quoting a statement that we put in the front of our report on Indian self-government. It was submitted to us by the Mayo Indian band in the Yukon when they appeared before us. It was spoken by Leo Tolstoy in 1886 and it is:

> I sit on a man's back choking him and making him carry me and yet assure myself and others that I am sorry for him and wish to lighten his load by all possible means except by getting off his back.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion put forward by my friend from Cochrane Superior because I think that this issue is of importance to all Canadians and not simply to the native people of Canada. It is important to all Canadians because what we are seeing happen to the Indian people is very likely to happen to other segments in Canada. A number of years ago someone made the comment that the Indian people are very much like the miner's canary, and I think most Members of the House are aware of the practice of miners who used to take a canary with them down into the mine. As long as the canary was able to live, the miners were assured the air was tolerable for them. When the canary got in trouble, the miners knew they were in trouble. In the same way, when the Indian people of Canada are in trouble, I think the rest of us can understand that we, too, are in trouble.

It was interesting to listen to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) today because he is very obviously embarrassed by the documents which are floating around, documents which have a degree of authenticity, although the Cabinet has yet to come clean on this issue. He is also embarrassed by the actions of his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). It was scandalous to hear the Minister say, when I asked him what guidelines had been issued to the Deputy Prime Minister's task force on native policy and programs, that I would have to ask the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister was not aware of what guidelines had been issued to the task force which was going to be looking at programs within his own Department. This is a very serious indication of the wide divergence of views within the Cabinet, some members of which espouse one policy and others another policy. As a result, we do not really know in what direction the Government is going, although we have our suspicions when we look at where the real clout lies. It lies with people like the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), people who are interested in making cut-backs. The real clout does not lie with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is intent on preserving programs and trying to enhance the lives of Indian people.

It is interesting that when that Minister was first appointed to his portfolio there were a lot of rumours that he really wanted to be appointed to the communications portfolio, and that the appointment to Indian affairs of a former mayor of Toronto was an example of the Prime Minister's rather warped sense of humour. However, I want to say that the present Minister took the ball and ran with it. He saw as his first task the establishment of a relationship with the Indian people. He saw the need to get to know Indian people and establish in them some sense of confidence in himself. Given the constraints of the colonial situation in which we all live with regard to Indian people, I think the Minister succeeded very well. However, his efforts have been very seriously undermined by the activities of other members of Cabinet, particularly the Deputy Prime Minister.

Nevertheless, all the efforts of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are really irrelevant to true understanding of what is happening between the Tory Government and the Indian people. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development does just fine with regard to personal relations, ceremonial affairs, and public relations. However, regardless of the Minister's desire to do a good job, he runs smack into the reality of the Government, the reality of cut-backs and elimination of programs, and the reality of secret task forces which operate under the guideline of cut-backs and the bottom dollar rather than of a trust relationship which the federal Government might have to look after the best interests of the Indian people.

Native programs were among the first six priority areas in which the Deputy Prime Minister established task forces to find where cuts could be made. It is astounding, Mr. Speaker, that the informal title of big report became "The Buffalo Jump of the 1980s". Perhaps that title is really instructive. It gives us a clue into the mind-set of certain people of Cabinet and the people who were active on that task force report. This is a kind of gallows humour with a racist flavour. It is a suggestion that the Indian people can somehow be stampeded into a situation which leads to extermination, such as the buffalo were.

I would like to emphasize that there is absolutely no relationship between what the report calls for and what the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have been saying in public statements. It is shocking for a Minister of the Crown to have to stand in the House and admit that he was not aware of any policy guidelines given to the task force.

In the report of the task force we see no recognition that the federal Government had a trust responsibility. The emphasis of the report is on legal obligations rather than on programs. It makes a distinction between legal obligations on the one hand, and programs that have grown up on the other. It speaks of beefing up the Government's legal services so that it can beat back any challenges that Indian people might be interested in making to past government mismanagement. While the Government wants to beef up its own legal services, it calls for a cut-back on legal funding to Indian people who might want to test certain aspects in court. It says that it is contemplating this cut-back in legal funding to Indian people because possibly the Charter of Rights and Freedoms could prohibit the granting of legal aid to one group but not to another.

I would like to remind government Members that Section 15(2) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which talks about equality, says:

> Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

It is obvious that the task force did not even do its homework with regard to the Canadian Constitution. It is dragging up all kinds of spurious reasons for making cut-backs.

Sally Weaver has written a very interesting book called Making Canadian Indian Policy: The Hidden Agenda, 1968-1970. In that book she details the duplicity of the early Trudeau years in the area of making Indian policy. While the Government had set up an elaborate system of consultation with Indian peoples across the country, at the same time a secret task force was busy developing what was later released as the 1969 white paper. That paper proposed turning Indian programs over to the provinces, termination of the Department of Indian Affairs, and eventual assimilation of the Indian people.

Weaver quotes from a former Liberal Minister of Indian Affairs, the Hon. Art Laing, who wrote:

> The prime condition in the progress of the Indian people must be the development by themselves of a desire for the goals which we think they should want.

If ever there was a statement of the way in which different Canadian Governments have operated with regard to Indian people, that is it. It says that somehow the Government has to do the manipulative job of getting Indian people to accept the goals for themselves which the Government has already chosen for them.

We are seeing a repetition of history. The Prime Minister had a very open First Nation's Conference. He sat in the glare of the television lights. He met and talked with aboriginal leaders. He indicated that he was in favour of aboriginal self-government. The task force said that he was consulted, so he must have been aware at that time of the kinds of recommendations the task force was bringing forward.

I want to talk about some of the specific findings of the task force and the Cabinet memorandum that was put forward to try to implement it. First, it talks about cutting the impact funding on resource development. Let us take a look at the Estimates that were tabled by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development this year. On page 61 it says:

> In addition to benefiting Indian communities, resource development impacts funding also benefits resource developers and contributes to the security of proposed major resource developments as it enables Indian bands to enter into effective dialogue and negotiations leading to settlement rather than only having recourse to resorting to negative court actions or the use of land claims to protect their interests.

This statement of departmental policy says that resource impact funding is perhaps a better route to follow than land claims. It says that resource impact funding helps Indian people to get a piece of the action. Yet the Cabinet memorandum suggests that resource impact funding should be cut. That document also suggests that land claims should be deferred.

On the issue of housing the Cabinet document suggests that there should be no encouragement for Indian people to build homes in isolated areas where the economy is in some difficulty. It suggests that there should be an even-handed policy to ensure that Indian people are encouraged to move away from reserves and into the urban areas. This brings us back to the 1960s when Indian people were lured into the cities with all kinds of promises of government support.

This year's Estimates point out that between 1980 and 1983 there was a decrease of approximately 5,000 students under the responsibility of the Department of Indian Affairs. The decrease does not necessarily mean that approximately 5,000 students ceased attending school. It means that the Department discontinued funding all off-reserve students, thereby striking them from the departmental data collection process.

In other words, Indian people are being forced to leave reserves because the Government says there will not be any development there and it does not want to encourage people to stay in areas of economic difficulty. The people are forced to go to cities and once they are there, programs which they had been promised are cut.

Government estimates point out that one in three Indian on-reserve homes was crowded as defined by the 1981 census, compared to one in 43 non-Indian homes. This indicates the seriousness of the problem which must be addressed directly. It is going to require more funding, not less. To suggest that somehow we will solve this problem by forcing Indians to leave reserves is repugnant, Mr. Speaker.

We can look at the whole question of land claims policy. It says that negotiations should be deferred until the Government comes to some decision about what its policy is on native self-government. The Minister has indicated a process is in place. He hopes there will be some clarification within six months. We will be watching this whole question of land claims very closely, Mr. Speaker, because there has been a lot of stalling in the past. If there is going to be Indian self-government, which I think is a necessity for the Indian people, then land claims are essential. It is not possible to have Indian self-government without an adequate and decent economic base. That means land claims have to be settled in a just and equitable manner.

We can look at the question of health where the Cabinet's memorandum suggests that deterrence should be introduced. It does not say what kind of deterrence, just that deterrence should be introduced to keep Indian people from making as much use of health services as they do at present. At the same time the Government is cutting back on any consultation process that would help Indian people come up with their own health policies. We are cutting out one policy and we are not helping Indian people to put something else in its place.

The report talks about closing hospitals. At the same time I think there is general recognition that Indian health is far below the national standards. The average life expectancy for an Indian is ten years less than that for a non-Indian.

I see that my time is running out, but if I could have just a few more minutes, Mr. Speaker, I will try to conclude. The Government talks about amalgamating economic programs and using standard business criteria for them. This may be good, this may be bad. What do the Indian people say? What consultation process was followed? In the meantime, we see in the Estimates that there are cut-backs of some $23 million in economic development for Indian people in the current financial year.

I would like to close by reading the final couple of paragraphs of a letter written by Tom Sampson, Chairman of the AFN, Constitution Working Group, who wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He wrote:

The level of goodwill and mutual trust that has emerged in our relations with your Government has been seriously undermined. The policy approach is in basic opposition to our objectives as unique and self-governing peoples within Canada. As the Assembly of First Nations, we demand a disclosure of the documents and full clarification of the status of the policy approach and recommendations contained in both the Task Force Report and the Deputy Prime Minister's memorandum to your Cabinet.

To the Assembly of First Nations, it is absolutely essential that the disclosure and clarification be made by you as soon as possible. Upon receipt of the documents, we would respectfully request a meeting to discuss the ongoing constitutional talks.

The divisions within this Government have cast a great deal of uncertainty and distrust not only within this House but among Indian people right across the country, among the Métis and the Inuit people. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to come clean on this issue and to make a full and complete disclosure of all documents. The Government should say what its policy is. Let the Government release the 396-page task force report. That is not a Cabinet document. That can be released. And let us have the Government's official response to that task force so that Indian people can engage in a dialogue with the Government instead of having to fight shadows in the dark.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and then a brief question. I regret that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) is not here. I think we should commend the Minister for keeping the comments he made at the beginning of his speech direct, honest and sincere, as is typical of him. No one in this House could question those values of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The reference he made to Cabinet confidence, I think, is of the strictest importance to the effective process of our system of Government. I do not think that this process should ever be tampered with.

The aboriginal conference referred to by the previous speaker came very close to resolving many of the problems of our aboriginal people. The motion here, which really has not been dealt with effectively by any of the speakers says:

That this House condemns the Government for:

—using the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as the frontline ambassador of good-will—

Can the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) suggest a different way of being an ambassador? Should we continue to follow the old route of former successive Liberal Governments that really got us nowhere?

Mr. Manly: I thank the Hon. Member for his question, Mr. Speaker. I do not think I would want to hold up former Liberal Cabinet Ministers as a model for anybody.

Mr. Rompkey: Why not?

Mr. Manly: I would like to ask that the present federal Government not follow the policy of the Trudeau Government in 1968-69 when it said one thing in public while something else was happening in the back rooms. That is what this motion is concerned about. That is what we are concerned about. On the one hand we are getting statements from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that sound good. I believe he is sincere when he makes them, although I do not believe he has the full confidence of the Cabinet behind him when he makes them. I believe there is a tremendous gap between what that Minister says and what the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is looking for.

I am very concerned about where the real power in Cabinet lies. The Hon. Member commented that the recent First Ministers' Conference came very close to resolving some of the problems. I do not believe that was the case. I watched the Prime Minister at that conference. I saw him attempting to manipulate the situation rather than dealing with it in a forthright manner when the Provinces of Manitoba and Ontario said on the last day that they were not prepared to go along with the Saskatchewan proposal unless it carried with it the consent of the aboriginal people. The Prime Minister completely ignored that and acted as though he still had the consensus of seven provinces. He manipulated the situation by refusing to recognize some of the real concerns that people raised with respect to some of those issues. In addition, he watered down the whole concept of aboriginal self-government to such an extent that the Indian people felt there was absolutely nothing in it for them. There was no constitutional recognition of their right to Indian self-government but only a vague accord that there would be negotiations. There was nothing that would bind the provinces in any way. In other words, when he said, "Let's put a little bit of water in the wine", there was not much wine left at all but only an awful lot of water, some of which didn't smell very good.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to this Opposition motion and especially the first part of the motion which concerns the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

First of all, I would like to point out that the approach taken by the Government to constitutional discussions on Native issues is a comprehensive one which must consider the many important interests that are at stake. The Prime Minister himself confirmed this in his preliminary remarks at the First Ministers' Conference in April. He insisted, and righly so, on the need for identifying, defining and protecting aboriginal rights, and for doing so within the Canadian Constitution. In fact, it is a process that has been going on for several years or at least several months, and at the First Ministers' Conference held by the former Government in 1984, three of the four national native people's associations made a joint proposal for negotiations leading to the application of their ancestral rights. Among these rights, the right to self-government appears to be the most important and the most fundamental one, and, in fact, the basis for successful negotiations.

The Government of Canada agrees with the native representatives that self-government will help native groups to have more effective control over everything that concerns and affects them.

Last December, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), and the Minister of Justice, called the first federal-provincial conference held by this Government. At a meeting to prepare for the Constitutional Conference, the Government, through its spokesmen, tabled a proposal to have certain rights of these native groups recognized in the Constitution. We felt that recognition would have to involve agreement on a definition, negotiated by the governments and the groups concerned. The discussions covered the rights issue and especially the very basic issue of native self-government.

Details were worked out at two subsequent preparatory meetings for the April conference and at a number of meetings of senior officials, with the consent and support of native representatives. Generally speaking, the Government shared the view of these representatives that only a constitutional amendment could guarantee protection of ancestral rights and the establishment of a new relationship between the Native groups and the Government of Canada.

We understand the objections of the provinces to enshrining rights which they saw as being rather vague. Nevertheless, the conclusion was that without the constitutional protection or enshrinement of native rights, a special relationship between the Government, the provinces and the native peoples would not survive.

The Government, and I think this deserves some emphasis, considers this a special relationship—a relationship based on trust and honesty and the basis for future developments in the constitutional process. In his opening speech at the First Ministers' Conference last April, the Prime Minister of Canada stated, and I quote:

> The Federal Government will not take any unexpected initiatives, nor will it resort to pressure tactics to make you adopt positions that run counter to your principles. We are going to play fair, with our cards on the table.

The Prime Minister went on to stress the place and rights of Native peoples and the inclusion of those rights in the Constitution. He said, and I quote the Prime Minister again:

> Recognition in the Constitution of the principle of governmental autonomy would seem to be a primary objective, because it constitutes the most solemn manifestation of the establishing of an indissoluble link, a social contract, between Native peoples and governments.

Mr. Speaker, our first proposal, like the joint proposal made by the native associations, reconciled these two positions. It acknowledged in the Constitution the principle of the right of aboriginal peoples to self-government, leaving aside such issues as powers, fields of jurisdiction and financing to be negotiated later with representatives of the aboriginal peoples. Any agreement resulting from these negotiations should have the same constitutional status and provide the same protection as land claims settlement agreements.

The first proposal paved the way for the discussions I mentioned a moment ago. On every occasion the federal Government proposed a draft constitutional agreement so as to make it possible for all participants to reach agreement. This draft would have led to an amendment on self-Government as early as this year, 1985. This proposal unveiled on the eve of the First Ministers' Conference was three-fold; it included first, full recognition of the rights of aboriginal peoples to self-Government within the Canadian Federation, a point which was to be the subject of negotiated agreements; second, the willingness of the federal and provincial Governments to negotiate with representatives of the aboriginal peoples so as to conclude those agreements; and third, a specific provision stating that those special rights would be constitutionally guaranteed.

During the conference, the majority of participants came close to endorsing an amended version of that proposal in which there was no reference to the willingness or need to negotiate. It could have led to this constitutional amendment rather quickly. We have every reason to believe that we can now count on the support of seven provinces—they represent more than 50 per cent of the Canadian population—to have the amended version accepted. It has been unanimously endorsed by the Council of Native Peoples of Canada and the National Metis Association. However, two of the main groups attending the conference refrained from taking position on that issue. Just the same, the Prime Minister thought that support for the proposal ought to be reassessed at a meeting of interested Ministers to be held later on. As we know now, this meeting will take place next June 5 and 6.

According to the motion now under consideration by the House, Mr. Speaker, the First Ministers' Conference last April was nothing but a public relations exercise intended to reach a consensus which ignored the rights of the aboriginal peoples.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be farther from the truth. Allow me to address a particular point. The native people representatives who took part in the April meeting were all well informed and experienced statesmen. They had been involved in the negotiation process concerning aboriginal rights for many years and they did not express any bitterness, contrary to this opposition motion. To prove my point, I should like to quote directly from the proceedings of the Conference a statement made by the representative of the Native Council of Canada, Mr. Daniels, and I quote:

> Mr. Prime Minister, we agree with you, and I am surprised at the provinces' unwillingness to support you more.

Mr. Speaker, does this comment sound to you as a futile exercise in an attempt to achieve a consensus with the Premiers without consideration for the legitimate rights of the aboriginal peoples? Here is another statement made during this conference by Mr. Jim Sinclair, who was the representative of the Métis people, and I quote:

> This is truly a historical event when a commitment is made for the first time for the Constitutional recognition of the Indian people's right to self-government.

Quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, he was referring to the government's Constitutional proposal.

The Government had achieved this series of extraordinary successes in fewer than five months. During the Conference, even the native representatives were prepared to recognize this progress.

Those were not the only comments made at the time. A great many letters sent later on to the government and especially to the Prime Minister by several Indian chiefs provide a great testimony. These comments and the results obtained clearly demonstrate that the Prime Minister did his utmost to reach a consensus which, in our view is essential if we want to move forward and protect in the Constitution the rights of the aboriginal peoples. The Prime Minister was expressing the Government's intention to pursue that goal at the next First Ministers' Conference, and he repeated it afterwards in a broadcast statement that was made public on April 8, 1985. Far from ignoring the legitimate rights of native peoples, this Government has made giant strides in the process of recognizing those rights. And we intend to keep on doing so.

I would hate to conclude without taking this opportunity because I am well informed, seeing the everyday actions of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) . . . Under the Prime Minister's reponsibility, they have held since last September quite a number of meetings and discussions both with the Provinces and the native groups. And I am absolutely sure that under their guidance, under their responsibility, and because of their determination and energy, we will manage to finalize a constitutional draft that will, first, allow native groups in this country to find within Canada the place they would like to have, and, second, reassure and assure the Provinces that they can, in the overall negotiations, and at all stages put their views forward, in order that in the future our native groups and the whole of Canada can live under a Constitution which provides that each and everyone will have the essential rights to their freedom and collective rights.

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), who has just delivered a very wonderful address in the interests of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), how he would respond to the press release which I have in my hand coming from the Assembly of First Nations, which says this:

> This Cabinet memorandum shockingly outlines a strategy to assimilate Indian people beginning with the 1985 Budget speech. The "Communications Strategy" outlined in the document indicates that the plan of the Government is to tell the Indian people and the Canadian public one thing; and meanwhile to begin to implement the opposite. A "buffalo jump" was a method of exterminating vast herds of buffalo to make way for colonial expansion.

The press release goes on:

> Elimination of the buffalo was equivalent to elimination of the livelihood of Indian people—an act of genocide. The Prime Minister's initiative to take dollars away from Indian people is proof that the strategy outlined in the Cabinet memorandum is being implemented. The object is clearly to kill the political effectiness of the First Nations—to exterminate the "body politic".

It concludes by saying the following:

> The Prime Minister has said many wonderful things—

Just as the Minister did.

> —to the public and to the Indian people in support of the unique rights of the First Nations. The initiatives of this Government, intended to stifle the political effectiveness of the First Nations makes a mockery of the Prime Minister's statements.

[Translation]

Now, could the Minister respond to that?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that there is a normal way to run a country, and that is to analyze and comment on official documents and not papers found in trash cans. The document in question is not an official Government document, which means that comments which may seem interesting at first glance relate to something which is not Government policy. If we and other people were to act and develop our policies according to excerpts from official documents, I am afraid we would not be in a position to run the country very well.

The concerns expressed by the Hon. Member when she quoted from the document could be valid if they were based on a document officially recognized as reflecting the position of the Government of Canada, but we all know that such is not the case, and that is indeed why the motion now under consideration is so unreal. It is because it is based on a document which does not reflect the official position of the Government of Canada. That is the position as stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by the Minister concerned, namely the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), or else by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) when constitutional problems arise. They are responsible for announcing the will and the decisions of the Government. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member's comments are not relevant to an official Government document.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on a supplementary.

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I did not formulate this press conference or this press release. It was the Assembly of First Nations that did. Supportive of the Assembly of First Nations' point of view is that of the Cree regional authority.

[Translation]

—the Cree regional authority, a group you should know quite well since they are based in Quebec, and they too have filed complaints and they insist on having a meeting to obtain some clarification. And I think that as Minister of Communications, the Hon. Minister realizes that something like this could light the powder keg and destroy all the goodwill that has been built up. I am sure he realizes that none of us want this, and I hope the Minister will respond to a request by the Cree regional authority and the Assembly of First Nations and arrange a meeting with them, and that he will provide an explanation through the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Masse: I could not agree more with the Hon. Member. It is unfortunate that a political party should use a document that is not official to scare the Native peoples, at a time when we must find ways, and that is what the Government is doing, within the framework of a dialogue with the provinces and the Native peoples, to find a solution within the framework of the Canadian Constitution.

I think the Hon. Member was absolutely right to deplore, without necessarily saying so but that is what she was thinking, I am sure, that a political party should use a document which it knows perfectly well is not the Government's official document, to scare people. And that is what is so unfortunate, and I think the New Democratic Party is showing incredible intellectual dishonesty in this debate. What this political party is seeking above all is its own personal interests, its interests as a party and not those of the Indians. They are trying to build their future on a foundation of intellectual dishonesty, and I am convinced that both Indians and Canadians will remember how these people managed to spread fear and disrupt the dialogue between the Indians and the Government, a dialogue that is absolutely essential. And if that dialogue and the constitutional amendments materialize, and I sincerely hope they do, it will be thanks to the Prime Minister's initiative and not to the unfortunate action taken by the New Democratic Party.

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister's references to intellectual dishonesty sound rather strange coming from a member of the Conservative Party. If members of the Conservative Party are concerned about intellectual honesty, let them release the 396-page task force report, which is not a Cabinet document and does not need to be protected by any cloak of secrecy. Let them come clean about the whole status of this other document of which we have been speaking.

How is it possible for a high-level task force appointed by the Deputy Prime Minister to bring forth a report that is so completely at variance with the rhetoric of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Indian Affairs? How is it possible for that task force to do its job in complete isolation from everything the Prime Minister is supposed to have been saying for the last six months?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, such a question could only come from our friends of the New Democratic Party. Not quite used to discussions and research work, rather inclined to accept as the final word any instruction from higher-up, they just do not seem to know how a Government operates. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) set up a series of discussion meetings to review existing programs in all Departments. Any new Government coming into office has to review such programs. Within that context and as a result of lengthy discussions, documents are produced. It is quite possible that a document such as the one referred to—I have not seen it, it might just be the twenty-seventh version preceding the one we have now—has somehow been leaked to you by somebody, and you are now trying to claim that it represents Government policy. That is very dishonest, and you know it.

Mr. Speaker, Government policy will be made public by someone whose responsibility it is to do that, not by public officials who leak bits and pieces of committee proceedings in brown envelopes. The Hon. Member and his Party are aware of that. They are trying to play a game of political one-upmanship with a document they got through a nameless sender.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we would understand the Government's position much better if it were prepared to release the final reports to this House so that Members could see them and so that the Indian people could see them as well. What kind of policy guidelines were given to the task force when it began its work? Did it operate in complete isolation from the professed policy of the Prime Minister and the Minister responsible or was there some kind of dialogue? What guidelines were given to the task force?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, I will say that it is obvious that the government is going to make public its policy in due course, when it has completed its discussions with everybody. It will make public the government policy when it comes to the conclusion that the policy should be made public.

Secondly, as far as the guidelines which were given are concerned, I will point out that the programs must be reviewed; groups of people in all areas are entitled to their own ideas. However, the fact that, at a certain time, some people expressed a certain idea is not reason enough to make it government policy in the end. It is a step whereby some people expressed some ideas. But the government policy will be made public either by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) when it is felt that it is in the public interest to disclose what the government policy will be in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question and answer period is now over. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the opposition motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). It is unfortunate that we feel the need to raise this issue, but recent events have forced us to bring this important subject to the attention of all Hon. Members.

The media issued press reports on possible cut-backs in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the proposed changes to the Indian Act have created an air of uncertainty for both status and non-status Indians across the country. It would appear that, contrary to Tory promises made during the 1984 election campaign, disadvantaged members of our society will suffer as a result of government policies. It is unclear, however, what exactly are the government policies. The Government's actions are not a just response to Indian concerns regarding the mechanism of self-government.

As a member of the International Helsinki Watch Committee, if I had to report right now to that committee on the situation in Canada, it would be very difficult not to cite the lack of care and concern that is the hallmark of the administration of the Indian Act. In fact, the long 100 years of injustice would be something that would be unfortunate but would have to be clearly enunciated. I would be ashamed to have to enunciate the litany of injustices that have been inflicted upon our native people.

I refer to the words of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior for I agree with his analysis. He has said that we as Canadians have our own version of apartheid, a most nefarious piece of legislation, one that has disenfranchised men and mostly women and always with the most ridiculous of reasoning. As I participated on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and heard the evidence of over 105 groups, I was absolutely horrified.

I would like now to put this present-day nightmare aside. I would not like us to lose sight of the fact that in the determination of aboriginal rights, equality must prevail. These two issues, the right to self-government and the right to equality, must go hand in hand. It is basically and fundamentally a question of human rights.

The Government has touted its great consultation process, and consult it has. That is so if one can define consulting as being the process by which a party presenting its concerns is speaking to those who have deaf ears. The word used to mean a two-way process involving give and take and a general learning, growing and open approach leading to some consensus or resolution of issues. However, we do not see much evidence of that when it comes to the native or aboriginal peoples. This is obvious from the objections of Indian people themselves concerning the constitutional process, departmental funding, amendments to the Indian Act and the latest scam of the Nielsen "Buffalo Jump" report.

The Tory Government also has a credibility problem when it comes to its stated objective of removing discrimination from the Indian Act. The Minister's laudable principle of equality is simply not being met, and Indian men and women, both status and non-status, are dissatisfied with the Government's actions in this regard. Principles are not enough; we must have some action. We have to carry through with the deeds that demonstrate a real commitment.

I know that the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has had to fight in Cabinet for money for his programs and I know that he is well-meaning Minister. But let us not pretend that equality has been achieved, and let this Minister not continue to say that equality has been achieved. Certainly, equality has not been achieved. Some non-status Indians will regain their status in band memberships and their names will appear on the Department's lists. However, not everyone will regain that status.

• (1610)

In the 1980s, we have finally started to address the issues and to move toward a partnership. We have started to listen. I believe that the Penner report was the first step. Section 35 of the Constitution Act recognizes and affirms the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples—Indian, Inuit, Métis and non-status Indians. While Section 25 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees that the Charter cannot be construed to abrogate or derogate from existing treaty or other rights of aboriginal peoples, those two provisions affirm the place of native groups in Canadian society in a particular and distinct way. The principles are in place. It remains to find the mechanisms for the application.

In order to identify and define native rights for later inclusion, the Constitution Act called for a Constitutional conference between Canada's First Ministers, native leaders and the territorial Governments. That conference, which was held in 1983, resulted in an accord, which subsequently became the first amendment to the Constitution which was proclaimed in June, 1984. I believe this legal framework is necessary for a new relationship, based on mutual respect and defined aboriginal rights. But as we saw at the Constitutional conference which was held this April, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) failed to get the provinces to agree to proposals which would have given the aboriginal people the rights which they sought. He gave them his guarantee that if they agreed to the principles behind the proposals, without entrenching them, he would personally ensure that those rights would be defined after consultation with the provinces. I think one should read that differently. What he said was that once the provinces agreed to what they would like to negotiate, then they would talk about what is appropriate.

I must give the native leaders credit. They were not fooled by the Prime Minister's empty promises. I was there. I saw and watched what went on. It was a fascinating process of the playing off of differences and incredible labour negotiation tactics. But what was obvious was the great differences to be found between the provincial Premiers, the acceptance of the role of the provinces by native peoples, and the deep differences between patrilineal and matrilineal societies and their approaches to the issues. The accord which was suggested by the Prime Minister would have been a travesty, had it been accepted, for all parties concerned.

Given the "Buffalo Jump" proposal to cut funding for native programs—never mind whether they were found in la poubelle, whether they were official or unofficial, or any of the excuses that are being put forward—one must acknowledge that where there is smoke there is fire. If there is a beginning document, it indicates some form of thought and some form of action.

I think it was very wise for the leaders of the aboriginal groups to hold back. This approach to Indian affairs is totally unacceptable. We all need to plan. We must prepare budgets to meet the changing circumstances. It is my view that the Government is denying to native people with its current actions a thoughtful approach to autonomy. It is impossible to plan without knowing what revenue will be available, from where it will come and how it will be spent. Planning in a vacuum is not possible.

I heard the Minister talk about the give and take and the exchange, but that still does not deposit a firm financial funding plan. It is not clear. The process is one thing. That is great. But how can we expect Indian people to plan if they do not know how many dollars they will have and what Treasury Board will approve? The Minister talked about giving aboriginal peoples more control over their own affairs, yet we continue, in our white man's way, to interfere and to perpetuate discrimination. I think that is a very strange way of going about it.

Concerns have been expressed about the ability of some bands to accommodate more members. The Minister is sympathetic to those concerns, and I believe he is sincere. But the Government's actions indicate otherwise. Fear over the lack of infrastructure, schools, roads and houses and insufficient funds to improve conditions are a real impediment to the integration of the reinstated members.

The lack of direction of the Government on native affairs and economic development has contributed to the uncertainty which was created by proposals to restore status and band membership to those who had lost their rights under the discriminatory sections of the Indian Act, in particular the infamous Clause 12(1)(b), for which Canada was found in contravention of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The United Nations Human Rights Committee ruled that there was a violation of Article 27 of the Covenant, and thus a denial of guarantees that persons belonging to minorities may enjoy their own culture.

Since the hearings of the Lavell and Lovelace case, Canada has ratified the United Nations Convention on Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women. In addition, Section 15, the equality clause in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, has come into effect. That clause states that every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability. There is a subsection to that section which does not preclude any law, program or activity which has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups, including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Indian women and their children believe that they would be protected by the Charter, but the Government's policies, if not changed, will force them to appeal to the courts for their rights. I do not believe that should be allowed to happen. It is incumbant on the Government to pass laws which conform to the Charter in both spirit and letter. The protection of individual and collective rights is part of the Canadian mosaic. We see in our Charter concern for the approaches to freedom and non-discrimination obligations. Indian collective rights prevail for the most part. We see collective rights for language in Section 23; multiculture in Section 27; aboriginal rights in Sections 25, 35 and 37; and guarantees for equality to men and women in Sections 15 and 28.

In our desire to rectify the wrongs of the past 117 years, we want to move as quickly as we can toward self-determination. We want to be respectful of differences, patrilineal and matrilineal cultural backgrounds. We want justice to be done. That being said, and having listened to all shades of opinion, the largest consensus has been that every man, woman and child who was enfranchised, or who is a descendant of an enfranchised native person, who so wishes, should have the right to affirm his or her cultural identity as an Indian person within the Indian nation, on Indian land. It must be recognized that aboriginal peoples are part of today's modern world, and that neither under the Canadian Charter of Rights, nor under any of the international covenants which have been signed by Canada, is discrimination based on sex an acceptable principle.

I fully recognize and acknowledge that in dealing with the Indian Act we are dealing in a very complex area. I fully recognize that the Minister is trying to be very cautious. I also recognize that the issue of Indian women is only part of the over-all concern. However, Mr. Speaker, it is only right and just that full equality between men and women be restored and that they and their children and their children's children shall not be part of the political manoeuvring of other agendas, whether it be the right to self-determination, to autonomy, to band self-determination, to lands, to equity or to trust funds. These women and their descendants must be restored to their rightful place, and that includes sharing in the decision-making process which will directly or indirectly impact on their lives, which means participating in the development of native band codes or practices.

● (1620)

Status must be returned to those who were disenfranchised, along with their rights to return to their tribal lands if they so wish. That is what we must accept and what we must do. We must accept the obligation to keep family units intact, which means status and band membership for all who are affected. In no way can we sanction the separation of husbands and wives or women and their children. The splitting of families is not the goal of this exercise, nor is it the Canadian way of life, but it may well be the result. Once this central issue of equality is resolved, only then can we address the agenda of self-government and let the Minister's agenda—not that of the Deputy Minister—begin to prevail.

This weekend we celebrate Mother's Day. Let this be the kind of Mother's Day we can all share and rejoice in, one of family togetherness for all generations. Let us set an example of the fullest expression of human rights for all who share this wonderful land. Let us be people of our word. Let us remove discrimination, not just displace it.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). She mentioned that she had been very interested in the fascinating process of the First Ministers' Conference. When she was there she had an opportunity to see how the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) operated and she also saw how some of the provinces operated. She saw the reaction of some of the provinces, particularly the western provinces, to the whole question of aboriginal self-government. I think she got some impression of their over-all approach to aboriginal questions. In the light of that experience, would the Hon. Member care to comment on the proposal which was in the task force report and in the Cabinet memorandum that more responsibility for Indian Affairs should be turned over to the provinces? In light of what she saw of the provincial reaction at the First Ministers' Conference, how would she feel about that?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, that question was one that I asked myself as I sat and watched an incredible exercise in labour negotiations. I particularly responded to the Saskatchewan proposal, which I believe the Hon. Member mentioned earlier, Alberta's reluctance, the very sensitive remarks of the New Brunswick Minister, and the obvious discomfort of many of those Prime Ministers who were placed in a situation of thinking of themselves first and of the aboriginal peoples second. They were thinking of the potential for loss of land, income, and all kinds of things. I do not really believe that the primary interest of the aboriginal peoples was the primary interest in the minds of all those Premiers. It may well have been that the wish of the federal Government was that that would happen, but with all of the manipulation and manoeuvring which was going on—and it was pretty obvious that plenty of the coffee breaks included some twisting of arms—it was easy to see the isolation of the Assembly of First Nations and the NCC groups as they differed, the Inuits as they suffered, and the Métis as they were trying to find their proper place. I would say that the provinces and the aboriginal peoples have not yet found their proper and comfortable home and, for the most part, these aboriginal people feel more comfortable and have a greater sense of trust in the federal Government, in which they feel the responsibility was vested in the first place.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). In her experience with the past administrations' handling of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, does she feel that it was on the right track? Does she feel that it was taking the right attitude and approach to the problems which many native people have? I would like to have her comments on what has happened before. I want to know whether the Hon. Member felt that the previous administration, in its wisdom, was tackling this problem in the right manner.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the question is one of interest. First, I was not here then, so I cannot respond to what was done by the previous administration. I sat with the Hon. Member and watched and listened, as he did, to all these groups which appeared, and my impression, in total candour, was that something has to be done about the bureaucrats and the functionaries. I do not think any of the Ministers over the last 100 years have had a darn thing to say. What I think has happened is that we have lost ground to those who wheel and deal with the rights of deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and Indian agents, and it is the Indian agents who remove status and disenfranchise left, right and centre. The Hon. Member heard, as I did, the most incredible stories, and I don't even know if the Ministers knew about them.

So the Hon. Member should not try to dump on the past Liberal administration. I was not there so I cannot account for that. However, what has happened over the last 117 years? I think that for a few of those years the Hon. Member's Party was in office.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, actually, I have a question I would like to ask the Hon. Member. Before she came here, before she was elected to this House, she must have kept herself informed about what was going on in our country. I was saying that even though you were not here in this House, you kept abreast of things. I suppose you were in Canada!

Mrs. Finestone: I was in Quebec.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): So, you knew what was going on in this country, especially in Quebec. Has the situation deteriorated to that extent these last few months? We must come to grips with a problem that existed before and the Liberals were in office for at least fifty years. What did they do?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Finestone: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very happy to answer this question. The day before yesterday, I had a meeting with native women of the province of Quebec who came here and were bitterly disappointed. They thought they would find friends among you but they are disappointed that you have... You tricked them. You approach the whole

Indian matter with some mistrust. On one hand, you emphasize all the nice promises, and on the other hand, you put obstacles on their way and, you make them feel as non-persons. If you wish, I will later circulate some documents and testimonies of those Quebec native women who are not very happy with your government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

[English]

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, as I stand today to address this motion, Mr. Speaker, I am indeed tremendously shocked. We have heard Hon. Members of the Opposition today describe how they feel that our Government has let the native people down some garden path. That is a totally insane accusation. I can honestly say, Mr. Speaker, that if the members of the New Democratic Party gave us their Regina Manifesto today, we would find that it would not help one single native in this country. However, they do not exactly throw that out in the open because there would not be an economic growth opportunity for natives at all. Those are the facts of life, yet they stand here and condemn the Government for having had more consultations in eight months than had probably taken place in the previous 25 years of Liberal Government. The Members who sat on the committee dealing with the removal of discrimination, which has existed for so many years, heard a large number of witnesses giving testimony. When the previous Government brought in a Bill, which dies on the Order Paper, it involved this much worth of material. But since December I can tell you that we have had that much material, and that is the difference. That is consultation. That is hearing witnesses, the native people who gave us their impression of how we should improve the Bill. They gave us their impression of what was wrong with it. That is the kind of process this Government has undertaken. To say that we have a hidden agenda is to make a total mockery of what happened.

● (1630)

If we look at members of the Liberal Opposition here today, and they are small in number, for 25 years they did nothing but bring the economy of Canada so deeply into debt that we wonder if we can pull it out, even with the greatest amount of effort. They did that to create jobs, but they left us with almost one and a half million unemployed when we started eight months ago. They went from a $4 billion deficit not so many years ago to a total national debt of $180 billion. But they feel they can stand up and bring a motion such as this to the floor of the House. It is simply scare tactics applied to the native people who are relying on us to help them regain what they have lost over hundreds of years. This is the attitude which shocks me and my colleagues in the Government, and I cannot stand here without illustrating my deep feelings about that ridiculous motion we have to debate here today.

The motion refers to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) as the frontline ambassador of goodwill. Will someone tell me what is wrong with having a Minister of goodwill? Should he go around to all the reserves and have the native representatives come up and accuse him of not having goodwill for them? Should he tell them to go and solve their own problems? Is that what the Opposition is suggesting? Yet it is condemning him for being an ambassador of goodwill. For goodness' sake, what kind of sense does that make?

I have travelled with the Minister and listened to the concern of many Indian leaders. We have listened and the Minister has addressed each and every individual problem. Certainly he has not been able to visit the 500 and some odd bands which exist in Canada, but in eight months he has probably visited more bands, more chiefs and councils, more native organizations, than probably any previous Minister.

That is the consultation process we began, and we are going to continue it. That is what we are here to do. Certainly we are not going to come up with a total solution to every single problem. Certainly the native groups will not have a total solution to the problems with which they come to us. But we have to find a balance. It is not going to satisfy everyone, but if we do not continue on this route, then the Opposition can say to us that we have not acted in good faith. The committee sat for many, many hours trying to work out amicable solutions for all the parties concerned.

Let us just consider Bill C-31 for a minute, and compare it to the previous attempt in Bill C-47, I believe, brought forward by the Liberal Government. Bill C-47 involved a total of just under 20 hours of consideration and some nine witnesses. The Bill was studied for five hours in camera, a few amendments were made and it was sent to the House, where it ultimately died on the Order Paper. However, regarding Bill C-31, we have had 52 witnesses and in excess of 75 hours of committee hearings. Can anyone over there honestly say that that is not consultation? Not if you compare it to what there was before, because it makes a mockery of what went on before, doesn't it? This never happened before. Members of the Opposition sat in on those meetings and listened, and even proposed amendments, which we accepted! Yet they sit there and condemn this Government. I say, shame!

We made amendments resulting from witnesses' testimony. If that is not consultation, then I would like Members opposite to tell me how to do it better. We added a new clause to Bill C-31 which says that the Minister shall cause to be laid before each House of Parliament not later than two years after this Act is assented to a report on the implementation of the amendments, which report shall include detailed information on the number of people who have been registered, the number entered on each band list and so on. In other words, we are going to review what we have done to find out if it has had the effect of solving some of these major problems which were created many, many years before. That is a review. We are not saying it is perfect, but we are saying we are prepared to look at it again to see if we can make it still better. That is the review process which I think was lacking so many times before in any legislation which went through this House. Yet we are criticized.

I can take good constructive criticism. I can understand when someone says we should have taken longer. I can understand that sometimes it is very difficult for a Government of this country to take more time to implement what is needed. In the past we have debated some very serious problems which needed quick solutions that affected farmers or other groups which were in distress. We have had all-Party support for resolutions because veryone recognized the necessity. Surely this is a far cry from what has happened previously. I cannot stand here and continue to condemn the past. If we continue to do that, we will not make good legislators for the future. We must have visions for tomorrow and do the best possible job for the people of Canada.

This is probably the worst activity of the Opposition that we have seen recently. It attempted to use a scare tactic with the native people of the country. Once the opposition Members had made a few statements in the House they ran outside and said that this is a terrible Government. They did that to get as much publicity as they could. I do not feel that they can be proud of that.

In debate in the House today someone said that there is a hidden agenda and a document has been found. They know it is not an official document, but they waved it in front of the microphone in an attempt to look good next week. The time will come when they will see how foolish their activities are. They are not helping anyone.

We have heard speeches about Indian self-government. There are many opinions on what that is. The Government will eventually turn over self-administration without destroying the culture of native groups. I am sure that is the right way to go. However, there is an important factor which we cannot leave out. We must bring them to the table to discuss how we can best help them achieve self-government which will work within the confines of the Government of Canada for the benefit of all Canadians. The consultation process must carry on. It is the job of the Government and of the Opposition to hear those ideas in order to best help the native people and make them proud again, as they once were. We must give them some meaning again, especially in those areas where they have virtually nothing but dollars from the federal Government to keep them going from day to day. The challenge for the Government and the Opposition is to accomplish that rather than to make political waves. Let us look toward tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

While self-government will not automatically ensure economic development, and a stronger economic base will not automatically ensure self-government, I believe that efforts by the Government to foster these interrelated elements will. Such efforts will give communities more scope to make decisions about shifting resources and investment decisions.

The most fundamental part of this is education. Very few of us would have been able to achieve success in our businesses or as parliamentarians without education, a knowledge of the country and of common-sense activities. Education must be the thrust of the Government to help those who do not have adequate education. I do not necessarily refer to our type of education with regard to the native people of Canada, but that which is important to them to sustain their growth and culture. That is the important point, Mr. Speaker. As a country we must grow economically sound in order to help those less fortunate than us. We can only do that by putting our economy back together.

An Hon. Member from the Liberal Party indicated that the Department of Indian Affairs has created more problems than it has solved. He made a very valid statement. Through talking to many native leaders I have learned that their bands have lost funding due to improper management by the Department. This is a very sad truth which the Government must address. It is inconceivable that a Department has been allowed to grow so quickly and not be responsible to the people it was assigned to assist. It is a challenge to all Members of Parliament to ensure that money allocated for native development and culture goes to the natives rather than to people in between. To that end I dedicate myself, my Government, and the Opposition.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member on his presentation. He gave us all a good insight into the problems faced by our native people. I know he was speaking from the heart. I understand he has several Indian bands in his riding.

Does he think that there has been irreparable damage caused by the leak this week of that document? How long does he think it will take to heal the rift that has developed among the native people?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, that will be determined in the weeks and months ahead. I believe that those who are most harshly affected by the poverty levels of native people will fear these accusations the most. Their only resource is monies from the federal Government, whether through welfare or another type of assistance. As you well know, many native people do not have a level of education which allows them to go on to bigger and better jobs, inside or outside their community. If they feel the money that they are receiving will be cut, it will be very damaging to our objectives of helping them find better opportunities.

Yes, I think we have to be sensitive to their needs and not allow this type of unfounded dialogue to be scattered around like paper in a wastebasket. We have to be very careful. We are dealing with people's lives. I for one would not like to see those people, the very needy, who need every source of Government funding to put bread and butter on their table or to be able to buy bedding, the basics while there is no opportunity to get a job, be subjected to further poverty. When there is no opportunity, it would shock them should those minimal funds be cut. That is not the intent of this Government. It never should be. In this country we have economic problems but we do not have to take away what is essential for living, which is not enough in many cases. Never should those people be denied that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words on the motion filed by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). First, I am not quite as optimistic as the Member who just sat down about the intentions of the Government across the way. I have known the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) for many, many years. I have known him for 17 or 18 years and I suspect his recommendations might be a bit more draconian than the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) believes them to be. He was a tough guy in the opposition in this House for many years. He was a rather conservative Conservative. He believed in a lot of restraint and cut-backs. He did not have too much sympathy for social spending and programs of the sort. I just want to caution the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake that he should not get himself too far off on a cliff because he is liable to fall off in a few weeks, a few months, or a year or two years' time when we see some of the ramifications of this paper put out by the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada.

I think that the memorandum is very serious. It is a memorandum to Cabinet under the name of the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada. It is dated April 12, 1985, which was four weeks ago. This is a report of the ministerial task force on native programs. As one goes through this particular task force report one finds example after example of possibilities of really severe cut-backs to programs for the native people of Canada. These seem to fly in the face of the rhetoric, the style and the image of the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie).

I wish the Deputy Prime Minister were a little more honest and direct and I wish he would confirm that this is his document. It is under his name. It has his in-put and he is responsible for it. It seems to me to be a rather cynical and hypocritical document from a man who, when in opposition, was so quick to condemn the Liberal Government of the day for not being honest, above board, not having freedom of information laws, not being more direct, not having openness in government. All of those things were very big issues for the Deputy Prime Minister and indeed for the Leader of his Party last summer during the election campaign. Now this Government is carrying on in the same old way. The faces on the front bench have changed. The Government has not changed. We have the same old bureaucrats, the same old consensus and the same old studies.

I think the time has come in this House for a back-bench revolt by members of the Conservative Party. Where are those who have the individualism, guts and willingness to get up and say no? That revolt will have to come some day, Mr. Speaker. It has come before in this House when we had massive majorities, insensitive and uncaring majorities that trampled on the rights of ordinary citizens. It will come again, Mr. Speaker. We are already seeing signals around this country of shifting sentiments in provincial politics where Conservatives in many provinces are losing support. I refer not only to Ontario, but to Newfoundland, the by-elections in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia where our Party picked up two seats last fall. We see the signals all over. Even in Saskatchewan, the Conservative Government of Premier Devine had its popularity drop from 62 per cent to 42 per cent in the riding of Thunder Creek in a by-election to replace Colin Thatcher. All of these are signs that people do not like big, insensitive government and muted, quiet back-benchers who are afraid to speak their minds. If there is ever a better issue, it is an issue like this.

I will take you very briefly through some of the important things in this report, Mr. Speaker. Even the code name in this report is one that I do not think is very complimentary to the Indian people of this land. The code name is "Buffalo Jump of the 1980s". I have eight Indian reserves in my riding. I grew up on a small farm adjacent to one reserve, a mile and a half from the second. I went to school all my life with Indian children, into high school and university as well. I know that kind of attitude is not one that is appreciated by the Indian people. They want Members of this Parliament in all Parties to stand up and speak out against this type of a document.

In terms of things that are substantive in this report, let us look at page 17. There is a recommendation to eliminate around $300 million worth of spending from 1986 to 1988. In 1986-87 the amount is $134 million, and in 1987-88 it is $178 million. Perhaps even more seriously the report says on page 17 that one of the objectives should be to contain the rapid escalation of future costs that would derive from leaving existing programs unchecked.

We have just heard a very passionate speech delivered by the Hon. Member from Manitoba about the Indian people not having enough money for food, bedding, clothing and medicine and that his Government would not touch programs to harm the native people of Canada.

Mr. Manly: We will see.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, we will see. Here is the most powerful Minister in the Government of Canada, the Deputy Prime Minister, the guy who has the hammer in terms of the controls, recommending in his memorandum that a look be taken at cutting existing programs, that they should not be left unchecked.

Let me go further, Mr. Speaker, on to page 23 of this report. Here is another argument why there should be concern. On this page, in Section No. 7 the Government calls for "a review of the practice of funding Indian groups to clarify points of law".

We have a tremendous debate in this country with the Charter of Rights, the Constitution, Indian self-government and the aboriginal conferences. We have a practice in this country of helping to fund some of the legal costs of native people. That is being done by the federal Government. It is a good practice and a good precedent. But what we see here in this memo is a call to review that practice, to curtail that kind of funding. At the same time, if you go back a page in the report to Section 5 on page 21, you find that the Government is talking about beefing up the legal services of the federal Government of Canada to fight these very same Indians or aboriginal people in court, while cutting back on their funding and legal services.

In the one or two minutes that I have left, let me refer you as well to the whole question of jobs, Mr. Speaker. On page 29, instead of talking about putting more money in the hands of Indian people for self-government, self-direction, self-control and self-reliance, the Government is talking about referring more and more to job creation in the private sector. I have eight reserves in my riding. The private sector provides but a pittance of employment to the Indian people on those eight reserves. What they need is more federal funding in their own hands where they can control it with true and just economic democracy.

What about health care, Mr. Speaker? On page 39 the Government is talking about closing hospitals and about deterrence to health care. In my province we had a Liberal Government under Ross Thatcher defeated, because it brought in deterrence fees to health care prior to 1971. Is this the kind of system that the Conservative Government across the way is talking about? I hope not, Mr. Speaker. I invite my friend on the government back-benches to rise as one and speak out against this uncaring and insensitive Government led by the Member for the Yukon, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada.
