We should also recognize that there are some very legitimate reasons why fairly substantial volumes of pork are moving to the United States, to the extent of approximately 20 per cent of our domestic production. Most will realize that the major contributing factor is that there is a substantial difference in the dollar. There are lower labour costs in U.S. plants, and American slaughter operations can buy the types of hogs from Canadian sources that their market requires.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Minister that his answer is not worth a pig's squeal to producers in Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, during his visit, President Reagan told the Prime Minister he was as close as his telephone. Has the Minister of Agriculture approached the Prime Minister to ask him to call President Reagan immediately before the entire agricultural industry is flat on its back?

[English]

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and, indeed, his opposition colleague, continue to ignore the obvious facts in this case. This action began in 1984 and the Hon. Member should recognize that, indeed, the lines of communication are always open and they are utilized at every possible opportunity when we think it will be in the best interests of domestic producers. I can assure the Hon. Member that we intend to utilize every line of communication to resolve this problem positively, in favour of Canada's pork producers.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION ON NUMBER OF JOBS PROMISED BY BELL HELICOPTER AT MIRABEL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, if he could return to his seat.

Yesterday, Bell Helicopter announced there will be a one-year delay in production start-up at its plant in Mirabel. When the Minister met with the directors of the company, did he mention the fact that the company president announced he would be hiring only 600 people instead of delivering 2,100 jobs as promised?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think this unfortunate misunderstanding that has occurred with respect to the number of jobs comes partly from the rather inaccurate advertising that the previous Government put out concerning this particular development.

The job expectation of 3,000 jobs or 2,000 jobs that is generally referred to is over a fairly long timeframe. The number of jobs that are being specifically talked about today and committed to are for a shorter timeframe and not dissimilar to the original announcement that was made at the time the Bell helicopter deal was originally entered into.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister has acknowledged that there is confusion, that the project has been delayed a year, and that the company itself has made varying statements with respect to how much it is putting up, will the Minister support a public inquiry at this stage to get to the bottom of this whole set of confused facts and relationships?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will not contribute to the confusion to which he is referring. The fact is that this project is proceeding. With respect to the time delays, it is not that unusual to have some time delays in a high technology deal. The management has assured me that it is as committed today as it was then to put up the money that was originally anticipated. In short, if the Hon. Members and others will be patient, I believe that this may well be one of the more successful endeavours that Canada has helped sponsor.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. A large number of my constituents are very concerned about the mortgages on their homes. What will the Minister of Finance do about the high interest rates which these young people are having to face?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I waited throughout Question Period for a question concerning interest rates. I am sure Hon. Members will be very pleased to know that the Bank of Canada rate is down over a half of one per cent this week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is on top of the half of one per cent of last week, or over one per cent in two weeks. As I said to the House about four weeks ago, by the end of this month I expected that interest rates would come down, and I am very pleased to report that they have.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of two, presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, March 27, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and by the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what House business does my hon. friend propose for the coming week?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members will know, after a rigorous session we are looking forward to a recess so that we will be able to return to our constituencies for Easter, commencing on April 3. We have pieces of legislation of some importance with which we should like to deal prior to that time.

Full and active discussions took place yesterday and today. Correspondence has been exchanged among the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party. As well, there have been discussions among House Leaders concerning the business for the balance of today and tomorrow.

On the basis of an agreement on the part of all Parties, it is my proposal to introduce legislation for first reading at the appropriate time today. It is a Bill with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank. With unanimous consent, we could move to second reading of that legislation immediately upon Orders of the Day being called. The understanding of the Parties is that we would complete second reading consideration in all respects this afternoon.

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), who was supposed to bring forward a motion under Private Members' Hour has graciously agreed to postpone consideration of his motion, which would mean that we would have that hour for consideration of this legislation on second reading.

Tomorrow the House could revert again to this piece of legislation and consider it at all remaining stages, including Committee of the Whole consideration, to allow a full discussion of the Bill.

As part of this arrangement the New Democratic Party brought forward the suggestion, which is supported by the Official Opposition, that after the Bill has been passed and Royal Assent given, I bring forward a reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We hope Royal Assent will be obtained at the end of the day tomorrow, as the other place will have an opportunity to preconsider the legislation. After full consultation and approval on the part of both Opposition House Leaders, I will bring forward this reference concerning the matters leading up to this legislation and indeed the legislation itself. This will provide Hon. Members with an opportunity to consider the circumstances leading up to the legislation which will be brought forward for consideration today. In brief, that is what I propose for today and tomorrow.

As far as business for next week is concerned, there are a number of items which I will have to wait until tomorrow to discuss with Opposition House Leaders and with Hon. Members in general. We do have the Bill which we were considering this morning. Indeed, other pieces of legislation may come forward at the beginning of the week. I will discuss the matter with Opposition House Leaders and announce tomorrow the business for next week.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition would like to see the House expedite consideration of the Bill dealing with the rescue of the Canadian Commercial Bank. We are certainly willing to have the Bill go through all stages by the close of business of the House on Friday. However, I should like to suggest and have it confirmed that second reading start at five o'clock in lieu of Private Members' Hour. We know that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has a statement to make on motions today. It is of some importance, and there will be replies to it by Opposition spokesmen and questions. This might take us very close to Private Members' Hour anyway. Certainly we are ready to undertake that second reading be completed today. We would like most of tomorrow to be devoted to Committee of the Whole stage.

With respect to the terms of reference of a motion dealing with the circumstances leading up to this Bill to the appropriate committee for study, I should like to consult with my hon. friend on some changes in the terms of reference which will make them more acceptable to the Official Opposition.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I know that this is not the time when you will be seeking the necessary unanimous consent to allow the House to proceed with second reading, but I want to indicate that the House Leaders of the Government and of the Official Opposition and I discussed the possibility of proceeding in the way the Government House Leader indicated today.

I want to make it clear that our agreement to proceed today is in recognition of the potential for an even greater disaster in the banking community. It is not an acceptance of this particular method of handling these kinds of unfortunate circumstances. We do not agree that the Government has acted appropriately but, since this is the action to be taken, it should be taken swiftly.

The terms of reference to allow the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to go into the details of the conditions and circumstances which led up to the near collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank are an integral part of our agreement to proceed expeditiously with the passage of the Bill. I believe, as do my colleagues, that it is vitally important at this point to review very seriously what occurred within the Canadian Commercial Bank and the banking community at that point. Otherwise the same kinds of circumstances could easily occur again.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as a result of the comments which have been made, there is a consensus to proceed on a reasonable basis. While I would not use the exclamatory phrases of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) with respect to this particular legislation, I want to make quite clear that the Minister of State for Finance has been very forthcoming on this matter and in fact has always wanted to have it discussed fully on the floor of the House of Commons. She has been very receptive and has instructed me to say to the House that we are very much in favour of having the matter referred to committee for the fullest and most responsible discussion in the national good. That is the attitude with which we all enter the matter. We appreciate the responsible way in which the House Leaders of the Official Opposition and the NDP are approaching this important issue.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

TABLING OF MEMORANDUM OF INTENT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 46(2), I have the honour to place on the Table in both official languages a Memorandum of Intent regarding the Canadian Commercial Bank. Since two parties to the agreement will be signing the document today, I am tabling an unsigned copy.

ENERGY

TABLING OF WESTERN ACCORD

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, I would like to table under the provisions of Standing Order 46(2) a copy of the Western Accord in both official languages, and I will be making a statement under Statements by Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT ON WESTERN ACCORD REACHED WITH ALBERTA, SASKATCHEWAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to announce today a new energy policy for Canadians, the Western Accord, a comprehensive agreement between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the oil and gas producing provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Like the Atlantic Accord which the Government signed with Newfoundland and Labrador only six weeks ago, the Western Accord marks a milestone in our country's history. The Atlantic Accord gave Newfoundland and Labrador equality within Confederation by allowing the offshore resources to be treated as if they were on land in the interests of a strong and united Canada. The Western Accord maintains the spirit of Confederation by ending discrimination against the western provinces, discrimination imposed in a cruel and arbitrary fashion by the Liberal Government's national energy policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Both Accords are aimed at ensuring energy security for all Canadians by encouraging the development of our vital energy resources. Both Accords are aimed at creating jobs for unemployed Canadians in all regions of Canada. Energy means growth, investment, unity and opportunity for all Canadians. Energy can be used to unify Canada, not divide it.

If rigs are working on the offshore, then plants are operating in Ontario and shipyards are working in Quebec and B.C. When oil sands plants and upgraders are being built in Alberta and Saskatchewan, jobs are created across Canada. Energy truly can be developed as an engine of growth, of national conciliation and of economic renewal.

The days of federal-provincial acrimony and confrontation that marked the last decade are over. The Western Accord hammered out between myself and my western colleagues over the past few months and which was finalized this week in Vancouver contains three fundamental concepts which we believe will strengthen this country's petroleum industry. The first concept is deregulation of crude oil pricing in Canada; the second is the complete overhaul of our natural gas pricing and marketing system; and the third deals with the severe problems of our current oil and gas fiscal regime, a fiscal regime that has shackled our petroleum industry and forced consumers to pay artificially high prices.

Let me deal with the deregulation of crude oil. Since the national energy policy was imposed in October, 1980 Canadians have suffered from a bureaucratic nightmare, a nightmare which has frightened away foreign investment, boosted prices at the pumps, and discouraged those who wanted to go out and find new sources of oil and gas. Those days are over too. Beginning on June 1, 1985 we will let buyers be buyers and sellers be sellers. In other words, under deregulation the market will decide what crude oil prices will be.

I want to stress, however, that Canadians will be protected from the volatility of international markets and, in the event of serious disturbances, the federal Government will take steps to protect Canadian consumers. The same will be true for crude oil exports. To protect the national interest, the federal Government can restrict exports as required. If Canada's energy security was threatened, we would act, and act decisively.

There will be significant changes for our domestic natural gas industry as well. A universally accepted premise between myself and my western colleagues was the need to have a more flexible and market-oriented natural gas pricing system that is fair to consumers and producers alike. Implementing this system, however, in the interim, will take some time because there are outstanding contracts in force. We have agreed to maintain the Alberta border price of natural gas at its present level pending the introduction of a new domestic gas pricing regime which will be in place by next November. Furthermore, we have formed a joint task force to work closely with the industry to develop this new system.

Third, and perhaps most importantly, we have agreed to change fundamentally the fiscal regime, a regime that has discouraged investment and threatened Canada's energy security. Today, in keeping with the Conservative campaign promises, I am announcing the beginning of the end of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The PGRT, which taxes revenues and not profits, is hated by western Canadians and will be cut in half in two and a half years and eliminated totally the year after. We are also abolishing five other charges and taxes, including the Petroleum Compensation Charge and the Canadian Ownership Special Charge which is paid by consumers.

The end of the PGRT will mean that ambitious projects like Venture and Hibernia, the Alberta oil sands plants, the Beaufort wells, and the Vancouver Island pipelines of this country will be able to attract the massive amounts of new capital needed to develop them and thus ensure energy security for Canadians. The elimination of the PGRT will mean reinvestment on a large scale in Canada. Canadian security of supply demands it. And under the terms of the Western Accord, the federal and producing Governments expect such reinvestment will occur. To ensure that it does, we will be monitoring the industry's performance very carefully to ensure that the industry's historic high level of investment is enhanced.

In addition, there will be no PGRT applied on new projects and new production, effective April 1. This will encourage immediate construction of new plants and increased exploration and development of new energy resources. This will increase activity in all oil and gas regions of Canada.

We have also taken steps to ensure that smaller Canadian companies will be given the opportunity to participate in the development of our oil and gas resources by enabling companies in a non-taxpaying position, mostly Canadian, to take advantage of PGRT deductions that will put them on an equal footing with foreign-owned companies.

As we have promised, Mr. Speaker, we will phase out the Petroleum Incentives Program as well, but I can assure this House that any commitments already made under the program will be honoured by the federal Government. This will ensure stability in offshore and Beaufort exploration and development. Furthermore, PIP will be replaced by a tax-based incentive regime that discriminates against no one but will encourage the development of new, high-risk projects. The Government of Canada will consult with Newfoundland and Labrador, with Nova Scotia and with the Territorial Governments on appropriate incentives.

Under the terms of the Western Accord, the provinces agree to flow through to the industry all benefits arising from oil deregulation, federal tax relief and any savings from the elimination of provincial incentives associated with the termination of the federal Petroleum Incentives Program.

These are only some of the highlights of the Agreement I signed with my western counterparts. Throughout our discussions our overwhelming desire was to create the kind of climate in Canada that will stimulate investment, end discrimination and create the economic growth needed to put Canadians back to work in the interests of a strong and united Canada. We have reached an agreement that will unify and benefit all parts of our diverse nation. We now look to the industry for the reinvestment of new revenue that will create jobs and ensure adequate future oil supply to ensure Canada's energy security.

With the Western Accord, we are encouraging oil and gas companies to do what they know best, to find and develop new sources of energy for future generations and to create jobs and economic opportunities for all Canadians.

• (1520)

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that I agree with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) in that an agreement between the federal Government and the western provinces is preferable, not only in the interests of the economy of western Canada but in the interests of the economy of Canada as a whole. I sincerely hope that this Agreement will provide the jobs that the Minister claims it will. But we should not have an agreement for the sake of having an agreement. In that regard, I cannot agree with the Accord which was signed by the Minister and the three western provinces.

The Minister said that deregulation in the market will decide what crude oil prices will be. Undoubtedly that will mean increased oil prices for the consumer.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. MacLellan: I would ask Members opposite if they can remember a time when the oil companies rolled back prices in any situation unless they absolutely had to. It will not mean lower prices for consumers.

The Minister's statement said that Canadians would be protected against volubility in international markets and that the Government would take steps to ensure that. What steps will the Government take? It could be a very serious situation if problems arise in the Middle East and oil prices escalate very quickly. We need to know exactly what the Government is prepared to do. If it is going to give any kind of meaningful compensation to Canadians it will have to be a financial commitment. We want to know from the Government what it is prepared to do.

What will the Government do to pay for what it has accomplished? It will put an additional tax on the consumer. Where will that come from? At the present time the multinational oil companies account for 60 per cent of old oil. In fact, with the deregulation of oil prices they will receive a tremendous windfall profit. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was asked earlier what the Government would do to protect the consumer in that regard. He said that the answer would be provided in the Minister's statement. Well, it was not provided in the Minister's statement.

What will the Government do with respect to natural gas? We have no answers on that subject, other than that we will not get an answer until next November. Certainly we will not get an answer until after the Ontario election. Obviously, it means increased natural gas prices for people in Canada.

The Government said that it would do away with the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax in the next 3.5 years. The Government has said that without the PGRT projects like Venture and Hibernia will be able to soar and develop. How will they develop when the Government has taken away the grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program? Chief executive officers in the energy sector have been asked what the taking away of PIP will mean to Venture and Hibernia. They said that essentially it could mean the end of both projects and that all the action in the energy sector would move to western Canada. Certainly I do not disagree with increased energy involvement in western Canada, but it will mean a very serious situation in eastern Canada.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, it will. We do not have answers from the Government as to what will replace this very important program. I say to the Minister of Finance that it is important. We need answers. Both of those projects are at a very critical stage. We can have the Atlantic Accord and all the agreements in the world, but unless the fiscal regime is in place we cannot convince the energy sector to invest in eastern Canada.

What will happen? We do not know what will happen until we get the answers from the Government. What will happen in Newfoundland? Conceivably, Hibernia could not go ahead, or it could be postponed indefinitely. That would be a tremendous travesty for eastern Canada, which is already suffering tremendous unemployment.

The Government said that it would consult with Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. Why did it not consult with Newfoundland and Nova Scotia before it reached the energy agreement with western Canada? It would only have been a courtesy to do that, because they too are energy-producing provinces.

What about the Petroleum Compensation Charge? The Minister of Finance in his statement of November 8, and yesterday in the House, said that the Petroleum Compensation Charge would be phased out. He also said last November that he hoped to get $1.2 billion of the Petroleum Compensation Charge back at the negotiating table. That was completely ruled out at the outset of the negotiations. There will be no compensation from this agreement to pay back the moneys which are owing in that account.

What about Canadianization? The Minister said that all companies would be put on an equal footing. What is wrong with giving a little edge to Canadian companies? What is wrong with improving and increasing Canadianization in the energy sector?

Some Hon. Members: Nothing.

Mr. MacLellan: That is what we want to see. There is no commitment in this document on this very important question.

Some Hon. Members: Yes, there is.

Mr. MacLellan: It is a very vital factor.

We know that the PGRT will be done away with. That was one of the Government's commitments. But what will that mean? Where do we go from here? What did we get from the Province of Alberta? Nothing. We did not get any reduction in royalties whatsoever. It is a one-way street. Alberta would not even consider a reduction in the royalties. Alberta will increase the Heritage Fund. I would not mind if a little of that money went to the Province of Alberta. There is great unemployment in Alberta and it has food lines, but the Heritage Fund stays in the bank. Increasing the Heritage Fund will not help the people of Alberta in the short term. Certainly it will not help the economy of this country. Premier Lougheed has said that he is saving the fund for a rainy day. Well, we not only have a rainy day, we have an economic monsoon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: Unless there is a commitment by the Province of Alberta to roll back their input—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, the Hon. Member is entitled to make his statement with the same respect which was given the Minister.

Mr. Malone: But he's talking about Alberta!

Mr. MacLellan: Alberta is part of Canada and we are very proud of it, but it is putting $5 billion into the Heritage Fund each year.

This country needs economic activity. We cannot balkanize this country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that this agreement would deal with balkanizing the country, but it does not. The consumers have yet to hear how this agreement will help the people of Canada. They have yet to hear how these amounts will be compensated. They have yet to hear that this will not be put on their backs for repayment.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Opposition critic for the Liberal Party for his fine comments. I would also like to thank the Minister for providing me with a copy of her remarks before she made her statement.

With this oil deal, the federal deficit is no longer a problem when it comes to giving money away to the oil companies. It is only a problem when it is a question of giving money away to ordinary Canadians. There is a double standard. If I was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I would be ashamed. I would also be concerned about giving away the store. The Minister of Finance in the end will have to deal with the deficit and he has given away one of the major taxes of federal revenue.

On November 8, 1984, social programs were cut because of the need to cut the growth in the deficit. Today we have a situation where the oil companies virtually get the whole store, and all the cut-backs in federal revenue flow directly through the oil companies. There is even a guarantee in the Agreement that the provinces will let the revenue flow through the oil companies. When it comes to these oil companies, Mr. Speaker, on the pretext of federal-provincial co-operation, on which we all agree, four Conservative Energy Ministers become literally patsies for the industry, giving away the whole store. There is $2.5 billion going to the oil companies ultimately from that PGRT. The PGRT was a tough tax. It has certain constitutional problems. I agree with Premier Lougheed about that. It was really like a royalty and royalties belong to the province. But it did collect revenue for the federal Government from an industry which is not used to paying taxes. Once this revenue based system is changed to a profit based system, these companies find all sorts of write-offs and never pay any taxes.

The federal Government will have to make up that money somewhere. Where will it make it up? You guessed it, Mr. Speaker, it is ultimately going to be made up by the Canadian consumer. Perhaps it will be made up at the gas pumps. There is a speculation today that it will be made up with a tax which will amount to 5 cents a litre. The Conservatives are famous for putting up prices at the gas pumps. They have a history of that. They even lost an election over that, and they still have not learned.

The Government might do it another way. It might do it by some other kinds of taxes, but we will have to wait until the federal Budget to see. We go to world prices, the oil companies get the money and the consumer gets the rhetoric.

The Government is going to monitor the situation. But that is not going to make any difference. The Government already monitors it. There is the Petroleum Monitoring Agency. There is nothing in this deal, Mr. Speaker, to show that when this money goes to the oil companies, it is going to be reinvested in Canada. As a matter of fact, when we go to world price, what will happen is that old oil—that is oil which was found before 1974—will go up in price somewhere between $4 and $7 a barrel. New oil, which is oil found after 1974 and would include Hibernia, offshore oil, and so on, would go down in price I believe about $3 to about $6 a barrel. If it goes down in price, who are the winners and the losers? The winners are the people who own the old oil and, by and large, they are the multinational oil companies, Shell, Gulf, Imperial and so on. They will make over $300 million as a windfall and there is no mention in here of any windfall profits tax. There is no way of recouping that money. Who will be the losers? The losers will be the Canadian companies which own that new oil.

I believe it is an irresponsible deal, and it is not even a "deal", because the Government gave away all its ace cards before it got into the negotiations. In the famous red barn speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in July, just before the federal election was called, he said, "We will eliminate the PGRT". So the Minister went there virtually without any ace card against a very tough negotiating team from Alberta.

The phrases in the Minister's speech, such as "The engine of economic growth" and so on, really worry me. These are the phrases we heard said by the Canadian Petroleum Association to the Energy Committee of the House of Commons in the early 1980s. I heard these phrases day in and day out from big oil companies. The Minister, a patsy for the oil industry, has bought it hook, line and sinker.

Where is the Government going to make up the lost revenue, Mr. Speaker? The Government distributes its own figures and I will quote from them. The petroleum revenue sharing in 1984 resulted in $22 billion in revenues and $3.8 billion was to go to the federal Government. This is the sharing of the pie. They are now giving away a substantial chunk of that revenue in the PGRT. Where is it going to be made up? There is talk of jobs being created. Yes, there are some jobs created in Alberta and Alberta needs those jobs, but I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the petroleum Monitoring Agency reports that for the first six months of 1984, as compared to the first six months of 1983, the oil industry profits in Canada increased by 40 per cent. That is up by $1.7 billion for the whole industry. Capital expenditures for the same time went down by 5 per cent. Thus, with respect to the recent increase in gas prices, there is no justification for giving the industry more money. As far as the return on investment, we cannot believe that propaganda. John Halliwell, the respected B.C. economist, said in a report recently that in fact the oil industry was making 50 per cent more in return on investment than other types of Canadian industry. And the Government is buying its line. Hon. Members should read the comments of the Ontario Deputy Minister of Energy, Duncan Allen. He said in January, and I quote:

> "The engine of growth (oil industry) grabs a whole lot of money from consumers in the form of a significant withdrawal of purchasing power in Ontario and has very limited offsetting effects in terms of jobs, purchasing, employment and investment—on balance, it's negative except (for) Alberta", Allen said.

In fact, he said, diverting money and resources to the petroleum industry is a poor investment in terms of job-creation. For every $1 million invested in the petroleum industry only 15 permanent jobs are created for Canadians. He went on to say that there will be a loss of 60,000 jobs if we go to world prices in Ontario.

I want to ask the Minister, and I will do so later, whether she has consulted with Frank Miller and asked him whether he agrees with his own Deputy Minister of Energy in Ontario. The Minister of Energy in Manitoba has said that going to world prices will cost 1,500 jobs in Manitoba and a lot more across the country, which the federal Government is not calculating. He said that if world prices are necessary, there must be trade-offs. We want to find out what the trade-offs are which will help the other parts of the country and what will help the consumer.

We want to find out as well what will happen with natural gas. This is a partial deal. The real guts of the dispute between Alberta and Ontario will be in the pricing of natural gas. What the Government has done here is simply to put off the deal on natural gas. We want to find out if the Government will be prepared to commit itself to ensuring that in the future the export price of gas will never fall below what Canadians have to pay for gas. We will find that out when the real deal comes through.

There are lots of things I can say about the Agreement. First, there is a new book on the National Energy Program. I was here when this program was put through. There are a lot of problems with the National Energy Program. There were bureaucratic programs as only the Liberals could have with their grants and back-ins and so on. But the fact is that we need the National Energy Program for Canada. We cannot buy all the rhetoric of the oil companies. We have to give a fair deal to both the producers and the consumers. And this is not a fair deal for the consumer or the general public. This is giving away all the revenues, giving away all the store to the oil companies, largely the multinational oil companies. In spite of all the rhetoric from all sides of the House, the key question will be what will be the world price. That will decide whether the industry really goes. But now we are at the mercy, I feel, of some very false world prices, such as that of OPEC. But we will just have to wait and see. Meanwhile, I will have some particular questions for the Minister.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to view in great detail the contents of the Agreement the Minister has signed, but perhaps for Hon. Members of the House she would be kind enough to explain what the Government of Canada will lose in terms of revenue as a result of reducing the PGRT, particularly in fiscal years 1985-86 and 1986-87.

My other two questions have to do with the Petroleum Incentives Program. The Minister in her statement alluded to the fact that any existing agreements which are in place she will honour, and I respect her for that. However, is the Minister saying to the Province of Nova Scotia, in terms of replacing the Petroleum Incentives Program with a tax based incentive, that there will not be any way in which there will be any grants forthcoming to the province? Is she eliminating entirely the prospect of a grant as well as a tax based incentive for, say, provinces in Atlantic Canada? It is very important that that still remain as part of the negotiating process.

My third and final question—it is important, notwithstanding your desire to expedite the questioning—is whether the Minister can indicate to us what if anything the producing provinces have given to the oil and gas industry with regard to reducing their royalties? Did the Minister specifically ask that their royalties be reduced? If so, was she successful in getting any of those royalties reduced?

Western Accord

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, clearly the Hon. Member has not had an opportunity to read the Western Accord.

Mr. Dingwall: I just got it.

Miss Carney: I have endeavoured to make copies available to Members, and they will be available afterwards. However, it gives me an opportunity to say that the whole purpose of the Western Accord was to create jobs which were lost under the National Energy Program. He is speaking for the Party that drove 250,000 jobs out of western Canada.

Mr. Dingwall: Try not to be yourself. Be nice for a change, and answer the question.

Miss Carney: Obviously the Hon. Member does not wish to have an answer. If he would like an answer, I will continue.

Mr. Dingwall: Let's have an answer.

Miss Carney: The estimates of the number of jobs created in the package before us range from 100,000 to 300,000. That is the whole purpose of the Agreement. Energy is the one sector where you do get job creation quite quickly. That was the record of the industry before the NEP was brought in.

To answer the Hon. Member's question, the whole package was designed to maximize the economic opportunities and create jobs with minimum impact on the fiscal framework of this Government in the early years. Therefore, the loss of revenue in the first two years will range annually between $300 million and $500 million. We anticipate, in consultation with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), that that amount will be more than exceeded by the increased revenues resulting from people being back to work and increased corporate taxes.

I would like to make the point that one of the Member's colleagues said that the industry does not pay taxes. In fact, it pays about $2.6 billion a year in taxes. We expect to get back more than we lose from the PGRT in those critical first years until we can start bringing down the deficit with which his Government saddled the Canadian people.

As to his comments about PIP grants, no Hon. Member from Nova Scotia could do more harm to his own province than to suggest that we are going to terminate PIP grants. We have told Nova Scotia, the Premier of Nova Scotia, the Minister of Energy of Nova Scotia, we have told everyone in the Maritimes except possibly the Hon. Member, that we will honour all commitments under PIP. Every single exploration agreement in place will be honoured. That will cost this Government about $3 billion in the next two or three years. We have done that, as I said in my speech, to provide stability for those companies that are out there drilling. We have enhanced their position by the extra incentives I have announced today.

As to the producing provinces and their royalties, may I point out that unlike his Party, this Party respects the Constitution of Canada. That Constitution makes it very clear that royalties are the prerogative of the provinces. What we have from the provinces is a commitment that all the benefits will flow to the industry, and then again the industry must reinvest the money. That will require the provinces to make what adjustments are necessary. Let me point out that Saskatchewan has already introduced a highly successful royalty holiday which has increased drilling and exploration in the province. So what we will both get out of it is increased economic activity, more jobs for Canadians, and increased revenues flowing back to the provinces and the federal Treasury.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have just one question for the Minister. On page 5 of her statement she refers to the end of the PGRT and the fact that it will mean that ambitious projects like the Vancouver Island pipeline will be able to attract the massive amounts of new capital needed to develop them. Earlier this week in Nanaimo the Premier of British Columbia was saying that the province is prepared to go ahead with building that pipeline if the federal Government commits itself to supporting the project and providing a guaranteed capital grant. Does this mean that the federal Government is abandoning its financial support by way of a grant or some other financial contribution to the province to enable this pipeline to be built, or is she leaving it now to the private sector and the ordinary financial markets?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, no.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I realize that royalties are a provincial matter, but I ask this quite sincerely because I think it is an important question. The Minister realizes that the royalties levied by the provinces in western Canada are a concern to the industry. I realize she has no power over the industry to reduce royalties, but surely the question came up and surely the Minister will agree that the royalties are too expensive. Has she any commitment from Alberta to bring down these royalties now that they have obtained what they are looking for, the abandonment of the PGRT?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I have already explained that the issue of royalties is not something for the federal Government to pursue. I am sure the Government of Alberta will make whatever adjustments are required at the initiative of the industry. I do not have to take on the provincial Governments, as his Party did, on the issue of royalties. The industry is certainly prepared to do that. What I have done is to ensure that the provinces do not move in to any fiscal room left by the federal Government. The promise is to pass all benefits right through the provincial Treasuries into the industry and then into reinvestment in jobs, and that is a commitment that all three provinces made.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, according to the Dow Jones service, world oil demand seems to have revived during 1984 but it may be heading for a new slump. Given that oil prices seem to be going down and that PIP grants are going to be phased out, will the Minister tell me whether she will be apologizing to Premier Brian Peckford for setting him adrift now that there are no real incentives to develop Hibernia? Hibernia will be delayed. Or in lieu of an apology to him, will she offer anything concrete to Newfoundlanders to get Hibernia developed? The Minister has reduced the price of oil and she is phasing out PIP grants.

Mr. Mazankowski: You were wrong in 1980 and you are just as wrong today.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the Party to which the Hon. Member belongs supported the NEP, which was based on the scenario that oil prices were going to go sky high.

Mr. Waddell: We never supported the NEP. You know that.

Miss Carney: He says he did not support the NEP. We can give him his speeches.

Mr. Waddell: Look at the vote.

Miss Carney: If he wants to worry about Hibernia, I can assure him I have just got commitments from some of the major players in Hibernia to commit $800 million a year of reinvestment into those offshore resources. I am meeting with them all the time to get more commitments. All of these companies with a big stake, including Petro-Canada, in the development of Hibernia and Venture have told me that by removing the PGRT and improving their cash flow we will enable them to increase the investment into the offshore resources in the Beaufort and conventional fields.

May I point out that the reinvestment ratio of this industry before the NEP was 110 per cent of its cash flow a year. It fell to 65 per cent after the NEP. We are providing them the room to get back up to the 110 per cent reinvestment rate because that creates jobs for Canadians right across the country.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, when I asked a question of the Minister earlier this afternoon she replied that the answer would be in her speech. My question was with regard to the pricing of gasoline in Ontario. I will repeat the question for the Minister, and perhaps now she can answer it.

This document has far-reaching effects on the consumers of the Province of Ontario. Many people are of the opinion that this will increase gasoline prices by as much as 23 cents a gallon, gouging Ontario consumers. Has the Minister consulted with the Premier of Ontario about the details of this Agreement? He claims that she has not. Is she also prepared to tell us why she has not consulted? Of course, the Government prides itself on the consultation process. What assurances can the Minister give Ontario consumers that they will not be taken for a ride immediately after the Ontario election is out of the way and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can perpetrate his attack on the people of Ontario by increasing taxes on gasoline?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am truly not sure whether that is one question or a rag-bag of allegations. However, with your indulgence, I will attempt to deal with the points raised.

The Hon. Member suggested that oil deregulation was set for June 1 because of the election. This shows, if I may be permitted to say so, the Member's ignorance of this industry. I have repeatedly said that the industry needs 60 days or more to adjust from a highly administered system to a free market. Our agreement was to run out on March 31, and June 1 is the appropriate date. It has nothing to do with the Ontario election.

The Hon. Member also raises the question of increased gasoline prices. I fail to understand how a toughly negotiated Agreement, which took six months to negotiate and is aimed at deregulating prices to reflect market forces, could possibly increase gasoline prices. We are going to world prices. We are almost there now. If the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is right that by creating a market environment prices will continue to decline, obviously that provides the environment for gasoline prices to decline. They certainly are not going to increase in a declining market.

I have repeatedly made the point that governments do not set gasoline prices. In the past, Governments have set wellhead prices. We are going to create the environment for market forces to operate with buyers and sellers involved. If prices go down, then product prices should go down. If the provinces want to increase taxes, that is out of our hands.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I want to give the Minister the opportunity to respond to some falsehoods we are hearing from the opposite side and to have her underscore a number of points she has made. Prior to putting the direct question to her, I would like to share with the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not the time for statements. This is specifically the time for questions to the Minister about her statement. Does the Member have a question for the Minister about her statement as opposed to one about questions from the other side?

Mr. Elzinga: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister underscore once again, for the benefit of the Opposition, the impact that this will have on job creation in Canada?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I can do that. I can also make the point that since we are removing the Canadian ownership charge, there will be a downward impact on June 1 on natural gas prices. When a tax comes off, prices tend to go down.

With regard to job creation, I would like to outline some of the benefits which could occur. As I said, the Economic Council of Canada has suggested that 100,000 jobs will be created. Other independent agencies, such as Chase, etcetera, consider that 300,000 jobs may occur. We know that we lost jobs under the NEP and we have every expectation that jobs will be increased. We have already started in that direction through the measures taken in the November 8 statement which increased benefits to the small producers. We expect jobs to occur right across the country.

Mr. Speaker: I will deal with this now because we are going to run out of time. I have a feeling that the House wants to ask a lot of questions on this matter.

An Hon. Member: Ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: It does not even take unanimous consent. It is within the Speaker's judgment. While I would normally end the question period in about two or three minutes, given the general sense of agreement in the House about other matters, and given the number of people who are rising, without setting a precedent, I will try to hear as many people as I can. I will probably go as long as—

Miss Carney: I have other commitments.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister is indicating that she cannot stay any longer.

Mr. Boudria: She is afraid to answer the questions.

Mr. Speaker: In fairness to everyone concerned, normally we would have taken questions as long as the sum of the statement. It will end the question period at four o'clock. If people are quick, we can get two or three more questions in. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the duchess of energy will soon be reigning over an impoverished kingdom. It appears to me that she is selling out the consumers of Canada and the federal Treasury.

My question is very simple and straightforward. As I understand it, over a two-year period the federal Treasury could lose up to $1 billion as a result of this negotiated Agreement which was just announced. How does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) propose to replenish the lost money? Does the Minister intend to increase taxes? If so, can she advise the House in very simple terms what that will mean to a consumer in Ontario?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I should explain that I have a commitment at four o'clock based on the normal rules of the House. In response to the Hon. Member, I suggest that if I am a duchess, he is an emperor without clothes. If I have a poverty-stricken kingdom, you can be assured that I inherited it from that Government when it was in power.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I will stay as long as it takes to explain to Hon. Members that when you go to market-regulated prices and deregulation, you create an environment for prices to go down, particularly in this kind of market. If market prices go up, prices will go up too.

With regard to natural gas, we are removing the Canadian ownership charge which that Government imposed on Canadian consumers. When you remove a tax, it is usual that price decreases occur. There is no reason to believe that gasoline prices will go up when we move to deregulation.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have two brief questions. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has indicated that he is battling hard against the deficit. He wants to bring it down. How can forgoing the raising of a number of billions of dollars of tax revenue from the energy sector assist the Minister of Finance in reducing the deficit? Is it not reasonable to conclude that if we forgo the collection of a significant amount of tax dollars that are now being raised, we will have to raise taxes somewhere else in order to bring down the deficit?

What guarantees are there in the Agreement that will assure Canadian users of natural gas that they will not be asked to pay more for the product than is being asked of those who purchase the same Canadian product in the United States?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the first question with regard to the impact on the deficit. I have explained that the whole thrust of the Western Accord was to remove a discriminatory tax on the industry. We have faith that it will create jobs because that is the historic performance of the industry. When you create jobs, you do not have to pay unemployment insurance, you collect increased personal income tax, and you have economic activity. If you doubt that logic, look what happened to the western provinces after the taxes were levied and after the NEP was imposed. British Columbia and Alberta have the highest unemployment rates in Canada next to Newfoundland, which is a cost to the Treasury.

With respect to the question about natural gas prices, this Western Accord does not deal with export prices of natural gas. I can only assure the Member, as I have in the past, that Canadians will always pay less for their natural gas than their American neighbours.

Mr. Deans: That is not happening now.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, it is.

Miss Carney: It is not contained in the Western Accord, and I would suggest that if the Hon. Member has questions beyond the Western Accord, I will be here for Question Period tomorrow and I will be prepared to take more questions.

Mr. Speaker: That would appear to be the end of that.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate your sensitivity in the way that the question period has been conducted but I would like to point out to the House, for instance, that the Official Opposition did not have one Member in the House who represents one of the three signing provinces. That is a difficulty which is created by the rhythm of the situation when that region of the country is so dominated by government Members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I point out to the Member that the Chair indicated it was prepared to let the question period continue.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DINGWALL—ORDER OF PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS DURING ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the presentation of petitions, I have read the Standing Orders, particularly Standing Order 18 with regard to the Routine Proceedings of the House. Nowhere do I find in Standing Order 18 any mention of when petitions ought to be placed before the House of Commons.

However, I have read Beauchesne as well as Standing Order 71(2) which states:

(2) Any Member desiring to present a petition in his or her place in the House must do so during Routine Proceedings and before Introduction of Bills.

As I mentioned to you in a briefing session yesterday, the purpose of my point of order is that we all know that petitions are rather short and expeditious and Members can rise and present them very quickly. It does not take up too much time of the House.

Mr. Dick: You are taking up time now.

Mr. Dingwall: Perhaps the Hon. Member would be kind enough to extend the courtesy of allowing me to make my point of order. If he disagrees, he can rise in his place and, with his usual persuasive candour, dispute what I have to say. Perhaps he would have the courtesy to wait.

Mr. Dick: Why don't you get to the point then?

Mr. Dingwall: Perhaps the Hon. Member will have the courtesy to listen.

Mr. Rossi: Okay, blabber-mouth.

Mr. Dick: You have taken three minutes already.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suspect that the Member has a serious point of order and I would like to hear it.

Mr. Dingwall: I am glad that you have ruled in my favour, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to the time when petitions are presented during routine business, it would seem to me that probably it would be in the best interest of the House for them to be called before Statements by Ministers.

Today, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) made a very important statement and there were Hon. Members here to participate. However, other Members who wished to present petitions have had to wait for an hour or an hour and a half before getting to that fairly routine piece of business of presenting their petitions.

Would the Chair say if there was a ruling by a previous Speaker or by yourself as to why petitions are called after Statements by Ministers in the routine business?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member raised this matter with me privately. I must advise the Hon. Member and the House that I have not completed my investigation. Certainly, no ruling has been made by myself, and while I am awaiting further information, it is my understanding that the rule regarding petitions, according to Standing Order 71(2), has been interpreted in the past to mean that they are to come exactly and immediately before Introduction of Bills. For example, that is why the Order Paper and our instructions to the Chair show that place.

I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern. I will certainly gather further information. Since there appears to be a question of interpretation, I will be more than happy to discuss that matter with the House Leaders.

Mr. Dingwall: In terms of clarification, there is mention of petitions in the Standing Orders but there is no mention of petitions in the Orders of the Day. Is there a special reason for that?

Mr. Speaker: It is not in the printed Order Paper because it is not in the Standing Orders. However, if the Hon. Member looks at the Projected Order of Business that is sent to Members, he will find petitions listed, because that is our practice. It is listed between Statements by Ministers and Introduction of Bills.

I repeat that as far as I know, and without being definite, that is a question of tradition, not of the rules.

As I indicated, I will be more than happy to get further information and discuss it with the House Leaders because I take it that at least one Member is concerned about the order in which petitions are placed in the daily routine of business.

PETITIONS

OMISSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS IN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition, signed by many concerned constituents of the riding of London East, regarding the oversight and omission of property rights in the Charter. It is my pleasure to present this petition today on their behalf.

IMPACT OF CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of some of my constituents in the riding of Sarnia-Lambton who are concerned about the proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. They ask that more emphasis be placed on job creation and not on a restructuring of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 146 and 182.

[Text]

DND—PURCHASE OF MISSILES FOR F-18 AIRCRAFT

Question No. 146—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Is the Department of National Defence planning to purchase missiles for the F-18 fighter aircraft and, if so (a) which type (b) at what unit cost?

2. How many missiles of each type will the Department purchase?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) Yes, two types, the short range AIM-9M (Sidewinder) and the medium range AIM-7M (Sparrow). (b) Unit cost of the AIM-9M is $77,280 U.S. Unit cost of the AIM-7M is $227,653 U.S.

2. An initial suit of 72 AIM-7M and 148 AIM-9M air-to-air missiles were purchased from CF-18 project funds. To partially satisfy NATO and NORAD ammunition stockpiling criteria, follow-on orders for 416 AIM-9M and 408 AIM-7M missiles have been placed with the USN as Foreign Military Sales (FMS) cases. These FMS cases also include spares, support and training equipment, maintenance training, publications and management fees. This missile procurement was approved by Treasury Board for $245.461M. Deliveries will be from 1986 through 1989.

Additional air-to-air missiles will be required to fully satisfy NATO and NORAD ammunition stockpiling criteria. This additional follow-on missile procurement project is in competition with other DND capital projects for funding.

NUMBER OF PERSONS EMPLOYED IN RCMP

Question No. 182—Mr. Stackhouse:

How many persons are employed in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): There are 18,611. (This includes RCMP members and public servants).

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, I have over 200 specific questions on the Order Paper concerning the Hatfield and MacKay affair. When might I start receiving some answers to those questions?

● (1610)

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, over half of the questions on the Order Paper are from this gentleman, and he will be getting answers soon.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Speaker: Before we introduce the Bill I want to establish for the record, that there is unanimous consent for the waiving of Private Members' Hour today and for continuing this matter through that time?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I understood that according to the agreement reached by the Parties, and my Parliamentary House Leader mentioned this earlier, we would start second reading at 5 p.m. I have the impression there is a misunderstanding. However, since our critic is in the House, we could start before then. Nevertheless, I would like to point out that the plan was to start at 5 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions. I tried to clarify the matter by discussions with the Deputy House Leader of the Official Opposition and with the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. It was certainly the impression that we would proceed with this order of business as the first item of business. The purpose was to give the maximum time for debate. We do not intend on this side of the House to do anything further as far as debating the matter is concerned except for putting up the Minister who will introduce the Bill. We can, therefore, allow the Opposition maximum time for debate.

I appreciate very much the co-operation of the Official Opposition in that if we proceed now this will allow maximum time for Members, particularly in the Opposition, to participate in this debate so we can have second reading concluded this afternoon and, if necessary, have the appropriate vote. Tomorrow there will be a full opportunity to proceed clause by clause in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, even though I said that we wanted to start at five o'clock, and I heard no objection, our critic is here ready to listen to the Minister and ready to respond on behalf of our Party. We are quite ready to start at this time under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: I should say to both House Leaders that I sensed from the interjections at the time that some further conversation might have been necessary. At this moment I take it we have agreement to begin debate on this Bill and to waive, through unanimous consent, the holding of a Private Member's Hour today, and that this matter shall be debated until six o'clock if necessary? Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for allowing the expeditious reading of this legislation.

Canadian Commercial Bank

The history of our financial sector, as we all know, is one of the most stable and secure financial industries in the world. The fact, however, does not alter the need for swift action at this time.

The federal Government shares with the provinces a deep appreciation of the important contribution to regional economic development that is made by a viable western-based financial enterprise. That is why we have taken the opportunity to participate in the plan to restructure the Canadian Commercial Bank's debt. The restructuring was proposed by the management of the Bank, and in consultation with the Government of Alberta, we examined the possibilities and the deal was negotiated with the other parties.

The Government faced a number of options. The federal Government's decision to support any financial institution cannot be taken lightly. We must consider borrowers involved and the effects a failure might have on them. In this case, for instance, an agency agreement was not the most desirable option since a private sector group, in consultation with the Alberta and federal Governments, came forward with a sound support package to restructure the Bank's balance sheet. The liquidation of the Bank would have resulted in the calling of many term loans to western Canadian businesses, which might have threatened their survival. And this, Mr. Speaker, was not in the interest of the Bank's depositors and borrowers.

Our concern as the federal Government must also extend beyond western Canada. We want to make sure that a ripple in the financial system does not spread from coast to coast and beyond, to overseas markets. The Government must also be concerned with the effect a failure might have on the stability, security and confidence of the entire financial system.

By addressing the present matter quickly, we are guarding against a potential erosion of confidence in our financial system both at home and abroad. This decisive action is evidence that our financial institutions are safe for depositors. The Government intends to ensure that the high degree of respect our financial institutions have earned in foreign capital markets is maintained. I appreciate, of course, that there is every reason for the House to be fully aware of the situation that has led to the tabling of this Bill. Indeed, the matter must be clearly explained so that Canadians understand that this is an isolated incident, due to very particular circumstances, an incident that poses no threat to the integrity of our banking system. That is why I am expanding today upon the information already contained in my remarks to the House, in the press release and in the questions I have already answered.

The Canadian Commercial Bank is a regionally based bank, specializing in loans to small and medium-size businesses in western Canada, particularly in the energy service and real estate sectors. As we all know, these sectors suffered severely during the recent recession and they have not proved as resilient as other sectors during the recovery. The importance of the Bank to the western economy is evident from the fact that 70 per cent, or $1.1 billion, of the Bank's domestic loans are made to businesses located in that region.

Canadian Commercial Bank

If I may take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) on her successful Western Accord, it will re-emphasize our judgment that the Canadian Commercial Bank has a viable future in serving Canada. As a result of her efforts, we know that business and real estate in western Canada will once more have a bright future.

Record high interest rates and the recession of 1981-82 created severe difficulties for many of the CCB's borrowers. The result was an erosion of the performance of the Bank's loan portfolio and the values of the underlying security. The financial condition of the Bank deteriorated further as a result of falling real estate values in western Canada. The Office of the Inspector General of Banks was aware that the Bank's financial position had been weakening gradually, and believed these problems could be contained as the recovery in western Canada gained momentum since the economic situation, though difficult, was stabilizing.

In 1981 the Bank diversified and expanded into the American market, including an investment in a California bank. Recent oil price declines caught the Canadian Commercial Bank's clients in the U.S. energy service sector in a serious cost-revenue squeeze. This severely impaired their ability to meet their loan obligations. Because drilling activity in the U.S. has been particularly hard hit, the surplus of used oil drilling machinery further added to the Bank's losses. The Bank expects to suffer losses of $85 million on its U.S. portfolio valued at $115 million.

The CCB demonstrated a highly responsible attitude in trying to expand its regional base and diversify its areas of operation and spread its risks. Unfortunately, a substantial portion of its portfolio remained in the U.S. energy-related loans. In this regard, I want to emphasize, CCB is different from other western based banks in Canada which have very limited exposure in the U.S. energy service sector.

Because of the magnitude of the problems, current management of the Canadian Commercial Bank recognized that they could not continue to ensure a viable banking operation and they contacted the Office of the Inspector General of Banks on March 14. The situation was such that the deterioration in the Bank's loan portfolio could result in its being unable to meet its obligations to depositors and creditors.

The Inspector General conducted an analysis of the CCB's position, including an on-site re-evaluation of the loan portfolio. It was determined that a support package in the amount of $255 million would be sufficient to ensure the continuing operation of the Bank. In monitoring the situation, the Inspector General of Banks noted recent strengthening of the management and the board of directors. He noted the encouraging signs that remedial action was under way.

The Bank had begun efforts to diversify its loan portfolio and the locations of its operations. In addition, the Bank has worked hard to expand funding sources so that a smaller percentage of its liabilities were in the form of highly liquid money market bought deposits. The markets apparently viewed these efforts as beginning to produce beneficial results. In fact, the Bank was successful in raising $95 million in new capital since mid-1983.

It was determined that with the support package the current financial situation could be remedied and the Bank could continue to play a positive role in our western economy. Therefore, it was appropriate to allow management the opportunity to continue efforts to work things out to the best advantage of its borrowers and depositors.

The Canadian Commercial Bank also approached the Province of Alberta. At an early stage that Government expressed a willingness to support the CCB. The willingness of Alberta to participate in financial assistance to the Bank is a clear indication of the importance of this institution to regional economic development.

This concern is shared by the Government of British Columbia which is also participating in the restructuring package, along with the federal Government, the CDIC and six chartered banks. Private insitutions have also recognized that their self-interest lay in protecting and preserving the integrity of the confidence in our financial system. After extensive discussions concerning the form of the support package, they agreed to participate in co-operation with the provincial and federal Governments in assisting CCB.

As I stated earlier, we examined every possible option concerning the future of the Bank. The support package negotiated between the private sector and two levels of Government was the best option. There is a very large private sector participation in this support package. In addition, we have a partnership with the Provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. Therefore, we were prepared to facilitate this solution.

I should like to discuss with the House the Bill and the agreement which was reached between the support group and the CCB. The Bill sets out the terms under which the federal Government is requesting the necessary funds to participate in the financial restructuring of the CCB. We believe that the package, as a whole, will allow the CCB to remain on a sound and healthy footing. Under the agreement, members of the support group will participate in a portfolio of loans made by CCB. In total, the support group has agreed to advance $255 million for this purpose. The Government of Canada is to advance $60 million. The Government of Alberta will participate with an additional $60 million. The six chartered banks will also provide $60 million, and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is funded by its member institutions, will contibute $75 million.

Paragraph 2(a) of the Bill enables the Government to acquire its participation certificates as set out in the agreement. Once the participation in the loan portfolio has been sold, the Bank will then be able to reduce its loan loss provisions by a corresponding amount.

The agreement provides that while in force, CCB will pay members of the support group, excluding the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, 50 per cent of pre-tax income until members of the support group are reimbursed. When other members of the support group have been reimbursed, the Bank will pay CDIC annually, in quarterly instalments, 50 per cent of pre-tax income until CDIC's participation in the restructuring package has been eliminated.

CDIC's involvement stems from the knowledge that if the Bank had been allowed to fail, the pay-outs in insured deposits could have exceeded its contribution to the support package. In that case the funds would not have been recoverable. Consequently, this approach represented the most cost effective manner of dealing with the present situation.

Although the funds the support group members are advancing do not carry a rate of interest, the agreement reached between the support group members and CCB provides for the issuance of warrants which give holders the right to purchase common shares of CCB. These warrants will expire 10 years after members of the support group have been reimbursed. The agreement has been structured so that these warrants will not be exercised until the bank has been restored to financial health and is once again a profitable operation. These warrants serve two purposes. First, they should yield a return to the members of the support group for participating in the restructuring package. Second, the execution of these warrants will result in a significant dilution of existing shareholders' equity in the Bank.

Paragraph 2(b) of the Bill enables the Government to acquire, hold or dispose of transferrable rights or warrants to purchase common shares in CCB so that the agreement can be implemented.

In an ancilliary agreement, the Governments of Canada, Alberta and British Columbia agreed to purchase $39 million of the Bank's outstanding debentures. This was necessitated because the support group required the debenture holders to forgo payments of principal and interest during the term of the support package. Since this agreement was not forthcoming, the three Governments co-operated in purchasing the outstanding debentures and waiving payments on them.

Paragraph 2(c) of the Bill establishes the federal Government's right to acquire, hold or dispose of bank debentures issued by CCB in accordance with this agreement.

Paragraph 2(d) establishes the federal Government's right to enter into any agreement or arrangement necessary or incidental to any activity referred to in paragraphs (a), (b) or (c).

I should also like to mention that the Canadian Commercial Bank has agreed to co-operate fully with the Inspector General of Banks who will communicate with members of the support group concerning the ongoing monitoring of the bank. Some Hon. Members have asked why we did not act in a similar manner with the Pioneer Trust Company. I can only repeat what I have already told the House, namely, that Pioneer Trust had been searching for an infusion of capital for some time. It had been unable to find additional capital in the private sector without the assistance of the Government of Saskatchewan. That Government came to the conclusion that it could not participate in an infusion of equity into Pioneer, and the management of Pioneer voluntarily closed its doors. The hard fact is that in the case of Pioneer Trust a joint federal-provincial-private sector package was not possible. In this case it was the opinion of the provinces, the private sector and the federal Government that a viable operation could be maintained, and we were therefore prepared to assist in the financial restructuring of the Bank.

In addressing the House I want to make clear that swift action is in the best interests of the Canadian financial system and, by extension, all Canadians. The Government's action is also in recognition of the particular needs of western Canada and the many small and medium-sized companies whose loans are held by the Canadian Commercial Bank. The Government believes that the speed with which a four-party agreement was reached—an agreement between two provincial Governments, the private sector, CDIC and the federal Government—is a significant achievement in co-operation. It is also an indication of the serious attitude which all parties have taken in the matter.

The consequences of not acting with all due haste would be to create uncertainties concerning the stability of our financial institutions among the international financial markets. In addition, Canadian businesses in the western provinces, both those which have dealings with CCB and those which do not, would be unsure of their financing until such time as this matter was dealt with in the House. A loss of confidence in our financial system would lead to downward pressures on the international value of our dollar. As Members of the House are well aware, this could put upward pressure on interest rates at a time when we are all united in the belief that lower interest rates would be beneficial to our economic renewal.

I am sure all Hon. Members will agree with the need to share with the provincial Governments in protecting the economies of the western provinces. This is why I am asking for all-Party approval and passage of the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition agreed to suspend other business of the House in order to expedite the Government's Bill authorizing financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank because we recognized the importance of preserving confidence in our banks and our financial institutions. We recognize that this Bank's situation had reached crisis proportions, that it was necessary to take prompt action to deal with the situation and that it would be in the public interest to facilitate that action.

In response to a question put in the House the other day, the Minister had stressed that the Government was concerned about the shareholders of the Bank and indeed, when one looks at the list of shareholders, one sees that that is a very understandable concern. The shareholders include the Caisse de Dépôt et Placement du Québec or the Quebec Provincial pension fund, the Great-West Life Assurance Co., the Canadian National Railway Pension Fund, North West Trust Co., the Alberta Teachers' Retirement Fund, the Alberta Government Telephone Employees' Pension and Death Benefit Fund, the Air Canada Pension Trust Fund and the Manitoba Teachers' Retirement Fund.

Obviously those interests had to be protected and in fact, under this arrangement, the shareholders will take substantial losses. There will be a considerable dilution of their funds, but obviously it is still a better situation for them than failure of the Bank. I note that under the Memorandum of Agreement, the shareholders are required to approve the arrangement that is made.

Having said that, I do not wish to imply that our agreement to go ahead with the Bill today and tomorrow means that we approve of the way the Government has handled the entire matter. Let us understand what we have agreed to here and just how it departs from usual procedure. It is not unusual for the House to agree to pass a Bill through all stages in one or two days, particularly if there is a clear imperative to do so. In this case, however, we are dealing not only with a Bill but with a Memorandum of Agreement which was tabled only this afternoon.

The Bill contains the bare bones of the rescue operation announced by the Minister earlier this week. However, according to our rules, we can only debate what is contained within the Bill. The Memorandum of Agreement which was tabled only one hour ago contains the bulk of the information pertaining to the rescue operation, so even if the Chair allows considerable latitude in questioning during Committee of the Whole, we will still end by passing this Bill without having had a full opportunity to debate the contents of the Memorandum of Agreement.

Our opportunity to examine carefully what it involved in the Memorandum of Agreement and the entire history of the Government's actions over a period of a year or more since the Bank has been known to be in difficulty will come after the Bill is passed, when the Memorandum of Agreement will be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Although we will have an opportunity to get answers to the questions Members have been raising in the House this week, some of those answers will come after the fact. That is not a satisfactory way of proceeding, but we agreed to it because of the importance of maintaining faith and confidence in our financial institutions and because of the need to give some answers and some order and predictability to those pension-fund managers and their many anxious clients.

When Conservative Members were in opposition, they opposed vigorously all attempts at bail-outs. Those of us who were here will remember some very bitter debates in the House and very firm statements were made indicating that a troubled industry should get itself out of its trouble and not have taxpayers' money spent on it. In this case, a bank, of course, is in a particularly sensitive situation as compared to a manufacturing industry, and this is why we will not throw Conservative Members' fine words back at them. However, we do have some questions to ask.

Regional banks have not had an unlimited success rate in Canada, but on two previous occasions when two regional banks were in difficulty, they were absorbed by larger, established eastern banks. The assets of this particular Bank are, I believe, less than 2 per cent of the assets of the entire banking industry, and one naturally questions why the banks are not putting more into this support package. The banks are contributing $60 million, the Government of Canada is contributing $60 million, and the Alberta Government is contributing $60 million. It is totally unprecedented for the Government to rescue a bank in this country; the banks have always done it themselves. We would like to know more about the history of this matter and we must hope that this decision has not been made because the Alberta Government did not wish to see its assets controlled by an eastern bank.

The amount of public money that is going into rescuing this Bank is very substantial. It is being put in interest free and it may be a very long time coming back. The terms of the agreement require that up to 50 per cent of pre-tax income is required to go into paying off the debts, if I understand correctly, and the question must be asked whether or not this is a reasonable expectation. Will a bank that is already in difficulty have the kind of cash flow that will permit it to make those payments or will we be waiting for a very long time to get that money back?

We have heard different statements in the House about the dates on which the Government became aware of the fact that the Bank was in difficulty. The first date that was given us was in March, just a couple of weeks ago, and I gather that that was the date on which the Inspector General of Banks indicated that the situation needed immediate action. Later, in response to a question, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that the Inspector General of Banks had consulted with him last September. I understand that some of the American regulatory authorities have been in touch with the Minister of Finance because of their concerns about Northlands Bank in California, a bank which is connected to the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Hopefully, before we pass this Bill tomorrow and if not, although less desirably, during the course of the Finance Committee hearings, we would like to know exactly what the sequence of events was and how seriously attempts were made to get the banks themselves to rescue this particular Bank before this amount of public money was committed. The Minister, in all of her statements, has rightly emphasized the bad effects on the economy if uncertainty were left hanging regarding this Bank. We have already seen some of the results. We have seen the shares in the Bank drop. We have seen also, when the rescue was announced, slight measures of security taken. No one would want to leave this matter hanging for very long as the effects on our dollar and many other Canadian financial transactions would be undesirable.

We all agree that the Bank had to be rescued, but our concern is whether, before the Government provided that amount of tax money, serious efforts were made to have the banks rescue this Bank as they have done in the past for other regional banks.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to correct something that the Hon. Member said. The name of the California bank is the Westlands Bank. The Northland Bank is a separate institution and it has nothing to do with the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, if I said Northlands that was a mistake on my part and I thank the Hon. Minister for pointing it out to me.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault)—Public Works—Expropriation of land at Mirabel—Government position; The Hon. Member for Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Human Rights—Program to assist legal actions—Government position; and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Unemployment Insurance—Severance pay measures. (b) Purpose and treatment of severance pay.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having an opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Certainly I listened carefully when the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) indicated that this was a very uneasy time for the financial community of Canada. People outside Canada are looking at the situation very carefully and, of course, people within Canada are very deeply concerned about what has happened to the Canadian Commercial Bank and the steps which have been taken today.

Because of the rather shell-shocked financial community, and the jitteriness therein, we have agreed to co-operate fully with the Government in resolving quickly this financial situation and in moving quickly to get this Bill through all stages within a matter of hours. It is almost unprecedented behaviour in the House and I appreciate the co-operation of all Members in seeing this through to completion.

One of the reasons on which we were quite prepared to co-operate was the willingness of the Minister of State for Finance to provide a reference to the House which will enable the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to investigate the situation which led to the collapse. It will allow the members of that committee to bring in witnesses in an attempt to unravel the rather questionable behaviour of a number of very key players, both within the financial community and some who are more closely associated with the Government. It is because of that assurance that we will do everything possible to move this legislation through the House of Commons and on to the other place as quickly as possible.

I think it is important for us to recognize that we are talking about the tenth largest Bank in Canada and a rescue mission, or a bail-out, of almost $250 million. The taxpayers of Canada are being asked to bail out the tenth largest Bank in Canada. The Minister spoke very eloquently and laid out very carefully the reasons for this Bill, but she did not make reference to the fact that it is a bail-out. We are asking the people of Canada, through their federal and provincial taxes, to provide millions and millions of dollars for a total bail-out package of nearly $250 million.

Under the circumstances, perhaps this is the correct action. In terms of the co-operation of a number of players within the banking community, provincial Governments and the Canada Insurance Deposit Corporation, it was the appropriate action. If we consider the depositors and the borrowers of this Bank, and, of course, the investors of the bank, it was an important step to take in terms of image and of maintaining and developing confidence in the Canadian financial system.

For years and years we have prided ourselves on our banking system. We have heard Mr. Frazee, Mr. Mulholland, Mr. McIntosh and Governor Bouey speak of the stable, strong and secure Canadian banking system. It is not unlike the Swiss system. People the world over have heard of it and they have seen it in action. Indeed, people realize that we do have a stable and secure banking system. That is why I found a comment which Governor Bouey made peculiar.

Mr. Rosenberg of trust company fame, who is a rather infamous financial pirate and a shadowy individual in terms of dealings in the financial markets of this country and others, had a very close personal and business relationship with the Chief Executive Officer and President of the Bank which we are discussing today. Because of that personal relationship, and some of the rather questionable financial dealings between those two individuals, the Chief Executive Officer of the Bank found it appropriate to resign. A stir went out across the country. It moved the central banker of Canada, Governor Bouey, to pick up the telephone and call The Globe and Mail on January 25, 1983, when this whole business was beginning to unravel. At that time he said that the Canadian Commercial Bank was a solvent and profitable bank. There was nothing to worry about. Governor Bouey was looking into the situation and there was nothing to worry about. Therefore, I think it is important that we, as Members of the House of Commons, recognize that Governor Bouey, with his statement in the national newspaper, sent out a very clear signal to Canadians and foreign investors, saying that everything was secure, firm and okay with the Bank. That was not the case. Certainly, it is not the case today. This Bill is required because that Bank was not in a solvent situation, and because it made some imprudent loans. It brings into question some of the comments that Mr. Bouey has made regarding the solvency of that financial institution.

I think it is fair to say that the individuals whom I have mentioned, with all due respect—Mr. Frazee, Mr. McIntosh, Mr. Mulholland and many other chief executive officers of Canada's banks—and, in one way or another, all 73 of those chief executive officers, have said that they believe in free enterprise and that they are free enterprisers. I have heard many of them pounding away on the podium and saying that they are free enterprisers and that they believe in the market-place and the reality of the market-place. They believe in that for everyone except for themselves. The bankers of this country know, and I suspect the people who are involved in the banking industry and the financial industry know as well, that if they get into trouble the whole system is there to bail them out. The Government of Canada, their colleagues and the provincial Governments will bail them out. In other words, there is no risk in that particular business if you are a major banker.

There is an up side to that, there is no question. But those free enterprisers must keep that in mind the next time they stand up and say that they believe in free enterprise and the realities of the market-place. Those who are proficient and successful—great. Those who are not will go down the tube, unless they are bankers. That is what this legislation says. Banks do not have to worry about the market-place and the free enterprise system in which we operate.

I believe there are a great number of questions we have to ask ourselves. The Conservatives have introduced this legislation. They say there are tough times for farmers and ranchers. The realities of the market-place are going to result in tens of thousands of them having financial difficulties and hundreds going bankrupt. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) nods his head. He knows full well what the ranchers and farmers in his constituency are experiencing. We are reminded regularly that in the small business community there are winners and losers. Hundreds and hundreds of small businesses go under each year. That is the reality of the market-place. Hundreds and hundreds of home owners have lost their homes. There is no bail-out for the small businesses of the country, for the farmers, the fishermen or the ranchers. The banks get the bail-outs under this particular administration.

The new Conservative reality is that no one else is going to be assisted. Domtar in Quebec is not going to be assisted. Maislin is not going to be assisted. The former Government was soundly criticized time and time again for that kind of behaviour, but now when the time comes that a bank is in difficulty, the Conservatives fall all over themselves to ensure there is minimum damage.

The problems began, as I said earlier, back in January of 1983 and when Mr. Howard Eaton, the then Chairman and President of the Canadian Commercial Bank, resigned because of his personal business relationship with Leonard Rosenberg of the Toronto trust company collapsing fame. Mr. Rosenberg wrote a letter to the Bank the previous year, in 1982, and said that his aim was to take over 100 per cent of the shares of this Bank. This was in writing, Mr. Speaker, to a bank official. He eventually only got 33 per cent of the Bank's shares, but the Bank Act of Canada places limits on ownership to any one individual or corporation of a maximum of 10 per cent. The Bank Act says that no single individual or corporation is allowed to own more than 10 per cent of a bank, yet Mr. Rosenberg managed to accumulate 33 per cent, and his eventual goal was to get 100 per cent. The question is, where was the Inspector General of Banks while all this was going on? I am not going to criticize the Inspector General of Banks. I think it is only fair to point out that with 73 chartered banks in this country, and at a time when the financial community has never been so turbulent and the banking system so complex and changing—

An Hon. Member: So exciting.

Mr. Riis: —so exciting—and I thank my colleague for providing me with that term—the Inspector General of Banks has only eight field officers to keep an eye on what is going on with the 73 banks. Some of those banks are the largest and the most profitable in the world. Some are pretty small, of course, but when one considers that the Inspector General of Banks, with very limited power and a handful of employees, is expected to keep on top of all the goings on in the banking system in Canada, one can see that it is an impossibility.

I believe this Bill before us today indicates very clearly that the Inspector General of Banks has simply found it impossible to keep on top of this whole situation. He obviously needs more authority and more staff to carry out his responsibilities. I suspect that it is about time the Inspector General of Banks looked at the health of the lenders, in this case the Canadian Commercial Bank, but he should also take a look at some of the major borrowers.

There is no question, when one considers who the borrowers were in this particular Bank—as the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has amply pointed out in her presentation—that there were serious problems. There was real need for concern. They were the western oil and gas industry and western real estate. Why did the Inspector General of Banks not tell the Bank that it had better diversify, that to have all its assets limited to those two sectors is not prudent lending practice? That is not the way a first-class bank ought to operate. Perhaps someone like Roland Frazee should be brought in to advise him at this particular time. He is an individual who appears to be running a very successful bank. But even for a layman, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the areas in which that Bank was involved opened up all kinds of question which the Inspector General of Banks should have been flagging.

After all, we do know that many months ago the Inspector General of Banks indicate to the Minister of Finance that there was some problem out there, that the Bank was having some difficulties. I suspect that many Hon. Members of Parliament knew that. I myself was informed months ago by many individuals that that particular western Bank was experiencing financial difficulties, that it was experiencing some real problems. The Bank then goes out and purchases the Westlin Bank in California. When we see how unhealthy that particular bank was, Mr. Speaker, we have to scratch our heads at the wisdom of that particular move. What was behind that, Mr. Speaker? Why would a troubled bank go out and buy another troubled bank unless there was some rather incestuous financial behaviour going on at this particular time?

Mr. Malone: Or it was sound.

Mr. Riis: Or, as the Hon. Member for Crowfoot says, it was sound. But when you buy a bank which is not particularly solvent, which is having all sorts of loan difficulties, I doubt if that is going to be a wise investment. That is the kind of question which our inquiry, through the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, must examine. We must ask those kinds of questions.

I do want to say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that we will reluctantly, I suppose, co-operate with the Government on this particular Bill in order to settle the dust out there in the financial community and to bring stability back. But there are many unanswered questions. My colleagues have specific questions they will want to raise. Tomorrow we will have a chance to go through this Bill clause by clause. We will be asking at that time some very penetrating questions. During the inquiry conducted by the Finance Committee we will have also a chance to find out just what is behind this. What does it tell us about our banking system? What does it tell us about Governor Bouey and his role as the central banker in maintaining stability in our banking community? What does it tell us about the Inspector General of Banks and his ability to oversee this very complex and dynamic financial community?

It is a pleasure to have a chance to offer a few comments and I look forward to a speedy finalization of this Bill.

Canadian Commercial Bank

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the economic summit must have been successful beyond the fondest imaginings of any of us when we have the spokesman for the New Democratic Party recommending Mr. Frazee in the capacity of consultant.

The Minister of State has already explained to the House the important considerations which led to the decision of the federal Government to participate in a support package for the Canadian Commercial Bank. I would like to add my comments to those of the Minister because I am deeply concerned that the Hon. Members appreciate the significance of the CCB to the western economy. Although the federal Government must take a larger perspective in such important matters, there is no issue which can be closer to the heart of any Member of Parliament than the interests of his constituency and his constituents.

My constituents, I am sure, would share my appreciation for the federal Government's concern and the plan of action placed before us today. Like the Governments of British Columbia and Alberta, the national Government has recognized the important contribution to regional economic development which can be made by a viable western based bank. I believe Hon. Members are aware that the economic setback suffered in the West, particularly in Alberta and British Columbia, was severe. But the hard fact is that the recession did not end in late 1982 in Alberta and British Columbia as it did, on average, across Canada. And the losses suffered in the recession in terms of growth and jobs have not yet been made up in those provinces as they have been in the country as a whole.

Let me illustrate with some figures showing the impact on jobs. In Alberta, total unemployment increased from 41,000 at the beginning of the recession in August, 1981 to 127,000 at the official end of the recession in November, 1982. Fifteen months after the official end of the recession, unemployment stands at 143,000, even higher than during the recession. The unemployment situation in British Columbia was worse to begin with. There were 83,000 unemployed. By the official end of the recession, this had increased to 198,000, and as of last month there were 215,000 unemployed.

In terms of job creation, Alberta lost 48,000 jobs during the recession and an additional 8,000 jobs since that time. B.C. has gained back some of the jobs it lost during the recession, but still shares with Alberta and New Brunswick the sad disctinction of having fewer jobs now than at the beginning of the recession in August of 1981, almost four years ago.

The impact has been devastating not only for people looking for jobs but for business people as well. Business failures in 1984 rose above 1983 levels in both Alberta and British Columbia. I am sure I do not have to remind Hon. Members that the small- and medium-sized business community has been the single largest creator of jobs in our economy. This is the sector on which the Government is most clearly depending to continue to provide the jobs Canadians need.

Alberta has suffered an exodus of population which has further damaged the business climate. The impact has been particularly evident in the housing market. Amidst all of this economic difficulty, it is not surprising that we should be called upon to adopt some special measures to protect the financial and economic climate of the West.

The extent of the Bank's exposure to the economic conditions in western Canada has been discussed already in this House. Let me add some statistical evidence to illustrate the depth of the Bank's involvement in the regional economy. The importance of the Canadian commercial Bank to the western economy is evident from the fact that 70 per cent, or $1.1 billion, of the its domestic loans are to businesses located in that region. As we are all aware, the previous Government's policies were not well received in the energy sector. We also know that the western economy suffered severely during the recent recession. Although it has not rebounded as quickly as we would have hoped, there is reason to be optimistic, and that reason is reinforced and enhanced by the statement today of the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

However, we cannot sit back and hope that all will instantly be well. We must rely on all possible avenues of self-help and co-operation from the private sector, provincial Governments, and of course the federal Government. The difficulties experienced by many of the CCB's borrowers resulted in an erosion in the performance of the Bank's loan portfolio and the values of the underlying security. The Government had already been monitoring the Bank's financial position before the most recent and severe difficulties. To that point, although it had been weakening gradually, it was thought that the problems could be improved upon by the Bank itself as economic conditions improved in western Canada. It was thought that the situation generally was stabilizing. The Bank had initiated efforts to diversify its loan portfolio and the locations of its operations, including the investment in the California bank. The recent oil price decline caught the CCB's clients in the U.S. energy service sector in a serious cost-price squeeze. Their ability to meet their obligations was severely impaired. Because of the especially difficult situation for drilling activity in the U.S., the surplus of used oil equipment further added to the Bank's losses. The Bank expects to suffer losses of $85 million on its U.S. portfolio valued at $115 million.

I would mention to Hon. Members that a recent Wall Street Journal article estimates that since December 1, 1984, 1,000 drilling rigs in the U.S. have become or will become idle. This contrasts with the situation in Alberta where activity has increased somewhat, and can be expected to further expand, given the recent oil price agreement reached between the provincial and federal Governments. In fact, as the Minister of State (Mr. McLean) has already explained, the Bank has been demonstrating a responsible approach in trying to expand its regional base and diversify its areas of operation and spread its risks. The Bank had begun efforts to diversify its loan portfolio and the locations of its operations. In addition, it worked hard to expand funding sources so that a smaller percentage of its liabilities were in the form of highly liquid money market deposits. The markets apparently viewed these efforts as beginning to produce beneficial results, and the Bank raised $95 million in new capital since mid-1983.

The support package is expected to remedy the Bank's current situation and allow it to continue to play a positive role in our western economy. That is why the two provincial Governments were willing to participate in the support package in the very early stages. That is also why the private institutions have taken a role. That is why the federal Government is asking the House for its support in agreeing to federal participation. Hon. Members are already aware that the CCB is a regionally based Bank and specializes in loans to small and medium-sized businesses in western Canada. The average loan is in the area of $3 million. The liquidation of the Bank would have resulted in the calling of many term loans to western Canadian businesses which might have threatened their survival.

I have already mentioned the role of the small- and medium-sized business community in job creation. When a business closes, it represents more than a blotch on the bank's record. It represents more than another statistic for StatsCan. It represents a human tragedy. It represents the hopes and deams of the owner or owners, the employees, shareholders and all their families. The local, in this case western, economy suffers as a consequence.

I have painted a sad picture of what happened to the western economy in recent years, Mr. Speaker. What is equally important in terms of this legislation is the outlook for the future, and that is where the picture brightens a great deal. In Alberta particularly, but all across the West, the prospects are once again improving. I do not need to tell you how important the new energy agreement is going to be in that regard. It will be fundamental to the recovery of the western economy, inasmuch as a recovery can ever be achieved from the maladies of rape and pillage. The basic strength is there. The spirit is there, particularly the entrepreneurial spirit that helped build the western economy and has helped it to weather some heavy storms over the years.

A recent report by the Conference Board of Canada states that after three years of output contraction, Alberta's economy is poised for renewed growth in 1985. The report went on to mention a forecast of a 2.1 per cent increase in production, and it reports that oil and gas exploration and production are also forecast to gain more ground this year. Even the troubled manufacturing sector and the trade and finance sector are beginning to show signs of recovery, and further progress is expected in 1985.

Noting that British Columbia suffered an extremely severe recession in 1982, the Conference Board report says that last year services began to improve and coal production surged. In 1985, the westernmost province is forecast to enjoy a year of stronger growth as major industries at last move forward in unison. The West is on the way back. The Bill before us today will help ensure a strong recovery and new growth spearheaded by rising business investment in the future of the West.

The Canadian Commercial Bank has played an important role in supporting the development of the West since coming into existence. The support package that the Minister has provided will ensure that the Bank can continue to play its influential role in development and growth. Because it is important for the House to be aware of the Government's actions, and the need for these actions, I appreciate the swiftness with which the details have been provided. It is equally important for individual Canadians and businesses to recognize that the situation is an isolated incident based on very particular circumstances. The situation does not represent a threat to the integrity of our banking system, although if it is not addressed now, it could play a disruptive role in the economic recovery and future development of the western economy. By taking quick action in the present circumstances, the governments and the private sector are helping maintain the confidence of those businesses which have loans with the CCB and indeed of other small-and medium-sized businesses in the West.

It is also important to note that the agreement will not impair the ability of the Bank to meet its obligation to its creditors. The funds will not be repaid until the Bank's profitability has been restored. We believe that the package as a whole will allow the CCB to remain on a sound and positive footing. The federal Government's confidence in the Bank's future is obvious. We have every expectation that the taxpayers' monies will be recouped and that these efforts will enhance the economic stability of an important region and sector of our economy.

This Government does not throw good money after bad, Mr. Speaker. This Government supports regional development to ensure investment and growth in our future. I am convinced that the measures presented to the House represent that kind of investment. Our investment will protect, not only an important financial institution and the businesses depending on it, but it will pay off in the future for the people of the West and the people of Canada.

Although the funds the support group members are advancing do not carry a rate of interest, the agreement reached between support group members and the CCB provides for the issuance of warrants which give the holders the right to purchase common shares of the CCB. The agreement has been structured so that these warrants will not be exercised until the Bank has been restored to financial health and is once again a profitable operation.

I believe that the quick response time in this matter and the co-operation exhibited by two provincial Governments, the private sector, CDIC, and this House, is a significant achievement in co-operation. It is also an important indication of the need for serious attention and action.

I would like to express my total support for the Government's decision. It is an especially important proposal in view of the economic problems that have beset the two most western provinces and the need to support their economic development, which has begun, and also their future.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing like a convert if one is to be a really convincing supporter. I am amazed that the Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) has such a short memory. When the former Government brought forth legislation to help Chrysler out of a difficult financial position, we heard all kinds of Tory Members of Parliament telling us how bad, difficult and wicked the Liberals were.

I now hear the Member saying that this is a viable Bank in western Canada. He says it is a regional bank that is important. I support that. I think he is right. However, does the Member realize that the same Canadian Commercial Bank was told some months ago by the Inspector General of Banks that it should diversify? In his remarks he mentioned that it did diversify. Yes, it diversified in California to the tune of $90 million in oil rigs. Is there a national energy program in California? No, Mr. Speaker. Why did they not do so well down there? The Member was talking about rape and pillage in Canada. Will the Member get his act together?

We in eastern Canada are always accused of not understanding that a problem in Canada is a Canadian problem and that if Chrysler had not been helped by the Government and the taxpayers of the country it would not be where it is today. Domtar is asking for support from the Government and is not getting it. Will the Member please tell me now how he rationalizes that and how converts can be so convincing? Will the Member please explain how he reconciles his position with this last act of his Government?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where to begin. I suppose I could fall back on a new Member's cop-out and say that I entered the House as a tabula rasa but—

Ms. Copps: You still are one.

Mr. Edwards: I am being inscribed upon in a most abrasive fashion, Mr. Speaker. I did my share, I bought a Chrysler. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to defend the record of the Maislin bail-out? That one was a bit putrescent, in my opinion. To get to the point, a bank is a bank is a bank.

Some Hon. Members: And a Tory is a Tory is a Tory.

Mr. Edwards: Amen to that.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I am really amazed. Here is a group of Conservatives who have all consistently said that we must get government out of business, that government has no place in the boardrooms of the nation. Yet one of their corporate friends, a bank, is experiencing difficulty and they all run in to offer the taxpayers' money in interest-free loans.

How does the Hon. Member reconcile that philosophical principle which the Conservatives have been trumpeting across the country? Is it not time for us to get a window on the banking system and to take the Bank over and run it as a Canadian controlled and owned bank?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, a reference was made a moment ago to movies. The name of the movie is Ordinary People.

Mr. Rodriguez: That's not an answer.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) comes from a part of the country that is experiencing a great deal of economic difficulty. Many businesses in his community would have failed and some in the critical sectors may still be failing. There are no bail-outs for them. Small- and medium-sized businesses are on their own. How can the Member stand in his place today and say that he supports this and that it is the right thing to bail out a bank? You will not bail out small business but you bail out banks. How does the Hon. Member explain that to his constituents?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that question with my reference to "Ordinary People". As the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has said so well, we are striving to protect the depositors and borrowers of this Bank in whatever way we can.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to define for me what free enterprise means. Hon. Members opposite continually speak of free enterprise and of getting government off the backs of business. They now seem to be whistling a different tune with respect to this particular matter. Would the Hon. Member define succinctly what it means to have a free enterprise system?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, probably the best description is that free enterprise is the opposite of what has become known in this nation as liberalism.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go on at length, but I know the Hon. Member recognizes that for a bank this is a rather unique operation in that it does not deal with ordinary people in the sense that other banks do. It is not the kind of place where you drop by, cash your cheque, deposit $10, and take a look at your pass book to see how things work. Even so, ordinary people who have deposits of under $60,000 would have been covered by the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, as all other people are. The shareholders are to receive nothing for the better part of the next 10 years, or maybe longer. Their stocks have gone from a value of in excess of the $20 to virtually nothing at the moment. They are not marketable.

The people who will derive the most benefit from the consolidation process that has taken place are in fact the other banks which have $150 million in deposit with the Canadian Commercial Bank. Does it not strike him as reasonable to conclude that it was not ordinary people who were protected and that the Government, at the behest of the Bank, bailed out the banks?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, the protection was for those small businesses, which were the borrowers of the Canadian Commercial Bank, their families and the ordinary people who depend upon them. As the Minister said, the protection was for the depositors first, for the borrowers second and, in the last resort, for the shareholders.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made many glib statements about the wonderful job the Government is doing in bailing out the Canadian Commercial Bank. In the Canadian Commercial Bank's Annual Report for 1984, the Member will no doubt be aware that one of the problems it was citing with respect to the loss per common share of 22 cents was high interest rates.

Would he tell us what the Government is doing specifically with respect to the current abhorrent spread between the cost of borrowing money and interest yield? What is his Government doing about the spread?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) answered that question today. The drop in interest rates itself is starting to close that unfortunately large gap.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also want to say a few words on this special Bill about "Barbara's big bank". I believe this is rather extraordinary legislation.

It raises in my mind, the minds of many of my constituents in Saskatchewan and, of course, many people in Alberta, the possibility of a double standard with respect to how depositors are treated in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank and how they are being treated in the case of Pioneer Trust. I want to use the Minister herself as reference. Yesterday she said, according to the Ottawa Citizen:

> But McDougall told the Commons the banking system or Canadian Commercial's shareholders were government's last priorities in agreeing to the bailout scheme.
> 'We didn't move to save the bank. We moved to save the borrowers and depositors of that bank,' she said.

Of course she agrees. The main purpose was to save the depositors and the borrowers who had invested in the Canadian Commercial Bank.

I simply ask that if we can do that as a Parliament for the depositors and investors in the Canadian Commercial Bank, why do we not do the same thing for the people who invested their money in Pioneer Trust? I know that many Members opposite agree with me, from conservations that we have had. Since we have set this kind of precedent, this Parliament must find a way to ensure that ordinary Canadians in Alberta and Saskatchewan are not discriminated against. I would like to see some support from Members of the Conservative Party because I am sure most of them agree with me.

I want to spend a few minutes putting on the record exactly what I mean. During Question Period today, I mentioned that I had a letter from a Saskatchewan farmer. I have his permission to use his name. His name is R. S. Schwartz from Englefeld, Saskatchewan. He wrote the following letter:

I had to quit farming to allow my sons to fully take over, and put my sales from wheat into Guaranteed Income Averaging Certificates in Pioneer Trust Company for six and seven years respectively, so that I would have a monthly income until I get my Old Age Pension.

The two applications for these certificates which I signed in good faith in this company bear the seal of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which covered my deposits. Furthermore, they do not state that there is a guaranteed limit of only five years.

My friend from Hamilton said that, as we all know, people, are insured up to $60,000. That is not the case for some investments. I quote from the letter:

To date I have not received any communication from anyone concerning my investments in Pioneer Trust: I have only heard from the media, and repeatedly seemed to be assured that deposits under $60,000 were insured and would be fully paid.

By Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. He goes on to say:

On March 1st I asked at their office (now B.C. Bank) in Saskatoon for the return of my investment and was informed that my policies were not insured. I received a form for proof of claim which I sent with photocopies of my certificates to Touche Ross Co. in Regina. I still have had no communication from anyone.

For your information, Pioneer Management (a branch of Pioneer Trust) held a supper meeting in Englefeld on March 12th assuring the people that they are financially sound and expanding. I was not invited!

If this is the case, I feel they should be compelled to finance the obligations of Pioneer Trust.

I urge you to demand that Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation be made to do this, or that it be made to honor its guaranteed insurance to me, regardless of the five-year limit, to which I never did sign.

Yours truly
R. S. Schwartz

I had an opportunity to speak with him on the telephone yesterday. He told me that when he made his application for these two certificates—one for six years and one for seven years—the standard CDIC stamp was on those certificates saying that he would be fully insured. He was never told by Pioneer Trust that he would not be insured. He has invested less than $60,000.

I believe he sold his wheat in this case and, as Members are aware, farmers do not have a company pension plan. Small business people do not have a company pension plan. Therefore, they sell their business or farm and put the money into an RRSP or income averaging annuity to act as the pension income. This person was informed that that would be the case.

I believe the Minister when she says that her first priority is for those depositors and investors in the Canadian Commercial Bank. She says that the Government must rescue ordinary Canadians and do something for them. I have been told that the money in the Canadian Commercial Bank includes funds from the Manitoba Teachers' Pension Fund.

If we are going to pass legislation for them, why should we not do the same thing for a retired farmer in Saskatchewan or a businessman in Alberta who have put their entire life savings into the Pioneer Trust Company?

Let me tell you more about people who invest in Pioneer Trust. The City of Regina has $1 million in Pioneer Trust.

An Hon. Member: Tell us all about the widows and orphans.

Mr. Nystrom: I do not think that it is a laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. The City of Regina has $1 million in Pioneer Trust. The Province of Saskatchewan, which has a Conservative Government, has $4 million in Pioneer Trust. Many schoolboards have money in Pioneer Trust. There are many farmers who have money in Pioneer Trust. I have given one example today, and I had a second call from a farmer in my riding to which I could refer if I had time.

There are architects and contractors who have money in Pioneer Trust. Sask Sports is a sponsor of recreation and culture in our province. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is very familiar with that organization. It has money in the Pioneer Trust. Another depositor is a hospital which is run by an order of nuns in the City of Estevan. These are people who have invested in Pioneer Trust. Of course, they were upset with the collapse of Pioneer, but they are even more upset when they see the double standard by which the Government bails out a bank but not the depositors who have money in Pioneer Trust.

There is an elected official in my riding in the City of Melville. I understand that he has more than $60,000 deposited for less than five years. He is assured that he will get back at least $60,000. He told me on the telephone yesterday that he has no word whatsoever from CDIC. He said that other people who will be getting $60,000 have had no word whatsoever from CDIC. Of course, they are not insured for anything over $60,000. Anything over $60,000 is not insured. What has made this man angry is that he sees us bailing out the Canadian Commercial Bank and its depositors. He sees them called ordinary Canadians. He sees that their assets are important to the Parliament of this land, and he says, "What about mine?" Those are the words of an elected official in Melville, which is a very important city in my riding.

Pioneer Trust has not informed a lot of people when they were putting money in the trust company that their funds may not be insured for more than five years. Yesterday I decided to do an experiment here in Ottawa. I had one of my staff go to Canada Permanent Trust on Metcalfe Street. My staff member, Michele Charbonneau, went into Canada Permanent and inquired about annuities, bonds, certificates, and things of that sort. She asked the woman at the Permanent whether she would be insured for more than five years as she might want to invest for six or seven years. The woman said, "Of course, no problem whatsoever". Miss Charbonneau pulled out the brochure from CDIC and showed the five-year limit on certain kinds of investments. The woman said, "That must not be true". She went to check with her boss and came back a few minutes later with a red face, very embarrassed, and said, "It is true. There is a five-year limit for insurance".

I wonder whether a lot of trust companies in Canada are ignoring the by-laws of CDIC which say that customers should be told that their savings may only be insured for some five years. Because of that I want to make an appeal to the Minister. In the House she said again today that Pioneer Trust was not going to be viable, that it closed its doors in a voluntary way, that there was no private nor provincial government assistance in terms of arranging a bail-out and things of that sort. I am not arguing here for corporate welfare. My concern is about the ordinary depositors. The Minister said in the House on Tuesday:

> Mr. Speaker, I might point out that many financial institutions, including the Canadian Commercial Bank, also have municipal depositors, hospitals, and other ordinary Canadians as depositors and borrowers, as did Pioneer Trust. I might also point out, in the case of Pioneer Trust, that management voluntarily closed the doors after spending a considerable amount of time trying to find capital which they could not find.

She goes on to repeat those kinds of arguments.

I also have here a letter containing many pages that she wrote to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), explaining the whole thing. The Minister may be right, in terms of the inefficiency of Pioneer Trust, that it had to close its doors, that it was not viable, that the provincial Government was not interested in putting up enough money to try to keep Pioneer Trust viable, that there was no private sector solution and all those kinds of things. That still does not answer the problem, Mr. Speaker, of my farmer in Englefeld the elected official in the City of Melville, and of all kinds of other people who have put money into Pioneer Trust. We must find a solution for those folks. That is my case. If we are going to pass this Bill, if we are going to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank, if we are going to help certain depositors and certain investors in a financial organization like a bank, then why can we not do it for a trust company?

There is something I could not help but note in the opening remarks of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), I think she is trying to do the best job she can, but she said that the reason for bailing out the Bank was that we had to have confidence in the financial system. She used the words "financial system". To me the financial system is not just the banks but the trust companies as well. She nods in agreement. If she agrees that we are not only talking about banks in terms of financial confidence in Canada, why can we not have, when we have this very hurried legislation concerning this Bank, some other legislation by which the federal Government would provide assistance to depositors and investors in Pioneer Trust?

We seem to have an agreement that there is an unfairness, an injustice and inequity in that the financial system includes not only the banks but also trust companies. If so, then perhaps we should send this legislation back to the drawing board for a few hours or a couple of days in order to solve that problem as well.

There is another thing. The Minister said, and I agree 100 per cent with this, that she wanted to make the system safe for depositors. Of course we want to make it safe for depositors, but that has not been the case for Pioneer Trust. If we are going to make the banking system safe for depositors, then let us make the trust company system safe for depositors as well.

I have the brochure here from CDIC. The regulations and rules are here. It is spelled out, for example, that there are cases where you can get a five-year guarantee. It is right here in the brochures that are put out. Obviously some trust companies ignore the rules with their clients and customers.

As I said before—the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) just got up and the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is here—we know our problems well. We know that for many farmers their life savings are their farms. They put their savings in a trust company or in a bank, and that is all they have. What does this man from Englefeld have now unless this Parliament comes to the rescue? Pioneer Trust has let him down. In my opinion it is not CDIC. Perhaps we need to change the legislation concerning CDIC as well. That is for the future. I think this Parliament must come to the rescue.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we are considering a Bill that is nothing less than a welfare handout for the Canadian Commercial Bank, at a time when we need help for the average Canadian. I met five farmers from Ontario 45 or 60 minutes ago and one of them told me that in his neighbourhood, along a road two and a half miles long with maybe eight or nine farms, all the farms except one are now up for sale, because of the many financial problems facing farmers today. Farmers, fishermen, and small- and medium-sized businesses all have a lot of financial problems. Canadians should be able to contract loans at a reasonable rate of interest, and if we can do something for the Canadian Commercial Bank, Mr. Speaker, we should be able to do something for the average Canadian as well.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because my colleague has covered almost every point. I know my colleague agrees, and I am sure the Minister agrees also, that the different laws which are in place and deal with trust companies on the one hand and banks on the other hand create a different standard within society, that certain people are protected and other people are not protected. They set up a situation that is a veritable gallimaufry of regulations which causes people to be unable to work their way through and find the actual answers to the problems that confront them at times like these. My colleague juxtaposes Pioneer over and against the Canadian Commercial Bank. Had those depositors been depositors with the Commercial Bank they would have been protected, but because they happened to be with Pioneer—and this is not the only case—they are not protected.

What we are asking for is a rewriting of the law. We are saying that in the end after we have looked at all the circumstances that related to the near collapse of this Bank and when we juxtapose them with the circumstances that were imposed upon those people that were associated with Pioneer Trust, we need to do two things. First, we need to move in an emergency way to provide the same level of protection for all people. Second, we need to rewrite the law to make sure that it is fair and equitable in all circumstances. I am putting to my colleague that I hope that is what we are trying to achieve here today.

• (1740)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I agree that perhaps we should rewrite the law. I think it has to be done. We are dealing in an emergency circumstance with a wrong which must be righted for many ordinary folk who put their life savings into Pioneer Trust. Pioneer Trust may not be the last trust company which goes broke. It has happened before. There are many innocent victims out there who feel that the federal Parliament and the federal Government should put up a certain percentage of their losses because they were not told by Pioneer Trust that their savings were not insured.

Mr. Deans: They were cheated; they were almost lied to.

Mr. Nystrom: They were almost lied to; they were cheated. It may have been inadvertent but certainly it was the case.

I referred to the letter of Mr. Schwartz of Englefeld because he told me on the telephone that on his application for the two certificates was the standard stamp of CDIC indicating that he would be insured. If that is the case then we are dealing with something which is very misleading, and Parliament should come to the rescue.

If the Minister is afraid of legal action, I suspect that just by opening the door to help the depositors and investors in the Canadian Commercial Bank, she may have legal cases on her hands in any event. I encourage her to come forward quickly with some special and justified assistance to these innocent victims of the system.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this Bill, I want to make the basic point that if a vote is called on it, we in the Official Opposition will likely be voting in support of the Bill. However, if we do so, it does not mean that we agree in any way with the manner in which the Government has handled this Canadian Commercial Bank problem. It does not mean that we believe that the Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), have carried out adequately and properly their responsibilities in this regard. They have a lot of explaining to do, and they have done very little so far.

After all, it is on record that as far back as September 14, the Inspector General of Banks came to the Minister and gave a clear warning of the problems this Bank already had and the problems which would be building up if nothing was done at that point.

If we vote in support of this Bill at second reading, it does not mean that we believe the Government has necessarily come up with the best package or the best way to deal with the Canadian Commercial Bank situation. We would be supporting this Bill because we believe it should go to Committee of the Whole for detailed study. It is only through giving the Bill second reading, approval in principle, that it can go to Committee of the Whole, and it is in Committee of the Whole that we can put our questions on the floor of the House to the Minister, questions concerning what led up to the situation requiring the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank and how the Government carried out, or more likely failed to carry out, its responsibilities in this important matter.

If there is a vote at second reading, it is likely that we will be supporting the sending of the Bill to Committee of the Whole and voting for it because that is the only way to get it to Committee of the Whole. If there is a vote, we would be voting for the Bill for another reason, because we believe there is a proper and legitimate place for government to play a role in assisting the private sector to develop and move forward. Frankly, without this kind of involvement, there would be no private sector in Canada or in the United States or in the western world today. If there had not been government involvement and support, in fact to rescue the private sector, it would have foundered completely during the Great Depression of the thirties and it would have come close to that in other recessions since that time.

This involvement of government in support of the private sector in some cases could mean reinforcing strength and building upon strength, as we believe is the case with respect to Domtar in Windsor, Quebec. In that situation the Government, to its shame and detriment so far, at least, has refused to respond in the proper fashion. In other cases the involvement of government in support of the private sector could mean helping companies in difficulty to have the opportunity to restructure, to modernize, to become more competitive and therefore successful, as was the case with the Chrysler Corporation, not only in Canada but in the United States. In fact, if we had not intervened in respect of Chrysler in Canada, the parent company would have foundered. Without the assistance of the Government of Canada it would not have qualified for the assistance voted by the United States Congress in that American legislation required involvement by other players. That was not there until the Government of Canada came forward.

Sometimes the involvement of government in support of the private sector when it comes to a company in difficulty works, as was the case with Chrysler. There are other cases where unfortunately it does not work. However, one has to be willing to recognize that there are chances to be taken. The Government is certainly willing to take a chance in the Canadian Commercial Bank case. The story has not yet been played out. Many hope that this bail-out—and let us call it what it is—will work, but we do not know for sure what will happen. Sometimes the Government has to take a chance. Sometimes that chance turns out well and sometimes it does not. However, one has to recognize that there are legitimate cases for involvement of government in the private sector to work with and to support a company to survive, not only in the interests of the company but of its workers and the community that depends upon it. This basic principle can apply to a financial institution. The Government argues that this is a proper case for government involvement to save a financial institution.

If we vote for this Bill at second reading, it is because we believe in the principle I have outlined, that there is a proper case for governments to intervene in support of the private sector. However, we reject the hypocrisy and that double standard of the Conservative Party now that it is in government.

Before September 4, Conservative Members spent months and years saying that this basic principle was wrong and that the efforts the Liberals made in support of individual firms, the workers and the communities depending upon them, were wrong and should not be made. Suddenly, now that they are in office, they discover that the principle is not such a bad idea after all, at least when it comes to bailing out a bank. Let us have on record what the Conservatives are doing here. They are exhibiting another example of hypocrisy and double standard. While there may well be a case for supporting this Bill, let us recognize that in presenting it the Conservative Government is admitting that all the things it said about similar activities by the Liberal Governmnent in past years were wrong and invalid. We will be reminding the Government of its action of bailing out the Canadian Commercial Bank when other cases arise for which we think federal support and involvement in the private sector is justified and worth-while. An example of this is the case of Domtar.

I would like to conclude by saying that in supporting this Bill, as we may well do on second reading, I give the Government clear warning that we are not giving it carte blanche to find the money needed for the bail-out of this Bank by taking it away from any government program and activity it wishes. There are a great many programs and activities we on behalf of the Canadian people consider worth-while. I fear that the Government will find this money at the expense of worth-while programs and the interests of individual Canadians and their families. We will press the Government very hard to make sure that that does not happen.

The Government has acted with swift generosity to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank. It argues that there are good reasons for it to do so and that it is in the over-all public interest. The Government may have a point, but there are many other areas which should legitimately be included when it comes to government action in support of individual companies and businesses. There are thousands of farmers in severe financial difficulty but the Government never intervened and has no intention of intervening as swiftly as it has intervened for this Bank, nor has it intervened to provide the same kind of support for thousands of small businesses across the country. Let that be on the record and let it also be on the record not only that the validity of the principle in which we as Liberals believe of government involvement in support of the private sector is being confirmed by the Government but that the Government has shown hypocrisy in rejecting that principle in the past and suddenly discovering it when it comes to a bail-out of this interesting little Bank, the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Having said all of this, I wish to say again that there are reasons why, if there is a vote, we may well support this Bill on second reading. However, I hope that the Government and certainly the Canadian people will bear in mind what I have said about the lessons provided to the Government and all of us here by the Canadian Commercial Bank situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a few comments on the record.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Very few.

Mr. Rodriguez: They will be very succinct, clear and specific because I believe that this is a moment of truth for the Tory Government.

The Bill that has been presented this afternoon is not a bail-out of the Bank; it is a coverup for the ineptitude and incompetence of the Government. This Bank is a federally constituted Bank and therefore falls under the jurisdiction of a federal statute, the Bank Act. We even have a big bogyman, an Inspector General of Banks.

Mr. Nystrom: Barbara is a bogyman?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, no. The Government knew since September that this Bank was in some trouble. On principle, we socialists have no problem with public ownership. However, I think this Government is a phoney. All I have heard from government Members about Canadair, de Havilland, Air Canada and CNR is that the public sector cannot run a business properly and that it always puts businesses in the hole. Here we have the proponents of free enterprise and of a free market system, but what are they forced into doing? This afternoon, in the closing hours of a rainy Thursday afternoon in Ottawa, they are sneaking in a Bill and sucking in the Liberals. It is not difficult to suck in Liberals, and the Government knows it.

If we are going to put up $60 million interest free, it seems to me that it is only fair that we should get some equity for it. I have heard the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) say that he is looking for buyers for de Havilland and Canadair. While he is looking for buyers to get rid of what he calls failures, we have equity in those corporations. What equity are we going to be getting from bailing out this Bank? All we are doing is saving the face of the Minister.

Mr. Malone: And what a face to save.

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, it is not a bad face to save, but is it worth $60 million?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Surely it can be said that this was the face that launched a bank.

The second point I wish to make is that in this moment of truth, the Government is establishing a new principle. The new principle that is being established here this afternoon is that this is an interventionist Government which is prepared to intervene in the market-place. I am glad that that is being put on the record today. In fact, it is in the interest of letting the Government put this on the record that I will take my seat.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Does he not realize that this Bill would not be proceeding now without the full agreement of the House Leader on his behalf and that of his Party? I hope he will not talk about sneaking this Bill into the House. Second, does he not realize that when speaking of the Government as being an interventionist Government, he is giving intervention a very bad name?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, yes, we wanted the Bill to come before the House and we wanted it to come before the House for a reason. We want to see a vote and we want the Tories and the Liberals to vote together for this interventionist Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is the following one. Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall), which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been made.

HUMAN RIGHTS PROGRAM—PROGRAM TO ASSIST LEGAL ACTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on March 22 of this year, I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) a question in the House concerning the court challenge program and I asked him what the Government's position was on extending this program to Section 15 of the Constitution.

The program was created in 1978 to provide financial assistance for individuals seeking court decisions that would help clarify language rights guaranteed under the Constitution. The House will recall that it covers Sections 93 and 133 of the Act of 1867, Section 23 of the Manitoba Act and, since 1982, Section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the section that deals with language rights.

Since 1978, fourteen cases have been accepted under the program and subsidies totalling $580,000 were granted. This year, an additional $60,000 was transferred to the $200,000 already granted by Treasury Board, bringing this year's budget to $260,000.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will recall that I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about this program some time ago, and I reminded him that the court challenges program was due to expire on March 31, which means in three days. There will be no more money and thus no program. Interestingly, the expiry date of March 31 is rather symbolic, because on the 17th, in two weeks, we will have here in Canada a Charter of Rights recognizing Section 15 that deals with fundamental rights and which, I think, should make it possible for Canadians to challenge the interpretation of the Charter before the courts.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind my hon. colleagues that during the election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party fully supported the court challenges program to assist legal actions. This was clear from their comments. In a letter sent to the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, the Prime Minister or rather the Leader of the Conservative party gave his unconditional support to the program. He said that his Government would continue to support and strengthen the program.

In a question put to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) on March 20, the Minister was asked whether the Government was looking into the possibility of expanding the program. Before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, on March 20, the Minister of Justice said, and I quote:

• (1820)

[English]

The question is whether the court challenges program should be extended beyond language rights. Those rights are covered in Section 133 and Section 23 of the Manitoba Act and Article 23 of the Charter of Rights. He asked whether we are to go forward and expand the financing of the court actions and appeals where the Government is on one side arguing one thing, and financing someone on the other side who is arguing the direct opposite. He asked how far this was to go. How far do the Canadian people want it to go? Who is to decide which are the worthy cases and which are not? If we are going to do this, should the money be given to some independent organization?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I then asked myself: Is the Government seriously considering tranferring the program to the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Ligue des droits de l'homme or the Canadian Foundation for Human Rights, or is it thinking of transferring the program to the Canadian Bar Association which might be interested in administering this program which, I feel, is essential if we are to develop a just and fair society?

Mr. Speaker, in recent months we have been told that certain provinces, and especially the Western provinces, were a little embarrassed by the program because residents of these provinces were using a federal program and receiving federal money to challenge before the courts certain interpretations of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms or of Sections 133 and 93 of the Act of 1867.

[English]

I would just like to say that personally I feel the Government must come to this House soon and satisfy Canadians that indeed it has a vehicle, a program, some system in place which gives Canadians a means of getting support in order to go before the courts to clarify and obtain decisions from the courts.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to evoke a passage from a letter from the Prime Minister to the Fédération des Francophones hors Québec, and I quote:

> We shall maintain the present program to assist legal actions, which helps individuals and groups seeking to obtain a decision by the courts on litigious points relating to language rights in terms of the Constitution of 1867 and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We shall be consulting with members of minority groups and other interested parties to ensure that the program is efficient and effective.

I hope the Government has consulted, I hope the Government is going to act and I hope the Government is going to announce this evening that the program will not expire on March 31 and that on April 1, we will have a sound and generous program that will help minorities to defend their rights before Canadian courts.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, whenever Canadians manage to go two or three weeks without arguing about something, the Opposition does not waste a second and tries to find a situation or an opportunity to raise some kind of problem.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the court challenges program is to obtain court rulings on the precise extent of linguistic rights guaranteed under our Constitution. That is why the Government gives financial assistance to pay for legal costs in cases deemed to be important. Naturally, the State has to be careful every time it intervenes in that field. Quite obviously, if the Government is to pay court costs for people who may at times take proceedings against the State, there has to be a limit, otherwise it would not make sense.

This program was established in 1978 as one of the initiatives taken by the Government to promote national unity. It may come as a surprise to hear me say that the previous Government may at one time or another have done something to promote national unity. But at the time, such steps have been taken to defend the rights of linguistic minorities. The program was renewed in 1979. At first, it applied only in cases of legal proceedings under Sections 33 and 193 of the Constitution Act of 1867, and under Section 23 of the Manitoba Act, because at the time those were the only provisions under which the official languages had constitutional guarantees. Section 93 protects denominational schools, whereas Section 133 of the Constitution Act of 1867 and Section 23 of the Manitoba Act uphold the right to use English and French in the Parliament of Canada, in the various legislative assemblies, the National Assembly of Quebec and the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba, as well as in the courts of both instances.

[English]

Since December 1982 when the court challenges program was updated, eight cases have been approved for financial assistance, the details of which have been provided to the Hon. Member on a previous occasion. As mentioned previously in the House by the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean), there is an ongoing discussion between the Department of Justice and the Department of the Secretary of State in order to study the various options open to the Government with repsect to the court challenges program. The question of the continuity of the court——and I conclude by saying, Mr. Speaker, that we intend to make every effort in coming days and weeks, and you may rest assured that the Secretary of State will take position so that the rights of minorities will be upheld throughout Canada.

PUBLIC WORKS—EXPROPRIATION OF LAND AT MIRABEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on March 3, 1985, I put a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) concerning the proposal submitted by this Government to the expropriated Mirabel landowners, because all my constituents of Argenteuil-Papineau are directly concerned with this issue.

Mr. Speaker, on the day following the signature of a Memorandum of Agreement between the CIAC and this Government on the rectifying of that gigantic blunder, it seems most important to me that this House should be cognizant of this comprehensive proposal, in view of the astronomical costs to the public treasury of maintaining and managing those lands, namely some $50 million a year. Located some 45 minutes away from Montreal, in between the four major centres of Saint-Jérôme, Saint-Eustache, Sainte-Thérèse and Lachute, the prime farmlands of Mirabel, comprising over 2,500 UTH, had shaped its people to the image of a prosperity.

Progress, however, had decided that in this area favoured by nature, agriculture should give way to something else. The mere mention of that progress now puts the whole people on edge. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in 1969, with one stroke of a pen this Government decision put an end to those 150 years of tradition and brought the whole Mirabel area back to the year 1867 by degrading its residents and landowners down to the level of tenants. Canada's biggest expropriation operation, second only to the one that dispossessed the Indians, brought havoc in the lives of approximately 10,000 people living in twelve villages or fourteen municipalities, covering an area as wide as the Île Jésus. It does not happen every day that 97,000 acres of land suddenly change hands.

And the new owner was not easy to get along with. In sixteen years, he changed faces and policies a number of times. There were seven successive directors, delegated by the Federal Government to manage the land and the people in the Mirabel reserve.

One such director stated he had no authority to make decisions. Another acted in a more high-handed way. What one allowed, the next one forbade. Leave given by one director was not valid in the eyes of another. At times there were written permissions, at other times oral permissions, or benevolent silence with indications to proceed as before.

Mr. Speaker, it is in such a climate of confusion and insecurity that my constituents in Mirabel have had to survive, waiting for the situation to clear up and become normal again. It is not easy to live in expectancy during sixteen long years.

Mr. Speaker, the Mirabel tragedy is that the area has ceased to live and progress for fifteen years. During all those years, a prosperous and promising area was literally sacrificed to the ambition of an incompetent and hard-nosed Government. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the displacement of 10,000 persons and especially the social disruption of 97,000 acres present a situation almost identical to that of the displaced persons in Europe following the Second World War, or to the deportation of the Acadians.

The impact of such a social upheaval cannot be assessed, especially in such an economically and demographically integrated area.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec farming communities, economic and social life is, to a great extent, related to agricultural activities. The land is set aside for agricultural use and the village is the focus of services and business; it is also the preferred setting for retirement or for those who do not earn their living directly through farming.

Like everywhere else, the villages acquired the services and businesses they needed. The village of Sainte-Scholastique, because of its geographical location, had become a major agricultural centre for other villages. The presence of two doctors, two notaries, one pharmacist, four grocery stores, three hardware stores and a farm equipment dealer shows how important this centre was in 1969. The structure of these parishes based on networks of near neighbours, relatives, friends, services and mutual assistance was destroyed by the upheaval which followed this mass expropriation. People became strangers in their own neighbourhood.

Fences were no longer repaired and buildings were left to rot because people understood that any action might mean rent increase.

What about the municipal representatives who had to live with federal interference in municipal affairs during all those years? This municipality has fallen into a state of collapse and it will have to be untiring in its efforts to give back Mirabel the prosperity which was expected following the construction of the airport.

In 1976, half of the people had left, and in 1979, a survey showed that, among the 2,130 families residing in the area at the time of the expropriation, only 250 families of farmers or their sons and about 250 families of residents or businessmen were still there. Torn between their deep social roots and their need for stability, the residents and businessmen or their children, who feel less bound by their investment than the farmers, now account for only 20 per cent of the residential population of the area, while 90 per cent of those expropriated or their children who were still farming in the area in 1979 are still there.

Another survey published in 1983 depicts the situation as follows: number of farms expropriated in 1969, 858; number of residences occupied in 1969, 788, and in 1983, 555; number of residences destroyed, 233; number of barns occupied in 1969, 731, and in 1983, 455; number of barns destroyed, 276; number of farmers in 1969, 788, and in 1983, 251; number of businesses in 1969, 146, and in 1983, 98; number of residences in 1969, 1045, and in 1983, 816.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, the whole population of the Argenteuil-Papineau constituency, and especially my constituents in Mirabel felt a great deal of emotion yesterday at the announcement of the agreement arrived at by my Government, which succeeded in solving this issue after only six months through consultation and dialogue. Can the Minister tell the House the terms of this historical agreement?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to answer the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) and I also wish to congratulate her on the interest she has shown in this case since she was elected on September 4. Mr. Speaker, before elaborating on the main recommendations of the agreement proposed yesterday by the two parties and jointly signed by them, that is, by the Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Limited and the CIAC—the expropriated farmers—I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will allow me to join the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau in saying that for a long time, I found it very sad that the Government had failed to act responsibly with respect to the surplus property around the Mirabel project—christened Mirabel sixteen years ago. In this lovely setting, even lovelier in the past, I was very moved to see how much these people had suffered as a result of expropriation, and especially their disappointment in the previous Government's failure to take any action, especially since we managed to reach a settlement in less than five months. I remember I had a very special interest in this question, being well acquainted with the farming milieu and with rural ridings. Yesterday, I had the privilege of attending the gathering that took place at Mirabel and giving these people the assurance of my support for a proposal that was negotiated in less than five months. I also wish to pay tribute to my Director General, Mr. Hardy, who replaced the board of directors of the company shortly after September 4, and who did a tremendous job, and also to those people who led the struggle to get back their land, and I would like to mention, of course, Mrs. Rita Lafond, Mr. Jean-Paul Raymond and Mr. André Bouvette who were very important to this cause, and all those who were members of the board of directors or the administration of CIAC.

It is therefore clear, Mr. Speaker, that we have safeguarded this great principle I have always defended: first refusal goes to the expropriated farmer, and otherwise, the land will be sold back to the tenants. Still, a number of measures will be taken to help expropriated owners get and buy their land back; tenants will be looked after as well since anyone who, for valid reasons, does not want to buy back the property will not be asked to vacate the premises before two years, and in no instance will the rent go up before two years.

The importance and relevance of agricultural development has been the subject of discussion, of course, and it was pointed out that those lands were, if I may put it that way, good examples of prime agricultural soil. We made sure of that in the general agreement which I will submit to my Cabinet colleagues for official signature within a few weeks. All those people have been told that we will cooperate with the Quebec Government to promote agricultural recovery.

I would be remiss if I failed to mention the excellent cooperation I got from the Minister of Agriculture of Quebec throughout this major consultation, because those are indeed prime agricultural lands. Mr. Speaker, we may have reached this equitable, reasonable and humanitarian settlement, in any case I think we did our best to be fair, but it remains quite clear that we will never be able to compensate for the harm done to those people, and I am very sorry about that. I do not find any satisfaction in the fact that I cannot be held responsible. Unfortunately, I was witness to everything those people had to put up with, but I am pleased that at last we have found a solution which I think will be accepted by my Cabinet colleagues within a few weeks. Again it will be with great pleasure that I will go back to Mirabel shortly with the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau to present them with an official signature on behalf of the Canadian Government.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—SEVERANCE PAY MEASURES. (B) PURPOSE AND TREATMENT OF SEVERANCE PAY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my comments this evening relate to a question I asked of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on March 8. At that time I asked whether she was prepared to postpone the implementation of the severance pay provision of the Unemployment Insurance Act whereby it was provided that severance pay must first be used up before unemployment insurance benefits could be paid.

That was announced on November 8 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Originally it was supposed to come into effect on December 31, 1984. That announcement was made without one iota of consultation. The decision to use severance pay in calculating unemployment insurance benefits was a decision made unilaterally by the Government, I think specifically by the Minister of Finance. I think the Minister of Employment and Immigration had very little to do with it and that the Minister of Finance announced it without any consultation.

That is one of the problems with the particular program. We on this side of the House believe that there should have been consultation, and the Government says it believes in consultation and consensus. Yet, no consultation was undertaken by the Government, by the Minister of Finance or by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She did not consult with the organized trade union movement because, if she had, it would have raised all sorts of problems with the implementation of such a provision.

As a result of the announcement on November 8, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and back-bench Tories were inundated with protests from various groups and individuals across the country. As a result, the Minister acceded to extending the implementation of the provision until April 1, 1985.

There was a second problem with that particular announcement. No impact studies were made. The announcement was made without any study of the group or the people who would be impacted by such a decision. In fact, no studies were conducted to discover the effects of such a provision on unemployed people. If they had done such studies, they would have found out that severance pay was a lump sum amount of money paid to an employee when an employer gives him the golden handshake and says "Goodbye, your services are no longer required". Many Canadians who find themselves in that unfortunate predicament often take their lump sum payment and roll it into an RRSP to help them in their retirement years. This Government believes in self-reliance. In this particular circumstance when folks are being retired by their employers and are being told that they are no longer needed they are not in fact being allowed to look after their retirement years.

Also they could have found out that persons who are laid off and receive severance pay immediately attempt to find work. They use their severance pay as a form of mobility; they use the money to move around. Maybe they have to leave their communities to look for work. In fact Employment and Immigration Centre mobility programs do not provide grants for unemployed people, so the severance pay becomes a very important form of income for them while they go out and look for work. Now the Government is saying that severance pay must be used for day to day living before they can collect unemployment insurance. It is cruel, it is unjust and it is unfair.

Once again we call upon the Government to postpone, or, in fact, to cancel the whole idea until it has conducted the proper consultation and studies. Then it can bring something to the House, and we will see whether we can support it at that time.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is a question of equity.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act regulations were announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November last. Those amendments will ensure that all payments drawn from a job are dealt with in the same way under the unemployment insurance system. It seems normal to us. The government considers such a policy as normal. According to the comments of my colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I should have been swamped with requests. It may be that my constituents have lost my address, but as far as I know I have not received a single request from people affected by such a measure. I may have received more in his constituency but for my part, I did not receive any. I wanted to make that correction.

Under the present regulations, Mr. Speaker, the salary drawn by an individual for a part-time jobs is taken in consideration in the computation of unemployment benefits. This is considered a normal practice. It is possible for that individual to look at the same time for a full-time job. Such an amount must be deducted. The benefits are reduced accordingly. However, an individual who draws severance pay or an annuity can receive a second income when applying for unemployment insurance benefits. The proposed amendments are then aimed at putting an end to such unfair treatment. It is quite obvious. The individual can even find a job a few weeks or months later and draw some additional income which would be unfair compared with other Canadians generally.

For the sake of equity and to allow the individuals concerned to adjust to the amendments, some provisions have been passed so that any decision made under the former regulations will be upheld. The regulation concerning the allowance for paid holiday and the severance pay will come into force in a few days, on March 31. All claims submitted prior to that date will be treated under the previous regulations, up to the end of the validity period of such claims. In the case of claims submitted after March 31st, 1985, vacation pay and severance pay will be treated as any other form of earned income at the time of determining the entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits. This measure is considered as being fair by the Government.

[English]

There is maybe an exception. A transitional provision means that any severance payment made under a collective agreement or special work force reduction agreement in force prior to December 31, 1984, will also be treated under the regulation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we feel that this measure is fair and reasonable, and the Government has no intention of changing its views.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.47 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my anger and extreme disappointment at the Government for its complete disregard of the people of Cape Breton. We have waited long enough for some action on the second phase of the business plan for the Sydney Steel Corporation. We are not talking just about economics here, we are talking about the future of an entire area.

The first phase of the business plan was put into effect by the former Liberal Government. Most of that work was completed months ago, long before the deadline runs out this Sunday. It's now almost April and there are still no answers, no plans, and no financial assistance being put forward by the Government and its counterpart in Nova Scotia for the second phase of modernization. How can the Government justify treating people like this? To say it is unfair is a gross understatement.

People are depending on the life of this plant for their existence. It is especially unfair when you consider what the work force has done to make Sydney Steel Corporation a viable operation. The workers have set production records. Liquid steel production increased by 40 per cent in 1984. Rail mill production and total production shipments have increased by 50 per cent. The operating losses for Sydney Steel Corporation have been cut in half, and Sydney Steel will not require any operating grants from the province this year because of an outstanding performance by the work force.

The workers have accomplished this against some incredible odds. There are now just, 1,400 people working, down from 3,000, and 1,000 of those people—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—PRIVATE SECTOR RESPONSE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, on February 6 the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced a program called "Challenge '85" in which private industry was to be pivotal in providing 95,000 career oriented wage subsidized jobs for students. On this, the deadline for applications, we have written the Minister in part as follows:

It is now clear that some of our worst fears have materialized. The private sector response you anticipated has not been forthcoming. Many areas of greatest need are not receiving adequate assistance, and the numerous career-related jobs you promised have not occurred. Moreover there appears to be much confusion in the administrative process and a lack of publicity and adequate information almost everywhere.

It is not my intent in writing merely to point out that the program has been a dismal failure, but rather, to offer some constructive advice on how to ensure that as many students as possible will work under the program this summer. In this regard I submit the following:

Eliminate all deadlines for employers and students submitting applications; allow any type of meaningful job-creation program to be considered, including all project applications; and, launch a full scale media campaign to advertise the new changes. Finally, provide Members from all sides of the House with sufficient detail that they may be effectively involved in publicizing the program. Admit ideologically produced failure and get on with the job of creating jobs.

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE OF RESOURCE—CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House to bring to light an important issue that is of bilateral importance to Canada and the United States. I am speaking of our most precious resource industry, forestry. I have just returned from intensive meetings in the United States along with the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew). In our discussions with the U.S. Forestry Service we were able to forge some meaningful lines of communication and co-operation.

Forestry is a resource that transcends boundaries. It is a North American resource, and many of the issues facing the industry, such as insect control, fire fighting, and forestry research, can best be dealt with if both Canada and the U.S. work together. More important, we are working to maintain a secure trading relationship which will be of benefit to both of our nations.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) really paved the way for such productive relations between our countries. His decision to appoint a Minister of State for Forestry is not only recognized as an important step for the forest industry in Canada but has also received praise around the world. The Quebec summit meeting also contributed to the excellent relationship that now exists between Canada and its greatest friend and trading partner, the United States. This co-operative relationship is going to produce real benefits for Canada's vital forest industry.

TOURISM

USE OF MINISTER'S PHOTOGRAPH

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) is a real devil for punishment. He is trying to introduce himself to his leader. Not satisfied with spending money to show his face in advertisements on tourism, he is now asking Hon. Members of this House to put his picture in their next householders. A camera ready kit has been sent to all Members of Parliament, complete with a nice photograph of the Minister.

What will the Minister think of next so that his leader will notice him? I pity the back-benchers on the government side who do not have a ministerial budget to advertise their own faces across the country. If only they could stand up in this house, perhaps their leader would notice them. They should ask permission to speak if they can't be discovered, or request an increase in their budget so they, too, can advertise their faces like the Minister of State for Tourism.

I am sure that seeing Tom peeping from a government advertisement will cause millions of Canadians to hit the road and visit other parts of this country. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) said that no more shall we see government advertising that would have geese flying into the sunset, but we certainly did not expect to see "peeping Tom", the lone stranger, riding in the sunset. Hi, ho! Tory away, Mr. Speaker!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for the workers of Canada. As of midnight Sunday, March 31, 1985, vicious changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act will come into effect. These changes will see severance pay and vacation pay being used in the calculation and duration of unemployment insurance benefits. The severance pay change, in particular, is a calculated and cruel blow to those who lose their employment through no fault of their own.

Such workers have traditionally used the severance pay to offset travel expenses in finding alternate work. Now they will be forced to use this lump sum amount to keep body and soul together until they become eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. In such cases it could be up to a period of 20 to 30 weeks, depending on the amount of severance pay.

Other workers have rolled their severance pay into a registered retirement savings plan in order to prepare for their retirement years. With this change coming about on Sunday, the individual will now be forced to use the money to subsist on a daily basis. This is the ultimate irony from the Government which says it believes in individual self-reliance. This is the last appeal to this Government which claims it will save $60 million by this measure, but is prepared to put $60 million into a bankrupt bank.

THE ADMINISTRATION

TEAMWORK ACCOMPLISHMENT IN BONAVENTURE-ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to stress the significance of the change in Government last September 4.

Given the new climate created by this Government, the residents of Saint-Alphonse-de-Caplan in my beautiful riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine have done an outstanding job working as a team. With the co-operation of the provincial and federal Governments, they carried out a sawmill project which will create about 150 permanent jobs.

Mr. Speaker, that is proof positive that we are quite prepared to invest our money and our energy to develop our region in a spirit of co-operation which shows once and for all that we, the people of the Gaspé area, the people of the riding of Bonanventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine——are open for business. We are willing to work together to repair the horrendous damage caused during 22 years of Liberal rule in my riding. I congratulate the Hon. Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette), and I congratulate the Conservative Government for its optimistic and confident attitude regarding the future of Canada. Finally, I congratulate the citizens of my riding who have worked so hard to permit 150 permanent jobs to be created.

We will continue to work together, Mr. Speaker, and I extend to you and to all my colleagues in the House an invitation to visit our beautiful riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

EXPORT CHEESE GRADING COSTS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, southeastern Ontario has always been proud of its agricultural industry and the important role it has played in producing food at a reasonable price for consumers not only in Canada but throughout the world. Today in eastern Ontario there is considerable concern in the agricultural community that this sector of the economy is being burdened with an unfair proportion of the cost associated with maintaining food prices affordable by everyone. A recent proposal by the federal Government to implement a cost recovery program for services such as grading, would result in increased costs to the consumer or, worse, to the already hard hit producers.

One such problem which has been brought to my attention is that of the cheese producers in eastern Ontario who, under this proposal, will have to pay for the grading of cheese which is to be exported. As many Members are aware, many cheese factories have closed. Knowing the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and his concern for the agricultural community, I trust that through consultation and communication a fair and reasonable solution will be found which will be acceptable to the cheese producers and agricultural communities of eastern Ontario.

HOUSING

RRAP PROGRAM CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, with thousands of Canadians, I would like to express my disappointment as a result of the cutbacks made by the Progressive Conservative Government in its home renovation and home improvement policy. In Newfoundland, 37 per cent of the budget was cut. In Prince Edward Island, 42 per cent, in Nova Scotia, 30 per cent, in New Brunswick, 34 per cent, in Quebec, 35 per cent and in Ontario, 9 per cent, in Manitoba, 27 per cent, in Saskatchewan, 20 per cent, in Alberta, 16 per cent and in British Columbia, 35 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I think this Government should have continued what the Liberals were doing. They should be getting rid of substandard housing instead of getting involved in Star Wars. I realize the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would rather compete with Mr. Spock, to improve his image, but I speak for all Canadians when I say that the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program has played a very important role in improving the quality of our housing and also in creating jobs, and it was far less costly than the amount of taxpayers' money that will be wasted on star wars.

IMMIGRATION

REFUSAL TO ALLOW DETAINEE TO MARRY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the right to marry must be defended against interference by immigration officials. Irene McLaughlin, a Canadian citizen, has enjoyed a commonlaw marriage for four years with Hugo Cobos. However, Mr. Cobos has been detained in the immigrant holding centre at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in Toronto for six months. Ms. McLaughlin's request to marry him has been denied by Immigration enforcement authorities in Ontario who will neither permit him a day's leave to marry her nor permit them to be married in the Waldorf-Astoria.

Surely Mr. Cobos should be treated no worse than a criminal. Even convicted criminals are allowed to marry in prison. I believe that that right is protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is one more reason why, four weeks ago, I asked the Minister to inquire into conditions at the immigrant holding centres. They deny not only the Charter of Rights and Freedoms but also the United Nations minimum standard for prisoners, which Canada has signed.

I am glad the Minister and the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration have finally undertaken the inquiry into the immigrant holding centres, but meanwhile let Ms. McLaughlin marry Mr. Cobos. I call on the Minister to take immediate action to defend Ms. McLaughlin's right to marry.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—EFFECT ON INVESTMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. The energy deal she announced yesterday imperilled the investment off Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and affected the venture in Hibernia. In order to meet that point, the Hon. Minister said in the House that she had just received assurances of reinvestment of $800 million a year in these offshore resources.

Would the Minister reassure the people of Newfoundland that she has commitments in definitive terms from the oil companies off Hibernia? If she has those commitments, would she table them in the House of Commons so that the people of Newfoundland will be assured of the job potential in that development which may well have been interrupted by the energy deal?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can really only say that I can seek the consent of the provinces concerned to table any documents. If that will satisfy the Right Hon. Member, I will do that. However, I can assure him that there is nothing in the Accord that does any damage at all to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. In fact, it does exactly the reverse. It will create the kind of climate which will lead to the kind of investment that Newfoundland and Nova Scotia need to bring Hibernia and other ventures on-stream.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is not as important to assure me, Mr. Speaker, as it is to assure the thousands of people in Newfoundland who are depending on those jobs.

PRICE OF GASOLINE—PROMISES MADE TO QUEBEC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister has already contradicted the Minister of Energy on the question whether Canadian consumers are going to pay more for gas. He said he did not know yesterday, but we know that during the election campaign, Progressive Conservative candidates promised consumers in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec that if a Progressive Conservative Government was elected, it would reduce the retail price of gas.

Why did the Minister not keep the promises made to voters in Montreal, Trois-Rivières, Chicoutimi, Sherbrooke and other cities and towns in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member represents a Party which caused hatred and division in this country with the NEP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: You are the worst of the gang.

Miss Carney: Now the Right Hon. Member is following the same tactics by trying to maintain that the Western Accord hurts Atlantic Canada and Nova Scotia, and that is a shameful statement. That Accord was negotiated with the interest of Canada in mind. I would ask the Hon. Member to stop using energy as a tool of division in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The weaker the case, the louder the pleading, Mr. Speaker.

POSITION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Would the Minister make the same accusation against her colleague, Premier Miller of Ontario, who said yesterday that he was concerned for the consumers of Ontario and that he was seeking a meeting with the Prime Minister of Canada? Would the consumers of this country prefer to believe that attempt at phoney outrage on the part of the Minister or would they feel concern, as the Premier of Ontario does, for the people of his province?

• (1120)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Member wants phoney outrage, let him try peddling that line in St. John's or Calgary.

With respect to the Premier of Ontario, his Government has been kept fully informed, through his Energy Minister, of our negotiations with the western provinces. As I have repeatedly said, there is nothing in the Western Accord that hurts consumers. Going to deregulation and going to world prices mean that we create an environment in which prices should go down if world prices go down. We have frozen natural gas prices. The Liberal regime had two natural gas increases in place. By removing the Canadian Ownership Charge we have removed a tax that is paid by the consumers.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Government has completely done away with grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program. Executives and consultants in the energy sector, not politicians, are saying that this will mean a drastic reduction in exploration at Hibernia and Venture, and could postpone production indefinitely in these regions. In order to assist Hibernia and Venture, what will the Government put in place to replace the grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, again, the allegation that the Western Accord hurts Nova Scotia is a malicious and false statement. The companies involved in drilling ventures told me personally that the removal of the PGRT, which is a revenue tax, would be one of the greatest incentives for them to continue drilling in the Scotian South. We have done that. We have supplied offsets to Canadian companies, and we have maintained $3 billion worth of PIP programs. We will be continuing an incentive program to replace PIP in the future.

Mr. MacLellan: It is not the Accord with which we find difficulty; it is doing away with the grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program.

HIBERNIA OILFIELD DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that she has these assurances from the industry. I wonder if the industry gave her a bag of magic beans. Will she admit that she has actually abandoned the fiscal regime for Hibernia and, as a result, the Newfoundland energy arrangement means very little because there may not be any production without a fiscal regime?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in terms of Hibernia, the whole thrust of the Western Accord is to create jobs and investment in developments like Hibernia in the interest of energy security for all Canadians. The Hon. Member should know that the Atlantic Accord allows the provinces to set their own royalties, just as the western provinces do. In that case the abandonment of the tax field by the federal Government should be nothing but good for the Province of Newfoundland.

REDUCTION OF TAX ON OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. First, let me say that I agree with her. It is no longer an East-West conflict but a conflict between big oil and the ordinary Canadian consumer who will be hurt.

The Alberta Minister of Energy is quoted today as saying that the Western Accord provided the oil industry with an extended Christmas. Will the Minister, the spring Santa Claus of the oil industry, explain why, since November 8, the Government cannot help ordinary Canadians with respect to social programs, environmental programs, $800 furnace conversions, and arts and cultural programs because they will raise the deficit, yet when it comes to giving $1.3 billion to the oil industry that does not seem to affect the deficit at all? How does the Minister explain this double standard in which there is one rule for the Canadian oil industry and another for ordinary consumers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are many Canadians who want jobs. The Western Accord will provide jobs. That is what will interest ordinary Canadians, and that is what we have attempted to accommodate.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to know where the Minister gets that line about jobs. I can only find it in the Canadian Petroleum Association brief. The President of the Canadian Petroleum Association is quoted today as saying: "We got everything we asked for one year ago."

JOB CREATION FORECAST

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, let me ask a supplementary of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the Minister said in committee that her Department does not have any studies of how many jobs will be created by deregulation, and in view of the fact that the Deputy Minister of Ontario says that there will be a loss of jobs with deregulation, where does the Minister get this figure of 300,000 jobs created by a capital intensive industry?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Right out of thin air.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the forecast of 100,000 jobs came from the Economic Council of Canada in an independent study. The forecast of 300,000 jobs has come from a variety of sources. I will be quite happy to settle for somewhere between 100,000 and 300,000 jobs.

Let me tell the Member where these jobs are. Hibernia, 6,000 in construction, 1,000 permanent; Venture, 5,000 in construction, 700 permanent; Vancouver Island pipe line, 2,500 in construction, 100 permanent; Western LNG, 1,750 in construction, 450 permanent; Syncrude, Phase I, 2,500 in construction, 350 permanent; Phase II, 3,000 in construction, 500 permanent. I could go on and on, and on. Those are where the jobs are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deans: You are going to have to get to 100,000.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister had better go on. She sounds more and more like Bill Bennett. She had better go on and start adding up to 100,000.

EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT WRITE-OFFS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question. Clause 6 on page 5 of the agreement reads:

To assist companies which are not currently paying corporate income tax—

Can you believe this, Mr. Speaker? It continues:

—the Government of Canada will allow new exploration and development write-offs—

Here are some more goodies for the oil industry.

Given that there is a Budget coming up, will the Minister give a guarantee to the Canadian consumers, because the Canadian consumers form the vast majority of people in Canada, that the Government is not going to try to equalize this equation by raising excise taxes, or whatever, to get the money back that it has given to the oil companies?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think, for the purposes of clarifying the record, I should finish the quote the Hon. Member gave. Clause 6 reads:

To assist companies which are not currently paying corporate income tax, the Government of Canada will allow new exploration and development write-offs which are not immediately usable under the federal corporate income tax to reduce the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax otherwise payable.

That is the clause that helps Canadian companies. They are the ones that are most often in the position described there. We are giving Canadian companies an extra bonus of an extra write-off so that they can maintain an enhanced Canadian participation in the energy field.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Corneille: A write-off on nothing is nothing.

Oral Questions

ONTARIO CONSUMER INTERESTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the Minister stated that the oil deal would not mean extra cost to consumers. Yesterday, the Prime Minister said we would have to wait until May to see if prices go up. This morning the Minister also said we must wait and see. What guarantees or concessions were given to the Premier of Ontario, the main oil consuming province, to protect consumer interests?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can only report that there is again nothing in the Accord that will increase consumer prices. I have already said that I have been in constant touch with the Government of Ontario, and I fail to understand the purpose of the Hon. Member's question.

POSITION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Premier of Ontario has requested an emergency meeting with the Prime Minister and is quoted as saying that he will fight for consumers. Clearly he does not believe that the agreement was good for consumers. The Minister says that the Premier was kept fully informed through his Energy Minister. Why was he not consulted before the fact?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is no emergency meeting between the Premier of Ontario and the Prime Minister. It is not considered an emergency for a provincial Premier to meet a Prime Minister of Canada since the Conservatives were elected.

We assure the Hon. Member that the Minister of Energy for Ontario was kept fully informed of the negotiations. I received the position of the Government of Ontario and that was considered in forming the Western Accord.

PRICE OF GASOLINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The accord signed by the Minister yesterday shows clearly that she has elected to sacrifice the consumer in favour of the multinational oil companies. The Minister knows perfectly well that if the price of oil is allowed to vary according to market supply and demand, it is false to state that prices will necessarily drop. I may remind the Minister, and her Quebec colleagues will remember, that when the Quebec Government reduced its escalating tax by 20 per cent, this did not benefit the consumers, since the oil companies immediately increased their prices. I therefore would ask the Minister what guarantees she can give Canadians that this will not happen again.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of the Western Accord was to create jobs for Canadians. Those jobs will be in the West. They will be in Ontario. They will be in Quebec. They will be in the Maritimes, and in the North. As I have said repeatedly—and he can read it himself—there is nothing in the Accord that would lead to increases in consumer prices. When you go to world prices, you are going slightly down, or in an environment of declining prices. We have frozen natural gas increases, and we have removed a tax. There is nothing in that regime which would be reflected in increased costs to consumers.

DEMAND OF QUEBEC GASOLINE RETAILERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said there was nothing in her accord that could keep the price from dropping, and what I have to say to that is that there is nothing in her accord that could prevent the price paid by the consumer from rising. She has clearly shown that the purpose of the Western Accord was to create jobs that would be paid for by Eastern taxpayers. I hope Quebec Members will soon wake up to that fact. The Hon. Member for Duvernay, for instance.

I would like to ask the Minister why she failed to consider the request made by the Association des détaillants indépendants du Québec for a protection mechanism for consumers.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, again I would like to remind the House that the Hon. Member is once again practising the Liberal policy politics of hate by suggesting that eastern consumers are paying for western jobs.

Again, the job creation in energy is spread right across the country. If he doubts it, he can look at the plants in the Province of Ontario and in the Province of Quebec which supply goods and services to the oil patch. I can also point out to him that the Quebec Minister of Energy, with whom I consulted, supported the move to deregulation.

ONTARIO CONSUMERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given that the Premier of the Province of Ontario stated that he was not kept informed with regard to the impact of the newly signed Western Accord on the consumers of Ontario, what guarantee could the Minister give to Ontario consumers that they will not be asked to carry the additional burden which will be brought about as a result of the dropping of the tax on oil, and the imposition of a new cost to the Government of Canada, by way of an increase in the deficit or by way of an increase in tax?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, again I can tell the Hon. Member that the purpose of the Western Accord is to create jobs right across the country. We designed an Accord that has the minimum impact on the federal Budget and the maximum impact on exploration and development, which will spin economic benefits right across the country, including his home riding. If he is against jobs in his home riding, I suggest that he had better state it.

TAX REDUCTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Minister does not understand. My riding does not have any industry in it.

Miss Carney: Maybe it will now.

Mr. Deans: My riding does not have any industrial development. If the Minister is basing her research on the kinds of responses she gives with regard to the riding of Hamilton Mountain, then she ought to go back and do some more research.

How, on the one hand, can the Government give away $1.3 billion of tax revenue and, on the other hand, claim to be going to reduce the deficit in Canada without in one way or another increasing the cost to the consumers of the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): By good fiscal management, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

LIMITED DIVIDEND PROGRAM INQUIRY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister responsible for housing. In the consultation paper on housing the Minister noted that there was serious concern about whether federal housing assistance was being directed to those most in need. Could the Minister tell the House what measures are being taken to aim federal housing assistance to those in most need? Specifically, do they involve a change or an improvement in the limited dividend program?

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to give the Hon. Member and this House the assurance that the Government and the Minister concerned are continuing consultations with these groups and intend to take every action necessary to ensure that Canadians have access to adequate, reasonably priced housing.

As for the Hon. Member's specific question, it has been noted and the Hon. Member will receive a reply as soon as the Minister responsible has returned.

PORK EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I usually ask questions about porkbarrelling, but I am ready to drop the barrel for today and ask questions of the Deputy Prime Minister about pork. Yesterday the Minister for International Trade said that the pork industry was in a very serious predicament. In view of the election promise of the Prime Minister to fast track agricultural practices and trade, could the Minister tell us what specific fast track actions have been taken over the last 24 hours to deal decisively with the crisis in the agricultural industry?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I defer to the Hon. Member and his Party with respect to expertise in the pork industry and porkbarrelling, but I will take his question as notice and draw it to the attention of the Minister responsible.

SITUATION OF FARMERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, since the President of the United States said he was as close as the telephone, I assume that the Prime Minister called his friend yesterday, and in that case, could the Prime Minister inform the House what the results were of these telephone conversations and when the House will have the assurance that the President of the United States will intervene, not just to help his friend, the Canadian Prime Minister—or should we say the Canadian President—but also and especially this country's farmers who need help today, since prices are dropping about 2 cents a day, while we are waiting for the Minister's decision?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were interested in the facts, which I am sure he knows, he would know that the situation regarding the decision in the United States affecting pork is a matter that, naturally and obviously, concerns the Government of Canada, pork producers, and the House. He would also know that it was a preliminary determination and that that may be modified when the U.S. Commerce Department revisits the situation in June.

EFFECTS OF NEW POLICY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the Western Accord on oil. Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows: Recently, people across Quebec saw the reluctance of this Government to provide assistance for the Domtar project that involves 5,000 jobs for Quebec, because of the deficit. The Government has now concluded an accord that will give the multinational oil companies $1.3 billion, without any guarantee of jobs. Could the Minister explain to the House why the deficit is an excuse for not creating jobs in Quebec and is not considered when granting $1 billion to international oil companies?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has forgotten that the pulp and paper industry itself said that grants were not appropriate for that industry. On the other hand it has been our objective to create jobs in energy, which is an industry that goes from coast to coast to coast. That is our objective, and we are working to achieve it, with or without the help of the Hon. Member.

• (1140)

OIL COMPANY BENEFITS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Champlain said a few weeks ago that he was starting to believe that we were being held hostage by those companies concerned only with personal profit, that is, the multionational oil companies. Can the Minister explain why it is that she has gone to such measures to provide assistance to oil companies that are not now paying any corporate tax at all, and yet the Government is not prepared to come to the assistance of the 1.5 million workers in Quebec and across Canada who cannot pay taxes because they do not have jobs?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we hope that the Western Accord will correct that situation by putting those people back to work. I can just repeat what I have already told the House. The measure about special offsets for companies that do not pay taxes in a clause to help enhance the role of Canadian companies in our oil and gas industry. If the Hon. Member and his Party do not support Canadianization of the energy field, I suggest they are on the wrong track.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, two days from now the current arrangements with Japan regarding restraint on the exports of Japanese cars to Canada will expire. Is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion going to make a statement in the House today about what the Government is going to do regarding this important matter?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I know that I do not have to remind him that in 1984, in a similar situation, discussions with respect to the ongoing VER arrangement with Japan started in January. There was a further meeting in Tokyo in March. There was a meeting in Ottawa in April, one in Banff, and finally by June 12 of last year there was sufficient agreement to allow a communication. At the present time we are in such negotiations. I believe the Hon. Member will be pleased to learn that the officer who headed the negotiation team with the Japanese last year is heading the team this year.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is remarkable that yesterday the Minister told the House there would be an announcement today about the Government's policy on the matter of Japanese exports of cars to Canada. We assumed that it would be in this House. He now suddenly discovers that the Government has been handling this matter in such a desultory and lack-lustre fashion that he is not able to make the announcement. If the Minister is not able to make the announcement today, will he pledge to the House right now that, if there is no agreement March 31, the Government will have in place standby arrangements to prevent the Japanese from flooding our market with cars and imperilling thousands of Canadian jobs? Will he at least do that?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that we fully intend that there be a stable market in Canada as far as the automotive industry is concerned. Our discussions with the Japanese are certainly to that end, but we feel that it would not serve anyone well to have these discussions and negotiations taking place in public. I want to assure the Hon. Member, further to what I said yesterday, that my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, and myself will be giving, if you like, a progress report, or statement, later this afternoon—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Where?

Mr. Stevens: —bringing the public up to date on where these negotiations stand.

Mr. Deans: How about the House of Commons being brought up to date?

Mr. Stevens: Let me assure the Hon. Member from the NDP that, when a negotiation has come to a more definitive stage, we will be making an appropriate statement in the House.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—POSITION OF NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the Minister made the day for an already very wealthy oil industry in Canada. However, it was a sad day for Newfoundland. In light of the serious ramifications for the Government and the people of Newfoundland in terms of developing the Hibernia project, I want to ask the Minister whether she consulted the Premier of Newfoundland, Brian Peckford and, if so, did he endorse this Western Accord?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have an incredible situation here. This Government in six months has negotiated two energy accords that have brought healing to those regions of the country that were split off from Confederation by the former administration. No one on that side of the House can say congratulations. Do you know who did say congratulations, Mr. Speaker? The Minister responsible for energy, Bill Marshall, called my office to give his congratulations for an accord that he knows will benefit Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HIBERNIA OILFIELD DEVELOPMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is an incredible day indeed in terms of the Western Accord. It is because of the fact that we did agree with the agreement that this Government had with Newfoundland, which the previous Government could not reach, that we are so concerned. Since the Minister did not consult the Premier of Newfoundland, how does she justify putting the whole Hibernia project into jeopardy and rendering the Newfoundland Accord null and void?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, even for election rhetoric, I think that that goes beyond an excuse. There is nothing in this accord that hurts Hibernia. It helps Hibernia. First of all, by taking off the PGRT, which is a tax that is hated all across the country in producing areas, that will improve the economics of Hibernia. By going to decontrol, that will improve the markets for Hibernia. This accord is good for all producing regions of the country. Newfoundland will have the power to set its own royalties and its own fiscal regime free of federal government intervention. That is what Newfoundland wants.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROMOTION SYSTEM FOR IMMIGRATION OFFICERS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Employment and Immigration but, in her absence, I direct it to the Acting Minister.

Severe criticism has been levelled at the promotion system for immigration officers, which is based on the number of illegal immigrants caught at points of entry into Canada. The Minister has launched an inquiry into this matter, and I should like to know who are the people in charge of the inquiry and the scope of their mandate. I would also like to know whether those people have ready access to all files and are authorized to summon witnesses.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Speaker, I take note of the question, and the Minister herself will answer the Hon. Member at the first opportunity.

WESTERN ACCORD—VANCOUVER ISLAND PIPELINE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well. The Minister will recall very clearly that a few moments ago she was commenting on all the jobs that would be created by the Vancouver Island pipeline. She will also remember that during the summer of 1984 both herself and the Prime Minister promised the people of British Columbia that the federal Government would enable that pipeline to be built by providing a financial grant to the Province of British Columbia. Does the Minister still plan to provide that financial grant which would make that gas pipeline possible, or is she going to leave it to the private sector?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I have already informed the House, my officials are having discussions with the energy officials in British Columbia on the economics of a pipeline. I will report back to the House on the status of that project when the discussions are completed.

WINDFALL PROFITS TAX INQUIRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister indicated that this new accord will assist in Canadianizing the oil industry. She will know that the main beneficiaries of this accord will be those oil companies that are able to take advantage of the world price for old oil. Those are almost exclusively foreign-owned companies. Will the Minister explain why she has not considered a windfall profits tax, because the increase in price per barrel for that old oil will be in excess of $4 a barrel. Why not use an excess profits tax on that old oil to help offset the cost of this accord, as opposed to the consumers of Canada paying the cost?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Western Accord provides that all benefits flowing from the Accord are reinvested in new jobs in Canada, so the main beneficiaries of the accord are all those Canadians who want work. They will now have a chance to have work.

PUBLIC WORKS

MIRABEL—LAND RESALE

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

If I may, on behalf of all Members of the House, I should like to commend the Minister for the excellent work he has done. I would like to ask him when the moratorium on Mirabel land resales will be lifted?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question of my colleague. In less than five months, as you know, we have managed to find a solution to the land resale problem, a solution which both parties have endorsed, and this agreement will now become a Cabinet document. Quite confident that Cabinet will approve the document, I think I can tell the House that land resales might begin before the end of this session—and that spells efficiency in a matter which had been on the back burner for 16 years.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would get someone to endorse that $13 million cheque which he gave to the pork producers during the election.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—VANCOUVER ISLAND PIPELINE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it arises from the remarks she made on the Vancouver Island pipeline. In response to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap she said that she was still in negotiations with the Energy Minister for the Province of British Columbia, yet, earlier this morning she included the job potential for the Vancouver Island pipeline among the jobs which she anticipates from the recent energy deal. Are she and the federal Government now committed to the building of the Vancouver Island pipeline? If not, why would she include those figures in the job potential which she cited?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Right Hon. Member, again I say that we are in discussions with the officials in British Columbia. We are trying to come to an agreement on a time line which permit the pipeline to be built.

OIL COMPANY BENEFITS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it deals with the Western Accord, which I think might be more appropriately called "ordinary Canadians versus Big Oil".

Yesterday afternoon the Minister announced $1.3 billion of welfare for big oil. Yesterday morning the Government announced that it would cut back on the initial grain price for western farmers. Why this double standard? Why in the morning could the Government not afford a better grain price for western farmers, when in the afternoon it gave $1.3 billion to big oil? Why the double standard?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member comes from Saskatchewan which has got one of the most impressive records in the development of oil and gas energy reserves, by using tax holidays, royalty holidays, and other measures, which have created jobs, created new revenues through land sales, and which have been very beneficial for his province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I am really shocked that a Member from Saskatchewan would be knocking the Western Accord that the Energy Minister of Saskatchewan initialled as good for his province.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I think the time for b.s. is over. I want an answer from the Minister. Why the double standard? Why can this Government say in the morning—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why are you against jobs?

Mr. Nystrom: Shut up, Joe.

Why in the morning did the Government say to western Canadian farmers that it could not afford better grain prices and it would cut the initial price, when a few hours later in the House it gave $1.3 billion of welfare to the oil companies? Why the double standard? I want an answer.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's Party holds a record for double standards, by supporting the NEP, which hurt western Canada and which we are now moving to heal.

OLYMPICS

WINTER OLYMPICS—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AID

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Yesterday in the House the issue of the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympics was raised, but the Minister refused and failed to address his comments to the $200 million commitment which his Government had made to the games.

The Canadian Olympic Organizing Committee and all Canadians are still awaiting those answers. The time for organizing an event of such national magnitude is short. Therefore I ask the Minister when will he inform the House how he will raise the $200 million and what mechanisms will he put in place? We need the assurance to ensure that all Canadians and Olympic participants will have faith in the commitment which has been made by the Government.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to that question. I have been waiting six months for the Hon. Member to stand up and ask one.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the $200-million commitment to Calgary will be kept. As he knows, the Olympic coin program has already been approved by the House and the estimated revenue from that program will be between $40 million and $50 million. As the Hon. Member also knows, the circulating coin program is now before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

As far as my ongoing negotiations with the provinces for the remaining $100 million are concerned, I can assure the Hon. Member that I am comfortable with those negotiations. I have always maintained that an agreement would be signed before the end of this summer. I still believe that the agreement will be signed. In fact there will be a meeting of Ministers on April 19 in Ottawa which will iron out any remaining difficulties. I am confident that an agreement will be signed shortly thereafter.

FUND RAISING METHODS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the Minister is complaining about the lack of questions, but when he gets a question he refuses to answer in any different way. We were told in September that an agreement would be made with the provinces. He gave away the lottery without any guarantee. We were told that an agreement would be forthcoming before Christmas, and at Christmas the Minister told us that it would be forthcoming in the new year. Now it is March and he says there will be an agreement in the summer. We need a little more sense of action.

How will the Minister raise the $200 million, when the coin program will be lucky if it raises $30 million? How are the provinces going to come in, and when will they come in? Could he give a sense of direction to the Olympic Committee and Canadians in general?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had listened to my previous answer he would know that I have already given that commitment. He referred to us closing down of the Sports Pool. I would hope that we would have closed down the Sports Pool as it was losing $1.5 million a week. It was a Liberal-orchestrated Sports Pool detrimental to all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: I repeat that I have consistently said, and the Hon. Member should check the record, that hopefully an agreement would be signed with the provinces before the end of the summer. I maintain that position. Beyond the other areas which I have already mentioned, there are numerous private sector moves which are currently being discussed and negotiated. I am confident that we will raise not only the $200 million non-tax revenue dollars for the Olympic Games, but well beyond $200 million.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I can understand his embarrassment today, because he stated yesterday that an announcement would be made. It is outrageous that this announcement is not to be made in the House of Commons, when thousands of jobs are at stake. The United Auto Workers office in Toronto was informed that a specific agreement was to be signed stating that quotas would continue. Why has this situation changed between yesterday and today? What has happened to sweep the rug out from under the Minister and his commitments?

● (1200)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I would ask him to follow my words more closely. Yesterday I said, "The Government of Canada will have an announcement with respect to this matter tomorrow". We will be making a statement. The Hon. Member takes exception to the fact that it could be made later this afternoon. If he would prefer that it be made in the House, I am sure the House Leaders could at least discuss that matter and some suitable time could be arranged. I have no objection to taking up House time if the Hon. Member feels it is desirable.

However, the point I wanted to stress is that certainly nothing has changed from yesterday to today. We do want to give the nation a report on where this matter now stands, where discussions stand, and I emphasize once again that the last time the nation went through this it took until June before we could get a satisfactory agreement with the Japanese.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, March 28, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MISS CARNEY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order with respect to certain words used by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) in answer to a question asked of her by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). She said that the Hon. Member made a malicious and a false statement.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 107. It quite clearly states there that the words "false statement" have been ruled by previous Speakers to be unparliamentary on more than one occasion. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to apply the clear precedent that the words used by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are unparliamentary and call upon the Minister to withdraw them according to our clear rules and traditions.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys in asking his question was simply carrying out his duties to speak out for all Canadians in a forceful but fair and accurate manner. He is entitled to a response from the Minister which is informative and within the rules. This he did not receive and he is entitled to better from the Minister.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the word "false". I was considering "spiteful" but I will settle for "inaccurate".

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Minister cannot substitute another word. She either withdraws the word or she does not. She cannot substitute another word she thinks is satisfactory.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the heat of debate in Question Period, I think statements are made by Hon. Members on both sides of the House which, on reflection, are considered unparliamentary. I fully subscribe to the position which has been taken by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. When confronted with a word which is clearly unparliamentary, she did the right and proper thing, and that is to withdraw it unequivocally.

Mr. Deans: That's fine. That's all, I agree.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are other unparliamentary terms for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). The reference to drinking works both ways. Sometimes we on our side wonder whether he has had too little or too much.

The situation, Mr. Speaker, is really one in which there has been a categorical withdrawal. I don't think the word "inaccurate" is unparliamentary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrup the Government House Leader. Does the Opposition House Leader have something to say before the Chair comes to a decision?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think the rules and precedents are clear. If a word is unparliamentary, it must be withdrawn clearly and unequivocally, without any skating around in an attempt to insert by surreptitious means some other word to make up for the fact that the Hon. Minister did not follow the rules and traditions of this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must inform the House that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has withdrawn the words to the satisfaction of the Chair.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, there was an indication earlier today that the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion was going to make a statement outside of the House with regard to the Japanese car quotas. Later he indicated that he would be willing to make the statement inside the House if some suitable arrangement could be made. Since time is of the essence today, I would like to suggest that we would be prepared to sit through the lunch hour in order to allow the Minister to make the statement now, and our commitment to complete the bank Bill by three o'clock will still be kept. If the Government House Leader would accept that suggestion and have the Minister make a statement now, we would be willing to have that occur.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition believe that the rights of Parliament are such that statements of the kind intended to be made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion should be made here in the House. We will certainly be happy to work with the Government House Leader to facilitate that being done.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, let me say that I have had an opportunity to discuss this matter with my distinguished colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The fact is that it was hoped that we would be able to make a statement at the usual time. However, as he pointed out during Question Period, there are certain elements in terms of negotiation which made it necessary to forestall any announcement and statement. I believe there may be a disposition, for example, if we were agreeable to sitting through the lunch hour, to see what we could do. I think we could probably arrange to have something announced in the vicinity of two o'clock this afternoon, which would allow Hon. Members to hear the Minister and to respond. In this way we can accomplish our common objective, and that is to pass the legislation so that the other place could consider the Bill at or about three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Will we get a copy of the statement so that we will be able to prepare a reasoned and meaningful response?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The House Leader of the Official Opposition knows that I have instituted a scheme, which has not been in existence up to this point, which will ensure the earliest possible distribution of all statements to be made not only to the critics, but also to the Opposition House Leaders.

I will give the Hon. Member the undertaking that as soon as the statement is ready, I will try to get it to the Opposition Parties at the earliest possible time so that there will be ample opportunity for them to make a considered and, hopefully, responsible response.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand that there is agreement to sit during lunch hour? Is it so agreed by the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

PETITIONS

HOME POSTAL SERVICE

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the people of the riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, in the Sault-au-Récollet area. These residents have been waiting for home postal delivery since June 1983. It is intolerable that they should be penalized by the Government just because they are in a new residential area. This reflects the indifference and arrogance of the Minister and the Canada Post Corporation, and I therefore ask the Government and the Minister responsible to take appropriate action.

ABOLITION OF PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYEES ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 375 persons who object to the abolishment of the employee assistance program on Parliament Hill. It is signed by staff and Hon. Members of Parliament.

CLOSURE OF NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table with the House a petition signed by a number of people who are concerned with the closure of the National Postal Museum. They are petitioning this House and the Minister responsible for the post office to intervene and ensure that the National Postal Museum is retained. That it find a new location near Parliament if it has to move from 180 Wellington, and that the staff continue to serve the public in their present capacity.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): It gives me a great deal of honour and pleasure to present a petition on behalf of several people from Calgary who oppose the imposition of the severance pay provisions on the Unemployment Insurance Act. They ask this House to intervene and withdraw these provisions.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a petition from several residents of the Province of Alberta asking that workers laid off after March 31, 1985 not have severance pay deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits. To do so would greatly increase the economic hardship for the families of the laid-off workers.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of Canada in which they humbly pray and call on Parliament to ensure all laid-off employees will keep their severance pay and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of severance pay.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of presenting a petition on behalf of many thousands of Canadians who are concerned that as of March 31, 1985, they will have their severance pay deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits. They call upon Parliament to stop this legislation.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a petition to present signed by constituents in Essex-Windsor. They make the point very strongly that an injustice will be done to working people in this country if this new system of severance pay being deducted from UIC benefits is put into effect as of March 31.

Petitions

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have the pleasure of submitting a petition on behalf of the citizens of Canada protesting the intent of the Government to steal the severance pay of workers who are laid off. They ask the Government to withdraw the provision.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, although the petition I am presenting is contrary to the belief of both myself and many people in my riding, I feel duty bound to present this petition signed by 110 people who are opposed to Pro-life and opposed as well to the inclusion of unborn human beings in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

OPPOSITION TO WASTE DUMP AT NICOLA, B.C.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to this House a petition attesting to the environmental concerns expressed by 942 residents of Merritt, Lower Nicola and the Nicola Valley. Their concerns stem from the proposal to locate a waste dump at the Craigmont mine site in the Nicola Valley. Their anxiety stems from evidence in a brief presented to the Thompson-Nicola regional district by the Home Sweet Home Organization of Lower Nicola, British Columbia, which suggests that there is great likelihood that severe damage to the environment of Merritt, Lower Nicola and the Nicola Valley would result. As a result of these convictions, they pray and beseech the House to support in every way possible their opposition to the location of a waste dump at the Craigmont mine site in the Nicola Valley.

NATURAL GAS PRICING REGULATIONS

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition signed by four residents from the Quebec City area. The petition was signed by students who are asking for the price of natural gas in Canada to be regulated.

In order to stimulate demand for an energy resource that produces less pollution than other kinds of fuel, a resource that is underdeveloped in this country at the present time, the petitioners humbly pray that Parliament ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Ms. Carney) to intervene in order to help the industry achieve its full potential.

I therefore present this petition and urge the Government to act upon it forthwith.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) wishes to present a second petition?

Mr. Cassidy: That was my intention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have a ruling by Madam Speaker Sauvé to the effect that when a Member presents a number of petitions, they must be presented at the same time, which has not been the case today. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to present a second petition?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this petition is on a separate subject and I had not realize they should all be presented at the same time.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of workers in Edmonton protesting the Government's decision to roll severance pay into unemployment insurance benefits. They point out that the compensation of workers for the loss of their employment and the investment of their labour and time in a company's operation is represented by severance pay and should not be taken away by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 76 and 184.

[Text]

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

Question No. 76—Mr. Nunziata:

1. (a) In the past five years, how many inmates have, because of behavioral and other problems, lost their earned remission under mandatory supervision (b) in which correctional institutions were they incarcerated?

2. By category, what are the most common reasons for inmates losing earned remission?

3. Have any inmates who have lost earned remission been subsequently released under mandatory supervision?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): I am informed by the National Parole Board as follows:

1. (a) The National Parole Board's automated system cannot produce this type of information prior to the fiscal year 1983-84. For 1983-84 there were 1,066 inmates who lost their earned remission under mandatory supervision.

(b) This data is available, however, it would require extensive manual research of 1,066 inmate files and result in a very costly exercise.

2. The common reason is through revocation which is brought about by breach of conditions or committing another crime.

3. In 1983-84, 2,908 persons were released on mandatory supervision and in that same period 1,087 were revoked.

Remission was recredited in only 21 cases. Of the 1,087 revoked, about 713 were eligible for release again on mandatory supervision.

AID TO CENTRAL AMERICA

In 1983, how much aid was given to (a) the Contradora Group (b) Mexico (c) Venezuela (d) Columbia (e) Panama?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): The "Contadora Group" per se is not a development aid recipient institution. It exists primarily to assist the countries of Central America in resolving the regional conflict.

I am informed by the Canadian International Development Agency as follows: During the fiscal year 1983-84, Canadian official development assistance was as follows:

(a) The Contadora Group (as such) — Nil
(b) Mexico — $ 1,340,000
(c) Venezuela — $ 170,000
(d) Colombia — $10,200,000
(e) Panama — $ 780,000

I am informed by the International Development Research Centre as follows: In 1983, IDRC has provided funds totalling $3,363,837 for the support of scientific research and related activities within the Contadora Group countries as follows:

(a) The Contadora Group (as such) — Nil
(b) Mexico — $ 335,477
(c) Venezuela — $ 187,200
(d) Colombia — $2,762,560
(e) Panama — $ 78,600

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded with consideration of Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank—Mrs. McDougall—Mr. Danis in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, yesterday, copies of Bill C-37 were distributed to Hon. Members. The House will note that the French text required some corrections. The text was corrected in pencil in the margin. I wonder whether the Bill has been ordered to be reprinted, so that we can all have the same copy with the same words. I am asking this so that today we can all use the same Bill with the same wording.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I became aware of the deficiency in the French version of the Bill and attempted in a rather rudimentary way to correct it, and I apologize to the Hon. Member. It is my understanding that the corrections have been made and the printed version will reflect the correct French version. I anticipate copies will be available directly.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank. Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—Agreement to Provide Financial Assistance.

Miss Nicholson: As our House Leader explained yesterday, we voted for the Bill at second reading so that it would go into Committee of the Whole and we would have an opportunity to ask some questions. I must say that I was concerned by the speech made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South because one would have assumed that, since the Bank was in his constituency, he would have been able to give us some very persuasive reasons for this bail-out. His reasons were weak in the extreme and certainly did not inspire me with confidence. In fact, they reduced my enthusiasm for the Bill. The main thrust of the comments of the Hon. Member for Edmonton South was that this Bank should be rescued because it is a western bank. I sincerely hope that the taxpayers of Canada are not going to be asked to contribute this amount of money simply because the Bank is in Alberta and the Minister of Energy was having a difficult time negotiating an agreement with Alberta.

• (1220)

The Hon. Member for Edmonton South attempted to cast the blame for the Bank's difficulties on to the National Energy Program. There was nothing in the National Energy Program that obliged that Bank to invest in a California bank which had a loan portfolio which was distinctly shaky. In view of the speech of the Member for Edmonton South, we must ask more questions about the management of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the quality of the business decisions it took. We must ask if the same management team is still there and a lot of questions about the information that the Government had.

When the Minister of State for Finance made her statement in the House on Monday, we were given the impression that the Government received its first information that the Canadian Commercial Bank was in serious difficulty quite recently in the month of March. Later, in response to questioning, the Minister of Finance said that he had received information from the Inspector General in September. Now we learn that even two years ago the American regulatory authorities had been in touch with the Canadian authorities. At that time they were apparently expressing concern about the California bank in and around the time that the Canadian Commercial Bank invested in it.

I would also like to know if the Inspector General of Banks had advised the Canadian Commercial Bank at any time to diversify its holdings. I made a reference in the House a couple of days ago to the statement that is in Part 3 of the Estimates, that it is part of the Inspector General's duty, if he foresees trouble, to encourage a bank to diversify. I would like to know if this obligation was exercised, and when it was exercised.

I would also like an explanation of diversification. As far as I can see from the information we have, the holdings of this Bank were all in the energy field. They may have diversified geographically, but is that to be taken seriously as diversification? Is that what the Inspector General of Banks intended?

I have several other questions, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps I might afford the Minister an opportunity to answer those.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I hope I have kept all the questions straight. If I haven't, I know the Hon. Member will ask them again. I would like to start by congratulating you, Mr. Chairman, on your excellent role today in Question Period.

Perhaps I could explain in a little detail the history of the relationship with the California operations. In 1981 the Canadian Commercial Bank acquired a 40 per cent interest in the Westlands Bank. The Westlands Bank was largely involved with real estate loans. The move by the CCB into California was an attempt to diversify geographically. It was involved in the Westlands Bank in the real estate area. At that point real estate markets were very strong. The real estate market in California, as in other areas, later began to decline. The Canadian Commercial Bank, as the major shareholder in the Westlands Bank, increased its participation in the Westlands Bank with an injection of capital to strengthen that operation. The recent problems were through the CCB's agency in California. The agency was involved with oil service and drilling rig loans.

Whether it is a good business decision to diversify geographically within the same industry is obviously a question of where the Board of Directors is heading. Certainly within some kinds of companies one would want to stay in the area where presumably one has expertise. Rather than going into an area where they did not have the expertise, it was better to diversify geographically and stay with the industry they were familiar with and could bring the best judgment to.

As we know, the Bank was substantially more profitable in the late 1970s. It looked like an aggressive, moving bank. After the real estate market in California began to decline the difficulties were recognized. The oil service industry in California got into difficulty very recently. The Bank has also made other efforts to diversify. It now has branches in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, and Halifax, as well as in western Canada. I think the correct business decisions were taken with regard to diversification. They perhaps did not work quickly enough, but I think the Bank made some appropriate moves on diversification.

Miss Nicholson: Could the Minister also give us the history of the involvement of the Inspector General of Banks? There is a newspaper report that the Inspector General's office has been receiving a steady stream of inquiries from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the U.S. equivalent of the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, from the U.S. Federal Reserve Board, and from the California banking superintendent's office over a two-year period. If this is the case, could we know what action was taken over that two-year period?

Mrs. McDougall: Since there were overlapping jurisdictions, there was a connection made early in 1983, I believe. An official of the Inspector General's office went to California to look at the Westlands acquisition. There was not, as was implied in the newspaper, a steady stream of phone calls and telexes. There was simply, on an occasional basis, as would be normal, conversations between the two regulatory bodies. They were actually quite rare. There was evidence that the Westlands Bank was improving. As I understand it, both regulatory agencies were satisfied that, while the problems were obviously severe, they were not critical.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I trust that we will be hearing questions from a variety of Members today as we go through this Bill.

I would like to return to the point that my colleague from Trinity was referring to a moment ago. On January 25, 1983 the Governor of the Bank of Canada was obviously concerned enough about the situation to phone the national newspaper, The Globe and Mail. He convinced The Globe and Mail, at least, that everything was fine, that the Commercial Bank was profitable, solvent and there were no problems. Will the Minister explain if that was an accurate statement at that time when the Governor of the Bank was saying that it was solvent and profitable? Did he actually have evidence at that point on which to make that statement or was he simply trying to calm down investors in Canada as well as elsewhere?

• (1230)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I think that statement was made by the Governor after consultation with the Inspector General. It was made in relation to the resignation of Mr. Eaton as the Chief Executive Officer of the Bank. Over the two or three months prior to that, there had been some building up of concern around Mr. Eaton's relationship with Mr. Rosenberg. Throughout that time, as the concern and the pressure on the trust company situation arose, I think the Governor took responsible action by indicating that this Bank was not connected with that scandalous affair because of action taken through the resignation of Howard Eaton.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I have a general question for the Minister. My office, and I suspect many other offices, has received many phone calls and telegrams from people who are very concerned about what kind of signal is being sent by the Government. According to this Bill, the Government is spending at least $75 million; $60 million of that is coming from the federal Government directly, to bail out this failing bank and ensure that it will not fail.

Does this mean that from this point on it may be well recognized that any bank that gets into financial difficulty will have the full support of the federal Government, that it will be guaranteed that the federal Government will bail out any failing bank or financial institution in the country?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, this situation was caused by an isolated incident. There are no other financial institutions in the country at the moment that are appearing to be insolvent in any way. I would like to make it clear that other institutions are not being looked at under the circumstances that we are talking about now. I want that absolutely clear for the House, the people of Canada and the depositors in our financial institutions.

If any organization under my legislative or regulatory jurisdiction was to come to me with difficulties, I would look at each situation as it stood. I can make no commitment at this time either for or against what happens in the very unlikely event that we are faced with this again.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, why is there an interest-free loan? I realize that we are asking the taxpayers of Canada to provide $60 million—a loan, in a sense—to this troubled bank to assist it to get back on its feet. I think we support that notion but when other people obtain money from the federal Government in one way or another, they usually pay interest. Why would we not charge a bank interest as well?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the support package was designed so that the participants would be repaid the principal amount interest-free, except that in addition there would be warrants to purchase equity in the Bank issued on a pro rata basis to the support group, which could be exercised for ten years after the principal is paid back, so that there is a return to the taxpayers and to the support package participants in general. The warrants can be exercised at a very modest price and the warrants, as the Bank is profitable, will have a trading value and be able to be sold. That will be a return to the participants in the support package, including the taxpayers.

Mr. Riis: The Minister says that we will be able to purchase these warrants at a very modest price. Since it is a failing bank and because its shares have virtually collapsed on the stock exchange, is it any surprise that we are able to obtain these warrants at a very reasonable and modest cost? Assuming that the Bank will eventually get back on its feet, we will in fact receive a fair return for an equity position, in a sense.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I find the Hon. Member's vocabulary somewhat hysterical. This is not a failing bank.

Mr. Riis: It has already failed.

Mrs. McDougall: The Bank is not failing. It is not failing because it has had a very strong support package from the private sector, from the province and from the Government of Canada. This Bank is a solvent bank.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make to the Minister is that we are in the House today at Committee of the Whole stage of a Bill that is meant to bail out a bank. Regardless of the title, we are bailing out the Canadian Commercial Bank. The reason we are doing this is that it had failed. Its stocks had crashed on the stock market. People were very concerned about its future. It is perfectly clear that if this bail-out package had not been assembled, that bank would not be in existence. I realize that by doing this we will rescue what had been a failed bank. It is not going to be failed after this package is stickhandled through its various jurisdictions.

Why is this Bill necessary if this bank was, in the past, in a healthy, solvent situation? Why is this bail-out situation to the tune of almost a quarter billion dollars—$225 million—necessary if the bank was in good health?

Mrs. McDougall: I am trying to indicate to the Canadian public in a responsible way, unlike the Hon. Member, that we came to Canadians and to the House and presented a problem which had arisen, together with a solution to that problem. If he wants to make irresponsible statements about failing institutions, they can all come crashing down around our heads. The point is that there was a problem and a resolution of that problem. Therefore the Bank is not failing. Could we please make that very clear?

Mr. Riis: It had failed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, let me return to the reasons for the failure of the Bank. Following some strong advice from the Inspector General of Banks, Canadian Commercial Bank was told to diversify in 1981, I believe. It diversified with the purchase of Westlands in the United States. They also opened offices in Montreal, Toronto and Halifax.

To my knowledge, unfortunately Westlands was in the same business as the Canadian Commercial Bank. The Minister has told us that it was in the real estate business but my research indicates that it was involved in financing oil rigs and that, because of the OPEC prices and the world situation, the oil rigs were selling quite cheaply on the market. I see the Minister of Transport laughing.

Mr. Mazankowski: You started it all.

Miss Nicholson: In California?

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister of Transport knows that they do not have a National Energy Program in California.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why did they go south in the first place? You drove them out.

• (1240)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Transport said we drove them out. I am asking questions to get information. If the Minister of Transport wants the floor, he can ask the Minister questions and make his points then.

Mr. Mazankowski: You should ask intelligent questions to begin with.

Mr. Gauthier: If the Bank moved out of Canada to go to California to finance oil rigs, which is different from the answer given a moment ago to my colleague—the Minister said the Bank was going into real estate,—if the oil rigs were going at a tenth of their value in California and this Canadian Commercial Bank was indeed trying to diversify, why did it go into the oil business in California? Why did the Bank go, as the Minister implied in her answers a minute ago, into real estate? I am perplexed by these two avenues.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the Bank moved into California with an agency. It purchased a 40 per cent interest in the Westlands Bank. The Westlands Bank was involved in real estate. The agency was involved with oil rigs. I am trying to separate out a very complicated corporate structure.

The Westlands Bank went through some difficulties with its real estate. There appears, as I understand it, more stability. The Westlands Bank was also involved with computer software. There was an effort to diversify in other areas, and it went through a difficult period. The softwave end is now consolidated into the Canadian Commercial Bank, is a profitable operation and over time will be contributing to the consolidated earnings of the Bank.

The agency, on the other hand, was involved with these oil rig loans. Those have become a problem really very recently. I want to read from something that appeared in The New York Times describing what had happened in a similar market in Texas. I shall give the Hon. Member the clipping and it will provide an idea of what has happened over the last three months and why this appeared to come out of nowhere. This article is headed "Oil Industry's bad cold. Starts to give explorers, drillers, shippers, and banks pneumonia. Exploration and production are the heart of the industry. But the pulse is weakening". In another area of the article it says: "2,175 drilling rigs are operating in U.S., down 612 from December", and I think it is "299 from last February".

The problem really came out of nowhere. There is another line in this article which will indicate how recently this had bubbled up from underneath.

Mr. Gauthier: I appreciate the answer, Mr. Chairman. It was given in an informative manner and I thank the Minister for that. I thought the OPEC price breakdown, the international market being what it was, had had a direct effect on oil exploration in California and I do think there is merit to that argument.

The Minister will remember, I think it was yesterday morning when she made her statement, when one of our Members asked her about the warrants that were going to be issued by the Canadian Commercial Bank. He asked her, if my memory serves me correctly, whether it was not illegal for a bank to own shares in another bank. Warrants being whatever price they are—25 cents is the price they are paying for these—can the Minister tell us today if she has looked into this as she said she would yesterday? Could she give us the assurance that there is no illegality here of seven Canadian banks owning warrants in a Canadian bank, and can she reassure me that it is indeed legal?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, let me deal with both parts of the Hon. Member's question. The Hon. Member had two paragraphs in his question and so I shall give him a two-paragraph answer. One was the declining oil prices which did lead to triggering the need to write down oil rigging equipment. I agree with that. Obviously if oil prices were going through the roof, people would be looking for oil like crazy.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister of Transport doesn't, but you do.

Mrs. McDougall: In terms of the warrants, they are an option to purchase. They are not a purchase in themselves. Warrants normally have a trading value, so the banks will not own stock in another bank unless they exercise the warrants, which under the Act they will not do. They will sell the warrants.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, is there a ten-year limit on the warrants which they have to exercise before the warrants expire?

Mr. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, it is ten years following the payback of $255 million. That is what triggers the warrants.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I have some questions for the Minister of State for Finance. Unfortunately, I was outside the House at the beginning of the Committee and I apologize if some of the questions have already been placed.

I would like to know the number of depositors the Bank had as of the moment on March 14 when the Bank came to the Government to tell the Government about its problems, problems I suggest the Government should have known about.

Second, I want to know about the size of the deposits. In particular, how many of them would have been covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation under other circumstances and how many would not have been?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give a precise figure on the number of depositors. There were a very large number. I do not think I could give an answer with any precision. I can tell the Hon. Member that there were total deposits of about $2.8 billion, and $400 million were covered by deposit insurance.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, could the Minister repeat that answer?

Mrs. McDougall: There are approximately $2.8 billion in deposits and approximately $400 million were covered by deposit insurance, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, with the utmost respect to the Minister. I would have thought this would be the kind of information she would have had readily available for discussion in Committee of the Whole. Perhaps her officials could get it and present it to her before Committee of the Whole ends.

If I could ask another question, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how many loans the Bank had on its books as at March 14, first in Canada, and second in the United States. Could she give us some breakdown in size? For example, how many were under $20,000, how many were under $50,000, how many were under $100,000 and how many were under $500,000?

Mrs. McDougall: I can certainly ask my officials to check this, Mr. Chairman. We are dealing with very large numbers. Some will be very small and some will be bigger. I will be happy to provide them today if I possibly can. If not, perhaps we could provide that when the inquiry comes before the Finance Committee of the House. We will do our best to get it today.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, we have a very important piece of legislation before us. I would have thought the kind of information I am seeking would have obviously been the kind the Minister would have expected the House to have before it in order to make a decision on this Bill.

If I can move on to another area, the Bill says that moneys are to be appropriated for this bail-out for the Canadian Commercial Bank from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Could the Minister tell us whether the moneys in question are to come from an increase in the Government's deficit or from a reallocation created by the cancellation or reduction of other existing government programs? If it is the latter, which ones?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we are asking the House for new money today; we are asking for authority to raise new money.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): This means that the Government will be adding to the deficit. I see that it is all right to add to the deficit in rescuing this Bank but that it is not all right to do so when it comes to helping Domtar in Windsor, Quebec, to expand and create jobs.

I should like to ask another question and then I will be happy to yield the floor to other members of the committee. If the warrants, about which the Minister has been talking, are exercised, what will be the effect on the value of the shares of the bank already issued?

Mrs. McDougall: The dilution of the existing equity will be about 75 per cent. In terms of what will be the value, it will depend upon the Bank's future profitability and how that is regarded by people who are buying and selling the stock. I could not give him an answer on that.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): In view of the fact that the Minister said there would be a dilution of 75 per cent of the existing shares, what steps will the Government take to prevent this dilution from harming the investment in employee pension funds, representing thousands of employees in all parts of the country? What will the Government do to prevent damage to these funds or some possible risk to the base which these pension funds are supposed to represent?

Mrs. McDougall: Most of the pension funds represented among the shareholders are defined benefit plans whereby they are both employee and employer contributions. However, as the Hon. Member knows, as defined benefit plans the employer is obligated to ensure that the defined benefits are paid at the time of retirement. There will be no negative impact on the payment to either current retirees or future retirees.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, understandably the Minister objected to the use of the world "failing" in terms of the Bank. Indeed, the Bank is now in very good shape, having had a large infusion of new moneys.

I want to question the use of taxpayers' money in this bail-out. Regional banks in Canada have not had a conspicuous record of success but in the past, when it has been necessary to rescue a regional bank, it has been done by the banking authorities. Indeed Canada's banks have a most enviable reputation. In this country we do not have banks fail, of which we can all be very proud. In the past the banks themselves have acted and used their own money to ensure that their good reputation was maintained.

In this case we have the banks contributing but we also have large requirements for tax dollars. Would the Minister care to comment on the reports which are being carried in the newspapers that we are in this situation because the Government of Alberta wanted control to remain in Alberta and would not allow "eastern banks" to rescue them?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I think that was a somewhat misleading report. There have been mergers in the past. We looked at a number of possibilities and we came up with what we felt was the most attractive solution for everyone. If a bank gets into trouble and gets merged into one of the big five banks, we could end up with no regional banks. I am not sure that is where we want to go. I think we would like to have some regional banks as long as they are viable. Maybe that requires our help. It required the help of the province. The province indicated its commitment. We indicated that we felt it was responsible for the Government to be involved. It is in all our interests.

In connection with some of the things that have been going on in the States, simply the rumour of potential trouble in the Texas banking system triggered a move in the U.S. dollar. It is not only in the interests of Toronto or Calgary, it is in our interest to indicate to Canadians and to the world that we have faith in the system and in this Bank. We want to ensure that there is a place in Canada for regional banks, provided they are viable, solvent and contributing to local businesses in an economic way.

Miss Nicholson: We all fully support the position that confidence is important and that it is important to move quickly. However, I have not had a clear answer to my question as to why taxpayers' dollars have to be used or the one as to why the banks, as they have done in the past, did not assume responsibility for protecting their very excellent reputation.

The total assets of this particular bank are less than 1 per cent of the assets of big banks. Is the Minister saying that the policy of the Government is that small regional banks are so important ideologically or philosophically that we put taxpayers' money into them rather than ask the banks to come to their aid when they are very well able to do so without taking taxpayers' money?

Mrs. McDougall: I think the banks did come to the aid of this bank. After all, as a group they are putting in $60 million and through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is funded by financial institutions, there is another $75 million. I think they have indicated very strong support for the Bank and are committed to helping to support the system. There is a partnership which I believe is perfectly valid in, first, indicating confidence in the system and, second, in looking at a regional institution.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I seek two or three points of clarification from the Hon. Minister. In the letter the Minister wrote to my Leader, a copy of which was sent to my House Leader, she said that the undertaking by respective Governments to purchase the subordinated debt of the CCB would cost the Canadian Government $13 million. Could she elaborate on that? I do not understand to what that particular paragraph refers.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there is within the capital structure or framework of this Bank subordinated debentures. The subordinated debentures carry interest. The three levels of Government have purchased those debentures and they will be repaid. We then become creditors of the Bank at that level, in addition to the $60 million.

Mr. Riis: The Minister knows that the last clause in the Bill refers to $75 million to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. We in the House consistently refer to the $60 million which it will cost Canadian taxpayers, yet the Bill indicates $75 million. Could the Minister explain the difference between those two figures?

Mrs. McDougall: The amount referred to includes the $60 million in the support package and the $13 million worth of debentures.

Mr. Riis: I have another couple of questions, and then I will turn the floor over to some of my colleagues.

• (1300)

With regard to this whole business of a bank that in the past got itself into some financial difficulty and is now going to be okay, this is certainly a reflection on the Board of Directors and the management of the Bank to a certain extent, perhaps to a large extent. Since we are asking in this Bill for the taxpayers of Canada to come up with $75 million to assist this Bank and presumably launch it in a new and successful direction, can the Minister explain what has happened to the people who were responsible for causing the situation and in fact approved imprudent loans and approved a financial program that resulted in the Bank getting into severe financial difficulty? What has happened to the senior management? What has happened to the Board of Directors? Does the Minister have any observations on reports that a number of senior officials of the Bank sold stocks of the Bank prior to this particular item becoming public information, presumably at least saving their own necks in terms of stocks they held?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, in terms of the management of the Bank, as far as I and my officials are aware, and my judgment at this stage, the chief executive officer acted very responsibly in coming to us when he did with the difficulty. The attempts at diversification across Canada and into California were essentially responsible moves. The board has acted in a responsible way, as has management. We would indeed seek representation on the Board of Directors of the Bank. The Inspector General will have two people monitoring the problem loans. We would hope to add to the Board of Directors. If indeed we find it to be different than our impression is now, we will take the appropriate action.

There have been a number of changes in the management since the departure of Howard Eaton and there have been moves to strengthen both the board and management since that time. Unfortunately, the stronger management and the stronger board came at a time when the situation was becoming more difficult. Our understanding is that they have acted responsibly.

I am obviously most disappointed to find out today that one executive of the Bank did indeed sell his preferred shares. There was no indication to the management of the Bank at that stage of the extent of the difficulty. It would have been clear to anyone who read the annual report that the deferred dividend was not in fact covered by earnings. I am extraordinarily disappointed to see that and we will be looking into it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, the Minister said that the amount to be appropriated under this Bill is to cover the $60 million as part of the main rescue package and $13 million to purchase subordinated debentures. That comes to $73 million and the amount requested in the Bill is $75 million. Can she tell us what the other $2 million will be used for?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, what will be spent will be no more than is necessary. There is the possibility of some accrued interest that would have to be covered on debentures over and above the $13 million.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I wish to turn briefly to another matter. With respect to the loans in the oil sector in California that went bad, can the Minister tell me when they were made? In particular, how many were made after the visit by the Inspector General of Banks to the Minister on September 14?

Mrs. McDougall: I am not quite clear, Mr. Chairman. There was no visit on September 14. Is the Hon. Member referring to the letter from the Inspector General of September 24 last? The letter was as a result of the Inspector General's annual review which he undertakes for all banks under his jurisdiction. Probably many of the oil service loans would be rolled over. They would be financing rigs once the industry started to face some difficulties. As the oil business declined, that is when it would have shown up.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I am asking these questions to try and determine—and I would have hoped the Minister would have had this breakdown—how many of these problem loans were already on the books in a way that they should have been brought to the attention of or discovered by the Inspector General of Banks and his staff, and how many were made after September for the first time.

With respect to the latter category of loans, I would like to know what changes, if any, had been made in the executive officers of the Bank who were in place from September to March 14 as well as in the board of directors which was in place from September to March 14. If no changes have been made, what changes are contemplated?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Board of Directors is the same now as it was on September 24. September 24 was a letter from the Inspector General to the Minister indicating that the Bank was facing some difficulties. The situation at that time, if I remember, going through the annual report and the quarterly financial statements, was that the Bank was profitable in the first and third quarters of its last fiscal year which ended March 31. Somehow it is written in stone that that is when the bank year ends. In the second and fourth quarters, it was not profitable. It was marginally profitable in the first quarter of the current fiscal year. Therefore, it has been dealing with an unstable situation.

There was no evidence that the board or the management was acting in an inappropriate way. Along with its efforts to expand their business base, either geographically or into other industries, there was also a retrenching within the energy sector. I think these were normal business decisions, faced with a difficult situation.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to try and understand this question of warrants. There is a participation agreement that will be drafted. There are participation certificates that are going to be issued. I take it that this is synonymous with the warrants we are talking about. In the memorandum of intent, we read at page 5:

> The rights or warrants shall expire ten years after the day that CCB has paid to the Support Group an amount of money equal to the full amount paid by the Support Group for their Participation Certificates.

The sentence following surprises me:

> It is recognized that the rights provided for in this paragraph may not be granted under present legislation.

Can the Minister explain that to me?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I should have the agreement here somewhere, I apologize. This was a degree of protection asked for by the banks. Our lawyers have satisfied us, and we have been dealing not only with Department of Finance lawyers but with Tory and Tory in Toronto—

An Hon. Member: That's understandable.

Mrs. McDougall: —who assure us that this is legal at the moment. We are assured on that point. As this was being drawn up, this was essentially a comfort clause for the participants.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister was asked a few minutes ago by my colleague from Windsor West if she had the list of loans and depositors. In that same agreement, it states that the schedule of assets will be printed soon. I wonder if she could tell us what the schedule of assets is and when can we expect the schedule to be made public?

• (1310)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the schedule refers to the problem loans. It involves clients of the Bank and there are certain sensitivities in making that list available. I am prepared to discuss it, but I would have some difficulty in making it public. Certainly I could provide a breakdown of the numbers of the loans in particular categories. I have some of that in broad strokes at the moment, but I do not have a complete and individual list. The support group will be participating in that schedule of assets.

Canadian Commercial Bank

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, the Minister has suggested that giving the full details of the problem loans—the amounts, the names of the borrowers and so on—may create a problem. I presume she is referring to the secrecy provisions of the Bank Act. I would like to know whether any of that information would otherwise be available under U.S. law—the U.S. securities law, the U.S. banking law or the access to information law. If that is the case, I trust that the Minister will not hide behind our law in not disclosing that information.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to explore that. Our understanding is that in both countries common law protects the public under those circumstances. Indeed, if there is a difficulty with that we will have further discussions on it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to the matter of problem loans. There is something about the whole aspect of problem loans in the United States oil sector which I find puzzling. The Government has said over and over again that the national energy policy created difficulties for the oil and gas sector in Canada. Yet the loans which got the company into difficulty were loans that were made to the oil sector in the United States. As far as I know, the United States does not have a national energy policy. In fact, when the Government was in opposition it always pointed to the American policy on energy as a model which we should follow. Can she explain how it was that the loans which tipped the balance and precipitated this very unusual bail-out situation were in the oil sector of the United States?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the financial institutions within Canada, if we look at any economic statistics we will see that western Canada has faced a considerable amount of difficulty over the last three or four years. That difficulty resulted in part because investment capital left the country as the energy business declined. As well, some Canadian capital left. That situation was not unique to western Canada, but it was certainly endemic there, and some of the later prosperity in the oil industry in the United States was not shared in western Canada.

I do not think I have ever stated that the fact oil prices are now declining, and drilling activity in California is on the decline, had anything to do with the national energy policy. The point is, there was a period when the industry was profitable and the United States was benefiting but our industry was not.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, the Minister has made my point, which is that there can be problems in the oil sector quite apart from the national energy policy. That was proven by what happened in the United States. The argument of her Party is that outside Government and inside Government there is some type of ongoing nirvana in the energy sector in the United States because it did not and does not have a national energy program. Yet the loans which got this Bank into trouble were loans made to the oil sector in the United States.

In the Minister's press release of March 25, she indicated that if those loans had been made to the oil sector in a country where there was no equivalent national energy policy and had not gone bad, we would be doing something else today. The French version of her press release of March 25 reads as follows:

[Translation]

The support program is designed to provide the Canadian Commercial Bank with enough funds to maintain its solvency, following a recent and serious deterioration in its loan portfolio in the United States.

[English]

It was explained that this was particularly in reference to loans in the oil sector in the United States. I want to put on the record that the type of energy policy which is followed by the United States has certainly not prevented a decline in that sector which led to the loans made by the Canadian Commercial Bank going bad, and that in large part precipitated this bail-out situation.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, if the energy industry in Canada had participated in that more profitable time in the early 1980s after the national energy policy, which triggered an earlier decline in the oil industry in Canada than in the United States, then perhaps the Bank would have been stronger and have had the resources to absorb its other losses. I do not particularly want to carry on this argument all afternoon, but I would be happy to do so if the Hon. Member wants to pursue it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I have just begun to focus on this particular question. Frankly, I am appalled at what the Government of Canada is doing in terms of rushing in to rescue this particular private enterprise, particularly in view of the many statements which were made by members of the Conservative Party before they assumed government. When Conservative Members were in opposition, they criticized the bail-out of losers in other sectors, particularly in the industrial sector. I am also appalled at the double standard which is being applied here.

Perhaps I could begin by asking the Minister whether any similar type of terms, in terms of a rescue, will be made available to any western Canadian companies which were put into bankruptcy by the action of the Canadian Commercial Bank in the last two or three years by calling in its loans.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I have tried to explain to the House that this solution was arrived at because, in the judgment of knowledgeable people—including the Governor of the Bank of Canada, a group of six chartered banks, the Inspector General and the Province of Alberta—the Bank would have been a viable operation if the capital was provided to resolve its loans problems. I have looked at the situation and I believe we came up with a solution which was in the interests of the small business community of western Canada. If we had liquidated the Bank, those people would be in enormous difficulty today. I believe we looked at the operation in a fairly hard-headed way and decided that it was in the interests of all to participate, along with the banks and the two provinces.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I have to say that hard-headed looks awfully soft-headed to me. I am sure that any small business which faced bankruptcy or had its loans called could have been rescued if a deal such as this had been brought in and money was offered which was equivalent to twice the equity which was shown by that particular entity a few months before.

● (1320)

I would like to put on the record that the equity for the Canadian Commercial Bank, which it showed in its 1984 annual report, was in the order of $110 million, or $115 million in terms of capital and attained surplus. So the money which is being brought in, which is tantamount to equity because of the terms of repayment—which are on a never-never basis—is equal to more than double the equity of the Bank. Sure, we can rescue it on that basis but that does not suggest to me that it is a particularly good deal.

I return to my question: What arrangements are being made in order to provide similar terms to any western Canadian small business which was forced to go into receivership, bankruptcy or forced to close by having its loans called by the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we have undertaken to look after the borrowers and the depositors of this Bank. The Bank is keeping them on its books because they are viable operations. If business decisions have been taken around other institutions, I have not made them, and in the judgment of the people who are lending the money to the public, these decisions are viable.

What the Hon. Member is assuming is that the Bank should have kept on its books all of the bad loans, in which case it would be even worse off today.

Mr. Cassidy: I am suggesting there is a double standard. The Minister acknowledges that there was no assistance provided by the Government of Canada, by the other chartered banks or by the Governments of Alberta and British Columbia in the case of borrowers from the Canadian Commercial Bank who, for various reasons, were forced into bankruptcy, had to cease business or had their loans called by this particular bank over the last two or three years. It's a double standard when a bank get rescued and its customers do not. It's a double standard where if you are big enough the current Government of Canada is prepared to bail you out, but if you are a little guy or gal, you are not going to get bailed out. Will the Minister not acknowledge that there is a double standard there?

Mrs. McDougall: I will not acknowledge that there is a double standard.

Mr. Cassidy: Then the Minister is wrong in failing to acknowledge that, Mr. Chairman.

I would like to go into the terms of this financial assistance and then ask the Minister if she can give us in present value terms—her officials can begin to work on this now—what the Government of Canada and the CDIC portion of the rescue package is going to be. She has acknowledged that the take-over of the subordinated debentures is going to cost the Government $13 million. Since that is at the very end of the queue in terms of any potential repayment or commencement of interest payments, that is $13 million which is a net cost to the people of Canada and which effectively we will never get back.

According to the Memorandum of Intent which was given to my Leader yesterday, the money which has been given to the Bank is not generally for support of all of its obligations. It is specifically related to $544 million of problem loans which have an estimated realizeable value of $289 million. The difference between those two figures is $255 million. That is the money which is being advanced by the support group, including the CDIC and the Government of Canada.

It is my understanding that at least a substantial portion of those problem loans are in fact in the United States. What the devil a regional bank is doing in California, when it's based in Alberta, is beyond me. The terms of payments are: heads, the bank wins, and tails, the Government of Canada and the other support group members lose. Specifically, if any payments on any loan in the portfolio are made, those payments will be applied not to the Government of Canada but to the CCB. I am told the written down portion has in fact been paid up. This is in the agreement. In other words, if there is a $5 million loan which has been written down to $2.5 million, and the borrower repays $1 million, the Government of Canada does not get a nickel back. That entire $1 million goes to the CCB, and the next $1 million goes to the CCB.

I would record for Hansard, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister is looking extremely puzzled as though she does not realize that the Bank wins—

Mrs. McDougall: I am concentrating on what you are saying. Don't say things like that. Retract it, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the Minister states that she is concentrating. I say that she looks puzzled to hear exactly what this means spelled out in terms that ordinary people can in fact understand. That is what I think we have to look at. While my Party has agreed that we will facilitate the passage of this Bill, I want to say that as one Member of Parliament I think it is an appallingly bad deal for the people of Canada. I think it is an appallingly bad message to give to all of those farmers, mortgage holders and other people who have had their lives destroyed by the banks over the course of the last few years.

Mr. Dick: Speak up, we can't hear you.

Mr. Cassidy: The banks have made huge profits on the backs of Canadians and now what happens is that we come along and spend $60 million or $73 million—goodness knows how much money—in order to bail out one particular bank.

No heads are being made to roll. That particular bank executive who profiteered by selling his preferred shares when he could see that the handwriting was on the wall for the Bank is not being forced to resign. The Minister has no sense of anger at what was being done. Whether or not the ultimate decision was made to rescue the Bank, it would be at least good to see some anger coming from the other side, Mr. Chairman, to indicate that the Government of Canada does not like the people of Canada to be held up to ransom the way this is occurring in this particular case.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I can shout just as loudly as the Hon. Member.

I am trying to carry on a reasonable and rational discussion around what we are trying to do. I am trying to be as open as I possibly can with Hon. Members of this House. I do not appreciate the tone taken by the Hon. Member opposite who has decided to use his anger for dramatic purposes. I am attempting to do something for the people of this country and I do not hear a whole lot of support coming from the Hon. Member personally around the kinds of things we are attempting to do for the small borrower in Alberta. I would like to bring this discussion to a close and get on with providing information.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the Minister in a calm way that I have been dealing for the last couple of days with the case of a small business person who has a contract with a Crown Corporation—which I will not mention—of the Government of Canada. That Crown Corporation has determined to drive that small business person out of business. He may in fact have to go into receivership. I hope not. My efforts to intervene and try to get the Crown Corporation to at least extend the contract in a reasonable way have failed. The Crown Corporation states by way of a reason that it is under pressure to do better and not to contribute to the deficit. So one small business person, with five or six jobs depending on his particular business, is being put to the wall and in fact will probably close effective this afternoon.

If I am angry, Mr. Chairman, it is because there seems to be such a difference in the treatment of the rich and powerful in this country compared to the little guy and gal. I speak of that because I happened to have spent two or three hours this week on that particular case. I know the Minister has worked long and hard and I appreciate her sincerity with respect to her efforts to rescue this particular corporation. However, when I mention the double standard, I am saying that certainly the Government of Canada did not intervene on behalf of a lot of small business people in the Province of Alberta who faced, as we all know, very difficult times. It has been really tough over the last two or three years. But the Government of Canada has not intervened.

All of the banks, including the private banks which are part of the support group, have in fact forced people to the wall and beyond. As the Minister well knows from her contact with western Canada, mortgage holders and home owners have had to walk away from their homes and drop the keys into the mail slot of the nearest bank because they could not afford to continue. That kind of treatment has not provoked the Government of Canada—either the old one or the new—to act. When interest rates were up around 18 per cent or 19 per cent, the Government showed no mercy. But now mercy is shown in the case of this particular bank which, to put it mildly, has made a series of extremely unwise investments, particularly the extension of its regional mandate to go down into California.

I appreciate that the Minister wants to have some constructive comments. I will seek to make them. But it is difficult to do so in light of the agreement which has been entered into. As I stated before, any payments on any loan in the problem portfolio will first go to the CCB. Then any additional amounts to be paid will go to Canada, Alberta and the bank group in proportion to their participation. The CDIC is at the end of the queue.

In view of the fact that these are problem loans and any money which accrues as a result of those loans to the three prime members of the support group would accrue only if the loans returned more than the currently written-down value, I think I would be fair in suggesting to the Minister that the chances of repayment to the Government of Canada under Clause 3(a) would be limited and probably negligible. Is that fair?

Mrs. McDougall: Our loans are repaid out of the profits of the Bank on the good loans, so that we are getting a participation from their good loans by getting 50 per cent of their pre-tax earnings. We tried to negotiate the deal in such a way that the Bank would have the capital to get on with its responsibilities as a bank, that we would take 50 per cent of earnings and share the proceeds on the problem loans.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I would point out to the Minister that the Bank's pre-tax earnings back in 1984 amounted to $804,000. If the Government of Canada and the other members of the support group were to be repaid out of those pre-tax earnings, it would take approximately 62.5 years before the people of Canada were repaid. I recognize that a good portion of the problem loans may yield some revenues, but all we are doing with the $250 million is basically subsidizing the Bank for those portions of the problem loans which it does not now expect to be repaid. Therefore, the $225 million package cannot be expected to contribute appreciably to the pre-tax earnings of the Canadian Commercial Bank; is that correct?

Mrs. McDougall: The profitability of the Bank will depend on a number of things, First, I think there will be a better recovery within the Bank's markets. Secondly, it has its bad loans off the books. Thirdly, it has an injection of $250 million in cash on which it will earn a return, so that will contribute to its profits. So we would expect the Bank's profitability to improve quite materially.

Mr. Cassidy: I am not quite sure if I understand that because the Bank is going to have to record in its statements a write-down of approximately $255 million. That will mean that it may well record a net loss of a very substantial amount of money. I would suggest that, as a consequence of that, there is not likely to be an increase in net profit.

Perhaps the Minister could indicate to us for the fiscal year 1984-85 and the fiscal year 1985-86 what she now expects the new pre-tax income of the Bank will be.

Mrs. McDougall: Payment to the support group we expect will begin in fiscal 1986. In fiscal 1985 we are not looking for the Bank to be profitable. We are looking for it to be profitable in 1986, with a payment of approximately $6.2 million. Those payments should increase after that to $16.4 million in 1987, $17 million in 1988, and $18.8 million in 1989, with payments of around $19 million thereafter. Should the economic situation improve, we would expect a better performance than that.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, are these the amounts of profit or the amounts that the support group would expect as repayment?

Mrs. McDougall: The support group.

Mr. Cassidy: Therefore, since that is 50 per cent of pre-tax profit, she is saying that a bank which made $6 million in 1983 and $800,000 in 1984 will expect $12 million profit in 1986, $32 million in 1987, $34 million in 1988, $38 million in 1989, and $38 million per annum thereafter; is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, this Bank, in terms of its profitability and return on assets during the 1970s, indicates that this kind of return over the next few years is not unrealistic. Obviously we are dealing with forecasts and projections, but given the kinds of returns the Bank was able to earn on a very small asset base in the late 1970s, and looking ahead, we see no reason to believe that the Bank cannot return to the kind of profitability that is appropriate.

Mr. Cassidy: According to the terms of the agreement it is a condition that the CCB shall not make any dividend or other payments on its common or preferred, or redeem any shares until all participants have been repaid in full. As I understand it, that would mean that effectively the CCB would not be able to issue fresh equity until the support group has been repaid or substantially repaid, since it is very unlikely that new equity would flow to the market if it was not dividend-paying equity.

Am I correct, therefore, that for a substantial number of years in the future the CCB will not be able to expand its capital base because it will not be able to issue fresh equity?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the Bank will be retaining 50 per cent of its earnings for reinvestment in the Bank. As it becomes profitable, that will become a significant source of capital for the Bank.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister's figures would indicate a stable rate of profit, not a growing rate of profit. I am suggesting that I think there is an awful lot more uncertainty in this than perhaps she is indicating.

Could she say in how many years, based on this very optimistic forecast, it is anticipated that the Government of Canada would have its $60 million returned, and in further years is it expected that the $13 million in subordinated debentures would be recoverable by the Government of Canada?

Mrs. McDougall: Obviously when something is being paid out of earnings it is very difficult to be precise about when it could be returned. It could be as long as 15 years. We are not unrealistic about the outlook and I would not want to mislead the House that we expect all this back in five years. But we believe we have made a reasonable long-term arrangement and it is not out of line with other debt arrangements that one would make in the private sector as a return.

Mr. Cassidy: I pointed out before that such arrangements are not available to ordinary small businesses and people who have been driven under in the past few years.

Perhaps the Minister could say for the current fiscal year the cost of forgone interest on the Government of Canada's contribution. As well, the CDIC contribution will amount to about $13 million or $14 million. Perhaps she could tell us what the value today would be of all the forgone interest which the Government of Canada is going to contribute to this particular deal. In other words, if you had to buy out this package today, what is it worth?

Mrs. McDougall: That would depend on all sorts of assumptions around the present value, term of repayment and interest rates, as the Hon. Member knows. I might also point out that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is funded by member institutions. That is not in any way a direct contribution from the Government of Canada.

• (1340)

Mr. Cassidy: Although the CDIC is funded by member institutions, it is ultimately funded by me, the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, the Member for Trinity, and all the other citizens of Canada as customers of the Canadian chartered banks and the trust companies which are members of the CDIC. As a member of the Ontario Legislature I was involved in the Crown Trust affair. Appalling bad supervision of financial institutions led to that situation. As the Minister knows, there was some involvement with the CCB as well.

Bearing in mind that assumptions must be made, could the Minister let us have the figures which have been computed by her officials as to what the current dollar value of this particular rescue effort is? How much is it costing the people of Canada in terms of actual spending?

Mrs. McDougall: We are working on that and will get it to the Hon. Member as soon as we have it.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the Minister undertake that we could have that figure in the next half-hour? I think it is germane to this particular debate and to our discussion on third reading.

My own reckoning is that between the CDIC and the Government of Canada, not counting the banks and the Government of Alberta, we are looking at a present dollar cost, on the assumptions made by the Minister, of $45 million to $60 million in actual cash out the door in order to save this particular bank. I also think that the Minister's calculations are extremely optimistic on the pay-back on the $250 million. I therefore suggest that that is quite likely an underestimate and $70 million to $90 million may actually be paid out by the people of Canada to keep this Bank alive.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we will have the information as soon as it is available. I am assuming that in the Hon. Member's present value calculations he also imputed a value for the warrants.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister a question about the income tax treatment. Paragraph 9 on page 6 of the Memorandum of Intent states:

> Members of the Bank Group have entered into this arrangement on the understanding that they will be entitled to deduct for income tax purposes, to the extent that it is adjudged that repayment is doubtful, the amounts paid by them for their Participation Certificates. Canada assures the Banks that such deductions for purposes of Section 26 of the Income Tax Act will be deemed to be within the reasonable requirements of the Banks.

As I understand it, Section 26 in general empowers the Minister of Finance to determine what amount is appropriate for banks to deduct as bad debts. Could the Minister explain exactly what follows from this paragraph? As I read it, from the memo of agreement, the banks themselves will decide how much of what they paid will be written off. I have never heard of any taxpayer being allowed that kind of discretion. Doubtless the Minister has in mind to put some limits and safeguards on this. I would appreciate knowing what they are.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, what the banks are essentially buying for the $60 million are problem loans. Within the Bank Act they are allowed to write down problem loans in the normal way. There are pre-tax loan loss provisions. This is once again sort of a comfort statement to indicate that they are not just buying a piece of paper, they are buying loan losses. The way they are written off will be worked out with the auditors of the Bank in keeping with the Bank Act, and subsequently approved by the Inspector General, if I am right. This is normal bank accounting around loan losses. Those losses are offset if there is a repayment on the loans. That is what is set out in Section 26.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a couple of points for clarification. I must be quite honest, Mr. Chairman, and say that I do not know all that much about the Canadian banking system. I would first like to make reference to the Minister's change of mood during her presentation a few moments ago. It was the first time that I have ever seen the Minister depart from her normal composure. I must say that from time to time it would perhaps be advisable for the Minister to do so. I am sure that we will not see it happen again. One must note that it was the New Democratic Party and the Progressive Conservative Party that were engaged in that exchange and that the Liberals showed their restrained, quiet determination as usual.

What did this Bank do in Canada that was different from what the other banks did? The Minister has said, if I remember her words correctly, that the financial condition of the Bank was determined by a down-swing in the economy and real estate values. When one looks at the net annual income in the financial statement of the Bank that we are talking about today, one sees an incredible drop in 1984. From 1980 to 1983 there did not appear to be any substantial drop. Other banks invest in real estate. Other banks invest in oil companies in Canada. What did this Bank do that was drastically different from what the other banks did?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind remarks about my normally rational behaviour. It is in light of his always rational behaviour, of course, that it is easy for me to carry on on this side of the House.

This Bank has served, in a very aggressive way, the middle and small business market in Alberta. In any competitive industry, which the financial services could certainly be classed as, there are always gaps to fill and specialties to be carved out. As I indicated earlier, we are trying to work on some detailed figures with regard to the service of this Bank to the middle and small business market. This Bank concentrated on the small and medium-sized business market. It was locally managed. It was aggressive in finding financial solutions to serve the customers' needs. It was fast and decisive and understood local economic conditions. It essentially marketed itself as a regional bank with an understanding of regional circumstances. I think that was appropriate and it served that market extraordinarily well through the 1970s until it had some problems.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I do not like to repeat my question. The answer given by the Minister is, of course, a very good answer, and I would have to say that every bank should do that. Every bank certainly has a responsibility toward the establishment of new business. Every bank looks at those business enterprises on a factual basis. They do not make out-of-line projections on income. They certainly do not take collateral at something other than face value.

I still do not comprehend what this Bank did differently from the other banks. Is the Minister saying that this Bank provided a function that the other banks did not provide? Is the Minister saying that the Bank provided loans to customers that the other banks did not or would not provide?

Mrs. McDougall: I am saying, Mr. Chairman, that it added to the capital base that was available to businesses in western Canada in a very particular way. The other banks and financial institutions are obviously serving this market as well. Financial institutions have specialties and they bring capital into the system. This Bank brought capital into that middle market system that would not have been there had it not been there. It raised the capital, then loaned it to business.

• (1350)

Mr. Baker: I am afraid if I keep pursuing this question the Minister might get angry. I will leave that for a moment.

The other area where the Bank got into trouble was with its investment in the United States. What were the actual or projected losses in the U.S. portfolio, as a percentage? Does the Minister have an exact figure of the projected losses of the Bank in the U.S. portfolio?

Mrs. McDougall: The problem loans in that sector amounted to $115 million. The total write-offs would have amounted to $85 million. I believe that would be 4 per cent of their over-all portfolio. However, it was also equivalent to their equity base.

Mr. Baker: That is incredible. Then roughly 80 per cent is a write-off, or 80 per cent in the total portfolio. Was it just loaning money for those things indicated by the Minister, that is, for oil exploration? How is it possible to lose 80 per cent of the total amount of money loaned out?

Mrs. McDougall: If these loans were against something like oil rigs or related equipment—which I am sure the Hon. Member knows something about—and those rigs are working and under contract, earning a return, they are worth 100 cents on the dollar. If the oil drilling business falls apart, those rigs are not working and are not worth very much. It is very easy to have that happen.

Let me go back to the quotation I gave earlier. Approximately 2,175 drilling rigs are operating in the United States, which is down 612 from December and down 299 from last February. Four hundred more rigs could be idle by the spring. A rig that is not working is not worth a lot.

Mr. Baker: The Conservative Members keep talking about the national energy policy. That is very interesting, when we consider that this involves loaning money to a party in the United States that is not affected by a national energy policy and 80 per cent of the loan is lost.

In her introductory remarks to this legislation, the Minister talked about the magnificent future of this Bank in western Canada because of the Western Accord. In other words, when there is 80 per cent loss in the United States, she is saying in the same speech that we will have the same system in Canada and there is a great and glorious future in western Canada for this particular Bank.

Is the Minister concerned with the philosophy of the Government, as I see it? The subject matter of this Bill will be referred to the Finance Committee.

Miss Nicholson: No.

Mr. Baker: All right. It should be. That committee and the Government is considering the elimination of the Federal Business Development Bank. The Minister is shaking her head and perhaps that is something I will not get into.

How many people sold their shares? Did the Minister mention just one individual? Does she think that that person lost money or perhaps should have held on and made money?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, to our knowledge, this kind of information is filed through insider reports and this has come to our attention only this morning. We have only seen the one name. For all I know, he innocently sold his shares to make a downpayment on a house.

I am sufficiently concerned that I am looking into the matter. However, to my knowledge there is only one.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, the Minister stated that 70 per cent of the domestic loans made by the Bank in Canada were made in western Canada. I presume 30 per cent were made elsewhere. When the Bank expanded outside of western Canada in 1980, from 1980 to 1983 certainly the financial position of the Bank, as I recall, was not bad. Its net flow was rather good.

I presume most of the remaining 30 per cent would have been in the major centres of Halifax, Montreal and where the Bank established its business. With respect to the domestic loans, could the Minister comment as to whether or not there is any breakdown showing whether the loans given in eastern Canada and central Canada paid better than the loans given in western Canada?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the bulk of the losing loans were in western Canada. This was the area where the Bank had its largest customer support base. One assumes that the Bank and its customers try to stick together to work out a solution to problems.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the amounts that the federal Government must produce as part of this package and the request for $75 million, we come to a total of $73 million. What is the other $2 million being used for?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there is some accrued interest that is probably owing on the debentures. We have allowed for every contingency but we will not pay any money beyond what is in the package. We will not spend money that is not required.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I think this is a serious consideration. I appreciate that $60 million is required as part of the agreement. There is a requirement for another $13 million. With respect to this $2 million that will be used for contingencies if they arise, I believe we could be somewhat more precise than that. The officials are before us and I do not think it is unreasonable that we at least know where the $75 million will be spent before we fall over ourselves co-operating in the passage of this legislation. After all, our job here is to be accountable to the taxpayers of Canada. Where will this $2 million that is yet to be defined be spent? If the Minister cannot give us an answer now, perhaps she could do so later.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, our information at this stage is that this will amount to approximately $1.25 million. We cannot be more precise than that at the moment.

Mr. Riis: The Minister may have another comment to add to that. Whe can add it to her answer to my next question.

Will she outline what tax breaks are a part of this agreement? According to the Bank Act, the Minister has the right to do such things as put off taxes to be paid. Could she elaborate as best she can on how these tax breaks will be utilized?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I discussed the tax situation a little earlier. There are no tax breaks. The Bank Act provides for banks to be able to write off bad loans or to make some provision for bad loans. Since this package is essentially the purchase of troubled loans, then a formula worked out by the banks and their auditors will assess how those are best provided for. That is in Section 26 of the Bank Act and subject to the approval of the Inspector General. I might add that these loans would have been written off in any case if the CCB were in a position to continue. It would a have had the right under the Bank Act to write off these loans under the formula provided within the Bank Act.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to an old point and bring up an additional point. Let me go back to the Board of Directors and senior management. It seems to me that the Government is asking us to buy a little bit too much here today. Somebody has to accept the responsibility that things have not gone well for the Bank recently. It seems that asking Canadian taxpayers to come up with $75 million and the taxpayers of Alberta to come up with $60 million, yet keeping the same senior management in the Bank and the same Board of Directors, is rather inappropriate. I am a bit surprised that the Minister has not taken the position that we would want to see some substantial changes, see the leadership of the Bank both at the directorship level and some of the senior management officials changed.

The Minister said she would be adding two or three people, particularly from the Inspector General of Banks group, and that there had been some changes but basically it is the same old gang that is there. They have been there over the last number of months. I do not think it unreasonable for taxpayers to expect a new group or at least a substantial change in senior management. That is my first question.

My second question deals with Mr. Rosenberg.

Mrs. McDougall: Could I answer the first question first, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, what I indicated earlier in a discussion about the board and its management was that the Inspector General in the agreement will have two people monitoring the loan portfolio. That is separate from and in addition to anything that happens at the Board of Directors level. I have already indicated that changes in or additions to the Board of Directors are under active consideration.

Mr. Riis: I will have more to say about that a little later today, Mr. Chairman.

I want to go now to Mr. Rosenberg. The Minister has quoted the Bank Act and the Bank Act says that no one is able to hold more than 10 per cent in the Bank, and Mr. Rosenberg at one time held 33 per cent. Could the Minister of State for Finance explain how, in spite of the Bank Act, in spite of the Inspector General of Banks, a single individual was able to accumulate a 33 per cent holding in this Bank?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the interest of Mr. Rosenberg in this Bank was not 33 per cent. The Bank Act is clear on what defines 10 per cent and what defines associated companies. Mr. Rosenberg and some of his, if I may use the word, associates accumulated stock but not associated within the definition of the Bank Act. It was due to the quick action of the Superintendent of Insurance and the Inspector General of Banks that that was rolled back and out.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I see the clock and I realize there has been an agreement between the three Parties to hear the Hon. Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion make a statement on automobile quotas. I am prepared to stand down for the moment to allow him to make that statement with the understanding that we will be able to continue this line of questioning.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions between the parties. Today my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, indicated he would like to make a statement which would normally come under Statements by Ministers. I think you would find a disposition to revert to Statements by Ministers at this point in time by unanimous consent to allow the Minister to make a statement and to allow the usual responses and questions in accordance with the practices relating to Statements by Ministers.

If you were to conclude at this moment, report progress and revert to Routine Proceedings, we could then have the statement delivered by the Minister.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to revert to Statements by Ministers?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EXPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES TO CANADA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to thank Hon. Members for accommodating me. I understood earlier in the day that because of the pressure of House business it was going to be very difficult for me to make a statement and presumably receive a few questions afterwards.

If I may, this statement that I am making is really on my own behalf and on behalf of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) who is in Sault Ste. Marie today.

There have been, as we know, a number of so-called voluntary export restraint understandings with respect to Japanese automobile exports to Canada in the last four years. These understandings are often referred to as VERs. The current arrangement is scheduled to expire March 31, 1985. These VERs have been intended to provide an orderly development of Japanese exports while the Canadian automotive industry was undertaking substantial efforts to restructure and modernize its operations, and to preserve the large number of jobs in this sector. Canada has not imposed import quotas on Japanese passenger cars. They have been administered by the Japanese Government in co-operation with the Japanese Automobile Manufacturers Association.

In recent weeks ministerial discussions have taken place with the various private sector groups directly concerned with the question of Japanese motor vehicle exports to Canada, including representatives of the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association, the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association, the United Auto Workers, the Japanese Automobile Manufacturers Association and the Canadian Association of Japanese Automobile Dealers.

These consultations allowed us to consider the implications for Canada of the rapid changes in the international competitive environment, including the United States of America's decision to allow its restraint understanding with Japan to lapse at the end of March, 1985; the very low level of Japanese automotive investment in Canada; the tendency of the Japanese vehicle manufacturers to concentrate their North American investments in the U.S.A., as well as the emergence of new suppliers of passenger cars to Canada. The impact upon Canadian consumers of restrained access to Japanese passenger cars was also reviewed.

Taking these consultations into account, the Government has reviewed its policy and is now affirming its commitment to a strong and internationally competitive Canadian automotive industry. It also recognizes that the automobile industry is crucial to the growth of the Canadian economy and provides an essential market for many other industries throughout the country.

Given the expiry on March 31 of the current voluntary restraint understanding on Japanese automobile exports to Canada, senior Canadian officials met recently with Japanese authorities to emphasize the differences between the U.S.A. and the Canadian situation, as well as to explore possible ways and means of avoiding the disruption of the Canadian market.

In addition, the Minister for International Trade has written to the Japanese Minister of International Trade and Industry to bring to his attention the very low level of participation by Japanese motor vehicle producers in the Canadian automotive industry. The letter also stressed the need to maintain a stable market environment in Canada after April 1.

The Government anticipates a response from the Japanese Government in the near future. While the Government fully expects that the Japanese share of the Canadian automotive market will not increase during the forthcoming period of consultations, it will monitor the situation closely to ensure that the Canadian market is not disrupted and that Canadian jobs are not put at risk. The Government intends to give high priority to this important issue and will continue discussions with Japanese authorities with a view to developing a longer term, mutually beneficial automotive relationship.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I must begin by expressing disappointment in the Minister's statement, not only on behalf of the Official Opposition, but on behalf of some 125,000 workers in the Canadian automobile assembly and parts sector and some 600,000 to 700,000 other workers in a whole range of other sectors whose well-being depends upon the well-being and health of the Canadian automotive industry. We, they, and the communities in which they live, expected more from the Government, although it is not the first time we have been disappointed at the inaction of the Government, and I am sure it will not be the last.

After all, the Government had since last September to conclude new arrangements on quotas with the Japanese. Yet on the basis of pretty solid information, we find that meaningful discussions by our officials in Japan with Japanese authorities began only some 10 days ago. We now find that the deadline of March 31 is fast approaching, and the Government is saying nothing more than that the discussions are continuing.

The Minister has disappointed us in another important way. In his statement he said that the Government had reviewed its policy, but that is all he said. He did not take this opportunity to disclose to the House and to Canadians exactly what is and what will be its policy on the Canadian automotive industry, yet the industry is absolutely crucial to the well-being of the Canadian economy.

All or almost all of the increase in the Gross National Product in Canada last year came from the recovery of the Canadian auto industry. All or almost all of our record trade surplus last year came from the exports of the Canadian auto industry. This recovery came from a firm and definite public policy, put into place and successfully carried out by the previous Liberal Government. The previous Liberal Government was willing to step in, in support of business and labour in the automotive sector, to help that sector modernize, restructure and fight back against the onslaught of the world recession and competition from Japanese and other imported cars. It negotiated the arrangement with Chrysler which enabled that company to survive, to flourish and to save 10,000 jobs directly and triple that amount in supplier firms. It stepped in and worked out an arrangement with the Ford Motor Company which prevented its key plant in Oakville from closing and encouraged that company to remodel that plant to produce a new line of front-wheel drive cars.

It created the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program which provided Canadian parts manufacturers with the capital they needed to invest in the high-tech equipment, which was essential if these companies were to be able to compete for the parts business of North America. It also put in place the Industrial and Regional Development Program which succeeded ILAP. Before the Government changed it was responsible for levering, along with FIRA, some $2.5 billion in new automotive investment—for example, the American Motors project in Brampton, as well as the General Motors projects in Oshawa and St. Catharines.

All this was done in the context of the achievement of the previous Liberal Government in getting the Japanese to enter into quota arrangements—let us call them that, because that is what they are—to restrain the pace of exports of Japanese cars into the Canadian market. These arrangements gave the industry a needed breathing space to carry out the already highly successful task of restructuring and rebuilding.

Now, when the industry is saying very clearly that although it has made progress in that restructuring a further period of breathing space is required, the Government, despite all the time it had to do so, is saying only that it is continuing discussions with the Japanese.

Also, when the industry is saying to the Government that Canada needs the levers provided by the quota arrangements in order to get the Japanese to make commitments to put in Canada something they have not done already, that is, a fair share of their investment, production and jobs in the North American auto sector, all the Government can tell us is that it is continuing discussions.

What the Government should be doing privately, and more important publicly, is saying to the Japanese that the quotas we now have will remain unless and until they make meaningful and binding commitments to invest, to produce and to provide jobs in Canada equivalent proportionately to what they have already begun to do in the United States. Those quotas, the Government should be telling the Japanese, have to remain in place until the Japanese agree to accept the same rules as North American producers for production, investment and jobs in Canada as a condition of access to our market.

Why did the Minister not have the courage to rise and send that clear message in the forum of the House of Commons to the Japanese today? All he said was that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) was sending a letter to his Japanese counterpart. We need more than that. We need the Minister in Japan having some tough discussions with the Japanese to get the kinds of results about which I am talking for the Canadian auto worker and the Canadian economy in general.

I want to be fair about this. At least the Minister responded to one of my requests, and that was, to tell the Japanese that they would not be allowed to flood the Canadian market if no agreement was in place on March 31. The Minister's words were vague—and that is unlike him—and loose.

I trust what I have said about the meaning of the Minister's word is correct and the Japanese get the message, not only that the Government is going to monitor what the Japanese do regarding sending cars to Canada while the discussions are continuing, but that it is prepared to take firm and definite action in order to prevent a flooding of this market by Japanese cars, if that should be necessary.

The Government has to tell the Japanese that what is going on in the United Sates does not provide a basis for arrangements between Japan and Canada on the sending of cars from their country to our country. The United States is the largest and most powerful economy in the world. It has an economic clout without quotas. To get the kind of commitments for investment in this country which we have just begun to get without the levers of quotas or measures like the IRDP and FIRA measures, which the Government is already, unfortunately, starting to weaken. The Americans seemed to have made an arrangement with the Japanese to allow a 24 per cent increase in exports from Japan to that country. We have to send the Japanese a clear message that that is not right, that that is not what should be done for Canada.

We have a very different position. As I said, we have to send a clear signal to the Japanese that the quotas at the present level have to remain until the kinds of arrangements sought by the auto task force, a unanimous consensual recommendation by the assemblers, parts manufacturers and the union, are put in place. If this is not by negotiation, then the Government has to be willing to proceed by legislation, if that alternative is necessary.

It appears what the Minister is doing is to facilitate the efforts by Mr. Miller of Ontario to get re-elected. We have to be afraid that there is bad news in store for the auto workers of Ontario. The Canadian Government wants that Ontario election out of the way. At the very least, the statement today is sending a message to Mr. Miller that he does not have the clout he is telling the people of Ontario he has with this Government.

In conclusion, this is a very disappointing statement from the Government. It told the Canadian people it would do more and produce better. It has not done so. It is a matter of concern, and I say this on behalf of the Official Opposition, the auto workers and the Canadian economy, that so little has been done by a Government which claims it has the authority and the mandate to do more. It has let down the Canadian people once too often.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the Minister for coming to the conclusion that he should make this statement in the House. We appreciate it. We also appreciate having received prior copies of it.

Let me begin by noting from our point of view the logic of the voluntary export restraints which have been established in the automotive industry. As we see it, the existence of these restraints has provided the period within which the industry could do the restructuring that was necessary to give it a viability, a sense of changing technology that would make it a key world player in the future. We have noticed, for example, that 20,000 to 25,000 new jobs have been established within the industry because of new investments that these VER arrangements have encouraged.

Second, we have also had the sense that these VER arrangements were absolutely crucial to push the Japanese to put into this country the kinds of levels of investment which Canada deserves. We heard from the Minister that something in the order of $100 million in investment has been made by Japanese car companies in this country compared to $5 billion in the United States. Therefore, these arrangements have been crucial. We must continue to enforce that kind of bargaining leverage that we need. It is important to note that public opinion polls which have been done in the last few weeks indicate that the great majority of Canadians support these quota arrangements. They recognize the important employment implications of it.

That being said, I have to turn to the statement which the Minister has made today. Frankly, it is the most outrageous non-statement that I have yet heard from this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: The Minister, like the grant old Duke of York, has marched his troops to the top of the hill and marched them down again. He has stated the argument. He said there is a very low level of Japanese automotive investment in Canada, that there is a tendency for Japanese vehicle manufacturers to concentrate their North American investment in the United States. He made the point that new suppliers of passenger cars have emerged. Those are all arguments for movement, arguments for urgency on this issue. Having put the arguments, he has moved into a retreat. The white flag should be flying today because the Minister, frankly, has lost the battle. That is what this statement is about.

It is a battle which not only he has lost, but the country has lost because this statement has within it absolutely no assurance at all that this Government wants to keep the set of arrangements that will restrain the onslaught of Japanese imports into this country at this crucial time. There is no statement to that effect. There is nothing whatsoever about the report of the automotive task force. The Government talks magnificently about labourers and employers getting together, coming to agreements, reaching consensus. That was done in the case of that report and nothing has been done in this statement to follow it up.

In this respect, the Government simply follows, as in so many respects, in the footsteps of the previous regime. That previous regime, though it talks now of Canadian content, of a response to the automotive task force report, when it had the chance to do so would not provide a response. It would not put into effect the clear-cut message of that report that we need Canadian content laws in this country to give us the jobs and the sense of future investment that the automotive industry needs.

If we are talking in terms of fair allocation of time, there should be a reasonable amount remaining to me, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes. I may remind the Hon. Member that the Minister spoke for five minutes.

Mr. Langdon: In fact, Mr. Speaker, the official representative of the other Party spoke a great deal more than that.

Mr. Lapierre: He had something to say.

Mr. Langdon: So have I. Let me make the point that nothing in the statement of a clear-cut, forceful nature has been said about what will take place from April 1. There is absolutely nothing that says to the people of this country, those who go to work on Monday morning in the auto plants in my constituency and in the constituency of the Minister, that they can count on the Canadian Government through interim arrangements continuing to provide some security. I have been trying to figure out what has happened. Frankly, I have been monitoring this decision very closely. I had talks with the United Auto Workers, the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Association and, indeed, with the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) about what was taking place. It is quite clear that last weekend our negotiators returned from Tokyo with a package that they thought would be acceptable. It is quite clear that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) felt that he had the capacity at that point, as he told me, to bring together the Minister himself, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to make a decision on the issue. All the signals this week told us that an agreement was coming, in fact, to the point that the United Auto Workers national office was informed by media people that, indeed, an agreement was coming which would continue the quotas and give an increase of perhaps 10 per cent to 15 per cent to the Japanese.

● (1430)

What has happened to change that? All that I can determine is that a Cabinet meeting took place yesterday and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Minister for International Trade were left dangling. They have been left hanging in the wind, having put themselves on the line, and they lost. That is why the white flag should be carried as the Minister leaves the Chamber. He has brought a statement to the House that he must recognize, and the House should recognize, as the articles of surrender on the part of his people and his arguments in the face of the Minister of Finance. I wish the Minister would have the courage to stand up and admit that. If he did that I would applaud him, and I do not applaud the Minister often.

I urge him, and I pose these questions to him. Let him give us a clear and honest explanation why his Government has backed off from the position which he and the Minister for International Trade clearly wanted to have adopted. The cost to this country, thousands of auto workers, small-parts manufacturers and the national economic recovery will be immense. We desperately need clear signals on this issue. I wish to God the Minister had been able to get the agreement of his colleagues to give those signals to us.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to join my colleague in expressing my disappointment with the Minister's announcement. A three-page statement that says absolutely nothing is very disappointing, not only for the Members of this House but also for the Canadian public, and especially for workers in the automobile industry.

Last week, the Minister's colleague, the Minister of External Trade (Mr. Kelleher), promised, and this is reported in the press, that when a policy or something resembling a policy would be announced with respect to the automobile industry, the Government would be very careful to specify how it would deal with Korean motor vehicles, and today, in the three pages of text the Minister read to the House, there is nothing to indicate the Government's position or what action it intends to take with respect to Korean motor vehicles, namely the Hyundai Pony.

Could the Minister inform the House whether he has decided to break the promise made by his colleague for External Trade and take no action, or is he going to procrastinate once more?

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have now listened to the third response to our statement. Certainly, I can only suggest that the first two responses could have been made just as easily before either of those Members heard my statement. Clearly, they felt that much of what I said had not been said. I thought that I very succinctly put virtually every argument upon which they touched.

I would like to reply to the Member's specific question concerning Korean automobile exports to Canada. As the Hon. Member knows, that is a tariff item and it is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Minister of Finance will be dealing with that in due course. As far as the actual importation of Korean cars is concerned, of course we feel that there must be negotiations with Korea in very similar terms to the present negotiations which are now being held in Tokyo with respect to Japanese cars.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I am in possession of a communication which was made by Premier Miller and sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In the communication Premier Miller stated:

—I am concerned that the elimination of quotas on imports without the implementation of a new regime such as the one recommended by the industry itself will have negative effects on all sectors of the domestic economy. Therefore, I would urge the continuation of quotas as a first step towards implementing the recommendation of the Federal Task Force Report.

Does the Minister not think that his statement today is a slap in the face to Premier Miller?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that Premier Miller is completely at ease with the statements which the House has just heard. He knows the intentions which we have and he has been following the negotiations which are taking place. I would urge Hon. Members not to be alarmist about something which, in fact, will not happen.

As I stated in my remarks, we fully expect that the Japanese share of the Canadian automotive market will not increase during the forthcoming period of consultations. I also made it clear that we will be monitoring the situation every week to ensure that if there is some unforeseen increase we will be able to move quickly to ensure that there will not be a disruption of the Canadian market and that Canadian jobs will not be put at risk. There is absolutely no doubt on our part that that is the situation.

I am a little surprised that the House Leader of the Official Opposition was not more moderate in some of his language. He knows that in 1984 there was a very similar situation, that negotiations stretched from January to June and that the VERs which then existed lapsed on March 31. There was never any suggestion that the Japanese took advantage of that situation. Both sides negotiated in good faith to arrive at an eventual agreement.

The Hon. Member from the NDP said that our delegation came back from Tokyo with good news, and he interpreted it as an agreement. The truth is that there was good news. The Japanese were very forthcoming. They indicated that they did not want to impact our market. The question of an agreement is something which is still being negotiated. There is no suggestion of any ill will on the part of the Japanese, or that they will not try to come to an agreement with us. I emphasize that the situation is very much in hand. There is no reason for alarm, or in any way to convey an impression to the workers in the auto industry that their jobs are in jeopardy.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to understand how it was possible for the UAW to have the conviction that there was going to be continuation of the quotas and that there would be a specific figure with perhaps a slight increase in the quotas. I also find it difficult to understand how the Minister could have indicated yesterday that he would make a statement and then changed his mind, did a flip-flop and created all kinds of confusion, unless something changed between the first of this week and the end of this week.

I put it to the Minister: Did the officials who went to Japan believe that they had an agreement of any kind? Is there not a basis for this exercise? I cannot believe that he would go to all this trouble to have this bit of nonsense presented to the House with such fanfare.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it is so curious that an Hon. Member would react in that way, an Hon. Member who presumably was in his seat yesterday. He knows that I was asked the direct question, what is our position at the current time with respect to the Japanese importation, by the House Leader for the Official Opposition. I replied that there would be a statement or announcement—I think I used that word—on that subject, or related to that subject, today. We have made that statement. This is the statement to which I was referring. The suggestion that earlier in the week we were going one way and later in the week we changed, is absolute rubbish. Where the Hon. Members opposite are picking this up, I have no idea.

As far as our delegation to Tokyo is concerned, it felt it had good discussions. Its members learned the Japanese position. But, frankly, they did not come back and tell us they had any agreement. They outlined to us what they felt the Japanese bargaining positions would be and what in fact were the Japanese intentions. We, of course, in no uncertain terms, advanced many of the arguments which have been raised by various Hon. Members from the Opposition who have spoken. I note, though, that all those Hon. Members have missed a very important ingredient in the negotiations. We have been asking the Japanese for better access to their market. We have given them a shopping list of items we would like to see Japan import from Canada more readily than has happened in the past years.

All I can say is that we are in a situation today where we felt some statement should be made, bearing in mind the lapsing on March 31. It is a situation where we are encouraged with respect to the negotiations to date. We intend to be quite firm. We believe that the Canadian industry, as I have stated, must have its stability preserved. To that end, we earnestly hope that we can reach a suitable arrangement with the Japanese on this question and, of course, we will be reporting back when that arrangement is arrived at.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, surely the solution is that if you have nothing to say, announce that you have nothing to say, and we could have spared ourselves all of this. Is it or is it not true that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) had arranged a meeting among the three key Ministers to discuss what the Japanese response would be to the Canadian position with respect to automobile quotas?

Mr. Stevens: We are becoming almost ludicrous now. The three Ministers to which the Hon. Member refers have met at least four times, possibly five. Over the last few weeks we have discussed this situation. There is absolutely no mystery about that. There is no disagreement. We have indicated to our delegation who went to Tokyo the position of the Canadian Government. It presented that position to the Japanese Government. We received the response of the Japanese Government.

As far as the letter sent by the Minister for International Trade is concerned, it has not been responded to as yet. What we are waiting for now is the response to that letter which was sent by our Minister for International Trade.

This period of negotiation is one which I would emphasize. Surely it does not behoove Hon. Members to unnerve people, to create a sense of alarm for their petty political reasons. The truth is that the industry to which we are referring, the automobile industry in Canada, has had a good position. We want to preserve that position as far as the Canadian market is concerned. We believe that the negotiations which we are now conducting with the Japanese will ensure that the jobs of Canadians will be preserved and that we will have a healthier automobile industry with more Japanese investment here in Canada connected with its own automobile business.

That is our objective. There is no disagreement on that. I would think that in some way to try to undermine that objective by suggesting that negotiations have broken down, or there is something unique about this year's negotiations as compared to last year's, is not doing a service to the workers in Canada and to the Canadian people generally.

Bear in mind that our delegation is headed by the same officer who worked out the negotiations last year. Why do we feel this year that he will be less successful than he was then?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could make a statement instead of asking a question. However, I will ask the Minister if he does not realize that one difference is that there is now a different Minister and a different Government in charge. I also want to ask him, in particular, what the Japanese position is and why did the Government learn of it only last week? Finally, does the Government not realize that no matter how much we want to have greater access to the Japanese market, the prospects of that are very limited? After all, the Americans, with all their economic clout, have been trying to get greater access to the Japanese market for a range of products for years. They have achieved almost nothing. They are so upset about that that the Congress is threatening retaliatory action. If that is the case, should the Minister not be giving priority to getting a proportionate share of Japanese production and jobs in the North American auto industry in Canada, instead of chasing what I hope will not turn out to be a will-o'-the-wisp? Certainly, that is what the Americans found.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again I say in reply to the questions put by the Hon. Member that we did not just learn of the Japanese position last week. We learned of their position weeks ago. What we learned last week was what is their current position, has it changed, do they have any new thoughts to convey to us. In turn, we wanted to make sure that they knew of our current thinking.

As far as the entry to the Japanese market is concerned, Hon. Members of the Official Opposition are such pessimists. They are always assuming one cannot do things. We believe we can get better entry into the Japanese market. Surely, that is one of the things on which we should be negotiating with the Japanese at a time when they are asking for the privilege of maintaining their exports to Canada. That is one of the things, in addition to inviting them to invest more in Canada, that we are stressing during our negotiations. To expect us to open up and specify specifically what is the Japanese and the Canadian positions, would be negotiating in public, and I don't think that is the proper way to negotiate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in view of what took place in Quebec City two weeks or three weeks ago, where we gave away the store on acid rain to the United States, and the fact that we are now giving away the store to the Japanese, it seems we are going to get a reputation as being international saps. The only thing missing in the Minister's statement with respect to negotiating this deal with the Japanese is Bill Davis for a buck. That is the only thing missing in the Minister's statement.

In view of the fact that the reason we put this particular VIR in place a year ago was our concern, and we did need a voluntary quota system for the Japanese having access to our markets for automobiles, if the Minister wanted to clear up what he accuses us on this side of the House of doing, namely, creating some unrest and unease among Canadian automobile workers, why would he have not asked the Japanese to keep in place the voluntary agreement with respect to quotas while he worked out our access to their markets and a better deal? Why did the Minister not keep the quota system in place until we had reached an agreement with the Japanese? Why did he give away the store? Why did he play all of his cards, put them all out on the table, before we had some sort of agreement with the Japanese that they would put more of their manufacturing into this country?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, let me, for the benefit of the Hon. Member, repeat for the third time just what we have said. Our statement is that the Government fully expects that the Japanese share of the Canadian automotive market will not increase during the forthcoming period of consultations. That is our understanding with them. Is that clear?

Mr. McCurdy: Understanding or expectations?

Mr. Rodriguez: Great expectations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to special order made earlier today and pursuant to Standing Order 58, I do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank—Mrs. McDougall—Mr. Charest in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank. Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—Agreement to provide financial assistance

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I recognize that time is short because the House has agreed to try to get this Bill through by approximately 3 p.m. However, the Minister promised to have some figures for the House with respect to the present value of the financial assistance from the Government of Canada and the CDIC to the Canadian Commercial Bank. Perhaps she can give us that information now.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we have done some estimates on this but I would like to make it clear that they are estimates and that we can explore this somewhat further in the committee of inquiry which comes next. In working out this figure we have taken into account the fact that these are floating interest rate debentures. We have to assume an interest rate on the other funds and we have to make a profit forecast. Our view, taking all that into account, is that the present value is probably just under 50 per cent of the deal. That is our best estimate.

Mr. Cassidy: In other words, the Government of Canada is putting forward $148 million, including the CDIC, and the net cost would be about $73 million or $74 million. Am I correct in that figure? It is roughly the same figure I indicated in the House.

Mrs. McDougall: That is without imputing a value for the warrants too. So we are dealing in very approximate numbers.

Mr. Cassidy: I will be brief. I appreciate the fact that the numbers, which are comparable to mine, are approximate. I also appreciate the fact that the warrants today have no value. If the Bank were to start to come together later on, then they might ultimately have some value although in present terms that would not be very much.

Before sitting down, I would just like to put on the record that I have done some estimates in looking at the rate of profitability on assets of the Bank and pre-tax income. The Minister will appreciate that my figures are also very rough because I have not had a lot to go on. In 1980, the best year on record that I have, the pre-tax income of the Bank was equivalent to .85 per cent of its assets. In 1981 it was .8 per cent. In 1982, it was .55 per cent. In 1983 it was .35 per cent. In 1984, the Bank actually had a pre-tax loss of $8 million, although that is carefully disguised from the shareholders in the annual report. Its loss was equivalent to a return on assets of minus .25 per cent. In 1985 the Bank can expect about $25 million in income if it lends the $250 million at 10 per cent for half the year, which is what it will have the money for effectively. That will give it an income of $12 million from the injection of funds. However, it is going to have a pre-tax profit of zero according to the Minister so it is going to lose $12 million on all the rest of its business, based on some $3 billion worth of assets, for a negative return on assets of .4 per cent.

The Minister says that the Bank will have a pre-tax income in 1986 of around $12.4 million, half of which will be available for repayment, according to the Bank's estimates. If the pre-tax income is $12 million, and if $25 million is earned on that $250 million which is coming from the support group, then the Bank's loss on its other business will be of the order of $12 million, for a negative return on assets of .35 per cent. In 1987 the Bank, according to her figures, will have a profit of about $32.8 million, but $25 million of that, if interest rates stay at present levels, would come from the injection from the support group. Therefore, the Bank's profit on its other business will be $7 million, approximately, or equivalent to .2 per cent on assets, bearing in mind that the assets are likely to grow because some of the retained profit will allow an increase in assets.

In 1988 there will be $34 million in pre-tax income, $25 million will come from the revenue earned on the interest free loans from the support group, and $9 million will be earned on some $4 billion worth of assets. That is equivalent to about .2 per cent. In 1989 I reckon that the return will be about $13 million apart from what is earned on the Government's $250 million, or .3 per cent.

These figures are open to correction but that is a pretty lousy outlook and this is an outstanding example of corporate welfare. We used to have corporate welfare from the Liberal Government of Canada, and now we have it from the Conservative Government. Of course, this does not factor in the specific and unusual risks, given the fact that more than one third of the Bank's assets are concentrated in a foreign jurisdiction, in California, which could be open to completely different circumstances than here in Canada. Perhaps the Minister can comment.

Mrs. McDougall: I can comment, yes. The Hon. Member has made some calculations. He has gone through them very quickly and I am not going to argue my numbers versus his numbers or the best estimates we have on this side. I am quite prepared to see that go into the next phase of this discussion. I think, based on our best efforts analysis, based on the Bank's view of its portfolio, and in conjunction with our officials, looking ahead, that we have come up with some estimates because we felt that it was important we had some before the House. The Hon. Member has also come forward with some estimates, and I think debating those numbers at this stage is probably not useful. The point is that the borrowers will be able to carry on their business and will hopefully remain as customers of the Bank. A return will be earned as the economy recovers. The kind of confidence we are trying to express in western Canada is that the economy will recover.

There may be other cost savings which can go into the equation, but at the moment, given the work we have done, these are the estimates we are prepared to present.

Mr. Cassidy: I would just like to make a final comment, and that would be that—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that an enormous effort has been made to rescue the Bank rather than simply to look at the loans and the borrowers. If that was the goal, the loans could have been passed over to other institutions. The Bank itself says it is not a regional bank. That is a quotation from the last annual report. It is seeking to expand in Ontario and in California. Perhaps what happened is that Premier Lougheed injected the rescue of the CCB into the discussion on the energy package. Who knows? But it certainly seems rather bizarre that all of this effort would go into a bank whose return on its own business is going to be decidedly subnormal relative to chartered banking experience for the next decade.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I really do not have anything more to add to this discussion. Based on the information we have, we think the Bank will be profitable and viable. We think its customers are far better off this way. If the Bank had emerged or liquidated, the losses would still have to be picked up by somebody. So our assessment is that this is a valuable and responsible act.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I have one last question. As the Minister has indicated, we will have ample opportunity during the investigation in committee to pursue these questions. I want to ask her, as an astute financier, three questions. If she were interested in purchasing corporate shares these days, would it be likely that she would be quite eager to buy shares in the Canadian Commercial Bank? If you were planning on making a sizeable deposit in a bank, would you likely choose to make that deposit in the Canadian Commercial Bank? If you were planning to borrow a substantial amount of money and had the choice of going either to another Schedule A bank such as the Royal Bank or the Bank of Montreal, or to the Canadian Commercial Bank, why would you choose the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, if I were a member of the public I would look at the package which has been put together with the support of the banking industry, the provinces, and the Government of Canada. I would think that if all those people had faith in the bank, I would have faith too.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. McDougall moved that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the decision that this Bill must go to the Senate today, but I would like to put two or three comments on the record today.

First, we in the New Democratic Party feel that we have put the cart before the House in this case. An all-Party consent shows there is obviously a need to carry out an investigation into the recent collapse and rescue of the Canadian Commercial Bank which is based in western Canada and now operates across the country. I believe that the time to carry out an investigation is before we agree to bail out the Bank. We felt that if we were going to do this, the least we could do is to call for a special investigation. We are pleased that that opportunity will follow, but it does seem to be putting the cart before the horse to pass this Bill in order to build confidence within the financial community. Sometime in the future we will find out what went wrong.

I appreciate the comments of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) in response to our questions today, but they leave many unanswered questions. There are a variety of questions regarding the role of the Governor of the Bank of Canada in this process. There are questions about the ability of the Inspector General of Banks to carry out his responsibility of overseeing the banking community of Canada. It is questionable whether he has the appropriate authority and staff to do the job which is required during these difficult times. We have questions about the ability of a single individual, using shady and questionable means, to obtain a considerable portion of this particular Bank, which goes against the principle of the Bank Act limiting ownership by one individual or corporation to 10 per cent.

The Government's enthusiasm to bail out this or any particular bank is brought into question. The Bank itself has unquestionably foreclosed on all sorts of individuals, small businesses, ranchers, and farmers in western Canada. It has become traditional for banks across the country to act very callously in many cases. In order to look good on their quarterly reports and to enable their loans officers to have a good track record, they rip the rug out from under small businesses. They have little care for the small business community. When it comes time for the Government to respond to the banks, rather than the small businesses, farmers, ranchers, or homeowners, it falls over itself with enthusiasm for bailing out this corporate institution.

Traditionally banking colleagues would have come together to bail out this Bank. However, in this case they knew they had a good partner. The banks contribute substantially to the political coffers of the Progressive Conservative Party and they knew they could count on the Government of Canada when it came to a crunch. While they as bankers would have to come up with a few hundred million dollars, they knew they had buddies in the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada whom they could call upon to come up with an extra $75 million of the people of Canada. Taxpayers' dollars are being used to bail out the tenth largest Bank in Canada. That is the ultimate in corporate welfare.

If there is a set of financial institutions that do not require assistance from the taxpayers of Canada, it is certainly the banking community. After all, it is not uncommon at all to find return on equity of 15 per cent to 18 per cent during these very difficult times. If any sector of the economy can move in to save its brethren, it is certainly the banks. It is certainly disappointing that the Government has seen fit to ask the taxpayers of Canada, who are struggling simply to keep afloat, to use those dollars to bail out the Bank.

We have many concerns, Mr. Speaker. We have had an opportunity to mention a few of them today. We will look forward to pursuing the questions that we have raised, and many more, during the inquiry of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. At the moment we will step down to allow the persons in the other place to deal with this piece of legislation today.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly because we have agreed that this Bill should go forward to the Senate as soon as possible after three o'clock.

The Canadian banking system has had a very well earned and unusually good reputation in international circles. We have not had a banking failure since 1923, and I am sure that none of us expects to have one in the future. On two occasions in the last 15 years, when two regional banks were in difficulty, the banks themselves moved to provide solutions by mergers.

In this case there never would have been any question of liquidation. Everyone would have wanted this Bank to be restructured and to have some assistance given to it to protect the depositors and shareholders. The shareholders here include a lot of pension funds of Canadians who are not high earners and to whom those pensions matter a lot.

We all wanted to see assistance, but we on this side still have a lot of questions about the government intervention and why, as is traditional, the banks themselves did not provide the solution. We continue to have many questions about the use of taxpayers' money in this way, particularly by a Party which has always said that the taxpayers' money should not be used for bail-outs. We look forward with interest to pursuing in the committee the answers to the matters we have raised today as well as others.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

STATUTE LAW (CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, March 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments regarding this legislation. It is interesting to note, from the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and other speakers, that the discussion has primarily centred on certain changes that will take place in April as certain aspects of the Charter come into force.

Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, will amend existing federal legislation to bring it in line with the Charter of Rights.

We have heard Canadians talk about the various sections of our society that they feel are being discriminated against by certain laws in this country, both federal and provincial. Today I would like to refer to certain discriminatory federal regulations that were introduced by the present Government. There are cases which have come to the attention of many people since last year. Let me cite a case that was referred to the Minister of Justice by the town council of Centreville. They objected to the fact that the Department of Manpower and Immigration was demanding that the town council repay funds to the Government because one of the council's employees should not have been hired by the town council. In fact, that particular employee was a student and the son of the town clerk of this particular council.

I have a copy of the letter that was written to the Minister of Justice. It says that the Town of Centreville sponsored a program employing six students. One week after the project commenced, the council was asked by an official from the Department to fire one of the students because he was the son of the town clerk. The letter went on to state that the fact that the student's mother worked for the town council was, in the opinion of the council, insufficient reason to fire the student. Therefore he was employed for the duration of the project.

The council went on to make a very interesting statement. It said that the federal Government officials are trying to save a mere $1,110 on a technicality that is unfair and violates the human rights regulation that prohibits the council from asking any prospective employee questions regarding relatives.

The town council of Centreville has written to the Minister of Justice to ask for his intervention. The Minister of Justice has not intervened. The town council has been asked to pay this money to the federal Treasury at least 12 times since the letter was written to the Minister of Justice.

I have given this example because it raises some interesting questions. According to the human rights regulations, this town council is not allowed to ask about the family of a prospective employee. I took the liberty of writing to the Canadian Human Rights Commission because this same rule applies to every municipal body in Canada. Every municipal body that receives a student employment program is not allowed to hire a student who is the son or daughter of someone who signs the contract for the project.

There are provincial laws which say that in order for a municipality to sign a contract with the federal Government or other agency, any contract must be signed by the mayor or, deputy mayor and the town clerk. In the case of rural Newfoundland, the town clerk might be making $50 a week, that person might have nothing to do with the hiring of students, but because provincial regulations obligate that person to sign the contract, his or her son or daugher is not allowed to work on any federally funded project.

The importance of this question relates to hundreds of municipalities in Newfoundland alone and to every municipality in Canada.

I received a rather interesting response from the Canadian Human Rights Commission. It says that the Canadian Human Rights Act specifies that it is discriminatory for an employer to pursue a policy or practice which adversely differentiates on the basis of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, marital status, family status and so on.

The assertion by the town council was absolutely correct. It was not allowed to distinguish between the employees it was hiring and it was not allowed to discriminate on the basis of the family status of that particular student.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission goes on to point out that as far as this particular problem is concerned:

> I have been informed that all programs administered by the Federal Government includes such a "Conflict of Interest" clause. The relevant policy comes from Terms and Conditions approved by the Treasury Board—

On the one hand, municipalities are not allowed to hire a family member of someone who signs a contract because of conflict of interest regulations. Yet the town council in this particular case is not allowed to question the family relations of the person whom they are hiring.

The legislation before us today contains no method for correcting that single aspect of the Student Employment Program or of any particular grant given by the federal Government to any agency or association in this country. The bottom line is that the town council of Centreville in this case is being hounded and told that it must pay the money back to the federal Government that was paid to this university student who came home for the summer and was hired and just happened to be the son of the town clerk in that community.

The Minister of Justice and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) received a letter from that town council saying, "Will you please forgive this money because we cannot afford to pay it back". There was no answer. The only answer sent was from the Minister referring to conflict of interest guidelines. In other words, in that particular community there were two university students who came home for the summer. There were five jobs. People were told they were not allowed to hire one university student, that they must take the other university student plus four students from grade 12 or grade 11 because the mother of the student who came home for the summer was making $50 a week as the town clerk. The other university student was not allowed to be employed through that particular grant. Letters were written to two Cabinet ministers and the answer was, "No, you have to pay up from your municipal taxes".

This is a case of outright discrimination, Mr. Speaker. I cannot think of a more specific case of outright discrimination in a student employment program. It is outright and total discrimination.

To continue for a moment on that particular program, let me say that what you perceive in the House of Commons and what reports that are done for the Government of Canada show, with recommendations on how to do away with discrimination, is that sometimes when you get down to the grass roots those very reports and rules and regulations that are adapted and put into legislation are seen to discriminate against the ordinary person in the small rural areas. I give you as an example, Mr. Speaker, the regulations that were sent down last week by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to all the Manpower offices saying that the residency requirement for federal jobs must be removed. In other words, if you have a grant going into the community of Centreville or any other community across Canada this summer, then that grant could be used to fill jobs with students from St. John's, Newfoundland; Gander, Newfoundland; Corner Brook, or Quebec City, if the job suits somebody in Quebec City. Every Member of the House, except me, would say yes, that the residency requirement for federal jobs should be lifted, that you should be free to move within a system right across this country.

Just as you have a rule on conflict of regulations in effect, so you should not have the residency requirement lifted for grants to high unemployment areas. The reason is quite simple. The federal Government assigns student employment money mainly on the basis of unemployment rates. To allow the total mobility of students in works programs could mean that students from high employment areas could be filling jobs in the high unemployment areas. The reason is that the first people who are normally hired are the university students, and post-secondary students, and only after that are the secondary students taken on. I just wanted to mention that as it will be seen as discrimination by the people who live in those small communities.

I point to another discriminatory clause in the Student Employment Program. It says here that only those students can be hired who wish to return to school on a full-time basis in the fall. It is funny, isn't it, that somebody who has to go back to university for only one term is not a full-time student for that next year, somebody who has to go back and pick up two courses instead of five is not a full-time student for that year? Therefore, by regulation no part-time students, no student going back for one period of the year, one semester, is allowed to be hired by a student employment project this summer, none. That is another example of what people would perceive to be discrimination.

When you look at the Bill that modifies federal laws you are looking at changes to laws that satisfy a particular philosophy that the Government comes up with as a result of reports and investigations and commissions appointed by the Government. When you look at the grass roots level, the discrimination remains and it even intensifies sometimes because you try to remove discrimination. That is the point. It is unfortunate that the Government of Canada cannot see that.

I will give you another reference, Mr. Speaker. This is a letter that was sent to a newspaper from the chairperson in a community called Too Good Arm. This letter was published in a newspaper two days ago. It reads:

> Please allow me space in your paper to express my views on a Canada Works project in our community. Our committee applied for a grant in October, 1984—

It received a project. The letter goes on:

> The next step was to wait for Manpower in Gander to refer names of people needing jobs. When they sent out the names we had 12 names including one man who's been in Alberta since September 1984. Our committee was not satisfied with these names. So we contacted Canada Manpower in Gander for more names. Our committee had a list of names taken from our community who wanted jobs, and who needed them badly, but Manpower refused to even discuss the list of names we had.
> After fighting tooth and nail with Manpower they finally sent out another list of names. On this list was mostly fishermen and fish-plant workers. Why, we asked, did Manpower send out those names to us. Because these people had jobs waiting for them in April or May of 1985.
> We, as a committee, were very disappointed because we had citizens from our community who needed this work. We had young people who needed it badly. We had workers, who worked on our Project in March of '84 and needed five more UIC weeks to qualify for UIC benefits, but Manpower would not refer their names so we could not hire them.
> Our committee contacted the MHA from our area and we also had James Morgan working on this problem but no way would Manpower go along with any of us.
> We would like to know why Manpower is so strict with our citizens who are not in the labour force.

It concludes:

When election time rolls around again let's just keep our votes or let's vote for Manpower in Gander because apparently they are the voice of our province.

It is signed by Madeline Hale, Chairperson for Local Improvement Committee, Too Good Arm. I have made reference to this before. There it is in black and white in a letter to the editor. The fact is that in all direct federal employment programs a person who has not drawn unemployment insurance is not allowed to be referred to a job. The fact is that a woman who has been out of the workforce for more than a year and a half is not allowed to be referred to a federal works program. The fact is that in order for a person to get a job he or she would have to be on unemployment insurance.

We are talking about high unemployment in rural areas across the country. What do people see? They see a student program for the summer to hire students with a built-in discrimination in it that I have already mentioned. They see a federal works program coming into their community with built-in discrimination in the program. Then they turn on their television sets and see the Minister of Justice introducing a Bill in the House of Commons to end discrimination in federal laws. They ask whether that means that young people are now allowed to go to work, that women are allowed to go to work or that people who have never been in the workforce will now be able to get referrals on federal works programs. No, it does not. That has not even been touched. In other words, the very things which matter are not even under discussion.

The Student Employment Program starts this summer, and the discrimination continues. If we looked at all the reports, studies and commissions, we would not even see the matter receiving a footnote reference. In the case to which I referred in the community of Centreville, the Minister of Justice should relent and get in touch with the Minister responsible to forgive that $1,110 bill of that student who found employment last summer. The same should be done for every student across the country who was penalized and discriminated against, as well as every student who will be discriminated against this summer.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration should take a look at her own programs and end the discrimination in them. She talks about ending discrimination against women and young people, yet they are the ones who are being discriminated against in her own programs. Even the Minister of Justice talks about curing the problem of discrimination. They may be curing the problem of discrimination in the eyes of people who do not really know what discrimination is. They may be doing that in some cases. They may be solving a national problem which should be solved, but they must take a second look to see what effect the removal of the residency requirement from jobs in Canada Manpower or what effect discrimination in the terms of reference or on priority lists for hiring on federal projects will have on small communities.

When the Minister of Justice returns from trying to get the Tories elected in Newfoundland, which he will not be able to do, he should deal with the real problems facing people in high unemployment areas and end the real discrimination against the very poor caused by the Government of Canada.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today to talk about Bill C-27 and about the very broad issue of equality rights. Throughout history, legislators, philosophers, judges, kings and queens have all wrestled with the concept of equality. Here in Canada, our jurists and politicians have debated the issue of equality for over 100 years. In 1960, the Government under Prime Minister John Diefenbaker took a major step in protecting basic human freedoms by introducing the Bill of Rights. For the first time in history, Canadians had a document which set out the fundamental rights and freedoms to which each and every person was entitled. Then in 1982 the Government introduced as part of the Constitution Act a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. My Party supported a fair, just and practical Charter. We spoke out for all Canadians and fought to ensure that the provinces were given their rightful place in the patriation process.

Today, three years following the passage of the Constitution, we move forward to April 17 when the equality provision, Section 15 of the Charter, comes into force. Section 15 of the Charter provides for equality before and under the law. It also provides for equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination based upon race, origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

The challenge before us as Members of the House is to define exactly what equality means. How do we judge equality in our laws? What is a just or an unjust law? St. Thomas Aquinas defined an unjust law as a human law which is not rooted in eternal law and natural law. A just law, according to St. Thomas, was any law that uplifts human personality. Any law that degrades human personality is unjust.

Martin Luther King defined an unjust law as a code that a numerical or power majority group compels a minority group to obey but does not make binding on itself. A just law is a code that a majority compels a minority to follow and that the majority is willing to follow itself. It is this latter code of just law that our Government under the Charter of Rights must develop.

The challenge now before us in the House is to define equality and apply that definition to over 1,000 federal statutes. The process will not be easy. It will take a great deal of cautious and careful consideration. Bill C-27 marks the beginning of enacting Section 15 of the Charter of Rights.

Some specifics, as Section 15 relates to certain existing legislation, are addressed in Bill C-27. As I have listened to Hon. Members speak on the Bill, it has been my opinion that although they are in favour of it, they feel it does not go far enough. Section 15 of the Charter of Rights raises many basic and far-reaching questions. For example, should mandatory retirement be abolished? Do the Unemployment Insurance Act and federal pension laws discriminate unfairly against women? What laws should be changed to ensure equality for the physically or mentally handicapped? These far-reaching questions, as well as many others, will be the subject of review by a parliamentary committee of the House. This committee will reach out to Canadians, will listen and will hear the views, ideas and suggestions of the people as they relate to these many issues.

An Hon. Member: From coast to coast.

Mrs. Browes: Yes, my hon. friend is correct. The committee will travel from coast to coast to hear the views of all Canadians. It is my privilege to be one of the seven members of this committee. I am pleased to be one of the vice-chairpersons of it, sharing my position with the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay).

Section 15 will touch upon every aspect of Canadian life. Literally, millions of words clarifying, shaping, defining and moulding Section 15 to the realities of Canadian society can be expected in the months, years and decades ahead.

I want to mention briefly a few areas of particular concern to me and to the people of Scarborough Centre, the riding which I represent. I wish to speak of the equality provisions and our great multicultural heritage. Canada has been built by a unique blend of cultural identities. Our country takes pride in the cultural diversity and a multi-ethnic heritage. Thousands and thousands of people come to Canada every year because in Canada they can be free. Indeed, Canada is a nation of immigrants and we must ensure that cultural equality is protected and enhanced. As Section 27 of the Charter states, and I quote:

> This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

Our laws must protect this cultural diversity. Cultural equality means giving all Canadians, regardless of their race or ethnic background, an equal opportunity to live, to work and to prosper in this great nation of ours.

Let me turn to Bill C-27. There are three important issues addressed in Bill C-27. First, there is the elimination of in camera hearings as currently provided for under the Immigration Act. These are going to be eliminated, with the exception of those cases where undue publicity may be generated by an open hearing. This will ensure that immigration hearings will be open, in the public and fair.

Second, the Canadian Human Rights Commission will no longer have the power to select members of tribunals established to rule on discrimination cases under the Human Rights Act. Rather, tribunal members will be chosen by an independent official to be appointed by the Governor in Council. Third, persons 18 years of age will now be able to serve as corporation board members. This will bring some uniformity to the law which presently allows persons of 18 years of age to vote, but does not recognize his or her right to serve as a responsible member of a board of directors.

On the broader issues, a group of people in our society who will be anxiously awaiting the application of Section 15 is the disabled. Discrimination, especially in the job market, based on mental and physical disability must be eliminated. Canadians are becoming more and more aware of the important contribution disabled people are making to our society. Numerous equality questions relating to the disabled in relation to military service, immigration and unemployment insurance must be answered. Most recently, last week there was a demonstration held in relation to the opening of a new transit line in Scarborough. An outstanding activist for the disabled, Beryl Potter, led the demonstration at the opening of that transit line. She was demonstrating for access to public transportation in the Toronto Transit Commission. I applaud her for the actions she took.

There are many issues affecting the lives of millions of Canadians that are part of Section 15 of the Charter. A significant piece of legislation that will need review is the National Defence Act. A greater degree of equivalency between the code of service discipline and criminal law must be established. We must ensure that all legal rights and guarantees provided to citizens under the Criminal Code are applied equally to the members of the military.

A variety of equality issues relating to age and sex will also need careful examination as a result of Section 15. Is the calculation of pensions sexually biased? In addition, is it fair that home-makers in this country are denied the right to contribute to and benefit from the Canada Pension Plan? This is a national program in which a large number of Canadians are denied access to participate, although they maintain and foster the family values by caring for the children who will become the next generation of Canadians. This is an important issue that we will be discussing, and it is an issue on which we will be looking for action in the near future.

In addition, there are further issues that have been dealt with by other Ministries relating to this section of the Constitution. In particular, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) recently brought forth legislation, part of which relates to the reinstatement of the status of Indian women who have married outside their culture. Having attended and participated in a number of the meetings of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs, I understand the complexity of this issue and that it will take time to resolve. The legislation is courageous. It is the first step in correcting a serious injustice to Indian women.

Similarly, our Government has taken action in relation to the Abella report. Crown corporations must begin implementing employment equality by September and begin reporting annually within a year. Federally-regulated businesses with more than 100 employees must develop plans and begin reporting within three years. Companies tendering on government contracts for goods and services must certrify their commitment to employment equality and show results. These announcements were made recently by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on behalf of this Government. That Minister has been a strong champion and a consistent voice for human rights and equality rights. She must be commended for her oustanding efforts and now for her actions. To ensure a broad range of discussions on issues, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has wisely set up a subcommittee of the Justice Committee to solicit the views of Canadians from coast to coast.

Following discussions with Canadians in the next few months, it is our duty as legislators to outline the policy options for just and fair laws. The ideas, direction and principles must come from the people, through the committee to this House. We cannot simply declare that Section 15 will now suddenly come into effect. Our Government believes in establishing the direction and the principles for Section 15 here in Parliament and with the Canadian people. That is the purpose of this committee. It will meet Canadians from all walks of life to discuss their views, their interpretations and their feelings on Section 15.

The work of the committee is crucial in establishing a format for the equality provisions. The people have a right to be heard on such an important matter and they will be heard by this Government. My Party believes that the principles of law must be established here in Parliament with input from the people and not in a courtroom by a judge. Canadians want Section 15 to apply in a practical and workable fashion. Canadians have entrusted to us the huge responsibility of ensuring that it applies justly and fairly to the Canadian way of life.

On April 17, Section 15 will become a vibrant and real part of our society. Let us hope that as long as Canada exists as a nation, the pursuit of equality and justice will be paramount in this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on an excellent speech. I am convinced she is eminently suited to act in the capacity of vice-chairman and to share the chairmanship with the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay). I hope that in the months to come, since the Hon. Member said she was anxious to hear what Canadians had to say about equality... I thought that before coming here, the Hon. Member knew what Canadians thought and that the Members of this Government did as well, but now...

An Hon. Member: That is obviously not the case.

Mr. Lapierre: And we see evidence of this every day. When we realize that the Government... My hon. friend who always talks from his seat should take the trouble to rise, from time to time. That way, his party might get to know him.

What I wanted to ask the Hon. Member is... She mentioned the possibility that young people eighteen years of age or over could sit on boards of directors. Is her Government prepared to go beyond a minor amendment to the legislation and put this into practice or will it remain just a few words on a piece of paper? Has her Government taken any steps in this direction, a Government that "supposedly" controls too many Crown corporations? Could the Hon. Member name a single young person appointed to a federal corporation since this Government came to power, a single Canadian in any corporation at all? I would appreciate it if she could name just one.

[English]

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member asked that question. I believe that he has raised a couple of questions. One is the larger question of consultation. In 1980, 1981 and 1982, consultations were held on the Constitution and many groups participated and presented briefs to the committee. They were happy to do that. It was important. Those groups were looking at the Constitution as a whole. They looked at many items which related to the Constitution.

In 1982, the Government and all Members of the House of Commons thought it was important to have a three-year delay before Section 15 was brought into effect. We have now been reflecting for three years. It is time to sit down and talk about the specifics as they relate to Section 15.

From the research which I have done recently, I understand that the Department of Justice reviewed the Constitution in relation to many statutes, and that the Department started to review Section 15 in January 1984. Therefore, it is time for us to talk to the people of Canada with respect to this particular section and how it should relate to the law.

In relation to his suggestion regarding younger people being appointed to boards, I would like to say that I am very much in favour of that. I have three young children who are very much a part of the decision-making process in our family. I think it is important for people who are eligible to vote at age 18 also to have an opportunity to serve on a board. I think his suggestion that that should be done in Crown corporations as soon as possible is an excellent example.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the Hon. Member's reply, namely that she was very well intentioned. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we are all in favour of motherhood, but the truth of the matter is that this Government, which is preaching equality before the law, is unfortunately not practicising what it preaches. In recent months we have seen that, for instance, the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) who in the past had a number of responsibilities has suddenly found herself without any power at all in this Government. In fact, a number of Ministers have been treated this way, but... And we have seen Hon. Members who realized, as did the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), that they did not have all that much power, but what I want to say... what I want to ask the Hon. Member is that the section on equality . . . and I want to get back to the minimum age: Can the Hon. Member explain why at 18, a person can now serve on a board of directors, become a Member of Parliament or even Prime Minister, at least theoretically, but cannot become a senator? Is the Hon. Member, in the course of her research across the country, going to consult people to find out why one needs two qualifications to become a member of the Senate? A person must be so many years old and also own property worth more than $3,000, or something like that.

Does the Hon. Member intend to examine this problem for any length of time, since her Leader is getting ready to make appointments to the Senate? Today, there is a vacancy, unfortunately due to the death of Senator Beaubien. Does the Hon. Member intend to review this section of the Constitution which I think should be considered discriminatory, and I hope that in the course of her broad consultations across the country, the Hon. Member, and I wish her bon voyage, in fact, Mr. Speaker, this Government's solution to dealing with so many Members is to make them travel . . . My question is: Does the Hon. Member intend to undertake many consultations, not only on the proposal as such but more specifically on the minimum age of senators, and will the House, in the months to come, be able to benefit from her increased knowledge of Canadian public opinion?

[English]

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member's suggestion on a Friday afternoon is rather novel. As one of the members of the committee, I will take it as a suggestion. However, I do not see it as having a high priority in the number of issues which will be discussed by the committee across the country. I refer to the suggestion about Senators being 18 years of age. But it could be one of many issues.

I want to emphasize the importance of consultation. I have been most disturbed by the Opposition Party's lack of enthusiasm for consultation on this issue. I would like to quote from two letters which I recently received concerning consultation. One letter read:

> This letter is to thank you for your efforts in contacting us, and asking our opinion on such important and germane questions—
> The only contact which we had with the previous administration was a stream of letters from their bagmen, which needless to say ended up in our litter bins.

The second letter read:

> Your correspondence and efforts to create communication . . . are much appreciated.

I think that the people of Canada will appreciate the consultation concerning Section 15, which is a very important part of the Constitution.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Member has enough time remaining to comment on whether or not subsection (b) of the section to which she referred would allow affirmative action programs, in other words, whether the Government will be allowed to discriminate against somebody on the basis of sex or age if it concerns an affirmative action program. Does the Hon. Member agree with that principle?

• (1600)

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, what this Government and myself personally believe we must have is equality of opportunity. I do not believe in the quota system, if that is what the Hon. Member is getting to. I believe that we should have equal opportunity for women, the disabled, and young people in order that they can reach their potential at the highest level so that we really will have equality rights in Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not have an opportunity of announcing the business for Monday. As I mentioned in the usual Thursday House business statement, because we are hoping to make progress with respect to different items of legislation, I am planning to try to consult with my colleagues and work on a day-to-day basis until April 3. At the present time it is contemplated that on Monday we will carry on with Bill C-27, and if we make progress on that Bill on second reading and reference to committee, we would then bring forward Bill C-19 with respect to the reorganization of Bell Canada.

As I have indicated, if there is any change in that sequence, I will certainly advise representatives of each of the Parties at the earliest possible time so that they can prepare themselves for an informed and reasonable debate.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS— MOTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 178?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED NEW LEGISLATION

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to:

(1) dissolve the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and establish a new broadcasting corporation devoted to Canada's cultural development;

(2) terminate the present mandate of all members of the Corporation's Board of Directors and its offices abroad, including the management of CBC International; and

(3) provide for a mechanism for replacing the new corporation's management, including the ratification of their appointment by a Parliamentary committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, only a few years ago, the Government was urging the CBC to "build the future", to pave the way to a distinct society, and it defined its philosophy as follows: to act now.

First, ensure that our broadcasting system supports our social and cultural orientations, recalling our commitment to the objectives defined in the Broadcasting Act in 1968.

Second, offer all Canadians a substantial number of attractive Canadian programs in all programming categories, while promoting the development of our broadcasting and visual production industries.

Third, to provide for diversified and expanded programming in both official languages and in all regions of Canada. The Government even suggested a thorough study. What has happened since then?

Mr. Speaker, using as an excuse the much needed budgetary cutbacks of $75 million, last November CBC administrators decided to create an uproar among the Canadian public. That is the way it is perceived by many Canadians. I have been receiving many letters and documents as well as telephone calls to this effect, and my colleagues as well. We have learned some troubling facts, and they should be taken seriously. We are a responsible Government that will not bow to threats or blackmail or let itself be influenced by undemocratic activities as low and unconscionable as those I am going to discuss with you now.

To raise a surge of protest among the Canadian public, the CBC has gone so far as to flout elementary decency and deprive Canadians in various regions across this country of a service to which they are entitled. Always claiming the pressure of budgetary restrictions instead of putting a stop to its own profligate spending, the CBC has cut what are commonly referred to as the antennae that relay programs from the stations to Canadian viewers and listeners. This is despicable, Mr. Speaker.

Under the same false pretences, the Corporation has cut popular programs to shock and win over public opinion. It asks the average employee to resign so that it can maintain the jobs of friends who have long outlived their usefulness and to maintain jobs that themselves have become useless.

During this period of austerity, at a time when it is supposedly lacking in funds, the CBC is still publishing a kind of weekly that is sent from coast to coast across this country. In addition, just when the Government wants the CBC to cut expenditures, the corporation buys full-page ads in newspapers throughout Canada. How much does that cost, Mr. Speaker? No wonder people are asking questions.

Here is another example of outright waste of money, Mr. Speaker. Recently the management of engineering on Montreal's Côte de Liesse practically turned the place upside down—nothing new for them, but quite unacceptable to us. More than half of the 300 employees were moved from the second to the third floor, and vice versa. Some of those people have been uprooted anywhere from seven to twenty times over the years. The entire telephone system has to be changed, which entails more unnecessary expenses for such things as printing new business cards, cardex files and telephone directories. They change carpets, paint, move walls, doors and furniture. I suspect the scenario is the same in other buildings across Canada, Mr. Speaker. Yet, long-time employees will tell you that they still do not know why. They are simply told that the money has to be spent before the end of the fiscal year. How much does all that cost, year in and year out? The question is relevant indeed. Still in that same building, there are at least seven directors, or engineers, or senior architects, or supervisors—unilingual anglophones, all of them. So they were given seven francophone assistants to answer the phone.

Mr. Speaker, did you know that some of the program managers in Montreal graciously invite relatives or friends of their guest artists to go along when they travel outside for live shows or to tape certain programs? Did you know that the production and support crew are forced to stay at the hotel of friends? During that time, low-paid employees are laid off, supposedly owing to budget cutbacks imposed by the Government. Elsewhere, other employees must be kept silent, so they are appointed assistants to the director, no less. How much does that cost Canadian taxpayers who are deprived of certain programs?

You may have noticed that I spared you much of the figures in dollars and cents, but quite soon we will call in some people and unveil for everyone to see the scandalous outlays at the CBC. If you knew how much certain artists among the friends of the CBC are paid, Mr. Speaker, you would be sick. And what about the close pals of management who get the cushy jobs? Those people like to move around, so they attend various cultural or cinema festivals on company time, they travel throughout the world, bragging about our culture and our visual cultural products. After spending tens of thousands of dollars of the Canadian taxpayers, they always come back without even a single sales contract to show for it. If and when they do bring something back, it does not amount to very much anyway.

In 1982-83, our exports were worth $5.7 million and the service cost us $6.8 million. That is the kind of management you get at the CBC. Instead of sending these people on a holiday trip at our expense, they should have given away our programs abroad to promote Canadian culture throughout the world and we would have saved more than a million dollars.

More about poor management at the CBC. In a number of warehouses across the country, there is expensive equipment that is never used. It could be sold or rented to increase the Corporation's revenue, but no! They could rent their studios regularly to independent producers if they would only follow the recommendations arising from the inquiries and reports on the CBC, but no! Mr. Speaker, last June they decided to stop filming the superproduction called "La course au bonheur", although they had already spent over a million dollars. Mr. Juneau's response appeared in La Presse on June 30, and I quote:

We got more than we bargained for.

Mr. Speaker, do you not think it is high time we got rid of him? Is this supposed to be the CBC's new management approach? Should the blame not be put on the incredible lack of planning and lack of economically efficient management policies? Let Hon. Members and the Canadian public be the judge.

Mr. Speaker, another case in point is that of reporter Louise Arcand, where the umpire's decision handed down recently blamed news management for having made a discriminatory decision. And now the CBC, though it has already lost twice, is thinking of appealing the case to the Supreme Court. It would seem that budgetary cutbacks have not had any effect on funding for the CBC's legal services. And why should they? They get the money back by firing the average employee, by cutting programs, by cutting down on broadcasting across the country, by reducing production, and it is all the Government's fault, the fault of the Progressive Conservative Party. Incredible! They really have a lot of nerve.

Mr. Speaker, we can no longer tolerate these demagogical attitudes and this kind of behaviour.

And what about the case of reporter Richard Vigneault? Consider: he was fired two months ago for refusing cuts in an interview he did with the President of the CBC on the budgetary cutbacks. Obliging an honest reporter to edit the truth!

Mr. Speaker, because of poor management, the CBC has been outrageously wasting tens of millions of dollars a year. Remember the Applebaum-Hébert Report in 1981 and what the CRTC said in 1977: that the CBC had failed to meet its obligation to respond to the specific needs of the various regions in this country. Who can say today that the CBC has improved its record in this area? It is a joke! Everyone has been asking the Corporation to adapt its programming to the realities of the day, to rationalize its spending and improve its management policies, but to no avail. Mr. Speaker, enough is enough. We must have a new Crown corporation, new administrators and new directors who are competent and who will truly respond to the aspirations of the people of this country. This applies as much to the English as to the French network. They do not talk to each other and they refuse to collaborate and to exchange news items on public affairs broadcasts. No, they each hold on to their own territory. They each have their own clique and their own gimmick, and they will not part with them. Well, all those administrators will have to get off the stage, because the curtain is closing on the last act!

I see some of my hon. friends from the Lower St. Lawrence, and this reminds me that early this week, some vicious cuts were made at five radio stations in Chicoutimi and Lac-Saint-Jean. And so it goes.

• (1620)

Major and radical changes are being prepared which will affect the parliamentary television broadcasting. Two weeks ago my colleague from North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) warned us and told us how greatly concerned he is about the regressive behaviour of the CBC. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to refer to an article which appeared in the very serious Maclean's magazine of last March 18 and which was written by columnist Barbara Amiel. She describes Mr. Pierre Juneau as being the compleat bureaucrat. When asked an awkward question, she writes, he responds by answering a question of his own choice. He changes the meaning of the conversation and manages never to answer any question. She accuses him of a whole series of woes. She accuses him of acting deliberately. In conclusion she wrote this:

[English]

It is immoral to change the game's rule and penalize people for two decades of laxity.

She even asks him to have the decency to resign before the CBC is dissolved. Everybody talks about it, but the CBC does not do anything. The Auditor General denounces the incompetence and bad management of the CBC, but that does not change anything, and nothing will change, Mr. Speaker, unless we assume our responsibilities and take firm action as required in full respect for the Canadian people. We must now take appropriate measures to put a stop to that hemorrhage of public funds—tens of millions of dollars.

As you have noticed, Mr. Speaker, I did not attack the employees of the CBC. On the contrary, I have always maintained that there are very competent people, serious people, excellent producers, intelligent secretaries and researchers, clever technicians and honest reporters. Unfortunately, it happens that some employees are compelled, forced or threatened by management, so they do not always act properly. Let us give those people an opportunity to work with dignity and fairness, and thus do our share to improve the services of the CBC and put an end to wasteful expenditures.

For those rasons and for other which I cannot express today for lack of time, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to my colleagues who received from the Canadian people a clear mandate to change the course of its history. I urge Hon. Members of the Opposition to join forces with us and help us finally to do justice to this nation which has been consistently demanding CBC clean-up. Are we going to betray their confidence and deny them something they have a right to demand? Essentially, Mr. Speaker, I am respectfully asking the House to say that the Government should introduce in the House of Commons legislation that would:

—dissolve the CBC, Radio Canada, Radio-Canada International, Entreprises Radio-Canada Enterprise, shut down their offices in New York, Washington, London, Paris, Moscow and wherever they may be, all their existing production centres, in other words the French-language T.V. and radio stations, the English-language T.V. and radio stations and all other components and/or affiliates; —create a new corporation under a new name to be established by law;

—provide for the immediate termination of any mandate given to, and/or by any member of the Board, management, French-language services, English-language services, the Ottawa area, and any other existing council and committee, whether advisory, executive, audit, industrial relations or whatever;

—provide for mechanisms to immediately replace those people by other qualified people, with provisions for every other then employee of the CBC to immediately resume his or her respective job or even apply for any other then vacant job, according to his or her only qualifications and ability; —immediately recognize all existing labour unions and all existing collective agreements.

And even before the Government decides to pass such legislation, we should require the CBC to be put under immediate guardianship. Thus the Government of Canada clearly will have the broadcasting Crown Corporation arrange within the shortest possible time for a distinctive, self-sufficient programming and a more Canadian content, and the implementation of the principles so dear to the hearts of Canadians, a vital tool for the cultural development of French speaking and English speaking Canadians, a true springboard for all the artists and workers of our two great Canadian cultures and other ethnic groups, an ethical framework that will finally present a solid moral character, a new sound spirit and new fair-play tendancies consistent with justice and merit, to finally achieve sound management of public monies.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am calling on all Hon. Members from both Opposition parties to even suggest and recommend to us in each province qualified Canadians who, above political affiliations, can work together to reach for the goals that Canadians have long since set for CBC officers. Almost on the eve of the Easter holidays, Mr. Speaker, let us rid ourselves of evil and celebrate a new era for our national broadcasting that will fulfill the true expectations of the Canadian people!

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, after the speech and the performance given by our friend for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), I can only say that we in the Official Opposition are ready to recommend him as chairman of the new organization. I am convinced that he could certainly earn a good living as an actor.

However, what worries me is that the Hon. Member has made disturbing revelations about the CBC. He has made never-heard-before and exclusive revelations, as would say Photo-Police. In this context, Mr. Speaker, something was missing from his speech as he did not ask for the immediate resignation of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), because these matters are the responsibility of his own Government, and if the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve is aware of such horror stories, instead of simply raising the issue in the House, he should go and see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Communications and demand an immediate investigation on the actions of the CBC.

And what worries me for instance . . . I hope that the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, who did not mention any names or quote any figures, would be able, if the House or the Auditor General were to make an investigation, to provide authentic proof to back up his statement because, thanks to parliamentary immunity, anyone of us can easily make speeches and with great oratory question the credibility, morality or civility of certain people. As for me, I frankly believe that it is a bit simplistic to talk in general terms about the gangrene at the CBC. By doing so, our friend for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve has cast doubts over the entire management of the CBC.

Is he suggesting, for instance, when speaking about the seventh or twentieth move, that all Canadians paid for this, Mr. Speaker? If this is true, I would like him to tell the Minister of Communications. I do not understand why he would have to use this forum to do so. I thought that the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve had some influence, but if he did, the Minister of Communications would be here today to reply to his allegations and order immediately a complete investigation. He was satisfied to send his Parliamentary Secretary, who will certainly be able to speak about his own experience and tell us whether, during his years at the CBC, he was aware of the horror stories denounced by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about fantastically high fees. Let me tell him that I think we could use his quite creditable performance of today to start a new television series if we wanted to recall the years of the Crédit Social. And I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the late Réal Caouette would be pleased to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve. In his day, he also attacked the management of the CBC and I am convinced that our friend from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, when his short political career comes to an end, will be invited by the CBC to revive the sixties. But till then, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned because there are people of good will and good faith at every level of the CBC and they must take offence today because they are unable to defend themselves and appear in this forum to tell Canadians the other side of the story. And this is why I ask my colleague from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve to convince the Minister of Communications to launch a thorough inquiry on those allegations.

I ask the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve to call immediately the Auditor General, state the complaints which he receives, provide some grounds for his allegations and then we could discuss concrete facts with figures on the table. And I urge him to do so, Mr. Speaker, in a responsible way. He referred to a new morality. The last thing that I would like to see in Canada would be anyone among us trying to impose his morality to the mass medias. It would be a great disservice to Canadians if politicians decided to interfere as in Russia in the contents of programs. The great strength of the CBC has always been its independence. I am convinced that if politicians were allowed to control programs and information, according to their whims, it would always be based on their self-interest. This is the real danger which would confront us if we tried to interfere with the medias.

He spoke about qualified Canadians. Who are we, Mr. Speaker, to gauge the qualifications of each member of the CBC board of directors or each of its officials? It is too easy to do that. If there are some inefficient people, they should be fired. There is no question about it. However, regular procedures should be followed. These people can be laid off although the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) says no. Of course, he co-sponsored this bill, and I congratulate him for doing so; I am anxious to hear his remarks as co-sponsor and supporter of this bill. As I said, I am anxious to hear his remarks and, if he has new arguments to put forward and new facts to communicate to us, I hope he will not hesitate to rise and speak out. Meanwhile, I should like him to listen to my recommendations. Together with his colleague the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, he should investigate all the weaknesses and shortcomings of the CBC. In this endeavour, they should seek the assistance of the Minister of Communications and, failing action, they should demand his resignation. If they did, the cultural community in this country would breathe a sigh of relief, not to mention that this would possibly make room for one of them within the Cabinet. In this connexion, I suggest that the Hon. Member for Duvernay for instance could easily replace the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). I am sure that with his revolutionary ideas, the Hon. Minister of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve could replace the current Minister of Communications. It is up to the Prime Minister to decide. For the time being, he allows them to stand by the curtains. Their turn will come. Mr. Speaker, to return—

Mr. Cassidy: Behind the curtains.

Mr. Lapierre: Or behind the curtains, as my hon. friend suggests. But before the curtain falls at the end of the last act, Mr. Speaker, and before you call me to order, I should like to say that this motion has certainly helped the government to consider the situation within the CBC. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to tell us how seriously the government is taking the allegations of the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, and that he will stand in a little while to announce the establishment of a commission of enquiry. Let him speak, Mr. Speaker.

• (1630)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to dissociate myself completely, both personally and as a Member of the New Democratic Party, from the comments that were just made by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve.

[English]

I want to say a few words in English because there may well be Canadians watching the parliamentary television channel right now who are wondering what this debate is about, particularly when we reflect upon the fact that it is a CBC channel which is carrying the record of the House of Commons debates into Canadian homes.

The proposal by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) is to dissolve the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and establish a new broadcasting corporation devoted to Canada's cultural development. He wishes to terminate the present mandate of all members of the Corporation's Board of Directors and its offices abroad, including the management of CBC International, and he wants a mechanism for replacing the new corporation's management, including the ratification of their appointment by a parliamentary committee. Let me deal with these points in reverse order.

During the election campaign, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that there would be a means by which all appointments could be ratified or at least considered by parliamentary committees. Nothing has been done about that in the last eight months. Yet the Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve seems to indicate that we should focus on CBC-Radio Canada. I suggest it concerns a broader question to which we should have had answers by now. I urge the Hon. Member to consult with his Prime Minister and suggest some action.

I believe there can be only one purpose behind the idea to terminate the present mandate of all members of the Corporation's Board of Directors. The Conservative Party wants to take similar action with the CBC-Radio Canada as it did with Air Canada and VIA Rail. In other words, the Conservatives want to appoint Conservatives with a good record of service to the Party and put that above the service of the Board of Directors of CBC-Radio Canada to the people of Canada.

More important, if I understood the Hon. Member correctly, he is suggesting that all offices of the CBC abroad should be closed. He mentioned cities like London, Washington and Moscow. I presume that he believes that our news service abroad through the CBC should be shut down. That is the major activity in those offices abroad.

Perhaps he thinks we should no longer be trying to sell award winning programs like the Nature of Things around the world through the facilities of CBC offices abroad. He must believe that we should not seek to protect those kinds of images of Canada in other parts of the world.

The Hon. Member suggests that the management of CBC International should be shut down. I do not know if he wishes to terminate CBC International, but it broadcasts now in 12 different languages to Africa, Latin American and Europe. It is a major means of communicating what is happening in Canada. In fact, my hon. friends who have travelled to the United States will know that certain programs such as As it Happens from CBC Radio are regularly broadcast on public radio networks in the United States and are a very good voice for Canadians visiting our neighbours to the South.

The Hon. Member suggests that we should dissolve the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and establish a new broadcasting corporation devoted to Canada's cultural development. The mandate of the CBC is Canadian cultural development.

[Translation]

What I am afraid of particularly is that the comments of the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve will affect the future of the CBC. Even if we do have a problem with American penetration on television channels, even in English Canada in Ontario, in the Western provinces and of course in Quebec, the vehicle of French culture, of Canadian culture in French in Canada is Radio-Canada, and I fail to understand why the Hon. Member wants to get rid of all Radio-Canada services and all the executives and terminate the contracts of all the performers and producers and all those people who work on Radio-Canada's news programs in the hope that we might be able to improve services.

Mr. Speaker, I think such comments do a disservice to the people of Quebec who have been very well served by Radio-Canada.

[English]

I am suggesting that it is particularly irresponsible to say that Radio Canada, the French language service of the CBC, should be terminated. The Hon. Member should know that Montreal is the first or second largest production centre of French language programming anywhere in the world and that it rivals the one in Paris, France. Certainly in quality we can easily stand up to Radio Television Français. This has been accomplished by Quebeckers, Canadiens Français, and I find it totally irresponsible that the Hon. Member, who represents les Québécois, should make that suggestion.

I think it is totally irresponsible to suggest that the CBC English services should be disbanded and thrown to the six winds, as the Hon. Member suggests.

He is confusing a need which may exist for some cleaning out of the administration of the CBC on Bronson Avenue in the heart of Ottawa, with what happens in terms of programming. The Hon. Member may recall the report which came out on the CBC in 1960s, which said that the most important thing about the CBC is its programming, and everything else is housekeeping.

The institution has been with us for 50 years. There may be some need to improve the housekeeping. I have had some concerns that perhaps the cuts that have been imposed on the CBC by the Government have borne more on the programming content than on the administration, which does not actually deliver the programs. That is a specific problem on which I would not mind seeing some action. However, you do not throw the baby out with the bath water. You do not disband the CBC in order to reform it. It would be total wishful thinking to believe that we could, by terminating the CBC, establish and improve the service that would automatically enhance Canada's cultural development.

We must recognize that the problems facing the CBC now in terms of being an authentic voice for Canadian cultural development are related to the policies of the former Liberal Government, which are being continued by the new Government in terms of the misunderstanding of the mandate under the Broadcasting Act to use broadcasting in Canada as an instrument of Canadian cultural development.

The fact is that although that was the proposal in the Broadcasting Act, it has been substantially ignored. The situation has gone from bad to worse.

In the 1950s, the CBC was the vehicle of Canada's cultural expression, at least in television, because it was the only television in the country. With the creation of private broadcasting through the CTV, the CBC became responsible for half of the television broadcasting in this country. As a result of technological change which has permitted cable access to communities like Edmonton and Chicoutimi in the north, we have a situation where three-quarters of the television broadcasting in this country is not native broadcasting but comes from the United States.

In Europe they speak of the Canadianization problem. We think Canadianization is good, but in other countries Canadianization means the takeover of a country's broadcasting service by another country. Canada is the only major country in the world which allows its television broadcasting to contain the complete program output of another country. In our case it is the United States.

It is a fact that due to the neglect of the former Government and the present Government, a tremendous volume of television programming does not come from Canadian sources but from American sources. We must be aware of that situation and seriously address it. In considering this problem, let us not undermine and disband the major vehicle by which we identify and show Canadian cultural identity, the CBC and Radio Canada.

Let me comment on some of the points made in the Hon. Member's motion. The McKinsey review of the CBC indicated quite clearly that in operating in two official languages and covering a widely dispersed geography of 4,000 miles, the CBC faces more difficult and cost broadcasting challenges than do other public broadcasters. Notwithstanding that, the Corporation is substantially more efficient than other public broadcasters, measured by hours of programming output per employee and per dollar expenditures.

● (1640)

The major conclusion of the Auditor General's report a year or so ago was that the CBC needed long-term planning, but the CBC cannot do long-term planning unless it is assured of long-term dollars from the Government and neither the present nor the former Governments were prepared to make that particular commitment.

The McKinsey report said that, in comparison with the private sector:

—replacing the CBC with the private sector with its current economic structure would cost Canadians substantially more on a annual basis.

The CBC, despite some problems in delivering programs which may well exist, nonetheless, if you look at the over-all record, is quite extraordinary. The CBC produces twice as many hours of television programming per employee as other public networks. In prime time, Canadian content of the CBC runs 20 per cent to 40 per cent higher than CTV or Global. The CBC, which the Hon. Member wishes to disband, provides more prime time hours of Canadian content than both the CTV and Global combined.

Mr. Oberle: It gets a billion dollars for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member said that there should be wholesale firings at the CBC despite the fact that, according to polls conducted by Paul Audrey in 1984 and Martin Goldfarb in 1983, there is very strong support on the part of the Canadian public for the CBC's Canadian programming. Between 85 and 90 per cent of Canadians watch and listen to the CBC on a regular basis. Mr. Speaker, 75 per cent of Canadians believe that CBC programming should continue to provide an expression of our Canadian identity. Eighty per cent of Canadians believe there is not enough Canadian programming.

[English]

Despite all of that, the Hon. Member is not saying that we should have more CBC programming. He says we should get rid of it and then trust this new Government to ensure that something else will come in its place.

In prime time, less than 25 per cent of programming on television is Canadian. Of that, three-fifths comes from the CBC. Only 5 per cent of TV drama that we see on our air waves here in Canada is Canadian, most of it comes from the United States. I am talking about situation comedies such as "Dallas".

It is a deplorable fact that we are out-gunned 20 to 1 in terms of what appears on our air waves when it comes to drama. But 90 per cent of the t.v. drama which comes from Canadian sources is in fact Canadian. My hon. friend, the Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, is suggesting that we disband the CBC in order to have more sitcoms that come from Hollywood and from New York and Chicago. That would appear to be the case he is making, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the CBC is the only broadcasting company that has made a serious attempt to meet the Broadcasting Act, which calls for a broadcasting system that is predominantly Canadian.

If you want to speak about a Canadian cultural identity, "The National" on CBC reaches 5 million Canadians a week. Those are adult English-speaking Canadians. You are talking about 5 million Canadians a week out of a total audience in English Canada of perhaps 11 or 12 million adults. "The Journal" reaches 4 million Canadians a week. "The Fifth Estate", which is shown once a week, reaches 1.5 million Canadians a week. "Fraggle Rock" reaches 1.5 million children a week. "Tommy Hunter" gets 1.5 million people a week. "The Beachcombers" gets 1.25 million a week, a program that has entertained Canadians for years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about "The Friendly Giant"?

Mr. Cassidy: I would like to see "The Friendly Giant" there. "Hockey Night in Canada" brings in between 2 and 3 million Canadians.

When a program like "Chautauqua Girl" on CBC, rivalled by programs in the United States which are extraordinarily well financed, gets 2.6 million people, blowing "The A-Team" and stuff like that right out of the water, when "The Grey Fox", a Canadian film on the CBC, drew 2.1 million people, and "Hockey Night", the drama about a girl who was kicked off a boys' hockey team, drew 2.2 million viewers, let us stop short-changing what we Canadians can do and are doing through the CBC.

I would like to point out to my hon. friend that what we are getting for that $800 million we spend on CBC amounts to 10c. a day for my family. Actually I think it is a little bit less than that, about 8 or 9c. a day. The English t.v. network cost only $200 million. It is not that expensive. We get 4,700 hours of programming, of which 2,000 hours is produced by the CBC. The AM radio network gives 5,000 hours, the stereo network 6,000 hours—

The CBC French television network, which is costing us $138 million every year, has 6,000 hours of programming, including 3,500 hours produced by the CBC. That, Mr. Speaker, exceeds the quality and quantity of French TV programs in Paris. On French radio, the 6,500 hours of AM programs cost only $26 million a year, and on the French stereo network, only $8 million a year are spent for 7,000 hours of programs, including 6,000 hours produced by the CBC.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we have 22,000 hours of programming, half of them from the CBC directly or regional TV stations, the CBC's 18 English regional TV stations, and 2,500 hours of programming on the CBC French regional TV station.

I could continue my remarks, Mr. Speaker, but all that goes to show that we do have a very important institution which is part of our existence.

[English]

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, if I can find the quote, I would like to read a comment from David Suzuki, an eminent Canadian scientist and an eminent Canadian broadcaster. Mr. Suzuki has this to say:

> The CBC has been a mirror for us to see ourselves as a people, the scope of this land, the challenge and our problems. Without the CBC, we would be a very different people and the poorer for it. Today, when we seem hell-bent on a path to greater integration into a North American context, I can't think of anything more important than the CBC for preserving that sense of difference that keeps many of us in this country. But now the CBC is in danger from a poorly thought-out attack.

I would say to my hon. friend from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve that really this is a poorly thought-out attack. He endangers Radio-Canada, and the CBC, the English-speaking network. He should realize that that has been one of the vital links, along with institutions like the Canadian National, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Air Canada, which have helped bind this country together despite all the very strong influences from our North-South relationships with our friends to the South in the United States. The existence of the CBC for more than half a century has been one of the things that has enabled our country to maintain an independent sense of itself and has kept us from being swallowed up into the United States—

Mr. Cadieux: That is south of the border.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be rather difficult from time to time for my friends in Quebec to understand. We, English Canadians, feel especially threatened by the cultural expansion of our American friends from south of the border. Quebec can safeguard its culture thanks to Radio-Canada for instance, and also to the fact that Quebec being a French community on an English-speaking continent, the cultural and language barriers make it easier for Quebecers to maintain their own culture. But for us in English Canada, this is a very serious and difficult task. We see in the CBC one of the strongest supports for Canadian culture and identity in English Canada.

[English]

It is for all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that my Party and I entirely dissociate ourselves from this irresponsible and badly thought through resolution coming from the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve. We ask him to reconsider and to work with us in order to ensure that in future the CBC can do a more effective job in terms, as he put it in his resolution, of ensuring Canada's cultural development and the maintenance of our identity as a nation.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to address the motion before the House presented by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers). I may have only a few moments before the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod from the other place raps on the door. I am sure the Hon. Member would understand that if his motion passed, the lights would go out in this place and the CBC parliamentary service would be discontinued. However, on behalf of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). I want to say that we respect some of the viewpoints of the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve. He is a distinguished former President of the Union des Artistes in Quebec. He has reason to have very strong views about the Corporation, particularly about Radio Canada. However, I do not think it will come as any staggering surprise to him that the Minister of Communications and I will be arguing against his motion.

A few moments ago my colleague pointed out to the House that the Government had no control over CBC management under current legislation. We have no control precisely because it would hinder the Corporation from making truly independent program and journalistic decisions. He also referred to the importance of preserving the creative autonomy of the CBC. I should like to expand on this, if I may, for there is an implicit danger as I see it, particularly in the third part of his motion, which I feel should be articulated more explicitly.

The third part of the motion proposes the establishment of an appointment procedure for CBC management as distinct from its Board of Directors. The danger of interference in the CBC's day-to-day operations and administration, and especially in its programming matters, is something which concerns me and many of my colleagues, particularly those MPs like myself and like the NDP Member who spoke before me, who were trained in journalism.

Under current legislation, the Broadcasting Act, the executive vice-president is the only member of CBC management whose appointment is subject to ratification. The President of the Corporation recommends the appointee to the Board of Directors, and the Minister of Communications, in turn, recommends approval of the Corporation's appointment to the Governor in Council. In essence, the Corporation is the sole active agent in the appointment of its executive vice-president.

The Minister's recommendation to the Governor in Council acts as an indirect measure of accountability to the people of Canada. It is further desirable that Board of Directors appointments also involve some mechanism of accountability such as that described earlier by my colleague. However, senior management undertakes day-to-day operations and internal administration of the Corporation with the executive vice-president acting as the overseer. Especially with regard to program decision making, there should be no more involvement by government or Parliament. The CBC is free to appoint its senior management, and presumably selections are based upon the qualifications which perspective appointees have to offer to the competent administration of the Corporation and the Corporation's response to the needs of its audience.

I fear that if a parliamentary committee ratified CBC management appointments, the ability of the Corporation's management team to respond to the needs of Canadians, to respond effectively and decisively to the constantly changing Canadian broadcasting environment and to make competent, objective, independent decisions would be severely curtailed. How could a manager manage effectively when he or she is constantly looking over his or her shoulder? This is the kind of corporate planning that the third part of this motion could instil.

Recently the Minister of Communications reiterated the Government's commitment to public broadcasting, saying that the commitment was unswerving and fundamental. I should like to quote him. He said:

> There are some principles which are clear now, and which will remain unchanged . . . (These include) our commitment to the need for a national public broadcaster, to the service to the country that such a broadcaster must provide, and our commitment to this country itself . . . (Canada is) a nation of diversity, of differing goals and ambitions and methods . . . But above all, a nation of talent and expression and dynamism . . . a nation of greatness, which not only needs, but deserves, a public broadcaster equal to this greatness.

I simply do not see a CBC which would be equal to the greatness of Canada if it is forced to function in the kind of corporate environment this motion could create. This motion would contradict the Government's stated commitment to public broadcasting if it were allowed to pass, and programming would suffer.

Management is ultimately responsible for what we see and hear on the CBC. If CBC senior management appointees were to be ratified by a parliamentary committee as this motion proposes, there looms the potential for political or governmental interference in what we see and hear on the public network. I, for one, would find it difficult to trust the validity of news and information programming particularly. As a broadcast journalist by profession, I would be the first to jump up and down in protesting any involvement by Big Brother government in what we see and hear on the CBC. Simply knowing that the vice-president of news was appointed by a political process rather than by the Corporation itself would leave me to question everything I saw on "The National" or hear on "The World at Six". I wonder what viewers and listeners would think when the CBC reports on the parliamentary committee which would be responsible for ratifying the appointment of the manager who is ultimately responsible for the newscast in the first place.

This is not paranoia. This is fanciful hypothesizing. The motion would connect the CBC's programming, including news, to the political process. As has been argued countless times before, this is a dangerous connection to make. I can quarrel and have quarrelled, as have many of my colleagues, with the CBC's treatment of news stories and its occasional bias in one particular political direction, but the Corporation has the right to determine its own programming. Even if there were no actual influence, the conenction to the political process would still exist and would make the CBC be seen by the public to be influenced by political pressures. That perception alone would be enough to undermine the trust which Canadians put in the CBC's information programming.

That is what is really at issue here. How would the CBC be perceived by its audience? This is a significant issue in the consideration of the motion before us which so far has gone neglected. If I may, I should like to discuss this in the remaining few moments.

As I mentioned, I have no doubt that some Canadians disagree from time to time with information which is broadcast by the CBC or dislike the way it is presented. With respect to entertainment programming, well, we are all critics, aren't we? Certainly the CBC broadcasts programs which some Canadians do not like. There is no way it could possibly please everybody all the time when it is in the business of entertaining. No medium can.

To be sure, none of the media is perfect, not even the television stations for which I used to work in the parliamentary Press Gallery. However, they serve an important social function as purveyors of information. The CBC's function is perhaps the most important of all Canadian media, given its audience reach and its excellent reputation in news and public affairs programming. The CBC, like the private networks, like the newspapers and like the weekly magazines, does not always tell us what we want to hear, but we need to hear it all the same. Perhaps the CBC does not always inform us as completely or as accurately as we would prefer, or as completely and as accurately as more ideal news-gathering conditions might permit. However, the CBC, and indeed all the media, strive to be as objective, accurate, fair and professional as possible. In the case of the broadcast media, licensees can be called to account for their programming when they appear before the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission for licence renewal. The public has a certain amount of trust in the media as sources of information, particularly in television, as studies have shown. Given the CBC's reputation for excellence, I would not be surprised if Canadians trust its news and information programming the most.

This motion would cause an element of doubt to be introduced into the relationship between the CBC and its audience. This could be considered as preventing the CBC from fulfilling its mandate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. I recognize, on a point of order, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

• (1700)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that Black Rod is expected here in approximately 15 minutes. Under the circumstances, I have consulted with the representatives of the other Parties in the House. I think you will find there is unanimous consent that, notwithstanding any Standing Order, the sitting be suspended to the call of the Chair in order to accommodate the other Members.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House that the sitting be suspended to the call of the Chair?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered. I do now leave the Chair until later this day.

At 5.15 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.20 p.m.

STATUTE LAW (CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I confess to have been looking forward to debating the Government's proposal to implement the equality provisions of the Charter of Rights coming into effect, as they do, in the middle of this month.

In the previous Government we were at work on preparing to face up to the fact that many of our laws contain measures which create inequalities in our society. A project had begun where a group of law officers of the Crown had been given the task of reviewing statutes, over 1,000 in number, in light of the equality provisions of the Charter. They were to make recommendations to the Government for the removal of any aspect of discrimination, unfairness or inequality in those statutes. We did this because Parliament should act to remove these inequalities in order to bring our laws into compliance with the Charter to save ordinary citizens, particularly those who were disadvantaged under the present law, from the hardship, difficulty and costs of taking their cases to court. There is, of course, no doubt that they can take their cases to court because the Charter is now the law of Canada and the equality provisions will become part of that law as of April 18. In my submission and that of my Party it is not appropriate for Parliament to be engaged now in a decision about what the Charter should be. That is already settled, it is the law. How it is to be interpreted is a question for the courts to decide in the final analysis.

What we ought to have been doing is looking at all of the legislation in the country, following up on the project which had been begun, and changing that legislation to bring it up to the high standard which the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has established. Well, the present Government recognized its responsibility. If I can quote the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) in his discussion paper Equality Issues in Federal Law, and I intend to return to this again during the course of my remarks, the Minister noted at page 6:

> Section 15 reinforces the responsibility that governments have to shape laws, policies and programs to the goal of equality—

I would have judged this legislation by the Minister's own standard, that is, the responsibility of governments to shape laws to the goal of equality. Let us look at Bill C-27 and discover how close the Government has come to achieving the goal of equality by way of its legislation.

I think I can sum it up with a statement made by the Minister himself in a speech in Quebec City. He was talking about the responsibilities of removing discrimination and bringing our laws up to the high standard required by the Charter. He ended on a wistful note quoting from Robert Browning, saying: "Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp, Or what's a heaven for?" By that he meant that there will inevitably be a shortfall between what we would like to do with regard to removing discrimination and what we will actually achieve. According to Robert Browning and the Minister, that is sort of a good thing because it leaves room for progress and movement.

However, it is tragic that there is such a tremendous shortfall between what will be attainable and what the Government is required to do by the Charter. There is such a shortfall that Bill C-27 can only be called a cop-out and a very inadequate effort, if it can be called an effort at all to live up to the responsibilities imposed on government by the Charter.

The national Government should have assumed leadership in encouraging the provinces, which also have legislative responsibilities, to bring their own laws into compliance with the Charter. Far from providing leadership to the provinces, the Government seems to have reinforced a do-nothing approach. It has left it to the underprivileged groups in society which do not have equality under the law to go to court and argue their case.

I would like to remind Canadians that the national Government did not welcome the three-year period of time which was given to it and other governments to bring laws into compliance with the Charter. We would have preferred a shorter period of time, or no time at all, so that when the Charter was implemented in 1982 the process of bringing the laws into compliance with the Charter would have been overdue. We were pressured by the provinces to give them a period of time. Eventually three years was agreed to.

I would have hoped that the federal Government would have done its duty in that three-year period and would also have encouraged the provinces to do theirs. On the contrary, we now have legislation which does very little and which leaves private interest groups to continue to argue their cases. After I have gone through the legislation I want to turn to the other half of this package, the work of the parliamentary committee, and give my views and the views of my Party on its work.

What is in the Bill that has been put before us? Most of it is contained in Part V, the reform. This so-called reform is a very poor substitute for a true effort to bring the laws of Canada into compliance with the Charter equality provisions. Most of the changes are artificial, semantic, and without very much consequence. The greatest number of amendments are devoted to Acts governing merchant seaman, laker pilots and returned soldiers. Last week in the House one of the members of the Conservative Party argued that the very thickness of the Bill was some evidence of an effort by the Government to do something.

However, when you think of the small group of individuals in society that is affected by the merchant seamen legislation, the laker pilot legislation and the returned soldier legislation, you can see how very little has been done in the Bill. This is a group of Canadians who are entitled to have the laws that affect them brought into compliance with the Charter. However, when one looks at the amendments that are made in their interest, one can see how very little there is. Clause 74 and Clause 97 amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, adding widowers to those who can receive payments from the Fund. While that is fair, of course, it is very little.

Clauses 75 through 83 amend the Bankruptcy Act and present us with what can only be called non-amendments. Monumental and courageous changes are not to be found here. The Government has merely substituted the word "spouse" for the phrase "husband and wife" and the word "child" for the phrase "son and daughter". Clause 83, which amends subsection 190(2) of the Act, makes a recognition that debtors may be female as well as male and thus substitutes the phrase "debtors' creditors" for "his creditors". These are hardly what could be called the reform that the country was expecting when the Charter equality provisions were to come into effect.

Clauses 84 through 89 lower the minimum age for potential directors of co-op associations and applicants for farm syndicate loans from 21 years old to 18 years old. While this is a form of progress, these are changes which are nothing more than a recognition of the change of the age of majority which has been in effect in our country for the last 15 years. Such an amendment shows that the Government is lagging far behind the new realities brought forward in the implementation of the Charter. It would not be so bad to have these changes if some serious reform was also included in the legislation. However, it is obvious that nothing else has been added.

Clauses 90 to 93 amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act but they are also rather inconsequential. They substitute the phrase "surviving spouse" for the expression "widow or invalid widower". One must wonder if this is the limit of the imagination of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government in reforming the legislation. Where are the new ideas and new approaches that were promised by the Prime Minister?

Clauses 94 and 95 amend the Pilotage Act. Certain provisions have been deleted as a factor in the calculation of the interval between medical examinations. Now, pilots who are 55 years of age and over are required to submit to an examination only once every three years instead of once a year. We must note that no change is made in the rule which demands mandatory retirement of pilots at age 65.

Next, clauses 98 through 103, which amend the Canada Shipping Act, allow for the possibility that a woman who owns a ship will transfer it by marriage to her husband and that men may be mortgagees of the vessel transferred to them. Also, they substitute the words "mental disability" for "lunacy" and include "husband" in the definition of a near relative. In other words, it is a set of semantic changes that recognize that women, in relation to the Canada Shipping Act, may be carrying on the activities that are carried on by men.

We know that the rules of statutory interpretation recognize all of this anyway. Under the rules of statutory interpretation, "his" can be taken to mean "hers" where appropriate, such as in a case like this.

This is really a semantic exercise to which we have been treated by the Government. It is not at all an exercise in bringing the laws into compliance with the Charter requirement that there be no discrimination but fairness and equality.

Clause 104, which amends the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, eliminates the distinction between 16-year old boys and 17-year old girls, as far as the language of the statute is concerned. Again, it is not significant.

That is the sum and substance of the legislation. Taken as a whole, all of these changes show no attempt to instil our legislation with the same spirit that ensured the inclusion of Section 15 of the Charter. They mark a dismal failure on the part of the Government to perform its legislative duty. What is presented to the Canadian people is a mere recognition of language, semantic equality, and nothing of the social realities and possibilities. There is not to be found here any transformation of legislation which is commensurate with the high value placed by Canadians on the idea of equality.

The Government had an answer when it was criticized for doing pathetically little in the legislation: the Government not only prepared legislation but prepared a discussion paper. The Government established a subcommittee of the Justice Committee and I am pleased to be a member of that subcommittee. I can say that my Party intends to co-operate and support the work of that subcommittee. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) will be spending a lot of time working on that committee and will be the lead spokesman for our Party. We continue to believe that the concept of setting up that committee, giving it such a short time limit and a wide mandate and keeping it in the dark about some very important questions, shows that the Government is not serious about wanting to achieve equality.

I want to elaborate for a moment on some of the problems we see with the committee. In the first place we wanted a Charter of Rights and Freedoms for all Canadians because we recognized that even with the fundamental decency that characterizes Canadian society, there are minority groups and groups with a minority perspective that do not have the total and absolute approval of Canadian public opinion. The battle of these groups to achieve equality will be a tough one. They will be battling against public opinion. There is an educational job, in a sense, to be done to inform the Canadian people about the meaning to these minority groups of the kind of discrimination and hardship which is part of their daily lives. I refer, for example, to the handicapped for whom a great deal needs to be done to bring them to a positon of fair equality and access with other Canadians, to the benefit of our Canadian society. We recognized that by entrenching rights in the Charter for minority groups, by providing that these are rights recognized by law, they cannot be taken away from these groups by Parliament or by the legislatures. One recalls the ringing statements of our former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliot Trudeau. We were telling the Canadian people that their legislators can go so far but no further in diminishing their rights. That is what the Charter is about.

What is the discussion paper about? What is the committee about? It is another round robin exercise where the very groups we want to protect from majority public opinion will be submitted to the pressure of majority public opinion in the analysis of their rights.

I talked about the handicapped a moment ago. Let me pursue that. One of the things we anticipate is that providing equality for handicapped groups in our society will cost and may cost some pretty big bucks. It may be, for example, that every public building in this country will have to have a ramp entrance provided so that the handicapped in wheelchairs will be able to enter. There are no entrances like that in the Parliament Buildings right now. If they are to be provided and if the law will require that, I can see a government as cost-conscious and as fanatically dedicated to deficit reduction as this Government wanting to deny that kind of construction program across the country or wanting to phase it in over an unfairly long period of time.

In light of this kind of consideration, the chance of handicapped groups doing well and getting their rights before the kind of committee and in the kind of process which will be set up is not very likely. I say the same in connection with retirees who are retiring because they are required to by law. Are those laws valid? A committee is being asked to look at the question. There will be a kind of controversy before the committee. I suppose some groups will think about promotions which will not be available if mandatory retirement is removed. Some groups will be arguing that mandatory retirement should continue because of a vested interest. Others will see a vested interest on the other side. The decision will not be made on the basis of Charter principles. I am afraid a parliamentary committee will act the way a parliamentary committee should act. It will try to figure out what is public opinion. While I say that is the way it should act, in a sense it is regrettable that democracy works that way. It was because of a recognition that democracy works that way that we entrenched fundamental rights which are now for the courts to determine, not for legislatures, this Parliament or this parliamentary committee to determine.

I had a great deal more which I wanted to say, but in my remaining minute I want to indicate the wrong-headedness of dealing with this problem in the way the Government has. I call upon the Government to let us know what legal opinions it has received on the requirements to change legislation to comply with the Charter. That is really the way in which a parliamentary committee, if it is to operate, should operate. We are being kept in the dark about a process which I should like to describe in this thumbnail sketch. I think the law officers of the Crown did their job. They looked at over a thousand laws. They made legal opinions in many cases. Some of them might be deemed controversial, but in many cases they were able to give the Government advice that "this provision needs to be changed, that provision needs to be changed and probably this one does".

Did the Government bring forward the changes which were recommended? I do not think it did. I think it brought forward the absolute bare minimum and ignored the advice of the officers of the Crown. It will be one of our main purposes as a committee to try to find out from the Government what the law officers of the Crown have been saying and what are the many laws which ought to be changed. Let us go about doing our business, not just changing the grammar or gender in ways that really do not make any difference to anyone, given the Interpretation Act. Let us bring in the real changes which will make our laws comply with the equality provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-27 because it has at least one provision which, if allowed to stand, will cause a very grave injustice. Generally, as previous speakers have said, this Bill does not do very much. The arrangement of three years ago was that three years after the Charter came into force the Government, having had time to review the laws, would bring them into line with all provisions of the Charter, particularly the equality ones. As has been said by our critic, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and by other speakers, very little was done on substantive questions such as the equality of women. There were just a few little word changes.

However, one change has been made which some people might have overlooked. It could endanger the lives of refugees or of their families back home. Clause 112 makes a change which is against the interests and even the personal safety of refugees and their families.

First I refer to the old Subsections 29(2) and (3) of the Immigration Act. This is when a person has come to the airport and said "I am a refugee from another country". He then goes to an inquiry. In that inquiry he is supposed to make his claim to be a refugee. Subsection (2) states:

● (1130)

At the request or with the permission of the person with respect to whom an inquiry is to be held, an adjudicator shall allow any person to attend an inquiry if such attendance is not likely to impede the inquiry.

That is to say, at the request of the person who may be going to declare his refugee claim. If he or she wants other people to attend, they may be allowed to attend. Subsection (3) is very clear:

Except as provided in subsection (2), an inquiry by an adjudicator shall be held in camera.

There was good reason for that law. It was to protect the person who, as a result of his or her situation at that point, had to be one of the weakest and most defenceless people within our borders. That is being changed in this proposed law. It now reads:

An inquiry by an adjudicator may, on application therefor, be held in camera if it is established to the satisfaction of the adjudicator that the person with respect to whom the inquiry is to be held, or any interest of Her Majesty, as the case may be, would be adversely affected if the inquiry were conducted in public.

In other words, it is no longer given to the refugee claimant to say whether he wants the inquiry held in camera, whether he wants other people attending. How he or she may make that request and be overruled by the adjudicator.

I am not aware of any reason being given for this change. This is not one of the important changes, such as those previous speakers mentioned in the Shipping Act and so on. This change could cost the person his or her life or the life of a member of the family. It is very strange that, in the interest of justice, the Charter and equality, the Government should have chosen to make such a perverse and dangerous change in what was otherwise a satisfactory law.

The Government has a strange notion of equality. We see that illustrated in other sections of the Act; for example, with regard to women. With regard to the rights of a person applying for unemployment insurance while pregnant, we have the Bliss decision which says there is no discrimination against women on account of a decision against a person for being pregnant. You would think that the Supreme Court in that case was of the opinion that men or women could equally become pregnant. At any rate, there should have been an attempt to correct that in this law to make it clear that women should be protected fully, even when they are pregnant; but that was not done.

Likewise with the disabled, a committee had many hearings about the disabled and the disabled made many recommendations, some of them key recommendations; yet there is practically nothing reflecting that in this Act. The only thing that affects it is the change of one word in the Shipping Act concerning lunacy. Nothing else was done for the disabled.

In those cases it appears there is a perverse concept of equality and equal justice. The concept allows for the strong to be aggressive towards the weak. It says the Government should not interfere, in a contest between the strong and the weak, on behalf of the weak. Whether a person is weak personally and individually, perhaps physically, or whether a person is weak through belonging to a group which is at a disadvantage in society, the principle of justice would be that the law would give special protection to the weak.

Our law does that very clearly in another matter, a matter that is not reflected in this law today. I want to give it as an example. Nobody in his right mind would challenge it. Our Criminal Code makes it an offence for an adult to seek sexual relations with a child in a manner which, if the adult sought sexual relations with another adult, would not violate the Criminal Code. In other words, there is a concept of free choice which it is considered can be made by an adult, but cannot clearly be made by a child because the child could be under pressure or, being a child, ignorant. Therefore, an adult is not entitled to take advantage of a child because in that sense the child is considered weaker than the adult. That concept is in our law. It is a sound principle, a principle of justice. It does not say that the strong, in that case the adult, has equal rights with the weak, in that case the child.

We have made some progress in the Criminal Code with regard to assault by men against women, even married men against their wives. It has been clarified. On the whole whatever is the wording, the clear indication was that what was being done was to protect the person who might be physically weaker than the other and who also might be at an economic disadvantage because of her membership in an economically disadvantaged group.

That is the correct way to go to protect the weak against the strong. If there is a conflict of rights, as there very often is, then the obligation of a just, honourable and humane society is to ensure that, above all, the rights of the weak are protected. This is a principle that has been put forward very eloquently in the last couple of years by the bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Canada. They talked about the preferential option for the poor. They do not say that we have to give the rich and poor equal rights in all matters, or equal consideration, equal help or equal support. They say that the poor need special support, special protection because they are poor, because they do not have the strength of money and power.

In this case we are dealing with people who are extremely weak, extremely powerless. A man or woman may come here on the run from another country, perhaps with children, in fear of their lives. They come to Canada and they want to be refugees. If this law is adopted in the form asked for by the Government, they will have to make that declaration in an open court if the adjudicator decides that they do not have good reason for holding the inquiry in camera. The benefit of the doubt is with the adjudicator instead, as before, being with the refugee claimant.

What good purpose is served by this change? I cannot imagine that it benefits the adjudicator to have that power of choice absolutely in his or her hands and which originally was absolutely in the hands of the refugee claimant. I cannot see how the adjudicator loses by letting the refugee claimant make the decision whether others should be allowed in the hearing or not.

Perhaps a media reporter may want to come in. The media reporter might lose in the sense that on that day he or she may not be able to write a story about a human interest case. There might be some genuine loss or deprivation to a reporter in that sense, but consider the other side. If news of that person's refugee claim comes out in a public way and that person is known to have made certain accusations against the Government of his or her country, and if that person's refugee claim is not sustained in Canada, and many times that happens, that person must return to his or her country to a government that has learned that he or she made as unfavourable statement. That person might be persecuted or have his or her life endangered. I know Canada has a commitment not to refuse people who would be in danger if they were to return to their own country even when they are not accepted here. However, how does a refugee claimant know that he will be accorded that kind of protection? How does he know that that judgment will be made in his favour and that he will not be sent home? Further, how does he know that his wife, brother or sister back home may not be persecuted on account of the news that he made a refugee declaration in Canada? There is simply no comparison between the possibility of a media reporter being deprived of an interesting story and the possibility of a refugee or a refugee's relative being persecuted and perhaps killed because of a story that was published.

I have not heard anyone who deals with refugees, any of the lawyers, church people, ethnic, immigrant or community groups, make any complaint about the old Subsection 29(2) and (3) of this law. None of them has suggested that it is unjust. I have not heard any complaint from immigration officials indicating that that Section is unjust. I have not heard of any reason why that Section should be changed. I very much urge the Government, in committee, to reconsider Clause 112 of this law and delete it. Otherwise, the Government may have the blood of innocent refugee claimants or their families on its hands.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments regarding the Hon. Member's speech? Since there are no questions or comments, I would like to resume debate.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is with suitable humility that I address the House today on behalf of the people of Ottawa-Carleton. I am pleased to address a Bill of my choosing in this Chamber for the first time.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, my riding is not far from here. Some Hon. Members live in Ottawa-Carleton. For those who do not, I can assure them that it represents a cross-section of Canada and has a challenging mixture of urban and rural areas. It has a linguistic balance of our two official languages that is a remarkable reflection of our country.

Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, was first introduced to the House on January 31, 1985, along with a discussion paper entitled Equality Issues in Federal Law written by the Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Crosbie), a man for whom my respect, esteem and personal indebtedness is second to none.

[Translation]

The Minister also announced the appointment of a special subcommittee of the House, before which Canadians across Canada will be able to express their views. This committee can and should serve as a privileged access to parliamentarians for minority groups who want to explain the kind of changes they would like to see in our legislation.

[English]

Bill C-27 proposes to bring 50 federal statutes into conformity with our Charter of Rights and Freedoms that will come into effect on April 17, 1985. That date is an important one in Canadian history. On April 17, 1855, Charlottetown became a city. As we all know, the British North America Act evolved in Charlottetown a few years later.

In 1982 federal lawyers began a systematic review of the statutes to see where amendments were needed to ensure compliance. This was an enormous undertaking as there are more than 1,100 federal laws of general application. As did the Minister, I too offer them my congratulations for the success of their tedious task.

[Translation]

This Bill will amend the Bankruptcy Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Weights and Measures Act, the Customs Act, the National Parks Act, the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act and other legislation.

[English]

In short, it will have an impact on the lives of the people of my riding as well as all Canadians. It will have an impact on the lives of my immediate family, some of whom are in the Chamber today. My pride in representing them is one that has taught me the importance of family, friends, loyalty and the determination to do what is right when it is right, at the right time. For this I am grateful.

[Translation]

The riding of Ottawa-Carleton has both rich and poor neighbourhoods, a number of small businesses, and a very substantial federal presence—the National Research Council, to be exact.

[English]

In recent times it has been represented by the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), Mrs. Jean Pigott and the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin. In fact, on February 17, 1977, in what she called her bachelor speech, Mrs. Pigott also addressed issues concerning Canadian human rights when she spoke so eloquently of the discrimination against handicapped Canadians. We have come some distance since then but there is much further to go. The Terry Foxes and Steve Fonyos of our country have made us acutely aware of the fact that our handicapped are also our people.

When you land at the Ottawa International Airport, Mr. Speaker, you are in my riding. As you taxi along the tarmac, I ask you to think of previous Tory candidates who paved the way for my political success, candidates like Colonel Strome Galloway, Bill Neville, Jean Pigott and Bert Lawrence.

In the area of equality rights, the review of federal statutes by Bill C-27 turned up some inconsistencies including, for example, inconsistencies in the age of majority. Some statutes require a person to be 18 years of age whereas others require the age of 21. It underlined some outworn assumptions, particularly the assumption that breadwinners are always men and dependants always women. It identified some social conventions that may or may not stand up to court challenges under Section 15 of the Charter; in particular, mandatory retirement at the age of 65.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), my eastern political neighbour, referred to mandatory retirement at age 65 as being discriminatory, and I agree with him. However, Senator Croll's study of a few years ago indicated that a very small percentage of Canadians wish to continue working at age 65. They should, however, be given that option. Our population is aging and we will need their presence, their experience, their skills and knowledge and their will to go on working in a meaningful way.

There is no easy answer. We must find out what Canadians want. First we will listen, then we shall act.

[English]

When I think of human rights and equality in Canada, I am reminded of the tremendous violent discriminations that are occurring in many countries of the world like the Republic of South Africa, Sri Lanka, the Soviet Union and many Latin American countries. I am also reminded of the peace, order and good government that is the general rule of law here at home. I will concede that we have our problems, such as discrimination in the Indian Act, but Bill C-31 is finally attempting to eliminate some of this discrimination. As a member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I can testify to the intense effort that we are all making in that regard.

We can only have equality when we are all equal, and even our great democracy has some kilometres to run. Although I shall be out of the country on April 17, I will take time to pause for a few moments as Canada takes a large step in the maturing process of nationhood. I will also renew my pledge to this nation.

Although I am not a lawyer, I realize that action must be taken to improve the compliance of our laws with the Charter, and it must be done before April 17. Bill C-27 is an important step in the right direction.

[English]

It is also in accordance with one of the themes of social justice underlined in the Speech from the Throne of November 5, 1984, as read by Her Excellency the Governor General. She said:

> My Government is determined to ensure that social justice in Canada keeps pace with the changing needs and circumstances of our people.

● (1150)

The new Government continues to pursue and support economic equality for women because we can only have equality when we are all equal in all respects. Let us replace the expression vive la différence with vive l'égalité.

The new Government is increasing employment opportunities for women in government and its agencies. It is also preparing amendments to the Divorce Act. The new Government will seek provincial co-operation in providing additional assistance to the victims of family violence, including child abuse which is a most despicable and regrettably increasing human act.

On a recent visit to Quebec City, Mr. Speaker, during a tour of the new musée du Séminaire, I was warmly reminded of the fundamental importance of the family in a painting of the holy family with Jesus helping Mary and Joseph at the carpentry bench. Increased family violence is a clear signal that the most important foundation of our entire civilization is being threatened.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) said that his Party would vote in favour of Bill C-27. He also added—

[English]

> We will continue to press for full equality. We want to ensure that equality becomes a reality in the very near future.

So does this Government and so do I. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who has also spoken during this debate, said that the disabled and handicapped—> —should demand that the Government finally accept its responsibility to change laws to implement full equality for the disabled.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, so let us not take forever to do this. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) indicated that Bill C-27 has been referred to as housekeeping legislation. Perhaps it is, but usually when one cleans a house very thoroughly, one has to first rearrange some furniture. Bill C-27 is doing just that. The special committee chaired by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), has been given a significant responsibility, as was described by the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch) in this debate. He said, and I quote:

The Government considers it most important that we have the widest possible consultations with the people of Canada.

Sometimes our actions are better judged by the way outsiders see us, and I would like to read from an editorial entitled "A Better Canadian Way" which was reprinted from the Washington Post in the international Herald-Tribune on November 17, 1984, and I quote:

Mr. Mulroney is going to try another method, a series of consultations throughout his country to work toward a common purpose.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we shall soon be ratifying Bill C-27, but I sincerely hope that the special committee that will shortly be sitting in a number of Canadian cities will also reach its conclusions as soon as possible. We must get to work in order to give the word "equality" more meaning and adopt the amendments that Canadian women, the disabled, minority groups and others have been demanding so desperately.

[English]

We are maturing as a nation, Mr. Speaker. We are growing as a people and we are able to stand up as an example to the whole world as a nation of honesty, integrity, compassion and fairness. The only limitations we have in this country are the ones we place upon ourselves. Let us speak more of our pride, of our successes and of our accomplishments, and let us learn from our shortcomings and our failures. Bill C-27 is paving part of a path to April 17 when every individual will become equal before and under the law. I am proud to have added in this small way to part of that pathway.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, by telling you a true story. Fifteen years ago I was living and working in a village in northern Tanzania in East Africa. It was called Kiswani. As we drove by the village one day, we stopped at a water fountain to get something to drink. A young girl was standing there and she saw me get out of the Land Rover with my binoculars around my neck. She was somewhat fascinated by these binoculars as she had never seen any before. I bent down and let her look through them. All of a sudden the faraway village and houses became very close to her. She was fascinated by this. That young black girl clasped my hand and took me down a dusty road to her village. She was saying mzungu wangu which means "my white man". She had adopted me on the spot. I was indelibly impressed by that moment because that lovely innocent little child had no fear, no discrimination and no prejudices. That, to me, Mr. Speaker, is what life should be all about.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his speech. His good faith and personal commitment to reform is obvious in the remarks he made. However, I cannot help but wonder whether he feels that the Bill which has been presented really achieves anything like the kind of goal which was expressed by the general tenor of his remarks. I want to ask the Hon. Member if he does not feel that the Government could have done a great deal more in the legislation to produce conditions of equality rather than just sending it off to a committee? Is he aware of any of the studies which were done showing all of the laws which needed to be changed and which have not been embodied in Bill C-27? Is the Hon. Member willing to press for changes in the legislation now in some of these obvious other areas where the legal opinions clearly require that the laws be brought into conformance with the Charter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Certainly the Bill is not as comprehensive as we would like it to be at this point in time. I mentioned it was dealing with certain housekeeping items, and that is a fact. I think we have to get some of those statutes cleaned up and that is the purpose of the Bill. As far as being aware of some of the other studies and recommendations which have been made over the years, yes, I am aware of them. I have read Equality Now and Obstacles. I am in full agreement with the Hon. Member that this House and the Government should be moving as quickly as it can to create the changes in our laws which will make all people of this country as equal as possible.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I also would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for his personal convictions. At the same time I would certainly like to pick up on the question asked by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). A lot of talk has been bandied back and forth about what "we" did in the interim, but I would suggest that perhaps the debate should focus on who brought in the whole Charter of Rights and Freedoms, who began this process back in 1980-81, and who was against that process in 1980-81, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member made the analogy that we have to rearrange the furniture in the room first. I submit that in rearranging the furniture, the Conservative Government might have moved the coffee table here and there but it certainly left the sofas and the dining room table in the same place. I would ask the Hon. Member again—because I do not think he answered the Hon. Member for York Centre—why his Government chose to move on 50 statutes which were very minor, very clear, and about which there were certainly no differences among the three political Parties in this House? Why did the Government decide to sidestep the more real and sensitive issues facing minority groups across this country? Would the Hon. Member give me his information on that? Could he inform this House why his Government chose that path rather than the more comprehensive one alluded to in his speech?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to personal convictions. Without personal convictions, Mr. Speaker, I would not be in this Chamber and we would not be the Government of Canada. Without personal convictions, Mr. Speaker, I think our time here would be rather irrelevant. I believe I tried to give that message in what I said.

I would like to refer to Article 28 of the Charter. It was put there by our Party which is now the Government, and it was done with tremendous input from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Article 28 refers to the equality of men and women. In that context, as Opposition members we had significant input into the creation of the Charter. We have not moved all of the furniture but we are certainly moving in that direction.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he feels that the number of amendments which could have been brought forth, thereby saving tremendous time, energy and money by minority groups and women's groups, was affected by the Bill which is being proposed? Are there not holes that he feels require government action rather than forcing these groups back to the courts to insist upon their rights?

• (1200)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), particularly since I made a number of references to the women of Canada in my comments. No Bill is perfect. Certainly there may have been opportunities for more amendments, but I also referred to the tremendous effort that went into reviewing the statutes we are now discussing. This Bill was not designed to answer all of the problems of the minorities, the handicapped or women. That will come.

When the Minister introduced this Bill, he announced a committee of the House which is chaired by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), a man for whom all of us have tremendous respect, and I am convinced that as he travels across the country with the committee to get the input we feel we need, we will then bring in the legislation required to answer her concerns.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, April 17 will be a very important day in the history of Canada because on that day Section 15 of the Charter will come into effect. Because people follow this debate at different times, I think I should refer for a minute to Section 15. It will guarantee for Canadians equality before the law despite their race, religion, ethnic origin, sex, age and so on. It will assure that they will not be discriminated against on those bases. What is very important about Section 15 is that it is a constitutional provision, which means that it cannot be amended unless the federal Parliament and seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population agree to do it together. So that Section is very secure against hasty amendment.

Secondly, it is extremely important because, as it is in the Constitution, it prevails over every other federal and provincial law. This means that any ordinary law passed by a federal or provincial Parliament will be subject to the anti-discrimination provisions of Section 15. That section will strike down many of the discriminatory laws and regulations and practices we have had in this country for many years.

Many of those here now and who were here in the last Parliament will know that I voted against the Charter and the constitutional Bill on the final vote. I did so for very specific reasons, but not because I was against Section 15, an entrenched Charter of Rights or an amending formula. As a matter of fact, I was fully supportive of the constitutional package when it came out of the joint committee near the end of June, 1981. However, once the provinces got hold of that constitutional package in the early fall, they almost took apart many of its outstanding provisions and left it in a very weakened condition. In particular, it was the provinces which imposed the inclusion of the famous "notwithstanding" clause in Section 33. This meant, in effect, that a province or the federal Parliament can pass a law overriding Section 2 of the Charter, dealing with fundamental freedoms, as well as overriding Section 7 to Section 15, including Section 15, by simply saying in their ordinary statute: "Notwithstanding Section 7 or Section 8 or Section 15 of the Charter, we legislate as follows and our law will prevail". That sort of opting out of those provisions of the Charter is permitted for five years and can be repeated again.

That, Mr. Speaker, was one of the things which led me to vote against the final package. Despite the fact that I was in favour of many things in the Charter, I could not tolerate that and I thought some Members should rise and vote against it on that basis. I of course was also very disappointed with the amendment the provinces imposed with respect to aboriginal rights and language rights. As a matter of fact, in the Charter right now there is inequality in the sections respecting language rights.

The Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is here and I might say, because she intervened in this debate, that I think the House should know that most of the provinces who fought against an entrenched Charter of Rights were Conservative Governments; not the Government of Ontario or the Government of New Brunswick, but the western provinces and Nova Scotia and Newfoundland did oppose those sections. They were successful in knocking out the section dealing with women in the early fall of 1981, and successful in knocking out the aboriginal rights section. It was only after large demonstrations on Parliament Hill that compromise sections were put back in the Charter. We must remember that there were many, not her but many Members of her Party, who fought against entrenchment for many years. They were against it in principle. There were some Conservative Governments and Conservative Members in this House who favoured an entrenched Charter of Rights, but a lot of them did not and a lot of Conservative provincial premiers did not.

While Section 15 was passed into law in 1982, its implementation, was delayed for three years so that the provinces, the federal Government, private groups and associations and businesses could prepare for its implementation because it could and will have very far-ranging effects. That three years was to be used for preparation of such things as the provision of ramps and access for disabled people, and so on, which requires time and money. It always had been the view of the previous Government to bring in a Bill which would bring all federal laws and ordinances into line with the equality provisions of the Charter.

I was a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs over the last four or five years and every time the Minister appeared on Estimates I asked him about the review which was underway to bring federal laws and regulations into accord with the Charter, especially with Section 15. He would report progress to me on every occasion. We were moving ahead. Of course, the reason for that, as has been mentioned, was that despite the fact that Section 15 would go into effect on April 17, 1985, we did not want to leave it to ordinary citizens and their small resources to go to court to prove that certain laws were ultra vires with respect to Section 15. We thought it would be better, and everybody agreed, to bring in a Bill which would bring into line our federal laws and thereby save individuals, businesses and groups from spending a lot of money on going to court to prove their point in accordance with the equality provisions of the Charter.

The present Government has brought in a similar type of Bill, the Bill we are discussing today, to amend 50 laws which require changes in accordance with the Charter. However, only 11 of those 50 relate to changes with respect to the equality section. The changes that Bill C-27 will implement are, for the most part, very minor. It changes the word "husband" to the word "spouse" and uses the word "persons". The Bill is very limited, timid and minimal. It does not attempt to bring into line many of the controversial laws of Canada which will probably be challenged in court unless something is done quickly.

Our position is that although the Bill moves in the right direction, making necessary amendments to federal laws, it does not go far enough. It does not cover many of the areas it should have. Rather than addressing those issues in the Bill, the Government has published Equality Issues in Federal Law: A Discussion Paper. This discussion paper lists most of the controversial issues. A Justice subcommittee has been asked to hear evidence across the country with respect to these issues and to produce a report.

I will mention some of the issues contained in this discussion paper, but which are not in the Bill, which that committee will deal with. They include discrimination on the basis of age, mandatory retirement provisions, and provisions for age of minority. Those issues are not dealt with in the Bill. They were left for the subcommittee to discuss across the country. Also left out of the Bill are issues relating to sexual discrimination. Those issues are subjected to discussion across the country. Also left out are issues with respect to disabled people.

It may be reasonable to have discussions across the country if we had not had them in recent years. However, several years ago the Royal Commission on the Status of Women dealt with many areas of discrimination against women. The evidence and report are still available to be examined. We had a report entitled Obstacles which dealt with discrimination against disabled people. Parliamentarians in the last Parliament spent more than a year travelling across the country and listening to evidence with respect to discrimination against disabled people. A special task force of Parliament dealt with racial discrimination and discrimination against visible minorities. It produced an excellent report called Equality Now. The Special Committee on Indian Self-Government dealt with many issues of discrimination against Canadian Indians. There was a special committee in the Senate which dealt with the problems of the aged and aging just a few years ago.

These issues have been studied, discussed and consulted on. It is time to move ahead. The problem is that many of those issues require tough decisions. It seems that the Government does not want to make decisions. It is going to travel across the country and consult on these issues one more time and then make recommendations.

I wonder how credible the consultative process of the subcommittee will be. I am not casting aspersions on the Chairman who is sitting the House today. However, as the subcommittee travels across the country it will hear many of the same things that were heard by the Obstacles committee and the Equality Now committee. Will they take it seriously? Will the decisions be made by the members of the subcommittee on the basis of that evidence, or will the decisions be made by the Cabinet and caucus here in Ottawa, regardless of what is said to that committee in different parts of the country?

I hope that after listening to the evidence across the country the committee will recommend the tough choices to be made. So far I have been given no hope in that respect because we have not seen to many Conservative back-benchers coming forward with recommendations or conclusions which are at variance with the Government. We will wait and see what happens as a result of that committee.

I would like to put our position again very succinctly, Mr. Speaker. The Bill should have covered a much wider area in order to save Canadians from going to court to prove that they have equality rights such as will be implemented by Section 15 on April 17. The Bill should have covered a much wider area to save litigation fees and loss of time. In the last few years the court challenges program applied only to constitutional challenges with respect to language rights and minority education. Many of us hope that that program will be expanded to help people who have no means of raising funds to go to court to prove their case with respect to the equality provisions. That is very important.

What is the use of implementing charters of rights with entrenched rights and of having human rights and language rights legislation if the people who would benefit cannot go to court because they do not have the resources to make these challenges? If it is to be meaningful for the minorities in the country, something must be done to help them challenge laws, practices and regulations to allow them their rights and justice in accordance with Section 15.

I am pleased to note that the women of the country are organizing themselves very well. They are organizing a fund to permit them to go to court when necessary to assure their rights in accordance with the Constitution. Many groups are able to do that because they are big enough and have the necessary connections. However, others do not, and I hope the Government will expand the court challenges program to enable people to take advantage of their rights in the Charter.

I urge the members of the Justice committee to consider expansion of Bill C-27 into areas it has not already addressed so that immediately after the passage of the Bill Canadians will understand where they stand with respect to their entrenched rights.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, where has the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) been for the last five years when people were pointing out the pitfalls that were arising from the very poorly phrased and not very well considered legislation which has generated this piece of legislation? Why were these speeches not made at that time rather than after the fact? These things should have been corrected at the time that that legislation was being introduced to form a new constitution. In spite of the fact that most of the items which are addressed in this Bill, and which have been addressed in the remarks in this House, were put forward to the government of that day, it was in a mobile situation with total resistance to recommendations for modification in that plan as it was introduced. Why are we finding fault with it now rather than at a time when we could have been contributing to a better structure than we have now?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am not clear as to the purport of the Hon. Member's question, but if he is asking why Section 15 of the Charter was not drafted in such a way as to avoid any misinterpretations of federal laws and statutes, then my answer is that the Constitution deals with general provisions. It does not deal with detailed provisions.

All constitutions are the same. The American and French Constitutions do not go into detail with respect to every situation in life. They pronounce on certain great principles. Section 15 pronounces on anti-discrimination situations and situations of equality before the law. It would have been completely unreasonable to refer to all the statutes that would be affected under Section 15 of the Charter. Section 15 of the Charter will apply to all federal laws, all situations and all practices.

That is the way it is in the United States. There are general provisions in the human rights amendments to the constitution. It was over many years that groups in the United States were able to prove that their rights were being violated by certain state and federal laws and that the constitution prevailed with respect to equality. Many laws in the United States discriminated with respect to the equality of black people. I believe it was only in 1954 that the famous Brown case was ruled on by the Supreme Court of the United States in accordance with the general principles in the American Bill of Rights. The court said that those laws in the South which segregated blacks and whites in education and socially were illegal.

My answer is that the Constitution cannot and should not get into the details of every federal law, statute, regulation and so on. The Constitution provides for principles in general terms and that is what we have done. As soon as this section was drafted and passed by the House, by Parliament and all but one of the provinces, the Government immediately took a review of all federal laws to see which ones might be in contravention of the principle enunciated in Section 15. It was the Government's intention to put forward a Bill which would remove those discriminatory sections. As a result of the leadership conventions and the election, the Bill was never passed.

While I am pleased that the Government is following this up, the Bill it has introduced is too limited in its scope. It is on that basis that I object to it.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to hear the Hon. Member ever question the indirectness of an answer from a Cabinet Minister. He knew how to dog dance when he was a member of Cabinet. He was an artist at it and he has prolonged that art to this day, as shown by his answer.

All of the frailties, legislative changes and pitfalls of constitutional phraseology were placed before the House of Commons committee which undertook the study of that constitutional legislation. There is not one pitfall outlined in this Act or mentioned by the Hon. Member that was not addressed. There are many other pitfalls which still need to be addressed. We ignored the weaknesses in the phraseology of constitutions in other lands. The Government of the day assumed that it had perfection in its phraseology. Now we are quibbling over the legislation that is trying to amend a very poorly phrased Constitution. That is my point.

I expect that the time remaining to the House to question the Hon. Member will be taken up by his dog dancing.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Hon. Member is not familiar with what happened.

Mr. McCain: I am very familiar.

Mr. Allmand: Listen for a second and you might learn something. After the long hearings by the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, a report was unanimously agreed upon by all Parties in the House. It was a good report to which the Government agreed. In other words, many of those changes that were recommended by witnesses from across the country were agreed to. The Government made many amendments. The Hon. Member says no, but the record will show that the Government made many amendments.

Mr. McCain: Capitulated.

Mr. Allmand: The members of his Party agreed to them. The point is that we had a good package as a result of the joint committee hearings. The reason that package is not good now is that the provinces got involved in the following summer and introduced many provisions which weakened the Charter. For example, there is the notwithstanding clause and the clause respecting Indians in which we had to put in the word "existing", which made the clauses ambiguous.

We had a good resolution before the provinces became involved. The Members of the House and the Senate who listened to witnesses throughout the country put together a package that was not as ambiguous as the present package. Once we were able to get all the provinces but one to agree, the result was a package that has many ambiguities. It was not due to the consultative process or the wishes of the Government. As a matter of fact, as a result of the changes that had to be made in order to get the provinces on side, Prime Minister Trudeau said he would put it through, but holding his nose.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) that the original proposals brought forward by the Liberal Government with respect to principles to be embodied in the Charter were a great deal different from what was finally adopted. It took great pressure on the part of native organizations, civil liberties organizations, church groups and women's groups to get the former Liberal Government to amend the original proposals for the Charter in order for it to become the worth-while Charter that the Hon. Member spoke about.

Why did his Government not deal with some of the very important restrictions on Canadians? According to the Charter, they can only be changed as a result of Canadians going to court. That will be a long and expensive process. For example, there are many provisions in the War Measures Act which violate the rights guaranteed under the Charter. The Hon. Member will recall when at least 350 people were incarcerated without cause and were never charged during the FLQ situation in Quebec. They were never charged, prosecuted or found guilty.

He knows that the Official Secrets Act provides for serious penalties against those who give out information which has been classified as confidential. He also knows that almost everything is classified as confidential. Will he explain why his Government did not take action to deal with many of these important civil rights principles?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked two questions. First, he pointed out that the original draft proposal for the Charter needed improvements. Many witnesses came before the committee to make recommendations for change. I was on the committee and I was involved in the process. The Government did accept many of those changes. By the time the committee had reported in January of 1981, I believe, it had developed a good package. It was the provinces that began taking it apart again. The Hon. Member should not be too critical.

It was the NDP Government in Saskatchewan that objected to many of the worth-while provisions. That Government was at variance with the NDP caucus here in Ottawa. Premier Blakeney did a lot to knock out some of the worth-while provisions that were agreed to in this House by the entire House and the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. The Hon. Member was right. Improvements were made; the Government agreed to the improvements and it was the provinces that weakened the Charter.

With respect to all the other matters, I agree with him. There is much to be done. I campaigned myself against many of the issues that he raised today even though I was a Member on the Government side. I rose in this House on many occasions to bring out those very same issues. At the same time, progress was made. It was the Liberal Government that introduced the Canadian Human Rights Act and the Canadian Human Rights Commission. It was the Liberal Government that set up the Obstacles and Equality Now committees, the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, and many of the other things that led to the equality rights provisions. There is still a lot to be done. A lot was done and we did not always have the co-operation of the Hon. Member's Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Party that I represent, the New Democratic Party, and its predecessor, the CCF, had from the beginning of its foundation back in the 1930s supported the idea that there should be inserted into Canada's Constitution a bill of rights. Although the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) indicated a moment or two ago the NDP Premier of Saskatchewan during the debate disagreed with that policy, it was a fundamental principle our Party had adopted and supported over these many years. Because we believed in it, we supported the inclusion during the constitutional debate in the Constitution of Canada of a Charter of Rights. We did so because we remembered so many instances in Canadian history when the rights of individuals or groups had been very seriously restricted.

Let me mention a few of those. We had the situation in the Province of Quebec when the then Union Nationale Government headed by Premier Duplessis persecuted and prosecuted the Jehovah's Witnesses. We had a situation in western Canada in my province of Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and in Alberta when numerous groups, including municipal leaders, had called for restrictions on the rights of the Hutterite communities to live as they wished and to expand their colonies as their populations grew.

We had a situation during World War II in which we are now all agreed that a tremendous injustice was done to the Japanese people then living in the Province of British Columbia. When Canada went to war with Japan, all people of Japanese origin, both citizens and non-citizens, none of whom had been involved in espionage or sabotage, were moved from their homes to other parts of Canada. They lost their homes and businesses. They experienced tremendous difficulties. This move was made only because they were Japanese.

In the Province of Newfoundland when the International Woodworkers of America Union tried to organize the people who worked in the forests of Newfoundland, very repressive legislation was brought forward by then Premier Smallwood and that union was destroyed.

Because we knew Canada's record had not always been what it should be, we supported the proposal that the Charter of Rights be included in our Constitution. We did so particularly because we realized that in recent years there has been a tremendous movement into Canada of large numbers of immigrants from countries where the language spoken is neither English nor French. For example, from Italy, Spain, Portugal, from eastern European countries including Yugoslavia, Hungary and Poland, and even more so from countries in Asia and Africa with their non-white populations. We realize this movement has created and would create among many people living in Canada feelings of prejudice and discrimination. We all know about the feelings of prejudice and discrimination against the original habitants of Canada. I am referring to our native people, most of whom live in poverty. They have the poorest education, the poorest housing, the lowest health standards and the highest rate of unemployment of any Canadians. Because of those kinds of situations, we supported the passage of the Charter of Rights. We had hoped when it came to reviewing the legislation, which ought to be changed because their provisions are not in conformity with the principles included in the Charter, that the Government would recognize that many of our laws, regulations and policies conflict in important ways with the principles set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, not just in Section 15, Mr. Speaker, but in many other sections.

We find the Government and the Official Opposition have not dealt with these important questions that should have been dealt with. I refer to a few of them, such as freedom of association, freedom of speech and fundamental legal rights which our citizens should have. These are just a few issues that have to be dealt with but which are ignored in this Bill.

This Bill avoids dealing with the most important human rights issues which confront us. Essentially what we have is a housekeeping Bill. As my colleague the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has indicated, we will support it realizing that it is a very small step in the direction in which we must move.

Let me deal with some of the issues and problems not dealt with in this Bill and which I believe should have been dealt with. Unless they are dealt with and unless some of the laws are changed, what we will see in the next few years is a large number of important human rights cases that will wend their way from the lower courts up to the Supreme Court of Canada before they are decided. This will create difficulties for people who feel they are not being fairly treated, not being dealt with as the provisions of the Charter say they should be People will therefore have to take their cases to court, which will take years and tremendous expense will be involved.

Let me deal with a few of the issues which I believe should have been dealt with. First is the principle of freedom of speech. Most Canadians believe they have the right to say what they want to say, but there are important restrictions on what they can say. I should like to give a few illustrations of that fact.

It is still an offence to subject the courts to public contempt or ridicule. In 1969 a university student in the Maritimes went to jail for 10 days for writing and publishing an article indicating that a certain trial was a mockery of justice and that the courts were instruments of the corporate elite in the decisions which they made. The courts say that people who speak about them have to avoid invective. If someone writing about the courts avoids invective, readers will not even want to read it.

Defamatory libel is still in the Criminal Code. To injure a person's reputation by subjecting him or her to public hatred, contempt or ridicule, is an offence. In 1969 the Georgia Strait newspaper in Vancouver was prosecuted and convicted because it gave its Pontius Pilate award for justice to a judge and that was judged a criminal offence in Canada. I am not defending that newspaper, but when the courts can come down hard on such a newspaper, we know that our freedom of speech is restricted.

I remember a case which occurred in the first few years that I was a Member of Parliament, in about 1963. It involved a resident of Montreal who wrote a letter to the editor of La Presse, Gerard Pelletier. In that letter the resident was extremely critical of a sentence which a judge in Montreal had imposed on someone who was charged and convicted. I am not concerned about whether or not the decision of the judge was right or wrong, but if a person disagreeing with a sentence imposed can be prosecuted—and I think the person in this case spent a little time in jail and Mr. Pelletier had to apologize for the judge for printing the letter—it indicates that there are some pretty important restraints on the ability of people in Canada to say what they want and not fear being penalized.

I should like to point to the Official Secrets Act, which needs to be revised in a major way. In its provisions there are very wide prohibitions on the unauthorized disclosure of government information. We know how many documents produced by government have been marked secret or confidential. Also we know that on occasions when public servants felt that governments were doing things that were wrong, they leaked the documents and information either to members of the Opposition or to people in the media. That was very prevalent in the last year or two before the 1984 general election. The provisions of the Official Secrets Act cry out for major revision.

Let me look at the War Measures Act which has been used on a number of occasions in a Draconian way, to say the least. Many sections of that Act go beyond any suggestion of demonstrable justification. The Act needs to be drastically revised. The present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), when he was Minister of Justice, promised that there would be such a revision. Despite all the promises made by him, the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, and others in government, that was never done.

I do not want to refight the battles we fought at the time the War Measures Act was used by the former Government, nor do I want to debate at this time whether what it did was necessary. However, I remind Hon. Members that more than 350 people in the Province of Quebec were picked up, incarcerated and held without the opportunity to see their lawyers. After some time they were all released. Not a single one of them was charged or convicted of any offense. We all now agree that the War Measures Act should have been amended long before now. I call upon the Government to look at it and to bring in amendments to that Act in the very near future. The alternative to that would be, as I indicated earlier, court cases which may take years and cost a great deal of money, not to say a great deal of effort.

I want to deal with some other problems which are not dealt with and cannot be dealt with even if the Charter included every provision it should. I urge Hon. Members to look at the report of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities in Canadian Society entitled Equality Now! It was issued just about a year ago and looked into the problems of our visible minorities, namely the non-white minority citizens of Canada. It found that their situation was very difficult. It found that there was a great deal of prejudice and discrimination in employment, housing and education against the very large number of non-white Canadians, including many newer immigrants and, of course, the native population. That committee recommended that all roadblocks preventing full participation of these people in the cultural, social, economic and political life of the country be eliminated. We know we have a long way to go if we are to achieve that goal.

I ask Hon. Members to think about a very simple question and try to answer it. How many members of our visible minorities in any city in Canada represented by any Member of Parliament can be found in occupations such as police officer or firefighter? In the City of Winnipeg, which has a large native population, there is not a single native police officer or firefighter. There is a large population of non-white people and native people in my city. We have over 25,000 people of Philippine descent, as well as large East Indian, Sikh and black populations, but one would have to use a high-powered microscope to find any of them in the fields which I have mentioned. Sometimes their exclusion has been obtained by deliberate intent, sometimes through unintentional restrictions which restrict their rights; for example, height or weight regulations or requirements for formal education which they do not have. For these new immigrants, the Charter alone will not make them fit easily into our country as full partners. That report called for language training programs to be expanded. It called for funding for ethnic racial groups, for ethnic organizations, for broadly-based community organizations which provide a service to help make the transition and to integrate these newer Canadians.

In the field of employment we have to adopt an aggressive affirmative action program. I commend the Minister on the statement she made last week that the Government intends to proceed in this way. She knows, as I know, that some of the people in Government who do the actual hiring will not be enthused about her announcement. I hope she will keep the pressure on them to implement that program.

In conclusion, while we are going to vote for this Bill, we believe it is a very small step in the right direction. A great deal more needs to be done. Many other laws and programs of the Government need to be strengthened if we are going to attain the objectives enunciated in the Charter.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I know that for my good friend from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), 20 minutes is hardly enough time to set out an agenda of all of the things that this Government should have included in this legislation, an agenda that is 10 times as good as the agenda that the Government has put forward. The speech that we just heard would be a much more vital document to found a discussion on Charter equality than this blue paper Equality Issues in Federal Law. I just wanted to take the opportunity to ask the Hon. Member if there were any areas other than the many he has already mentioned that he thinks should have been in the law and should be covered in the discussion paper and the work of the committee.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, there are many other fields which I could have mentioned had I had time. Let me just say to the Hon. Member, who was a Minister in the former Government, that in the years I have been interested in these questions, and that goes back many years, I have come to the conclusion that we can have good legislation. However, if there is not much will to make it live and work, the legislation will not help. You can have the converse where you have a Government which wants to do things. Even if it does not have the legislation, it can find ways to do it. We did not need mandatory affirmative action legislation to increase the number of people from the minorities who work for government. I say to the Hon. Member with a great deal of regret that there was not much desire on the part of his Government to see that kind of thing happen.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly surprised to hear the Hon. Member attacking, as he seems to be by implication, the Government that did bring the Charter forward, convinced the country to support it and initiated the work which should have resulted from an effective piece of legislation now to bring all of the laws of Canada into compliance with the Charter. I know the NDP have a knack for claiming the credit for everything good that happens in the way of legislative reform in this country and for continuing to maintain criticism of things that do not.

I wonder whether he would want the opportunity, perhaps he does not, to recognize that we are here having a debate on the implementation of Charter equality provisions because the Liberal Government did bring forward the Charter and did manage to make a compromise, such as the three-year phase-in period that we are now dealing with, as well as other compromises. It at least brought Canada forward in the area of human rights and ensuring that discrimination and unfairness is revoked from our legislation by the process that is now being embarked on.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have to assume that the Hon. Member was not listening when I replied to the question from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. I said then and say again that yes, the Charter would have been better if not for the objections of many of the provinces, including the Province of Saskatchewan which at that time had a NDP Government. I say to the Member again that the original proposals brought forward by his Government with respect to the Charter were not very good. It was not until very strong representations were made by women's groups, native groups, civil libertarians, churches and a host of other organizations that the provisions of the Charter began to have real meaning. It took a great deal of pressure on his Government to make the Charter what it is now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there further questions or comments? Since there are no more questions, we will proceed with debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, since it is a couple of minutes to one o'clock, I wonder if the House would consent to my calling it one o'clock and I would begin my remarks after the Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 12.57 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

EDUCATION

UNIVERSITY OF MONCTON LAW SCHOOL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to talk about a remarkable institution that I visited last Wednesday, the Law School at the University of Moncton. This is probably the smallest law school in Canada. It has only 75 students in all of the three years, and it is only five or six years old.

I was invited there to spend a day talking to students and meeting with the faculty. What I found so impressive was the dynamism of the student body and the teachers, and the sense of mission that they have about the work they are doing.

In addition to being a legal resource for the community and to training lawyers for service in our country, the students and faculty are dedicated to developing the established common law of Canada in the French language and they do this very well. We can see the importance of this particular role. Northern New Brunswick is a place in which both common law and French are important.

I left the Law School with a strong feeling that I had been at one of the institutions which forms part of the fabric of the national unity of our country. I felt very proud of what I say, and I am sure my views would be shared by Members of the House and others.

Just as a remarkable footnote, this group entered a moot court, the Gale competition, with the 17 other law schools, and they won.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

SPORTS

THUNDER BAY RINK WINS MEN'S CURLING CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, with Al Hackner and his rink from Thunder Bay winning his second Silver Broom World Championship in four years, and with earlier victories by Canada's women's team and the men's junior team, Canada has become the undisputed champion of the curling world. Canada has a right to feel proud of the accomplishments of its curlers.

Our hats are off to Hackner, Lang, Perroud, and Tetley, the northwestern Ontario foursome representing a strong curling region which includes a number of great rinks found in my riding of Kenora-Rainy River. Yesterday's win by this foursome is another great demonstration of the tremendous talent found in northwestern Ontario, something of which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and the Cabinet should be more aware when making Governor in Council appointments.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

NEED TO BREAK GENERATIONAL PATTERN

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, private violence, in the form of battered women, rape, violent pornography, and child abuse, continues in this country at a level which we as parliamentarians should find totally unacceptable. We must explore this sensitive problem and speak for its silent victims and survivors, most of whom are women and young children. We must break the pattern which breeds new violence from generation to generation. We must educate, inform, and investigate possible solutions.

The quality of life is deteriorating in our country because of inadequate legislation and lack of committed action. The victims and survivors of these crimes are from all walks of life, ranging from young children to senior citizens, from the disadvantaged to the more affluent. As Canadians and legislators we must act with compassion to prevent cruel and often savage physical and emotional crimes against so many helpless victims.

The quality of life is the cornerstone of our society. We must take measures to improve and protect the love, respect, and dignity of all members of our Canadian family.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

PROGRAM'S LEGACY

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the national energy policy created a veritable alphabet soup: CHIP, COOP, COSC, IORT, NORP, PGRT, PIP, PLOP, SOOP, and TAP. Today's $36.75 barrel of oil was supposed to cost $70.23. When your forecast is out by 91 per cent, you're in trouble.

What is the legacy of the NEP? Well, $4.1 billion was spent on PIP grants, yet only 59 out of 210 East Coast wells were drilled under this program, and many of them would have been drilled in any event as follow-ups to the pre-NEP discoveries of Hibernia and Venture.

The eventual termination of PGRT will cost the Government $2.4 billion, but the elimination of PIP, PCC, and other programs will save $2.7 billion. The price of natural gas in Ontario and Quebec is lower today because the industry forgoes a 10 per cent increase in price. That was part of the NEP. Americans will not be receiving our oil at a lower price than Canadians.

Most important, Mr. Speaker, the oil industry and the two levels of Government can down-size the bloated bureaucracy—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, once again the prospect of creating a steel industry on the basis of markets is threatened. The issue for Cape Breton is the replacement of Sysco's antiquated hearth, the main ingredient of the steel making operation. The federal and provincial Governments that would share the bill must choose between two steel-making technologies, electric arc or basic oxygen.

The Premier of the Province has publicly ruled out electric arc technology on the grounds that it would reduce employment in the primary operations, the blast furnace and the coke ovens. A senior federal government official who is on the management committee, under the auspices of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), is strongly in favour of the electric arc furnace and will recommend this method to the Minister. If this decision is taken, the consequences are grave and there is the possibility of crippling our industry and increasing the already high unemployment rate.

To echo the sentiments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), we are talking about the future of an entire area. I would ask the Minister responsible to reconsider the options and their consequences, and to come to a decision favourable to all Parties concerned. That decision is long overdue. It is time the federal Tory Government started taking seriously its responsibilities for the people of Cape Breton Island.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—MURDER OF ACTIVISTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, does the Government of Canada care about the human rights of Chileans who are under attack by their dictator, Pinochet? At this very moment a funeral service is under way in Santiago, Chile, for men kidnapped, tortured, and murdered by Pinochet's secret police at the end of last week.

Eduardo and Raffael Vergara Toledo, two Church youths, were shot to death in an unprovoked attack Thursday. Manuel Guerrero, President of the Association of Professional Teachers, and Jose Manuel Parada, legal worker and founding member of the Vicariate of Solidarity, were kidnapped at gunpoint Friday morning.

Friday afternoon at about four o'clock Canada time, a representative of the Interchurch Committee on Human Rights in Latin America phoned the Deputy Director of the Latin American Desk in External Affairs to ask the Canadian Government to intervene on their behalf. The Deputy Director would do nothing but send a cable to the Canadian Embassy, which he knew was closed.

Early Saturday morning the bodies of Guerrero, Parada, and Santiago Nattino were found by a lonely road, with their throats slashed and showing signs of torture. Had Canada interceded with the Chilean Ambassador on Friday, these three men might be alive today rather than being buried today.

I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to tell the House what the Government has said to the Government of Chile about these savage police murders, what reply he has received, and what action the Department will take upon future appeals of this sort.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON SPACE TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I stand before you today to speak under an unusual set of circumstances. I would like to congratulate the New Democratic Party for its decision to support the federal Government's policy on the space station and the peaceful use of space. That change in NDP policy was articulated last week by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), in an exchange with the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon).

These NDP Members of Parliament acknowledged for the first time that we cannot oppose scientific research merely because it might have some hypothetical military application. As the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville said, Newton's experiments with gravity could not have been stopped just because they would some day be used to drop bombs. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre expressed his support for the photovoltaic research in space even though the fruits of this research could have a variety of applications. The only qualification these Members would make is that Canada's participation in the space station be for peaceful purposes.

This is exactly the position of the Minister of State for Science and Technology who has said repeatedly that Canada's involvement would be for peaceful, non-aggressive purposes, in accordance with our international treaty obligations. In fact, Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party, when pressed, would not say they opposed the decision of the Government to take part in the space station project. In the past the NDP have tried to create the impression that the only practical approach is the one taken by the federal Government. I suspect that even the Liberals—

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RELOCATION OF NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome today's announcement by the Chairman of the Canada Post Corporation of the selection of a temporary site for the National Postal Museum. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, the postal museum had been located for some years in the south block of the parliamentary precinct, in premises now required by the House of Commons.

[Translation]

The new premises will be located on the ground floor of the Journal Building at the corner of Kent and Laurier, in downtown Ottawa. The new museum will open its doors in time for the summer tourist season.

[English]

I am pleased that the Canada Post Corporation has responded to the representations made by Ottawa area members of this House and by the Ottawa and Canadian philatelic communities, and has announced the reopening of the museum. The temporary site will house the national stamp collection, the philatelic library, as well as a philatelic sales counter.

I also welcome the motion of the board of directors of the Corporation for the formation of a planning committee to organize the permanent relocation of the postal museum to a suitable, enlarged site in downtown Ottawa, within three years. I am sure the Canadian stamp collecting community joins me in applauding the Corporation for today's decision to open a temporary site for the museum, rather than waiting for the erection of new, permanent facilities in two or three years time.

MULTICULTURALISM

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, since September 4 a vibrant and meaningful multicultural policy has been painfully absent. As such, the profile and political clout of multiculturalism have suffered considerably. In the end, of course, it is the minority communities that are the real losers. In an attempt to safeguard and foster a more respectable and rightful place for multiculturalism, I urge the Government to establish a permanent and separate Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

Presently the multicultural Minister reports to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. The unfortunate and predictable result under this Tory Government, has been that the multicultural Minister has taken a third seat behind the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean), who also report to the same standing committee. As a consequence, multiculturalism is a poor and dead last in this three-way shuffle.

A distinct standing committee would go a long way in protecting the multicultural policies which former Liberal Governments had fought so hard to attain. It would also enable the many significant issues to be properly addressed and examined. In keeping with the coming into effect on April 17 of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the timing of establishing a standing committee on multiculturalism could not be better. I only hope, as do our ethnocultural communities, that the Government does not kill this proposal through study and procrastination.

THE SENATE

REFORM URGED ON BASIS OF ELECTED CHAMBER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Fathers of Confederation were wise men. In devising the form of government for the Canada they envisioned, they made sure the population of each province would be represented by Members of Parliament in the House of Commons, and then, to prevent the MPs from the heavier populated provinces penalizing the lower populated provinces with legislation that would hurt those regions, they created a Senate. But after more than a century the Upper House is no longer protecting the regions and minorities, and Canadians throughout the nation are calling for reform or abolition.

Thousands of Canadians not only want an elected Senate, but also desire equal representation from all provinces. In a Triple E setup, Members of the House of Commons would represent the population of each province. The Senators would protect the regions and minorities. With that setup any Government would think twice about legislation that would hurt a region or the people. Canada is a great country. We have a Government oriented to the will of the people. With a Triple E Senate we can realize our great potential.

I believe such a reformed Senate, elected, equal, and efficient, in our far flung nation could mean the salvation of the Canada we have known.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN—CALL FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, according to a report issued by the National Council on Welfare last week, one Canadian in six—over four million of our people—are living in poverty. This number has been going up steadily in recent years. It has been estimated that in 1983 almost one million families were living on low incomes. Almost 50 per cent of unattached women were living in poverty in 1983. Over one million children are in low income families, and their numbers have risen by one-third since 1980. In a country as wealthy as Canada this situation is a disgrace. The Government must take action to eliminate, or at least to reduce, the large numbers of Canadians who are suffering, as quickly as possible.

I call on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to meet with the provincial Ministers to discuss amending the Canada Assistance Plan and setting minimum standards of assistance to those in need, so that millions of Canadians will no longer suffer as a result of the neglect shown by Governments, federal and provincial.

WESTERN ACCORD—PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week the Government decided to deregulate the price of oil. Of course that was easy to do because the international price and the Canadian price were virtually the same. Will the Prime Minister tell the House why, in respect to the agreement with the western provinces, it was not agreed to deregulate the price of natural gas and let the market forces decide the price? Every knowledgeable person in the field knows that if we have an agreement to deregulate the price of natural gas, the price for that resource paid by consumers in eastern Canada will go down.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to see the ferocity with which the Liberal Party attacked an accord which is good for western Canada and for the economy of all of Canada. But that is why the Liberal Party is wiped out in the West, and elsewhere as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The money which is spent on reinvigorating the energy industry finds its way in substantial measure back to Ontario and to other areas of the country, which is why we view a re-energized sector as a handsome instrument of national unity and prosperity. The talks are ongoing with regard to the item mentioned by my hon. friend. And I can tell him that the entire package is designed to be helpful to Canada, to reinvigorate an otherwise dormant part of our economy and, most of all, to create the jobs across this nation which our people need.

Mr. Chrétien: As usual, the Prime Minister did not answer my question. I asked him why the price of natural gas was not deregulated.

DEREGULATION INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is now in her seat, I would like to direct the same question to her. She has deregulated the price of oil, but can she tell the House why there was no deregulation of the price of natural gas? Everyone knows that the price of natural gas, because it is controlled, is not going down. If the market forces which are so dear to the Government were to work in natural gas, the price would go down. Why did the Minister not try to get the deregulation of natural gas? And can she assure the House that the pipeline—I was in British Columbia last weekend—from the mainland to Vancouver Island will be built?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member did find his way to British Columbia. I can answer the question with respect to natural gas. As the Hon. Member should know, since he did hold my portfolio, it is harder to deregulate natural gas than oil because oil works on short-term contracts and natural gas works on long-term contracts.

Mr. Waddell: There is an Ontario election, too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: There are contracts for pipelines, contracts with big suppliers, and it takes longer to work out a system within the legal framework of contracts in place to go to market sensitive natural gas pricing.

We have set up a new task force to look at this issue. It has promised us it will have a new regime in place by the start of the natural gas new year, which is November 1.

AID TO PÉTROMONT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Strangely enough, when de-regulating the price of natural gas means that prices will drop, the Minister does not act, but when oil prices are likely to remain at present levels or rise after deregulation, not the consumers but the oil companies are given a chance to benefit from the situation. Considering that last week, billions of dollars were made available to the oil industry and especially to the multinationals, could the Hon. Minister inform the House where the few million dollars are that Pétromont needs today?

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is rather ironic that I get these questions from the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice. When he was the Minister he signed a deal with Alberta which were to lead to two natural gas price increases, one on February 1 of this year and one in August. He negotiated them in, we negotiated them out. We are the ones who care about natural gas price decreases.

INVESTMENT BY MULTINATIONAL OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. She has said she trust the multinational oil companies and will be monitoring their reinvestment in the energy sector in Canada. Yet no guidelines have been established for the degree of reinvestment required, nor will sanctions be imposed if the reinvestment is not sufficient. What does the Minister feel this type of monitoring will achieve?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Success, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More.

Mr. MacLellan: What the Minister is giving the Canadian people is a lot of political sop.

OIL COMPANY PROFITS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, should this monitoring reveal that the reinvestment is not sufficient, whatever she determines it should be, what action would the Minister take before profits leave the country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is a highly hypothetical question. I can only point out that the Hon. Member is a member of a Party which used the punitive, big stick, hit-them-when-they-are-down approach to an industry which creates jobs. We are working in the other direction. We are asking the industry to create the jobs which millions of Canadians need.

MONITORING OF COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this is not a hypothetical question. The Minister has just given a large windfall to the oil companies. The shares of Shell, Texaco, Gulf, and Imperial Oil went up dramatically to reflect that fact. Is the Minister aware that her own monitoring agency said that between 1974 and 1980, the pre-NEP golden age, the petroleum industry was a net exporter of capital to the tune of $4.1 billion, mainly because they were foreign controlled firms? In fact, foreign controlled firms have the worst reinvestment record as compared with Canadian controlled firms. In light of this experience, what is the Minister going to do to ensure that these companies reinvest that windfall in Canada to create jobs?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, our records show that before the NEP this industry reinvested 110 per cent of its cash flow. After the NEP that dropped, with the help of the NDP, to 65 per cent. We are trying to create a climate where the reinvestment will increase. That is the commitment I have undertaken, and that is the new world of jobs, energy security, and a united Canada, which this Government is trying to move us into, without the help of the Opposition.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to help the Minister. I will attend the next prayer breakfast with her, because she is going to have to attend.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is quoted as having told Diane Francis of The Toronto Star, that the Government's goal is still to have 50 per cent of the petroleum industry Canadian controlled by 1990. Since foreign-owned firms have emerged as the principal beneficiaries of the new oil deal, can the Minister tell the House what mechanism, other than prayer, she will use to achieve Canadianization?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that when I had three western provinces initial our Accord, my prayers were answered.

Mr. Waddell: We will wait and see.

BUDGET INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. While the Minister of Energy said oil prices would likely come down at the pump, he pointed to the $35 billion deficit and said that may not happen. What plans does he have, if any, to bring in taxes on consumers to pay for that huge windfall gift to the oil companies? If he does not have any such plans, would he rule out tax increases now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Minister of Finance will be responding to that query with his Budget. However, the principle which will govern our conduct is that of fairness. We tried to put forward that principle when we finally brought about an energy deal for Newfoundland and Labrador. I think the Minister deserves your plaudits for having contributed so mightily to re-energizing the economy of western Canada which is of benefit to the entire nation. It will be the doctrine of fairness which applies.

EXCISE TAX

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the energy deal concluded last week, some $2.5 billion in revenue was lost by the federal Government. I am told by press reports that when they ran this through the federal government computers it worked out to exactly 18 cents a gallon to recoup those losses, which happens to be the same amount as the then Minister of Finance tried to impose in 1979. This will result in some 50,000 jobs lost in Ontario alone. Can the Minister assure ordinary working Canadians that in his Budget he will not be imposing an excise tax on gasoline such as the former Minister did in 1979, which would result in 50,000 jobs being lost in Ontario alone?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I can assure the average working Canadian, as the Hon. Member has referred to them, that we will be creating a very large number of jobs right across the country—not just in western Canada but right across the country—as a result of this agreement. I say to the Hon. Member in the back row who likes to talk a lot, that it will be done fast because the energy industry has indicated to the Minister of Energy, myself, and others, that it is going to be reinvesting these proceeds because of the positive effect the energy accord has on energy security as well as job creation.

CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. During the election campaign she promised some 300,000 jobs. She put a little water in her wine last week and promised only 100,000 jobs. Last Friday she listed the five largest energy projects in Canada and came up with the marvellous total of 3,100 permanent jobs. Would the Minister table the other 97,000 jobs which are going to be created as a result of this energy deal with the western provinces?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, again I can only tell the Hon. Member that we saw what happened to jobs when his Party was in government. The jobs were shut down, moved south, vanished, and businesses went into bankruptcy as western Canada experienced some of its hardest times since the Depression. We have created the climate, and we have monitoring clauses to ensure that all benefits negotiated under the Accord must flow into jobs. That is our commitment, and that is what we are aiming to do.

When it comes down to forecasts, they are not my forecasts, and the Hon. Member ignores that. The forecasts we used come from independent agencies such as the Economic Council of Canada and others.

MEETING WITH PREMIER MILLER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. The Premier of Ontario has indicated that he intends to meet with the Prime Minister this coming Wednesday for the purpose of discussing the impact of the new energy agreement on Ontario consumers. Is it possible that, as a result of that meeting, the energy agreement could be changed?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will be meeting with the Premier of Ontario this afternoon. He will, no doubt, want to share with me his views and concerns with regard to the Province of Ontario. I will listen to him with courtesy as befitting a man of the great substance and leadership that he is. I will listen very carefully. You can be certain that Premier Miller speaks very strongly for the interests of Ontario. He also takes the national view. He is a genuine, national statesman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: He certainly has changed since I met him last.

BUDGET CONTENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Since the Prime Minister did not answer my question about the possibility of a change in the energy agreement as a result of any representation made by the Prime Minister, I would like to ask him whether it is possible that the statement made by the Minister of Finance that there would be no tax increases in the forthcoming Budget may well be altered as a result of the new energy agreement.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am surprised. Premier Miller says such nice things about the Hon. Member, all the time!

Mr. Deans: I'm surprised he does too. When I leave here you'll say nice things too.

Mr. Mulroney: He has fond memories ex post facto of the Hon. Member's time at Queen's Park.

The Member has inadvertently distorted the statement of the Minister of Finance. The budgetary documents will be consistent with what the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have said. They will be designed to bring about new growth and new jobs in Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is now April 1 and the Conservative Government has started to penalize those Canadians who were laid off and given some severance pay by their former employers. In doing so the Government has ignored the petition signed at its own economic conference, and many other petitions across the country. The Conservative Government is telling these people that they cannot use that severance pay for pension, to relocate to where business is better, or even to start their own businesses. The Government is saying that they must use it for the necessities of life because it is not going to give them any unemployment insurance until they have exhausted their severance pay.

Before that measure was announced by the Minister of Finance, were any impact studies made? If so, will the Minister make those impact studies public?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to the Hon. Member just the other day when this measure finally dawned on him, the measure was announced on November 8 last. There were consultations on its implementation between then and December 21. There have been many discussions over the period of time since, so that it could begin to be phased in on March 31. That commenced as of last night, and those measures take place as of today. I can assure the Hon. Member that the work which went into this was done in consultation with a great many people.

IMPACT STUDY INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, once again the Minister has not answered my question. She has refused to answer it as she refused to answer it the other day. I have been putting this question to her in committee and in the House for several weeks and she still has not answered the question, but I will repeat it. All we get from the Government are quips, jokes, and a lot of non sequiturs whenever we put a question to it.

I will put the question to her again very clearly. Where any impact studies done before the measure was announced showing what the effects would be on these many Canadians? If so, will the Minister make them public? Don't answer another question; answer that question.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the quips, jokes, and non sequiturs which come day after day from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. Each day he outdoes himself.

The Hon. Member never thought to raise this particular issue in November, December, January, or February. It was only in the last week of March that he got around to thinking about it. That shows a singular lack of concern and interest on the part of the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Before taking office the Government assured Canadian farmers that, unlike the Liberals, it understood the role that agriculture can play as an engine of growth in the economy. The words "engine of growth" were also used to explain the recent generous price increases and tax cuts afforded to the oil companies.

The Government has reduced grain prices to farmers, and has increased taxes through the cost recovery program. Will the Minister tell the House why he has decided to ignore agriculture and abandon the nation's farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that observation by the Hon. Member is complete nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member knows that I could list more than 60 major provisions and measures that we have put into effect in the last six months. I do not have time to list all of those items at the moment, but I would be happy to meet with the Hon. Member after Question Period to advise him of certain measures that we have taken.

COSTS RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is well known in the farm community that initial prices were cut last week, that the program for cost recovery is in place, and that a number of other items have increased the cost to farmers, thus reducing their net incomes. Why have the Minister and his Government selected agriculture to bear the brunt of cut-backs when the farming industry still generates far more jobs per dollar of net income than the oil industry? Why concentrate on the oil industry when the real income and job advantages are with agriculture?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that we have not concentrated on the agricultural industry at all.

Mr. Deans: That is true.

Mr. Wise: That is the first mistake. The second mistake is the fact that he indicated that the cost recovery measures are in place today. That is not the case. As I have indicated, we sent out a proposal and have reached an agreement in certain areas. In areas that are more sensitive than others we are continuing to negotiate, and will continue to negotiate until we arrive at a mutually satisfactory decision.

TERRORISM

TORONTO BOMB THREAT—POSITION OF CANADIAN ARMENIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for Multiculturalism. In light of today's bomb threat in Toronto, allegedly by Armenian terrorists, could the Acting Secretary of State assure the House that the Government will do everything in its power to ensure that there is no public backlash against the Canadian Armenian community?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can immediately assure the Hon. Member that there should be no such backlash. This communiqué was referred to the media before being referred to the Government of Ontario. Rather than being signed, it had a label attached to it identifying a particular group in the country. These things make it questionable. The authors of the communiqué may or may not be those to whom it was attributed. There are a wide range of possibilities.

It is notable that the Armenian community in Toronto has offered a reward of $25,000 for information leading to the identity of the authors of that communication.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SHOOTING DOWN OF KOREAN AIRLINER—COMPENSATION FOR CANADIAN VICTIMS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is in Siberia, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister confirm that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs meets with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko this week, the Secretary of State will press for an immediate settlement, satisfactory to Canada, of the claims for financial compensation for the deaths of Canadians when the Korean airliner was shot down by the Soviets in September, 1983?

● (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last time I looked, the Liberal Party was saying that it was an accident.

Mr. Berger: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: If you check Hansard, you will see that the people who pressed for compensation from the very beginning were the Progressive Conservative members of the Opposition, today the Government. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs will indeed pursue that with the Soviets.

POSSIBLE U.S.S.R. POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in 1983 the Prime Minister said that "the Soviet Union unfortunately does not respond to fine words, nor does it respond to philosophical musings". Exactly what will his Government do if the efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs do not result in an immediate and satisfactory settlement of the claim for compensation in question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course I will not respond to a clearly hypothetical question from the Member, who still has not come in from the cold. I can tell him that I think it would be untoward for me to do so except to advise that the Secretary of State for External Affairs carries a brief on behalf of Canadian families, and on behalf of the Parliament of Canada, which he will press with vigour, eloquence, and deep conviction. I am satisfied that the Soviet Union, in those circumstances, should begin the process of response favourably.

Oral Questions

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Prime Minister, pertains to his meeting this afternoon with the Premier of Ontario. The Prime Minister will be aware that the Premier of Ontario has requested that the Government of Canada retain its quotas on Japanese imports pending the negotiation of a new agreement. He will also be aware that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion announced in the House on Friday that the Government will not be keeping the quotas. During his meeting with the Premier of Ontario this afternoon, will the Prime Minister be prepared to change his mind in order to protect jobs in the Province of Ontario?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Premier of Ontario, Mr. Miller, and I, are of one mind. Our determination is to protect and create jobs in Ontario and throughout Canada. I think that is widely acknowledged. Mr. Miller has outstanding expertise in this particular area of job creation which the country cries out for at this particular time, and which is no doubt why he is doing extremely well in Ontario. You can be sure that I will co-operate fully with the Premier of Ontario in every reasonable way to create jobs in southwestern Ontario, using the instrument of the automobile industry as an important illustration.

Mr. Broadbent: All that and fifty cents will get you a cup of coffee, Mr. Speaker.

VOLUME OF JAPANESE EXPORTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the United States, within days of their announcement of the lifting of the quotas, a report came out of Japan saying that the Japanese would increase their exports to the United States by 25 per cent in the coming year. If they do that in Canada and begin that process in Canada between now and May, which happens to be when the Ontario election will take place, it could mean, on an annual basis, the loss of about 15,000 Canadian jobs. It is a serious matter. When will the Government stop acting like an international boy scout with respect to trade, and begin to protect Canadian jobs? Will it maintain the quotas until a new agreement is negotiated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all that and 25 seats will get you the leadership of the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That's not one of your better ones.

Mr. Mulroney: He is the only individual who can lead a national party into an election, lose seats, and cry "victory". That is exactly what will happen to his provincial cousins in Ontario when Frank Miller gets through with them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Wait until the next election.

Mr. Mulroney: We will co-operate fully and completely with the Government of Ontario to protect that tremendous engine of growth which is the automobile industry in Ontario. We will be negotiating very hard to protect the future of that industry, and to create new jobs in Ontario.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. He has been involved with this concern of the agricultural community in my riding.

In the riding of Kent, in southwestern Ontario, we can produce more tonnes of sugar-beets per hectare without irrigation than anywhere in Canada, even when irrigation is implemented, yet we were the first to lose the industry because the federal Government, in the 1960s, would not adopt what is known as a sugar policy. Now the same sugar-beet industry in the West and in Quebec is in jeopardy, and the solution to the problem is the same—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member come immediately to a question, please?

Mr. Hardey: Since Canada must sometime develop a policy that a percentage of sugar produced here is from a domestic source, for the welfare of both the Canadian farmer and the consumer, will the Minister assure me and my constituents, and indeed the sugar-beet farmers of Canada, that this item is placed high enough on the priority list to be dealt with thoroughly before 1986?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I understand that he had considerable experience and expertise in this matter.

On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture I have been attempting to see what we can do to provide some guarantees for financing so that farmers, this year, will plant their crop of sugar-beets. If they don't, we will not have an industry.

Second, again at the request of the Minister of Agriculture we have been attempting to look at a long range sugar policy. I might add that this is the first time, to my knowledge, that a federal Government has taken this industry seriously and looked at a long range policy. I believe that if one can be developed it will not only provide benefits to consumers, it will also provide considerable jobs and keep producers in business as well.

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

JUDGES' EXPIRING TERMS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who has the case of Judge Copps still ringing in his conscience, if not in his ears. Now, what about the case of Judge Alice McKeown of Kingston, who has served for 17 years as a Citizenship Judge, five years as a Chief Judge, whose term recently expired and who, last week, told the media that the Minister has not even advised her about her status or her future. The same complaint was expressed by Judge Una MacLean Evans of Edmonton, who was even told by a local MP to suggest her replacement as long as it was not a Liberal.

How can the Minister treat people who have served their country in this cavalier fashion? Or is this arrogant Tory patronage machine in such high gear that it does not care on whom it tramples?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, let me inform the Hon. Member that his facts in relation to Judge McKeown are out of date. I have talked with her and in fact have taken a good deal of her advice about the restructuring of the Citizenship Court program. I have personally thanked her for her work and, in terms of her own future, she indicated that the work load in the Kingston area was not sufficient to warrant the continuation there of a full-time judge.

Mr. de Corneille: I am glad that following the publicity by the media covering that subject in Kingston the Hon. Minister got around to speaking to her.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, with some 20,000 people unnecessarily and unjustly waiting anxiously for citizenship, how can the Secretary of State justify his failure to renew the appointments of such experienced Citizenship Judges as Copps, McKeown, and Evans, for the sake of purely petty, political party patronage?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, the intention of the program was to give outstanding Canadians who have experience in a wide range of Canadian life the opportunity to be involved in this important aspect of affirmation of Canadian citizenship. It is the intention of the Government to invite a number of outstanding Canadians with varied backgrounds to serve in this role in the future.

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF QUOTAS ON JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister about his partisan non answers with respect to our automobile trade agreement with Japan. Last year in a situation like this, where an agreement could not have been achieved before the end of March, the Minister of Trade sent a clear signal to Japan and to Canadians by saying at that point it was important that there continue to be quotas on the importation of Japanese cars. This was despite the fact that an agreement had not been reached.

Will the Prime Minister clearly, without qualification, state that his Government also believes that quotas have to be maintained to protect Canadian workers, and to give us the bargaining leverage with Japan that we require?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have done better than that, Mr. Speaker. I have conveyed a very strong view to the Prime Minister of Japan when I met with him in Moscow. We are hopeful that we will have an agreement that will be extremely beneficial to Canadian workers and to the Canadian automobile industry.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that finally we have a commitment that the Government wishes to see such an agreement.

LEVEL OF IMPORTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister also give us the information clearly, and also without qualification, that he feels on behalf of his Government that there should not be an increase over and above the increase allowed lat year for the Japanese with respect to these imports into our country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these matters have been very fully addressed by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion in a full statement.

Mr. Broadbent: That is why we are asking the question.

Mr. Benjamin: We could not get a word out of him last week.

Mr. Mulroney: The discussions are ongoing. I am satisfied that Canada will be able to resolve this in a manner that is helpful to our industry and to our automobile workers.

Our industry has to remain competitive. On the other hand there is a very low rate of investment, relatively speaking, by Japan in Canada in this sector. We want to see that attitude changed, and we want to make sure that Canada gets a fair break in its bilateral relations with Japan. This is why the negotiations have been unfolding, I think, well and on a progressive basis which will result in an agreement.

Oral Questions

PORNOGRAPHY

IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The Minister is aware that I have voiced my concerns on the issue of pornography in this House and in committee. Following the Federal Court ruling, the Minister indicated on March 20 that he was concerned and that he would announce plans and action within two to three days to prevent the flooding of pornographic material degrading to men, women and children, into this country. Can the Minister tell us now what his decision has been in this important area? Is he going to appeal, or is he going to bring in an amendment?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. I am in the desert here as far as questions are concerned.

Mr. Boudria: Imagine how we feel about your answers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Member opposite is in a desert, mentally.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Minister of State—if I can be given the chance to answer, as I am somewhat timid—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —the Minister of State for Finance is giving notice today of a Bill to amend the Customs Tariff to replace the tariff item that was found to be contrary to the Charter of Rights by the Federal Court of Appeal. We are hoping that with the co-operation of the Official Opposition which has been promised—and we are waiting to have it confirmed, but we believe the New Democratic Party is also going to give its support although we are not yet sure of the NDP—to have the Bill introduced and passed through all stages this week.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear there is some action proposed. I certainly have not heard that was on the Order Paper. I am glad to hear it is.

FRASER REPORT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Justice. Is the Minister using the Fraser Report as the background for the Bill that he is planning to deposit? Will that bring all the laws into concordance?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Fraser Report has not yet been received. It is still being put together. We are proceeding under our own steam in this matter—

Mr. Nunziata: You have a lot of it, John.

Mr. Crosbie: You are darn right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Hot air.

Mr. Crosbie: Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have heard a squeak from the rat pack.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The amendment proposed will have a sunset clause. We will ask the House to pass the amendment with a sunset clause, to hold the fort while we consider the complications of reforming the whole set of laws with respect to pornography. I think the Hon. Member will be satisfied with what we produce tomorrow.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns Challenge '85. Can the Minister let the House know how the private sector is reacting to this program? Can the Minister let us know how the many rural ridings throughout the country will be able to capitalize on this, because many of us do not have the career oriented jobs available for students, and also it is on a first come first served basis, which might leave some of us out in the cold?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I want to inform him that a record number of good applications have cone in for Challenge' 85. Of course they have not all been processed as yet. There will be many more accounted for.

I do want to assure the Hon. Member that in the over-all program all aspects of it have already been over-subscribed. I want to say as well that the private sector has been extremely co-operative in mounting programs and in putting in applications that will cover, as of last week, some 29,000 jobs. That is against 6,000 that were announced by the private sector last summer. It has gone from 6,000 to 29,000 jobs. I can also assure the Hon. Member that it is spread across all parts of the country.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PARTICIPATION OF EMPLOYEES IN ONTARIO PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board concerning the political rights of federal government employees who may wish to participate in the Ontario election. In view of the promises made by the Progressive Conservatives in the election to grant political rights to federal employees, and since the Minister has been discussing this issue with the public service union since January, can the Minister assure the House that no disciplinary action will be taken against any federal bargaining unit employee who wants to work for a candidate or a political party in the Ontario election on the employee's own time?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member opposite has well stated, this is one of several issues dealing with commitments we made over the last campaign that are under very active discussion with the unions at the moment. I am very happy to report that those discussions are proceeding very well and to the satisfaction of both parties. I hope to be in a position to make an announcement to this House, or to the appropriate committee of this House, in the very near future.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is a very specific time related aspect to this because the Ontario election is on for the month of April and a number of people with whom I have been in communication have already in fact been told by their supervisors that they are breaching their job regulations as public service employees because they are participating in the campaign.

Can the Minister assure the House, prior to making that announcement, that no disciplinary action will be taken against employees who want to work in the election on their own time?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised at the attitude the Hon. Member opposite takes. He was one of those who argued for a full discussion of this issue in the parliamentary committee, a procedure that could take months and months. We are trying to act in a very expeditious manner to come to an adequate resolution of the question, and so far, with the good co-operation of our unions in the spirit of healthy labour-management relations, we are making very quick progress. I hope to report on that in the very near future.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES IN MANICOUAGAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Over the weekend he promised the people in his riding that the Government would intervene to ensure that there is a project to create an imposing number of permanent jobs in the constituency where the high unemployment was created by himself when he was President of Iron Ore. In view of the fact that $10 million has already been poured into that riding and that there are promises of more to come, is the Prime Minister willing to assure the House that he is prepared to do the same for the people of my riding and for the people of other constituencies who are faced with the same problem?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is clear the Liberal Party is taking a very firm stand against the the Government assistance this Government wishes to give Québec. However, I can say that regardless of the Hon. Member's comments, the Conservative Government is going to help ridings in Quebec, including the riding of Manicouagan, including Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East and other ridings in Canada. I can inform the House that the people of the riding of Manicouagan want Government action and they will have it, regardless of what the Liberal Opposition has to say about it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what are the plans of the Government House Leader in terms of House business?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we will obviously continue this afternoon with the consideration of Bill C-27 which was under discussion prior to the luncheon break. It is my intention to continue with that Bill tomorrow, followed by Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada.

As the Hon. Member will know, I have asked both Opposition Parties to give serious consideration—this was raised by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) in Question Period today—to the Bill amending the Customs Tariff, which would have the effect of dealing with the decision of the Federal Court with respect to the importation into Canada of hate literature and obscene materials. It is my hope that the Opposition Parties will see their way clear to passing this Bill, which contains a sunset clause. It will be introduced today by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. McDougall) for first reading. We could pass it through all stages tomorrow, so that the Senate may deal with it and we may have Royal Assent prior to Easter. That would be my hope for the business as far as tomorrow is concerned.

I also take this opportunity to designate this coming Wednesday, April 3, as the first allotted day in this supply period. This will allow the Opposition to wax eloquent or otherwise with respect to whatever happens to be on its collective mind before we depart this place for the Easter recess.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) rising on a point of order or to present a report?

Mr. Holtmann: I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In my statement concerning the upgrading of defence research, I failed to point out and acknowledge the native veterans of Canada who are in our gallery.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. First, that is not a point of order; second, Hon. Members are not allowed to refer to the presence of people in the gallery. But it was a good try.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

STATEMENT ON SUPPLEMENTARY EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give notice today of the intention of the Government to introduce a Bill to resolve an issue with which I am sure all Hon. Members are familiar. The Government intends to table on Wednesday a Bill to make supplementary equalization payments to the six provinces which currently receive equalization payments. Members will ask why legislation is required to authorize these supplementary equalization payments. The Government must introduce new legislation because there is no legal requirement or obligation on the part of the Government of Canada to make these payments.

The obligation remains, however, to administer the system of equalization based upon the fundamental principle of fairness. This principle must govern our actions even while our own fiscal situation is difficult. It is this Government's recognition of the fundamental principle of fairness which signifies our unswerving desire to work with our partners in the provinces and to assist them wherever possible, for that is the essence of our Confederation.

Under existing legislation, equalization payments to some provinces will actually decline in 1985-86 as a result of the expiry of the three-year transitional payments that were provided for in 1982. I have carefully considered representations from these and other provinces which receive equalization payments. In addition, I have been governed by the prevailing necessity to control a crippling federal deficit which in paying the interest charges alone costs the people of Canada $1 out of every $3 they pay in federal taxes.

What we propose in the Bill under these circumstances is a fair and equitable solution to the issue of supplementary equalization. The amounts are substantial although some may have desired more. However the principle of fairness underlying our Confederation has been maintained.

I should like to indicate briefly some of the considerations that guided our decision in this matter. The primary consideration was the impact from the expiry of the three-year transitional provisions. When the new equalization formula was introduced in 1982, it was anticipated that some provinces might suffer a decline in their equalization entitlements, and it was expected that the transitional provisions would allow time for provinces to adapt to the new formula. There are also provisions in the current formula for floor payments to prevent severe year to year declines in equalization payments. Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island were guaranteed a 95 per cent floor, and Nova Scotia, Quebec and Manitoba were guaranteed lesser amounts, given the relatively greater fiscal strength of these three provinces.

In determining the amounts of the supplementary equalization payments to be provided in this Bill, it was decided to calculate the payments to Quebec, Manitoba and Nova Scotia as the additional equalization amounts they would receive if a 95 per cent floor applied to them over the next two fiscal years. It was further decided that Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island should receive the same per capita supplementary payments as the average for the other three recipient provinces.

[Translation]

This measure will consist in providing supplementary equalization payments for 1985-86 of $110 million for Quebec, $50 million for Manitoba, $20 million each for Nova Scotia and New Bruswick, $15 million for Newfoundland and $5 million for Prince Edward Island.

• (1510)

[English]

In addition, since present projections indicate that Manitoba will experience a further decline in its equalization payments in 1986-87, the Bill will contain provision to make a further payment of $65 million to Manitoba in that year.

The total supplementary payments in 1985-86 will amount to $220 million. This is in addition to the regular equalization payments of over $5 billion. This means that the total regular and supplementary equalization payments to provinces in 1985-86 will amount to almost $5.3 billion.

These amounts are substantial and should help these provinces to meet their responsibilities in providing essential services. They will mean an increase in the deficit projected for the coming year, and given the Government's serious financial situation they are the most we can provide.

I should note that these payments are totally unconditional and are made in addition to the other substantial transfers to the provinces, particularly in respect of insured health services and post-secondary education under the established programs financing arrangements. The total fiscal transfers from the federal Government to provincial Governments for equalization and the established programs financing arrangements will amount to some $20.7 billion in 1985-86—some $1 billion higher than the $19.7 billion being transferred during the current fiscal year.

I reiterate that legislation to authorize these supplementary equalization payments is necessary because there is no legal obligation or requirement on the federal Government to make these payments under existing fiscal arrangements legislation. The necessity is one of fairness for all Canadians.

[Translation]

The supplementary equalization payments measure taken by the Federal Government is an extremely generous one, considering the Government's present financial situation. It acknowledges the present financial situation of the provinces in question and reflects this Government's intention and desire to work together with the provinces and to assist them when possible.

[English]

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the present equalization program expires on March 31, 1987. We recognize that the system is not perfect and we will be consulting with the provinces to establish a new formula for the period of 1987 to 1992. Such actions will be a major part of the general review of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements which will be undertaken over the next two years by both levels of government. I look forward to meeting with provincial Finance Ministers later this year to begin discussions of the fiscal arrangements that will apply during the 1987 to 1992 period.

We shall continue working together towards the common goal of making Canada a better and fairer place for Canadians from all regions, all provinces, all walks of life.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied with the Minister's statement, although it is merely part of a program already included in the Canadian Constitution, which provides that the Federal Government has an obligation to help the provinces through equalization payments. Although the Minister is trying to take the credit today, he is only partially meeting the Government's obligations.

[English]

I believe it is the first time in the history of Canada that we have had a Budget by instalments like the one we are now having, which began in November. They tested the water and went with the program. Rather than carrying on with making the same amount of equalization payments, the Government tried to cut more than the provinces could take. They come today to reinstate some of the money. However, there are still some major shortfalls. What is happening today re-establishes a little bit of the money that was taken away some months ago. When the mini-budget was proposed in November, the situation was very bleak.

For instance, the Province of Quebec is being given $110 million today. However, the Quebec Government was asking for $163 million and is only getting $110 million more. In fact, under the formula we extended for one year last year, the Quebec Government should have received $273 million, but it is only going to get $110 million.

This is no big deal. They are being given $163 million. I am not saying that I am upset. The Government is restoring some of the funds it cut rather unrealistically last fall, but if we look at the cuts that affected Quebec last November, we see that $770 million worth of federal activities will not take place in Quebec because of the cutbacks. So if we add $163 million, this means nearly $1 billion Quebec has not been getting since the Progressive Conservatives have been in power.

[English]

The same situation applies in the Maritimes. The Maritimes gained back $80 million, but there is still a shortfall of $74 million. The cuts of November were $400 million as they affect the situation in the Maritimes. I could go on. They are reinstating some money for Manitoba, but not all the money to which that province is entitled if the federal Government were to fulfil its constitutional obligation.

As I said earlier, this is a budget by instalment. We now have something on equalization payments because the Minister is preparing the ground. Last week he lost some money to the oil industry. He is now preparing the ground for a big tax increase. We are waiting for that day. Some announcement will be made to try and consolidate their political position. The reality will come in May, if it is not postponed again.

It will be almost a year since this Party came to power and it has not yet been able to put all the pieces together. It made promises to everybody. It cut back some. It is a real show. The real strip-tease will be the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Today is a great day. They had to admit to the NDP House Leader that it is not true that they will not increase taxes. Get ready, guys, it is going to come to us soon, in the neck! They waited in order to try and consolidate their political base. The reality is they got elected by making all sorts of irresponsible promises. Today they are reinstating some but not all of the money.

The provinces do not have what the Constitution calls for, but it is an increase, a step in the right direction. I do not blame the Minister for that. I am just sorry that they are not giving the money to which the provinces are entitled under the Constitution. This is the problem. This test has not been met. I understand. I have a lot of sympathy for the Minister of Finance. He lost his battle with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), he lost his battle with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), and he lost his battle with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). A decent Minister of Finance would have resigned with so many lost battles, but we will give this Minister another chance. He is now preparing the ground for the budget. It is going to be his last day in the House of Commons when Canadians, especially the taxpayers, get it in the neck come the end of May. In the meantime, we keep smiling.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that the last Member who spoke has to smile. He remembers that it was his Liberal Government which cut the entire amount of money from those provinces.

We welcome the Government's move, although we do recognize that it does not provide for the entire shortfall that the poorer provinces in this country are facing as a result of the equalization provision that was passed by the Liberal Government in 1982.

It is important that we all remember that when this Government came into power, it was not its intention to move on equalization payments. The briefing notes which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) left in Winnipeg indicated that he was prepared to give a negative repsonse to the people of that province. Later in this House, in answer to questions by myself, he tried to state that the federal Government's financial position was worse vis-à-vis that of the recipient provinces. I believe that is a position which is completely indefensible.

Throughout the period of this Conservative Government, it has pretended that it was some kind of surprise to find that there was an actual decline in the money that would be going to the provinces as a result of the 1982 legislation. Yet in 1982 Conservative Opposition Members stood with Members of the New Democratic Party like the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and fought against the equalization formula the Liberal Government had then introduced. Some of those Members are now members of the Cabinet and they must act upon the words they spoke in 1982. I for one am glad that the Government has made a partial reinstatement of the money to those provinces.

Although this announcement will benefit a number of provinces, it is obvious to all that it was the New Democratic Party Government of Manitoba that led and forced the fight on this issue. The Manitoba Government, along with a coalition of representatives from labour, health, education and social services groups, confronted the federal Government. To a degree, they were successful. It is their victory and we in the House should give them that credit. When the legislation comes before the House, we will deal with it further.

At this time I would like to say that there are still concerns with which we must deal. We need more information about what the provinces will actually receive in 1986-87. We also need to know the effect of federal cut-backs, including those that will be in the upcoming Budget, and how that will affect the economic situation of the provinces. We must also have information on when there will actually be tax reform in t his nation so that those who can afford to pay will pay their fair share.

In closing, I must point out that we need to know the position of the Government with regard to negotiations that will be taking place for the 1987-92 agreement. Concerning this last point, it is essential that the federal Government not look only at its deficit position but also to providing those poor provinces with the ability to provide services to their citizens. That was the purpose of equalization payments and that is why it is in the Constitution.

This is a victory for the people of Manitoba, Quebec and the other provinces that will be receiving more funding as a result of this legislation about which we learned today, but we must also tell Canadians that they are entitled to a certain basic level of services regardless of where they live. That should be the underlying principle that the Government will take with it into the next round of negotiations.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister, but I have two things to say to him before I do. First, I congratulate him.

"Félicitations", in French.

[English]

Second, one political philosopher, and I think it was Pierre Trudeau, said that the world can learn from our federal-provincial relations system. It is a pretty complicated lesson and seems to be getting more complicated.

I come from British Columbia. The Province of British Columbia is bleeding post-secondary education funding. Students, colleges and universities are suffering. Federal money is being diverted to highways, big projects, coal holes and pipelines to islands when in fact we really need to be spending it on education. What can the Minister do to ensure that some of the money is spent on the things that are really needed in the provinces, things like education, given that it is part of a federal strategy for economic recovery to have a decently-educated future labour force?

[Translation]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) for his words of congratulations.

[English]

The question posed by the Hon. Members regarding the split in the expenditure of the funds under EPF between post-secondary education and health care is something that is under discussion between my colleague the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and her provincial counterparts, as well as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and his provincial colleagues.

This supplementary equalization payment or indeed the over-all equalization formula does not have any bearing on the ways in which the provinces spend money under the programs of post-secondary education and medical health care. These funds are unconditional and it is for that reason that there is no real relationship between the two. As the Hon. Member has pointed out, this money helps provide for a basic level of services in the provinces, and we are very pleased to demonstrate to Canadians that co-operative federalism does live in this country now, unlike under the previous Government.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by nothing with some satisfaction that the Government has finally moved on this issue. It is unfortunate that it has not offered the full amount, but it is fortunate for Manitoba and those other provinces that will be affected by the Minister's decision that they will have some of their shortfalls made up.

Before I ask a question of the Minister, I would like to note that six months ago today I first wrote the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on this issue. On October 1, I reminded him of when he and I together, in the Standing Committee on Finance, moved an amendment to Bill C-97 which was the unilateral Liberal legislation that changed the formula and brought about the situation that the Minister is now trying to correct.

Six months ago I reminded the Minister of National Health and Welfare of the way we had co-operated at that time to try to bring about that correction. Unfortunately, it has taken six months for action to be taken, but it is better late than never and we now have this action on the part of the federal Government. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has said that a great deal of the credit ought to be given to the many Manitobans who wrote and expressed their concerns, to the provincial Government, and to others involved in getting the Government to come to this decision, and I think he is right.

In preparing for the negotiations dealing with the fiscal period of 1987 to 1992, I would like to ask the Minister whether or not he is considering doing what the previous Government did last time. Everyone thought that what the previous Government did was a good exercise, and that was to involve Parliament itself in the consideration of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

The Minister will probably recall the special parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements on which I had the opportunity to serve along with six other Members of Parliament. It was generally recognized that that was a good exercise. It involved Members of Parliament in the recommendations leading up to the negotiation process. I wonder if the Government is considering involving Parliamentarians again in a similar way.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, I have spoken to the provincial Finance Ministers. I told them that the preliminary groundwork was going to be carried out by officials this spring and summer. I propose to bring provincial Ministers up to date regarding the progress of that and we will have a preliminary discussion at our meeting this fall. At this point I have not given a great deal of thought to the involvement of Parliamentarians in this process, but obviously that is a very important point made by the Hon. Member which I will take under consideration.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Minister to comment on the reasons why some of the provinces, as a result of the changes announced today, are receiving more money than they had requested while others are still left in a shortfall position?

The information that I have on which I would invite the Minister to comment is that in the case of Newfoundland, the equalization amounts of the 1985-86 estimates show a transfer of $617 million. With this addition of $15 million, there will be a bonus of $15 million that the province had not claimed as a shortfall. The Province of Prince Edward Island, which had claimed a shortfall of $4 million, is receiving $5 million and is therefore in a $1 million bonus situation. However, the Province of Nova Scotia had claimed a shortfall of $58 million but is to receive $20 million, which leaves it in a shortfall position of $38 million. New Brunswick as well is in a $20 million bonus situation whereas Quebec, which claimed a shortfall of $263 million, is receiving $110 million and is therefore still showing a shortfall of $163 million. Manitoba also claimed a shortfall of $72 million but receives $50 million and is in a $22 million shortfall. Would the Minister tell the House if this apparent discrepancy in the treatment of provinces is as a result of negotiations? And are we to understand that in each case the provinces concerned agreed to this?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to that question by saying that what we were trying to do was to provide a fair resolution to a difficult problem and one which was considerably more difficult for the Provinces of Quebec, Manitoba and Nova Scotia because they were going to suffer an absolute shortfall. In taking into account this principle of fairness, we decided that we should establish some rationale for dealing with the shortfall. That was, as I indicated in my remarks, to establish a 95 per cent floor for the three provinces which suffered the shortfall. But since they are the three richer provinces in the equalization receiving group, we felt we should do something to recognize the weaker position of New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. For that reason, we chose, on a totally arbitrary basis—and I make no apologies for that—what we call an equivalency payment, to give them a payment equivalent to the per capita make-up which the Provinces of Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia received. It is for that reason that New Brunswick received a payment of $20 million; Newfoundland received $15 million; and Prince Edward Island received $5 million. It is an arbitrary means of dealing with the problem but we feel there is a considerable degree of fairness in our approach since the payment on a per capita basis is equivalent for all the receiving equalization provinces.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) and then the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), and that will be it.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister regards the unique situation with the Province of Manitoba. But before I ask the question I would like to commend the Minister for his fairness in the approach he has taken on this particular problem with which he has been faced. I know, as a Manitoban, that all we were asking for from our Government was to be treated fairly. I notice that the Minister has given additional funding next year to our province. I wonder if the Minister has had an opportunity to discuss the impact this will have on our province with the Premier of Manitoba or his Minnister of Finance.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should first say that, unlike hon. members of the New Democratic Party who spend a lot of time crowing but get little action out of the noise they make, hon. members of the Conservative Party who reside in and represent Manitoba, have constantly dealt with me on a quiet basis on this issue. I can tell the Hon. Member that they were far more effective in their representations because they had substance and a good analytical basis for the statements they made, as opposed to the shrill rhetoric were ceived from the other Party.

Manitoba is in a most unusual position because of the nature of the equalization formula which was imposed by the Liberal Government in 1982. As a result of this, if there were no equalization payments, if no supplementary payment were made, as I have announced today, the equalization for the Province of Manitoba would drop from $480 million in the year just ended to $408 million and then to $367 million. That is our current estimate. So there is a substantial drop there, far greater than was the case in any of the other provinces. It was for that reason we felt it was important to carry through this 95 per cent floor provision into the next fiscal year. If we had not done that, there would have been a very substantial drop-off. We feel that that is a very fair way of dealing with the matter and also a way in which we have looked forward, in the interests of the province, to understanding the nature of the equalization payments.

I have discussed this with the provincial Minister of Finance, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has discussed this as well with the Premier of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: I realized when I said what I said earlier that I was not being entirely fair to Her Majesty's Official Opposition. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Trinity on one supplementary question, then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre on one final question.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the moneys which were taken out of the provincial economies by the November cuts. For instance, although Quebec today receives an additional $110 million, the effect of the various programs which were cut in November is to take $770 million one way or another out of Quebec. Would the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tell the House if this was taken into consideration? In his dealings with the provinces and his negotiations on the equalization payments, did he also take into account the $770 million which was cut one way or another from Quebec by his November statement, and the cuts of some $400 million from the Atlantic provinces which today receive $80 million?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was amused when listening to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), and now the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). It must be very difficult for them and must hurt them badly when the Government has a bit of good news and shows that co-operative federalism does work and can work, so they draw out every possible negative they can from this initiative by the Government, which I think is a very positive one and one which demonstrates that this Government is being fair, open and understanding of the problems of the provinces.

Let me say to the Hon. Member that, in the preamble to her question, she admitted noting that this Government has just signed the first economic and regional development agreement with the Province of Quebec since 1974. Surely, that demonstrates our ability to work with the province and also demonstrates a real understanding of the economic circumstances of the Province of Quebec.

This matter was discussed at some length with the Minister of Finance of the Province of Quebec. As well, the Prime Minister has discussed it at some length with the Premier of the province. I think that the proposition we have put forward today is a fair one and one which should be well received by all people in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has applauded the effectiveness of the Tory Members of Parliament. I wonder if he remembers that it took a long time for the Conservative Opposition in the Province of Manitoba to come on board and call for fairness in equalization payments for Manitoba.

However, I do not want to dwell on that, Mr. Speaker. What I want to do is to give praise where it is deserving. Manitoba presented a bill for the shortfall in equalization payments, and the Minister deserves credit for having recognized that he owes the bill. What I would like to know from the Minister is why he has not paid the full bill. Why has he only paid some 50 per cent or 60 per cent of the bill? Why does he not go all the way, in the name of fairness, and pay the full bill he owes with regard to the shortfall in equalization payments in Manitoba?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): First, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I have been in touch with the finance critic of the provincial Conservative Party in the Province of Manitoba on this issue long before it joined forces with the Government in making a joint representation. So the provincial Conservatives were not absent in any way from the representations being made, but made them in a very effective and quiet way, in dealing with the substance of the issue and not the rhetoric.

● (1540)

In response to the specific question the Hon. Member poses as to why did we not go the whole way, the simple fact of the matter is that we have a financial problem in the same way the Governments of Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia have financial problems. We all have financial problems. The question we had to ask ourselves is, who should do the borrowing? We are all borrowing to make these payments, whether to make up the shortfall at the provincial level or make up the amounts we are paying from the federal level as supplementary payments. We were under no legal obligation here. The transitional payments expired and we could have just walked away from it and done nothing. But we said, no, we should be fair, and we have demonstrated a degree of fairness by saying, let us go part way. I think the Hon. Member from Manitoba, if he looks at the figures and the treatment which Manitoba got relative to other provinces, will see that Manitoba was very well treated and should have no reasons for complaint.

PETITIONS

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—FREE ZONE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from some 1,290 citizens, most of whom are in my riding, calling for Canada to be declared a nuclear weapons-free zone. That has been defined as no nuclear weapons in Canada, no transit of nuclear weapons through Canadian territory, No Canadian support system for nuclear weapons and no Canadian production of components for nuclear weapons. To be fair, there were at least two people who signed this petition who were of a contrary mind, but over 1,200 people are calling for Canada to be declared a nuclear weapons-free zone.

CUSTOMS TARIFF ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 118 and 252.

[Text]

CUT-BACKS IN PARKS CANADA PROGRAM

Question No. 118—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did the Department of the Environment announce cut-backs in its Parks Canada Program and, if so (a) who decided that such cut-backs were necessary (b) were there consultations with the concerned groups?

2. Will such cut-backs affect the conservation of our national parks?

3. Will any employees lose their jobs and, if so (a) how many (b) will the jobs be replaced (c) will (i) full-time (ii) part-time jobs be abolished and, if so, in each case, how many?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes. (a) The Government of Canada. (b) No. The announced budgetary reductions, including those to Parks Canada's budget, were arrived at after a careful internal expenditure and program review.

2. No.

3. Yes. (a) 54 employees have been informed that they will lose their jobs. (b) The jobs will not be replaced; however, every effort is being made to relocate the incumbents to vacant positions within the Department of the Environment. (c) Yes. (i) 80 jobs (ii) 148 jobs.*

*It should be noted that question 3(a) deals with employees while 3(c) deals with jobs. The difference (174) relates to vacant positions and to term positions that would have expired in any event.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Question No. 252—Mr. Heap:

Does Section 56.1 of the National Housing Act require that non-profit housing groups return surplus funds over the amount of the subsidy surplus reserve and, if so, what amount was returned in (a) 1982 (b) 1983?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

Yes, non-profit housing groups are required to return surplus subsidy funds received under Section 56.1 of the National Housing Act, which are over the amount of the subsidy surplus reserve fund permitted under the program. (a) $1,075,603. (b) $6,525,087.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 210 could be made an order for return, this return will be tabled immediately.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Question No. 210—Mr. Ravis:

1. By province, during each of the past five fiscal years, what were Canadian International Development Agency's (a) contract expenditures (b) consulting services (c) expenditures on materials and supplies made by the Department of Supply and Services?

2. By province, during each of the past five years, what were the percentage of (a) contract expenditures (b) consulting services (c) expenditures on materials and supplies made by the Department of Supply and Services?

Return tabled.

Mr. Dick: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STATUTE LAW (CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, before lunch I had started to make a few comments on the Bill before the House today, namely, Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I would like to start by reminding the House that when the Constitution Act, 1982, was proclaimed on April 17, 1982, the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms became effective. However, the provisions relating to equality rights as set forth in Section 15 of the Charter were not to come into effect until April 17 of this year. Section 32(2) reads as follows, and I quote:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

Therefore, April 15 of this year will mark the anniversary of the proclamation of the Charter and the date on which Section 15 becomes effective.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that the Liberal Government at the time had undertaken to examine and review all federal statutes to check their compliance with all provisions of the Charter.

Section 15 is a major provision of the Charter which must be interpreted within its general context. Section 15 acknowledges the right of every individual not to be exposed to any discrimination on the basis of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability. The wording of Section 15 reads as follows, and I quote:

Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Mr. Speaker, these rights are subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. That is Section 1 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We can also refer to Section 27 which deals with multiculturalism and its importance to this country, and to Section 28 by which rights are guaranteed equally to both sexes. Although hundreds of cases have been brought before the courts on the basis of various provisions of the Charter, Section 15, since it has yet to become effective, has not been the subject of any judicial interpretation. After the three-year waiting period ending on April 17, Canadians could expect the Federal Government would table a Bill providing appropriate amendments to laws that are not consistent with the Charter and especially with Section 15, so that the amendments could be adopted in time for the coming into effect of Section 15 on April 17 of this year, thus sparing Canadians the need to undertake costly court proceedings to have their rights recognized.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are necessary to eliminate the discrepancies that exist in our federal and provincial statutes, to help Canadians avoid situations that may be humiliating and unfair in addition to being extremely costly, and to improve the clarity and fairness of Canadian laws.

Mr. Speaker, the burden of proof often lies with minority groups. These groups often have to prove they should be considered first-class citizens. All these groups, including the disabled, visible minorities and language minorities have, at some time, been exposed to the discrimination and racism that surface, from time to time and to our shame, in our society.

Mr. Speaker, I must remind the House that the language issue, for example, is in fact covered under Sections 133 and 93 of the BNA Act of 1867, not to mention Manitoba Act Section 23 which deals with the same rights as those included in Section 133 of the BNA Act of 1867, namely access to legislatures and courts. In addition, we have Section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms concerning linguistic rights. To this day, those four sections could be challenged before the courts for legal interpretation. We had the court challenges program funded by the Secretary of State which, along with legal advice from the Minister of Justice, enabled Canadians to test Canadian legislation or test the system to make sure that the various Acts were correctly interpreted.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will recall that less than ten days ago I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) what would replace the court challenges program on April 1 since, as we all know, this program ended March 31, yesterday. There is no money left, therefore no program, and that is unfortunate! Since 1978, Mr. Speaker, when the then Liberal Government had established the court challenges program, 14 cases have been accepted, which represents an over-all amount of $580,000, and during the fiscal year ended yesterday, we had $260,000 to help Canadians uphold their rights before the courts by contesting, if you will, the interpretation of Sections 133 and 93 of 1867, and Section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That is no longer available.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, I had asked the Secretary of State whether he was seriously considering the feasibility of expanding the court challenges program to include Charter Section 15. I, for one, am firmly convinced that it is essential to help those minority groups who may be among the most underprivileged, who do not always have enough money, and who must necessarily rely on federal Government financial assistance. I had asked the Minister if he thought the program might be expanded.

● (1550)

In his answer the Minister said:

—as the Hon. Member rightly notes, with the widened context of Section 15, there are a number of groups that are very anxious to pursue rights and to see that these are clarified. In the review that is on-going, the wider context is also being reviewed in terms of support that may be offered.

That is found at page 3292 of Hansard, March 22, 1985.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is important to us and, personally, I would not be against this Government helping minority groups and people who feel their rights are being infringed on in connection with the section on official languages and the provision dealing with equality, namely Charter Section 15.

Bill C-27 now under consideration amends fifty Acts. With respect to legal rights, there are Sections 7 to 9 and 11 of the Charter, fundamental freedoms under Section 2, mobility rights under Section 6, and minor amendments to Section 15, amendments which amount to revised wording rather than genuine implementation of the Charter or a clear indication of what it means. Mr. Speaker, instead of making comprehensive amendments to the most controversial measures concerning minority groups, the Government once again opts for further study, and a committee will go traipsing across the country to seek the views of Canadians, again forcing minority groups to defend anew the rights they had finally acquired in 1982.

This extra work, this requirement to appear before a committee means more briefs, more studies and lengthy proceedings during which a committee may listen with sympathy, but where the majority or any given lobby group can turn the whole exercise into what ends up being a very humiliating experience for many people. Minorities resent coming under public scrutiny over and over again to prove that they are right and to reconfirm whether the rights they thought they had acquired in 1982 are indeed equality rights, Canadian rights they do have and which should command full respect.

Mr. Speaker, here are some remarks made recently by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan):

> The purpose of the Charter of Rights was indeed to protect minorities against pressure from the majority. By disregarding such considerations and shirking its responsibilities to give full force to the Charter, the Conservative Government violates the very spirit of that instrument.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty fair analysis of the situation. Minority groups will now have to appear before that parliamentary committee which, for many of us, had held hearings in 1981-82 here in Ottawa and elsewhere in the province. We were hoping and thinking that, by adopting the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, all Canadian legislation would have been reviewed after three years to eliminate discrepancies related to Section 15. Such is not the case. As I said earlier, the Bill introduced last January by the Conservative Government amends fifty Acts. It seems that the provinces are doing the same thing, and we are still waiting to see who will put and end to all this by finally settling this major issue.

Part V of the Bill concerning equality rights—there are 30 provisions out of a total of 120—amends eleven federal Acts. In most cases, these amendments do nothing more that than substitute the word "spouse" for the words "husband or wife", the word "child" for the words "son" or "daughter", the words "surviving spouse" for "widow" or "widower". Semantics, Mr. Speaker! The other categories of amendments relate to age, and one amendment to the Canada Shipping Act substitutes the expression "mental disability" for the word "lunacy". Mr. Speaker, none of those changes is controversial, of course. We have been doing that for years in an attempt to standardize our legislation and avoid anomalies.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that the provincial legislatures were strongly opposed to the inclusion of the equality rights provision throughout the constitutional debate, finally relenting in November 1981, except for the Province of Quebec, of course. Well, those legislatures have not been in any particular hurry to amend Acts of theirs that might conflict with the Charter of Rights.

The Progressive Conservative Government in Ottawa now has the same attitude and, as far as I can see, is not providing any leadership at all, which might have the effect of strengthening the position of the provinces. Believe it or not, they have only reached the following stage: Ontario, for instance, has published a 400-page compilation of sections to be amended, while Alberta, Newfoundland and Saskatchewan have published a white paper containing proposed amendments. Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting for three years!

Quebec has systematically invoked the notwithstanding clause in Section 133—a clause I find abhorrent—thereby removing all legislation from the field of application of Sections 2, 7 and 15 of the Charter and giving only its own Charter force of law. New Brunswick has passed a law eliminating major problems of non-conformity for which, it deserves to be congratulated. British Columbia, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have taken no public initiative, but we have been informed that working documents for the white paper are being drafted. Mr. Speaker, they all know that Section 15 will be proclaimed on April 17, 1985.

They are dragging their feet. They are waiting and examining and consulting! The Federal Government has started a consultation process through a parliamentary committee that will try to understand what Canadians think of all the grey areas referred to in the working document, the Minister's white paper: Equality Issues in Federal Law—distinctions made on the basis of age, mandatory retirement and economic and social problems. All these issues are of great concern to many Canadians but should have been dealt with by now, and a Bill tabled in this House that could stand the test and be used to consider in the House the intrinsic value of these issues. But no, they are going to let a committee find out what Canadians think about mandatory retirement, although Section 15 clearly prohibits discrimination on the basis of age. I think it is all quite clear and straightforward, Mr. Speaker. Why not let the courts decide? We have gone through the parliamentary process. We have done what was necessary. Let the courts and the legal experts tell us what the legislator had in mind. So much was clear to many of us. Why drag it all again in front of the general public to attract attention and possibly arouse public reaction? We see what is happening in New Brunswick with a document published by the Government. It is not easy to be a minority. It is not easy to be disabled. It is not easy to be one of those groups that are always being examined to death to find out whether they do or do not have this or that right, because the Charter is quite straightforward and quite clear.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are warning me that my time has expired or is about to expire. I would have a lot more to say about this subject. I am sorry the Government was unable to table a general and comprehensive Bill that could be used as a working document to establish once and for all for Canadians that there is only one Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and one law for everyone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments on the speech by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is well known as a very active spokesman for Francophones outside Quebec, and he is well aware that when language rights were established three years ago and even well before that, the Federal Government set up a program to provide financial assistance for those Canadians who wanted to establish their rights before the courts.

Therefore, we are now in a rather similar situation where statutes relate to the issue of equality from a point of view other than language. But I would like to know from my colleague whether he now supports, as he did in the past, the fact that the Government is providing financial help to those who want to establish their rights before the courts. If not, I would simply state that the opponents, those who are not in favour of extending rights, as perhaps provincial governments or others, will raise the funds needed to appeal unfavourble decisions, but how can rights really be established before the courts without Government financial support?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for York Centre for his question. The issue is a major one because, as I said in my remarks, minority groups more often than not are destitute, without much money. Maybe the Government wants to terminate the legal assistance program. Last week, I asked the same question from the Secretary of State, I asked him as I said in my remarks, whether he could extend the program to cover Section 15. He answered he had that under consideration. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I feel that if our society is to be just and fair, it is imperative that the majority, that is the taxpayers should help by means of an administered program, if you wish, in an impartial way, in order that individuals and groups may submit their cases to the courts which are in my view the resource, the forum open to us when the validity of a statute is challenged. I think for instance that the Canadian Bar could be consulted by this Government. If the Government wants to stay away from the day-to-day administration of the program to avoid conflicts, I would be very reluctant to have the program extended and entrusted to the Minister of Justice. I do not think he can simultaneously act as solicitor and judge, as client and counsel, but I would be in favour of that Government having a legal assitance program that would cover not only Sections 133, 93 and 23 of the Constitution, but also Section 15, and having a board of directors set up with membership from the civil liberties union, for instance, or the Fondation des droits de l'homme, including one or two representatives from the Canadian Bar. The Government could also have a representative on that board which would be provided with government funding and would have the responsibility and perhaps the duty to financially support legal cases of groups and individuals wanting to challenge certain constitutional sections—and I repeat certain constitutional sections—because not everyone is in a position to finance such important cases, like the Forest Case, for instance, in Manitoba, which has established that Section 133 and Section 23 were the same thing. That cost close to $75,000. The efforts and the money did not come from Mr. Forest personally, but this has established something. If someone is challenging for instance the right for the Government to enforce retirement at 65, and is suggesting that this is unconstitutional, I think that each and every Canadian is entitled to know exactly what the views of the courts are on that, and to know exactly and definitely that the courts are in agreement or disagreement with the Constitution and how the latter should be interpreted. To me, it is absolutely vital that we have an extended program, a program administered if you wish independently from the Government, but a well-funded and well-organized program.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Statute Law Amendment Act

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, this debate on Bill C-27 is just one more step, perhaps a small step, in the long and enduring quest for equality. There can be no more important cause than that in a democratic society. That is why I am particularly honoured by Members of this House to have been chosen as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights. Our committee will now be looking at the number of issues raised under federal statutes in light of Section 15 of the Charter. Because of that I have been present in the House for many speeches that have been given on Bill C-27.

I would like at this time to make some general observations and comments to put a number of the issues raised in context. I should preface this by saying that it has been my political credo and I believe very strongly in fair shares for all and special privileges for none. With that in mind, I think the current subject before us is one that gives an opportunity to make that principle an even greater reality. None of us should be so pretentious as to assert that any single Bill before the House or any single measure at one point in time or, indeed, anything such as Section 15 of the Charter is the be-all and end-all.

What we are engaged in is an enduring struggle to see that the ideals of our democracy, the equality of its citizens before and under the law, can be in fact a reality. As we know, under Section 15 of the Charter discrimination is prohibited, such as discrimination on the basis of sex and religion.

I would like to turn briefly to the pages of Canadian history to show how long this quest for equality has been. Dealing for a moment with the question of sexual discrimination, the right of women to be candidates for election at both the federal and provincial levels generally came with or followed the extension of the franchise to women. If we just look at the dates on which women were given the legal right to be candidates in Canada, we find a very important story there.

Manitoba was the first province giving women the right to be candidates for election to the Manitoba legislature on January 28, 1916; Saskatchewan followed on March 14, 1916; Alberta on April 19, 1916; British Columbia, the following year, in 1917; Nova Scotia in 1918; then Ontario in 1919. In that same year this Parliament passed a law entitling women to be candidates for election to Parliament. It was not until 1922 that Prince Edward Island came on board, and in 1925 Newfoundland, before its entry into Confederation, of course. New Brunswick passed such legislation in 1934, and Quebec on April 24, 1940. There is a 24-year period during which legislation was enacted to establish the legal right of women to be candidates seeking public office in the legislatures of this country and in Parliament. It says something about the nature of the country that it took virtually a quarter of a century for that right to be developed equally from coast to coast so that all women could share that right.

Another of the anti-discriminatory provisions now in the Charter deals with religion. I think here it is important to understand something of the background. I will do so by citing an example from my book entitled Political Rights which looks back into the history of the qualifications required for people to be elected to our assemblies.

Since Confederation no religious qualification has been required of Members, nor have clergymen of any denomination been disqualified. Under the Constitution Act of 1791 clergymen were disqualified from becoming Members of the Assemblies of Upper and Lower Canada. In New Brunswick, even after the turn of this century, clergymen of all denominations were disqualified for election. Such provisions did not reflect an anti-clerical tradition so much as they manifested the principle of separation of church and state. That point alone is worth emphasizing because in the work that lies ahead of our Subcommittee on Equality Rights, we must not only look at the face of the law as we find it on the statute books but go beyond and behind it to try to understand the economic, the social, or the cultural policy on which those laws were enacted. It will be very important to ensure there is no unravelling of important social relationships or distortion of long-standing values that are important to the public of this country. I think the separation of church and state is a principle to which many held and still hold in some instances.

Certainly different was the case in Nova Scotia where an anti-Catholic legal requirement was emblazoned in the statute books of that province. Up to 1830 Members of both Houses of Nova Scotia's Legislature were required, before taking their seats, to make and to subscribe to declarations against transubstantiation, the invocation of saints and the sacrifice of mass, as practised in the Church of Rome. This requirement was expressly remitted by the King in the case of a Member from Cape Breton who had been elected in 1820, and a decade later in 1830, such declarations renouncing the Roman Catholic religion were wholly abolished by an act of the legislature.

Those are but two of the many examples from the fabric of Canadian history that show that the struggle we now have to deal with discrimination and eradicate it from our statutes is something of a quest on which Canadians have been engaged from the time this nation first began.

Clearly the pace has been accelerating, Mr. Speaker. I would like to place the current Bill C-27 in a somewhat more recent historical context. If we look at the year 1947 and the post-war emphasis on reconstructing a new order out of the devastation left by World War II and on the importance of reasserting the roots of democratic societies, we find in the Province of Ontario in that year the introduction of a racial discrimination Act. Very shortly after that, other provinces followed suit. By 1951, provinces began legislating fair accommodation and fair employment practices Acts. In 1960 here in Parliament, the Canadian Bill of Rights was enacted. Fifteen years later, it could be said that by 1975, all provinces of this country had established Human Rights Commissions. The year after that, in 1976, Canada ratified two major United Nations' human rights covenants. It was in the following year, in 1977, that the Canadian Human Rights Act established a federal Human Rights Commission and consolidated other existing federal human rights legislation.

By 1980 a movement had begun here to establish a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This was included in the federal proposed resolution to amend the Canadian Constitution. The ins and outs of that battle are well known to all Members of the House. It was really two years there after, on April 17, 1982, that Her Majesty proclaimed the new Constitution Act, 1982 and that Section 15 of that Act would come into effect three years hence, which will be on April 17, just a few days away.

There has been much activity which can and should in the near term lead to further changes. We have had the report of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities in Canadian Society entitled Equality Now! It was tabled in the House in March, 1984. Also we received the Abella Commission report on equality in employment, as well as a discussion paper of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) on equality issues in federal law. It is clear in considering Bill C-27 that it is but one measure in an area which is exceedingly active in Canadian legislatures and in the minds and movements of those who care about developing a truly democratic society. We have never had a greater amount of activity than is the case today. Not only do we have Bill C-27 before us and the prospect of our parliamentary committee doing its work and reporting back to Parliament in the near future, but we have a criminal law review under way which is raising many Charter-based issues. As all Hon. Members of the House know, the Indian Act is now under revision aimed particularly at resolving a number of the sexual equality issues found there. Legislation is being challenged before the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the provisions of the Lord's Day Act in light of Charter provisions. The Unemployment Insurance Act is under review, also in relation to Charter provisions, as well as many other economic and relevant considerations. The list continues. I have marked at least seven major areas apart from the work now before the House in which the present Government is currently engaged, areas dealing with the quest for equality and fairness in Canadian public policy, Canadian law and the practices of the federal Government.

I have heard in the House statements by opposition Members to the effect that Bill C-27 is only a small step or a half-way measure. Rhetorically they have stated that it is too little in light of what must be done. I would certainly agree with those comments if Bill C-27 were all that we had before us. I hope what I have just said leaves the picture as clear as it can be. This is but one part of a great effort which is now being made by a new Government strengthened with a clear mandate from the people to make changes and to get on with implementing recommendations, policies and ideas which have been around for quite a while. That is most certainly what motivates me. If Hon. Members opposite can be supportive of this endeavour, let them join with us and avoid trying to score rather narrow partisan points on a matter as profoundly important as this one, because then we could really make great strides for the country.

Bill C-27 should not be diminished. As someone who has worked closely with over 140 statutes during the last five years in writing my books on election law, I readily appreciate the hours and hours which have gone into combing through federal statutes to pull out the discrepancies, distinctions and discriminatory provisions which exist on the face of the more than 1,100 statutes. This Bill therefore represents no small effort in and of itself. It justifiably represents an important first step. However, more important, it is fundamental to our approach that the solutions to the problems of equality in Canadian law not be dictated from Ottawa but, rather, be arrived at through speaking with and listening to the people of the country. If anything was said last September 4, I think it was a very clear statement that the era in which Ottawa knows best and Ottawa tells Canada that this and that is what the laws will be is an era which is over.

We will come forward with a program based upon a consultative process. We will try to relate the complexities of modern government to the realities we face and the continuing ideals of Canadians living in a democratic society.

Mr. Speaker, the in-depth review of Federal statutes to ensure that they reflect the equal status of all Canadians in accordance with Section 15 of the Charter has resulted, first, in the introduction of Bill C-27, and second, in the creation of the Committee on Equal Rights.

Bill C-27 proposes amendments to a number of Federal acts related to legal matters. Under its terms of reference the committee will examine the Federal statutes related to economic, social and cultural matters on which present legislation is based. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms must be interpreted on the basis of our social standards. We, as Members of the committee, must therefore allow every Canadian to express his views. We are now developing a participatory process, and our recommendations will have to reflect daily facts of life as well as the provisions of Section 15. In other words, Bill C-27 and the work of our committee will be the starting point in the recognition process of human rights. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we are favourably impressed with the mandate of our committee.

[English]

We have a task to find laws which will curb the powerful and will uphold the weak, laws which will give meaning to the principle stated in Section 15 of the Charter that all Canadians are equal before the law and equal under the law. Those who would lament the fact that today we do not have the last word or the definitive answer on all policies raised in the federal statutes, particularly those of the Liberal Party who have been critical of this, must in fairness recognize that the review in the Department of Justice was not begun on this subject until a mere seven months before that Party was driven from office. In short, there was a singular lack of dispatch in getting down to the task at hand. I do not wish to make any strong point on that score, any more than I wish members of the Opposition to use it for their partisan advantage. The reality is that the task of understanding the ramifications of the Charter in light of the existing provisions of our law requires a long, careful and continuing effort by many of us.

In conclusion, I want to report to you, erudite Speaker that you are, that I have been rereading Gordon Allport's classical work on the nature of prejudice, to give some basis for the further work which we will now be doing. He asked whether discrimination and prejudice were facts of the social structure or of the personality structure, and his answer was that indeed they were the results of both.

We are looking here not at the matter of how individuals may in their personalities respond through prejudice in a way that results in discrimination, but at how in the social structure, which includes the laws of this country, the discriminatory provisions, the distinctions that are there, are now, in light of Section 15 of the Charter, eradicated for the betterment of this country and its citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—I'm sorry, Restigouche, (Mr. Girard).

Mr. Girard: Mr. Speaker, what is the opinion of the Hon. Member of the criticism by the Opposition that the Government's approach will force people to go to court to assert their rights under Section 15 of the Charter?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I can say that whether they are from Restigouche or Moose Jaw, the view of Canadians on this will be quite the same. Those comments made by Members, particularly of the Liberal Party, that the approach which the Government is taking will force people to go to the courts to assert their remedies under Section 15 of the Charter is erroneous, misleading and disruptive to the process of this parliamentary committee.

In this country if you can make any statement with assurance, it is the following: nobody in Canada is forced into the courts. Our courts are there as a refuge for people who want to see that in the final analysis the rights and the remedies which they have can be interpreted. That is where they can turn to seek their remedy, if they so wish.

The context in which that has been raised is that the work of the parliamentary committee is now going to review the more complex social and policy issues, the cultural and economic dimensions of many of these issues before us as raised in the booklet Equality Issues in Federal Law. It was said that because this is not all in place and finalized prior to April 17, there will be a period during which people will have to turn to the courts. I just do not buy that. As long as Canada is a country and as long as we have a Charter of Rights, people will be going to the courts to assert their rights, and so it should be.

Everyone can recognize that the great body of complicated issues that are now before us are ones that are properly resting with the parliamentary committee to deal with them. After all, we are the ones who can legislate. If we decide that mandatory retirement laws are something that should be changed, we can bring in measures to make all the consequent changes that flow from them dealing with the Canadian Pension Plan and other pension plans.

Those are not things the judges of this country can do. That is not their role. Traditionally, it has not been the role of judges in this country to be legislators. That is more the American approach. I believe that every Member of this House, duly elected, recognizing the supremacy of Parliament as the law-making body in our system, would welcome an approach which leaves the greatest amount of control in changing the laws with the duly elected Members representatives of the people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Supplementary. The Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard).

Mr. Girard: The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) told us the other day that the consultation approach of our Government showed that this Government did not take matters seriously. Does the Hon. Member have any comments to make about this statement?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, consultation with the Canadian public is a very important step in the work of our committee. I believe that, for cooperation between the Government and the Canadian people to be successful it has to be expressed in positive terms. I therefore think that the hearings held by our committee will be a very important part of the process. More important, the consultation process will allow us to discuss with the public major problems related to the social, cultural and economic policies on which our laws are based. Another very important fact is that the public will be made more aware of the complexity of the problems we are now discussing. I believe that it is very important and very useful to discuss these problems with the people.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment plus a question for the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer). He stated that no Bill introduced in this House is the be all and end all. Members from all sides can agree with that. On the other hand, Bill C-27 is a terrible start. Some Bills certainly attempt to address the issue or the area which the Bill tries to cover to find a solution in a more comprehensive, genuine and encompassing way. He also mentioned that perhaps in the backdrop of this Bill, there is a flurry of activity. He mentioned the Equality Now! report with respect to visible minorities, and the Abella Commission. Perhaps he should have mentioned to the Canadian public that those were Liberal initiatives, as was the whole constitutional process and the Charter of Rights.

Perhaps he should also mention to Canadians that most of the objections which came in 1981 and 1982 certainly came from that side of the House and its provincial friends across the country.

The Hon. Member also mentioned the hours and hours that must have gone into amending those 50 federal statutes. He should also mention to Canadians that minority groups spent hours and hours in terms of preparing briefs. Also they spent a lot of money coming to Ottawa to present their views. We should also consider whether it is fair to encumber those individuals or groups throughout the country with having to repeat that performance. We should be asking Canadians whether we should in fact be reinventing the wheel today, April 1, in light of the April 17 deadline.

The Hon. Member talked about September 4 being the date on which this Government was given a clear mandate, a mandate for change. We all recognize what happened on September 4. It is all the more important that it does have the absolute majority, given the political will, that it does have the ability to give Canadians that change. In 1979, the Government acted as if it had a majority. In 1985, it is acting as if it were a minority. Its biggest desire is to be loved by everyone everywhere at the same time without affecting anyone's life, without saying that it is going to take a certain course.

Leadership also means giving direction with the full knowledge that that direction is not acceptable to everybody. By sitting on the fence and not trying to hurt anybody, you are not giving leadership.

I now come to my question. Given the fact that the Hon. Member, through this Bill, is looking at changing federal statutes, 50 pieces of legislation I believe, legislation with which everyone was in agreement, legislation which is purely cosmetic, why did it not tackle the other 950 statutes that need updating? Why stop at 50? Why did the Government not go further? Why create a parliamentary committee if we already have a standing committee that parliamentarians and minority groups can go to once we look at this legislation detail by detail? Why the parliamentary committee on the one hand and why, on the other stop at 50 pieces of legislation rather than taking a much broader look as a first step in bringing federal laws into compliance with Section 15?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the question just posed clearly reflects the Hon. Member's deep interest in the subject at hand. I welcome that interest. However, if he were to be fully fair-minded, he would not describe all the initiatives in the human rights field as being Liberal initiatives. In many respects, the reports which I cited were, in my understanding, parliamentary initiatives, initiatives taken by committees made up of Members of all three Parties of this House. Even the Constitution and the Charter to which the Hon. Member refers had success only because of support from two provincial Governments with complexions other than Liberal.

The Hon. Member then went on to refer to Bill C-27 as being merely cosmetic. I would think that the spouses whose rights are now for the first time to be protected by the clarification of provisions in the existing law would not find that change cosmetic. When speaking in general terms, it is very easy to skip over glibly some very profound and important points. I am afraid that is what has happened.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to one specific matter which, regrettably, was not covered by Bill C-27 but which, I believe, flows from the Charter of Rights. It is a matter on which urgent action is required and on which initiative has been taken not by the Liberals or Progressive Conservatives but by the New Democratic Party. I am speaking, of course, of the question of political rights or the right to participate in democratic elections and election campaigns of persons who work for the Public Service of Canada and of persons who may work for provincial legislatures.

My focus today is on the federal legislation. This is a matter of real and urgent importance. In fact, I raised this question in the House of Commons today. There are some 120,000 federal employees who live and work in the Province of Ontario. The provincial Government is now entering into an election campaign. Those federal employees were told last February that they were not to take any action which could give rise to the perception that they were acting in a manner which was partisan or which was not impartial during an election campaign. As a consequence, a number of employees, with great trepidation, backed away from participation in the federal election campaign and will in fact back away from participation in the current provincial election campaign. This has happened despite the fact that the Charter of Rights guarantees freedom of speech and freedom of association as fundamental rights, despite the fact that the Charter of Rights, in Section 1, provides for exemptions on a very limited basis, and despite the fact that in Section 15, the Charter of Rights provides equality of rights which should surely ensure that people working for the Government of Canada are given the same kind of treatment in terms of freedom of speech and of association as are other citizens of the country.

This is an urgent matter. My friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), suggested that no one has to go before the courts. I have been before the courts. I am in fact before the Federal Court of Canada right now in conjunction with four federal Government employees regarding the interference with their rights of association and freedom of speech because of the lack of amendments to Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act and because of the actions of the Government of Canada as the employer which essentially interfered with basic political rights.

I think it is fair to say that this is an administrative as well as a legislative matter. There has been federal legislation for many years which has tended to interfere with what I believe are the basic democratic rights of federal Government employees just as such legislation exists at the provincial level. Beginning one year ago, guidelines issued by the Public Service Commission had the effect of stepping up the heat very considerably. The guidelines transferred the enforcement of restrictions on federal employees from the provision in the Public Service Employment Act, which had not been used since 1967 because it required enforcement of a complaint by a political candidate, and no candidate has ever complained, to the internal disciplinary mechanisms of the Public Service. There, as some Hon. Members know, a number of disciplinary actions have been initiated or carried out. People have been suspended, called to account or have had black marks put on their records because of various participations in political life.

The reason I raise this issue now and the reason I raised this question earlier today is that there will possibly be elections later this year in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and the Yukon. There are two election campaigns under way right now. Even if the next federal election does not take place for another three or four years, the question of the rights of people who happen to work for the Government of Canada is one which I believe must be dealt with quite urgently.

I would like to suggest to my hon. friends from all Parties that we should look at the Charter of Rights as hard as we look at Bill C-27. Obviously Bill C-27 is designed to amplify and implement what was intended by the Charter. When looking at the Charter, we find that the Charter itself is rather weak when it comes to the question of democratic rights. Section 3 of the Charter refers to democratic rights and is in fact considerably more limited than I believe it ought to be. It guarantees every citizen of Canada the right to vote in an election for Members of the House of Commons and to be qualified to be a Member of the House of Commons. It also guarantees that no House of Commons will continue for more than five years save under certain narrowly defined emergency circumstances.

It is interesting to compare this with the enormous amount of detail into which the Charter goes with respect to the official languages and with respect to minority language educational rights. In fact, on those two issues, the Charter is almost as detailed as the Bill.

Regarding democratic rights, the Charter is silent on a number of things which I think are extremely important. The Charter does not guarantee citizens of Canada that there will be fair and impartial conduct of elections. It does not guarantee the right of candidates to communicate with their electors and of electors to communicate with their candidates. It will likely be tested in the courts as to whether or not such things as the gerrymandering that is now taking place in British Columbia is in fact forbidden under the equality provisions of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights. If the gerrymandering in that province is not governed by Section 15, I suspect that it will be possible for British Columbia to ensure that the Socreds can have three or four times the number of seats for each vote received compared to the New Democratic Party and not be in violation of the Charter. In other words, we have not thought this particular area through. I would ask my colleagues from all Parties to consider that question very seriously.

Of course, I am speaking initially of the status of people working for the Government of Canada, because it is a fact that promises were made by Progressive Conservative Members when they were running for office last summer and these promises have yet to be implemented. I understand that it takes time to move the wheels of Government and I am hopeful that the promise made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) that discussions with the Public Service union will yield a statement very soon will in fact come to pass.

Working under the guarantees which I believe are in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I feel that I have no choice but to go to the courts to say that if the citizens of Canada are to have freedom of speech, it should not be denied to a person because of the fact that he happens to work for the Government of Canada, except in so far as Section 1 would apply, and that would be where a restriction is reasonable, where it is proscribed by law, and where it can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

The jurisprudence limits those restrictions under Section 1 very sharply. The jurisprudence effectively says that one cannot apply a blanket restriction on an entire class of individuals. One may be able to demonstrate that Deputy Ministers and other persons who are providing senior executive services to the Government of Canada might have their political rights restricted or even eliminated entirely because of the nature of their jobs. Surely that restriction should not apply to a truck driver in the Yukon, a secretary working in the Department of National Health and Welfare in Tunney's Pasture, or someone who is a fisheries enforcement officer riding around in a boat somewhere off the coast of Prince Edward Island. Surely that would not be a reasonable kind of restriction.

My problem is that the promise was made by the Government eight months ago as it was coming to office, but we are still to see that promise implemented. The reason I am going to court is that I have regard to the fact that the previous Liberal Government, when in opposition, promised the same thing as the present Government but did not implement it. In fact, there has been more said about the issue of the political rights of federal Government employees in the six months of this Parliament than during the entire four years or four and a half years of the previous Parliament. I would undertake, as the Member for Ottawa Centre who represents a lot of public employees, to continue to raise the issue in Parliament and to urge the Government to act.

I deplore the fact that action is not taken in Bill C-27 and I will take action, if necessary, in the courts if what the Government proposes is not satisfactory. I would argue as well, Mr. Speaker, contrary to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), that it may well be, given the failure of the Government to act, that there is no choice but to go to the courts. There is legislation, I believe, in eight or nine provinces restricting the political rights of provincial public employees. Once those restrictions crack somewhere because of court action, we will see the political rights of all federal and provincial employees enormously expanded. I believe that is very important in view of the guarantees of the Charter of freedom of speech and freedom of association.

I have to report to you, Mr. Speaker, with regret, that in the court case which I undertook in conjunction with Randy Barnhart, Lynda Camponi, Ken Clavette and Heather Stevens, all employees of the federal Government and members of the Public Service Alliance—this case is in fact being supported financially by the Public Service Alliance—we have had what I think is a terribly retrograde and insensitive response from the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie) to the statement of claim we put forward. The gist of that statement is that the restrictions of Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act on persons who work for the Government of Canada—those are the restrictions which say that if a person works for the Government of Canada, he will not work for a political Party or a candidate in an election—are on partisan political work for a political Party or a candidate in an election. The Attorney General states that the section does not prohibit, limit or infringe upon any person's right to associate with any other person or persons. A person in British Columbia who went to the federal leadership convention of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was suspended from working for five days. Public employees in Manitoba working for the Government of Canada were threatened with disciplinary action if they did not withdraw from accepting a delegateship they had been awarded to participate in that particular election campaign. In other words, what the Attorney General seems to be saying is that one can have freedom to associate so long as one does not associate with a political Party. I find that unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The Attorney General also argues that entry into or departure from the Public Service of Canada, with all the rights, benefits, obligations and responsibility that entails, are matters of freely exercised choice, and each public servant is subject to the obligations imposed by Section 32 of the said Act only during tenure as an employee. In other words, it is argued that the freedom of speech and of association 250,000 employees of the Government of Canada is not impaired, according to the Charter, because in order to exercise freedom of speech, all they have to do is to quit their job or resign their position in the Public Service. I find that a very unacceptable position, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that during the election campaign the Progressive Conservative Party, at least on the campaign trail, seemed to accept that particular point of view. Those Hon. Members thought that it was an unreasonable kind of restriction. These days, the job market is not particularly good. The Government of Canada covers a wide range of topics, as it has done for a long time. I do not see why someone who is concerned with weights and measures should have to refrain from making a comment about whether Canada should be involved in the U.S. star wars initiative because he happens to be working for the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. That seems like an unreasonable restriction on his opportunity to comment on a matter which is not only of vital public concern but is of crucial public concern to himself and his children since he, together with everyone else in Ottawa, stands to be blown to smithereens if we get into a nuclear shooting match and the bombs start to fall on our national capital. The Government is casting its nets extraordinarily widely when it says, "Well, you can talk about anything you want, just quit your job".

I think, in a broader sense, Mr. Speaker, that the question of the freedom of individuals to participate in democratic life, without being inhibited by the employer, is something we in this Parliament should look at. We must look at it in part because of the increasing imbalance between power these days between employees and employers, thanks to the high unemployment policy of the Liberal Government prior to September and the policies of the present Progressive Conservative Government. That imbalance gives employers a lot of power over employees. That power can extend to directing an employee to participate, shall we say, in a dinner for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or for some other Progressive Conservative luminary, or perhaps to contribute to the cost of a seat at a fund raising dinner for the Government in power. Perhaps it can even extend to directing an employee that if he wants to keep his job, he had better get out there and work for the local Progressive Conservative candidate, if he knows what is good for him. When a male supervisor harasses a female employee, it is called sexual harassment. But the doors are open to what I might call political harassment. There is no protection against that in terms of our concept of what a person's political rights should be.

I think it is commonly accepted that if a person works for an employer, he owes loyalty to that employer. If a person works for General Motors, that person does not go out after hours and say Chevrolets are lousy cars. If a person works for Beatrice Foods, that person does not tell the public that its yogurt is lousy yogurt. I think that is quite well understood. Likewise, if a person works for Weights and Measures Canada, that person does not go out and criticize the Government's program of metrication. If a person wants to do that, then he either changes his job or resigns. However, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unconscionable for General Motors to tell an employee that if he chooses to speak out politically after regular working hours, it will censor what he says to make sure that it is consistent with its views as a corporation or, perhaps, with the views of some right-wing shareholders of its company in the United States. I think that would be unconscionable. I believe we have to be aware of that problem, particularly now that the Government of Canada is beginning to put that forward as a position it chooses to take with regard to its employees.

What I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the question of the political rights of federal Government employees should have been dealt with in Bill C-27. The political rights section or the democratic rights section of the Charter of Rights, is weak. The Charter of Rights suffers from a lack of coherent and consistent thinking. Perhaps we spent too much time wondering whether we should have a Charter at all and too little time looking at all the areas which should be covered in the Charter.

Failing an amendment to the Charter respecting democratic rights which would broaden the concept of democratic rights along the lines I have spoken of, it seems to me it is not fair to require that people test through Section 15, through Section 2, and through the fundamental freedoms sections freedom of speech and freedom of association so that people can involve themselves in political life. I would, therefore, strongly suggest to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore and to all his colleagues from all Parties who will be taking part in the committee, that even if they cannot make the amendments to Bill C-27, they come back to this House very seriously with recommendations suggesting that further legislation should be embarked upon which would deal not only with the question of the political rights of federal employees. That may be dealt with by other means and in the near future. I suggest that the whole question of democratic rights, in so far as it can be addressed by legislation, flowing from the Charter of Rights in its present form should be addressed by this Parliament during the course of the current session.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Should we carry on with Bill C-27 tomorrow, the Hon. Member has two minutes remaining plus a ten-minute question and comment period.

[Translation]

Order, please. It being 5 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to proceed to item No. 47?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSTITUTION ACTS, 1867-1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH SENATE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982, should be amended in order to abolish the Senate, and this House urges that the Senate and the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces pass similar resolutions, and that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to that effect.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion which I am proud and happy to say is very much in the mainstream tradition of my Party. I am hopeful, given some of the statements made in the last election and thereafter on all sides of this House, with the notable exception of the now decimated former Government, that this motion, while it may not lead to the arrival of the moving vans tomorrow, or even perhaps next week, will indeed assist in setting in motion those processes required to rid this country of an institution which once was an embellishment but which has now become an embarrassment.

In speaking today I would like to acknowledge the record of members of my Party, some of whom are no longer in this House, in proposing, promoting and arguing for the abolition of the Senate. I would like to acknowledge the contribution of former Leaders of this Party and its precursors and predecessors, and I would also like to acknowledge the contribution of our present Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I will quote briefly from a motion which my Leader sought leave to introduce in the House on March 11. Rather than cite it completely, I think the key phrase in the motion is this:

Whereas the Senate of Canada enjoys legislative powers, but exercises these powers without popular mandate;

If I were asked to make a one-sentence summary of my case for abolition of the Senate, I think those are the words I would choose. The Senate of Canada operates within the Canadian parliamentary framework without a popular mandate.

I would like to take note of the exchange which took place in this House last month in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was asked by my Leader if he would introduce legislation to abolish the Senate. He replied that he would do so if it were supported by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). The Prime Minister, of course, in making that tongue-in-cheek request, was acting within his powers but he was not, I think, acting fully in the tradition of this House in seeking the consent of the Leader of the Official Opposition for a legislative measure which, if he, the Prime Minister, and his caucus were fully behind, would require the consent of no other Parties in this House owing to the size of the Government's majority. But, characteristically, the Prime Minister was faster on his feet than his official opponent who did not take him up on the offer. Had he called the Prime Minister's bluff, he could have embarrassed the Government because then they would have had to do something instead of relying merely on rhetoric, wit and evasion to accomplish their objectives within the parliamentary process.

It is not my purpose here today to provide a historical survey or narrative as to the procedures which led to the establishment of the Canadian Senate.

[Translation]

Moreover, I would not want to get into personalities. I understand that there exist rules of mutual respect between members of the House and those of the Senate. And although it might be difficult to deal with either assembly without referring to individuals or general practices, I will try to carry on just the same, and I ask you to correct me if I happen to break the rule.

[English]

It matters little, in the context of a resolution to abolish the Senate, what the personal habits, personal worth or strength, or indeed the shortcomings, real, imagined or alleged, of the Members of the other House are. It matters little what the level of their income from their official duties, and I use the term loosely, might be. It matters little what their income from other activities may be, whether it be simply an old age security pension, for which many of them qualify, or indeed pensions and directors' fees and residual income in the hundreds of thousands of dollars which it is alleged pertain to some Members of that other place. I would try to avoid the employment of arguments ad hominem or ad feminem in this respect. While of course those who delight in deductive reasoning can deduce from the general remarks a number of particular allegations, I would ask for their forebearance in that respect. I ask Hon. Members to believe me when I say that I do not intend to offer insult or disrespect to any Member of that other place whose abolition I am advocating.

I would like to discuss the background of second chambers in general. In western constitutional history, bicameralism was originally justified by the need to represent the needs of the aristocratic element of society in a distinctive way within Parliament. The classical theory was expressed by Montesquieu in his The Spirit of Laws. Second chambers have indeed been passionately decried. The objection of Sieyès in the French Revolution is well known: if it contradicts the popular chamber, then it is not democratic. If it merely agrees with the popular chamber, it is then unnecessary. Harold Laskey said that anyone who examines the nature and history of second chambers in general will discover that their main purpose is at least to delay and, if possible, to prevent the disturbance of the status quo. They are in fact part of the general tactics of conservatism. I would point out that the conservatism instanced is of the small "c" variety, and I would acknowledge that many of my friends from the Conservative caucus also find the continued existence of the Senate at variance with the fundamental principles of democracy.

Since World War II second chambers have been abolished in Demark, Sweden and New Zealand, as well as in the Province of Quebec in 1968, which removed the last provincial second chamber from the Canadian scene. According to a survey carried out a decade ago, unicameralism, the function of a single elected chamber, prevails in 84 countries, and bicameralism, two chambers, in only 55.

The faults of the institution were in my Leader's remarks as being those of an institution which was established in an immature phase of Canadian democracy, a phase which has long since passed. The Senate was modelled, as were many Canadian institutions, on a British constitutional model. It is hardly radical to say that in Canada in 1985 we are at a very different phase of our development than we were in 1867 when we still functioned very much as an appendage of the mother country, in this case Great Britain. Canada's Senate was modelled on the House of Lords. The principle of the House of Lords in the British system, though not explicitly stated, was to provide a break for the powerful, the privileged, and the landed on the initiatives of the democratic society which they had historically governed. Second chambers were considered necessary to protect business and commercial interests from the workings of popular government.

In its concept and operation the Senate is neither regionally representative in the sense we understand today, nor is it democratic. It is in fact, as a former Member of this place and the next Premier of Ontario stated, "an undemocratic institution working at the heart of democratic government". I refer, of course, to an article by Bob Rae.

During its history the Senate has served mainly as a tool of patronage for the Party of power and as such has attracted continued criticism from my Party. It is, in a sense, a sort of escape hatch, a promotion alley, or a retirement institution for the two major Parties which have held the Government of this country over the last 117 years. It is, I believe, discredited in the eyes of the public. Of course, we must consider that simply by abolishing the Senate we will not necessarily accomplish an increase in public esteem for the House of Commons. We must look to ourselves to accomplish that.

It is difficult for me to see how any authentically Canadian institution could be established which would fulfil, in a democratic way and context, the role that the Senate is presently supposed to fill. It is not hard to understand that, since the governing elite of the Liberal and Progressive Conservative Parties are the potential candidates in this cash for life bonanza, they too will find it difficult to be driving forces behind a move for reform. It is, therefore, all the more commendable that there are some members of the Government Party who are prepared to speak in favour of this Bill.

The faults of usage of the Senate are indeed legion. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) referred to it as a home for hacks, flacks, and bagmen. I had to question why he was less than all-encompassing and did not mention bagwomen, or indeed why he was so generous. It is a prime instrument of patronage. It is a way of keeping retired politicians in the style to which they have become accustomed. I think the real question is why they should have become accustomed to such a high style in the first place, rather than why such a style should not be continued. It has been used as a repository for fired Ministers. The well-known term is "kicked upstairs".

I think the most obnoxious abuse of the Senate over the last few years has been that pioneered by the late, totally unlamented, ancien régime and its Leader, in that they made the Senate into a holding tank for their campaign teams. I am pleased to say, though I wish the proportions had been different, that the Canadian people decisively repudiated that backslapping, basically venal and mercenary approach in the last election. I think it does great credit to the people of Canada that they did see through it.

I would contrast the situation in our provinces and municipalities, which have no second chamber, with that in the federal Government and state my belief that, in the eyes of most Canadians, municipal and provincial Governments function in a more efficient fashion and relate better to the people they represent than does the federal Government. It is my belief that approximately 85 per cent of the legislation in Canada, including provincial legislation and municipal by-laws, goes through without benefit of the attention of a second chamber. My belief is that that legislation is not evidently or markedly inferior for the fact of being considered only by a single chamber.

While the Senate has no direct contact with money Bills, it is nevertheless true that approximately 85 per cent of the decision on spending, that which is subject to examination and not mandatory by legislation or program, goes through the provincial and municipal legislatures and councils.

The prime functions of government are three, Mr. Speaker. They are to establish laws, to spend money on purposes seen as legitimate, and to establish and promote a political ethos, ethic or culture within the country and society. I believe that Canada is not advantaged or benefited in any of those three prime purposes by the presence and intervention of the Senate.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, lest it be said that I did not have a good word for the Senate, I would say that we do acknowledge that there have been some valuable reports and long-term studies carried out by that institution in the last few years. They have been thought-provoking, intelligent, and, in many cases, marked by sound analysis and sound recommendations. In acknowledging that small praise we must turn to the overwhelming drawbacks of this institution, not the least of which is money. There is $27 million budgeted for 1985-86. I feel that we must acknowledge that the functions which it carries out could be carried out more effectively, efficiently, economically, and with less offence to the people and public of Canada, by the hiring of additional parliamentary draftsmen, additional staff for paliamentary committees, and even by the Members themselves.

The Senate of Canada is an idea whose time has passed, Mr. Speaker. We have the opportunity in this Parliament to make it what it truly deserves to be, a part of history. I hope we will not let that opportunity pass.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) did point out that there has been some good work done in the Senate. For that I commend him. With regard to the balance of his remarks, I suggest that a little more study and a little more analysis of what must be done by the Government of Canada should reveal to him that perhaps the House of Commons, in some regards, is already overloaded. Perhaps there is a very good reason, as I believe there to be, to divide an element of that load between the upper Chamber and the House of Commons.

I suppose if the Senate has a bad name, it is because it has been abused by some Prime Ministers of the past, and particularly by the Prime Minister who was most recently removed from office. It was abused when legislation was passed to it at three o'clock in the afternoon with orders that that legislation must be back for Royal Assent by five o'clock at the latest. It must not keep the House of Commons waiting. That certainly deprived that Chamber of any opportunity to give any thought, let alone sober second thought, to the performance of the House of Commons.

Today we discussed a Bill dealing with the Constitution. It is an example of an issue that would have benefited from some extended sober second thought. If that had taken place earlier, it would not have been necessary to debate the Bill which was before us today and which must be passed in order to accommodate the Constitution. The Constitution was not properly planned, and the Senators were capable of doing that study.

Mr. Keeper: They didn't do it.

Mr. McCain: They did not have the time to do it. Members will know that the constitutional legislation was introduced to the House with a time limit attached to it. It was not here for in-depth consideration and the subject matter was not placed before the committee for the purpose of hearing recommendations from the people. It was there purely for show.

The committee was shown the frailties which existed in constitutions in other jurisdictions. It heard recommendations for a constitution that would not make the court the legislator while depriving the House of Commons of its legislative capabilities. Some of those recommendations came from some Members of the other place.

I suggest that the House of Commons is already overburdened with work. There are complaints from Members of all Parties about inadequate time for debate and that the committees of the House do not have the time, under the present structure, to give proper consideration to all the items that are placed before it. Therefore, I suggest that there is more reason today for a bicameral government than ever before. I realize that this view conflicts with that of many Members from all Parties. I understand that the reputation of the Senate has been shaped not only by its historic performance but also by the abuse it has suffered from Governments that did not want sober second thought or interference with their own legislative agenda.

I submit that there is no better example of the abuse of the present structure as occasionally imposed upon the House than the filibuster undertaken by the former Deputy Prime Minister of Canada against the budgetary requirements of Canada which occurred at a very inopportune moment. He perpetrated another another disfavour to the Senate to which he was appointed with the full knowledge of the consequence of the extension of that debate.

As the Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) said, the Agriculture Committee of the Senate has provided Canada with a study of soil erosion and deterioration that I believe other jurisdictions will want to examine carefully. It is in that way, in addition to the study of a government's legislative program, that the Senate should function.

There is room for change and a review of the method of appointments. There may be room for change in the duration of an appointment, all of which may be very constructive for an improved Senate. However, I believe the Senate should exist.

In the time I have been here since 1972, the work-load of a Member of Parliament has more than doubled. There is no longer enough time for Members of the House of Commons to fulfill their committee responsibilities and constituency responsibilities within the framework in which we now exist. I believe there is room for the Senate within that structure.

Let us consider one situation that was addressed during the last election campaign. It concerns the regulatory structure that is imposed upon Canada. During the last ten years, government Departments have had what is essentially a blank cheque to make regulations to govern, not necessarily by law but by their regulatory capability. I believe that the Senate could undertake to remove some of those regulations that are imposed by that departmental structure. The committee which presently reviews these regulations has been ineffective in the past and is unlikely to have enough time to study all the regulations now in place or being proposed. Furthermore, my experience with that committee from attending its meetings indicates that it does not have the time to understand the consequences of the regulations that are made. I believe this is a function which the Senate could undertake very well.

Let me say that I would abhor an elected Senate. An elected Senate would increase the number of elections to be held in Canada. Moreover, if there were to be a Senate election shortly after a national election, historical evidence would suggest that the Senate would be politically opposite to the Government of the day. That is the case at the moment, but it will be corrected in time. Nothing could be more confusing or condemnatory than an elected Senate opposing the government of the day and the policies on which it was elected.

While the Senate has its weaknesses and there is room for change, there is no room for abolition. It would be acceptable to review Senate appointments and its relationship to the Government.

According to the Constitution, the purpose of Senate appointments is to provide regional representation. I condemn those Senators from Atlantic Canada who have failed to recognize their regional responsibility, regardless of Party, affiliation. Not only Altantic Canada has suffered seriously but other regions have equally suffered because senators have put their political affiliation ahead of the well-being of their region. If there is a reason to condemn the Senate, that is it. We saw evidence of that irresponsibility in the Senate in the last few weeks. No one should be appointed to the Senate without recognizing his or her regional responsibilities. Under those circumstances, I believe the Government would consider legislative amendments when they impact a particular region unfavourably.

While the Senate may need some redirection, I believe it is necessary. I am a strong proponent of the bicameral system, particularly in view of the load that Members of the House must carry.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate my support for the motion by the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) to abolish the Senate. My personal view is that the Senate should be abolished immediately. We should start all over again with a clean slate. I believe that most Canadians would agree that the Senate of Canada has not done the job for which it was intended.

Canadians have little faith in the Senate today primarily because of its method of appointment. Recently, the Senate has been called the most expensive daycare centre in the world. This resplendent centre features doormen, security guards and a rumpus room with dazzling chandeliers. It is the safe rest haven for so-called lottery-for-life winners until they are generously pensioned off—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We do not show disrespect for the other place, even though Members may want to abolish it. I hope the Hon. Member will remember that during his speech.

Mr. Dorin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I will refrain from those kinds of remarks. Today, I essentially wanted to draw the attention of the House to a very recent report on Senate reform by the Alberta Legislature Select Special Committee on Senate Reform, released on March 22. Before I summarize the report's main recommendations, let me mention that the report demonstrates a strong belief in the need for and potential value of a reformed Senate. In the words of the report, the Alberta Legislative Assembly —rose to the challenge to study Senate reform because of the feelings of Albertans toward the Senate of Canada.

● (1730)

The report goes on:

In the last few years Albertans have experienced feelings of alienation unmatched in past decades of Confederation. These heightened feelings of alienation resulted primarily from the contentious energy and constitutional discussions of the past few years with the former government in Ottawa. Albertans reacted vigorously against a federal government which was clearly insensitive to this province's needs.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Party in government in Ottawa is no longer the same. However, the Alberta Committee does not believe that the results of last year's election made Senate reform unnecessary.

The recommendations of the committee follow what has come to be known, particularly in Alberta, as the "Triple-E" model for a reformed Senate. According to the report, the Senate should be directly elected, with each province represented by an equal number of Senators. In addition, "Senators should have powers which would allow them to be effective in providing the regional voice envisioned by the Fathers of Confederation".

The Senate

The principal purpose of the reformed Senate envisaged by the Alberta Committee would be "to represent the regions in the federal decision-making process". The report notes, however, that the term "region" should be synonymous with the term province. The Committee believes the role of sober second thought should be the Senate's second most important function. I suggest it is not as relevant today because communication is almost instantaneous as opposed to what we might have seen in the 1800s or 1900s when communication was by pony express. Unlike the Alberta Government's 1982 discussion paper, the report does not propose that the Senate have an intergovernmental role. On this count, the report is very clear when it states:

To give the directly elected Canadian Senate even limited authority in the area of intergovernmental negotiations could complicate and blur the Canadian governmental process rather than encourage smooth intergovernmental negotiations.

A unique feature of the report is its call that the election be held during provincial elections. Senators would be elected during provincial elections for terms equal to the life of two legislatures, according to the first-past-the-post system now used for this House and other elected legislatures in Canada. Senators' terms would be staggered, that is, one-half would be elected during each provincial election. Senators would represent the province as a whole, as do American and Australian Senators. They would not represent a particular district within a province, as, for example, the report of the Special Joint Committee recommended a little over a year ago.

I have already noted that the Alberta Committee proposes equal provincial representation in the reformed Senate. I should add that each province would have six Senators and the Territories two each, for a total membership of 64.

As for the powers of the reformed Senate, the report makes the following general comment:

In Canada today, the Senate possesses power but does not exercise it because Members and non-Members regard it as lacking credibility. As a result, Canadians are witnessing an imbalance in the federal system of government. The Committee strongly recommends that a reformed Senate must be provided with "power" in order to live up to its purposes.

More specifically, the Alberta Committee recommends that the Senate have the power to initiate all legislation except money or taxation Bills; that the Senate have the power to amend any Bill, after which the House of Commons would consider the amendment; that the Senate retain the existing 180-day suspensive veto over constitutional amendments; that the Senate have the power to veto any Bill except a supply Bill; that the House of Commons have the power to override a Senate veto of money or taxation Bills by a simple majority; that the House of Commons be able to override any Senate veto or amendment of a Bill, other than a money or taxation Bill, by a vote that is greater in percentage terms than the Senate's vote to amend; that the Senate vote on a money or taxation Bill within 90 days and on other Bills within 180 days after passage by the House of Commons; that non-military treaties be subject to Senate ratification; and that all changes affecting the French and English languages be subject to a double majority veto, that is, a majority of all Senators combined with a majority of French-speaking Senators or English-speaking Senators, depending on the issue.

The final set of recommendations in the Alberta Committee's report concerns the Senate's internal organization. It is clear that the main purpose of those recommendations is to reduce the influence of political Parties in a reformed Senate. In the words of the report:

The Committee noted an absence of recommendations in other reports and studies on how the internal organizational structure of the Senate might be set in order to reduce potential party influence of Senators . . . The Committee recognizes that it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to eliminate party influence over Senators. However, changes can be made to the internal organizational structure which will go a long way towards lessening this influence.

The specific changes proposed in the report are the following: that the traditional opposition and government roles in the current Senate be abolished, including the positions of Government Leader and Opposition Leader; that Senators be seated in provincial delegations, regardless of Party affiliation; that each provincial delegation select from its membership a chairman who should sit at the pleasure of the provincial delegation; that the Speaker be elected by a majority of the Senate at a specified time every four years, and that there be a provision for the Senate, at any time, to initiate an election of the Speaker by a two-thirds vote; that the ten provincial chairmen, headed by the Speaker of the Senate, constitute a Senate Executive Council; and that the Senate Executive Council determine the order of business of the Senate and appoint committee chairmen and committee members. In addition, the Committee recommended that the determination of whether a Bill is or is not a money or taxation Bill be carried out by joint agreement of the Speakers of the House of Commons and the Senate; that Senate Executive Council members receive remuneration and staff assistance in addition to that received by other Senators; and that Senators not be eligible for appointments to Cabinet. This would keep them out of the difficulty of being in a situation where they have to assume collective responsibility for the Government.

I would simply say that, in my own view, the Select Committee of the Alberta Legislative Assembly should be given a good deal of credit for its thorough study. I believe its report will be discussed widely, both in Alberta and at the national level, and will be a useful contribution to the examination of the future of the Canadian Senate.

I would like to examine quickly two of the proposals. The first is, if we consider the purpose of the Senate, that we add two additional proposes. First, that the Senate try to take a longer term view, with longer term objectives in a less partisan way. Second, that the Senate have the opportunity to review federal appointments which have significant regional impact.

Finally, I would like to suggest that while it has been suggested in the report that the Senate should be elected, I think we should consider that election might not necessarily be essential. I believe the call for election has come recently because of the current situation and the view of the public with regard to the Senate. If the Senate were reorganized, we might look at some of the other options that have been put forward for appointment, either federal appointments, provincial appointments, a selection by one government or the other of a short list presented by the other government, or some combination of these factors. Elections, Mr. Speaker, have their pitfalls. One of them is that there will continue to be a short-term partisan view if it were necessary to seek re-election even for a second term. Beyond that I would suggest that with the elected requirement, people in the Senate would be looking, even if they were not personally seeking re-election, to try to present the views of their Party to ensure that a member of their Party was elected later. I do not think we would be able to keep partisan politics out of it.

In any event, I just wanted to try to outline some of those viewpoints. I think it is a good report, I think we should examine it and other reports that undoubtedly will be coming forward, but I do endorse the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River's (Mr. Parry) stand that the way to get the ball rolling might be to call initially for abolition of the current Senate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly on the motion before us because I would like to see it go to committee to be dealt with and become law. I should like to begin by acknowledging the contribution of the Hon. Member opposite. He agrees with abolition. He took the position which our Leader took, that abolishing the undemocratic and non-representative Senate which exists today would really open the door to various possibilities for the creation of another institution that could be truly representative of Canadians. The abolition of the Senate as it exists today should not in any way cut off any options of Canadians to have a second chamber that represents regional interests or minority interests, and it should have a reasonable structure to it.

My comments will not have much to do with the Senate itself, as I do not want to be disrespectful of the other place. My comments will not really be aimed at it but at how it has been used, particularly by Prime Ministers. They have used the Senate as their personal plaything, as a place in which to put old political war-horses. That is an abuse of the Senate and is not the fault of the institution itself. Even our new Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognizes that the Senate has been abused and used by Prime Ministers as a place of patronage. He recognizes it more than anyone else. During the last election campaign, he very effectively condemned the Liberals for their flood of patronage appointments, including those to the Senate. He pointed out how wrong and how abusive that was of the institution, of the public and of the powers of the Prime Minister.

It is sad that once the hon. gentleman assumed office he did not go down a new road or find non-partisan ways of making appointments. He started by making a few good appointments, such as that of Stephen Lewis. That was an excellent appointment. He will do a good job at the United Nations for Canadians. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister is hiding behind that good appointment and other good ones. He is using them as a smoke-screen for the patronage appointments in which he has been indulging to an extent unheard of in Canadian history. The Prime Minister has achieved a new record of the number of patronage appointments.

An Hon. Member: You ain't seen nothin yet!

Mr. Keeper: I am sure that is true. Quite naturally the Prime Minister was somewhat teed off with the Senate when it held up his money Bill, and when he returned to the House of Commons he said that he would reform the other place. Unfortunately he did not bring forward any specific reform proposals. However, he has let it be known that he intends to limit the powers of the other place.

Our fear is that he will limit the powers of the other place but preserve it as a place in which to put old political war-horses, that he will preserve it as a patronage tool. If he had good intentions with regard to the Senate, if he wanted to change the method of appointment and make it non-partisan, he should have held off on any appointments to that place until he had brought forward his reform package to the House of Commons. He failed to do that.

As I said, the Senate has been much abused. We could start all over by abolishing it now. If we want a second chamber, we could have some real negotiations as to what it could be, what functions it could serve, how it could acquire its political legitimacy and what interests it could represent. It is not good enough to treat the Senate as a patronage tool, nor is it good enough to simply limit its powers so that it can continue to play that role in Canadian history.

I hope Hon. Members will adopt the resolution of my colleague. If we want a second chamber, we should approach the matter with a clean slate, as the Hon. Member opposite said.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have a few moments in which to participate in this debate. I applaud the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) for bringing such a clean and concise resolution before the House to render the necessary death knell to an institution whose time has come and has long since gone.

I know that we, as Members of the Lower House, must contain ourselves and our emotions on this subject. I know we must always speak with respect for the Senate or, as we are constrained in this Chamber, must refer to it as the other place. With all decorum possible and appropriate, I will try to address my remarks in the next few moments.

The one Party which is not present to speak to this resolution is the Liberal Party. That is ironic, as the Senate of Canada is the only legislative Chamber in the entire country where that Party has a majority. The movement toward Senate reform really began in 1873 when Liberal Prime Minister Sir Alexander Mackenzie was first elected. He learned to his dismay the uses to which the grand-daddy of our Party, Sir John A. Macdonald, had put the other place. He had applied his political wiles in getting this nation together. It was a difficult task, and part of the expedient which Sir John found necessary was in fact to put in the other place people who could only fit there and nowhere else in the political complexion of the country.

Also it is interesting to note, just as a preliminary observation, that indeed there may be a good measure of agreement between representatives of the New Democratic Party and of the Progressive Conservative Party on this movement. One could reflect upon the writings of Gad Horowitz who wrote about the different strains in Canadian political philosophy, how Conservatives come through a philosophical approach which recognizes the organic nature of society, and that indeed socialist Parties spring from the same basic formation and share that organic view of society, that collective perception of how society works. On a few issues such as the one before us, there may indeed be some basis for philosophical agreement between our two Parties. Particularly it is the Conservative instinct to look at the organic growth in this case, perhaps to compare it with a tree and to recognize that the time has come to lop off the moulded branch and by so doing leave the rest of the tree healthy and flourishing.

The movement toward Senate reform in recent years perhaps had its greatest impetus in 1983 when the Trudeau Government brought in a discussion booklet of some 44 pages—and I was just looking at it—outlining its view on Senate reform. It is clear that that discussion paper really represented a synthesis of the many proposals that have come along in recent years to try to breathe new life into a defunct institution. Indeed, I was interested in the comments of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) reporting on a proposal from Alberta as to how the second Chamber might be revived.

With great respect, all of these proposals strike me as being somewhat analogous to the homestead. Here is the old homestead that we started with. We have come a long way. We are now in a good building with all the modern facilities. But we are still proud of the old log cabin in the back. It was the first structure in which anything happened. We look at that old log cabin and, because of some sense of nostalgia, we do not want to let it go. We wonder what we can do to keep it relevant. We think that maybe we can put in a microwave oven or a television, or possibly a circular driveway. We feel that we might be able to do something to make the old log cabin relevant to the 1980s. Sometimes the best thing that can be done with something that has long outlived its function is simply to let it go the way of history and fade gloriously into the past.

Some of the genesis of these proposals coming from western Canada originated a few years back when there was a feeling of alienation from the Government in the central part of the country. That was quite understandable. It was seen that Senate reform would be a vehicle for bringing western Canadian political imperatives back to the heart of the Government of this nation. That is no longer necessary. It was demonstrated last September 4 that the solution was not institutional change but political change.

Again we have western Canadians fully at the heart and functioning of the Government of Canada. The evidence is the great number of Cabinet Ministers from western Canada, the end of the National Energy Program and its divisive and economically destructive provisions as well as the signing of the Western Accord on energy policy. All of these show that western interests are strongly being represented, that they are being paid attention to and that it is not necessary to make any kind of institutional change such as foisting an elected Senate or any other kind of Senate on this country.

To put it charitably, throughout Canadian history the role of the Senate has been marginal. At sporadic intervals, there were proposals to reform or change the Senate. Those proposals were always met by a couple of arguments. The first was that the Senate provided a sober second thought, that we here in this Chamber, in the hurly-burly and rush of daily debate were too carried up and carried away really to make legislative enactments, but in the other place, the Senators, in the calm and cool interiors, the inner recesses of the time and reflective position, were able to see calmly the errors, omissions, the need for amendation and change, and they would fine tune, with that sober second thought, the legislative enactments.

History has clearly shown that that has not been the case. Without any disrespect, the Senate has served largely as a rubber stamp, except in cases where it has chosen to be merely political and obstreperous.

The other great argument that was given was that the regional representation was manifested in the Senate, as if, by inference, it was not being manifested here in the elected Chamber. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) spoke in defence of the Senate a few moments ago. Nevertheless, in doing so he condemned the maritime Senators for their failure to observe regional interests and to represent effectively the interest of Atlantic Canada. Even from the mouths of those who would support the Senate, come words of condemnation for that second argument that is given to us in support of the Senate.

The sober second thought theory and the regional representation theory just do not wash when analysed in the hard reality of Canadian history. It is at this point that the defenders of the Senate traditionally rush in with the latest and best argument they can muster, that is, that the Senate does some great study, and that the Senate has benefited the nation by bringing forth documents that have painstakingly analysed issues such as poverty and many other topics that are important. The fact is that those studies are done by the staff that is hired by the Senate. There are committees to do that work. Any committee of this House can do likewise. It is the quality of the staff that is reflected directly in those great studies which the Senators from time to time are wont to pull out in their defence.

I disagreed with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, when he alluded to those great studies done by Senators. In fact, it was the late Dr. John Deutsch who had much to do with the great study done there. Mr. Peter Dobell of the parliamentary centre, William Hood, who went on to become a Deputy Minister of Finance, and others like that were really responsible for the great studies for which the Senators take claim. With great respect, that should be recognized. Therefore, we can put to an end once and for all that fallacious argument as a defence for maintaining the Senate any longer.

The end of the Senate will allow us to pass through an era where we no longer mislead our friends and allies abroad by the phenomenon whereby they think that when they are in the presence of a Senator they have with them the charismatic presence of someone like a United States Senator, those men of action and power in the United States of America. Our Canadian Senators are just not in the same league.

We have seen what was referred to as a haven for provincial Liberal Party leaders. I think of Senators such as Gildas Molgat, Louis Robichaud, Henry Hicks, Andy Thompson, David Steuart and so on. We are now in an era where the Liberal Party is a Party of yesterday. There are no longer any real provincial Party leaders to be appointed. The Liberal Party is talking of setting up a think-tank, some kind of institute. That would be a great place, when we abolish the Senate, to which those great thinkers of the Liberal Party, Senators Pitfield and Kirby, can go. Their role to the nation would not be denied. They will be able to carry on function as part of the Liberal think-tank.

The notion of the Senate being integral to the system of Government is erroneous. It may indeed be central to our system of Party Government, but even there we can render a great service to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has to make the appointments to the Senate. It is no secret or mystery around here that for every one person appointed to the Senate, 30, yea, 40, possibly 50 others are left in a state of disconsolateness and shock.

I know a former Liberal Member who represented Sault Ste. Marie. He had been directly and expressly promised by a former Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, that he would go to his great reward in the other place. It never happened. If we were to abolish the Senate, we would render a great service by bringing to an end the house of broken promises and shattered dreams.

These are but a few of the reasons that I think it is important, indeed incumbent upon us to be supportive of the move to abolish the Senate. If the Senate we must have, I would see a properly appointed Senate on the same basis that we appoint our judges. That would be far preferable to an elected Senate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—ERNST ZUNDEL—DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 45. In the House on March 27, I asked the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) about the Ernst Zundel case. Since Mr. Zundel had been sentenced to 15 months, I asked how a determination would be made about whether or not to begin deportation proceedings. The Minister mentioned that an inquiry had begun that very day.

I would like to make a few comments about this most serious situation because we are dealing with the entire climate of freedom and goodwill in this country. I understand that the review to which the Minister referred is relatively automatic if a person is sentenced to six or more months' imprisonment or if a person is convicted of a crime that has a maximum penalty of at least five years' imprisonment.

Mr. Zundel was convicted under Criminal Code Section 177 which indicates that it is a criminal offence to knowingly—and that is the operative word—publish a false statement that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest. I think there is something wrong when a situation as serious as this must be dealt with under an almost obscure law such as this one. We need more meaningful laws that deal more directly with a matter as serious as the Zundel case.

Mr. Zundel arrived in this country some 27 years ago. He still enjoys landed immigrant status. It is clear from what has been said that he is not contrite in any way. I will likely hear from the Parliamentary Secretary about just how long these proceedings may be dragged out, but normally one of the things we look for is the assurance of an attitude of rehabilitation. To be very frank about it, I do not see anything even approaching that in this case.

I have made the point that we are using the wrong law for a case like this. One of the real tragedies is that the approach taken in this case ended up with the victims on trial and not the perpetrator. I have spoken out on this on a number of occasions. On March 3, I was at a Toronto regional annual meeting of the B'nai, B'rith held at a synagogue in central Toronto. On Sunday, March 10, along with a number of other colleagues I attended a service for the Jewish war veterans, and I had the opportunity to express views at that time. On the same day I attended a meeting at the O'Keefe Centre where about 5,000 people from the Jewish community got together to think, talk and pray about this most regrettable situation that was allowed to develop in this country. At the afternoon session, Mr. Speaker, we visited with the Jewish war veterans and had a special service. Mr. Ernst Koch, the Consulate General from West Germany, was present. In the course of his remarks he said:

● (1805)

The issue of redress of wrongs committed during Germany's nazi regime has been dealt with.

It is clear from his remarks—and I believe it took a lot of courage and dignity for that gentleman to attend that particular service—that Mr. Zundel himself may not be welcome back in Germany itself. I would just like to quote a couple of comments from The Gazette of March 27, 1985:

Canada would be a better place wihtout Ernst Zundel.

Mr. Zundel fancies himself a martyr on behalf of free speech, but he is a sorry example of the values upon which this country is founded.

The Jewish community itself, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, was divided on the issue of whether further action should have been taken. Since the action was initiated by Mrs. Sabrena Citron, and since Mr. Zundel has now been sentenced, I believe it is largely the view of the Community that this gentleman should be dealt with effectively and quickly, and not over what I would call a protracted period of time.

I visited Israel in January of this year, and I spent an hour and a half with a group at Yad Vashem. Anyone with any sensitivity would know that the holocaust did indeed happen. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary if there are any precedents to deal more expeditiously with a situation like this? How many legat steps are there? How can we deal with this man in a strong yet thoughtful way? We all pride ourselves on our freedom in this country. However, there are extremes and they must be dealt with.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to complete the reply which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) made to the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) on March 27, 1985.

A report pursuant to the Immigration Act was prepared by an immigration officer and submitted to the Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration on March 26, 1985, following the reception on that date of a certificate of conviction to the effect that Mr. Zundel had been sentenced to 15 months in jail.

As early as March 27, upon the initiative of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Deputy Minister issued an instruction to a senior immigration officer to carry out an inquiry pursuant to Section 27(3) of the Act. The proper instructions were given to the senior immigration officer the next day. This senior officer will initiate the inquiry shortly. A notice of inquiry will be sent to Mr. Zundel. He will be advised of his right to be represented by a legal counsel or any other person he should deem qualified.

The inquiry will be conducted by an adjudicator in the presence of Mr. Zundel and his counsel. The duration of the inquiry may vary, depending on the legal recourse Mr. Zundel might seek, including the adjournment he might ask for to prepare his case, motions to the Federal Court and so on. During the inquiry and before the adjudicator should render his decision, Mr. Zundel may seek refugee status. The processing of such an application could take as much as a year.

Should a deportation order be issued against Mr. Zundel, he would be entitled, as a permanent resident, to appeal to the Appeal Board of Immigration. This could take six months. Mr. Zundel could also appeal to the Federal Appeal Court or the Supreme Court of Canada of the decision rendered by the adjudicator or the Appeal Board of Immigration, which would require another year.

AGRICULTURE—INSPECTION SERVICE CHARGES. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on March 20 I rose in my place and asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) concerning his attempts to implement a cost recovery program against farmers for the inspection services traditionally performed at Agriculture Canada. This change came about because of the economic statement of November 8 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that the budget for Agriculture Canada would be cut by some $65 million. Some $23 million of those cuts would be in inspection services. The Department would then be charging farmers an additional $33 million for the inspection services eliminated because of the $23 million cut.

I suppose one could ask where is the efficiency of getting the Government out of inspection services since the new services are obviously going to cost at least $10 million more. However, the focus of my questions on March 20 had to do with the fact which had come to light that the Minister knew that the ultimate result would be to inflict harm on Canadian farmers, not only by increasing the operating costs of a whole industry, which has essentially had its net income frozen for the last 10 years at about $3.5 billion, but in addition, and this is even more damning evidence as the Minister knew this quite clearly from his briefing notes, this particular set of proposals would reduce the output of grain in this country. Yet, despite that, he deliberately went ahead with the proposals to reduce the output of farm products in this country.

The Minister knew from his briefing notes that a great many small plants processing hogs, cattle, and sheep in this country would not be able to continue operation under the new proposals as many of them could not afford to stay in business with the daily total charge of $125 for inspection. A lot of small towns and villages have processing or slaughtering plants which process a few dozen animals. This would increase their costs of inspection per animal far beyond anything their competition has to put up with in the larger centres. It would eventually push these people out of business. Jobs would be lost in these small communities, and a service which people in these small communities take advantage of would disappear.

The Minister in responding tried to pretend that what we had heard was not an economic statement but simply a proposal to begin negotiations. That is so much claptrap. It is very clear that the Minister of Finance intends to achieve a saving of $65 million in the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture, and has every intention of collecting $33 million in so-called cost-recovery, but which is simply an extra tax on agricultural production. There is nothing there to negotiate, yet the Minister gives the impression that he is prepared to do some negotiating.

His own briefing notes point out that they should work with the industry towards agreement on these proposals. While remaining firm on questions of policy, they can be flexible as to the mechanics of the application. For example, the industry may have valid reasons for preferring a particular basis of payment on recovery, such as a per hour or per head or per lot basis. The notes also said they can be flexible regarding who in future might perform the work or how it might be done. For example, an industry group might suggest that at some future date they provide the service themselves. The nature of the meetings should be informative and consultative. Under no circumstances should there be confrontation. They say they should emphasize that fees are based on the nature and cost of each program. Avoid industry to industry or program to program comparisons.

They were very careful to make certain, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed fee charges were not generally known. Each industry got its specific proposal. They knew they were being charged 10 or 15 times more than had been the practice in the past, but they did not know how they stacked up against other sectors in the industry. The horticulture industry found out what its proposed charges will be; the Canadian seedgrowers found out what its proposed charges will be; and the small meat processors found out what its proposed charges will be, but there is no method for them to consult to discover whether they are all being charged 10 or 15 times more, or whether some are being charged only three or four times more.

The Department ensured that the information that went out was very limited. As a result, I contend that proper consultation cannot take place. I contend that it is the intention of the Government to charge this tax. There is no consultation on that. The parameters in which the consultation takes place are very limited. Therefore, real consultation cannot take place, so it is simply a sham.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member pointed out earlier, the new inspection services fee schedule is not yet in itself a proposition; one should look up in the dictionary the meaning of a proposition which is the object of consultation, and one ought to be careful when talking about a firm intention. The whole matter is now under consideration by the people concerned.

We made a proposition and the industry took it under advisement. We are now discussing every detail of this matter with the groups involved, and we know there might be some difficulties. That is why we meet with the major national associations to seek their views and suggestions. We have said many times, and I say again, that we are consulting the industry before implementing new charges.

The Hon. Member is asking me why we are undertaking this cost-recovery program. It is quite simple, Mr. Speaker, and the answer is obvious—the deficit has to come down. From our discussions with the industry, we know that the agricultural community shares this concern and is anxious to cooperate to reduce the national debt, and that protects them, as it does the consumer and the agricultural production industry. They agree they have their share of responsibilities.

We are therefore convinced that together we can find an acceptable solution which will help us lower the deficit while at the same time cushioning its impact on Canadian producers. If we refer to the November 8 economic statement, it is true that some measures have been adopted, but the Government is now in a consultation process concerning various measures with a view to adapting the general principle to each specific case.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PETITION AGAINST CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY. (B) DISCUSSION PAPER INQUIRY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on a question I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on March 25 concerning changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The November 8 economic statement included an announcement that severance pay and accumulated pension income would be considered as earnings when people apply for unemployment insurance benefits. This would have the effect of delaying, for many weeks, the time when a person could begin to draw unemployment insurance. At that time the Government reckoned that these changes would save it $90 million.

I have great difficulty with this, Mr. Speaker. While I recognize the Government's concern about the deficit and its desire to move on that in a responsible fashion, I cannot see these particular measures as responsible in our particular situation of high unemployment. Until now a person could receive income amounting to up to 25 per cent of their UI benefits. It may seem logical, to a point, that people be required to use severance pay to deal with their expenses until they relocate. However, in times of high unemployment one would question the wisdom of requiring people to use up their severance pay before claiming for unemployment insurance.

In these times of high unemployment, people must be mobile and resourceful. Given a little freedom to use their severance pay, some people would probably relocate to an area where they may have a better chance of finding employment. They might use it in some other way to help become re-employed, such as by investing in tools or other work related equipment.

Under the present situation, when people become unemployed and know they will be unemployed for some time, the Government is essentially forcing them to use all of their severance pay to deal with the necessities of life, and thereby perhaps inadvertently interfere with their opportunity to become re-employed.

There were many complaints after the economic statement of November 8 and the Minister has made some adjustments. For instance, there will be exceptions in cases where severance pay is part of a collective agreement or written employee-employer's policy within certain dates. The question of using returned pension contributions has been postponed to January 1. However, this is a matter about which I feel most strongly, a matter which I hope the Minister will not only postpone but will eliminate completely.

According to the new policy, a person who is under 45 years of age and loses his or her job will have pension contributions returned. Obviously, pension contributions for people over 45 are locked in, or vested. If a person receives $3,000 back from a pension fund and his or her normal earnings were $300 a week, that person is now deemed to have ten weeks income. Therefore, the claim for unemployment insurance is postponed for ten weeks.

Surely this is very unwise because we expect people to save for their future. When most people become unemployed they do all they can to make the severance pay and unemployment insurance cover current expenses until they get rehired. They try to keep the returned pension contributions for investment either in a new employer plan or an RRSP in order to provide for their future.

When this plan was originally announced by the Government on November 8, there were many vigorous complaints; complaints from unions, and complaints from companies in the process of negotiating early retirement packages for their employees. They saw their plans thrown into turmoil because these changes amount to a disincentive to early retirement.

The Minister has agreed to postpone to January 1 the Implementation of the requirement that people use up their interim pension contributions. I am sure that the Minister, who is a compassionate woman, does not have her heart in this requirement. I am sure it is the hawks in her Cabinet who are forcing this measure on her. I sincerely hope some way will be found to drop this measure.

We all know that Canada is a nation of savers. It is difficult to get by if one is over 65 and must rely on government assistance. It is unacceptable for the government to expect people who are out of work to mortgage their futures, to use for the necessities of life that money they are contributing to a pension fund for their retirement. How many will be deprived of a dignified retirement by this ill-considered measure if it is enforced? I sincerely hope that after January 1 wisdom will prevail and we will see the end of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is concerned about changes in connection with unemployment insurance and about the many complaints he has received. I think all Members in this House have received a number of complaints, further to a decision that was announced in the economic message on November 8, which in turn was further to a Cabinet decision.

Considering these complaints and especially the negotiations in progress for a number of collective bargaining agreements, the Minister decided on December 21 to introduce transitional measures that would give employees a chance to readjust, except that there is a deadline, and today the Minister has tabled a document to that effect in the House.

The main principle is to avoid duplication. My hon. friend referred to situations which, I must admit, may be very difficult for people in their forties, but we can hardly apply the same argument to individuals who are receiving pension benefits. Unemployment insurance was instituted to cushion the effects of unemployment. However, people must be available for employment. At the present time, considering the enormous national deficit and more particularly, the deficit in the Unemployment Insurance Fund, we must take measures that will preclude people from having two or three jobs. Mr. Speaker, we know how difficult it is in cases ... because unemployment insurance was introduced to deal with emergencies. Among the various changes or amendments to be proposed, we will have to see which proposals are urgently required and which are not. This does not mean that in every case, a complaint is necessarily urgent. I admit that in the case of people in their forties who are working full time, this may seem a discriminatory measure and it may seen inequitable, but what we want to avoid is duplication of income.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.28 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had indicated that today we would be dealing with the Bill relating to the Charter of Rights and with Bill C-19, which is a Bill with respect to the reorganization of Bell Canada. You will recall that I did mention the possibility of proceeding with Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, on the basis of consultations with the Opposition Parties.

I am happy to report that discussions have taken place between the Parties and I think you will find a disposition on the floor of the House to deal with this Bill as the first item of business today. I understand that there is a disposition to deal with all stages of the Bill in the House, including Committee of the Whole, so that we can send this matter to the other place today with the hope that they will deal with it and we can have Royal Assent before Easter. Mr. Speaker, if you were to call Bill C-38 I think you would find an agreement to proceed at this time with all stages of the Bill.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm that there have been negotiations and that we are ready and disposed to pass the Bill through all stages today. I would just like to ask the House Leader, if we do pass this Bill some time before the end of business today, will he then return to Bill C-27 or will he be calling Bill C-19?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the answer to my hon. colleague's question is that we will go back to Bill C-27. Only after we have concluded that debate will we proceed with Bill C-19.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there were in fact discussions that went on into the evening last night with regard to this Bill. After having had those discussions we have decided that we will agree to pass the Bill during the course of today, recognizing that it is not everything we thought it might have been. Nevertheless, it is a temporary measure which will be superseded some time within the next 12 months by permanent legislation which responds adequately to two reports, one of which has not yet been tabled, on the subject of pornography and the distribution of obscene material in Canada.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am not only pleased but very anxious to speak today and move second reading of Bill C-38, an amendment to the Customs Tariff Act. This amendment has important implications for the importation of obscene material and hate propaganda into Canada. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, and indeed all Canadians, are seriously concerned about the increasing flow of obscene material, particularly the more virulent forms which depict or describe sexual and other activities in a manner which is violent, degrading and dehumanizing.

Canadians find particularly repugnant the growth in distribution of obscene material involving children. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, responds directly to the heightened awareness and paramount concern the Government and all Canadians have regarding the insidiousness of child pornography. In addition, this amendment highlights the gravest concern the Government has regarding the dissemination of spiteful propaganda.

The Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, has the administrative responsibility to ensure such materials do not enter this country. The legislative provision which enables the Department of National Revenue to carry out its duty is Tariff Item 99201-1 of the Customs Tariff Act. As Members know, on March 14, 1985 the Federal Court of Appeal ruled that "Tariff Item 99201-1 is not a reasonable limitation upon the freedoms guaranteed by Section 2(B) of the Charter (of Rights and Freedoms) and is of no force or effect".

The Government, of course, respects this ruling. Nevertheless, the ruling has created an appalling situation whereby the powers of the federal Government to protect the interests and wishes of Canadians concerning the importation of obscene and hate material has been seriously curtailed. This situation is simply not acceptable. Therefore, the Government has moved quickly to take appropriate measures to combat it.

As a preliminary step the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) immediately instructed Customs officials at Canadian points of entry to report to the local police any shipments of a commercial nature which are suspected to contravene the Criminal Code. With this stop-gap measure the Government hopes to head off any attempts by commercial interests to flood the Canadian market with books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs, movie film, video tapes, audio tapes and representation of any kind which depicts or describes sexual and other activities in a manner which is violent, degrading and dehumanizing.

The legislative proposal which we are examining today is of the utmost importance. It would amend Tariff Item 99201-1 to meet the objections of the Federal Court of Appeal by providing more specific and precise definitions of what constitutes obscene material or hate propaganda for the purposes of the item. This has been done by tying these definitions to existing definitions in the Criminal Code. Thus, obscene material will be defined according to the meaning of that term in Section 159 of the Criminal Code, while hate propaganda will be defined as it is within Section 281.3 of the Code.

We are confident that these steps will meet the concerns of the courts regarding the hate propaganda item. With the co-operation of all Parties in speedy passage of this Bill, Customs officials, under this amended tariff item, will effectively be able to prevent the import into Canada of obscene and hate material which is prohibited for sale and distribution by the Criminal Code.

On passage of the Bill, the Minister of National Revenue will, as suggested by the court, publish detailed administrative policy guidelines defining goods which are considered to be obscene or hate propaganda under the amended tariff item.

In introducing this legislation, the Government is asking that it be adopted for a period of approximately 15 months from the date of its passage. This relatively short time period, which will last only the 1986 summer recess of Parliament, has been established in anticipation of forthcoming proposals for changes in the statutory provisions which control the importation of these materials.

This Government regards the control of obscene and hate material as a matter of utmost urgency. In the course of human affairs, there is nothing more repugnant than the undue exploitation and the degradation of sex. This is made more despicable when children are involved.

Equally, in the conduct of human affairs there is nothing more destructive of the ideal and the values of our country than the propagation of hatred based on colour, race, religion or ethnic origin.

We will bring forward legislation which will more precisely define the types of material which are offensive to our society and which will give the federal and provincial Governments the necessary enforcement mechanisms to deal with them. This legislation will follow federal-provincial study of both the Badgley and Fraser reports.

Previous attempts have been made by the House to come to grips with this subject. For example, in 1981 the then Justice Minister introduced legislation aimed at the control of child pornography, following a 1978 recommendation of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. However, this legislation subsequently died on the Order Paper.

On August 22, 1984 the report of the Badgley Commission on Sexual Offences against Children and Youths was released. It made 52 recommendations on the subject of child abuse, including the effects of access to pornography on children and the use of children in pornography. The Department of Justice and the provincial Attorneys General are preparing responses to these recommendations. We will develop and enact comprehensive and effective anti-pornography legislation as early as possible in our mandate.

Also, the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution, known as the Fraser Committee, travelled the country and made a wide-ranging study of this subject in 1984. The report of this committee will be available in the very near future.

Bill C-38, which we are examining today, will provide us with an interim measure for the next year while new legislation dealing with the current concerns of Canadians and the realities of the 1980s is developed and enacted.

There is clearly a widespread call by Canadians for tough leadership at the national level in combatting the sale and distribution of these dehumanizing and degrading materials that have no place in Canadian society. I urge all Canadians and all Members of the House to join with me in giving unanimous and speedy approval to this measure before us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the amendments to the Customs Tariff Act concerning the implication of pornographic material and hate literature. It is certainly well worth while undertaking to bring the definition in the Customs Tariff Act into accordance with the Criminal Code, and it is much appreciated. Certainly the Zundel case and the Keegstra case underscore the importance of this temporary sunset measure. As well, when the Federal Court of Appeal struck down the section of the Act which allowed Customs officers to seize immoral or indecent material at our borders, Members from all sides of this House urged the Government to take action to prevent access to our Canadian markets and to stop the flood of degrading materials depicting violence toward men, women and children.

● (1115)

While I regret we are not currently debating substantial amendments to the Criminal Code on Section 159 dealing with obscene material or Section 281 dealing with hate literature, I am pleased that the Government has introduced this Bill as a stop-gap measure.

As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and as the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has just commented, it is not surprising that the Federal Court ruled the 117-year old section of the Customs Tariff Act on pornography and hate literature as being too vague to be held as reasonable limit on the constitutional right to freedom of expression.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms has forced this House to take a hard look at this important measure. As I have indicated in the Justice Committee and in this House, these amendments are necessitated by the imprecise wording of the Act.

Even judges disagree about the meaning of "immoral", or "indirect" despite agreeing that obscenity should be measured according to the community standard of tolerance. Since no one knows what material will be immoral or indecent in advance, Customs seizures have become nothing more than whims of officials, placing an unfair burden of responsibility on them by expecting the officials to be judge and jury.

As the Federal Court indicated, the Charter of Rights should not have whims when it comes to curtailing fundamental freedom of expression. As Section 1 of our Charter states, "freedoms can be restricted only by reasonable limits defined by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society". But as Chief Justice James Hugessen ruled:

> A limit which is vague, ambiguous, uncertain or subject to discretionary determination is by that fact alone an unreasonable limit. Uncertainty and vagueness are constitutional vices when they are used to restrain constitutionally protected rights and freedoms.

It is this uncertainty and vagueness that must be eliminated to prevent the importation of violent, degrading material. This brings me back to my original point that as legislators we must address the issue of providing our courts with a clear, precise definition of pornography, as the Minister so stated.

Let us look at the evolution of this issue. Sexually explicit material is not a new phenomenon. It has existed in virtually every society in history. But it is evident that in Canada today, following the court challenge of 1962 on the right to distribute Lady Chatterley's Lover wich was found not obscene and acceptable by community standards, much more of such material is available than ever before. It is increasingly more explicit and more violent than in the past.

There is still some difficulty about the term "pornography". Police estimates have placed the annual Canadian market in pornography at $300 million. I have heard figures as high as $500 million, but the scope of the use of the term is not disclosed. Notwithstanding these definitional uncertainties, many believe that pornography that depicts violence or demeans the person is demonstrably harmful and should be controlled.

At present the main sanction relating to pornography is found in Section 159 of the Criminal Code. Central to these sanctions is the definition of what is obscene in Section 159(8). It reads:

> Any publication, the dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed obscene.

Whether there is undue exploitation is determined by reference to community standards. But this definition cannot deal with increasing virulent and misogynistic types of pornography. The current definition, with its emphasis on sexual explicitness, does not lend itself to clear application in the area of degrading material. Many women's groups have long advocated that the existing definition is unacceptable because it is targeted only at sexual representations in general, not at the more serious problem of representations which degrade the human person. There has also been criticism of the requirement that in order for violence, cruelty, horror and crime to be obscene they must be combined with sex. There is something wrong in one's thinking when that is the fact within our laws.

As I have noted, pornography is notoriously difficult to define. Clearly the existing Criminal Code definition does not cover the concerns voiced by many groups. There are few people who would say that all sex and all violence is pornographic. Generally speaking, people use the term "pornographic" to refer to material which causes offence or some other kind of harm. One of the problems is that people have different conceptions of offensiveness and harm. Whether or not certain material is offensive is clearly a personal and subjective assessment. It is a reflection of individual experiences, the thinking of common interest groups, as well as moral and religious values. Let us not confuse erotic or sexually explicit magazines, movies, videos and books which express human sexuality with what the reality of pornography is today.

As a representative of a group of French women in Quebec who put together a slide show on the impact of pornography with some clippings out of magazines which we picked up on the stands, I can say that my reaction was one of sheer horror. Pornography today is violent, degrading to men and women. It is often racist and certainly sado-masochistic. It uses children or nubile teens as models. Men and women are often portrayed as objects rather than partners. It represents bestiality, buggery and bondage and goes well beyond community standards.

There is great concern that pornography which contains explicit scenes of sadism, in which violence is condoned or the victim is seen or perceived to be enjoying his or her pain and suffering, is not the model and the role we wish to present to society about tender human relationships. I believe this type of material creates an environment in which violence is seen as a legitimate means of achieving ends or expressing feelings. Moreover, people become desensitized to violence and our collective will to oppose this behaviour is eroding.

Another concern is that much pornography is openly hostile to women. A standard feature of much of the material available today is the gagging, beating, chaining, raping and even killing of women. In addition, women are often depicted in this material as enjoying or at least tolerating such violence. The image of women conveyed is extremely negative, showing them subservient to men, masochistic and in a sense less than fully human.

Many other concerns have been expressed about the long-term effects of pornographic material on social values. The public needs to be educated about the harmful effects of material which depicts violence against men, women and children. Civil libertarians say no censorship. I say consenting adults in the privacy of their home can do and conduct themselves as they please, but community standards guidelines clearly defined and respectful of the general population are vital. Freedom and liberty do not mean licence. They mean and impose responsibilities and limits.

Pornography is seen to cause harm to society at large in three ways. First, exposure to pornogrpahy leads directly to an increase in sexual offences, violent crimes and aggressive antisocial behaviour. Second, exposure to pornographic material diminishes the dignity and status of women. Third, exposure to pornography undermines society's values.

The issue of child pornography is of great concern to me. The Badgley report on sexual abuse of children made extensive recommendations regarding the making, distribution, sale and importation of child pornography. This material is a direct product of child sexual abuse. It comes into existence, and can only come into existence, through the base and coldly premeditated exploitation of a young person's sexual vulnerability.

According to the report, and I quote:

> The existing Criminal Code framework relating to obscene publications is inadequate to deal with the special circumstances attending the making and distribution of child pornography. The general definition of obscenity does not reflect the state's particular and more compelling interest in prosecuting and punishing those who promote the sexual abuse of children in this manner. The definition of an "obscene publication" in the Criminal Code pertains to the over-all content of the publications, rather than to the circumstances of its production. In reference to child pornography, it is the circumstances of its production, namely, the sexual exploitation of young persons, which is a fundamental basis for proscription.

Parliamentary action to expand the definition of pornography has been slow. In 1978 the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs recommended a new definition, one which would employ degradation as a separate basis, and which would also include reference to materials involving children. Criminal Code amendments in 1978, 1981 and 1984, which would have included similar provisions, and several Private Members' Bills, have died on the Order Paper.

In order to have a comprehensive look at the issues of pornography and prostitution, in 1983 the Liberal Minister of Justice, the Hon. Mark MacGuigan, set up a special committee chaired by Paul Fraser. The committee received many representations and listened to the concerns of many groups. This report has been submitted to the Government and I am most anxious to see its recommendations.

I am not surprised and women's groups are not surprised by the ruling of the British Columbia Federal Court of Appeal, a ruling that precipitated the introduction of this Bill, C-38, today, for it underscores and substantiates claims of women's groups for years and years about the inefficacy of the current law. Pornography is hate literature and is hate propaganda. Any material that diminishes men, women and children based on sex, race, colour, creed, religion or anything else is anathema to Canadians who are for the most part very fair-minded people.

While I support Bill C-38, it must only be regarded as a stop-gap measure until we have a comprehensive, precise definition that the court can uphold. With the Badgley report and the Fraser committee's recommendations in hand, I look to the Minister of Justice for swift, positive action to provide society with adequate protection against the degradation, undue exploitation and violence depicted against and directed toward men, women and children. I await with interest the Bill promised before June 30, 1986. In the meantime I welcome this temporary Bill which will cease and desist the importation of this material.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address Bill C-38, a very short Bill before us today, of which we will certainly want to see swift passage. It addresses a problem in the enforcement in the Customs Tariff Act. It has been in the law for a very long time. It contains excessively vague wording which we have known about for a long time.

Recommendations have been made by women's groups and other organizations over the years to improve both the definition of obscenity in the Criminal Code and to bring in line the ancillary definitions in legislation designed to deal with pornography.

I am sorry that we are dealing with only such a stop-gap measure today. It would be an ideal opportunity to get a better definition in the Criminal Code. There are very serious loopholes dealing both with child pornography and violent pornography. Previous Governments have only entertained dealing with those things. For example, there was draft legislation introduced by the Liberal Minister of Justice, Mark MacGuigan, but it was never introduced as real legislation. It subsequently came before the House in an omnibus Bill and never even got to second reading stage. Governments have acknowledge the existence of the problem but have not dealt with it. I think the previous Liberal Government was quite negligent in not improving the wording and in not heading warnings of Charter of Rights challenges to the pornography, obscenity and Customs Tariff Act legislations.

• (1130)

The ruling of the Federal Court of Appeal on the Customs Tariff Act is that it is not a reasonable contradiction of the Charter of Rights because the definition of what is indecent and immoral is too vague, and that is quite correct. The wording is too vague and that has been admitted for a very long time. Bill C-38 will address that but only by referring to the legislation that is currently in the Criminal Code and that legislation is woefully defective.

I would have preferred to see the sunset clause in this legislation which has it going to June, 1986 providing for a briefer period of time. There is no reason why we have to wait a year and a half to get improvements. We have had the Badgley Committee recommendations since last Angust and the Fraser Committee is expected to come back with recommendations for action on pornography any week now. I would have thought that legislation would have been brought in by the end of June of this year. Perhaps the Government will bring in the legislation before the summer recess if the Fraser Committee comes back with a good definition to be used in a Criminal Code amendment. We do need a very precise definition in the Criminal Code so that the other pieces of legislation can refer to it and be an effective barrier to the importation of pornography.

The importation of pornography is indeed the problem facing us. Most of the pornography that is circulated in Canada is imported, and that is particularly the case for violent pornography and child pornography. What appears in the Customs Tariff Act is extremely important for regulating pornography at the border.

Promises of legislation have been made and repeated since 1978. I think that it is high time that we actually amended the Criminal Code to get these definitions in place. I would like to point out to the Government that there is increasing agreement in Canadian society as to what those definitions should be, so it is not necessary to wait for this consensus to evolve. The Badgley Committee commissioned studies on public attitudes toward pornography and child pornography and it found a very profound abhorrence to it and a very important concern regarding the limiting of pornography and the use of legislation to do so. A recent court ruling by Mr. Justice Shannon included an extremely good definition of obscenity by distinguishing violent and degrading pornography on the one hand from what is merely sexually explicit on the other.

Court decisions are beginning to make the distinctions that women's organizations have been making and advocating to government and public opinion is beginning to coalesce around these distinctions. I do not think there is a reason for ongoing delay. The courts are beginning to move their interpretations in that direction. The public is moving in that direction and the women's organizations have led the way in offering precise definitions. It is really now up to the Government to act by including these definitions in legislation.

I would like to make a few remarks about the problem posed by hate propaganda in Canadian society. One part of Bill C-38 gives the authority to Customs and tariff officials to keep hate propaganda from entering the country. In this area we can be somewhat less smug than we are in the area of pornography because hate literature is indeed produced in Canada and Canada has been known to be an exporter of hate propaganda. We have no occasion to be smug in this regard. Courts have not upheld the banning of such literature because of the vagueness of the wording in the legislations. Because of this, we have made the Zundels and Keegstras of Canada very happy. I think we should be very unhappy when we see their pleasure at court rulings.

The Zundels and Keegstras of Canada argue on the basis of freedom of expression and I think we must look seriously at their contentions. Freedom of expression is a very basic value that we as Canadians hold dear, but I would remind the House that freedom of expression has never been absolute in our country or in any other country. There are reasons for limiting freedom of expression. We limit it on the basis of libel and slander, and on the basis of counselling a crime, threatening and extortion. There are all kinds of laws that forbid the expression of certain opinions because the expression of those very opinions would cause harm to other people. Freedom of expression cannot go further than respect for the life, security and dignity of other people. Hate propaganda very much violates the freedom, life and security of other people in our society.

Our laws on hate literature, as with our laws on pornography, are woefully inadequate as currently defined in the Criminal Code. Until this year there have not been convictions that have stood up to appeals and we do not know what will happen with the Zundel case because it has been appealed and it is possible that that verdict will be overturned. The hate literature sections of the Criminal Code are thoroughly inadequate.

The Canadian Jewish Congress and other groups have made recommendations for amendments. This is not the place to deal with the substance of those amendments but, very briefly, they indicate that the loopholes which exist regarding religious belief, wilfulness, good faith and the requirement for the Attorney General to prosecute these cases have meant that hate propaganda laws have simply not had any teeth.

I would like to read a very good statement of the problems that hate propaganda and particularly the Zundel case have caused members of our society. Bob Rae, the Leader of the Ontario New Democratic Party, while attending a Holocaust Remembrance service recently held in Toronto, said the following:

> We have just lived through the bewildering experience of a trial of a West German citizen living in Canada who has for years used this country as a base for spreading hate propaganda, misinformation and lies about the past—
> I say "bewildering" because for some weeks what was on trial, or at least being tested, were not Mr. (Ernst) Zundel's lies and propaganda, but rather the reality of the Jewish experience in the twentieth century. One can scarcely imagine a court being asked to determine whether D-Day happened, or the Dieppe raid. Neither the defendants at the Nuremberg trials, nor Adolf Eichmann himself in his own defence in Jerusalem, tried to argue that the Holocaust never happened, or was some kind of hoax. That would have been too utterly fantastic, too absurd.
> But in Toronto in 1985 we saw headlines day after day talking about "rival theories" and "revisionist thinking" about what happened to the Jews in Europe between 1933 and 1945, as if these theories could somehow be placed on an equal footing with the fact of the Holocaust.
> The Holocaust happened. Millions of Jews were killed as part of a policy of deliberate extermination. These are not theories. There will be many opinions on why this terrible event happened. But to deny that it did happen, or worse, to assert that it has been distorted and invented by people, is not "revisionism": it is hatred pure and simple.

A community has gone through the agony of seeing that reality denied and it has suffered again as a result of that.

It is ironic that the Charter of Rights, which was a promise of freedom and equality for all members of Canadian society, should be used to defend threats to and attacks upon fellow citizens who are not thereby equal and free members of our society. It is ironic that the Charter of Rights, which was supposed to guarantee freedom and equality to Canadian women, should be used in the defence of pornography, which degrades, humiliates and encourages violence against women. It is ironic that the Charter of Rights, which is supposed to guarantee equality to people regardless of ethnic origin and religion, should be used as a defence for the attack on the Jewish community and the people who have lived through the experience and have been survivors of the physical assault known as the Holocaust.

I am one of the people who takes the Charter of Rights and Freedoms seriously. The Charter is supposed to be a guarantor of freedom and equality. If it is to mean anything, the Charter must mean that the groups which are victimized because of religious or ethnic origin, and the females of our society, receive dignity and equality. There will not be equality and liberty when people can be degraded through pornography and attacked through anti-semitic literature.

I view Bill C-38 as a very necessary piece of legislation which is entirely within the spirit of the Charter. It is legislation which is necessary to promote freedom, liberty and security for members of our community. However, I am sorry that the legislation does not go further and address the substantive issues which remain in order to provide the protection from pornography which women need and the protection which other groups require who are being victimized by hate literature. At least it is a first step. I hope the Government will give us the assurance that there will be very speedy action taken to address the substantive issues and that it will provide good and workable definitions which will be upheld by the courts in actual cases.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak on Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff. As previous speakers have indicated, the legislation was necessitated by a recent decision of the Federal Court of Appeal which struck down a particular section of the Customs Tariff Act. The court indicated that the section was too vague and uncertain and that it contravened the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The tariff item which is in question is Tariff Item 99201-1. It reads as follows:

> Books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind of a treasoanble or seditious, or of an immoral or indecent character.

Any publications or documents which feel within that particular definition could be seized by Customs officials at the border before they were allowed to enter Canada.

Unlike the previous speaker, I applaud the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal, not because of the result, which would allow individuals to import pornography and hate literature into Canada, but because the court has given tremendous weight to the Charter which is the supreme law of the country. The court did not indicate in any way that it agreed with the importation of pornography or hate literature into Canada. It said that there must be some restrictions with respect to the arbitrary decisions which are made by Customs officials at the border in confiscating certain material. The court indicated that that tremendous authority could not be given to Customs officials without providing a concrete definition.

Why did the court strike down that particular section of the Customs Tariff Act? It indicated that the section offended the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 2 of the Charter delineates the freedoms which Canadians have come to respect and expect in Canada. They are freedoms which make this country truly democratic. Those freedoms make us proud of our heritage and the values which our society holds. Section 2 reads as follows:

> Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:
> (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
> (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
> (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
> (d) freedom of association.

The Court was specifically concerned about Section 2(B) which refers to freedom of expression. The court felt that it was an ultimate freedom and could only be restricted under certain circumstances. Section 1 of the Charter reads as follows:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

The court looked at the freedom of expression and felt that in the case of the Customs Tariff Act, which is 117 years old, the definition of pornography and the authority which is given to Customs officials was not a reasonable infringement on freedom of expression. Therefore, the court struck down the legislation and told Parliament to amend the Act and provide a better definition of what is obscene, immoral or hate literature.

I disagree with the NDP Member who criticized the decision and said that it was ironic that it should assist the hatemongers and those who import pornography into Canada. In fairness, the Court of Appeal said that the Charter was important; it did not say that we would open the floodgates so that pornography and hate literature could be imported into Canada. The decision was a victory for the Charter. The unfortunate side effect is that it will allow the importation of pornography and hate literature into Canada. However, it will only allow importation for personal use, which is an important distinction.

Once the decision was rendered, there was hysteria in certain circles across the country. Some people felt that all of a sudden the country would be inundated with obscene or immoral materials and hate literature. But under the Criminal Code of Canada, Customs officials still have the jurisdiction to confiscate immoral or indecent material if it is meant for distribution to Canadians. Even though this particular tariff provision was struck down, it does not leave Canadians powerless to deal with the importation of undesirable material. The legislation does allow people to import that material for personal use, and that as well could be a subject for controversy or debate.

People may ask why an individual Canadian cannot import material for personal use. That is something which will have to be debated when new legislation is brought forward to address the Fraser report. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) eloquently indicated that the Government has no business in the bedrooms of the nation and that people should be free to do as they please in their own homes. With respect to the importation of pornography or hate literature, it may be an area of controversy as to whether people can import that material for their personal use.

We agree that it is a very serious problem when the material is imported for the purposes of distribution and sale in Canada. We in the Liberal Party will support any legislation whatsoever which will deal with this very serious problem of all this smut coming into the country, finding its way into grocery and variety stores, and being available for children and others to see. I can assure the Government on behalf of my Party that we will support legislation which will serve to stop the importation of such material.

The court struck down Tariff Item 99201-1, and said it was too vague and ambiguous. In its decision it also gave some advice to us in this Parliament. It said that if you were to define what constitutes obscene or immoral material and hate propaganda according to the definitions found in the Criminal Code, then that would be sufficient and would not contravene the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, specifically the right of freedom of expression as found in Section 2 of the Charter.

We commend the Government for bringing in this legislation and have agreed to its speedy passage. Bill C-38 is a very short Bill indeed and simply refers to the definitions found in the Criminal Code of Canada. Whereas the tariff item which was struck down did not define what immoral or indecent meant, this Bill repeals that tariff item and replaces it with another which reads as follows:

> Books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind.
> (a) of a treasonable or seditious characters;—

There is no problem with respect to what constitutes treasonable or seditious, so there is no need for a reference to the Criminal Code. It continues:

> (b) that are deemed to be obscene under subsection 159(8) of the Criminal Code;—

I would like to read that subsection of the Code for the benefit of Hon. Members. We have already heard that this definition does not go far enough and we hope soon to be dealing with recommendations from the Fraser Commission which will address the inadequacies of the definition of obscenity and pornography in the Code. The existing definitions are not good enough. We have to deal with pornography which exploits children and depicts violence. We have to come to grips with child pornography, which is a very serious problem in Canada today. Section 159(8) says:

> For the purposes of this Act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene.

This has been the cause of some concern to the courts. What is obscene? What may be obscene in Nova Scotia may not be considered obscene in Ontario. The courts have grappled with this problem. There was the case of Regina versus Brodie and Regina versus Dansky where the court dealt with the novel Lady Chatterley's Lover. The Supreme Court of Canada held in a split decision that there was no undue exploitation of sex in that novel. To quote Mr. Justice Judson:

> It has none of the characteristics that are often described in judgments dealing with obscenity—dirt for dirt's sake, the leer of the sensualist, depravity in the mind of an author with an obsession for dirt, pornography, an appeal to a prurient interest, etc.

Referring to Section 159(8), the court said:

> The section recognizes that a serious-minded author must have freedom in the production of a work of genuine artistic and literary merit and the quality of the work, as the witnesses point out and common sense indicates, must have real relevance in determining not only a dominant characteristic but also whether there was undue exploitation.

Another decision was that in the case of Regina versus Prairie Schooner News Ltd. It indicated that the test of undue exploitation of sex is to be determined according to contemporary community standards in Canada. In the case of Regina versus Goldberg and Reitman, it said that community standards are not those of an individual community, such as a university community, but are those of all segments of the community.

So we have a problem when we talk about community standards. It is that of trying to define what is acceptable in a free and democratic society. We agree that students on university campuses might have a different interpretation of what is obscene and what is immoral as opposed to what senior citizens living in a senior citizens' complex might feel. I have given two extreme examples, but somewhere in between there is a community standard with respect to obscenity. Now, Bill C-38 says that obscene material is as defined in the Criminal Code of Canada. I have indicated that we have problems with the definitions of obscenity in the Criminal Code. Therefore, I certainly encourage Hon. Members opposite on the Government benches to petition the Minister to bring in legislation quickly to deal with the question of child pornography and violence so we can clean up that particular section.

The Bill we are dealing with here today also refers to the definition of hate propaganda. The old tariff item which was declared unconstitutional was too vague and so the court said you had to be more specific. What the Government is doing here, with our approval, is defining what hate propaganda means. The section of the Criminal Code referred to is Section 281.3(8) and I would like to read that section for the benefit of Hon. Members. It defines what hate propaganda means:

> "hate propaganda" means any writing, sign or visible representation that advocates or promotes genocide or the communication of which by any person would constitute an offence under section 281.2:

I will refer to that section for the benefit of Hon. Members. It says that everyone who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred against any identifiable group where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years. The Crown can also proceed by way of summary conviction. Genocide is defined in Section 281.1, and we are satisfied that that definition is acceptable.

● (1200)

The hate propaganda section of the Code could be amended to deal with the Zundels and Keegstras. I note, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating that my time is almost up. I just want to indicate in closing that the Government will have to take a hard, serious look at the Code provisions, including Section 281(8) dealing with hate propaganda, to see what must be done in order to address the Keegstras and Zundels of society.

In conclusion, I would like to indicate that we in the Liberal Party whole-heartedly support Bill C-38. We believe that it is necessary. We recognize that it is a stop-gap measure. There is a sunset clause in the legislation: the legislation will cease to have effect on June 30, 1986. That is about a year and two months away. We hope the Government will act more quickly than that to bring in legislation to deal with pornography. I understand that the Fraser report is about to be tabled. The Government will seriously consider the report and, no doubt, the committee will hear representations from concerned Canadians from coast to coast on this particular matter, and legislation will be forthcoming.

I urge the Government to speed up the process with respect to hate literature and pornography in the country because it is a serious problem. All Members in the House want to address the issue forcefully.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have only a brief comment. In his address the previous speaker quite misrepresented my remarks. Contrary to what he said, I agreed with the ruling of the Federal Court of Appeal that the wording in the Custom Tariff Act was too vague. I did not applaud it. I do not know that one applauds court rulings, but in my opinion it was certainly a correct interpretation of the law.

At no time did I say it was ironic that the court had made that decision. My use of the word "irony" was to point out the irony that lawyers and defendants should be using the Charter of Rights in defending pornographers or hate propagandists. It is ironic that the Charter should be used by people who want to oppose the very freedoms and equalities which the Charter is supposed to be guaranteeing. It is very ironic that an instrument such as the Charter of Rights, which is supposed to be protecting us, should be used to promote pornography or hate literature.

I have a great deal of confidence that the courts will not allow this to happen and that any reasonably defined definition in legislation would be acceptable. The courts have shown a great deal of wisdom in recent decisions. I refer to one in particular which came up with a better interpretation of the current obscenity laws in the Criminal Code. It is actually in the wording itself. I think the courts are moving in the right direction and I have a great deal of confidence that a well-worded definition in the Criminal Code and in the Customs Tariff Act will be respected by the courts and that the Charter of Rights will indeed have its intended function.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) would not applaud the decision, I applaud it. I think all civil libertarians, all those who believe in freedom of the country, all those who believe in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, should applaud it. The court is defining the limits of what the Government can and cannot do with respect to limiting specific freedoms. Although an individual may want to import pornography, what is important is the freedom of expression and the definition of that freedom. The courts are attempting to ensure that civil liberties are enhanced in the country. The courts want to ensure that people have those rights.

I do not think it is so ironic that individuals, even those who might import pornography into the country, should refer to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They have the right to refer to the Charter because it is the supreme law in the country. If the courts, in their wisdom, tell these individuals that they are wrong and that there are reasonable limits within which they can restrict freedoms, that is fine. However, if the courts say no, we should applaud the courts for upholding civil libertarian values in the country.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Question.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Is there someone with a question?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, we want to vote on it.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Just a few moments, my good friend. The last comments have further underscored the issues involving liberties which clearly arise at the basis of the kinds of questions we are dealing with in considering this particular Bill for speedy passage today. I do not want to speak for very long and in any way delay that action. Given the hour of the day that we are at, I am sure that we shall in fact complete our work here.

Surely it is worth recognizing that in the clarification of the principles of liberty, which has gone on in the English speaking world over the past couple of centuries, the argumentation which the last speaker was making in defence of his applauding a decision can bring us very close to boundaries which that great 19th century philosopher of politics and society, John Stuart Mill, recognized when he wrote on the matter in the 1850s. His memorable essay on liberty, which I am sure is familiar to many Members, made clear the far-reaching liberty which each individual must have. It also states as clearly as anyone could ever state that my liberty ceases where it impinges on the liberty of other persons.

That particular principle can easily be lost sight of as we ourselves, in making the laws of this land, are pressed toward the limits that others are always exploiting. It is obvious, in one area and another, that what we have been observing in the last years in the area of pornographic material, as well as in the production of hate propaganda, is no progress. Material has become more and more explicit, more and more extreme, and more and more shocking in both areas in order to create any reaction and, presumably, in order to appeal to the buyer. We have incredible commercialization in both of these areas.

The fact that we have seen such degrading regress taking place only underscores the fact that, while we want to defend liberty, when that liberty impinges on other persons, denies their freedom to be full-fledged citizens in our country and reduces them to some lower state of life, that liberty ends.

The broad reality of the Nazi era goes far beyond the fact of the Holocaust. Nazism represented racism within the state policy. It was not just the destruction of the Jews in those horrifying numbers. It was focused on other peoples of a lower state of life as well. The Slavic peoples of eastern Europe were to be reduced to the rule of the Arian master race as the German armies pressed eastward and established a great imperial domain on the Eurasian continent. That endeavour of the Nazis is the larger reality that can be lost sight of if we focus only on the Holocaust.

The principle that, by reason of their race, people are to be given a lower, subjected, and degraded position is surely a reality of the 20th century that is not unrelated to the questions that face us when we consider the boundaries of what it is right to print or publish for people to buy and enjoy. The result may be that such enjoyment builds a desire to attack others. For example, the "Rapist File" is a publication that is currently causing controversy in Toronto. That controversy was also raised in the local Thunder Bay paper yesterday afternoon. It is questions such as when private enjoyment may lead to public attack that must be dealt with here.

As a member of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, I am somewhat sensitive to their traditions and views, and when we are concerned about advancing and tightening the values of Canadian society and Canada as a nation, I am somewhat undecided. I think what John Stuart Mill said about the limits on liberty in the 1850s is worthy of our consideration as well. I am confident that Members are willing and eager to support good legislation that is sensitive to the development and enhancement of Canadians about us.

Unfortunately, the previous Government, rather than introduce solid legislation, spent the time of the House dealing with an omnibus Bill. I share the view of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), that we should soon deal with sound legislation addressing this issue so that Customs officials and law enforcement officials within the country can have a sound basis upon which to deal with these subjects.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to be as brief as the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp). As Members of the Opposition, we have a tendency to oppose legislation, often with great justification. However, Bill C-38 provides us with an opportunity to applaud the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) for taking such quick and decisive action in introducing this particular amendment.

This amendment comes as a result of a decision by the Federal Court of Appeal. The Minister has attempted to make some changes by enhancing the wording with regard to the definition section contained in the Customs Tariff Act. In essence, the Minister is amending a piece of legislation which, in its entirety, is about 117 years old. Many of us who are speaking to this legislation realize that it was antiquated from the beginning. Therefore, it should not be startling to Members of Parliament or the public that this particular section is being amended.

I have some reservations about the extension which is implicit in the Customs Tariff Act as a result of this legislation. Clause 1(b) states "that are deemed to be obscene under subsection 159(8) of the Criminal Code". We support the amendment because it gives Customs officers the power to intervene on behalf of the Government of Canada to prevent the importation of this material. However, by extending the amendment in the words so used, it does not necessarily add to but focuses, I suggest, attention on the confusion.

Section 159(8) of the Act begins: "For the purposes of this Act, any publication, a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex". The Hon. Member opposite knows very well what I am referring to and while he is not an expert in this area, his familiarity with the subject perhaps would benefit this debate.

A review of past litigation with respect to this particular section will show that defence counsel, Crown prosecutors and various experts who have given a determination to assist the judge or the jury in making a ruling have grave difficulties with this wording. The words "a dominant characteristic" are very clear. It does not mean a little or a lot, but "dominant". What do we mean by dominant? Are we required to refer to the literal definition of "dominant" in the Oxford Dictionary in terms of exploitation of sex? What is the meaning of "undue"? Does that refer to the standards of a community or to what a university may stand for in that particular community? It is very confusing.

My purpose in drawing this confusion to the attention of Members opposite is certainly not to be disputatious or difficult. I simply draw to their attention the complexities and difficulties with this particular legislation, as amended. It will need further consideration and I am pleased that the Government has added a sunset provision with regard to the amendment.

My second point concerns Clause 1(c) which reads "constitute hate propaganda within the meaning of subsection 281.3(8) of the Criminal Code". That particular section contains a definition of hate propaganda. Since this is a sunset law, why is the Government allowing accused individuals the opportunity to proceed by indictable offence as well as summary conviction, according to this amendment? Surely we are attempting to give a clear and unequivocal signal to those who wish to import such undesirable material into Canada that we in Canada do not want it and do not believe that it is in the Canadian interest to have it in Canada. Therefore, I would suggest that as a result of giving accused persons the option of proceeding under summary conviction, which carries a lesser fine and lesser penalty than the indictable offence which is much more serious, the Government has failed to grasp the opportunity that was before it.

In its amendment under Clause 1(c), the Government should clearly have spelled out that until 1986 all actions will be followed with an indictable offence as opposed to summary conviction. That does not prejudge in any way what future amendments may or may not be and I believe that Parliament would be giving a very clear signal to those individuals. I think the Government has missed its opportunity to give that signal.

Let me deal with the sunset provision. This provision, which states that the amendment will no longer be effective after June 30, 1986, is a good beginning. However, due to the Budget debate and a host of other legislative matters on the parliamentary calendar, what will happen if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is unable to introduce legislation by that time in order to make changes which are so necessary and demanded by the Canadian people? I am afraid that what will happen will be a continuation of that particular amendment both in substance and perhaps for another indefinite period of time. I had hoped that the Minister of Justice would be in his place today. I realize and appreciate that he is at a very important conference. I thought the esteemed and eloquent House Leader of the Government would have been able to stand in his place and clearly say that at a given time we will have given legislation before this Parliament to address the concerns which we as Canadians have with regard to this undesirable material.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there must be a rift in the Cabinet. The House Leader of the Conservative Party has not stood in his place. There is still time for him to get up and wax eloquent before us that by such and such a date, within three months, there will be new legislation placed before Parliament and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that Members of Parliament and the Canadian community will have an opportunity to review and assess where the Government stands on this particular material.

This was an opportunity for the Tories. Once again opportunity came and the Tories have missed that opportunity. I would hope, and I stand to be corrected by the Hon. House Leader of the Conservative Party, that he may yet later this afternoon stand in his place, if he has received a memo from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) or the junior Minister of Justice, and tell us when legislation will be forthcoming. I know that in the spirit of parliamentary co-operation and parliamentary reform the House Leader for the Conservative Party wants to take his responsibilities seriously. He should forthwith take his responsibilities seriously and get a specific time undertaking from the Minister of Justice as to when he and the Government will bring in legislation that will address the matters we are now discussing.

It is not sufficient, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, to say in Clause 2 of the amendment which is part of Bill C-38 that by June 30, 1986 this amendment will no longer be in effect. I think we need more. I think the Canadian people who overwhelmingly supported the Conservative Party in the last federal election deserve more than that. They deserve more than just a pat on the head, if you will. I would hope that the very eloquent, distinguished House Leader of the Conservative Party would for once assume his responsibilities, in a responsible and serious way and stand in his place and give us that undertaking.

Mr. Nunziata: That is wishful thinking.

Mr. Dingwall: I want to compliment the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) who is not in the House. No doubt she is in the Government lobby listening with great care to the views expressed by Opposition Members of Parliament—I am very certain of that—but I want to congratulate her for bringing this legislation forward. It may not curtail, it may not assist, but it is a sincere attempt by the Government, which we support and which the New Democratic Party supports, to try to tackle the issue. The Tories have gone only a very small part of the way, in my view. I think there is a great deal to be done. I would hope Hon. Members opposite will see this opportunity to raise their concerns when caucus meets tomorrow and come back some time later tomorrow and share with Members of Parliament the specific date when we will be discussing both the timing and the substance of the legislation.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the previous speaker on his comments. I was listening very attentively to what he was saying. I agree whole-heartedly with his comment that the Government is not taking the bull by the horns and bringing in the necessary legislation. It is the Conservative Government's approach to governing in this country. This Government appears to be constantly shirking its responsibilities notwithstanding that it was given a massive mandate on September 4 to provide the necessary leadership in this country and to bring in legislation for the benefit of Canadians from coast to coast.

What we find time and time again is that the Tories are dragging their feet because they are afraid, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is afraid to make the tough decisions that are necessary in order to govern properly. The Prime Minister is afraid to alienate any one particular group or individual. As a result we have had all this consultation going on, constant consultation for the sake of consultation, not for the sake of hearing the views of Canadians.

I am sure that, as a Member of the last Parliament, the Hon. Member is aware that the former Liberal Government introduced legislation last year that would have made it easier to prosecute those who publish or distribute hate literature or pornography. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of that because he was in the House and was a strong advocate of that legislation introduced by the previous Government. I am sure the Hon. Member is also aware that the Conservative Party, while it was in opposition, stone-walled and obstructed that omnibus Criminal Code Bill introduced by the Liberal Party. Consequently no action was taken because of the obstructionist tactics by the Conservative Opposition of the day.

I would like to hear from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), as an experienced and seasoned Member of Parliament and as a Member during those days, whether he can advise the new Members of Parliament, such as myself, why the Conservative Party in opposition stone-walled legislation introduced by the Liberal Government that would have addressed the issue of the importation and publication of pornography and hate literature.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his complimentary remarks. It is in character with the disposition that he has demonstrated during his short time in Parliament, and I want to thank him for his complimentary remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: I hope I can live up to the objective test that he has set for me.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that unfortunately this Government—who knows why?—is bent on the idea of consultation, which I think for many objective standards is a good thing. What the Government has refused to do, although it has tabled its consultation papers for the benefit of Members of Parliament and Canadians, is to table the number of polls initiated by the Prime Minister's office concerning public policy in Canada. The Government has refused, Mr. Speaker, to table the polls which the Conservative Party and its agencies have taken with regard to public policy issues and where the public stands.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are there some pages missing from my Bill? It has nothing to do with polls. The Hon. Member must be reading a different Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dingwall: Therefore, it is quite in character with the Conservative Government that it would not come forward in a very forthright, substantive way with regard to new law, new legislation, respecting child pornography. This Government is going to wait and it is going to consult. It is going to take more polls, so whatever the Government does the Tories will make certain that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be loved in each area of Canada.

• (1230)

Perhaps I could answer specifically the question raised by my distinguished colleague as to the motives of the then Government, but I do not think anyone in Canada would dare to question the intentions or motives of the Tories. We know by their track record what are their motives and intentions. They have been the same for 100 years. They are on the side of big business, on the side of big, multinational oil companies and on the side of vested interests. They do not care about the various regions.

To give a concise and concrete answer as to their motives is very difficult. I can only say that what they have demonstrated in the past by their stance on vavious issues and by what they have done in policy conferences on the national and regional levels indicates that their sole purpose in government is to perpetuate the class system in Canada, not the middle class or the poor. That is their ideology, motive and intention.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the debate has been rather lost, but since there is only a brief period for questions and comments, I want to make a comment at this point. Do I have the floor for that purpose?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Ms. McDonald: I want the Bill to pass, so I will be very brief in my comments. However, I am afraid I have to say something about the hypocrisy of the two previous Liberal speakers.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has declared that her intention now is to talk about some other speakers, not about the subject. Therefore, I would suggest that Your Honour rule her out of order.

Ms. McDonald: Clearly my remarks concern the substance of the remarks of the two previous Liberal speakers on pornography and the accusation of failure of the Conservative Government to act swiftly. The Liberals were in government for the last number of years, until September 4. They had many opportunities to bring in legislation. They were requested to bring it in. They were made offers of swift passage in the case of pornography legislation. They were told that if the clauses on pornography were taken out of the omnibus Bill, they would be given swift passage. But the Liberal Government was not prepared to move swiftly on the matter.

Further, the notion of applauding the Federal Court of Appeal because it discovered that something was wrong with the legislation is unacceptable, as that had been repeatedly pointed out to the Government. They could have brought in an amendment without the court pointing out what was wrong with the legislation. It was well known. They had been told that and had been asked to bring in amendments to the legislation so that it would not be unconstitutional. Instead they were slack. They just let it drift. Now we hear compliments to the court for finding out something which the Government ought to have known and ought to have acted on a long time ago.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to respond to the Hon. Member's comments. She has a great interest in the subject-matter which we are debating. All I can suggest to that particular Member of Parliament is that we were the Party in government which passed the Charter of Rights that she so loudly applauds at this point in time.

Just for her own edification and so she will be able to sleep better in the evening, in 1959 amendments to the Criminal Code were brought in by the Conservative Party. There were further amendments in 1962, and in January, 1978 the amendments of 1962 were reflected upon. There were further amendments on March 22, 1978; on May 1, 1978; on January 12, 1981; on February 16, 1981; on April 17, 1982; in January of 1983; on March 31, 1983; on June 23, 1983; and in November of 1983. The list goes on and on. I do not wish to have the debate go on longer than necessary, but the record is there for everyone to examine and is very clear. I suggest to the Hon. Member that she is a little off centre.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, it seems that all Hon. Members of the House who are present have thus far indicated their willingness to support the measure before us for consideration. Also I think we have agreed that this is a stop-gap Bill. It is something which was hastily put together in order to try to overcome what seemed to be shortcomings in terms of preventing the admission of various kinds of materials which incite hatred and violence. Since we all understand the ultimate fate of this Bill, that we will all work together to pass it today, I should like to use this occasion to reflect upon some of the important issues that in our haste about other matters we keep passing over.

Once again this Bill brings to our attention the urgency of dealing with matters relating to the whole question of violence, whatever form violence takes. We have seen over the years that the inciting of violence has been successful. We have seen wars and genocides internationally. We have seen the danger of terrorism which until recently we thought happened on the other side of the world. Now it has come home to roost, to Toronto and to Ottawa.

I have worked on conferences dealing with terrorism in an attempt to bring about some way of condemning it as a nation. Nationally and internationally we have noted a certain degree of apathy about the matter. Violence has also been recommended in this country against those who allegedly committed murder by bringing in capital punishment. Violence is part of our lives as we watch television and see people being massacred at an incredible rate of speed. We become almost immune and in fact somehow inured to the danger of violence in society.

Violence is something with which we have to deal not as an isolated matter or on a patchwork quilt basis. We have to take a comprehensive view of it and of course we have to deal with it as it emerges. I served on the committee on battered women which was a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in the last Parliament. It brought forth a report which needed to be acted on fully and was acted upon in part. The Liberal Government at that time took certain steps to provide through CMHC homes for battered wives. We saw certain steps taken to deal with the concerns of those groups in terms of amending the laws and the ways in which we dealt with their concerns.

I suggest that these steps deal with the result, the violence itself. In my view it is important that we deal comprehensively with the cause as well, not in a patchwork quilt, unrelated way. Some comprehensive steps which were taken to deal with violence occurred as long ago as when Mr. Trudeau, Dean Maxwell Cohen and Mark MacGuigan began to deal with the hate literature Bill. They brought about a Bill which was successful and began to call to our attention as Canadians the grave problems which result from the promotion of hatred. That hate literature Bill was passed.

All people concerned about freedom of speech—and I am sure that would include everyone in the House—have to realize that there is a growing understanding that groups cannot be libelled any more than individuals. Hate literature is a way of libelling individuals because they are members of a libelled group. While there are still perhaps some who belong to civil liberties groups which oppose the idea of bans against hate literature, the vast majority of civil libertarians today approve of the steps that were taken to deal with hate literature.

Because we have begun to set those kinds of legal definitions which have taken years to evolve, they have become accepted gradually by the community. There are certain things that you cannot say against a group any more than against an individual. We are now beginning to grow in our culture and in our approach to civilization. At last we have passed rules and laws against hate literature. They must still be further refined. They must be strengthened. We still see that hate literature is being brought across the borders into this country which in fact incites hatred against people in our community.

The second thing the Liberal Government of the past did was not only develop the hate literature law gradually against opposition, against editorials in The Globe and Mail and The Toronto Star, but it nonetheless persisted in bringing in that legislation against hate literature. We also moved in the direction of bringing about a policy of multiculturalism. That policy tried to bring about better respect among Canadians each of the other, no matter what their linguistic background, the language they spoke, the religion they espoused, the culture group they belonged to, their sex or gender or what their background may have been.

We have a rich country because we have a multitude of cultures, not just one. They are the riches of the nation, the riches of the world. We have people who belong to many cultures, backgrounds, races and creeds. We respect one another. That policy of multiculturalism has been the basis for this country in fighting hatred and violence. It is a total policy which we must use to fight violence.

The third area to fight violence was to bring in a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I remember the time it took us to convince the provinces to agree to signing the international human rights Covenants. We had to carry on a petition campaign in 1971. We forget how recently this battle was against violence, genocide and hatred. We forget how thin is the veneer of civilization still. In 1971 Canada still had not yet signed the international human rights covenants because the provinces refused until then, and until some time later, to give their consent to Canada signing those covenants.

Why could Canada not sign them without the provinces? Those covenants included areas that dealt with matters that were of a provincial nature. In respect for the provinces, the federal Liberal Government was not able to proceed more quickly in signing those international human rights covenants. Through the persuasion of petitions we were able one by one to convince each of the provinces to sign those covenants. It was a long struggle.

Then came the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It was a further step to try and espouse those noble values and principles and enshrine them into our Constitution. We wanted to say that all men are equal, that they will be treated equally, that they have the right to be respected and not to be assaulted in their dignity and their right to exist in freedom in this country. That is why the Charter of Rights needed to be enshrined.

There are those who want to regress and treat these things in a light-hearted fashion. Canadians wanted that Charter. They have now seen that dream also, another step forward, step by step to combat violence. In the Charter of Rights and Freedoms we speak about the right of people to be able to conduct their lives without threat to their dignity, to their person, their family and their property. We cannot do enough to enshrine these values.

I am happy to say that this is one of the great Parliaments of the world, one of the few places in the world where we believe we can enjoy those freedoms, where we try to protect the dignity of our citizens. I am proud to be part of that kind of Parliament and to have served in that Parliament. I suggest that this Bill is indeed just a stop-gap measure, a small blip in a much greater challenge which we must face. That challenge is to face violence and deal with it, not merely with the rape that takes place or the terrorism that takes place, or the battered wives or children who are abused. Rather, we must deal with the causes of violence.

We must ask ourselves about the way in which the communication systems convey violence, particularly the manner of permitting into this country hate literature or pornography which enhances, spreads or incites a form of violence. Rape is a form of violence, as is child abuse, murder and terrorism. Denying the dangers of the Holocaust and its existence is indeed to deny the greatest and most horrible violence we have known in this century.

Right at this time, because our Bills still are not adequate and our protection is not adequate, hate literature and denials of the Nazi Holocaust can enter and cross our borders at will. I wish to bring to the attention of the House the horrors that existed for those who would deny that the Holocaust took place. It was not just this deformed mentality that has been entertaining, if you will, those who enjoy that kind of entertainment in a hard hat and in a courtroom. Others in this country who are perhaps more serious individuals are also hateful and have also spread the idea that the Holocaust did not take place. I remember someone from Quebec who ran for the Tory Party who was espousing that view. He ran in Terrebonne. He espoused the view that the Holocaust never took place, that the Jews in fact torpedoed their own ships to create martyrs in the last war. That came from the mentality of a Canadian, not one who is across the seas.

In case there are those pathetic minds who think that the Holocaust never took place for one reason or another, I wish to point out that I recently attended a rally at Queen's Park in Toronto. The rally was held in order to allow the German Consul General, Dr. Ernst-Gunther Koch, to be able to give a message from Germany about the Holocaust to counter this hate literature, this hatred being distributed throughout the country to cast doubt upon the integrity of the Jewish people and their honesty in saying that the Holocaust took place. These are the words of Dr. Koch:

> I thank you very much for your invitation to be with you this afternoon. This gives me—as the representative of the Federal Republic of Germany—an opportunity to draw your attention to the following facts:
> The conviction of my Government as well as the attitude of the German people with regard to the genocide of the Jews during the National Socialist Regime—

That was the Nazi regime.

> —are based on the fact that it was the declared goal of the national socialist policy to persecute and annihilate the Jewish population in Germany and Europe for racial reasons.
>
> As a consequence of this criminal policy, millions of Jews were killed, and the Jews were afflicted with terrible pain and grief.

● (1250)

> These facts are absolutely evident for my Government. They are confirmed by the consistent results of research of all competent historians as well as by the sentences pronounced by German courts and by witnesses and defendants in these procedures. The great majority of Germans shares this view which has been held by all German governments since the chancellorship of Konrad Adenauer in 1949. My Government considers it an undeniable fact that a large number of Jews were gassed in concentration camps. German courts have regarded the claim that there were no gas-chambers in concentration camps established by the Nazi regime for the mass murder of Jews and other people as defamation and have instituted criminal proceedings in such cases.
> The Federal and Land Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany have been endeavouring for decades to redress the crimes of the Nazi Regime. The Bundesrat and the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany have repeatedly stated that redress for the crimes of the Nazi Regime is one of the most important and urgent commitments of the German people.

That was a statement made by Dr. Ernst-Guenther Koch, Consul General of Germany, on behalf of his Government.

I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, to show how, on the one hand, one can have the total submission of the German Governments and of the German people to clarify their own history and yet we have the bizarre situation of pedlars of hate defaming the Jewish people and those of us who had parents and relatives who were not Jews but died in the Holocaust. They are defaming the very existence of those people and saying that they have made up this story in order to advance their ends. That is hatred. It fans the flames of hatred.

Indeed, we should be considering whether or not there should be laws in Canada, as there are laws in Germany, that forbid the dissemination of such hatred as to deny the existence of a Holocaust which swept away in its ranks not only the six million Jews who were gassed only because they were Jews but the gypsies, the mentally ill and, as well, the other 25 million people of Europe who died as a result of that Holocaust. That ultimate Holocaust was caused by hatred and the propensity to say that only one race was greater than all others, something which is exactly the opposite of the beliefs of this Parliament and all it has stood for and fought for over the decades.

This is a matter of fighting for civilization. When passing this particular Bill we must not feel as though we have achieved something great here today. It is merely a stop-gap measure. In the general thrust of this House, I hope we shall continue assiduously to try to promote and carry on a battle against violence in all of its forms. The idea of combatting such things as rape and violence against women in the form of pornography or hate literature, or any other thing such as the advocacy of capital punishment, should continue by this Parliament in order that reverence for human life be established and that this Parliament be able to set an example for other Parliaments throughout the world.

I thank you for your attentiveness, Mr. Speaker, and for the time of the House allowing me to be able to express my deeper concerns which go beyond this particular Bill. I hope they will be there for us to continue to use as guideposts for the future and for the great heritage of this Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Ms. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate very much the co-operation again shown by the Opposition. Under the circumstances, I think we should take an extra five minutes for lunch. I believe there is an inclination to see the clock as being at one o'clock. After Routine Proceedings, we will proceed on the Bill relating to the Charter of Rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12.57 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has sent a delegation of Members of Parliament to the U.S.S.R. under the leadership of that famous globe-trotter, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). The group is composed of the Hon. Members for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson), Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt), Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins) and, apparently, the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner).

Mr. Speaker, if you haven't noticed yet, all those Members are Tories. It seems that the Government cannot find anything else for the back-benchers on the government side to do, other than to send them on trips around the world. The action of the Government in sending only Conservative members to represent our country should please the Soviets immensely. They too are of the opinion that there should be only one Party.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE CUT-BACKS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the cuts in the Canadian Wildlife Service took effect, an appropriate day for them to have done so, because only a fool would still try to justify the terrible mistake the Tories have made in this area.

Witness after witness testified before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry that the research to be abandonned as a result of the cuts would not be picked up by the private sector, the universities, or the provinces, and that is undoubtedly the case. Yet the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) decided to have eyes that would not see and ears that would not hear, and has stubbornly refused to reconsider.

We can only hope that when it comes to the many remaining items on the Canadian environmental agenda, the Tories will show more sensitivity to public support for environmental protection than they have when it comes to wildlife and national park planning. What about the promise they made during the election to make environmental impact assessment something required by law? Or will this conflict with the Deputy Prime Minister's (Mr. Nielsen) joint study team on regulatory program review, which has been asked to evaluate environmental programs primarily on the basis of whether they directly or indirectly constitute an obstacle to economic development or job creation?

Since that is obviously the case with some environmental programs, at least insofar as traditional forms of exploitative economic development are concerned, one can only conclude that the worst is not yet over. The Tories, like the Romans who persecuted Saint Paul because Christianity was putting the idol makers out of business, use the rhetoric of job creation to cover the fact that what they are really concerned about is the well-being of that idolatry represented by the values of the market-place, a form of sanctified self-seeking that has already done enough to creation, both human and non-human—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, on April 1 in the riding of Chambly, a group of business people from a number of municipalities that are particularly affected by unemployment have opened a door to job creation. Thanks to the program set up by the Department of Employment and Immigration, these men and women who, like the present Government, are aware of Canada's economic development needs, have set up an industrial and business recovery fund.

The new LEAD company will receive more than $2 million in financial assistance over the next five years. This recovery fund will be a source of risk capital, to be used not only to help existing businesses but also to attract new businesses that will create more than 50 permanent jobs in three communities in the riding of Chambly.

Mr. Speaker, by maintaining programs similar to the LEAD Program, the Progressive Conservative Government is clearly showing it is anxious to deal with employment problems in Canada, Quebec and more specifically in the riding of Chambly.

CALL FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF AGRI-BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents in the riding of Kent feel that the Farm Credit Corporation may never function properly or become the main lender of farm credit again unless an agri-bond or similar program can be developed and legislated. I realize the efforts which many are making to bring this about, and I call on all Members of this House not only to encourage this action but to encourage its expediency.

But there is another very important and immediate problem to be addressed in the farm community, and the Farm Credit Corporation holds the key to the solution. The problem is this. How do we deal with the many questionable bankruptcies facing many of our most aggressive and efficient farmers, in other words, the farmers we cannot afford to lose?

A recent special review board has indicated that many of these farmers may still be viable even though their net worth has shrunk due to decreasing land prices. The same escalated land prices that were involved improperly in the lending of dollars are now involved improperly, due to devalued land prices, in the "unlending", if I may use that word, of the same dollars.

I call on the agency to be less rigid and to be the first to waive one-half of the actual dollars it estimates it will lose when it forces a bankruptcy sale. I believe the banking industry is ready to follow this course and is watching closely for the initiative to be taken by the FCC. With that action, this sensitive issue could be resolved sooner, and even the taxpayer would benefit.

IMMIGRATION

TREATMENT OF APPLICANTS FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, when we mentioned the occurrences at Toronto detention centre for persons claiming refugee status a few weeks ago, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) referred the matter to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

The House will recall that the RCMP questioned prospective refugees without the benefit of a lawyer or adviser. There was also a problem about the lack of information given these people on assistance available from humanitarian and professional agencies.

Mr. Speaker, the committee must now discuss how its members are to conduct their investigation. The Committee on Transport and Communications was allowed to travel far and wide, but it seems there are no funds left for the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. The problems discussed in the Committee on Transport are probably less embarrassing politically than those on the agenda of the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker, this goes to show there is a wide gap between the Progressive Conservative Party's so-called resolve to govern by consensus and what is actually happening.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—REMOVAL OF OIL INDUSTRY TAXES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Ontario's Deputy Energy Minister, Duncan Allan, was quoted this morning as having said that he fears the federal Government "gave away the store", and is exhibiting "a lot of faith" that the oil industry won't simply take its money and run, under the Western Accord. Those are his words, not mine. I believe that at the minimum we should have a statement from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Premier Miller on the kind of language which the Deputy Energy Minister of Ontario used.

The Conservative's new energy policy removes five federal taxes on the oil industry, at a cost to the federal Treasury of $1 billion over the next two years. There is another $1.4 billion deficit in the oil import subsidy account. When it comes to oil companies, clearly the federal deficit is no problem. It is only a problem for ordinary Canadians whose programs and benefits must be cut back.

We have seen the catch phrases which have been used by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) before. Catch phrases such as "engine of economic growth", "market-oriented prices", and "end to discriminatory taxes" have been used. I figured out where I had seen those catch phrases. I have seen them in the Gulf advertisements on television and in the newspapers in the last four years.

Why would a Government give a conservative company like Texaco such a windfall? It is a disastrous policy. I would suggest three ways to salvage it. One, Premier Miller must insist that Clause 9 of the agreement on consumer protection must be beefed up. One could sail a super tanker through that clause. Two, the Petroleum Monitoring Agency should be given more power to monitor in the upstream and downstream—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

LABOUR

NEED TO MAKE RADICAL CHANGES TO EXISTING LEGISLATION

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, does the right to work exist in 1985? We live in a society governed by laws that often put constraints on that fundamental freedom that is the right of the citizens of this country to engage in employment.

As far as employment is concerned, I am astonished at the number of rules and regulations. In Quebec, work permits, qualification cards and OCQ regulations often penalize large numbers of workers. Our democratic institutions leave very little room for invention, creativity, freedom of choice and the right to work. I am convinced that thanks to technological change, employment will increase as a result of the creativity and energy of the individual.

Canadians and Canadian businesses must know they cannot constantly live off government handouts. I am sure there is a majority that wants to be free to go on working and developing their skills. Interventionism is not a panacea. We must reduce Government intervention in the lives and economic activities of Canadians. Government administration today is often too complex to be effective.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, thousands of workers are anxious to see drastic changes in our present legislation so that they can work freely without constraints. As far as federal-provincial relations are concerned, I suggest taking down the barriers that are preventing my constituents and Quebecers and Canadians in general from working where they want to work.

SOCIAL SECURITY

UNIVERSALITY UPHELD

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has long been the champion of effective and beneficial social programs. The Conservative Government under John Diefenbaker introduced some of the most progressive social assistance legislation in Canadian history. To quote the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong): "Mr. Diefenbaker's concern for the unfortunate, the weak, and minorities should be a reminder in future years to Members of Parliament and Governments yet to come." Yes, it is this Party and, indeed, this Government, which truly care about all Canadians.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) wrote in his consultation paper on child and elderly benefits that the concept of universality is a keystone of our social safety net. Its integrity must not and will not be called into question.

The Progressive Conservative Party is a caring Party for all Canadians. We do not believe that Canadians are ordinary; we believe that all Canadians are extraordinary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE CUT-BACKS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it was reported in the Ottawa Citizen that Pierre Couillard, an expert in wildlife disease, has been hired as a chauffeur for the national museums. I submit that no credible consideration of ways and means to reduce the deficit could seriously conclude that a saving of $3.8 million, roughly one ten-thousandth of the deficit, in the Canadian Wildlife Service would do anything to move the Government toward sound fiscal management. Yet, $3.8 million represents a 17 per cent reduction in the annual budget of the Canadian Wildlife Service, and will cause widespread disruption of research activities and human resources.

Canada gets a good return on its annual investment of $22 million in the CWS. Recent Government statistics about the importance of wildlife to Canadians indicate that industry, directly or indirectly related to wildlife, employs about 184,000 individuals, and generates about $2.9 billion in personal income. From this the federal Government receives about $737 million in income taxes, and another $269 million in import and excise duties. By comparison, the total revenues to be saved, or costs recovered, announced on November 13 for the whole of Environment Canada for the fiscal year 1985-86, total only $44.1 million, or 4 per cent of the entire revenue generated by wildlife related industries. Despite claims by the Government that the cuts were rationalized, no rationale besides restraint and sound fiscal management has been forthcoming.

We condemn the action taken by the Government which has led to Canada's top wildlife experts having to seek positions of employment which are totally unrelated to their qualifications, and to severe losses in the long term to Canada as a whole.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

IMPORTANCE OF THEATRICAL GROUPS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we live in a world of rapid advancement, and it is sometimes with awe that we watch and experience the impact of these developments and how they affect our lives. It therefore becomes all the more crucial that we take time to reflect on our heritage and recognize the absolute importance of supporting Canada's arts and culture. It is unfair and unrealistic to expect Canadian artists alone to ensure the enhancement and future of our culture. This process should be a collective effort, shared by our artists, the general public, and our Government.

Ottawa has the advantage of the National Arts Centre, an institution which gives us the opportunity to patronize artists from across the country. It is, however, equally important that we support the smaller groups in our communities. The National Capital region supports organizations such as the Great Canadian Theatre Company, servicing both the adults and youth of our community. In Vancouver, the Vancouver Playhouse not only produces shows but also has a mandate to cultivate young talent. In Toronto, Theatre Passe Muraille endeavours to exhibit Canadian works. In Montreal, Le Théâtre de Nouveau Monde works to ensure the future of French Canada's unique culture. These are only a few of our organizations which represent thousands of Canadian artists who are dedicated to Canada's cultural development. But dedication is not enough; they also need our financial support.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

FURTHER TRANSLATIONS URGED

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): With the equality provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to be proclaimed on April 17, Canadians are again reminded of their right to freedom of speech and assembly, and to freedom from discrimination. However, many Canadians whose mother tongue is neither English nor French will be unable to understand those fundamental rights fully.

Although the Charter has been translated into some 16 languages, there remain some very significant omissions. Where, for example, is the Charter in Japanese, in Inuktittut, in Finnish—spoken in Canada by the largest population of Fins outside Finland—in Hindi, or in Russian? All these and others are spoken as the first language by large numbers of Canadians.

Now that the Liberal Canadian Unity Information Office has been disbanded, its functions with respect to distributing the Charter to Canadians have been absorbed by the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean). I am told, however, that the Department does not intend to have any other translations done. The Government has stated its intention to enhance multiculturalism. In the rush to hack off government programs, it is forgetting significant portions of our society. I trust the Secretary of State and the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) will consider this unfortunate lapse and make the Charter available soon to all Canadians.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—GASOLINE RETAIL TAXES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He must have recognized that the recent oil deal certainly does not benefit the consumers who will be the real victims of that deal. The Prime Minister certainly did not reassure the people of Ontario yesterday when he refused to give a commitment that there would be no increase in taxes at the pump.

Will the Minister assure this House that there will be no taxes imposed at the pump? Will he give us his undertaking that that will not be part of his Budget? Will he at the same time explain to the House why he made that commitment initially and spontaneously to reporters, and then withdrew it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that the Western Accord does benefit consumers, particularly those who are out of a job today. There will be 250,000 or 300,000 of those people who will get work as a result of the Accord.

As to the other questions that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has put to me, he knows that those are matters which would be addressed in a Budget. I remind him that we will be addressing a very wide range of issues in the Budget which affect both the revenue and expenditures of the Government. He will have to wait until then, as will others, for those answers.

EMPLOYMENT FORECAST

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether that is the advice that his Deputy Minister is giving him, because it is certainly not the advice of the Deputy Minister of Energy of Ontario, Duncan Allan, who is reported today's Toronto Star as saying he is skeptical about whether the industry can create 250,000 jobs. He says if Ottawa imposes a gasoline tax to help pay for the energy deal, it will throw Canadians out of work. That is the official Ontario position.

Therefore, would the Minister be good enough to table the list of alleged jobs that would be created, and which was cited by his colleague, the Minister of Energy, and which seemed to be as full of holes as a piece of Swiss cheese, and show us where those jobs are coming from?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am really quite taken aback by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. On the one hand he tells me that we should be addressing the problems of the deficit, and on the other hand he says we should not be doing certain things to address those problems. I do not have the list that the Minister of Energy is referring to, and I suggest he put that question to her when she returns to the House.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC PREMIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I posed that question because the Minister was boasting about jobs flowing from the deal. Would the Minister tell the House whether, before that deal was signed, he had consultations with his counterparts in Ontario and Quebec to assure them that his officials were not actively exploring ways of levying a huge tax at the retail level on gasoline to compensate for revenues lost to the oil industry as a result of this deal? Did the Premiers of Ontario and Quebec agree in advance with the oil deal, knowing that in view of this potential tax increase, and, I suggest, forthcoming tax increase, their consumers would be footing a bill of somewhere in the range of five to ten cents a litre?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is using scare tactics which are inappropriate for the House. He has written, in his own words, that the national energy policy was a disaster. For that reason we have moved quickly to make the changes in that policy that will create jobs, not only in western Canada but in the consuming provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I would think that the Premiers of both those provinces will be very pleased when those jobs are created.

NOTIFICATION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is with regard to the oil deal as well. Last Thursday I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if the Premier of Ontario had been consulted on the details of the oil deal and its relative negative impacts on Ontario. In her reply the Minister said that she would be addressing that in her remarks the same afternoon, which of course was not the case. Can the Deputy Prime Minister now tell the House when the Premier of Ontario was notified of the details of the deal? What input, if any, did he have in the process of the signing of that agreement?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when she made her statement. I recall her saying that she consulted with the Minister of Energy of the Province of Ontario all through the process. She assured the House that there were no negative impacts on the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It has a positive impact.

Mr. Nielsen: As my hon. friend points out, it has quite a positive effect on the Province of Ontario, including jobs and industrial spin-offs. I wish the Hon. Member would accept the explanation rather than running around, as the Minister of Finance has said, like his Leader and, through scare tactics, creating fear in the hearts of Ontarians.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, if there was no negative impact, why was an emergency meeting held between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Ontario, even if it was after the fact? Why did the Premier come out of that meeting empty-handed? Would the Minister not agree with the Ontario Deputy Minister of Energy, Duncan Allan, who said that the Government gave away the store to the multinational oil companies?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that same question was put yesterday by Hon. Members of the Opposition. There was no emergency meeting. There was a meeting with the Premier of Ontario, and there will continue to be meetings with Premiers of other provinces, totally unlike the die that was cast by the previous administration. There is a new era of federal-provincial co-operation in existence now. You will have to get used to that.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO ONTARIO DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. The Ontario Deputy Energy Minister, Duncan Allan, fears that the federal Government "gave away the store" and is exhibiting "a lot of faith" that the oil industry won't simply take its money and run. Does the Minister agree with that statement? If he does not agree with it, is he accusing the Government of Ontario of using scare tactics?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Simply put, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with that statement. I would suggest that the jobs which will be created by the Western Accord will be beneficial, perhaps even to downtown Vancouver. The Accord will be beneficial to the Province of Ontario, the Province of Quebec, and the entire country, because of the jobs that will be created by the new incentives that are now in place and which were taken away by the previous Government. I would remind the House that the Hon. Member did not like the last energy policy for the same reason, that it was cutting out jobs all across the country.

IMPACT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, consumers and taxpayers in downtown Vancouver and elsewhere in the country are concerned that their taxes are going to be increased, either at the pump or generally, to pay for this windfall that was given to the oil companies. Will the Minister go on record telling Canadian consumers that their taxes will not be increased to pay for the windfall he just gave to the oil companies?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered an almost identical question about two minutes ago. If the Hon. Member did not hear me then, I will repeat the answer. Consumers, particularly those who are out of a job today, will be very pleased by the impact of this energy accord because it will create jobs right across the country. On September 4 we were elected to create jobs, and we will be creating those jobs.

IMMIGRATION

FUTURE LEVELS OF IMMIGRATION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration tabled its report on future immigration levels. Could the Minister inform the House whether he agrees with the mainly economic focus of the report and especially with the fact that we seem to be attracting wealthy immigrants to ensure Canada's economic growth?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a report of the parliamentary committee. When the Government has had an opportunity to review that report it will be making its views known. The report, and the press conference following that report, in no way impinges upon Canada's ability to accept refugees.

TRUST COMPANIES

COLLAPSE OF WESTERN CAPITAL TRUST

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In the last eight weeks we have seen a major trust company in Saskatchewan collapse, and the near collapse of the tenth largest bank in Canada. We learned yesterday that Western Capital Trust has collapsed in Vancouver. It is important that the financial community know that the Minister is taking action.

When the Minister learns that a trust company or bank is in trouble, does she always take immediate action to ensure that the Government is doing everything possible to stop a collapse or near collapse?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, today I learned from sources within the Department of Insurance that the Minister of State for Finance was given a report in December outlining the problems associated with Western Capital Trust in Vancouver, and laying out a course of action to stave off a collapse. The Minister refused to take any action. If the Minister was notified of the problem and given a course of action to stop the collapse, will she explain why she failed to take action?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my officials met continually over the winter months with the people from Western Capital Trust. In January the head of Western Capital Trust was given the opportunity to come to see me personally, and he refused.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we have a financial Nero here. The financial community is serious about the concerns of a variety of trust companies and banks. They have been getting into certain troubles. We have now heard from the Department of Insurance that the Minister refused to take action. This is a time when strong leadership is required. The Minister has admitted that she did not take action when she was directed to. Therefore, will she do the honourable thing and resign from that position?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will do the honourable thing. I am producing a paper on financial institutions for which the industry has been waiting for years. I have also instituted a report on the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation for which the industry has been waiting for years. That is the honourable thing to do, Mr. Speaker, and I am doing it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

COMMITTEE REPORT—ENTREPRENEURSHIP ADVOCACY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday's Conservative report advocating conditional increases in immigration based on an individual's wealth is completely immoral. It overlooks the tens of thousands of average immigrants who have come here and made themselves successful entrepreneurs and immigrants, who have taken jobs that Canadians did not want. All immigrants, regardless of economic status, are automatic consumers when they come into the country.

● (1430)

Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to reject this latest elitist proposal, in favour of a more balanced and humanitarian approach, given that traditional immigration policy has been built on family unification and humanitarian concerns?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is quite a bundle that is all wrapped up into what masquerades as a question. The fact of the matter is that what the Hon. Member refers to as a Conservative report is not a Conservative report. It is a report of the standing committee.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration informs me that she has spoken with some 160 organizations, including provincial Governments. The standing committee report is yet one other source of advice, albeit a very important one, upon which she is calling, as he knows.

When the standing committees report, the Government considers their recommendations and makes any decisions that might flow therefrom known in due course.

Mr. Marchi: I would indicate to the Deputy Prime Minister that it was a Conservative report. Only the nine Conservative Members agreed to the report. The Liberals did not, and produced a minority report.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. How can the Cabinet and the Government consider a report that is based on the whims of nine Tory Members, when not one ethnocultural witness was asked to come, not one immigrant aid society, and not one economist was asked to come to correlate unemployment and immigration? Is he prepared to repudiate this very elitist, one track, and regressive policy, in light of these facts?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is a result of his inexperience with the practices and procedures of this place, but what the Hon. Member is advocating is a total dismantling of the committee system, regardless of the fact of numbers on the committee. I can recall when the position was precisely reversed and the Liberals held the majority on that committee. Nonetheless, it was a report of the committee, even though there are majorities on each of those committees.

With respect to the string of witnesses that he enumerates as not having had input to that committee, I would suggest that the Hon. Member has been woefully lacking in his duty as a Member of Parliament on that committee by not ensuring that those witnesses did appear.

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST—PLIGHT OF UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Last week the federal Government participated in the bailing out of the Canadian Commercial Bank to the tune of almost $255 million, much of it interest free.

According to information I have received, the Saskatchewan Minister of Finance, through his office, has been telling uninsured depositors of Pioneer Trust that they will be fully compensated, or nearly fully compensated, and that an announcement will be made soon. Will the federal Government be contributing to the uninsured depositors' compensation, over and above what CDIC has already paid out?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated in the House that I am having discussions with the Minister of Finance in Saskatchewan. I have nothing new to add.

UNINSURED INCOME AVERAGING CERTIFICATES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, trust companies and other financial institutions are falling down like ten pins. Obviously CDIC has not the resources to fulfil its legislative responsibility properly. My supplementary question concerns the matter raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, about the uninsured guaranteed income averaging certificates that were sold by Pioneer Trust with CDIC approval. Was CDIC aware of this practice, and what responsibility does CDIC have in compensating those people who have been misled?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's opening remarks are among the most irresponsible statements I have ever heard in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: I can tell you right now that financial institutions in this country are not falling like ten pins, and I am producing results.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

IMPACT OF CHANGES

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the comments made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration yesterday outside the House that neither she nor her Department had done an impact study on the proposed changes with regard to unemployment insurance, does the Minister stand behind his comment: "That is not my responsibility. It is her Department that would have an impact study done on that particular matter"? Does he stand behind that comment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration and I had extensive discussions at the time these proposals were made back in November. During the weeks and months following that, she had extensive consultations with the industry about the impact of the measures. She proposed changes in the implementation of the proposals, which resulted in a phased in change, or transitional change, part of which took effect this Monday and part of which will take effect as of the first of next year. I think she has demonstrated that she is very much on top of the issue, aware of the impact that it has had, and has made the proper adjustments.

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON IMPLEMENTATION OF CHANGES

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has given tax holidays and tax breaks to the multinational oil companies. Is he prepared to exercise his responsibility to the unemployed and poverty stricken by putting a freeze on these unemployment insurance changes, ordering an impact study and tabling it in Parliament, before there is any implementation of unemployment insurance changes? Is he prepared to do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would step back and look at the direction of the changes we are proposing, he would see that we are saying that the unemployment insurance fund is just that, an unemployment insurance fund. Over a period of time it has been allowed to do other things besides insuring against the impact of unemployment. That is what we are trying to adjust. We are very sensitive to the impact of those changes.

However, I would ask him to address those same comments to the workers and employers, particularly small businesses, who support the unemployment insurance fund with their premiums. The premiums are getting very high and we are looking at ways of restoring unemployment insurance to its original purpose.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SPRING SEEDING CASH ADVANCE PROPOSAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I am sure that he is aware of the need for cash for farmers in western Canada. He has also received representations from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, UGG, the Farmers' Union, CAM and other organizations, about the possibility of a new program for spring seeding cash advances. Has the Minister had an opportunity to consider this proposal? Is he able to announce the date at which he could take appropriate action to provide a spring seeding cash advance for those farmers who need cash between now and spring seeding?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Member raises an important issue. Indeed there was a problem with the crop on the Prairies in the previous year, and there is need for cash to encourage producers to put their crops in the ground.

I have had representations which we have studied. The Member should know that there is considerable difficulty with implementing the proposal, but I have not totally ruled it out. While I do not want to raise too much expectation, we are still looking at it.

I can say that we are very close to announcing a substantial payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act that will be in their hands prior to spring seeding.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that he is looking at the possibility of a spring seeding cash advance. Does that also apply to this year as well? Has he ruled it out for this year, or can the farmers expect the possibility of such an advance before May 1?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I can say that we have to consider this year because the reason why we are talking about the problem is that we had a poor crop last year. If we talk about it for an upcoming season, it would mean that we are clairvoyant and would know what kind of crop we will have in the current growing season. Obviously, we do not know that. Therefore, in order to make it useful, we must consider it in terms of the coming year. As I said, we have not totally ruled it out, but it seems that it would be very difficult to administer, and in some cases could cause problems for farmers who need credit the most.

LABOUR

CLOSURE OF WABASSO PLANT IN WELLAND—PLIGHT OF WORKERS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. During October of 1984, 490 workers in my riding of Welland received employment termination notices from the Wabasso Textile Company. The Welland plant was the first Wabasso plant to close. The older laid-off workers received some assistance from the Labour Adjustment Review Board legislation. This legislation expires in five months' time. I would like, therefore, to ask the Minister how his future plans for LARB will affect these workers and other possible textile worker lay-offs.

● (1440)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the Hon. Member that although the LAB program is scheduled for review in August of this year, with a possible extension of three more years, I can also assure the Hon. Member and those individuals who come under that program that their benefits will be ongoing.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SWINE INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will put it to the Acting Minister. Last week the United States slapped a countervailing duty of $12.50 a hog on our exports to the United States. This week there are three teams of U.S. investigators from the Department of Commerce combing through the books and records of the Provincial Marketing Board and stabilization programs of the provinces and the federal Government. In light of the U.S. investigation which is going on this week, is the Government continuing to support the Prince Edward Island Swine Incentive Program? I ask this question because this Program is very important to the viability of the new kill and chill facility in Prince Edward Island. Can the Minister clarify that situation?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): I am sorry I cannot bring the Hon. Member up to date on that program, Mr. Speaker. I will take the question as notice and bring him up to date the earliest possible time.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN HOG EXPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is about the countervail duty itself because it is having a devastating impact on Canada's pork producers, especially coming two weeks after the summit in Quebec City at which all these problems were supposed to have been ironed out. Would the Acting Minister make a commitment to the hog producers to have the Prime Minister telephone the President to ask him to call back these Department of Commerce investigators, and to lift this duty which is having a devastating impact on agriculture in Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the devastating effect that these duties are having on the Canadian hog producers.

I want to advise that yesterday our government officials met with the hog producers in Canada and their counsel to assist them with their hearing that will be held in Washington later in June. I would also like to remind the hon. gentleman that the levies at this time are temporary. We have an opportunity to make further representations, and we are hopeful that we will be able to persuade the tribunal that the levies are not warranted at this time.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PLANTING OF UNLICENSED VARIETIES OF WHEAT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. He will know that plantings of the unprescribed short straw wheat varieties in western Canada went up over 500,000 acres last year and are expected to make up some 7 per cent of the total spring wheat acreage on the Prairies this year. There is real concern among farmers that the superior quality of Canadian wheat may be placed in jeopardy through the increasing use of these varieties. We also know that the Minister has established a committee to find ways of legitimizing the use of these wheats which are not now licensed. Can he tell us his personal experience with these kinds of varieties? Have they been grown in his area or on his farm? What is the Minister's experience with them?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, if you want to hear my experience, I have had a permit book for 30 years. I believe the Hon. Member who asked the question is the only farmer in the two opposition Parties across the way, and I would certainly be happy to swap yarns with him about farming if he wishes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: Let me talk a little bit about what we have done. It is anticipated that acreage will go up this year. We announced a week ago Friday a system whereby we are not legitimizing these varieties. We are not encouraging people to grow them, and we are not discouraging them. We are simply acting as adults in recognizing that there is a potential problem.

If we continue to grow these unlicensed varieties, it can cause us to lose some of our reputation in the international market. None of us want to see that. We are not legitimizing their growing, we are simply recognizing that these varieties will be grown. We have sat down as adults and tried to use some common sense to develop a system that will avoid some of the problems to which the Hon. Member refers.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): I had asked the question quite specifically, Mr. Speaker, because there are some concerns among farmers in the grain industry that the Minister himself may have been growing such varieties.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Althouse: If so, I thought it seemed unusual for him to have taken on this job since it generally falls within the purview of the Minister of Agriculture. Could the Minister assure us that he is operating at a full arm's length in this particular area, that he has not been involved in production of such grains, and that he is not leaving the impression in the farm community that he is finding a way to legitimize his own past practice?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I plead guilty as charged. I am in all kinds of conflict of interest. I am a farmer myself, and I am trying to act in the best interests of farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Speaker: Does the Minister have an answer to the question?

Mr. Mayer: If the Hon. Member is telling me that he does not want me to fight for as large a payment out of the Western Grain Stabilization Act as possible, and if he is telling me that he doesn't want me to get the payment out as quickly as possible because that is a conflict of interest, then that frankly surprises me.

Let me tell the Hon. Member that I have grown semi-dwarf at my place, one of them a licensed variety called fielder. It is grown all over the Prairies. It is licensed, and it is grown particularly in the irrigation areas of southern Alberta.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

BANKRUPTCY ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, consumers, small investors and small businessmen are delighted that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has started a thorough review of the Combines Investigation Act and the Bankruptcy Act.

Since the present Bankruptcy Act contains a number of provisions that are unfair to the consumer, small business people and small investors, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether future bankruptcy legislation will contain specific measures to improve consumer protection.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier in the course of various consultations and conferences on the Bankruptcy Act, the Government does indeed intend to do a number of studies with a view to revamping the Bankruptcy Act and protecting small investors and consumers.

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE GIOVANNI ROCCA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Secretary of State. In view of the fact that his Leader, the Prime Minister, promised in the election campaign that he was going to bring in "new dimensions of objectivity and fairness in making federal appointments", could the Minister tell us how this criterion applies to his appointments", could the Minister tell us how this criterion applies to his appointment as a citizenship court judge of Giovanni Rocca, who worked as a full-time paid employee for the Tory Party and went down to thumping defeat as a Tory candidate in the last election in Davenport?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would think the Hon. Member would be extremely excited—

Mr. Boudria: I am.

Mr. McLean: —that a person who has not only contributed to the political process but who has also contributed to citizenship development in the area of the City of Toronto, such an important area of Canada, has been appointed, and he would be saluting him and wishing him well in his new responsibilities.

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE SUZANNE WARREN

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Obviously he is not following the biblical policy, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the Tory policy is that they shall all be chosen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Corneille: Many are called, and many are chosen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence on a supplementary question.

Mr. de Corneille: What about the Minister's recent appointment of Suzanne Warren as a citizenship court judge who, at the time of her appointment, was nothing more than a full-time paid employee of the Tory Party and its chief organizer in Toronto? Isn't this a clear and unmistakable government policy of appointing Tory Party hacks, and proof that one more of the major election promises of the Tories has been broken?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it surprises me that the Hon. Member would start off by attacking appointments of Italian Canadians, and then move on to attack the appointments of those with social work and educational backgrounds. The Government has a determination to see that citizenship embraces an holistic approach and that people with wide experience will be included in these appointments.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of nice questions for the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the Minister, or of the Prime Minister, to announce appointments to the CNR board of directors within the next week or two? If so, about when, and how many?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is possible that there will be some changes to the board of CNR. If the Hon. Member is making a pitch for his own candidacy, I will be very glad to receive his CV.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the job I would have liked has already been filled, namely, that of Minister of Transport.

REPRESENTATIVE APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Before the appointments are announced, will the Minister assure the House that he and the Prime Minister will depart from previous Liberal practices and Tory practices to date, re the appointments to Air Canada and VIA Rail boards, and restore some reputation and credibility to government appointments so that the people who are appointed, even if they are Conservatives, come from a cross-section of groups and regions of Canada to represent the real owners of the company? For example, there could be one or two CNR pensioners, one or two from the agricultural sector, one or two from consumer groups, one or two from shippers and receivers, and if only one from the legal profession hopefully one who has not been a Tory bagman but who has some experience in transportation law. Would he assure us of that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that I will take his question as a serious representation.

Mr. Benjamin: It really is.

Mr. Mazankowski: As for his own fortunes, I am sorry he missed out on the plum job he was after. Perhaps he should get a new campaign manager.

FINANCE

PAYMENTS TO QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the spokesman for the multinationals, the Minister of Finance. Yesterday on television, it was obvious that the Premier of Quebec was disappointed by the Minister's decision to give him only $110 million when the Premier was actually expecting $263 million. The Minister will agree with me that, after cutbacks of nearly $1 billion and foot-dragging in the cases of Domtar, VIA Rail and the cartographic institute, Quebecers were expecting a lot more than that. Can the Minister tell us why the Government of Quebec is getting less than half of what it had asked for, whereas other provinces are getting more than half of what they wanted to have?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would be the first to agree with me when I say that, if the Liberals had been in power, they probably would have gotten nothing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me remind him of the formula which I announced in the House yesterday. I said that we would be equitable in applying a 95 per cent floor to the three provinces which would not be receiving the same amount of equalization in the current fiscal year. Obviously that affected different provinces in different ways, because there are different variations from that 95 per cent floor. Since I think he is comparing the Province of Quebec with the Province of Manitoba, I would remind him that Manitoba, without any changes in the equalization payments, will see its amounts go from 480 to 408 to 367 under the formula which the Liberals introduced in 1982. This is why the Province of Manitoba is being treated somewhat better in terms of the absolute amount which has been provided under the supplementary payments.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL RECONSIDER QUEBEC DEMANDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I might remind the Minister that he is the one who decided to slash $1 billion off Quebec projects. He is the one who decided to give Quebec only $110 million, and it was the Premier of Quebec on television last night who was quite disappointed by the Minister's decision. I would hope that it was not an April Fools' Day joke he played on the Premier of Quebec who supported him during the last election campaign. Is the Minister prepared to reconsider his decision and give the Quebec Government at least 75 per cent of the equalization payment it had asked for?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a billion dollars in projects which have been cut by the Government. I would ask him to table that amount and the specifics of it, and we will have a look at it. I think he will find that the amount is grossly overestimated, as is normally the case with the questions the Hon. Member puts.

I would have like to have done more but, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice said yesterday, we had to look at our own deficit, and we cannot try to control the size of our deficit as well as provide the full amount of money—

Mr. Malépart: How many new jobs in Quebec!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would care to listen, I would give him an answer.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—TAXATION INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the Minister of Finance and questions on the energy deal which he has not answered so far. The Deputy Minister of Energy for Ontario correctly pointed out that the Government has given away the store. I should like the Minister to answer the question this time. Considering that he has given oil companies over a billion dollars over the next two years and that, if a tax increase is levied by the federal Government to make up for that billion dollars, it will cost Canada about 20,000 jobs, will the Minister make a commitment that there will be no tax increase to make up for it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is throwing a lot of speculation out on the table here. He knows I will not speculate on matters which will be in the Budget. However, I remind him, as I reminded his colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway, that this energy accord will create a vast number of jobs right across the country. That is very clear, and we will stand on that record.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that he is whistling in the dark. The Deputy Minister of Energy for Ontario, if not the Premier of Ontario, knows how ludicrous are the Minister's statements. Since it is correct that he cannot tell us in advance, in terms of his responsibility, what will be in the Budget, but can tell us, maintaining his responsibility, what will not be in the Budget—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: He can't do that.

Mr. Broadbent: He can do that. The people behind him can cheer the oil companies, but we are on the side of the people of Canada. Will he tell the people now, before the election is over in Ontario, that there will be no increases in tax as a result of this give-away to oil companies?

• (1500)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the people of Canada said on September 4 that the Conservative Party speaks for the people of Canada as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member comes from an Ontario riding. He knows what happened to the steel mills in Hamilton when the NEP came in. He knows what happened to the instrumentation companies in Ontario when the NEP came in. We are trying to reverse that. There will be a large number of jobs created in Ontario, Quebec, and all parts of Canada, as a result of that energy policy. That will be the test of the Western Accord that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced last week.

PETITIONS

ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of citizens asking for changes in the administration—

Mr. Speaker: One moment, please. I cannot hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on the administration of public buildings.

RADIO LICENCE FEES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present this petition on behalf of some of my constituents who are opposed to the increase in radio licence fees.

REGULATION OF GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague from Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) and myself, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 7,207 residents of the Eastern Townships. This petition has been signed by people who, through the Opinion 63 open line show hosted by Mr. Roch Guertin on radio station CHLT, have voiced their objection to the excessive increase in the price of gasoline sold in Quebec.

The petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to urge the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) to intervene in this case as soon as possible and establish a national gasoline prices commission.

I present this petition and strongly urge the Government to act on it.

PRICE OF SUGAR-BEETS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several dozen people from the Province of Alberta calling on the Government to institute a program to ensure that farmers in southern Alberta get a reasonable guaranteed price for the sugar-beets they produce.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering whether you have had an opportunity to review some of the previous decisions by other distinguished Speakers with regard to where petitions come in terms of Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize; I misumderstood the Hon. Member. No, I have not. I will be back to the House as soon as I have. I assure the Hon. Member that the matter is under active consideration.

ABORTION LAWS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to present a petition today signed by residents of the constituency of Victoria-Haliburton. These petitioners believe that the Government of Canada must not allow any further changes to Canada's abortion laws which would make abortions and the resultant loss of human life more readily available.

RADIO LICENSING

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, the petition which I present to the House attests to the concerns brought to my attention by Fred Simpson, Director of Communications for the Penticton Radio Club and club member Mert Rawley, whose representation has the support of 153 general radio service operators who have attached their signatures to a statement asking that the Department of Communications reconsider its decision to license each radio, rather than the norm for other operators in which one licence fee is required irrespective of how many sets they own. The request asks this House to recognize the role which radio club members assume by involving themselves in many community projects and—

Mr. Speaker: With respect, I have to interrupt the Hon. Member. I think he knows that the presentation has to be brief.

CANAGREX FUNDING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several dozen people from southwestern Ontario in the Huron-Bruce area, calling on the Government to reinstate the funding for the Canagrex program to ensure that we continue to export our agricultural commodities abroad.

NUCLEAR POWER ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-231, an Act establishing a moratorium on the continued development of nuclear power in Canada for the purpose of establishing a public inquiry into nuclear power that is followed by a national referendum.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to seek leave of the House to introduce the Bill today and have it read a first time. I hoped I would not have to proceed with this Private Member's Bill calling for an inquiry into the whole nuclear field cycle. I thought that was a commitment that the Government had made when it was the Government previously in 1979. However, it looks as if we are not going to have that issue considered. Therefore, I would now like to put that issue before the House in the form of a Private Member's Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AVAILABLE FOR CRISIS CENTRES

Question No. 35—Mr. Howie:

Is financial assistance available for the creation of new transition houses or crisis centres for women and, if so (a) how is application made and to what body (b) approximately how much money was allocated for this purpose?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

Under the Canada Assistance Plan, which is administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare, the federal Government is authorized to share in 50 per cent of the costs incurred by the provinces in providing residential care and services to needy persons. This includes the maintenance of battered women and their children in shelters commonly referred to as transition houses or crisis centres. Specifically, the Canada Assistance Plan enables sharing of provincial costs related to the operation of transition houses or crisis centres. Operating expenditures may include rental or mortgage payments or depreciation costs. It should be noted that the Canada Assistance Plan does not provide for sharing in provincial costs related to the purchase or construction of these facilities.

(a) Those wanting financial assistance to establish a transition house or crisis centre apply to provincial or municipal authorities, who decide whether it should be provided. If those authorities provide assistance, the province may request that the federal Government share the costs under the Canada Assistance Plan.

(b) While it is not possible to estimate the amount of Canada Assistance Plan expenditures for transition houses or crisis centres, the most recent information available (March, 1984) shows that the provinces have chosen to request financial assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan for 63 transition houses.

Transition houses or crisis centres for women may also be eligible for assistance under the Federal Social Housing Program whereby qualifying non-profit groups may obtain mortgage loan insurance for up to 100 per cent of acceptable capital costs and interest reduction subsidies under Section 56.1 of the National Housing Act.

(a) Non-profit groups wishing to develop and operate transition houses may apply for financial assistance under the Non-Profit Housing Program by submitting a proposal to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Any group intending to apply should contact the nearest branch of CMHC for details on the application procedure.

(b) In the past, resources under the Non-Profit Housing Program have been allocated in terms of subsidy units, not dollars. The actual amount of subsidy paid out is based on the capital cost of each project and the mortgage interest rate. In 1984, 11 transition homes across Canada have received commitments for funding and their operating costs will be subsidized by CMHC for a maximum of 35 years. These projects will provide 129 beds for women and children in crisis.

For more details, please refer to the answer to question No. 36 answered this day.

NUMBER OF CRISIS CENTRES

Question No. 36—Mr. Howie:

1. For the latest date for which figures are available, how many transition houses or crisis centres for women are in operation in Canada?

2. Have any of these institutions been assisted by the Government?

3. Is financial assistance available to them and, if so (a) what is it (b) in what manner may it be obtained?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare advises that according to the latest figures collected by the National Clearinghouse on Family Violence in 1984, there are approximately 190 transition houses providing residential services to battered women in Canada. There are three projects which provide second stage housing to women who moved beyond the transition house and who are trying to re-establish themselves in independent living situations. In addition, a number of areas are developing safe-home networks.

There are no statistics available on the number of crisis services which provide non-residential services for battered women.

The following Departments have provided a response to Parts 2 and 3. In so far as the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is concerned:

2. In 1984, CMHC has assisted 11 transition homes providing 129 beds for women in crisis.

3. (a) Transition houses or crisis centres for women may be eligible for assistance under the federal Social Housing Program whereby qualifying non-profit groups may obtain mortgage loan insurance for up to 100 per cent of acceptable capital costs and interest reduction subsidies under Section 56.1 of the National Housing Act.

(b) Through application to local offices of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the federal government agency responsible for administering the National Housing Act.

In so far as the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission is concerned:

2. During 1984, CEIC was providing assistance to 56 transition houses or crisis centres at a cost of $1,524,210.

3. (a) Assistance is available under the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission's Outreach Program and through employment development programs.

(b) Information concerning funding under Employment and Immigration Canada programs can be obtained through Employment Development Branch offices and Canada Employment Centres.

In so far as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned:

2 and 3. Under specific arrangements, an agency may be reimbursed by the Department on a per diem basis for the care and maintenance of a battered Indian woman with reserve residency status. In 1984-85, the Department has entered into very few such arrangements and these costs are not identified separately but are part of the total social assistance funding of the Department.

In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned:

The Department of Justice has no core funding capacity. In response to a proposal in 1984, the Contributions Program has contributed to the following project: Saskatoon Interval house, (public legal education program regarding wife abuse—1984).

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:

2. According to the most recent information available (March, 1984), the provinces have chosen to request financial assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan for 63 transition houses.

3. (a) Yes, through the cost-sharing provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan (CAP), the federal Government shares in provincial/municipal costs of maintaining needy women and their children in transition homes and residential crisis centres. These maintenance costs are rolled up in a per diem fee which is agreed upon by the home and the province/municipality supporting it.

The Canada Assistance Plan also enables federal sharing of salary and related staff costs of non-profit agencies (such as non-residential crisis centres) providing welfare services such as crisis counselling/intervention.

(b) With respect to transition homes, cost-sharing is contingent upon the home being listed as a home for special care in the CAP agreement, the province/municipality making contributions on behalf of needy residents therein, and the costs being claimed by the province under the terms and conditions of the CAP agreement.

With respect to crisis centres, cost-sharing is contingent upon the crisis centre being listed in the CAP agreement as a provincially-approved welfare service agency, the province/municipality contributing towards the agency's costs of delivering welfare services and the costs being claimed under the terms and conditions of the CAP agreement.

In so far as the Secretary of State is concerned:

2 and 3. Once the houses or crisis centres are established, the cost of different services can be shared by federal programs. The women's program will provide financial assistance to groups which assist women who are victims of violence. Projects are funded for staff training, information, public awareness, education and others.

From April, 1984 to February 28, 1985, $257,797 was provided in financial assistance.

Groups providing support for women who are victims of violence can apply for financial assistance under the women's Program at one of the regional offices of the Department.

In so far as the Ministry of the Solicitor General is concerned:

2. The Secretariat of the Ministry of the Solicitor General of Canada is involved in funding a range of activities from research and demonstration projects to preparation of kits or pamphlets to assist local groups. It has funded a number of workshops and conferences. In 1984, the Secretariat has contributed $636,672 to assist battered wives.

Assistance is available to any community group either through consultative services, information services or funding.

3. Financial assistance is available to any community group, voluntary organization, or provincial department for experimental or demonstration projects for a maximum of three years. These projects develop or test new concepts in criminal justice and are usually funded in co-operation with the provinces and are administered by private agencies.

Core funding is offered through sustaining contributions or grants to national voluntary organizations in the criminal justice system.

FUNDING FOR SENIOR CITIZEN HOUSING

Question No. 236—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1984, what amount was loaned by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for construction of senior citizens' residences?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation provides direct loans, representing 75 per cent of the capital costs, of constructing housing projects, including senior citizens' residences, under Section 40 of the National Housing Act. It also provides 75 per cent of the yearly operating losses on these projects. In 1984, there were some 584 senior citizens' housing units built under this program. CMHC's share of the capital costs of these units is estimated to be $20,470,576. CMHC's share of the first year's operating losses for these units is estimated at $2,980,956. Operating losses on these projects are paid for a period of up to 50 years.

CMHC does not provide direct loans for the construction of housing projects, including seniors' residences, under the current non-profit and co-operative housing programs. However, CMHC provides mortgage loan insurance and subsidies for these housing units under these programs. In 1984, current records show CMHC insured loans totalling $352,145,969 for the construction and/or acquisition of 7,062 non-profit and co-operative housing units for senior citizens. The subsidies to be paid by CMHC for the first year's operation of these units is estimated at $29,937,507. Final records should be available shortly. These subsidies are paid over the length of the mortgage.

Under Section 44, NHA, CMHC can subsidize the operating losses on provincially-owned senior citizens' projects by 50 per cent. In 1984, there were some 254 senior citizens' housing units provided under this arrangement, all of which were in Ontario. CMHC's share of the first year's operating loss is estimated at $1,069,935. Operating losses on these projects are paid for a period of up to 50 years.

In addition, under the rent supplement program (Section 44(1)(a), NHA) CMHC can provide a 50 per cent subsidy on operating losses on provincially-leased private rental projects. Rent supplement units approved in 1984 totalled some 689 units; however, the distribution between families and seniors has not yet been reported by the provinces.

As of January 24, 1985, there have been no commitments for senior citizens' housing projects in 1985 under any program.

BELL CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House to move second reading of Bill C-19, drafted following the reorganization of Bell Canada in 1983. The purpose of the Bill is to ensure that Bell Canada continues to meet its obligations to the Canadian public, and it establishes a number of regulatory powers so that the company's telephone service customers will continue to pay fair and reasonable rates. The reorganization took place as a result of the rapid changes taking place within the technological and economic structure of the telecommunications industry in Canada and abroad.

In recent years, the telecommunications industry throughout the world has been under tremendous pressure to adjust to the changes that have taken place in technology and the economy. The very foundations of this industry have been affected by developments in computer science, digital technology and radio and optic sciences. Consequently, the new generation of telecommunications products is faster, more innovative, more efficient but also less costly. At the same time, there is a growing number of users, especially large international businesses, that depend on these products for the efficiency of their operations. These businesses demand hi-tech products and services at relatively low cost.

Many countries have felt the increasing pressures of competition in providing the products and services of this new industrial era. In a sector that, at the beginning of this century, was typically a monopoly situation, we now see an increasingly competitive situation, especially in the United States, Great Britain and Japan.

We are also seeing many countries that are responding to the demand created by new technologies and their economic dimensions in particular, by bringing about tremendous corporate changes. Take for instance the privatization of British Telecom in Great Britain and the reorganization of AT&T in the United States which was obliged to divest certain activities. These are some of the most striking examples in the history of the industrialized world. Today, other countries like Japan are considering similar changes.

In 1983, Bell Canada was re-organized in response to the same sort of economic situation I just described. According to the new structure, Bell Canada Enterprises Inc. has become the new holding company of the Bell group whose headquarters is located in Montreal. The companies belonging to the Bell group are now organized in such a way that Bell Canada and its monopolistic subsidiaries like Tele-Direct publications, Bell Northern Research Ltd. and Telesat Canada, are separate from the other subsidiaries that are either competitive or regulated by the provinces. These subsidiaries include Northern Telecom Limited, Bell Canada International Inc., Bell Canada Ltd., Tele-Direct (Canada), Bell Communications Systems Inc. and the telecommunications companies subject to regulation by provincial governments. The purpose of the new structure is above all to make a very clear distinction between regulated monopolistic activities and competitive, non-regulated activities, so that these groups can meet the increasing pressures of international competition.

As stated by Bell Canada, and I quote:

> The continued success of the company will mainly depend on its ability to maintain its front-line position amid the rapid technological developments that are spurring on a number of its subsidiaries. If the company is to sustain the pressures of ever-increasing competition, it will also have to be both very flexible and very dynamic. The structure of the Bell group is intended to provide for the best possible utilization of all its resources. The re-organization was designed with these objectives in mind.

The need for innovation, competitive ability and new capital investment is in line with the objectives and vision of Canada's future as expressed in the Speech from the Throne and set forth in the agenda for economic renewal by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The Department of Communications is preparing studies with a view to formulating a Canadian telecommunications policy based on these objectives. Consequently, the Government, and especially my department, supports the reorganization of Bell Canada.

Because of its major capital resources, research and development activities and human resources, Bell Canada has always been one of Canada's greatest assets. It has become more than just a company. It is a Canadian institution.

The Bell Canada group plays a major role in our industrial infrastructure: as an operating company in Ontario, Quebec and the Northerwest Territories and as a holding company with a minority interest in a number of provincially regulated telephone companies in the Atlantic region. The company also contributes directly to the Canadian economy. In 1983, Bell Canada itself had 54,423 employees, and its operating revenue totalled $4.8 billion, while the company had assets of $10.9 billion.

In addition to providing systems and services, the Bell Canada group has created in this country a substantial research and manufacturing capacity thanks to its very competent administrators and staff. The group of companies includes Northern Telecom, one of the largest manufacturers of telecommunications products in the world, and Bell Northern Research, Canada's largest private research and development company. Similarly, Bell Canada International Inc. has the biggest international consulting services in the world in the field of telecommunications.

When it was created by an Act of Parliament more than a century ago, Bell Canada was given a mandate to provide public service—a mandate that is still in effect. Our concern today is to maintain this social obligation while at the same time making it possible for the company to respond, unencumbered by excessive constraints, to international competition.

Now for a short history of the legislation on telecommunications adopted by the Parliament of Canada.

In Canada as in other countries, legislating and regulating telecommunications goes back almost to the birth of the industry. The Government of Canada—as did the Government of the United States—decided to let the new telecommunications companies like Bell Canada operate as private businesses, unlike other countries that quickly proceeded to incorporate the new technology into existing state monopolies, usually their postal services.

On March 7, 1876, Alexander Graham Bell received from the Government of the United States a inventor's patent for his telephone. The Canadian patent was given to Mr. Alexander Melville Bell, the inventor's father, on August 24, 1877, and the first telephone network started operating in Hamilton in 1878.

The Bell Telephone Company of Canada was incorporated on April 29, 1880, under an Act of Parliament. The new telephone communications technology was entrusted to a private company, an example of the traditional focus on free enterprise in North American society.

However, at the turn of the century, because of the economics and technology involved, the telephone seemed to lend itself to a de facto monopoly. While allowing those companies to corner the industry, Canada and the United States did impose regulations aimed at protecting consumer interests and preventing abuse of monopolistic powers. On various occasions, to take the development of the industry into consideration, the Canadian Parliament brought in legislative amendments to define regulatory powers and the respective responsibilities of the State and the industry.

Canadian parliamentary legislation on telecommunications stem from telegraph and telephone companies statutes and from general Acts on telecommunications regulation. Upon application filed by Alexander Melville Bell and associates, Parliament enacted federal legislation to incorporate Bell in 1880—an Act to incorporate The Bell Telephone Company of Canada. Under the Act, the new company was authorized to provide telephone service between two or more points anywhere in Canada and elsewhere. Two years later, in 1882, after a lawsuit in Quebec concerning the company's constitutional jurisdiction, the corporate statute was changed pursuant to BNA Act Section 92(10)(c) to indicate that the works of the company were for the general advantage of Canada. This was one way to make sure that Bell Canada would remain under federal jurisdiction.

Given the importance of such services and the changing socio-economic conditions, the statute of the company was modified on other occasions during the century so as to set forth certain obligations related to the quality of services offered. To comply with an amendment adopted in 1892, the company had to offer the most modern equipment available, within limits, and provide telephone service to any prospective customer.

Under a 1968 amendment, Bell was not allowed to apply for or be the holder of a broadcasting licence, but was required to act solely as a common carrier that would neither control the contents nor influence the meaning or purpose of the message emitted, transmitted or received, and the company could prescribe reasonable requirements concerning the connection to company facilities of equipment not provided by Bell. The CRTC was to determine whether such requirements were reasonable.

At the beginning, regulations governing the rates of telecommunications companies under federal jurisdiction, including Bell Canada, were part of the mandate of the Privy Council Railway Committee and took the form of changes made directly by Cabinet to company statutes. In 1892, the Canadian Parliament authorized the Governor in Council to approve increases in telecommunications rates. Under a further legislative amendment in 1902, the Governor on Council was authorized to increase or decrease rates as requested through applications filed by the industry or any interested municipality. Pursuant to the same Act, the Governor in Council had the new power to ask federal judges to consider rate change applications and make recommendations.

In 1906, considering the complexity of telecommunications rates, the Canadian Parliament empowered the Railway Commission to regulate the rates of Bell Canada and other federal telephone companies. The commission was also responsible for approving the amount, terms and conditions of capital stock issues, as well as the installation of telephone wires along public roadways. However, appeals to the courts were allowed on matters of rights or jurisdiction, and under the Act the Governor in Council had the power to reject or change any commission ruling.

As a result of developments in the transportation sector in this century, the Commission was reorganized several times. In 1938, the name was changed to Transport Commission of Canada and in 1967 to Canadian Transport Commission. In 1976, in order to achieve more harmonious regulation of both the medium and the message, authority to regulate telecommunications was transferred to the Canadian Radio-television and telecommunications Commission.

Canadian telecommunications are still governed by regulations that go back as far as 1903. The purpose of these regulations was, first of all, to safeguard the major principles of public utility and public transporter that had governed the field of transportation for many years. Applying these principles meant guaranteeing fair, equitable and reasonable rates and the concept of "first come, first served", in other words, a service offered without discrimination.

The same regulatory structure and perspective has remained practically unchanged during the last 80 years. How should they continue to direct Canadian telecommunications, in the context of Bell's corporate reorganization?

What was the Government's response? First, the report by the CRTC. After the company made known its intent to reorganize and considering the company's importance both economically and socially, the Governor in Council ordered the CRTC on October 22, 1982, pursuant to Section 50 of the National Transportation Act, to conduct a public inquiry into the planned reorganization with particular emphasis on the following points:

Rate increases for Bell Canada customers that might result from the proposed reorganization.

The possibility that the reorganization would compromise the CRTC's ability to exercise the mandate it has pursuant to the Railway Act, the National Transportation Act and the Act respecting Bell Canada.

The amendments that will be necessary to remove or attenuate any obstacle to the exercise of that mandate.

In the case of reorganization, the limitations, if any, that would have to be imposed on the activities of the Bell group.

In February 1983, the CRTC held public hearings in the course of which many interested parties testified and made submissions on the proposed reorganization and its repercussions.

On April 18 that year, the CRTC submitted its report to the Governor in Council. It was in favour of the reorganization, subject to certain legislative amendments that would reinforce and clarify its authority with respect to Bell and its subsidiaries. According to the CRTC, these legal safeguards were necessary to prevent the reorganization from undermining the Commission's power to regulate the company and to avoid any prejudice to the interest of customers.

The CRTC summarized its position as follows, and I quote:

> According to the Commission, it is very important at this stage for Bell and its subsidiaries that its management be allowed this kind of flexibility. As Canada progresses in the information era, its future as an industrialized country will depend more and more on high quality skills in the management, technical and research sectors, the kind of skills we find, for instance, among the companies of the Bell group ... However, the desire to achieve certain goals in the field of industrial development should not lead us to ignore the necessary aspects of regulating public utility services.
> A regulated enterprise should have the flexibility it needs to innovate and improve its business prospects. However, this flexibility should not extend to subsidizing activities of a competitive nature from income drawn from the enterprise's monopolistic services.

The CRTC therefore recommended changing the legislation to provide that the Commission was authorized to obtain from Bell and its subsidiaries any documents and information deemed necessary; to empower the Commission to order that certain telecommunications activities had to be carried out within or outside Bell Canada; and finally, to maintain a certain number of constraints limiting the type of activity the companies could engage in.

On April 23, 1983, the Government announced its intention to examine the Commission's recommendations without delay and to propose as soon as possible any amendments that might be necessary to prevent the reorganization from undermining the CRTC's mandate. A few days later, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs gave Bell its authorization to implement the proposed reorganization.

Last December 20, shortly after my appointment as Minister of Communications, I introduced Bill C-19 in the House, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada. The purpose of Bill C-19 is to change the legislative structure governing Bell Canada so as to give the Government more regulatory powers over the public obligations of the company, while at the same time freeing the company from constraints which make it harder to compete on the international market. The Act confirms the basic obligations of Bell Canada, which are to serve the public, refrain from regulating the contents of messages, and continue to be subject to regulations derived from the Railway Act. The Bill is also intended to consolidate the CRTC's regulatory powers over the monopolistic telephone service offered by Bell Canada as a result of its 1983 reorganization, thus making it one element of Bell Canada undertakings. Bill C-19 guarantees that the reorganization will not prejudice company customers.

Pursuant to Clause 11 of the Bill, Bell Canada may not sell or dispose of its shares, nor of such facilities as are essential to its telephone operations without prior CRTC approval. As requested by the CRTC, it is authorized under Clause 12 to obtain from Bell Canada any information required to discharge its regulatory responsibilities with respect to the company.

In keeping with our objective to deregulate competitive telecommunications services, the two provisions in Clause 13 are aimed, first, at making a clear distinction between competitive and monopolistic, regulated and non-regulated Bell company operations and, second, at enabling the CRTC to decide whether certain operations ought to be regulated or not. Under the first provision, the CRTC may require Bell Canada to perform directly the operations of one of its affiliates should be CRTC rule that there is not enough competition to guarantee fair and reasonable rates.

The second provision means that, conversely, the CRTC may require the company to dispose of any operation which is deemed competitive enough not to be regulated. This will prevent Bell Canada from using income from monopolistic services to finance its operations in competitive fields.

In conclusion, two years after the adoption of the Act to incorporate The Bell Telephone Company of Canada in 1880, the Canadian Parliament declared that the works of the company would be "for the general advantage of Canada".

Ten years later, the same Government stipulated that "...existing rates may not be raised without the approval of the Governor in Council".

For more than a century, the Government has regulated Canada's telecommunications and made sure that the necessary resources would be used to set up one of the world's best systems, while guaranteeing that Canadians would pay fair and reasonable rates, and have universal and non discriminatory access to the services. Those major principles still hold sway today, but we have to keep in mind new economic and technological factors, particularly the reorganization of Bell Canada, and that makes it necessary to take a new and more flexible approach when it comes to regulations. Since it has become imperative to define the structure of the reorganization that took place nearly two years ago, I ask Hon. Members to consider the Bill before them, and I conclude by quoting Robert Browning: "Progress is the law of life".

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part for a few minutes in the debate on Bill C-19 respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada.

It is a well-known fact that the Liberal Government, through its then Minister of Communications, the Hon. Francis Fox, had already introduced legislation in response to the administrative changes made in 1982 to transform Bell Canada into a subsidiary of a holding company of Bell Canada Enterprises.

On February 8, 1984, the Hon. Francis Fox introduced in the House Bill, C-20, of which one of the purposes was to maintain the provisions requiring Bell to provide a telephone service and giving the CRTC authority to regulate the activities of Bell Canada. Bill C-19 is similar to that legislation in all respects.

We are happy that the Government has re-introduced the Fox Bill word for word.

While the Government is happy to take over this Liberal heritage, it has forgotten one of its major elements. While Bill C-20 introduced by Mr. Fox included amendments to the CRTC Act, this Government has tabled for this purpose a separate Bill, thus increasing considerably the extent to which Cabinet can give instructions to the CRTC.

The Official Opposition has already expressed its concerns over the interference of the Government with organizations such as the CRTC. For instance, what this Government has done in the case of the CBC is a cause for concern.

While Bill C-20 introduced by the present Government increases the authority of Cabinet to give instructions to the CRTC, Bill C-19 considerably increases the power of the CRTC to give instructions to Bell Canada.

In its reorganization, Bell Canada established a distinction between its basic telephone services and message communications service on the one hand, and the competitive research, manufacturing and operational activities in communication systems then being carried out by its subsidiaries on the other.

The new powers of the CRTC affect not only telephone communications, but also all other operations where Bell Canada still has an active role.

The Fox Bill did not give Cabinet as much authority to influence Bell activities through the CRTC. In this regard, the respondent has every reason to maintain that Government interference could eventually undermine its operations since these are truly political interventions at the highest level, namely the decision-making power of the Cabinet. For a Government that brags about doing everything to promote free enterprise, to me this is quite a paradox.

Let us look at the effective thrust of this legislation. The first 10 clauses are but a rehash of provisions in the special statutes under which Bell Canada was established. They guarantee that the company will still be regulated by the CRTC under the Railway Act. Clauses 11 to 13 point to the new structure. Clause 11 provides that previous permission from the CRTC is needed for Bell Canada Enterprises to dispose of Bell Canada voting shares, and for Bell Canada to dispose of any asset vital to its telephone operations. Clause 12 empowers the CRTC to obtain from Bell Canada Enterprises information relating to its power of regulation. Provisions under clause 13 are aimed at reflecting and guaranteeing a clear separation between Bells' competitive and monopolistic activities giving relevant authority to the CRTC.

The question to be addressed, Mr. Speaker, is this: Are consumers ensured services at a reasonable cost? Is the user, whether an individual or a corporation, obtaining the same standards of excellence and efficiency we have been used to, and which the Government has a responsibility to maintain?

The Government must on the one hand resist the temptation to deregulate. Ours is a vast country, which has to have an integrated and efficient communications network. From the American experience we can conclude that our market being limited, with a smaller population and remote areas, we cannot afford such New Conservative ambitions, which are to hand out everything back to private enterprise and abstain from regulating vital sectors such as communications.

In Canada, access to telephone service traditionally has been considered tantamount to an acquired right or an essential service. Up to a point, this is indeed the case. Past investments and sacrifices must now be part of tomorrow's heritage. While a company such as Bell must be encouraged to do research work and to improve its network, and allowed to discover and develop new avenues, the consumer must be serviced at a reasonable cost. The American deregulation experience certainly does not guarantee quality and service at a cost that is reasonable to consumers, individuals, businessmen or corporations, and above all we doubt that the American experience could have positive results here, in a different environment and with Canada's limited population.

To conclude these brief remarks, I would first suggest that the Liberal heritage is a kind of heritage that sometimes deserves to be maintained. In this case, the Tory Government has provided the evidence. I would add that the Official Opposition will keep an eye on the kinds and numbers of guidelines imposed on Bell Canada Enterprises by the CRTC, but especially on the guidelines imposed on the CRTC by the Government. If the Government believes in free enterprise, this is a golden opportunity for him to show it.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the introduction of this Bill we see proof of the old adage that the more things change the more they are the same. Bill C-19 is very similar to parts of the Bill C-20 which was brought in by the former Liberal Government and introduced by the then Minister of Communications, Francis Fox, in early 1984. On May 10, 1984 the then Opposition House Leader, the Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), wrote to the then Government House Leader, Mr. Pinard, urging him to split the old Bill C-20 into two Bills, one to be called the Bell Canada Reorganization Act, which the then House Leader of the Opposition said "could receive a quick second reading and referral to committee".

Clearly the Progressive Conservative Government has done exactly that which it proposed then. It introduced Bill C-19, which we are now discussing, and its companion, Bill C-20, which has been passed by the House and is now before the Communications Committee. It is concerned with amendments to CRTC legislation and powers and to satellite broadcasting.

There are two main points which are worth making with regard to this Bill. This Bill is a shell, scarcely six pages in length, which simply outlines what already exists with regard to the supposed regulation of Bell Canada. It is not what the CRTC, consumer groups, or even the Government wanted. It only puts into legislation what Bell Canada wanted and is prepared to accept. Second, it is a testament to the power which corporations have in this country. Bell Canada took on CRTC, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and the Bureau of Competition Policy in public hearings and fought them all off. In the end the Government backed off and, as a result, we have this Bill which only legislates what is already in place.

This Bill will permit Bell to do in the next few years what the CPR was able to do over almost 100 years. CPR started as a railway company funded, to a large extent, by grants of money, loans at very low interest rates, and grants of millions of acres of lands to induce the then owners and directors of the CPR to build a national railway. Over the years the CPR has used the assets given to it by the Governments and people of Canada, including the lands, forests and minerals. It has spun those off into CP Enterprises.

The railway remains as a regulated operation. It is a loser which requires massive help from the people of Canada to operate. But CP Enterprises now has a host of companies in various fields including communications, mines, forests and real estate. Those are extremely profitable and are not regulated by the Government. Those were built on the initial subsidies given to the railway company by the people of Canada. With the passage of this Bill we are going to permit Bell Canada to do precisely what the CPR did in earlier years.

Bell Canada, like the CPR, was originally a heavily protected, government created monopoly which was able to earn a regulated guaranteed profit and build up its assets so that now it can diversify, acquire other companies in different fields, and become the conglomerate known as Bell Canada Enterprises, which will be a tremendously profitable corporation not subject to Government regulation.

As much as anything that the Conservative Government has done in this Parliament, this Bill is the harbinger of the deregulation concept and principle which the Conservatives believe in. In this case the word has a special meaning. It simply means "take the money and run". Bell Canada is now almost entirely free to do as it pleases in the market-place with assets it acquired when it was a monopoly. The existing Bell Telephone service still remains under CRTC regulation, but without the important financial support which had provided cross-subsidization in holding down telephone rate increases, and with increasing costs looming which will greatly increase the cost of basic telephone service for the people who are serviced by Bell Canada.

Bill C-19 should be seen for what it is, a genuine failure in the development of public policy in Canada. We fully expect that the analogy with Canadian Pacific will hold true. Bell Canada service will become progressively worse and cost increasingly more. Bell Canada Enterprises, however, will become the rich relation, just as Canadian Pacific Investments has prospered at the expense of the users of CP Rail.

This need not have happened had there been a federal Government with a will to develop and enforce a telecommunications policy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised this to the people of Canada during the election campaign. We are still waiting to see that promise fulfilled, unless the Minister says that this is the promised telecommunications policy, in which case we will know that as of today the so-called policy is doomed to failure.

As a result of the failure of the former Liberal Government and the present Conservative Government to develop a policy, Bell has imposed its corporate will on the country and received everything it wanted.

It is worth examining this process over the past few years in order to come to grips with the failure of the present Government and the previous Liberal Government and the ineffectual actions of Bell's regulator, the CRTC.

Let us look at the record to see how we got to Bill C-19 which, in our view, is so seriously defective. On June 24, 1982, Bell Canada announced a planned reorganization which would create "a new non regulated parent company called Bell Canada Enterprises Incorporated". It was said by the Chairman of Bell Canada, Mr. de Grandpré, to provide a "purification of Bell Canada's regulated activities, in his words "making the task of the CRTC easier". It will make the task of Bell's owners and managers much easier.

In Mr. de Grandpré's words:

> Bell Canada will remain the regulated utility, and it will simplify the regulatory process. Under the old structure, Bell controlled about 80 different companies, regulated and non-regulated, leading to distortions.

Others thought differently, including Andrew Roman of the Public Interest Advocacy Centre. He said, "It's an ingenious scheme to avoid regulation", and, "In football terms, it's and end run again, but around the other end". Gordon Hutchison of the Electronics Communicator magazine said, "It's a recognition that Bell is really in the investment business not the telephone business". One of the greatest problems in this country is that too many companies are interested in investments, moving paper and making paper profits, rather than concentrating on developing and improving the businesses in which they are involved. In this case it is one of the most important businesses for the people of Canada—that of telecommunications.

Boris Mather, Chairman of the Canadian Federation of Communications Workers, expressed the opposition of the workers at Bell Canada in a letter to me. I know that the unions have made similar representations to the Government. In a letter dated February 6, 1985, he said:

> We are very much opposed to any form of splitting off unregulated subsidiaries of the telephone carriers to carry on competitive activities. We oppose that because "it lets the shark out of the cage".

In the same letter he said:

> —we strongly object to power being given to the Commission—

—The CRTC—

> —to establish separate subsidiaries to carry on activity previously done directly by the telephone company.

The Bell proposal, which essentially has been endorsed by the Government and the CRTC, was opposed by a large number of very important interest groups. But they lost the argument.

Bell Canada simply created Bell Canada Enterprises as its holding company, displacing Bell Canada. The profitable subsidiaries and the revenues for planned acquisitions went to the new company. Bell Canada became a regulated subsidiary with only three subsidiaries, a 30 per cent share of Bell Northern Research, and a 24.6 per cent share of Telesat Canada and Tele-Direct (Publications), a subsidiary to be transferred to Bell Canada Enterprises as soon as practicable.

The intent of Bell Canada was clearly to get the profitable parts away from Government regulation. In order to head off any interference, Bell referred the reorganization to the Quebec Superior Court.

Most Canadians are aware of how slow the court system proceeds when they have a problem, but that did not seem to affect Bell Canada adversely because, in barely two months, the Quebec Superior Court approved the Bell reorganization, rejecting a federal Government challenge that the planned reorganization required the approval of the supposed regulator, the CRTC. Judge Charles Gonthier, Justice of the Quebec Superior Court, said, "The arrangement is just and reasonable for the shareholders of Bell, since it was approved by an overwhelming majority".

The federal Government appealed, but Bell won the appeal in the Quebec Court of Appeal on March 25, 1983. Later I will show what that decision meant for Bell and the people of Canada.

On April 18, 1983, a CRTC investigation and hearing produced a 105-page report. Some of its recommendations, have been included in this Bill. Significantly, though, the recommendation most sought as a check against Bell Canada Enterprises was for a minority shareholding in Bell Canada which is now 100 per cent owned by Bell Canada Enterprises. According to the CRTC, this would be a significant incentive to conduct company affairs in the interest of both subscribers and shareholders. Creating minority shareholders is a well established device but one unacceptable to Bell. Therefore, that recommendation is not included in Bill C-19. In fact, the CRTC itself said that it should not be created in the immediate future.

Also omitted from this legislation were the very real arguments put forward at the CRTC hearings by the Consumers Association of Canada and others for some disposition of the capital gain which Bell had acquired as a federally chartered telephone monopoly. The CRTC had calculated the capital gain on the sale of Bell-owned provincial telephone companies and Northern Telecom to Bell Canada Enterprises as worth $560 million.

The Consumers Association of Canada proposed that $200 million should be returned to telephone subscribers. The value of these investments had quadrupled from an historical cost of $440 million. However, the CRTC saw no reason for subscribers to share in the capital gain realized by Bell. Should not the Government of Canada be ready to consider this issue now in Bill C-19? Do not all levels of Government have a duty to protect the larger public interest when they create monopolies in the public interest? It does not seem so in Bell's case and certainly not in the way the Government had dealt with Bell in this Bill.

On April 21, 1983, having been defeated in the courts and having seen its own regulatory agency accept the reorganization, the Liberal Government sued for peace. There would be no further court appeals and the restructuring should occur, according to the then Minister of Communications, Francis Fox, "because it has a favourable impact on the economy generally" Another way of saying this is, "What's good for Bell Canada is good for us", or in simpler terms, Francis Fox was saying in effect, "The public be damned".

The federal Conservative Government, through this Bill, has thrown in the towel on the issue of whether a publicly fostered monopoly had an obligation to protect consumers. We believe it does. It was similar in a very real way to letting the CPR go back on its statutory requirement for the Crow's Nest Pass freight rates in return for the huge land and mineral grants which it had received in western Canada. But at least CP had lived with the Crow rate until 1983. Bell got away with everything. Perhaps even worse was the absence of any genuine expectations of Bell in a regulatory sense. The service provisions in this Bill are scarcely commitments at all. Indeed, there is very little that commits Bell to staying in the telephone business at all, if it finds it profitable to get out of it.

● (1600)

On April 28, 1983, the Bell reorganization went into effect at the Bell annual meeting. The chairman was kind enough to hint only at future rate increases. He did not announce any at that time. The next announcement on July 27 was even better for Bell. The new company reported an increase in profits of 40 per cent for its first quarter as an unregulated holding company. With this kind of income the acquisitions of TransCanada Pipelines, Daon Development, British American Bank Note, Ronalds-Federated and Case Hoyt were not far behind. The year-end income in 1984 was $1 billion, the highest of any corporation.

We should ask ourselves, and I think the people of Canada have a right to ask themselves, what benefits do the telephone users of Canada get when Bell Canada buys a controlling interest in TransCanada Pipelines, Daon Development, or the British American Bank Note? That may be good for the shareholders and the management of Bell, but it really does nothing for the people of Canada.

On the telephone subscriber side it has been different, much different. A major campaign was started for user-pay charges on local calls and much higher basic telephone service rates combined with deregulation of long distance service. Those proposals have been put constantly before the public in a campaign to make these changes seem inevitable. We see that almost every day in the kind of campaign which Bell and other telephone companies are conducting.

Bell Canada Enterprises, according to its own executive vice-president, is "always willing to look" at a deal. The public is beginning to feel that in the deal-making they have been had. In sum, Mr. Speaker, what has the Bell reorganization accomplished? Let us ask ourselves some of the questions which must be asked on behalf of the Canadian people. Has it created more jobs? Takevers do not create jobs. They often result in their elimination as the company taken over is rationalized by its new owners. Bell has already cut jobs since 1980.

Has it resulted in lower rates or better service? Telephone rates have continued to rise. Phone centres and increased service charges mean that a visit from the telephone repair or a serviceman is a very expensive rarity. Bell is eliminating these jobs.

Has it created more research and development in Canada? This particular Canadian Holy Grail ought to be foremost on the mind of this Government. Yet, Bell's subsidiary Northern Telecom's record in Canada in recent years leaves a great deal to be desired. Between 1976 and 1980 Northern Telecom's Canadian workforce in Canada declined, although company sales doubled. At the same time, Northern Telecom's U.S. workforce grew from 2,940 in 1976 to 18,805 today. The new jobs by this Canadian-owned, Canadian-supported, Canadian-subsidized company are going to the United States, not Canada. Since the Canadian workforce is now about 23,500, there is strong speculation that this joint Bell Canada Enterprises and Bell Canada subsidiary is really headed for the United States, and Canada will ultimately be another small market to them. This is hardly what the Government has in mind when it talks about world product mandates and high-tech futures. Yet this Bill does not set down any research and development commitments for Northern Telecom because this opportunity was missed in the long inquiry conducted by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission between 1977 and 1983.

Instead, we are stuck. We are stuck with what Bell Canada Enterprises will give us because the Government opposite has not ventured beyond the incentive agreements it makes with all large companies. We are stuck with Governments that have no sense of what a telecommunications policy should be and are prepared to let Bell escape while they think about one. In short, there is little in the history leading to this Bill that is far-sighted, visionary, or even commendable. It is truly a shell, a shell which legitimizes what Bell accomplished in the face of any regulatory or legal challenge almost two years ago.

This Bill is simply a recognition of how much Liberal and Conservative Governments defer to corporate power. The Government opposite, the one which said it has a mandate for change, has had every opportunity to examine and change this Bill. Bell Canada has given it reason to take another look at its operations with the provocative actions by Bell Canada International in acquiring subsidiaries of the Cable and Wireless Company in Britain.

Bell Canada International announced that it was its policy not to have a union representing the workers at one of these companies in Great Britain. This is a company with its head office here in Canada operating in a country for which the Prime Minister has so often expressed his support and friendship. In announcing that policy Bell invoked the first strike in the history of the company in Great Britain and gave Canadian companies an international black eye. Surely a Government headed by a labour lawyer who knows the value of consensus would wish to think again about Bell Canada Enterprises and how it operates. The Government is not really going to do it. It has simply done what it said it would do while in opposition and split the old Liberal Bill C-20 into two Bills, C-20 and C-19, this one. Only the most minor changes have been made.

We believe major changes should have been made. The changes should have awaited the statement of a national telecommunications policy which the Prime Minister promised while he was Leader of the Opposition.

When we have the opportunity, we will deal with some of the specific shortcomings of this Bill. I want to conclude by putting on the record what has happened to Bell Canada in the last few years. If we begin in 1981, Mr. Speaker, and these figures are taken from reputable financial reports Bell Canada had a profit of $555.5 million. In 1982, its profits were $615.4 million, up 10.7 per cent. In 1983, profits were $829.8 million, up 34.8 per cent, and in the first quarter of 1984, its profits were $202.8 million, up 33.5 per cent over the first quarter in 1983.

Bell Canada also has cumulative deferred taxes totalling $1.5 billion to the end of 1983. Bell Canada has had federal contributions to help it grow. In 1980-81, it received communications grants of $170,000 and a science and technology grant went to Bell Northern for research. In 1981-82, it received communications grants of $40,000 and part of a share grant of $330,000. It got a science and technology grant for Bell Northern of $924 million. In 1982-83, it received a communications grant share of $300,000, External Affairs export sales assistance of $179,000, an industry co-op project grant of $159,000, and a science and technology grant of $1.6 million. This permitted Bell, as I indicated earlier, to begin a very rapid program of takeovers.

According to the May 7, 1984 edition of The Financial Times, Bell Canada Enterprises was in the process of buying a United States printing firm, Case-Hoyt. Also, Bell acquired a controlling interest of 42.3 per cent in TransCanada Pipelines for $605.5 million. Further, Bell acquired a 95.6 per cent interest in Comac Communications in 1982, and acquired Alphatext through its subsidiary, Ronalds-Federated Ltd., in 1982. Alphatext publishes Homemaker's, Madame au Foyer, City Woman and Western Living. It also acquired the B.C.-based Commercial Telephone Systems in 1982.

While Bell was making these acquisitions, it was also very generous to its senior executives. Again according to the May 7, 1984 edition of The Financial Times, the Chairman and President of Bell Canada Enterprises, Chief Executive Officer de Grandpré, received a salary in 1983 of $658,000, up 19.4 per cent from 1982. This excludes a non-cash benefit worth up to $25,000, as well as $290,000 as future retirement allowances. Just a few days ago it was reported that Mr. de Grandpré had received an increase for this year of 29.6 per cent, raising his salary to $853,000. The 1983 salary of its Deputy Chairman, Mr. Tropea, was $312,000, up 6.4 per cent, not including the cash benefit of up to $25,000 and the $90,000 expenses for future retirement allowances. Executive Vice-President Innes received $206,000, and the chairman and chief executive officer of Bell Telephone received $505,000 in 1983. In 1984, compensation to Bell Canada Enterprises executives amounted to $3.63 million, for an increase of 30.4 per cent. While the company was being that generous to its chief executive officers, its unionized employees were held to increases for this year and the next two years of 2 per cent, 2 per cent and 3 per cent.

In our view this Bill does not meet the promises of the Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Opposition that a Government under his direction would work out and bring forth a real national telecommunications policy. In our view this bill gives Bell Canada everything it wants. It permits it to siphon off those companies or fields which do not come under regulation. There are an increasing number of them. As well it leaves to the communications system, the regulated part, a very small part of its business. It lets the company go on to bigger and better profits. This will be very useful to the officers and shareholders of the company, but it will be nothing but trouble for the people of Canada. Therefore, we intend to oppose this Bill here and in committee.

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on this piece of legislation. The Bill has been well explained by the Minister. The historical progress of the telecommunications industry and its effect on Bell Canada were well outlined in what he had to say. I do not want to repeat at any great length the points the Minister made, however I would like to give my perspective as a Member of Parliament who has in his riding a number of Bell employees and as someone who has taken a look at the difficulty in Canada of striking a balance between having highly competitive, strong international industries and protecting consumers.

In many ways this Bill is a litmus test of what a Government will do on matters of this sort. We want to encourage Canada to build large, effective and highly competitive industries in this modern age, especially in the telecommunications area where we are faced with fierce competition. At the same time, there are few utilities which are of more basic importance to average Canadians than telephone services. There are shut-ins who depend upon telephones. There are those living on limited incomes who, as one of their few luxuries, can afford telephones. They cannot afford expensive rates. We have the hotel industry and many others which depend upon reasonable telephone rates, not upon high or expensive charges. A balance always has to be struck between helping a major company and protecting consumers.

I trace the genesis of this Bill, to some degree, to the important sales of Bell Canada to Saudi Arabia some years ago. In the contract, billions of dollars worth of business was brought to Saudi Arabia through Bell Canada. The great expertise and experience of Canada in that field was used to assist that country. The contract was an extremely successful one for Bell Canada. It made the company more internationally important and competitive. It helped Canadians as well as Saudi Arabians. In the process of generating great revenues and indeed reasonable profits, Bell Canada found that the CRTC wanted to consider it as part of its ordinary revenue and to diminish somewhat its request for rate increases. I cannot go into the merits of the total request for rate increases which Bell made and the CRTC's injunctions to restrain its increases. However, what emerged in that instance was the fact that Bell Canada, to some degree, was being punished for reaching out and searching for an important international market. Somehow, if it made millions of dollars, it suddenly decreased its claim for a reasonable increase in telephone rates. The Canadian Government and the CRTC were faced with trying to strike the balance between encouraging Bell Canada to be internationally at the forefront of its industry and protecting Canadian consumers. I believe that particular market opportunity is what led to the reorganization of Bell Canada.

What was the reorganization? It was complex but, as Mark Twain said, at the middle of anything that is complicated is something simple. The simple principle was that the regulated part of that telephone company should be continued to be regulated, but the entrepreneurial parts of Bell's various enterprises should be given some flexibility to compete internationally. I was disturbed when I heard the hon. member of the New Democratic Party speak on the Bill. He did not try to encourage that side of the operations of Bell. We want Bell to be a world-wide force in the telecommunications industry. We want to free it up to have the flexibility to do that. That is the aim of this Bill.

When Bell Canada Enterprises was allowed to turn itself inside out and become the holding company of Bell Canada, it was suggested that there should be a study of the powers of the CRTC. Those powers are outlined in the Bill before us today. Perhaps some changes could be made. Hopefully that will be looked at in committee. I support the Government in bringing this Bill before the house at this time. I support it in its attempt to strike a balance between international competitiveness and regulation in terms of protecting the consumer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. Does the Hon. Member not realize that Bell's ability to expand into the kind of operation it is conducting in Saudi Arabia is based on the profits that it was guaranteed as a regulated telephone company? Does the Hon. Member not believe that the Canadian subscribers of Bell should be able to benefit, subscribers who, through the payment of their telephone bills, contributed to that profit which permitted Bell Canada to expand and do the kind of business which he indicates it and other companies—I'll have another question about that—were able and are able to do in Saudi Arabia and other countries? Does the Hon. Member not believe that the subscribers of Bell Canada who contributed to the build-up of Bell should be able to benefit through part of the profits that Bell makes in these operations going to support the continued low rate for telephone service?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to respond to those points. First, Bell's opportunity to do well in that Saudi Arabian contract was based primarily on its expertise, not on the cash flow from subscribers. Its great expertise allowed it to produce the kind of services that the Saudi Arabian Government was looking for. In terms of cash flow from subscribers, there was very little cash outlet that was needed by Bell Canada in Saudi Arabia. Everything was put up front essentially by the Saudi Arabian Government. There was very little need for cash flow from subscribers. There was never a better deal. Perhaps he points to an unfortunate example in terms of arguing that subscribers' revenues are helping in this particular contract.

The Hon. Member does have a good point, however, that there is a balance to be struck regarding the fact that revenues that flow from the regulated monopolistic Bell Canada operations do not help excessively the other parts of Bell enterprises. That is precisely the balance that this Bill is trying to strike.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member know that Bell is not the only company doing work in Saudi Arabia? In fact, other companies are involved. I know that the Manitoba Telephone System, which is a publicly owned utility, is also doing work in Saudi Arabia to upgrade the telephone system there. Any profits which the Manitoba Telephone System makes for the work it is doing in Saudi Arabia will go back to the system. Since the public utility is not a profit-making company, it will go to help subsidize the rates.

Let me ask the Hon. Member a second question. Does he realize that if and when the CRTC and the Government permit CNCP to compete with Bell and the other existing telephone companies for long distance business the profits of Bell and the other telephone companies will be sharply reduced? They have been making a substantial profit on their long distance business. That profit has been used to cross subsidize the local telephone rates and keep local telephone rates low. The experience in the United States is that competition for long distance business has driven the cost of local service up substantially. When that happens, Bell Canada's telephone profits will come down substantially and the telephone rates for subscribers in his constituency and the rest of Ontario and Quebec will go up very sharply. We say that part of the profits they make in these other businesses, which were based originally on the profits they made on telephone business, should be used to subsidize telephone rates in the City of London and in other parts of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the points made by the Hon. Member are worth exploring because I am sure that is what the consumers will be asking. I would like to say that his analysis is based upon a fairly uninventive, rather old-fashioned view of what Bell Canada is all about. I think the trade-off between long distance and local calls is not the only thing that will affect local call rates. There are many other things that Bell Canada would like to do and could do which could be profitable for it and which would help to make up for some of the lower profit margins that it might not enjoy because of the increased competition in long distance rates. I can think of mobile telephones and other things.

The key point is whether the Hon. Member is against competition. To bring in long distance competition is something Canadians have asked for and waited for for years and years. I am sure that the average low-income Canadian would be just as delighted to be able to call a relative on one coast or the other at a cheaper rate, thanks to this competition. When we look at the over-all mix of increased telephone rates in this country, we have to look at the long distance together with the local. They are all in a package. You cannot just look at the local rates. My answer would be that if you looked at the lower charges for long distance rates, if you looked at other fields in which Bell Canada might be able to become profitable, together with their local charges, we will have just as strong a Bell Canada and reasonable rates as well.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member not realize that if we have competition for long distance telephone business and if we achieve much lower rates for long distance telephone calls, the big winner will be the large corporations? The ordinary Canadian user such as the farmer or the old-age pensioner does not use the long distance system very often. Those people will not save very much money, but the large corporations will. Increases in local rates in the United States have reached 40 and 50 per cent and it is predicted that they will go to 100 or 200 per cent in the next few years. Therefore, they are the ones who will suffer from this sort of competition. We are not opposed to competition if it benefits the ordinary Canadian, but we are certainly opposed to competition if the benefits go to the large corporations which are best able to afford the kind of payments that they have had. I suggest that the Hon. Memer should be concerned about the ordinary Canadian whom he and others represent.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) juxtaposes large corporate interests and the individual paying his telephone bill. I say that the whole issue should be put in a larger context. First, if you take a number of industries that depend enormously on long distance for their livelihood, especially a large service industry such as the hotel industry, if you are able to moderate their rates and make them more profitable, efficient and competitive, suddenly you will create jobs. Therefore, we have to look at the fact that if certain corporations are able to benefit and become more competitive, that can create jobs. That is part of the answer. The other part of the answer is the direct level of rates that will be in store for the local telephone calls. There is no evidence that the CRTC will allow unreasonable increases to take place. The CRTC will have a mandate under this Bill as it has always had to moderate those increases. I do not think we should be scared by the spectre of huge increases to which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North referred.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Labour Conditions—Unemployment rate levels—Request that budget be introduced. b) Challenge '85—Wage subsidy component. c) Unemployment in Eastern Canada; the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Budgetary cutbacks—Request for details. b) Nature of consultations; the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria)—The Administration—Government appointments—Remuneration levels. b) External Aid—Government position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BELL CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us dealing with the reorganization of Bell Canada is an interesting example of the realities of politics and power in this country. The Government is putting forward a Bill which is a part of what the last Liberal Government brought before the House. The other part of that legislation will be coming to us later.

The Official Opposition is missing this afternoon. Having done their pro forma bit in recognizing what the Bill was before, Liberal Members have now disappeared to do whatever other pleasant duties there may be this afternoon. We in the New Democratic Party who are concerned about the impact of Bell Canada reorganization on ordinary Canadians are here endeavouring to maintain the debate.

Let us think a bit about the Bill that is before us. The reality of Bell Canada is that it has made enormous profits in these last few years. The reorganization of Bell Canada Enterprises has made it possible to use that cash flow and the economic power it gives the company in order to become a major operator in various Canadian endeavours. It can buy into real estate, enter into publishing and so on and so forth. It is producing a company that is on the way to becoming an enormous conglomerate. That achievement has been made at a time when so many Canadians are unemployed and when in fact the Canadian economy is in dreadful shape. This makes one wonder what exactly is going on in various areas of the Canadian economy.

Why is it possible for this company to make such inordinate gains? How is it possible for the profits to rise so sharply? On the one hand, the company pays a certain amount in the way of taxes but, as one of Canada's largest companies, it is surely also a beneficiary of the morass of tax breaks from which companies can benefit. To have the company then setting out at the beginning of this decade to reorganize its business in order to ensure that what Government regulates will be quite neatly confined and controlled while profits can be used in other areas and the enormous cash flow can produce expansion and great gain from which the actual users of the telephone systems in Canada will get little if any benefit is an indication of the kind of capitalism that is triumphant in this country. It is the capitalism of which both the Official Opposition and the governing Party, more or less solidly, happily support.

It is fun to examine balance sheets and to watch annual meetings take place. It is fun to see the presidents, managers and directors of this company feel very, very happy. It is not so much fun to contemplate what that particular company is about as it presses its case against Canadian users of telephone services and keeps up the perpetual drive to increase its returns.

One can focus on only one aspect of that drive, Bell Canada's endeavour to move from the current flat rate rental to charges for the amount of use that is made of the telephones. The latest item in that area is the possibility of this charge being applied to businesses using telephone lines to exchange computer information. Of course, modern technology opens up all kinds of wondrous possibilities, and one of them is the possibility of monitoring those bursts of information which are flowing over the wires by counting how many bits flow by a whatever astronomical rate it may be and sending the business that is using the service a bill reflecting how much information it received. In this way, the companies with the most advanced equipment that are able to send information in the shortest period of time will not get a cheaper ride on the system.

That is an interesting application to business, but I am more concerned about the prospect of individual subscribers to telephone systems being faced with billing according to the amount of use that is made of their telephones. If that were to be applied, then instead of having a utility that is available to all Canadians on a flat rate rental, every poor subscriber still able to maintain a telephone will be doing his or her bit in making Bell Canada as profitable as it will be allowed to be within this stable of enterprises.

I suppose Members of Parliament, who can all too easily settle into their comfortable seats and live the life of the privileged that the Parliament of Canada gives them, are all too likely to forget the plight of individual subscribers. They are all too likely to forget that people who have been unemployed and people living on social assistance who need a telephone in order to maintain their connections and to pursue job hunts will find that Bell Canada, thanks to the possible acquiescence of the CRTC, is deterring them in their basic information-seeking endeavour.

At that point, I imagine that government Members who are happy about this now, as indicated by their composure, may not be nearly as happy to respond to what their constituents will say about this. They will more or less gracefully throw up their hands and say that that is the law of the land because a Bill was passed in Parliament. They may not refer to their part in helping that Bill pass. They will do this, instead of realizing that there are points at which those eventualities begin to unfold, and this happens to be one of those points. When a Government, in the absence of the Official Opposition, allows that to happen, it is in fact making it more difficult if not impossible for my constituents and for all of our constituents to maintain telephones and to keep in contact. It is in fact putting a hindrance in the way of the flow of information that is so important to economic life. It is in fact driving people to think of telephone use not as a right, as it is now in a country with the largest number of telephones per capita in the world, but as a privilege.

When I was in Baltimore in the United States as a graduate student 20 years ago, I experienced that kind of telephone use. My landlady was quite anxious about the number of calls I might make and was even anxious about the number of local calls I might make because she had to pay per call for the calls that I made. That eventuality is one of the possibilities that surely exists as a result of the passage of this legislation and the acquiescence of the Government in what corporate giants wish to do in order to increase their wealth at the expense of Canadian people including widows and the unemployed.

I challenge government Members to be a little less pleased about the progress that this Bill represents and a little more anxious about it all. I suppose it is impossible to move them to vote it down, but certainly these are the kinds of concerns that give us adequate reason to oppose the Bill, as did the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and as I know other members of our caucus will do as well.

I am pleased that I had the opportunity to speak on this Bill in defence of constituents of mine who are anxious about the ways in which Bell Canada will use its powers, and questions will arise about the way in which that power will be supported and strengthened by the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it has been estimated by the Consumers Association of Canada and other organizations that about 97 per cent of Canadians are telephone subscribers. The reason there is such a high rate of users is that the monthly rate has been kept low. What does the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) think the effect would be of sharp increases in monthly telephone rates, such as have been experienced in the United States as a result of the deregulation of the telephone industry and the competition which was created by the new companies to the American Bell system for long distance rates? That has led to very sharp increases in monthly rates and many more increases are predicted. What would be the effects of such increases on the users in his constituency, many of whom live in small, isolated communities?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question must inevitably have something of conjecture about it. I do not think it takes any great amount of knowledge to realize that sharp increases in telephone rates are bound to have a detrimental effect. One of the difficulties with which my predecessors failed to deal in the Thunder Bay area with respect to telephone use is that of the people who live 20 miles or more outside the city who are not serviced by the department of the City of Thunder Bay which operates the telephone system. It is another example of municipal socialism that appears in various Canadian cities in which the telephone system is operated within the city limits as a utility, just as hydroelectricity is operated by a commission.

My constituents who live outside the city are in an unfortunate situation. As Bell Canada subscribers, they must pay long distance rates to talk to people in the city, to communicate with doctors, drug stores, and to do business. Whether those people are in the lumber or dairy business, they have to communicate with business people in the city.

I was recently at a public meeting in the small community of Pass Lake and that problem was brought to my attention. Some people were paying telephone bills regularly in the range of $80 to $150 a month. I was astonished that people could carry those costs. Those people have no choice. The farther they live from the city, the more important the telephone lines are. The charge represents an inevitable tax, given the present problems in getting sensible tie-ins between Bell Canada and the telephone department of the City of Thunder Bay. It is one of the taxes which people have to pay because they live outside the city.

I do not think that people who are living on social assistance rates as set by the Province of Ontario could afford to pay the costs. Some people are trying to manage on a few hundred dollars a month. Single people who are unable to find work have no choice but to try to maintain an apartment and have a telephone line available to them. If the CRTC were to allow the increases which Bell Canada could impose on Canadians, people in those circumstances would lose their telephones. That might well happen to people who are living on unemployment insurance and seeking work. In fact, in the City of Thunder Bay there is an unemployed workers' association which has sought a reduction in the bus fare in order to assist unemployed people in finding work. People who are hunting for jobs may have to depend on public transit, which represents a very heavy drain on their resources. Similarly, to charge for telephone calls by the call, and to allow telephone rental rates to rise significantly, would represent an unbearable drain on the resources of people who are in economic difficulty. Those economic circumstances are no accident. Governments helped to create those circumstances. The people who are already driven to the edge of despair would find themselves loaded down with additional costs. That is the human reality with which this Bill deals.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has graphically described the problems of his constituents who live outside the city limits of Thunder Bay. I wonder, has he received representations from senior citizens' organization? I have received representations which are very direct in expressing the feeling that the telephone service is a necessity for senior citizens and that the sharp increases, such as those which are occurring in the United States owing to the competition for long distance service, would mean that many senior citizens would have to give up their telephones. Has the Hon. Member received that type of representation? If so, what has his response been?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I must say in all honesty that I have not received that kind of representation. However, I have had representations from senior citizens in the City of Thunder Bay who are concerned about rental increases. In many cases the rent increases strike me as being inordinate. The rent increases seem particularly outrageous as they relate to non-profit housing. Non-profit housing is supposed to be social housing, but it is controlled by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in such a way that rents are being driven upward significantly. Under those circumstances, I cannot imagine a senior citizen who is living on a pension being able to manage all of the costs. In the end, senior citizens may have to abandon their telephone service. I am an active member of the St. Paul's United Church Family Committee in Thunder Bay. The committee is concerned about the plight of senior members in the congregation. We recognized in that committee that the telephone service is one of the means of keeping in touch to ensure that people are in good health and have not suffered accidents.

Beyond the physical, of course, the regular telephone call is one way of ensuring that a good outlook on life is being maintained. It is necessary for mental health, if you will. We all realize, I am sure, although we forget the fact sometimes, that encouraging people to remain in their homes and carry on as long as possible is of enormous value to society. It saves the Government money. Again, this Bill is creating circumstances in which it is going to be more difficult for people to keep in touch and maintain a happy outlook on life. Telephones are essential to ensure that someone has not taken a fall and lain on the floor for two or three days before this person is missed at church on a Sunday which causes someone to go by his house to check whether he is all right or not. Again, those are dimensions which I appreciate my good friend from Winnipeg North drawing to my attention and thereby giving me the opportunity to lay them before the House.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a few minutes this afternoon looking at Bill C-19 which is an effort to reorganize Bell Canada. I have some questions for you which I will come to just before my time is up this afternoon, but initially I would like to comment on the content of this Bill. It seems to be following a process we have seen in Canada before.

Historically, only a few large monopolies have developed in this country. That applies whether we talk about the fur trade, our transportation system or the telephone system. As we know, the telephone is believed to have been invented in the Brantford area by Alexander Graham Bell, whose name this company still uses. The CPR's development in Canada came about through its railroad operations. Subsequently it moved into other areas like hotels, tourism, ocean shipping, trucking, accumulating a multitude of assets, including real estate, until finally it got to the point where the railway part of the business was not the big money maker. Then CPR moved to split itself into many parts and pieces so that each one could be profitable, leaving the basis of the organization, namely the railway, which had as part of its mandate the provision of service to the public, somewhat short of assets because they were used to set up subsidiary companies. We contend that that is what Bell Canada is trying to do at this particular stage of its life.

Bell is doing a lot of research through a subsidiary and there are services it can offer which have the prospect of being more profitable than some aspects of the telephone business. Consequently, the company has proposed to divest itself of the responsibility for carrying through some services to the public, with the seeming acceptance of members of the Government and perhaps including members of the previous Government. The company has decided to hive off the telephone aspects of its operation, which are of a public service nature but which are beginning to lag behind the other technologies available for competing means of communications, and set that aside.

The company knows that because a lot of remote areas and less advantaged people require telephones there will be some public outcry if those people are not provided the service which is in some way subsidized by the Government. As a consequence we fear this Bill is an effort to follow in the steps of the Canadian Pacific Railway to set up small units of Bell Canada, particularly because, like CPR, Bell is subjected to scrutiny through a public body. So it can fall on its knees in front of the public body, insist it is losing money by only operating a telephone system, thereby creating the spectacle of the public body, in this case the CRTC, forcing it to raise the rates. People who are on pensions, welfare or people who live in remote communities will then have to pay higher rates for that service.

We fear this is an attempt to hive off the profitable aspects of the telephone business, namely long distance rates, as a separate entity so that each segment of the business can be forced to show a profit. If that is carried to its logical conclusion, people with a telephone will be charged for each call. If the charges remain on a monthly basis, they will end up being much higher because at the moment, if we can believe the representatives appearing before the CRTC, the telephone companies in Canada, including Bell Canada, use their very profitable long distance business to cross subsidize ordinary telephone service.

We have heard this argument for deregulation in the United States when it attempted to deregulate its airline business. It argued that the source of its business, the small towns and villages where feeder airlines were located, were not really very important. As a consequence, some of the airlines attempted to pull out of those feeder businesses and have people find their own way to the larger airports. A few of those companies found that they were in very great trouble after that. Once they took away the source of customers, there was not enough traffic left to generate profits. That is an argument that I think we should be aware of when we talk about deregulation of the telephone business. Without the widows and pensioners and the people on welfare and those in remote communities, the prospect of a profitable long distance operation becomes virtually negligible.

As my time is about to run out, Mr. Speaker, there is a point I want to raise with you. I notice in Clause 14 of this Bill that all of the previous Acts which have set up the powers that Bell Canada operates under now were set up on the basis of Private Members' Motions. I would ask if, during the time between now and the next session, you would seek the opinion of the Law Officer of the House of Commons as to the appropriateness of this Bill coming in as a public Bill under those circumstances. Perhaps you can tell us whether this Bill should not have been introduced as a Private Members' Bill and, as a consequence, our discussion should then have taken place under Private Members' Business.

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will certainly do that and report to the House as soon as possible.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House to proceed to Item No. 109?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO DEDUCT CONTRIBUTIONS THAT REDUCE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in order to reduce Canada's massive debt, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to provide that any Canadian taxpayer who makes a financial contribution to the government for the sole purpose of reducing the national debt shall be entitled to deduct a like amount in computing the taxable income of the taxpayer for the taxation year in which the contribution is made.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by offering a more simple explanation of the motion which I have brought to the floor of the House of Commons. First and foremost, it focuses attention on the gigantic national debt which is a burden for all Canadians. Second, it would allow the taxpayers of Canada an opportunity to participate directly in the reduction of this financial burden by making contributions which would be applied to the national debt, thus reducing it. I would like to make it clear that I do not expect the House to enact this provision. I think that is understandable. However, I do expect the House to recognize the need for focusing public attention on the national debt and to find some method, whether through the Income Tax Act or some other means, to take positive steps to reduce the national debt.

We have heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and members of the Cabinet indicate in the House day after day the necessity of concentrating our efforts and attention on the financial burden that is imposed on Canadians by the national debt and the annual deficit. The national debt is approaching $200 billion, now standing at $190 billion. The annual deficit may run as high as $36 billion for this fiscal year. There is some hope that that figure may be somewhat overestimated, but it would only be by approximately $1 billion. On a per capita basis, the national debt amounts to $7,500 for every Canadian man, woman and child. The per capita debt for the approximately 11 million taxpayers of Canada is $16,000. If all the taxpayers of Canada joined together to retire the national debt they would have to contribute approximately $16,000 each, which is an impossible burden.

It is relevant to note that in addition to that national debt burden on each taxpayer, we all live in provinces which in turn have debts as well. In my own case, in the Province of Nova Scotia the provincial debt amounts to $2.28 billion. The per capita share of that debt is $6,400. When the provincial debt burden, which must be shared by every taxpayer, is added to the national debt burden, in the case of the Province of Nova Scotia the total is in excess of $20,000. When Nova Scotians go home at night and look over their budget accounts and see what their car payment is, and what their mortgage payment is, and every other payment that is common to Canadian households is, they have to add that to the burden of paying off the national and provincial debt this year and in years to come. Through this motion I want to focus attention on this problem and to attempt to make people realize that if we go on with profligate spending we will simply increase the national debt and our annual budget deficit, carrying the problem into the future.

Let me talk about the provision specifically in the legal sense. I realize that there is now in the Canadian Income Tax Act a provision which permits taxpayers who make donations to the Government of Canada, specifically to Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada, or to the Government of a province, specifically to Her Majesty the Queen in right of the province, to deduct that donation for income tax purposes.

One may ask how much this will cost taxpayers and whether it is any different from the provision which now permits donations to the Governments of Canada or the provinces to be deducted. I admit quite readily that that is difficult to answer. I have no idea what it would cost to implement a provision like this, but the statistics for the last taxation year indicate that Canadians in total contributed $1.360 billion to charities and deducted those donations for income tax purposes. I think that we can expect that the figure will not go beyond the amount given by all Canadians to all charities.

With regard to the current provision in Section 110 of the Income Tax Act which permits deductions in the case of gifts to the Crown, I can say that pressure is not enough. I would like to see a procedure whereby Canadians can make a contribution to reduce the national debt and know that the money is being applied for that purpose.

We have had public response to the so-called cuts that the Government has been forced to make in spending for this and subsequent years. I think every Member of Parliament has great sympathy for Canadians who are affected by budget reductions, even though we all recognize the necessity of those reductions. I do not want to focus particular attention on any particular group or person that is affected by budget cuts, except to say that they have my sympathy. However, I would like to deal with one particular area which receives a great deal of media attention. Those are the cuts which affect the arts and the cultural community. In that regard I would like to talk about the Canada Council in relation to the duties of Government.

It is a matter of history that the Canada Council was created in 1957 as a result of the Royal Commission on National Development in the Arts, Letters and Sciences which was chaired by Vincent Massey. When the Council was established it was funded to the extent of $50 million. That money came from the estates of two very well known Canadians, Sir James Dunn and Izaak Walton Killam. Both of those Canadians had a special connection with the Province of Nova Scotia. I am well aware of their history and the contribution that they made to Canada and the arts and cultural communities as a result of the contributions through their estates.

The original purpose of the Canada Council was to use the revenues from those funds for its statutory purpose. That was in 1957. However, in 1964 things changed. The Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Pearson, recognized that the activities of the Canada Council had broadened in their base and that the Canada Council was spending much more than it received from the endowments which were conferred by statute of the Parliament of Canada. In 1964-65, Mr. Pearson contributed an additional $10 million to assist the Canada Council in carrying out some of its purposes. For the first time public funds were contributed directly to the Canada Council for its purposes.

In the fiscal year 1984-85, Canada Council's budget, including its grant from the Parliament of Canada, was $72.6 million. Of course, the great portion of that was public funds. This is what happens when one sets out to establish an activity, which is funded basically with moneys that have come from two taxpayers, through the tax system, in this case the Succession Duty Act which was then in force. It grows, with the end result being that taxpayers are spending money on a project—the Canada Council—that was never intended to be the responsibility of the taxpayers of Canada.

Indeed, the Canada Council Act demonstrates quite clearly that the Canada Council was to expend only these endowment funds which came from the estates of Sir James Dunn and Sir Izaak Walton Killam by way of taxation.

The suggestion to let taxpayers support public charities and then deduct the money will not solve the problem. I want to give the taxpayers the right to participate directly in the reduction of the national debt. I do not trust the Government to take the taxpayers' funds and use those funds to pay for other government services and at the end of that process reduce the national debt or the annual budget deficit. That may not happen, and I cite the Canada Council as an example of what happens when you set out to fund an activity separately. You end up spending over $50 million of taxpayers' money on the services provided.

Does this mean that I am not in favour of the work and activity of the Canada Council? Certainly not. My constituency, my province and my part of Canada benefit in great measure from the existence of the Canada Council, and I do not deny that at all. I just want to put the whole matter into focus. Once something gets started in government, it is not only hard to stop it, it is hard to bring it under any kind of sensible control.

Let me say in passing, however, that I find it rather annoying, as do other Members of Parliament, I suspect, that the Canada Council, through the arts and cultural community in Canada, has objected so strongly to the reasonable request of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to curb its budgetary requirements by $3.5 million, especially when the Canada Council is spending $15 million on its administration expenses and it could only reduce those by $1 million. In fact, as I understand it, the $3.5 million by which the budget was to be reduced has been watered down to approximately $2.5 million. The end result is that grants made by the Canada Council in the next fiscal year may be reduced by as little as $1.5 million. Yet, the hue and cry goes out.

I grant to any Canadian the right to make public whatever objection he can muster to Government about expenditure reductions that affect him in a direct way. However, as I said before, the whole matter must be put into context. On the one hand, we have a national debt approaching $200 billion, a budgetary deficit on an annual basis approaching $36 billion and, on the other hand, we have a group in Canada objecting to a cut of approximately $2.5 million in a budget that has grown, since its inception in 1957, to $72 million.

The Canada Council, in its inception, was never intended to expend taxpayers' money. This is what happens. You end up apologizing, as a representative of the people in Parliament, for something that should have been done years ago by a responsible government so that we would not have this situation today.

If I stand before Canadians and before the House of Commons asking for a change in the Income Tax Act that will allow Canadians to enter into the financial vaults of the Government, as it were, and put their money down to reduce the national debt, I do not apologize for that. I think that is giving Canadians an opportunity that they never had before. I suspect there are some Canadians who would like to take advantage of that.

Let me consider that point for a moment. While the Government is going through the process of establishing financial responsibility in Canada for the benefit of Canadians, we receive a certain amount of support from organizations like the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and others concerned with the status of the business community and the state of the Canadian economy. They recognize collectively and individually, as groups and taxpayers, that measures must be taken to reduce the Government's expenditures that have led to massive annual deficits and have resulted in the massive national debt. Everyone recognizes that, but when the chips are down and the steps are taken, when the budgets are cut and individuals are affected, they back off. They do not support these measures.

I simply want to say in that context, that it is easy to break the will of a politician and it is easy to break the will of government. Why should we, as individual Members of Parliament or collectively as the Government of Canada, take the measures that are necessary and at the same time incur the broad criticism of important sectors of the Canadian population? Why should we do that? Why don't we just borrow more money at current interest rates and pile up a bigger deficit and bigger national debt in order to please everyone in Canada and have ourselves elected in four years' time?

We do not want to do that because that is exactly what the Liberals have done for 16 years. That is why they were not elected by the people of Canada in September, 1984, and that is why the Progressive Conservative Party was elected as the Government of Canada. We pledged individually and as a group to take the kind of action that was essential to deal with this financial problem.

At the same time we recognize, as concerned persons, that if we take that action the result will be an improved economy that will, in turn, benefit Canadians, because the major problem in Canada is, has been, and will continue to be unemployment. The plight of Canadians who are unemployed does not go out of the mind of any Member of Parliament. We see it on a day to day basis, in the food line-up in larger cities and in the line-ups at the Manpower offices and unemployment insurance centres. We never want to lose sight of our mission to assist people who are unemployed in Canada, the over 1.5 million Canadians and hundreds of thousands of others who are no longer counted.

We are not reducing the national debt simply for the sake of a financial exercise. We are doing it to get the Canadian economy in shape so that the engine of growth will create the activity that creates jobs and, in that way, lead to the ultimate goal of the reduction of unemployment in Canada.

When you introduce a motion in the House of Commons that, in simple terms, amends the Income Tax Act to permit and to encourage taxpayers to participate directly in the process of reducing the national debt, you have a lot of things in mind. What I have in mind is a subject that we seldom hear spoken about by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in the House of Commons, that is, unemployment in Canada. It still is and will continue to be until every Canadian is employed the major issue for all Canadians. All of our attention should be directed toward curing that problem and providing the opportunity for every Canadian to work in his or her community.

I know from talking to Canadians that while they are concerned with interest rates and inflation rates, they are of very certain mind that if they can become employed and maintain their employment they will have the opportunity at least to pay their bills, pay for their food, housing and clothing and pay interest rates, however high they are. It is a burden but one that most Canadians can live with.

As I said, and don't mind repeating, the purpose of the exercise is to generate employment and reduce unemployment in Canada. That can only be done by reducing the national debt and allowing the Canadian economy to produce what it cannot produce while it has this financial burden. If a provision in the Income Tax Act assists in any small way to encourage Canadians to consider the national debt and to work toward its reduction, then I think it has merit and I submit it to the House.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on this motion. I listened very attentively to the Hon. Member. Like him I an concerned about the deficit and the state of the Canadian economy. I am sure we all share the view that we want to create jobs in this country. Obviously we want more and more of our people to have meaningful employment. I am sure that government Members, members of the Cabinet, wherever they are, if they somehow get to view this on their televisions, will see the opportunity themselves to be informed of these wishes of the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). If and when they ever come back to this House, members of the Cabinet will be aware that we are very concerned with this particular kind of issue.

I have a few deficit reducing views of my own. I think the Government should start by reducing the size of the Cabinet by roughly one-third. That would not do much for the Tory employment strategy as it affects Tory Members of this House because they are supposed to be kept busy. A bunch of Tories have just been sent to Russia for a few weeks to try to find something to do. They may come back not having done much, but the fact that this Cabinet is about one-third larger than it should be is very expensive. I see some government back-benchers nodding agreement. That is only because they were not chosen to be in Cabinet. If they were, they might have had a different view. I am glad for the time being that some Members agree with me that this Cabinet is way too large.

We see outside the west door of the House of Commons the used car lot. There are 40 very expensive limousines parked there every day.

An Hon. Member: Do you want one?

Mr. Boudria: These limousines are for members of the Cabinet. Each limousine has a chauffeur who sits in the car waiting for the Minister who may show up sometimes. Then we have the chiefs of staff. There are 40 chiefs of staff. Each Cabinet Minister has a chief of staff. We pay them about $80,000 each. These $80,000 chiefs of staff, or political commissars as they are known in a more friendly manner by some of us here, are very expensive to this country. A proposition that I would favour as a cost-cutting deficit reducing measure is that we eliminate those positions right away, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chartrand: What about Stornoway?

Mr. Boudria: I am glad somebody raised the issue of Stornoway. I hear the Hon. Member across the way heckling. He probably does not know what he is talking about. But let me tell him that it was the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) himself who canned the project on Stornoway because it was too expensive to the taxpayers. If some of the Tories had had that kind of initiative, things would be far better. Now that they know the facts, maybe they can check them out and apologize tomorrow in this House.

We were talking about deficit reduction. I was reading in today's business section of The Toronto Star—

Mr. Jepson: The Liberal Star.

Mr. Boudria: —an article which writes about the changes in the energy policy. The effect of this will be a reduction of $1 million to the Treasury over the next two years and another $1.4 billion increase in the deficit in another area. This is a massive increase in the deficit caused by the breaks that have been given to the multi-national oil industries by the present Government.

I have here a copy of the annual report of Imperial Oil Limited. I would like to read some of it for Members on the other side. Imperial Oil, of course, is in dire straights, Mr. Speaker. Maybe with the money Imperial Oil has, that company would contribute to the fund which the Member from Halifax West is suggesting. Let me read to you the summary statement from this annual report, Mr. Speaker. There are just a few lines and in part it reads:

—net income was $221 million or $1.38 per share compared with $57 million or $0.36 per share a year earlier.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the folks in Imperial Oil really needed the breaks given by the Minister of Energy (Miss Carney). I am sure the good voters of Ontario and Quebec and all the consumers in this country, when they pay the increased tax which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is shortly to impose on them, as soon as the election in Ontario is out of the way, will realize what has been perpetrated on them by the Minister of Finance. It is no coincidence that the Budget will occur only a few days after the election in Ontario. If some of the Conservative back-benchers we see here today think that this Budget is pure and holy and everything else, why do they not convince the Minister of Finance to introduce the Budget in this House one week before the Ontario election? That is when we should have the Budget. That is when we should see the fiscal policy of this Government. I am sure all Members on the other side would want that just as much as I do because we want to know what the policies of this Government are.

An Hon. Member: This is the House of Commons, not Queen's Park.

Mr. Boudria: The Member on the other side said that this is the House of Commons and not Queen's Park. That is quite true. Maybe the Government should also realize, when it presents its plans to bring forward its budgetary document, that this is in fact the House of Commons. Maybe the Government should have planned its Budget for the benefit of Canadians instead of for the benefit of the Ontario Conservative Party, which is what the Government did.

I have another suggestion for deficit reduction, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chartrand: What was your first one?

Mr. Boudria: Today I placed question No. 319 on the Order Paper. You may want to read question No. 319, Mr. Speaker. It takes up about a page and a half. It concerns the Shamrock Summit. The Irish eyes were smiling, but do you know at what cost, Mr. Speaker? If I had spent $320,000 in Quebec City, my Irish eyes would be smiling too, but the Irish eyes of the taxpayers will not be smiling when they foot the bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I say to them over there, do not think this is funny. I am sure the people of Quebec want meaningful employment.

[Translation]

My constituents of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell would like to get better jobs too. But the government will certainly not provide better jobs by squandering taxpayers' money on worthless programs to please our Prime Minister's boss, the President of the United States. Because you are quite objective and are not biased like PC members opposite, Mr. Speaker, you can understand that spending $320,000 over a weekend to entertain the President of the United States is a complete waste. All the while, of course, the Prime Minister of Canada claimed to be a head of state.

[English]

The Prime Minister, while he was in Quebec City, while he was spending all this money, increasing our deficit in doing it—this is so you don't bring me to order, Mr. Speaker, and so you are sure I speak to the Bill—was having delusions of grandeur pretending that he was a head of state. We could see the seal on the front of the podium. We could see him meeting the U.S. head of state at the airport. I do not mind the fellow having delusions of grandeur. All of us have them at one time or another. But sometimes he was referring to Cabinet Ministers as "my Ministers". Mr. Speaker, I think the man thinks he is the Queen. He is suffering from something which needs to be cured. He needs to be brought down to earth. This is just terrible. In any case, the cost of that particular weekend in Quebec City to Canadian taxpayers was $320,000.

• (1730)

Let us have a look at the promises which were made during the election campaign.

An Hon. Member: You can't say that with a straight face.

Mr. Boudria: I laugh at this, but actually some of those Tory promises are enough to make one cry. There were 338 of them. During the election campaign the Tories were going to reduce the deficit, and again we are talking about deficit reduction. Approximately 113 of those promises were to spend more money. How does one reduce the deficit by spending more money? There were five promises to spend less money. How does one reconcile those two points? Perhaps a Tory Member could tell us how Conservative mathematics work. In terms of raising money, they made two particular promises to increase the revenue of the country and 26 promises to reduce it. This is rather interesting in terms of deficit reduction and initiative on the part of the Government to reduce the deficit. It is symptomatic of the schizophrenic behaviour of the Government.

This particular Government may say that it wants to reduce the deficit. That is about the same amount of truth as when the President of the United States claimed that he wanted to reduce the deficit. Perhaps government Members want to change their spending priorities. They want to remove programs which have helped poor people and the needy. They clearly said that in their document entitled Expenditure and Program Review, also known as the blue book of cut-backs, introduced last November 8. On black Thursday, November 8, when this particular document was introduced, they said that they did not want to reduce the deficit but that they wanted to rearrange their spending priorities. They wanted to spend more on arms, on military uniforms, on limousines for Cabinet Ministers and on porkbarrelling, which brings me to another topic. They did not want to reduce the deficit. They wanted to spend money on things that were different. They wanted to spend money on the things which I have enumerated. They wanted to spend less on people who need it most. They wanted to spend less for farmers who saw many cut-backs in that particular document. They wanted to spend less on those who needed it and more on Tory friends.

Where is the deficit cutting measure when it comes to giving salary increases to Roy McMurtry and Lawrence Hannigan? We know how much money we should be paying these particular people. After all, Mr. Hannigan only had 20 strikes in 10 years where he used to work! They appointed that gentleman and gave him a raise which brought his salary to $135,000 per year. He was a defeated Conservative candidate, defeated by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). After being defeated, Mr. Hannigan got a big job at $135,000 per year. That is almost enough to make Tory back-benchers and the surfers on this side wish they had lost.

An Hon. Member: Who are the surfers?

Mr. Boudria: Those are the Members who were elected with the tide. That is why I call them that. Those Conservative Members must wish that they had lost the last election so that they could receive big rewards like the ones given to Lawrence Hannigan and Roy McMurtry, another loser at the provincial level for the Ontario leadership. He went on to a plum job in Britain. None of the voters in my constituency received plum jobs in Britain at $135,000 or $114,000 per year. Many of those people are still concerned about the deficit, but they are more concerned about unemployment in my area. They are more concerned with trying to obtain jobs and ensuring that they will continue to receive unemployment insurance benefits because jobs are not forthcoming. The farmers of my riding are not worried about calculating how to invest $135,000 pay cheques. They are worried about keeping their farms. Those are the worries of my constituents. When I see their concerns and when I see some of the waste of the Conservative Government, which pledged on one hand to spend more and on the other hand to spend less, I really wonder about the sincerity of its members during the last election campaign.

Of course the Hon. Member for Halifax West was very sincere when he brought in this motion, but he needs to do a lot of lobbying with Cabinet Ministers about their own personal way of spending government funds and about the way in which the Government is handing out patronage appointments right, left and centre, to everyone. Once they start setting that example in the House of Commons and in the Government of Canada, and once we see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) cut back that massive increase in the budget of his own office, that 57 per cent increase over the budget of the previous Prime Minister, we will believe that they are sincere. Only a few years ago Conservative Members criticized the previous Prime Minister because they claimed that his office was too large. This attitude of bourgeoisie on the part of the Government is totally unacceptable to my constituents and to other people of Canada. It is my hope that the Government will change its policies.

As much as I agree with the principle suggested by the Hon. Member for Halifax West, I think Conservative back-benchers on both sides of the House should be speaking with their Cabinet Ministers and telling them to reduce the size of the used car lot at the west door, their large fleet of limousines. They should tell them to stop spending money. They have spent almost $100,000 renovating the offices of Cabinet Ministers on the Hill. One particular Minister, the Minister of Mines, whoever that is, spent $18,000 putting new wallpaper in his office. The Government talks about reducing the deficit. It should take a mirror and look at itself and the kind of job it is doing. Government Members want to commit Canada to spending more on arms and in other such areas, to spend more on defence and military uniforms, to spend more on limousines and the lavish lifestyles of Cabinet Ministers and the Prime Minister, but they want to spend less on the poor. That is not deficit reduction; that is reorganization of priorities in such a way as to increase the deficit by taking away from the poor and giving to the rich. Those are the policies of the Government, and I do not agree with them.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to participate in the debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) which essentially asks us to make the Government of Canada a charitable organization. If that were the real intention of the Hon. Member, perhaps he should suggest to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) that the Government of Canada be given a charitable donation number so that we could then solve the problems with which we are faced today. What a naive, foolish, simplistic approach the Hon. Member is introducing. Imagine making the Government of Canada a charitable organization!

Perhaps it is not all that far-fetched, given the track record of the present Government. It could very well run the country and the Government into a situation where the Government needs to become a charitable organization.

It is amazing to hear government Members talk, in their very simplistic way, about the causes of the deficit as well as the solutions that they propose. I suspect that the proposal in front of us today for reducing the deficit makes about as much sense as what we have heard so far in terms of serious economic policy which the Government has introduced.

When dealing with the deficit, you are really dealing with two questions: one, your expenditures, and two, your revenues. Unfortunately, government Members have been quite concerned with the expenditure side. All too often during the campaign, in the right wing rhetoric that we have heard in the last number of years, we have been told that the problem with the deficit is that we are living beyond our means, we have had too much government expenditure, essentially it is those people on welfare, those hangers-on who are sucking the system dry, it is time we put our house in order, cut those programs and lived "within our means". In that way economic recovery will occur, new wealth will be created, et cetera, et cetera. In all of the key words and phrases that one can use in this quite simplistic way their solution is to be found. Never do we hear from government Members and government spokesmen about the government revenue part of this equation. They never talk about the type of tax breaks that wealthy Canadians and large corporations have been receiving. There is never one peep out of them about that, just an attack on government expenditures.

A study of OECD countries has shown that as far as social expenditures are concerned, Canada is approximately at the bottom. Italy, Ireland, France, Germany, Holland, the Scandinavian countries, the United States, Great Britain, all spend more of their gross national product on social expenditures than we in Canada. To say that compared to other western civilized countries we are spending more or living beyond our means is absolute nonsense. Certainly compared to other western industrialized countries, we are not spending beyond our means. In fact, we have a pretty poor track record in this regard.

Witness the situation in which many Canadians live. Witness the food banks in every major Canadian city in this country. People are lining up for a bloody sandwich and a bowl of soup. Witness the conditions in which native people live on the reservations. Witness the shacks and the rooms that hundreds and thousands of Canadians are living in, yet we still hear from the Tories that we are living beyond our means. What a bunch of nonsense! How sad it is, how sad it is.

It is of interest to me when I read the statement issued by the Canadian Catholic Bishops on January 5, 1983. I hear a lot of the rhetoric that has come from the government benches and the solutions that they are proposing, much of what the bishops were warning against in the 1983 statement. Let me place on the record what the bishops were saying at that time. They said:

Indeed it is becoming more evident that an industrial future—

I'm sorry, I will come back to that section because the bishops had a lot of very important points to make. In fact, I would suggest that this is one of the most important social documents that has been produced in Canada in the 1980s. The bishops described the economic crisis as follows:

The present recession appears to be symptomatic of a much larger structural crisis in the international system of capitalism. Observers point out that profound changes are taking place in the structure of both capital and technology which are bound to have serious social impacts on labour.

They then talked about some of the solutions that are being proposed. I quote from the section "Present Strategies". They said:

There is a very real danger that these same structural and moral problems are present in Canada's strategies for economic recovery. As recent economic policy statements reveal, the primary objective is to restore profitability and competitiveness in certain Canadian industries and provide more favourable conditions for private investment in the country. The private sector is to be the "engine" for economic recovery. To achieve these goals, inflation—

The bishops talked about inflation in 1983. I will substitute the word "deficit". The rhetoric is still the same, except the word "inflation" has been taken out and the word "deficit" is now used.

To achieve these goals, (the deficit) is put forth as the number one problem. The causes of (the deficit) are seen as workers' wages, government spending and low productivity rather than monopoly control of prices. The means for curbing (the deficit) are such austerity measures as the federal 6 and 5 wage restraint program—

That was the Liberal solution. By the way, there is not much difference between what the Tories are doing now and what the Liberals did then. I continue with the quote:

—such austerity measures as the federal 6 and 5 wage restraint program and cut-backs in social spending (e.g., hospitals, medicare, public services, education and foreign aid), rather than controls on profits and prices. These measures, in turn, have been strengthened by a series of corporate tax reductions and direct investment incentives for such sectors as the petroleum industry. In effect, the survival of capital takes priority over labour in present strategies for economic recovery.

Let us look at the statistics. Indeed we find that it is so. All of these figures came when the Liberals were in power, but I do not see the Tories changing it. I now quote from the January 1985 issue of Canadian Business, certainly no flaming socialist magazine. It reads:

In 1977 large corporations paid an average effective tax rate (after all possible deductions and deferrals) of 18.2 per cent,—

In 1981, the most recent year for which figures are available, the effective big-business tax rate had dropped to 14.3 per cent,—

That is not all. The article continues to explore some of the other tax dodges that exist. For example, it talks about the deferral problem and gives some example. I quote:

Northern Telecom Ltd. chalked up $3.3 billion in sales in 1983, showed $325 million in profit and yet managed to end the fiscal year paying no taxes.

TransCanada Pipelines Ltd., with $4.7 billion in assets and 1982 pretax earnings of $182 million, paid just 7 per cent in effective taxes.

Shell Canada Ltd., with assets of $4.7 billion and pretax earnings of $302 million, paid no income taxes in 1982.

The list goes on. When we hear government Members talking about reducing the deficit, do they talk about collecting revenues from Shell Canada Ltd., TransCanada Pipelines or Northern Telecom? No. As the bishops state, it is the big business guys and their profitability that has been selected as the engine for economic growth. They are the ones whom we bow to and scrape to. We never touch any of their special dividends or special tax concessions, no way. We cannot do that. Who does get cut? It is the old people, our education system, the people on welfare and those on unemployment insurance. They have to tighten their belt. They have to make their sacrifices. When was the last time that Shell Oil, TransCanada Pipelines or Northern Telecom ever made a sacrifice for this country? Never, and never will they.

Then of course there is this extra little thing called deferred taxes. In 1980, deferred taxes amounted to some $24.2 billion. That was more than the entire federal deficit was at that time. If government Members were really serious about solving the problem of the deficit, they would collect the damned deferred taxes. There is some $24 billion to $26 billion sitting out there. Will they ever do that? No. Will they ever collect that money? No, because these taxes are essentially written off.

We return to the statement made by the bishops. The bishops asked a very good question. They said:

Yet, there are no clear reasons to believe that working people will ever really benefit from these and other sacrifices they are called to make. For even if companies recover and increase their profit margins, the additional revenues are likely to be reinvested in more labour-saving technology, exported to other countries, or spent on market speculation or luxury goods.

Are the bishops speaking through their hats or are they serious? Do they have some facts and figures behind them? I believe that they do have some facts and figures behind them.

Let us look again at some of the facts and figures regarding these tax breaks. We find that the studies that have been done show that the companies that received the most tax breaks are in fact the ones that have the worst record of creating employment. Many of these tax breaks are justified by the statement that they will create jobs. Government Members say that we must allow these companies to earn more profits so that they can plough this back into the economy through new investment, and then the new investment will create more jobs. This is called the trickle-down notion. Put in another way which the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) will well understand, if one feeds the horse a lot of oats, eventually the sparrow will get some. However, I am sure the Hon. Member for Bow River knows that he is not to step in it. I am afraid that the Government of this country has stepped in it and has it all over its shoes. The unfortunate part is that that is something with which we must all live.

The trickle-down notion has not worked. It has not created jobs. Let us look at some of the figures to back this up. Again, I am reading from the January 1985 issue of Canadian Business, a document which is not a flaming socialist document.

> Government figures show that companies that reap the most tax benefits give back the least in job creation. While the small-business sector is now creating 100 per cent of new jobs in Canada, the big-business sector (firms with taxable incomes of more than $5 million) has taken advantage of 77 per cent of the $26 billion in corporate tax breaks. Furthermore, while total corporate writeoffs grew an average of 84 per cent between 1975 and 1980, they escalated by 360 per cent for the top 1 per cent of corporations.

Again, we find that the guys who are getting all the breaks are not giving any breaks to the working people of the country. They are not creating the jobs. What gives? It is not the small-business sector that is getting the tax breaks. In fact, its real tax rate in 1977 was 22.6 per cent, while the tax rate of the big-business sector was only 18.2 per cent. In 1981, things had not changed that much. The effective tax rate of the small-business sector that year was 22.3 per cent. It is the small guys who are creating the jobs but it is the big guys who are getting all the tax breaks.

If government Members were really serious about creating some economic justice in this country and if they were really serious about reducing the deficit, they would attack the big guys. Why do they not go after the revenue that exists out there? These are the folks who made billions of dollars off the wealth of the country. Make them pay for it. Do those across the way dare to do so? I doubt it. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that whoever pays the piper calls the tune. Who made all their political contributions and donations during the last election campaign? Government Members would not for the life of you, Mr. Speaker, bite the hand that fed them. After all, they are beholden to the oil companies, the banks and the people who get these tax deferrals and fast write-offs and who end up paying only some 14.3 per cent in an effective corporate tax rate.

Mr. Reimer: That's nonsense.

Mr. de Jong: The Hon. Member says that that is nonsense. What other rationale is there?

Let me return to the statement made by the bishops. From what I have read into the record, the bishops are essentially saying that the rhetoric of the right that sees that increasing profitability is to be the engine for economic recovery and growth is something that will not work and that has not worked. I believe that we can back the bishops up in that assertion with the statistics and facts that I have outlined to the House.

The big guys who get all the tax breaks do not in fact create the jobs. The bishops say that big business does not put the extra wealth it gets from tax breaks into creating jobs and that much of it is invested abroad. Again, there are figures to back this up. In the last few years, the amounts of money invested abroad have increased. From 1979 to 1983, an average of $3,688,000,000 was invested outside the country, whereas between 1974 and 1978, an average of $675 million was invested outside the country. That is an increase of some 646 per cent. We are seeing where the money goes.

As well, we can see that a great deal of this extra money that is received from tax write-offs and tax breaks goes into mergers. Again in the last few years, there has been a tremendous increase in mergers. An average of $520 million per year was spent on mergers between 1979 and 1983. This can be compared to the earlier 1970s. From 1974 to 1978, an average of only $343 million per year was spent on mergers. This extra wealth is not creating jobs. It is being invested outside Canada or it is being put into mergers.

Again, let me return to the statement made by the bishops. They said:

> There is nothing "normal" or "natural" about present unemployment rates. Indeed, massive unemployment which deprives people of the dignity of human work and an adequate family income, constitutes a social evil. It is also a major economic problem since high unemployment rates are accompanied by lower productivity, lower consumption of products, reduced public revenues, and increasing social welfare costs. Thus, alternative strategies are required which place primary emphasis on the goals of combatting unemployment by stimulating production and permanent job creation in basic industries; developing a more balanced and equitable program for curbing inflation; and maintaining health care, social security, and special assistance programs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I sense that there is a point of order on the question of time.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to speak briefly to this motion. I believe I have only two minutes left. I simply want to say that the level of the public debt is the aspect of the economic situation on which the motion is focused. In his motion, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) quite properly describes it as a massive debt. The level of the debt is very high. It is a heavy burden on the Government, leaving it with precious little manoeuvering room for the soundest possible management of its financial operations. It does hamper all economic activities. Hopefully, the Hon. Member for Halifax West does not believe that his proposition differs considerably from the existing legislative provision. I hope to show, or I would have hoped to show—

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, is this a point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, it is not a point of order. The point of order was the matter of time. The Hon. Member's time had expired. The Parliamentary Secretary is speaking on debate.

Mr. de Jong: I distinctly recall looking at the clock and I began speaking when it was 20 to six, Mr. Speaker.

• (1800)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am told by the Table that the Hon. Member started to speak at 5.39 o'clock.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I would like to request the unanimous consent of the House to finish my remarks.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. de Jong: You guys are not very nice or polite.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That has taken care of the last minute. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—UNEMPLOYMENT RATE LEVELS—REQUEST THAT BUDGET BE INTRODUCED. (B) CHALLENGE '85—WAGE SUBSIDY COMPONENT. (C) UNEMPLOYMENT IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on February 8, 1985, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a question concerning the unemployment situation in Canada, not only with respect to Canada as a whole, but with respect to unemployment in the different regions across Canada. It should be noted that in January, 1985, despite the rhetoric of the Minister of Finance and other senior Ministers, an additional 167,000 Canadians were added to the unemployment rolls. Certainly, that does not speak very well for the Government's policy with respect to reducing unemployment, and creating wealth and economic opportunities for Canadians.

The Minister of Finance said that he needed more time to introduce a Budget when I posed the question. I cannot understand why the Minister is waiting any longer. When I asked the question, the Minister of Finance stated, as reported at page 2144 of Hansard:

> The Budget will come after we have had the opportunity to discuss with the First Ministers, next week in Regina, the ideas which they have on economic policy and which they feel should be reflected in our Budget; and also after the national economic conference.

Well, both of those events have been completed and, indeed, some of the participants have alluded that they were successful both in Regina and Ottawa. I believe that the Minister of Finance, in a very deceitful way, is reluctant to place the Budget before the Parliament of Canada before the election takes place in the Province of Ontario. There must be serious consideration given to the motives of the Minister of Finance for not being forthcoming in putting a Budget before the Parliament of Canada.

The youth unemployment rate in Canada is in excess of 15 per cent. I believe that to be totally unacceptable. It is unacceptable to Her Majesty's Official Opposition, Canadians throughout Canada and those young Canadians in the various regions of Canada who want an opportunity to participate fully. Let me quote what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said when he was Leader of the Opposition at an East Pictou high school in Nova Scotia, adding insult to injury. The Prime Minister was speaking about youth in Canada and he said:

> You are our most priceless possession—thoughtful and intelligent youth.

What has the Conservative Government done for young people in this country? I would suggest that it has done absolutely nothing to assist young Canadians, whether they live in Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, western Canada or, indeed, the North, in terms of improving employment opportunities.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) had the audacity to come before the House of Commons and suggest that wage subsidies were the answer for creating employment opportunities for young people. That is utter nonsense. As of today, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has studies on her desk which unequivocally show that wage subsidy programs do not assist the young Canadians who live in the poor regions of Canada. Second, 60 per cent of those jobs would be created anyway with or without wage subsidy programs being initiated by the Government of Canada.

We need a long-term, thoughtful and meaningful strategy to attack unemployment in Canada. There is no strategy. The Government has adopted the buzz-words and the rhetoric used by the President of the United States, that somehow the private sector will create all the jobs that are needed in this country.

We have heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration stand in her place and say that she had commitments from some major Canadian companies on summer employment. Only 24 hours later that was denied by the private sector. Yes, they want to create wealth and jobs but they cannot do it alone. But this Government is acting on the basis of Voodoo economics, just as the U.S. did.

I suggest the Government is being less than candid with the people of Canada. The Western Accord! What a sham. We are giving $1.3 billion to the multinational oil companies but the Government cannot provide $13.5 million to the Maritime Farmers Council who are in desperate need of emergency funding. Shame on this Government. It refuses to table in this House an impact study in relation to the statement by the Minister of Finance in November of 1984. The Government refuses to tell us whether or not it has done such a study regarding changes in unemployment insurance. But then the Minister goes outside of the House of Commons and says to the press, "no, I think it's the responsibility of the Minister of Finance". He in turn says he thinks it is the responsibility of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. So much for the compassion and concern echoed during the federal election campaign regarding poor Canadians.

I say the Government of Brian Mulroney will come to its day of reckoning during the next federal election. It will be voted out of office because it is not coming forward with policies which will decrease unemployment in Canada. If anything, the Government has added substantially to the unemployment rolls in this country, whether it be because of the vicious cuts in the CBC, which the Parliamentary Secretary has aided and abetted, or whether it be the refusal to give money to Atlantic Canadians, or come clean regarding a gas tax. Shame on the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the statement to the effect that 167,000 more Canadians are now unemployed as compared to the previous month is based on a comparison between non-seasonally adjusted figures of January 1985 and those for December 1984. As a rule, employment figures are inflated in December as a result of temporary jobs created to meet rising consumer demand during the Christmas season.

Adjusted figures taking such seasonal factors into account do reveal, unfortunately, that the number of unemployed increased from December 1984 to January 1985, but by only 44,000 or roughly 25 per cent of the alleged increase.

An overview of statistics on gainfully employed manpower shows that 84,000 permanent jobs have been created since this Government was elected.

In early November, the Government unveiled a new strategy, a program of economic recovery. The main thrust of that strategy was: (a) to tidy up public finance; (b) to redefine the role of Government which is to create a better environment for growth and job creation; (c) to enact policies conducive to increased investment, stimulated innovation and enhanced international competitivity, and to the development of a climate suitable for the establishment and growth of new businesses; (d) to implement such changes in a way that will be fair, open and in line with the basic spirit of compassion, tolerance and justice inherent to our Canadian society.

Over the last three months, that strategy has been followed by the Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) met with his counterparts in Montreal in January. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met on February 14 and 15 with his counterparts in Regina. And ten days or so ago, the National Conference on the Economy was held. All that was aimed at giving Canadians an opportunity to put forward the ideas they have on economic policy and which they would like in fact to be reflected in the budget. The Government will introduce a budget only after open and complete discussion and consultation.

In the meantime, the Government has announced a number of initiatives for job creation. Firstly, there was "Challenge '85", an array of summer employment programs with a total funding of some $205 million, which stresses the private sector's role in providing summer employment related to the field of studies of the applicants. Secondly, the Prime Minister announced in Regina that, in addition to the $1.2 billion already announced for employment and manpower training programs, the Government will add: an extra $125 million to facilitate the integration of young people and women in the labour market; an extra $350 million to improve employment opportunities for the chronically unemployed, the greater part of these funds being earmarked for joint programs with the Provinces; an extra $80 million to allow workers, especially those affected by technological changes, to acquire the needed skills; an extra $40 million to create opportunities for workers in regressing communities; $100 million to promote innovation, pilot projects and new experiments.

Consultation with the Provinces and the private sector over the next few weeks will ensure an immediate and concerted implementation of the new 1985-86 initiatives.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS. (B) NATURE OF CONSULTATIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party promised to consult with the cultural community on its cultural policy. The Government has now chosen to ignore this promise as it has ignored so many others. Instead of consulting, the Government has mercilessly and abruptly changed its cultural policy. It has cut $85 million from the CBC budget, $10 million for equipment and $75 million for programming.

The Government should not say the cutbacks will be at the discretion of CBC management, because that is just not possible. We hear rumours of funds being wasted by the CBC, but let us not exaggerate. The CBC is responsible for two television networks, the French and the English network, AM and FM radio in both official languages, the Northern Service, including native languages, and the International Service. It is a task vaster and more complex than that of other national services like the British Broadcasting Corporation.

As far as consultation goes, the Minister has failed utterly. He recently started to meet with groups from the arts community, but only after there had been a violent reaction to his new policy. And even then, he is explaining or defending his budgetary cutbacks instead of providing for genuine consultation.

[English]

The English speaking people of Canada feel even more threatened by the Minister's cut-backs and his failure to consult because English Canadians are more vulnerable to American cultural take-over. It is significant that it took an advertisement in The Globe and Mail for concerned Canadians to get a hearing from the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). It is appalling that Canadians have to take out an advertisement in a newspaper to communicate with the Minister of Communications. Still he lectures rather than listens. When the arts lobby came to Ottawa on March 20 the Prime Minister refused to meet with it.

I do not want to make an unqualified defence of the CBC. Defending the CBC is like hugging a porcupine. Not only is it difficult, but you sometimes wonder why you do it at all. The CBC itself fails to consult. It acts a lot like the Minister of Communications. It is very poor in its treatment of women; its own employees and women in news and public affairs. It spends a lot of time and money fighting its own employees. I think of the case of the—

—Syndicat des employés de production du Québec et de l'Acadie—

[English]

—to name only one. It is top heavy in management and there have not been cut-backs in vice-presidents. Unions which have proposed economy measures have been told to mind their own business.

The CBC's mandate does need reviewing. We should have an open inquiry. We should understand that there are a lot of people who have constructive proposals to make, and they should have an opportunity to make them. The CBC is wasteful, but a major audit of the CBC, the McKinsey report, concluded that in operating in two official languages covering widely dispersed geography, the CBC faced more difficult and costly broadcasting challenges than any other public broadcasters. Yet it is substantially more efficient than other public broadcasters, as measured by hours of programming per employee and per dollar expended. CBC funding has decreased in the last seven years in real terms, but it has produced 300 hours of new programming in that period. Seventy per cent of its budget goes into programming, compared with 40 per cent in private broadcasting. The CBC provides more prime time Canadian television than CTV and Global combined.

● (1815)

The CBC is doing its job. If we replace it with the private sector, we would have less Canadian programming at higher cost. Unfortunately, it does not do enough in prime time in drama and entertainment and needs more money to do so. The audiences are there, as shown when the CBC is able to do a good job and put money into programs. It receives audiences from one million to two million for Canadian shows.

If the Minister had consulted, he would see what the surveys are showing; that people do want more Canadian programming. Features like "Charlie Grants' War" and "Chautauqua Girl" will be less possible after these cut-backs. There will be less arts coverage and the arts community depends vitally on the CBC. For example, arts directors of theatres cannot travel to see new productions in other parts of the country. They depend on the CBC to be that means of communication. Less of that will happen as a result of the cut-backs.

There have been cuts in parliamentary coverage. Of course, the need to improve drama and increase children's programs will not be met. It is not just the loss of jobs for CBC employees, the independents are hurt as well because they contract with the CBC. Regional centers such as Gander, Labrador City, Moncton, Rimouski, Vancouver and Winnipeg have been badly hit by the cut-backs.

Despite this criticism of the CBC and the mistakes it has made, it produces many good shows and the best television and radio in the country. I am sorry that the equivalent praise cannot be given to the Minister of Communications. The Minister needs to consult the cultural community. He does not know how fortunate he is and how fortunate we are with the quality and dedication of the Canadian cultural community. I hope he will begin the real task of talking with them, meeting with them and reflecting on what they have to say so that he may come forward with a constructive, independent Canadian cultural policy.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I could spend the next 40 minutes both debating and applauding many of the points raised by the Hon. Member. I think we should note at the outset that the Minister has stated that the promises the Government has made and he has made will be met during our four-year mandate. We are only six or seven months into that mandate.

I share the concern that the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) expresses when she raises the question of the budgetary reduction in relation to the people who have jobs at the CBC and are concerned about their future. It is for the sake of CBC employees that I deplore the rumours and erroneous reports about alleged decisions having been made which would affect their employment. Given the complexity of the task and the inevitable review as far back as June last year of different options by CBC, any decisions attributed to the CBC would, of course, not be official unless formally announced by the Corporation.

Following the Government's announcement of budget reductions for the CBC and other publicly funded organizations, the Minister expressed the hope that the Corporation could manage the reduction in funding so as to minimize the negative impact on programming. The President of the CBC subsequently announced on December 11, 1984, that the CBC will accomplish the greater part of this reduction through attrition, early retirement and lay-offs. In this regard, the Minister announced in the House his approval of the CBCs request for amendments to its pension plan. The amendments will facilitate early retirement and should minimize the loss of jobs.

The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood also knows that the Minister of Communications requested the CBC to attempt to make the reductions primarily in administrative areas. In this regard, the Minister requested that the Corporation attempt to manage the cuts so as to minimize the negative impact on Canadian producers, creators and artists whose development the Government intends to encourage. The objective is to ensure that the public resources now devoted to support of artistic and journalistic expression are employed in the most effective manner possible and that the budgetary restrictions do not jeopardize the federal Government's investment in the cultural development of the nation.

Regarding consultations, the Minister specified that they take place with due regard for the respective responsibilities of the Minister of Communications and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and possible infringement on their respective mandates. The Hon. Member may be interested to know that only this morning all four Windsor area Members of Parliament representing each of the three political parties—two from the New Democratic Party—met with my Minister and me on the unique effect of the cut-backs in Windsor. That consultation is indeed going on.

We hope the CBC will be as effective in its use of public funds as it is creative in its programming.

In closing, I hope the Hon. Member shares my confidence that the fiscal restraint program as it affects the CBC and its employees will be managed by the Corporation with due consideration for personnel and will encourage the utmost use of the employees' creative talents and skills.

THE ADMINISTRATION—GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS—REMUNERATION LEVELS. (B) EXTERNAL AID—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in this House on March 26, 1985, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) how he could rationalize a salary increase to two Conservative appointees while at the same time everyone else in this country was asked to tighten his or her belt.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that day I asked the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) why the salary of Mr. Roy McMurtry, our High Commissioner in London, had been increased and he was now receiving $105,000 per year, when his predecessor was getting only $75,000. I also asked how he could explain that Mr. Lawrence Hanigan, the defeated Conservative candidate in the riding of Laval-des-Rapides, who has now been appointed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), or should I say rewarded for having played the sacrificial lamb in the election, running against my hon. friend from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), I therefore asked what justification there was for paying Mr. Hannigan a salary of $135,000 for being the head of VIA Rail.

Mr. Speaker, I asked these questions in the light of the budgetary cutbacks that were made in this country.

[English]

I want to remind you and the House, Mr. Speaker, that on November 8, 1984, many programs were cut that affect people in my constituency. Two in particular come to mind at this time and I would like to draw them to your attention, Sir.

There was a $6.2 million cut-back in dairy programs involving the subsidy going to dairy farmers in my riding and elsewhere. The farmers in my constituency could not, and still cannot afford this kind of cut-back. There were also increases of $32.3 million in what the Government has called cost recoveries in agriculture. These cost recoveries are nothing less than a tax on such things as agricultural inspection of farm products. The farmers in my riding cannot afford that. The people in my riding now have to do with less than what they had before this Government came to power.

Do defeated Tory candidates have to do with less? No, Mr. Speaker. It is almost enough, as I said previously today, for the elected backbenchers of the Conservative Party to make them wish they had been defeated so they too could earn $135,000, like their colleagues, Mr. Lawrence Hannigan and Mr. Roy McMurtry.

This is particularly hypocritical in view of the comments made by the Leader of the Conservative Party during the election campaign. Let me read you a few of the commitments he made to show just how much certain commitments detract from each other.

In The Globe and Mail for May 24, 1983, the Leader of the Conservative Party probably best expressed his views on political patronage when he was reported to have said, "There will be jobs for Liberals and NDPs too after I have been Prime Minister for 15 years and I can't find a living, breathing Tory in the country". On July 16, 1984, the new converted Leader of the Conservative Party called the Liberal appointments "a fraud, a deceit, and a sham". Also on July 16 he was quoted as having told the press that the Conservative Party would only make appointments of the highest quality of people. Where is this high quality?

● (1825)

The Government hired an individual to run VIA Rail at $135,000 per year who had been in charge of the Montreal Urban Transit Commission which had 20 strikes in 10 years, one of the worst records in labour-management relations. By coincidence, this person was a defeated Conservative candidate. He was given a large salary, larger than what most people in my riding make in a year, in order to run VIA Rail. Not only that, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs told us that Mr. Hannigan received a salary increase because he had increased responsibility. If his predecessor was in charge of running VIA Rail and this gentleman is now in charge of running VIA Rail, how can his responsibility be increased? They were both in charge of VIA Rail.

The answers given in the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in terms of the running of VIA Rail by Mr. Hannigan and in terms of the salary increases given to him and Mr. McMurtry were totally unsatisfactory. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary can give us something resembling a satisfactory explanation for this extravagance on the part of the Government.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised the Hon. Member has again raised the question of remuneration levels for the positions and individuals in question. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) raised this question last week. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) noted that the level of remuneration for Canada's High Commissioner to Great Britain was the same as that of our Ambassador to France. I do not need to remind the Hon. Member of the tremendous importance this country places upon our relationship with Great Britain and the Comonwealth. I do not need to remind him that this is traditionally one of the most senior diplomatic appointments Canada makes.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, as Acting Prime Minister, was equally clear in explaining the position of chairmanship of VIA Rail. There is a greater degree of responsibility within the corporation than was the case before. The Hon. Member might refer to the press release dated February 5 in which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) announced the appointment of the new VIA Rail chairman. At that time the Minister of Transport made clear that the responsibilities of the new chairman for the long-range planning of the corporation would be increased. He used the example of the Air Canada organization in which the chairman and the president share responsibility.

As a part of the Government's commitment to ensure better administration of Crown corporations, which was so badly needed, particularly in the transportation sector, we have undertaken various administrative changes. It is the greater responsiblity which will be carried by the new chairman of VIA Rail and no other aspect of this appointment that influenced the determination of his remuneration level.

I assure the Hon. Member that the Government will continue the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to attract individuals of the highest calibre to positions of service both within Canada and abroad. I do not think I have to remind the Hon. Member again of people like Stephen Lewis, our Ambassador to the United Nations; Douglas Roche, our Disarmament Ambassador; Lloyd Francis in Portugal; and Sylvia Gold at the Status of Women. We have begun a new era of appointment and changes with respect to all regions and all Parties of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, last summer, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was seeking a mandate for "jobs, jobs, jobs". He told Canadians that tens of thousands of jobs would be created as soon as his Cabinet was sworn in.

That was six months ago, and what do we have now? No subsidies, plants are closing down and thousands of jobs have been lost. The list of projects dropped by the Progressive Conservative Government is getting longer every day. In Quebec, the situation is disastrous. People are afraid to read the paper because another plant might be about to close its doors, leading to more unemployment, as was the case with Melchers, Domtar, Wabasso, Oxysynthèse, the Sherbrooke Mapping Institute and eleven plants in the Eastern Townships.

I wonder why Progressive Conservative Members, including those from Quebec, rise in the House to applaud the Prime Minister every time he smiles. From the back benches it sometimes looks like a Muppet Show.

[English]

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it seems that nobody wants the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) any more. Liberals in Quebec do not want him. Just yesterday, Quebec Liberal Leader Robert Bourassa said, "Thanks, but no thanks" to his offer of active support in the next Quebec election. It would seem that the Leader of the Quebec Liberals would rather lunch with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) than with the Leader of the national Liberal Party.

Now it seems, Mr. Speaker, that even you are about to give the Liberal Leader the old heave ho. Today, Nicole Bosley was quoted in the press as saying that the right hon. gentleman has overstayed his welcome at Kingsmere, the official residence of the Speaker of the House of Commons. "It's a matter of being firm and putting your foot down", she said. She went on to say that she wants you to tell the Leader of the Opposition: "Please leave, Mr. Turner. We have been very patient".

But wait, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition has said that he cannot move into Stornoway until yet another round of renovations is completed. The Department of Public Works yesterday released figures to show that these renovations ordered by the Leader of the Opposition and his wife are going to cost the Canadian taxpayers over $500,000; including $85,000 for a new kitchen, $31,750 for new wallpaper and paint, $112,210 for new woodwork, and $600 for a closet for their silver. Perhaps someone should tell the Right Hon. Member that he is moving into Stornoway and not Buckingham Palace.

Perhaps we could all take up a collection for the Leader of the Opposition so that he could afford to move into temporary lodgings—maybe the Holiday Inn. If he cannot afford that, perhaps we would consider buying a tent and setting it up on the front lawn of the Parliament Buildings. Then he might at least learn some humility.

I can only hope that all those people who are unemployed across Canada are watching today and can see how the Leader of the Liberal Party is spending their money.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF YALTA AGREEMENT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, on March 24 an American officer, Major Arthur Nicholson, was shot in East Germany by a Soviet soldier. With this in mind, we must reflect on the Yalta Agreement made 40 years ago. This agreement resulted in the division of Europe into two hostile blocs. It set the stage for the cold war and marked the beginning of mounting tension in Europe.

The only thing this agreement achieved was a spread of communism world-wide, and 40 years of military threat. As this House is aware, we still have no security in Europe; great armies still face one another; Germany remains divided, and 125 million Eastern Europeans still face a life of Soviet domination.

As a free nation, we must recognize and encourage the Soviet Union to cease the continued denial of self determination and sovereign independence to so many historic European nations. That is a basic right laid down by the United Nations.

S.O. 21

We must also encourage the participants in the Yalta Agreement to recognize and repudiate that agreement and then, can the 40 years of unjustice cease? At that time we might begin to see the beginning of a new era, an era of true peace in the world, without tension, where nations are truly free.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—APPOINTMENT OF FORMER ONTARIO PREMIER AS CANADIAN ENVOY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the appointment last month of the Hon. William Davis as special envoy for acid rain abatement is welcome news for the people of Canada. I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has demonstrated environmental concern and wisdom by naming the former Premier of Ontario to this important position. Mr. Davis has the high profile and sterling reputation needed to confer with officials in the United States.

As the Chairman of the new Subcommittee on Acid Rain, I hope Mr. Davis will meet with us in Ottawa in the near future to create a unified front. Acid rain negotiations with the United States require a great deal of diplomacy and tact, and our country now has the ideal vehicle for that purpose.

The appointment of Bill Davis as envoy is further proof that the Government is waging war against acid precipitation. In fact this Government has done more for our environment in the past two months than others accomplished in their entire terms. Never in the history of Canada has so much been done to achieve acid rain abatement. We welcome Bill Davis as an integral part of our contemporary program to save the environment.

The priorities before the Government are clear cut. The future will not control us; we will control the future.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been appointing a Tory every three hours since it came to power on September 4. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) keeps telling Canadians that he is proud of his appointments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I can see that Conservative Members of the House seem to be equally as proud. If the Prime Minister is so proud, why does he always wait to make his deluge of appointments on the last hour, late on Friday afternoon, when there is no one left in Parliament Buildings except the person who is issuing the press releases?

Can we expect the Prime Minister to announce another deluge of appointments tomorrow afternoon, that the Easter Bunny will lay yet another golden egg, and that Tory faithful who have been patiently waiting in line to get to the trough will be able to "oink" with joy after getting their promised appointments?

COMMUNICATIONS

BROADCASTING POLICY REVIEW

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, before returning to our ridings some of us will have the opportunity to attend the ACTRA Awards tonight, the only cultural awards in the world named after the creative people themselves, through their union, ACTRA.

Yet, with the Government's cut-back approach to cultural expenditure, especially for the CBC, we must wonder how many excellent programs will be produced next year.

The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) will be announcing his broadcasting policy review next week when the House is not sitting.

As arts and culture critic for the NDP caucus, I share the concern of the arts community, and indeed of a considerable cross-section of the Canadian public, that this review be genuinely open to public participation; include men and women of vision and knowledgeable of broadcasting, from all political Parties and regions, in both official languages; and invite the participation of the creative community, individually and through their unions and professional associations. This review should consider ways to stimulate and require more quality Canadian programming in the private networks and stations, address the real funding needs of the CBC, especially for long term planning, and consider the desirability of moving to commercial-free public broadcasting.

Excellence in broadcasting requires excellence in funding; our artists have had too excellent an acquaintance with poverty for too long. The Government must realize that the arts community will be judging the Government's performance, its excellence or otherwise, in May when it brings down its first Budget.

TERRORISM

ARMENIAN COMMUNITY'S CONDEMNATION OF TORONTO BOMBING THREAT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak out in support of the Armenian community of Canada. They are 50,000 strong, and are making a real contribution to the growth of our country.

The abhorrent bomb threat in Toronto earlier this week deeply disturbed and outraged the Armenian community. They joined their fellow Canadians in condemning such cowardly and inhumane threats. As the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) reminded Members of this House on Monday of this week, the leaders of the Armenian community have offered a $25,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the individuals responsible.

I have had the opportunity to get to know many men, women, and children in the Armenian community. They are Canadians first, because they have chosen to live in this great country, but they also have a rich cultural heritage and are justifiably proud of their roots. So I know, Mr. Speaker, Canadians will want to join me in prayerfully supporting members of this fine community of Canada during this their critical period of need.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—ANTICIPATED BENEFITS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, our Government's agreement with the western oil producing provinces, the Western Accord, is good for Canada, good for the Province of Ontario, and good for my riding of York East.

The Western Accord has two key elements. First, by eliminating a number of federal oil and gas taxes, including the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, the Petroleum Compensation Charge, and the Canadian Ownership Special Charge, the cost of gasoline at the fuel pumps should fall and consumers should reap the benefit of lower prices. Second, it is designed to stimulate investment and create jobs, hopefully some 225,000 jobs by 1990. Many of those jobs will be created right in my own riding of York East because there are some 63 companies in my riding that supply the petroleum industry.

The main concern of Canadians is jobs. The best way to stimulate investment and create jobs is by cutting taxes, and that is exactly what the Western Accord does.

TOURISM

GOVERNMENT'S ROLE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, only a few days ago, the Quebec Minister of Tourism criticized the attitude taken by the federal Minister of Tourism (Mr. McMillan).

According to the Quebec Minister, "Mr. McMillan's visit to Quebec is inappropriate and constitutes an intrusion in our tourism milieu." He also said that the report Tourism Tomorrow is based on incorrect data and fails to consider Quebec's unique characteristics as far as tourism is concerned. This implies that the federal Minister, who for weeks has been talking about consultation and nothing else, forgot to consult the provincial Ministers before publishing his controversial report on tomorrow's tourism.

In addition to telling the provinces and the tourist industry that they had been doing it all wrong in recent years, in addition to giving an extremely negative picture of the present situation in the tourist industry in Canada, and ignoring the agreements concluded at the Moncton meeting which provided that federal strategies on tourism were to complement measures taken by the provinces, in addition to all that, the Minister has started unilateral consultations.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government's role is not to destroy what has been built up but to give the tourist industry the means to develop its potential.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

GOVERNMENT POSITION—ECONOMIC BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention an historic event highlighting relations between the Governments of Canada and Quebec, the first agreement ever between the two Governments specifically concerning the development of cultural facilities.

Canada's Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has announced a $20 million contribution to cultural endeavours, namely the expansion of the Museum of Fine Arts, and the establishment of a cinema and television international city. This agreement stems from the Progressive Conservative Government's consultation and concertation process, and is a concrete measure inspired by confidence and reconciliation.

Agreements with the provinces will henceforth be possible because our Government does not act unilaterally. The proposed expansion of Montreal's Museum of Fine Arts will make it a world-wide attraction, therefore the most important institution of its kind in Canada.

The development of those two cultural institutions is very likely to have significant economic benefits.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FUTURE OF NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, since February 4 I have been very involved with a broadly-based community group trying to reverse the arbitrary decision by Canada Post to close the National Postal Museum. I regret that for two months our efforts to gain Canada Post's co-operation have been rebuffed. Today, however, we held a constructive meeting with Judge Rene Marin, Chairman of Canada Post. Our group included Mayor Marion Dewar and Alderman Holmes of the City of Ottawa, Shirley Carr and Ron Lang of the Canadian Labour Congress, the President of the Royal Philatelic Society of Canada, and Mr. Ian Kimmerley, a well-known stamp dealer and journalist.

A number of positive decisions have come from this meeting, although Canada Post was not prepared to reconsider its decision concerning the 14 museum employees whose lay-off notices expire May 2.

The City, Canada Post, the NCC and the Department of Public Works will meet to talk about potential sites for the National Postal Museum. Our group, hopefully with the participation of Canada Post, will seek to meet with you, Mr. Speaker, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to try to continue the National Postal Museum in its present location until permanent quarters are found. We will meet again with Judge Marin in a month.

The attendance at this meeting is a sign of the broad public support which is developing for the National Postal Museum. I urge the Government and Canada Post to respond to that display of public support. I hope my fellow Members of Parliament and you, Mr. Speaker, will co-operate to see whether we can keep the National Postal Museum on Wellington Street just long enough until it can move into new, permanent quarters.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—IMPACT ON CANADIAN OIL COMPANIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The oil agreement does not set a target date for bringing Canadian ownership up to 50 per cent. Why are the interests of foreign-controlled companies more important than those of companies controlled by Canadians? Why have specific benefits previously available to Canadian oil companies disappeared from the new oil accord?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first let me point out a distortion in the House yesterday. Since then, Duncan Allan, the Deputy Minister of Energy of Ontario, says that his position was distorted, that the position is that the Accord offers great potential for Ontario, indeed for all of Canada, not only in lower oil and gas prices for the consumers in this province—

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —but in the investment and industrial activity that will subsequently flow. There is nothing in that agreement—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Minister is not answering the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that can be said to be adverse to Ontario's interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In specific response to the—

Mr. Boudria: What is he going to be appointed to over the weekend?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Give us a chance. In response to the specific question of the Leader of the Opposition, he will note that there is a provision whereby Canadian exploration and Canadian development expenses of companies can be applied against the PGRT in the event that they do not have taxable income. As the Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, Canadian companies are the ones which do not normally have taxable income, so they will benefit very clearly by this provision in the energy agreement.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP ISSUE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Your Honour will note that the Minister bootlegged in a statement which he wanted to make that had nothing to do with the question. I have known Duncan Allan a long time, and I am sure he must have had his arm twisted right out of his socket this morning to get that particular answer for the Minister. I take the initial reaction of the Deputy Minister of Energy for Ontario when he spoke spontaneously in reaction to this oil deal.

Let me pursue the matter further. Article 7 of the oil deal gives no preference at all to the Canadianization elements of the former National Energy Program, nor does it move toward 50 per cent ownership of the oil and gas industry. Why is it that this particular deal sacrifices the primary interest of the independent Canadian oil industry to the multinationals?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first might I ask whether the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is saying that Duncan Allan is not an honourable man, that he is—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, no.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —being forced to say things that he doesn't agree with? He was misquoted, and now he has stated very clearly the position that he was going to take.

In response to the question of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, this Party needs no lessons in Canadianization. It was in 1977 that the Conservative Opposition stated as a specific objective of its energy policy that it wanted to see 50 per cent of the industry owned by Canadian companies. That is a policy that we stand by. This energy accord fully supports that. As my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has said on many occasions, we are committed to achieving that.

● (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CREATION OF JOBS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a reading of that oil deal, that is not what it says. I can understand Mr. Allan having one isolated quote misinterpreted, but not a whole column of a story in The Toronto Star.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Not a whole column.

Perhaps the Minister of Finance, in his bootlegging mood, would like to explain to the House where the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources got that alleged list of jobs that were going to flow from this agreement. She cited from it spontaneously. Is that list going to be tabled in the House? Will the Minister table that, or has that list mysteriously disappeared to save the credibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? More than that, have the studies that his own Department is making on how consumer taxes ought to be placed on gasoline at the pump in order to make up the difference lost by the Treasury as a result of this oil deal to the multinational companies mysteriously disappeared, to preserve the honour of the Government of Ontario?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, surely the Right Hon. Member is not reading just The Toronto Star for this type of information. Surely he understands that there are other objective sources of information than one column in The Toronto Star. Let me read to him from the Economic Council, surely a very objective observer:

> The impact of deregulating oil and natural gas prices without other changes in taxation or royalties was simulated. Based on this assessment, we concluded that as many as 100,000 jobs might be created. The Council also simulated various possible tax changes.

It goes on to say:

> It is difficult to make precise comparisons, but it is well known that tax cuts usually have a stimulative effect.

In other words, it is saying that there are more than 100,000 jobs that were referred to in the previous work.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How about the 300 and 225?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Maybe the 300 and 225 will be there as a result of the agreement. This did not take account of the agreement that was signed last week. This only called for 100,000 jobs. If the Right Hon. Member is patient, maybe we will serve him up the 100,000 or 200,000 jobs more than this.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LITTON SYSTEMS ADVERTISEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister and sometimes Minister of Defence. Today in the daily newspapers around Canada, the Prime Minister is sharing top billing with a major defence contractor, extolling the vitues of increased defence expenditures for job creation. Furthermore, this defence contractor is presently in the bidding for a major defence contract. We would all understand and agree that not only is it improper for the Prime Minister to be lending his support to a company that is presently bidding for a contract, but it is a terribly insensitive act at a time when many Canadians are concerned about the proposed involvement of the Government in research in the star wars program of the United States.

Did the Prime Minister know about this ad? Did he or anybody in his office give approval for this ad to appear? In fact, is this ad part of a government program to get the defence industry to promote its interest in getting more heavily involved in defence contract work with the United States?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Did you ask that kind of question in the State Legislature in Florida?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say how happy I am to see the Hon. Member back in the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Tanned and fit.

Mr. Nielsen: Tanned at least. He looks a great deal healthier than I am.

● (1425)

In direct response to the Hon. Member's question, let me read to him a telegram from Ronald R. Keating, President of Litton Systems Canada Limited, which I received late this morning.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have been busy this morning.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, indeed I have. The telegram reads:

> This is to confirm that the advertisement placed by Litton in today's Globe and Mail and Ottawa Citizen was done without the permission or consent of the Prime Minister's Office or any of his staff.
> Yours truly, Ronald R. Keating.

BIDDING ON CONTRACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Minister I would say that I hope that he will take advantage of the next few days to acquire the same healthy point of view that I have been able to acquire in the last week or so.

Let me return to the point, because it is a serious matter. I think it reflects what is happening in the country as the Government moves toward its so-called economic stimulus through defence expenditure. Under this contract there is still a short list of some two to four bidders. Because this points toward a very clear conflict of interest and puts into jeopardy the whole process by which bidding on this contract would be decided, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the Government now intends to put on hold or freeze that contract until this can be examined by a parliamentary committee to determine the full facts of the case and the involvement of Litton Industries in this particular matter, a matter which creates a very serious conflict of interest.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is all wet. There has been no decision made with respect to the selection of the suppliers of the low-level air defence system. That decision will hopefully be made soon. Whenever it is made, it will be announced in the House of Commons.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S JOB-CREATION ESTIMATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the last few days the Minister of Energy has been busy trying to persuade the people of Canada that the energy Accord will create some 100,000 jobs.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Three hundred thousand.

Mr. Broadbent: At one point it was 100,000, and at another point it was 300,000. She is rather casual with her figures. The point is that the Minister cited the Economic Council of Canada as the source for the statement that 100,000 new jobs will be created. The director of that institution has taken the unusual step today of issuing a clarification of the Council's position. He points out that their job-creation estimate was based on deregulation of oil and gas. Since the Government has done nothing about deregulating gas, will the Minister of Finance rise and admit that the figure of 100,000 new jobs the Minister provided the House actually misled the House, based on the source of her own information?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: John Rodriguez for Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has stated, as is contained within the Accord, that the intention of the federal Government, working with the consuming and producing provinces, is to work very quickly toward the deregulation of natural gas. I do not know why the Hon. Member would not include that in the estimate made by the Minister. If the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party will read the same press release to which he has just referred, he will see that the work done by the Economic Council only refers to deregulating oil and natural gas prices without referring to other changes in taxation that have been called for by the energy agreement, changes in taxation which the Council goes on to say will clearly have a stimulative effect. If I can translate that for the Hon. Member, that means creating jobs. That is where we expect to see 100,000 to 300,000 jobs created—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FORECAST INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Director of the Economic Council of Canada covered himself nicely by including that hypothetical tax change that the Government might make. The entire country knows, but the Government will not admit, that we are going to have major tax increases after the Ontario election. That is what the Minister of Finance has not denied.

● (1430)

Since one of Canada's distinguished economists from the West Coast, Mr. John Helliwell, has estimated that the removal of the PGRT would produce a mere 15,000 jobs, on what does the Government actually base its job estimates? One time we hear the 100,000 figure, and another time we hear the 300,000 figure. Will the Minister of Finance, whose Department ought to have done an assessment, produce figures, show us on what those figures are based and, in short, come clean with the people of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants an objective source of information I can only refer him to the Economic Council of Canada which has established a base of 100,000 jobs. I would remind him that taxes were cut as a result of the agreement, the PGRT is going down and other taxes are being removed. The whole mess of regulatory morass which was put in place by the previous Government has been removed to give the industry the incentives to create jobs, reduce the level of unemployment in Alberta which is currently about 15 per cent, and spread the wealth right across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STUDY OF JOB CREATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has still not answered the question. He knows that the estimate of the Economic Council of Canada was based on the deregulation of gas, which is not yet in effect. It was not in effect yesterday when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources gave us her figures. Because the people of Canada are interested in fair prices on the one hand, and job creation on the other hand, I ask the Minister has his Department done a study on the job effects of the energy accord? If so, will he produce the figures? If not, will he quit making up fanciful figures to mislead the people of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not making up fanciful figures; I am relating the words of the Economic Council of Canada which reports to Parliament. If the Hon. Member wishes to press the Economic Council, maybe he should go across the street and get the Economic Council to produce its figures. From a range of studies which have been done by the industry and by objective observers—

Mr. Riis: Who are they?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —it is very clear that the jobs will be created. I would tell the Hon. Member that if he has a little patience he will see them created very soon.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—JOB-CREATION PREDICTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources first adopted the figure of the Canadian Petroleum Association which said that up to 300,000 jobs could be created in the energy sector. Then she adopted the figure of the Economic Council of Canada which indicated that as many as 100,000 jobs might be created. The Economic Council is now saying that it did not carry out simulations on the new oil and gas agreement. On what basis is the Government predicting the creation of even 100,000 jobs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member through it very carefully. First, the Economic Council said in its statement:

> —the impact of deregulating oil and natural gas prices, without other changes in taxation or royalties, was simulated. Based on this assessment, we concluded that as many as 100,000 jobs might be created.

The Economic Council further stated:

> —it is well known that tax cuts usually have a stimulative effect.

A number of tax reductions were made as a result of the energy agreement, plus a wide range of deadening regulations was removed. The combination of the 100,000 jobs which have been identified, plus the simulations which have been made, certainly put us in the ballpark figure. I make no apologies for doing something which creates 100,000 jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

JOB STUDIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, one would think that before the Government gave billions of dollars to the multinational oil companies it would at least do some studies on how many jobs would be created.

I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in December for the studies which were done by her Department, and I have not received anything. I do not feel that any studies were done. I ask the Minister of Finance were studies done? If those studies were done, will he table them in the House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have got a study here, I have got another study here, and all sorts of studies have been done by the industry as well as objective observers. Surely the Hon. Member can accept the range of 100,000 to 300,000 jobs. That's pretty good for a country which is suffering with 1,343,000 unemployed, primarily as a result of the legacy of the previous Government.

DEPARTMENTAL STUDY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I have obtained one of those studies from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, which is dated February, 1985. It was done by the macroeconomic division of the Department and is entitled Comments on Recent Macroeconomic Studies on the Impact of Oil and Gas Price and Tax Changes on Employment. In that study it states:

> Decontrol leads to higher employment in the ECC case but it is only temporary and most additional jobs appear to be in the non-energy sector. Moreover, the increase in jobs in the ECC simulation is mostly explained by a fall in energy prices.

Does the Minister of Finance have a copy of that study? Does he not agree that the study shows that there is some real doubt as to whether 100,000 jobs will be created? Does he think that the Economic Council of Canada is correct?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has identified one way of creating jobs, and that is by the drop which is expected in moving to world price, because there will be a downtrend in price. Surely the Hon. Member will agree that, if taxes are dropped, activity will be stimulated in the energy sector. As that activity is stimulated in western Canada, people will buy steel from Algoma, and Stelco in Hamilton, and the instrument companies in Kitchener and Orillia, and jobs will be created. It is the reverse of what has happened over the last few years, since 1980 when the National Energy Program came in and we saw a drop in energy activity.

REINVESTMENT BY OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is a straight shooter. He knows that John Helliwell is saying that if the Minister adds on taxes to make up for the deficit we will have a net job loss, not a net job increase.

Will the Minister come clean with Canadians? He has given a windfall to the oil companies, he has abandoned Canadianization, and he is trying to con the rest of us into believing that we will benefit from this. Has the Minister done any studies, or can he assure the House that giving $1.4 billion to the oil industry will mean that it will be reinvested in jobs, that no additional taxes will be placed on consumers, and the oil companies will not just take the money and run out of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has rolled a number of questions into one, all of which have been answered during the past two days. There is no question that we have not abandoned Canadianization. I responded to that specific question which was asked by the Leader of the Opposition. I responded very specifically last week to the impact which the energy accord would have on deregulation, the reduction of taxation, and the stimulation of economic activity in western Canada. It will affect all of Canada, including downtown Vancouver.

TRUST COMPANIES

WESTERN CAPITAL TRUST

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On March 29 the Minister of State for Finance said in the House that the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank was an isolated incident. At that time she said: "There are no other financial institutions in the country at the moment that are appearing to be insolvent in any way. On the same day, Western Capital Trust collapsed. Will the Minister explain why the House was given information that was not accurate?

● (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for some months now the Government had been working with Western Capital Trust to try to assist it in merging with another, stronger trust company. At the time the Minister made that statement it was expected that those merger negotiations would be completed successfully. That is the basis for her comments.

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on February 12, in responding to a question about another trust company, the Minister of State for Finance said: "I would like to reassure the House with respect to other western trust companies that I'm not aware of any which are on the brink of collapse". The same Minister said yesterday, as the Minister of Finance has just said now, that her officials met continually over the winter months with the people from Capital Trust. Will the Minister make a statement under Motions today to clarify these conflicting statements?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I don't think they are conflicting statements in the context of the answer I have just given the Hon. Member.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SATURDAY MAIL BOX COLLECTIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the post office. Canada Post has moved to cut back on Saturday collections from mail boxes. This is a move which reduces working hours and, therefore, requires some 30 days notice to the union involved. Canada Post failed to give that basic notice under the collective agreement. That failure, on the back of 18 policy grievances by the union since last October, has provoked a wildcat walkout. Will the Minister call upon Canada Post to rescind that provocative action, to respect the collective agreement, and to meet with the workers of Canada Post?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, Canada Post and the union are going before the Canada Labour Relations Board this afternoon precisely to look at the legality of the walkout, which I believe is illegal, and to look at the procedures followed under the contract as well. Let me put it to the Hon. Member this way. Will the Hon. Member call upon members of the union to go back to work and do their job of providing a decent mail service which is being paid for by the customers of the Canada Post Corporation, in view of the fact that the people of Canada are entitled to have some assurance that their mail is going to be delivered?

MINISTER'S DISCUSSION WITH CORPORATION PRESIDENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister well knows that reliable mail service in this country requires good labour relations. If the post office had simply waited another 17 days, had given proper notice, it would have respected the collective agreement and could have talked to its workers.

Mr. Broadbent: Why didn't you ask them?

Mr. Keeper: Would the Minister consider speaking to the President of Canada Post and asking him to understand that he must have co-operative relations with his workers if he is going to be able to deliver the mail, and to rescind the provocative action?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have already talked to the President of Canada Post and I have indicated to him, as I indicate to the Hon. Member, that I expect both sides to obey the law. There is no question about that. The Corporation and the union are before the Canada Labour Relations Board which will look at the whole issue of whether the contract has been met.

The Hon. Member may automatically take the side of the union in a case where service is being denied to the people of Canada. I am on the side of the people of Canada. I say they are paying for the service, and I say they are entitled to receive it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MARITIME FARMERS' COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am awfully glad you recognized me today since I married a Californian, and in honour of our visiting Californians I am happy to have the floor. I would like to go now from the California coast to the East Coast and direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture or, perhaps more important, to the Minister of Finance. When will one of those Ministers get off their duff and give an answer to the Maritime Farmers' Council on its legitimate, constructive, and positive request for funds for feed freight assistance in an emergency situation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that was an excellent question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: —and it was put in an excellent way. There is no question about that. It is a serious question, and I want to respond to it seriously. The Hon. Member knows that I am looking at the request made to us by the Maritime Farmers' Council. I have received representations previously from the Hon. Member. I have also received representations from Cabinet colleagues and other caucus colleagues. I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that my colleague in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is presently carrying on a review of feed grain policy. It is an integral part of that study. Indeed, the first group my colleague met with regarding the study was the Maritime Farmers' Council.

FINANCE

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSED QUEBEC SETTLEMENT OFFER

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister is aware that his decision to grant only $110 million in supplementary equalization payments to Quebec was a great disappointment to the Premier of Quebec, while the Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Duhaime, declared in the National Assembly yesterday that he thought this unilateral and politically motivated decision to grant only $110 million to Quebec was most unfair.

Could the Minister inform the House why he refused the settlement offer made by the Government of Quebec which, since it was expecting a shortfall of $750 million over the next two years, suggested a settlement of $450 million, in other words, $300 million this year and $150 million next year?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first let me remind the Hon. Member that the $700 million referred to by the Finance Minister of Quebec is the $700 million that Quebec would have received had not the previous Government put in place the 1982 formula, which is clearly hurting the Province of Quebec as well as the Provinces of Manitoba and Nova Scotia.

I suggest the Hon. Member speak to the previous Minister of Finance.

Mr. Gauthier: Who is in power?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will tell the Hon. Member about the present arrangement we have put forward. This is in negotiation. I do not think that Mr. Duhaime or Mr. Levesque expected to get everything they asked for, nor, in view of our own financial position, are we in a position to do that. So we have gone half-way. We had no legal obligation to do anything, but we have gone half-way to recognize its position, and we say, please recognize our position. We have a $35 billion deficit.

[Translation]

QUEBEC FINANCE MINISTER'S OFFER TO MEET FEDERAL MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Quebecers are starting to wonder why the deficit is mentioned when Quebec needs something, but is conveniently forgotten in the case of multinational oil companies.

I would like to know whether the Minister is willing to accept the offer made by the Quebec Minister of Finance to meet with the Minister before he brings down his Budget, in order to renegotiate this agreement and ensure that Quebec gets its fair share.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that under the basis on which we established this supplementary payment there was a very, very strong attempt made to be equitable as it related to all six provinces which receive the benefits of this agreement. I would say to the Hon. Member that Quebec has just been the beneficiary of an important ERDA agreement, the first Economic and Regional Development Agreement which has been signed with the Province of Quebec since 1974, which is for $1 billion. That recognizes the economic situation of the Province of Quebec. I think that if the Hon. Member spoke to Mr. Duhaime and Mr. Levesque, he would find that they are pretty pleased with that agreement.

MINES AND MINING

EXPANSION OF FALCONBRIDGE REFINERY IN NORWAY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. Last Saturday, Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited announced that it is going to spend $41 million on expanding its nickel refinery in Kristiansand, Norway. Furthermore, it will be purchasing nickel copper matte from Botswana to be refined in that refinery in Norway. In view of the fact that Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited reduced its work-force over the last two years in the Sudbury basin by 900 workers, will the Minister intervene personally with Falconbridge to ensure that since the company has $41 million to spend on expanding its refinery offshore to refine Botswana nickel, it will spend the $41 million to build a nickel refinery in the Sudbury basin so we can refine Canadian nickel at the source where we mine it?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's announcement under advisement. I will discuss it with the industry the Hon. Member has named. I would like to point out that Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited, which has been brought to our attention, is one of those corporations which continue to be major investors in Canada on behalf of shareholders.

● (1450)

GRANTING OF EXPORT LICENCES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely outrageous that the Minister of State for Mines did not know about this particular investment of Falconbridge offshore. Any self-respecting country does not allow its resources to be shipped out and refined elsewhere.

While the Minister is taking this under advisement, and as he contacts Falconbridge, will he ensure that Falconbridge is aware that the Government holds export licences? Will he inform Falconbridge that unless it is prepared to put that $41 million investment in the Sudbury basin it will not get the export licences to send nickel matte out from the Sudbury basin?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Sudbury basin has been one of the longest living sources of Canada's mining industry. Currently productivity in the Sudbury basin is being improved in spectacular ways. With regard to the specific question, it will be a part of the review which I will conduct.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRANSFER OF OFFENDERS TREATY—MICHIGAN CASE

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Justice. It does not refer to the State of California, but to the State of Michigan. What are the Minister of Justice and officials in the Department of Justice doing about a State of Michigan policy directive which prevents the transfer of mandatory life prisoners to serve their terms in their native lands?

This directive affects a former constituent of mine, Sandy Harrington, who appears to be prevented from serving his term in Canada by this directive. In my opinion this is a violation of the treaty between our two countries on this matter.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the distinguished Minister of Justice I will attempt to respond to my colleague's question. As he indicates, this appears to be a policy of the State of Michigan. While it could be in violation of the Transfer of Offenders Treaty between our two countries, I will convey the situation to the Minister of Justice. I can assure the Hon. Member that departmental officials are looking into this to discover whether in fact this is policy or something that can be worked out within the ambit of the Treaty.

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

HELGA PAIDE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Secretary of State. Last summer the Prime Minister said that his Government would be determined to reduce partisan political appointments. He said: "We are going to reform this instrument in our national life". How can the Secretary of State possibly square this with the appointment as a citizen court judge, at a salary of $46,000 a year, of still another Tory, Helga Paide, who for years has been the chief financial officer of the Conservative Party in Ontario?

Mr. Boudria: Helga was paid.

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am interested to hear from the Hon. Member that this appointment has in fact been made. To my knowledge the nomination was proposed, but it was not completed. If the Hon. Member wishes to check with my officials he will find that that appointment has in fact not been made.

Mr. Boudria: Helga was not paid.

Mr. Broadbent: What happened? Who goofed? Has she a Liberal cousin or something?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Question please.

Mr. de Corneille: The good Tory shepherd knows his good Tory sheep and is owned by them.

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE HELEN GILLIS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, last summer the Prime Minister, referring to federal appointments, stated that the overriding criteria would be "competence and a willingness to serve Canada". Therefore, why did the Secretary of State appoint still another Tory citizen court judge, Helen Gillis, a past president of the provincial Tory Party and a Tory candidate in the last provincial election? Does he think that serving Canada means serving the Tory Party first?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if leadership in the United Appeal of Halifax, leadership in the Pan American Wheelchair Games, leadership in the St. Agnes Parish Council, and leadership in the industrial and trade development of Halifax are to be held against a person, I do not then know what is the dimension of citizenship.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—PRIVATE SECTOR JOB CREATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Challenge '85 was announced as a program which would focus primarily on private enterprise for the creation of career-oriented summer jobs. However, our research indicates that most career-oriented jobs were created, not by business, but by non profit organizations. Will the Minister table a report in the House on the number of jobs created by private industry, and the proportion of these which were career oriented as compared to those in government and non profit employment?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to give all the details on this program when the applications have been finally processed. The Member has been attacking the program from the outset, so I know that he will be disappointed to hear that over 100,000 job offers have now been received for young people for this summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Some 30,000 of those, Mr. Speaker, have been filed by the private sector. That brings an additional $50 million to the program.

CAREER RELATED JOBS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister insists on denying the fact that a half-baked program was announced late. After disparaging such jobs when they were funded by Summer Canada, can the Minister explain what kind of assessment of career orientation has led jobs such as lawn cutting and ice cream cone making to typify private enterprise jobs more than they do non profit jobs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, 55 per cent of the job offers this summer are career related. This did not happen last year. That did not give young people an opportunity to gain a learning experience which will contribute to their development as they return to school. The balance of the jobs are indeed work experiences in other fields. The training component refers to 55 per cent of the job offers. That is a big improvement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC WORKS

OFFICIAL RESIDENCE OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Keeping budgetary constraints in mind, can the Minister tell the House how much money Canadians will have to spend for renovating the residence of the Leader of the Official Opposition, not to mention the fact that he now lives in the residence of the Speaker of the House of Commons, which is an additional financial burden on Canadians?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): According to our information, Mr. Speaker, $500,000 have been spent on the residence of Leaders of the Opposition since 1976. I have also been advised that the committee responsible for official residences has completed its report. In light of that report on the future of our official residences—a report I have yet to see—I may be in a position to provide more figures.

TOURISM

GAS PRICE INCREASE—EFFECTS ON AMERICAN TOURISTS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Tourism.

The Canadian Automobile Association maintains that increasing the price of gas considerably reduces the number of American tourists coming to Canada. The Tourist Industry Association of Canada has pointed out that a 1 per cent increase in the tax on gas means 200,000 fewer American tourists. Mr. Speaker, could the Minister give the House the assurance that after the oil pact, the tourist industry will not be hit by another increase in the price of gas, which would have a disastrous effect on the industry?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question.

[English]

In reply to that question I would simply say that we in the Government do not believe that factors like gasoline prices, taxes on alcohol, and taxes on accommodation should be looked at separately. Instead, they should be reviewed in the context of an over-all strategy or plan for the industry. We are approaching these individual questions in that manner. For example, as the Hon. Member will know, we recently released a major consultative strategy paper to consult with the industry, with our colleagues in the provinces and the public at large, so that each individual question, such as taxes of the sort he referred to, can be viewed in the context of the whole industry.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, April 2, 1985 meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader what business we can expect for the House of Commons when we return after the Easter break.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to continue with the business we have been considering prior to today, at least for Monday, when we return on April 15. I suggest that we consider Bill C-19 relating to the reorganization of Bell Canada, and if we make progress on that legislation we would move on to the Bill dealing with the Meat Inspection Act which will be the next item on the legislative timetable.

There will be other legislation introduced today relating to the equalization payments being made to provinces. Accordingly, I want to have an opportunity to discuss House business with the Opposition Parties to see what progress we can make in terms of expediting these important items of legislation, such as the one that will be introduced later today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Subject to further consultation, that will be the business at least for April 15. I will be contacting Opposition House Leaders about business for the rest of that week so that we will be fully occupied.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on a question of House business?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, the House Leader has mentioned future consultations. I think the House Leader will know that on Monday of this week there was an article in The Toronto Star which was based on a parliamentary committee report which has not yet been presented to the House. There is an implication in that report that a Liberal Member of Parliament provided it to the journalists. The House Leader would properly appreciate that that brings many of the processes of the House into question—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, would the Hon. Member relate this to the question of House business?

Mr. Hawkes: The House Leader mentioned that he was having consultations. In those consultations, would he bring up that matter with the House Leaders of the other two Parties?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Member has a question of privilege which he wishes to raise, he should raise it as a question of privilege.

Mr. Gauthier: You cannot bootleg like that.

Mr. Speaker: Bootlegging has come up as an issue again today. The Hon. Member may have a question of privilege and he may wish to raise it as a question of privilege, but such a claim is not a matter for discussion about House business, I suggest with respect.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the first report of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

[English]

I might say that the reports are somewhat different from those carried in this morning's edition of The Toronto Star.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Editor's note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

PRIVILEGE

NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I thought we might be able to resolve this through the normal consultation process, but since you have indicated that you think I have a question of privilege, I want to give notice that I will be rising immediately after the Easter break with a properly presented case based on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I accept the Hon. Member's notice. He knows that he has a right to give the Speaker notice of his intention, if he wishes to do so. I only rise to say that the Hon. Member indicated that I had suggested that he had a question of privilege. I made no such suggestion. I said that if a Member believes that another Member has done something wrong, the Member has a course of action to follow. The use of the House business question is not the appropriate means to discuss the matter.

CORRECTIONAL INVESTIGATOR

TABLING OF 1983-84 ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the Annual Report of the Correctional Investigator which covers the period of June 1, 1983 to May 31, 1984, and I ask that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

PETITIONS

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition by a group of students at Laval University, asking this House to adopt measures that will help the development of small- and medium-sized businesses, especially in the field of research and development. Such measures would, among other things, help Canada improve its position in international economic relations, in addition to increasing the GNP and creating employment.

[English]

OFFICE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from electors from the Province of Alberta requesting the Government of Canada to respect the office of Governor General in all future visits of heads of state to this country.

CLOSURE OF NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by some 240 Canadian citizens from Brantford, Ottawa, Hamilton, Washington—not a Canadian citizen—and the Province of Quebec. They are petitioning the House to maintain the National Postal Museum and are asking the Minister responsible to intervene and ensure that the Postal Museum be retained, find a new location near Parliament if it must move from 180 Wellington, and that its staff continue to serve the public in their present capacities.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of residents of the city of Windsor and surrounding regions, petitioning Parliament that all laid-off employees keep their severance pay and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of severance pay, as now being implemented by the Government.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, you will not be surprised to know that I am presenting a similar petition which protests yet again the unjust and mean-spirited changes which have taken place in the UIC system under the Minister.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadians calling upon Parliament to reinstate severance pay and that it not be deducted from unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition representing the view of thousands of Canadians, specifically a number of Canadians from the community of Windsor. They are reminding us that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has announced that workers who are laid off after March 31 of this year will have their severance pay deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits, thus effectively eliminating the benefit of the severance package to the worker.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Canada who are asking Parliament to address the situation in which employees who are now laid off will lose part of their unemployment insurance pay if they had earned severance pay during their past employment.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a similar petition from a number of Canadians who are protesting the mean-spirited changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act. They humbly pray that Parliament will address their concerns and are presenting this petition despite the mean spirit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his colleagues.

● (1510)

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the point of view of several Canadians on the matter of the very damaging changes being made in the UIC. Clearly a lot of Canadians are very concerned about this. I am presenting to the Government their petition, namely that all laid-off employees keep their severance pay and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of severance pay.

UNIVERSITY OF SHERBROOKE SCHOOL OF MEDICINE

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, 960 residents of Fleurimont, in my riding, wish to avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present this petition to the House and to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), acting through the Medical Research Council of Canada, to grant the School of Medicine at the University of Sherbrooke the financial assistance it needs to maintain its level of research and rate of development.

PRICE INCREASE OF GASOLINE AND HEATING OIL

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a genuine petition with 2,836 names of residents of the Province of Quebec. This petition was signed by people who, through the program Bonjour Montréal broadcast on CJMS, are protesting the excessive and unnecessary increase in the price of gas at the pump and the price of home heating oil.

Your petitioners humble pray that Parliament ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) to intervene and settle this matter as soon as possible.

I herewith present this petition and urge the Government to respond to the request therein.

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to point out that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said he was presenting a petition on behalf of thousands. He handed in one piece of paper. The names of eight people were on the paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The combination of Wednesday and the end of the session is deadly.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would suggest that the Minister table the similar petition that came from his National Economic Conference.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-232, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 (determination of refugee status).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Heap: This Bill formerly known as C-219, requires that all refugee applicants in Canada should have the opportunity, if they wish it, of an oral hearing before the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. At present the law does not provide for that. That is one of the reasons we have many thousands who are waiting to have their status determined. This Bill will not only provide fairer opportunity for judgment by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee but will also shorten the time of waiting to the benefit of both the refugee claimants and the staff of the Department.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

IRDP—APPLICATIONS RECEIVED FROM NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 104—Mr. Rompkey:

In the past calendar year, under the Industrial Regional Development Program, were applications received from Newfoundland and, if so (a) how many (b) how many were eligible for assistance and how many were approved (c) what was the average percentage of assistance to those applications that were approved (d) how many were in the tourism sector and how many were approved (e) what percentage of the total approved applications were in the tourism sector (f) what percentage of the applications were from the (i) fisheries (ii) manufacturing (iii) high-tech sector (g) what sectors were other applications from?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): From July 1, 1983, date of inception of the Industrial Regional Development Program (IRDP), to November 30, 1984, the reply is as follows: Yes. (a) 313 applications were received; (b) 259 were eligible; 86 were approved; (c) 27.0 per cent of the estimated eligible costs; (d) 95 were received; 14 were approved; (e) 16.3 per cent; (f) (i) 7.3 per cent (23 applications), (ii) 43.1 per cent (135 applications), (iii) 5.1 per cent (16 applications); (g) Agricultural industries, service industries incidental to agriculture, logging, mining, quarrying and oil wells, quarry and sand pits, service industries incidental to mineral extraction, trade contracting, other products industries, wholesale, business service industries, local government service, education service industries, accommodation service industries, membership organization industries.

ASSISTANCE TO TOURISM UNDER IRDP

Question No. 123—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Was the IRDP program for tourism cancelled and was a study carried out by the Government before cancelling and, if so (a) by whom (b) how long did it take (c) what were the principal questions of the study?

2. How many businesses benefited from the IRDP in 1984?

3. How much did the Government invest under this program in 1984?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): 1. No study was carried out before cancelling the tourism element under the Industrial Regional Development Program (IRDP). This change to the IRDP is the direct result of some 16 months of program experience which indicated that tourism was better assisted through sub-agreements with the provinces, as in the past, before the IRDP. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

2. During the calendar year 1984, 1,351 offers were accepted.

3. During the calendar year 1984, an estimated amount of $336.6 million of Crown assistance was committed.

SECURITY FOR 1988 OLYMPIC GAMES

Question No. 248—Mr. Nunziata:

What is the projected cost to the Government of providing security for athletes, officials, dignitaries and competition venues for the 1988 Winter Olympic Games in Calgary?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Planning for the 1988 Olympic Winter Games is in the early stages. Further specific details on venues, visiting dignitaries, and participating countries are required before projected cost estimates for providing federal security can be developed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—JOB CREATION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to create the jobs required to substantially reduce the excessively high levels of unemployment, either through its general economic policies or through its recently announced energy agreement, the job creation potential of which has made the Ontario Deputy Minister of Energy skeptical to the point where he has said that, in signing it, the Government "gave away the store".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I put forward this motion with great sincerity but also with great regret. I would have hoped as a Member of Parliament, notwithstanding the fact that I am in opposition, I would have an opportunity to debate in a meaningful way some of the positive things that this Government is alleged to have done.

The record, however, is quite clear, indeed. The accomplishments or lack of accomplishments of this Government have been very evident over the last six months, so much so that the Leader of our Party has characterized them, I think, in a very, very good fashion. He said: "This is a Prime Minister of what I call cosmetic politics where appearance takes precedence over reality, style over substance and package over policy. It is an approach to government that seems directed more by desire to placate a need to please, an urge to be loved, than the ability to order priorities and a willingness to make choices."

That submission characterizes the Tory Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) today stood in his place and questioned the integrity of the Deputy Minister in Ontario. Let me quote for the record, Mr. Speaker, what the Deputy Minister said. Before I do that, let me quote what Mr. Mercier said, the President of Universal Exploration.

Mr. Dick: Lots of style and no substance.

Mr. Dingwall: What did he say, Mr. Speaker? He said: "But from the point of view of a Canadian, I am really concerned we are giving away more than we have to". Of what is he speaking? He speaks of the agreement consummated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the producing provinces. It is an agreement that is a bail-out of the multinational oil companies. It is a lavishing decree against the consumers of this country. It is against the small producers in western Canada. It is simply a bail-out of the multinational oil companies.

What did the Deputy Minister say? This is what the Deputy Minister in Ontario, Duncan Allan, said about this so-called agreement, which is really an agreement to buttress the multinational oil companies: "I don't know whether they will simply use the cash flow to buy other companies. If that happens, all we will see out of this is an orgy of mergers or oil companies getting into other forms of business". Mr. Allan said that he was skeptical about whether the industry could create 225,000 jobs, and "if Ottawa imposes a gasoline tax to help pay for the energy deal, it will throw Canadians out of work", he added.

● (1520)

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the Hon. Member is quoting from the exact transcript or whether he is quoting from a newspaper article. Could he please tell us from what he is quoting?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Hon. Member will learn something about parliamentary procedure before he rises again.

Mr. Dick: What are you quoting from, The Toronto Star.

Mr. Dingwall: Yes, The Toronto Star. I suppose anyone who disagrees with the Conservative Government or with the Minister of Finance is either paranoid or is trying to make an unjustified attack against the Government. When Members say anything about the Government, that Hon. Member rises in his place and castigates them for making remarks which he knows to be true.

Mr. Dick: We don't believe The Toronto Star.

Mr. Dingwall: I suggest that this agreement does not provide benefits for consumers in all parts of Canada. What about the primary industry levy offset program? That program was part of the fuel tax rebate program for those in the primary industries—farmers in southwestern Ontario, fishermen in Atlantic Canada and those involved in logging, mining, hunting and trapping in northern Ontario. They were entitled to it.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member at this point in his speech.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this

Point of Order

House that the Senate has passed Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

April 3, 1985

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Bertha Wilson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in her capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 3rd day of April, 1985, at 3.15 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière,
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1530)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff—Chapter No. 12.

POINT OF ORDER

PRACTICE RESPECTING TIMING OF ROYAL ASSENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am informed that it is very unusual, if not unheard of, to have a Royal Assent during an Opposition Day, especially at a time that would interrupt the opening speech of the Opposition on the motion in question. In fact, I am also informed that it is very unusual to schedule a Royal Assent in a way that would interrupt any business of the House. In the past it was generally scheduled so that it would happen right at six o'clock in a way that the business of the House would not be interfered with.

While it may be technically correct to have the Royal Assent take place when it did just a few moments ago, I respectfully submit that it is contrary to the past practices and traditions of this House. In addition, it is a grave discourtesy to the Official Opposition, on this occasion, when it has a very important motion to present to the House.

I should add that I am informed that the Government House Leader is in a position to set the time for Royal Assent. I would say that he should be carrying out his duties in a more competent manner, especially in a way that recognizes the practices and traditions of the House when it comes to the importance of Opposition Days and the motions presented in them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Opposition House Leader has expressed a desire for the Government House Leader to carry out his duties, I think I can phrase it, "in a more competent manner", which implies some degree of incompetence. The Government House Leader is not present in the Chamber. I find that opportunity to attack the House Leader in his absence and in that fashion to be totally reprehensible.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the sentiments that I think in honour lie behind the comments of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). I think he will understand that the Speaker is put in a position by the rules of having to respond to the knock at the door. The Hon. Member may have a matter he wishes to raise with the reform committee. I can sense that he feels he has a grievance. I think he knows what he should do about that. He has taken the first opportunity to advise the House of his concern and I accept the reason he has chosen to do it at this time. I understand his concern.

Resuming debate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—JOB CREATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Dingwall:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to create the jobs required to substantially reduce the excessively high levels of unemployment, either through its general economic policies or through its recently announced energy agreement, the job creation potential of which has made the Ontario Deputy Minister of Energy skeptical to the point where he has said that, in signing it, the Government "gave away the store".

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue my remarks, particularly the comments directed toward the agreement which was consummated by the Government of Canada and the three producing provinces. I suggest, as I did before you interrupted the proceedings, that this was an agreement for the benefit of the multinational oil companies without due regard or due respect for the consumers of this country or the small western Canadian oil and gas companies. This is a terrible benefit to the multinational oil companies. I will read some figures to substantiate my point.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that in no way does Her Majesty's Official Opposition accept the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) that prices will not increase for the consumers. As I was saying before I was interrupted by your predecessor in the Chair, the primary industry levy offset program, which is a benefit of 1.8 cents per litre, the equivalent of eight cents a gallon, will be dropped as a result of the agreement to be consummated between the producing provinces and the Government of Canada. It will affect in a very real way the farmers of southwestern Ontario, the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, the loggers, miners, hunters and trappers in northern Ontario. It will have devastating effects.

The Minister went on to say that the agreement provides harmony, if you will. Where is the harmony? She referred to the compensation granted for the cost of moving domestic crude to refineries east of Montreal. Prior to this agreement, this domestic transfer compensation program provided a benefit. It was designed to create a market for western Canada shut-in crude, $2 a barrel subsidy on transportation by tanker from Montreal to the Maritime refiners. In 1984, this provided a supplement of approximately $44 million or 22 million barrels. This has now disappeared and it will be at a commercial rate. The subsidy will continue no longer. That is certainly very harmful and devastating to those of us who live in Atlantic Canada.

What about the Minister's claim that there will be lots of reinvestment? Where are the guarantees from the multinational oil companies? What guarantees have been solicited from them? Absolutely none. In fact, Gulf Oil's profits in 1984 went up by 41 per cent. Imperial Oil's profits went up by 60 per cent. Shell's profits went up by 59 per cent, Texaco's by 23 per cent and Suncor's by 8 per cent. With this agreement in place, not only will it not create the jobs that we all want but it will in fact add in excess of $1.7 million to the multinationals' revenues beginning in June, 1985.

There will be additional revenues for the multinational oil companies but nothing in the way of a continuation of the subsidies to those individuals in the Maritime provinces and nothing for those individuals who may be engaged in farming, logging or mining. I say shame on the Government for those policies.

The Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources did not stop there with its policies. It went on. We have seen the abolition of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program. We have seen the cuts in the Canadian Home Insulation Program. We have seen Canertech abolished by the Minister and we have also seen the cancellation of Q & M Pipe Lines. What about the natural gas laterals program for the Province of Quebec? It is out by $85 million.

Let us talk about another agreement that was reached several weeks ago. That agreement was referred to by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as being a milestone in a new Canadian era. However, Clause 54 of that agreement says: "Similarly, feedstock available shall be insured on commercial terms for new industrial facilities in Newfoundland and Labrador provided such feedstock is in excess to feedstock required to meet the demand of presently existing industrial capacity in eastern Canada." That means that Newfoundlanders will not have an opportunity to play meaningful roles in the oil and gas industry, particularly with respect to refinery capacity, until such time as other areas of the region have that opportunity. That certainly cannot be applauded by Government Members of Parliament and particularly by those from Atlantic Canada. That is certainly not in the best interests of the Atlantic economy. In fact, I think it is outright discrimination against the people of Newfoundland, and Liberal Members of Parliament who are from the Province of Newfoundland have said so.

I shall return to this other recent deal made with the multinational oil companies for just a moment. What about the Canadianization program? Under questioning by those of us in the Official Opposition, the Minister has refused to give us a firm date as to when she would like to have 50 per cent ownership of the oil and gas industry in Canada. There is no fixed date. The Government has abandoned the Canadianization program that we put in place. It has abandoned it so much so that section 7 of that agreement provides no incentive whatsoever to the small Canadian oil and gas companies in western Canada. In fact, they are to be treated equally with the multinational corporations that have had profits in excess of $200 million. Is that fair to the Canadian consumer who is facing an increase? Is that fair to the small Canadian oil and gas company? Certainly not, but it runs in line with the policies of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He is the spokesperson for those individuals who reside outside of Canada, whether they reside in Philadelphia, Ohio or Washington, and he is the spokesperson for the select few from Bay Street in Toronto.

That is the elitism of the Conservative Party. There is nothing for the regions and nothing for the consumers, and the small-businessman in this country be damned. Government Members will pay the ultimate price when Canadians have an opportunity to vote against them in the next federal election.

The motion I have put forward not only touches on energy but on other Government Departments as well. Let us look for a moment at some of those who sit on the front benches. Most of those individuals are not here, probably for good reason. Let us look at their performances.

The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) takes his orders from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). He is a Minister who brought in three political commissars to slash regional programming at the CBC. He is a Minister who was called "patronizing" and "smug" by representatives of the Canadian Conference of the Arts. What did he do to increase employment opportunities here in Canada? He cancelled money for the National Arts Centre, he cancelled money for the Canada Council and the National Film Board and he cancelled $7 million under the Capital Assistance Program. Unlike the Minister of Finance who can treat his big friends in the multinational oil companies well, this Minister has refused and is unable to provide needed assistance to the arts and cultural industry here in Canada. I say shame on the Conservative Government for abandoning that industry.

What about the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew)? The only thing he will be known for is serving in Dick Hatfield's cabinet. He has done absolutely nothing as a Minister of State for Forestry. As a Minister from the Atlantic region, he has not even spoken out on any of the issues concerning Atlantic Canada.

What about the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser)? He goes around telling everyone that he wants to help them and that he is there to assist the fishermen. I will tell you how he has assisted the fishermen, Mr. Speaker. I will tell you how he has put more people on the unemployment rolls. There was an increase in licensing fees of $6.3 million. There was a reduction in fisheries development of $11.7 million. That Minister has a great claim to fame. He is the only Minister who has signed a treaty without even showing it to Parliament. Shame!

What about the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise)? He is another paragon of virtue when it comes to helping the working class in this country. What has he done? The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) questioned him on one particular program today. This is the Government that gave the farmers in western Canada, under the stabilization program and through the transportation assistance program, approximately $1.2 billion. We in this Party do not object to that but we do object to the Minister of Agriculture not being able to provide $13.5 million in emergency assistance to the farmers of the Maritimes so that we can continue with our job-creation programs. That is abandoning his responsibilities as Minister of Agriculture.

What about inspection fees? The Minister of Agriculture has done nothing about that. The Prime Minister gets a 54 per cent increase in his expense while the farmers of the Maritime Provinces have to pay a higher amount in inspection fees. I say shame on the Government.

● (1550)

Of course, I do not want to say anything about the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay), because I think he has done it all for himself. Not only has he caused embarrassment to his Party, he has caused embarrassment to Parliament as a whole. That is what that Minister has done.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is a lovely man and a great guy. What has he done with regard to employment opportunities in Canada? Nothing. If anything, he has added to the rolls of unemployment. He received an order about a week ago from the Deputy Prime Minister to fire different individuals in Air Canada and VIA Rail. That is all he has done. There has been no action and there have been no progressive, positive programs coming from the Minister of Transport. In fact, the only thing he was able to do was to provide cut-backs to the very important sectors of the Canadian economy. Those cut-backs do not affect the multinational oil companies, they affect the working men and women of the country. I say shame to the Minsiter of Transport.

Let us now move to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). There is the "flora". She is going to create all the jobs which Canadians need. The only thing that can be said of that particular Minister which is accurate, is what was printed in Chatelaine. That is the only thing. That Minister has lost every battle and every war in Cabinet to the Minister of Finance, who, by the way, is not really the Minister of Finance. He is the junior Minister to the real Minister of Finance, who is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). The Minister of Employment and Immigration has lost her battles to him and to the Minister of Finance. But she has cut back. She said to the unemployed people of Canada: "Well, we don't really need you. We don't care. We are going to take your severance pay away. We don't care if that provides you with hardship." Yet she is the Minister who stood in her place when she was a member of the Opposition and practically cried before Canadians because not enough was being done. But at the first opportunity, what did she do? She slammed them. I say shame to the Conservative Government.

What about the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie)? He is incapable of understanding the rules which are applied to an Attorney General. He refuses to appeal a case without first seeing a transcript. He thinks that the Criminal Code should be used as a source for one-liners. Of course, he is always a friend to the provincial Premiers. We have seen what he has done in his capacity as Attorney General. He has added nothing to providing jobs for this country, other than bailing out some of his friends.

Now let us turn to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). There is a paragon of tourism! He was performing so badly that they had to send him to the Soviet Union. He might stay there.

What about the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan)? That Minister is from P.E.I. He is the only Minister of all the Ministers in the Tory Government who had the audacity to send his picture to all Members of Parliament. I do not know what he is looking for, and I do not know what he is up to, but I do not want any part of it.

What about the Minister of Finance? Well, we should not be too hard on the Minister of Finance because in June of 1985 he will be leaving us. He will be leaving us because the Prime Minister will hang him out to dry when he brings down the next Budget. That is what will happen to the Minister of Finance.

Finally, let us talk about one issue which is of great concern to me—regional economic development. When the Government gave $1.3 billion to the multionational oil companies, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion refused to provide one cent for Domtar in the Province of Quebec. Shame on him. That Minister took $200 million out of the ERDA program. What did he do, after the Prime Minister assured me in Question Period that serious consideration would be given to new economic proposals in Cape Breton Island, which has the highest unemployment rate in the country? What did the Prime Minister and that Minister do? They set up a task force. It is a complete repudiation, a complete denunciation of the provincial Premier and the MLAs who live in that part of Canada. It is a complete denial of the suggestions which have been put on previous occasions.

I suggest that this Government, based on its performance to date, has failed to provide the jobs which it promised. It has failed, by the recent energy agreements, to provide consumers and small business with the tax relief which they ought to have. It has provided only one thing. It has provided untold millions of dollars for the multinational oil companies. I say shame on the Government. It will certainly pay the price in the next federal election.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, it was most enjoyable to sit here and listen to Allan MacEachen's clone. Certainly he reminds me of the Hon. Senator in his style, his tone of voice and the reasoning which he presents. We all heard it in 1981 when the then Minister of Finance presented his Budget.

Can the Hon. Member tell the House and Canadians why the energy industry should be treated and taxes differently from all the other industries in Canada, such as his Government did under the National Energy Program? Can he explain that to the Canadian people?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is always nice to receive a question from a former Minister of the Clark Government.

Mr. McDermid: I just got promoted!

Mr. Dingwall: I am happy that he has taken this occasion to ask a question with respect to energy. Perhaps he knows nothing about energy. That might be the reason he has been appointed Parliamentary Secretary, in keeping with the Prime Minister's guidelines.

He asked about the tax benefits which are being bestowed upon multinational oil companies and why they should be taxed differently. If one believes, as we do on this side, that Canadianization is a goal to which all Canadians subscribe, then I think it would be in the best interests of Canada—unlike the Hon. Member—to provide an incentive for the small companies in western Canada which want to make a meaningful contribution to that sector of our economy. The Government should provide an incentive for the small companies in western Canada so that they can hire the individuals which we want them to hire and get Canadians off the unemployment rolls. But the Conservative Government is bent on bending over backwards to multinational oil companies to ensure that they are looked after handsomely. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the consumers and the small-business sector of the country deserve an incentive as well. They too deserve a tax holiday, not just the multinational oil companies.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member's Leader was in the private sector, he participated in a newsletter which was written by his law firm. As an author of that newsletter, he was roundly and severely critical of the National Energy Program. He accurately pointed out that it would cost Canada billions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of jobs.

In addition, when the Leader of the Liberal Party was running for the leadership, he made a number of speeches before Liberal delegates across Canada in which he roundly condemned the National Energy Program as an example of the historical Liberal programs and policies which have caused great damage to the country. That was something he was going to change when he became Leader. We find that he hasn't changed a thing. In fact, apparently he has been changed. I wonder if the Hon. Member can tell the House whether he agrees with what his Leader is saying today or what his Leader said when he was running for the leadership of the Party and was still in the private sector? Does the Hon. Member concur with those views that the National Energy Program has been an absolute disaster for Canada. If he does, would he not agree that undoing the National Energy Program, which was the effect of the Accord last week, should in fact restore some of the vigour and health which was previously there in a sector which provided so many jobs for so many Canadians from coast to coast?

● (1600)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is so nice to receive questions from Ministers of the Crown, particularly the minister of paper clips, pens and notebooks. I want to say to him that I take serious objection to some of the things he as well as some other Hon. Members of Parliament on the Tory side, have tried to promote in this House. I would point out that the distinguished Leader of the Liberal Party, the next Prime Minister of Canada, did not sign such a document.

However, I want to say to the Hon. Member who is responsible for paper clips and pens that he ought to be careful. Who said in 1981, what premier of this country, that the oil bonanza was not going to last and we as Canadians ought not to expect that it will continue as it was in late 1981? What Premier said that? The "premier ministre" of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed. Of course, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) does not like to hear that. He does not like to hear that even some of his colleagues in western Canada who consummated agreements with the Government of Canada did so honestly and intelligently, based and predicated on information that the world price of oil would continue to increase.

What that Minister fails to recognize, Mr. Speaker, is that there were two signers of those agreements. At every opportunity, as on previous occasions, which is characteristic of himself and his Party, that Minister will take every opportunity to try to get a political advantage, I suggest with all respect, which is to pit western Canadians against eastern Canadians. That is a proposition which we think is thoroughly disgusting, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada report Connections stated the goals of the national energy policy, and I quote:

> First, the megaprojects were supposed to provide the federal Government with substantial revenues—
>
> Second, these projects were to provide substantial economic spinoffs, thereby helping to further alleviate the problems of regional economic disparity. Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, for example, were to get jobs—
>
> Third, all the capital inflows needed to finance this activity were expected to make the Canadian dollar buoyant.

It goes on further to say:

> The agreement had a major flaw: it assumed that the real world price of oil would continue to rise substantially over the next few years.

The result of the national energy policy was two megaprojects which were cancelled, Alsands and Cold Lake, worth $25 billion. I asked the Hon. Member how many jobs in Windsor, in Orillia and in Hamilton were lost because his Party stuck this national energy policy down our throats?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I say to the very verbose Member of Parliament who has taken this opportunity to stand in his place and ask a question that no one put a gun to the heads of the western producing provinces to sign agreements. Nobody did.

Mr. Hawkes: Oh yes, they did.

Mr. Dingwall: And to suggest that we in the Province of Nova Scotia did not benefit from the National Energy Program is a total repudiation of the provincial Premier. There is no question but that benefits, as expected and wanted by western producing provinces and by the national Government, were not forthcoming. But that was because, as the Hon. Member, if he is candid enough, will admit, the western producing provinces signed that Accord—

Mr. Taylor: Baloney.

Mr. Dingwall: —because they believed, as the Government of Canada did at the time, that the world price of oil would continue to increase. The truth hurts when Hon. Members hear it.

Mr. Taylor: That is baloney and you know it.

Mr. Dingwall: But those Hon. Members are quite prepared to sell out the consumers, the small western Canadian producers, and to give money to the multinational oil companies.

Mr. Taylor: That's wishful thinking. That's what the Liberals think.

Mr. Dingwall: Shame on the Alberta Members of Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). It is a motion which distorts what has been going on in this country over the past seven months, and it distorts what was in the energy Accord. I say that choosing my words very carefully, and I am sorry that the Hon. Member is leaving the House—

Mr. Dingwall: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) on a point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who at one point in his career was noted for some form of integrity, would not impute motive to myself, or indeed any other Member of Parliament. I do not find anything frightfully wrong in going to the lobby to have a cup of coffee and watch his dismal performance on television, as thousands of Canadians—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the point is made.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the word "integrity" just used by the Hon. Member. If there is one person who has degraded the word "integrity" in this House today, it is that Hon. Member. I would invite him to come back and listen to these words directly because it is a serious matter to call into question the integrity of people outside this House.

I listened to the Hon. Member distort the words of the Deputy Minister of Energy in the Province of Ontario. He used a distorted press report yesterday as the basis for his speech and, indeed, it is the basis for the motion today. He knows that the Deputy Minister of Energy withdrew that statement. He said that it was a distortion, that it was taken out of context, and I am going to read the telex. I was absolutely disgusted when I heard the Hon. Member, in light of the fact that he knew that the Deputy Minister of Energy had withdrawn that statement, had stated that it was distorted, and persisted in repeating that statement to this House. That is the sort of action by Members of Parliament which degrades the reputation of this whole House. I say to the Hon. Member that he should stand in his place after I have finished my remarks and apologize to the Deputy Minister of Energy for calling into question the words which he said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would like to quote from a telex which has been made public. It was sent to my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). The telex is from Duncan Allan, Deputy Minister of Energy of the Government of Ontario. He stated that comments that were attributed to him were:

—used selectively in the article and it has distorted the position of the Government of Ontario, which position I fully endorse. That position is that the Accord offers great potential for Ontario and indeed all of Canada, not only for lower oil and gas prices for the consumers of this province but for the investment and industrial activity which will subsequently flow.

There is certainly nothing in that agreement that can be said to be adverse to Ontario's interests.

● (1610)

Mr. Speaker, I should not call the Hon. Member "honourable" because his statement is not an honourable statement. In face of that the Member persists in distorting the truth of statements made by someone outside this House who cannot defend himself in the House.

I would also like to quote the Economic Council because Hon. Members have today attempted to exploit the good name of the Council. I would like to read from a news release issued by the Economic Council this morning:

The Council has looked at a variety of scenarios ... Among these scenarios, the impact of deregulating oil and natural gas prices, without other changes in taxation or royalties, was simulated. Based on this assessment, we concluded that as many as 100,000 jobs might be created. The Council also simulated various possible tax changes in addition to the deregulation of oil and gas, resulting in larger or smaller stimulus depending on the package.

They go on to say that they have not estimated the results of the Accord that was announced last week. They conclude by saying:

It is difficult to make precise comparisons ... but it is well known that tax cuts usually have a stimulative effect.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the basis on which we have said that the energy Accord in Western Canada will result in between 100,000 and 300,000 jobs. That does not take into account the Atlantic Accord which is going to be so beneficial to Newfoundland as well as creating spin-off benefits in the other Atlantic provinces.

In Question Period this afernoon the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) made reference to a report which was prepared by the Ministry of Energy. I would like to bring to the attention of the House the substance of the comments made in that report. I am sure the Hon. Member can read this later on if he wishes to. It makes the key assumption that the jobs that will be created will be based on the degree of reinvestment.

Hon. Members know that the rate of reinvestment in the first half of this year was around 65 or 70 per cent. During the years prior to 1980 and the introduction of the National Energy Program, the rate of reinvestment was about 110 per cent. We are convinced that the increased revenues which the industry is going to receive as a result of deregulation will receive very favourable treatment by the energy industry. They will be reinvested in the economy to find the oil and gas in eastern and western Canada and to create jobs right across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Western Accord speaks directly to the question of reinvestment. The Minister has said that we will be monitoring this very closely. Due to discussions that the Minister, myself and other Ministers have had, the industry knows that we feel very strongly about the question of reinvestment. We will be monitoring it because it is a key element to the success that the industry will generate as a result of this Accord. We are convinced that there will be a substantial amount of reinvestment. The result of that will not be felt only in western Canada. Studies have been done which indicate that 35 or 40 per cent of the impact of that investment is felt in central Canada.

I wanted to get these three issues on the record to deal with the distortion and innuendo that has been floating around this Chamber this afternoon. I wanted to get them on the record to enable us all to understand the basis on which we are operating.

I will now turn to other parts of the motion that we are debating today. Last November I set out in the economic statement three elements of an economic strategy that we have been following closely. The first was that we would put our fiscal house in order by dealing with the tremendous problem of the accumulated debt in the country which has been growing two or three times faster than the rate of growth of the economy for 10 years now. Second, we said that we would redefine the role of government. Third, we said that we would create a positive environment for investment, innovation and international competitiveness.

I would like to read from a part of the economic agenda that I tabled last November. It is very clear that in relation to the energy industry we have done exactly what we said we would do. It is all laid out on page 65 where we noted:

The energy sector faces many rules, regulations and demands originating from federal and provincial energy legislation and regulatory bodies. There is little doubt that these, taken together, discourage activity in the energy sector. The federal Government will put its own house in order and begin discussions with the provinces on means of streamlining these regulatory requirements through such devices as the "single-window" approach.

We went on to say that we attach great priority to renegotiating energy agreements with Alberta, B.C. and Saskatchewan, and to pursuing accords with the East Coast with regard to the offshore. We set it out there, Mr. Speaker, and we have done what we said we would do. That will create jobs right across the country.

The last two months have clearly demonstrated that performance in that we have signed the Atlantic Accord and the Western Accord. They are an integral part of our strategy toward energy development. I would like to remind Hon. Members that energy investment accounts for 30 per cent of business investment in the country. There is a very direct correlation between business investment and job creation. That is why we have felt so strongly about this element of our economic program.

I would like to discuss what happened in the lead-up to these energy agreements. From September, 1984 to February, 1985 well completions in western Canada increased by 11 per cent over the same period 12 months earlier. Seventy-one per cent of these were development wells and exploration activity has climbed 26 per cent. That demonstrates very clearly that the industry is responding, partly in anticipation to what we have just done, but also in response to things that we said in the economic statement. We increased the small producers PGRT credit, changed initiatives taken to ameliorate the shut-in oil problem, and provided for a more flexible export policy to generate a greater degree of cash flow in the industry. It is very clear that things are happening in the country because industry is responding to the incentives, enthusiasm and encouragement provided by the Government.

I have said on a number of occasions that Members in the Opposition walk around with a little black cloud over their heads. Let us look at some of the good news that we have had over the past few months. In the fourth quarter we had an improvement over what we had expected in the Gross National Product which allowed the year to finish on an up beat note, much higher than I had anticipated just a few months earlier. Eighty-four thousand jobs have been created. Manufacturing companies are going to increase investment this year by 26 per cent. The merchandise trade balance continues at the high level of $23 billion in the last quarter. Retail sales increased 12 per cent over the past two or three months. We have had an inflation rate below that of the U.S. for the past six months. All of these matters, Mr. Speaker, indicate to me that consumers and companies, large and small, are responding to the change in government and the change in atmosphere that we have in the country. That is what we are trying to generate.

I will now return to the energy agreements. Earlier in the House I said that they would generate jobs in other parts of the country. Chase Econometrics has done a study which indicates that, next to Alberta, Ontario draws the greatest benefit from petroleum activity. Those industries which will benefit are metal fabricators of pipe, equipment, autos and trucks, electric and electronic manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, consulting companies and mining industries, because there will be increased demands for metal products. Some specific companies in Quebec which will benefit are AES Data, Canada Cement Lafarge, Canadian Marconi, Crane Canada, Dominion Bridge, Foxboro, Marine Industries, Ingersoll-Rand and Pratt & Whitney. That is a wide range of companies.

I see the Hon. Member from Quebec has just come in. He recognizes those companies. He has a smile on his face because he knows that jobs will be created in the Province of Quebec as a result of the energy agreement. He says "Bien".

● (1620)

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Who is going to pay for that? The people of Quebec.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is quite clear. That is the best agreement for all of Canada.

[English]

Let us look at some of the immediate reactions. Imperial Oil plans an investment program for 1985 of $1 billion, compared with $700 million in the last two years. That company alone will create 30,000 person-years of employment. That is action which demonstrates that we are on the right track.

I am confident that that is only the beginning as a result of conversations I have had with a number of other people in the energy industry. Let there be no doubt that a stronger energy industry means a stronger Canadian economy. The whole country will benefit from it.

Let me quote from the Canadian Energy Research Institute in Calgary. It states that projects such as the Wolf Lake oil sands project now under way by BP and Petro-Canada will create 22,000 person-years of employment activity across Canada. It goes on to point out that industry in Ontario and Quebec is providing essential supplies to this project and accounts for 35 per cent of the jobs. The Hon. Member should be smiling again.

I listened to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he talked about a five-cent to ten-cent a litre increase in taxes. If he was in the House, I would challenge him to establish the basis for those scare tactics. If he can't provide me with the basis for those figures, perhaps I could respond; but I suggest that he is trying to scare the consumers and split the country in the same way the Liberals did under their previous leader. The present Leader has not learned anything more about what makes Canada tick than the previous leader who was kicked out.

We have accomplished a lot in the last six months. Let me outline some of those accomplishments. I heard the Hon. Member talk about job creation. We will not simply provide a three-month or six-month job creation program for Canadians. Our policy is to meld direct job creation with career development so that Canadians can have some confidence that when they take a job in one of these programs they are learning something that will help develop their career.

My colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said that his Department has taken 42 initiatives to support the agriculture industry. For instance, the Farm Credit Corporation has dropped interest rates by 2.5 percentage points, I believe. The farm fuel tax rebate is one of the most significant parts of the economic statement of last November.

The Hon. Member for Quebec should realize that we signed the first Economic Regional Development Agreement with the Province of Quebec since 1974. That is an indication to Quebec that it can work with the rest of Canada so we can develop a strong Canada by working together rather than pushing the people of Quebec out of Canada.

Interest rates have gone down from approximately 12.5 per cent to the current level today. Hon. Members did not ask me a question about the fact that there was another drop in interest rates, down to approximately 10.5 per cent.

Consumer confidence and business confidence today is at the highest level we have seen in a number of years. The reason for this is that they are responding to the programs, policies and the attitude of the Government.

Let me talk about small business and the impact upon it of the energy Accord. A spokesman for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has said that he foresees between 30,000 and 40,000 small-business jobs in companies that support the oil and gas industry. That energy services industry was absolutely decimated by the National Energy Program. I know that is the case because I visited those companies in the foothills of Alberta and saw the impact of the National Energy Program upon them. It is those small companies which will come back in a strong way as a result of this Accord. I can see that recovery taking place across the country.

The Canadian Association of Oil Well Drilling Contractors predicts that this industry will create about 20,000 jobs directly as a result of an increased energy industry.

Let me repeat the position of the Government of Ontario. The Government of Ontario represents consumers and very little oil and gas production in that province. The Government states that the Western Accord offers great potential for Ontario and indeed all of Canada, not only for lower oil and gas prices for the consumers of this province but for the investment in industrial activity that will subsequently flow. It says that there is certainly nothing in that agreement that can be said to be adverse to Ontario's interests.

So much for the Liberal tactic of division. Liberals, under their new Leader, are persisting in following its previous energy policies. They are still trying to divide the country. Surely Hon. Members understand the damage that was done to the country during the years 1980 to 1983 which saw the rise of the western separatist movement when the Liberals ignored the impact of their policy on the interests of western Canada. I urge Hon. Members to think very carefully about how they present their views in the House because they are falling into the same trap as the previous Government by ignoring the impact of their policies. We must avoid such an impact if we are going to keep this country together. Our Government has worked hard at bringing the country together and convincing Canadians that by working together we will build a stronger economy.

When Prime Minister Hawke spoke to the National Economic Conference here a couple of weeks ago, he said that the very important consideration we must always remember is that working together and understanding the points of view of all parts of the country is the way we create economic development. That is the way we create jobs and learn to pull together, rather than push apart. With the co-operation of the Opposition Parties, I am sure that we can continue this process and build a much stronger Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on record some facts about Quebec which the Minister seems to forget. Concerning the energy agreement, he refuses like the Minister responsible for Energy to assure this House that this energy agreement will not be implemented at the expense of the consumers. When Quebec members suggest that we are concerned about that agreement, it is not because of the people out West; the Minister knows very well it is because of the multinational corporations. If he wants information about that, let him have a word with the Hon. Member sitting behind him, a Progressive Conservative member. In case he does not know him, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) remembers very well that when the then Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau, partly reduced his elevator tax, the ones who immediately, the next day, took advantage of that reduction were not the consumers but the oil multinationals with whom the Minister is now cosily in bed. They absorbed that tax.

We, of the Liberal Party, support job creation, but what we want to know, and what the Minister will not say, is this: Who is going to pay for that? It is a disguised tax increase in his budget, if he cannot give that assurance today. And the Minister wants us to trust him. But, as he will recall, he himself admitted in a press report that, during the elections, he would not reveal his true intentions with respect to terminating social program universality, something he wanted to do afterwards. What guarantee do we have that he is not now cooking up something of that kind?

With respect to job creation, since the Minister hands out over $1 billion to the big oil companies, I would like to know why he should not set $250 million aside for needy senior citizens, for single, separated and divorced people. They too would have created jobs. Thanks to higher income provided through the amendment to Bill C-26, those people would have been regular consumers in need of food and clothing, and they would have created jobs. The oil multinationals do not hold a monopoly on job creation.

Concerning the agreement with Quebec, I might recall that the Canadian and Quebec Governments had signed the NEED agreement but, unfortunately, that agreement was broken by the Government of Quebec.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I said to the Liberal Member that nothing in that agreement will boost the price of gasoline.

An Hon. Member: It is crystal clear.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is crystal clear.

[English]

I say to the Hon. Member that there was some criticism in his province when the change was made in the petroleum compensation charge back in November which resulted in a price rise in gasoline. Did the Hon. Member ever explain to his constituents why the price of gasoline had to go up? Let me tell him why. The change that took place in November resulted from the fact that the previous Government, the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part, did not change the petroleum compensation charge. The result was a deficit running at $140 million a month. The Hon. Member shakes his head. He is displaying his total ignorance when he shakes his head. It was $140 million a month—

An Hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I know, Mr. Speaker, what was going on. I will take the Hon. Member through the figures. The price of gasoline went up because we had to respond to the lack of action by the previous Government because it did not have the guts to change the price of gasoline when it knew it should have. The Liberals knew they were going to face the people in a couple of months and they could not face the music. Instead, the people knew. The people beat them. They beat them and they kept the Liberals out because of all the dissatisfaction that had developed over the years because of lack of governing, lack of understanding and the lack of being straightforward with the Canadian people.

Let me make one other point, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member referred in his question to our ignoring the interests of the people who are not well off in this country. Let me remind him that one of the key initiatives in the November statement was the $400 million spousal allowance that we brought in. The Hon. Member is shaking his head. He does not even know about that. I ask the Hon. Member for Montreal-Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart) whether he has read the statement of last November. If he had, he would not be saying such stupid things.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions. First, there is a deficit in the petroleum compensation account of somewhere between $1.4 billion and $1.7 billion. Could the Minister tell me what the figure is? What is happening to that amount? Has it been swallowed into the general deficit or will the Government try to collect it at a future date?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Members' figure is a little high. I believe the most recent figure is $1.2 billion, which is a large amount. The purpose of this account is to protect consumers across the country from the excessive prices in gasoline.

We have said that we are committed to reducing that deficit, and at this point I would have to say to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) that that is something I will have to deal with in the Budget.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is quoted as saying, when asked about the oil Accord, that we have a $35 billion deficit and we have to start from there. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has suggested that the industry got something like $500 million a year over two years, which is about a billion dollars, in addition to which there is this deficit in the petroleum compensation account. Could the Minister give us a figure? Would he agree with the Minister's figure that at least a billion dollars has been transferred over the next two years? Would he indicate to the House how he proposes to collect that, or does he propose just to let the deficit increase to correspond with that figure?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the Hon. Member that one of the results of the Accord is that excessive taxes on the industry have been reduced. That is clear and it has been pointed out by a number of people, including himself. Let me also point out that a number of expenses are reduced as well. For example, the petroleum incentive payments will be reduced. There are other things which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has reduced in energy expenditures relating to the off-oil program. One cannot isolate one element of a program and say that for this reason the deficit will go up. There are many elements that are taken into account in the broad government finances. That is the purpose of a Budget. I will be setting out how we deal not just with energy matters but with a wide range of matters including the spousal allowance, how we are going to finance it, how we will finance the farm fuel tax rebate, the veterans pension increases and a wide range of other things that I am sure the Hon. Member has applauded as he has watched us over the last few months.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister's reply had to do with the spouse's allowance for widows and widowers. He did not quite get the gist of my question. I agree on that point. But is the Minister aware of the fact that, by restricting eligibility for this program only to widows and widowers, he is penalizing 80,000 Canadians, mostly women whose needs are the same as those of widows and widowers? Those are the people I was talking about when I suggested he might have invested $250 million more. The Minister knows full well that he recoups in social assistance any money allotted to the elderly. I was referring to single, separated and divorced people.

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the Hon. Member that we cannot rebuild Rome overnight. It takes time to undo the damage that has been done. We have taken the first steps in dealing with the spouse's allowance. There are other people in the country whom we would also like to help, but we have to deal with things as they come. They will not all be done at the same time.

I would ask the Hon. Member to recognize that while we can do certain things on the social side, we also have to generate income to pay for the programs. To generate that income we have chosen the energy industry as the industry which has demonstrated very clearly the capacity for a quick fix, if there is anything close to such a thing. I will just remind the Hon. Member of some of the figures. There is 65 per cent or 70 per cent reinvestment now. That percentage is growing fast and it will create jobs. If the industry can get back to the 110 per cent reinvestment that was there prior to the National Energy Program, that is where we will demonstrate clearly that anywhere from 100,000 to 300,000 jobs we have been talking about earlier in the House today will be created and that is how we will pay for those programs.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear that last answer of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That is my point. I want to deal with a couple of matters about which the Minister of Finance spoke and then I want to deal with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

First let me deal with the Minister of Financ. I took notes when he was speaking. He said: "During the years leading up to 1980, to the National Energy Program, the rate of reinvestment of the industry was 110 per cent". The Minister just repeated that a moment ago. That is simply not true, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps unintentionally, he has distorted the facts. I want to give him the facts.

● (1640)

I made a point of asking the Petroleum Monitoring Agency, the Government's own agency, for the investment ratios of the petroleum industry in Canada. The agency replied by indicating that petroleum-related investment in Canada, as a percentage of internal cash flow from petroleum operations, that is capital expenditures upstream and downstream, in the years from 1971 to 1975 was 70.7 per cent for the total industry. As I deal with these ratios, I will note the Canadian part as well as the foreign part. The Canadian part was 93.1 per cent and the foreign part was 66.7 per cent. From 1976 to 1980, it was 75.3 per cent for the total industry, 84.7 per cent was Canadian and 72.7 per cent was foreign. For the years from 1971 to 1980, the golden pre-National Energy Program era about which the Conservatives like to speak, for the total industry it was 73.9 per cent, not 110 per cent. It was 86.6 per cent for the Canadian part and 70.8 per cent for the foreign.

Now I will deal with specific years. In 1978, it was 93 per cent for the total industry; in 1979, it was 82 per cent; and in 1980, it was 88 per cent. It is simply not true that they were investing 110 per cent before the NEP. As a matter of fact, the year in which they invested 110 per cent was 1981. It was 106 per cent in 1982 when the hated National Energy Program was in full swing. Let us not distort the figures. I say to Conservative Members from Alberta that we should not deal in myths. Let us try to deal in realities. I know the Minister unintentionally distorted the figures, but the fact is that his figures were wrong and I will give him a chance to correct them.

Referring to the figures of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency, in the first six months of 1984, the percentage of the total reinvestment was 68 per cent, as the Minister said. Of that, 76 per cent was Canadian and 63 per cent was foreign. This indicates that the industry reinvestment is lower than it used to be. Also it shows that Canadian firms reinvest more of their cash flow than do American firms, the large foreign multi-nationals.

Later in my speech I will show that the new Western Accord was a bonanza or windfall basically for the large American oil companies—Shell, Texaco, Imperial, Gulf and so on. I will send these figures to the Hon. Minister of Finance. I know he is a straight shooter. He should have the correct figures.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have to go.

Mr. Waddell: I know the Minister may have to go; I understand that, as he is a busy man.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have to prepare my Budget.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, he has to prepare his Budget. Before he leaves, I should like to make the following point. I think he is basically—and he knows it too—proceeding on a hope and a prayer that the industry will suddenly reinvest a heck of a lot of money in jobs to make him look good, to save his bacon. If they do not do it, he is the one who will carry the can.

Mr. Siddon: Let him take that chance.

Mr. Waddell: He has to take that chance. He is the Minister. The Hon. Member is a government Minister; he is taking a chance too. This is a tremendous gamble. We simply do not have any studies to show how many jobs will be created. The figures vary widely, from 100,000 to 300,000 and so on. We simply do not have studies. In fact, the Department of Finance does not have particular studies to show that.

I will deal later with some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. However, I remind Hon. Members that through no fault of my own I had the benefit of sitting through all the committee meetings and debates on the Liberal National Energy Program. In fact, I saw all the Bills. Everyone else has been promoted. I sat at those meetings with the Minister of Finance, but I am still in my same position; I do not know what that indicates, but perhaps I know a little about the program. There are some things to remember about the NEP. Let us not deal with myths, let us deal with reality. The downturn in Alberta at that time was a result of many different things. One was that the economy generally was down. There was a recession. While the rigs were down in Alberta, so too were they down in the United States. They were down in that period as well. It was not entirely the fault of the National Energy Program.

Mr. Siddon: They went to the United States.

Mr. Waddell: If my friend looks at the realities and not at the myths, he will see what happened. The National Energy Program had some effect. It had a downturn. Some of those taxes were unfair and wrong. Let us be objective when we look at that program.

I ask Hon. Members opposite to be objective when they deal with the NDP position on the National Energy Program. The Minister of Finance, who is an honest man, is very careful when he deals with it. We in the NDP did not support that program. I am tired of hearing Conservative Members during Question Period and at other times saying that we supported it. We voted against that program more than did the Conservatives; it was a broad program and it had many parts.

I should like to give the House a couple of reasons for not liking the NEP. I thought it was taking the exploration and action out of the western sedimentary basin and putting it in the Canada Lands. The Trudeau Government wanted to control the Canada Lands. It was a power play with the Government of Alberta. The national Government controlled the North and the offshore. Only the Liberals could invent a program in which 80 per cent was given in PIP grants and there was a 25 per cent back-in. I understand oil companies want to drill for oil. They do not want to fill out forms. That is part of the bureaucracy and is one of the problems in the National Energy Program. The NEP was effective in that it emphasized Canadianization as a goal and worked toward it. Also it was effective in that it emphasized conservation. Those two notions have been abandoned by this Government—Canadianization and conservation. This Government has a bad record on conservation and no record on Canadianization. We have to be fair when we deal with the NEP.

Also I point out to Hon. Members from Alberta that Premier Lougheed had a glass of champagne with Prime Minister Trudeau to celebrate the Accord of 1981. The NDP did not sign that Accord. I would tell that to the editors of The Calgary Herald if they were listening. That Accord went sour, basically because world prices went down instead of up. It was a gamble and it did not pay off.

I should like to repeat the motion before us today. It reads:

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to create the jobs required to substantially reduce the excessively high levels of unemployment, either through its general economic policies or through its recently announced energy agreement, the job creation potential of which has made the Ontario Deputy Minister of Energy skeptical to the point where he has said that, in signing it, the Government "gave away the store".

The phrase "gave away the store" sounds familiar. It was my phrase. I used it in the House on March 28. I still believe it. I think the Government was a patsy for the industry. It literally gave away something like $2.5 billion. Today I asked the Minister of Finance where he will find that revenue. I thnk it will be taken out of further taxes. We will have to wait until the Budget comes down to find out. I think the consumer will be hosed in that particular Budget.

Another point which we have to note with respect to the deficit and the windfall for oil companies is the fact that there is a double standard. As a result of the November 8 economic statement, we had a cut-back on environmental matters. We had to cut back the entire alternative energy division, the high-tech division of the National Research Council. We had to cut back on national parks, the wildlife service, the arts, all in the name of the deficit. We even had to cut back the 500 bucks that the average person gets to help insulate his house or the 800 bucks to convert his furnace from oil to another energy source. Why? Because of the deficit.

• (1650)

When it comes to the Western Accord, what happens? We can give the money to the oil companies with no strings attached. This is what the Minister of Finance was telling us this afternoon. He said he met with them and told them that we would need a better performance than that in the old days when they only invested 68 per cent of their cash flow. He said they have to reinvest, but there is nothing to require that. I think this was well put in an article by Jeffrey Simpson in today's The Globe and Mail. He said this:

> The theory presumes that the $1.3 billion in foregone taxes will be translated into reinvestment in exploration, drilling and ultimately job creation.

He then asks what will require the companies to do that. They have not done that in the past. What is to require them to do it in the present?

I want to give some idea of the windfall that we are talking about. Let me explain it very briefly so that people can understand. Old oil, that is oil found before 1974, was found at a cost of about $3 a barrel. It is moving up. It is now about $26 or $28 a barrel. It is moving up to the world price. The holders of that oil will make a windfall profit. They won the "Lotto". The holders of new oil, which is oil found after 1974, which is a little bit above world price, will come down to the world price. The holders of new oil will lose some money.

Who holds the old oil? Who won "Lotto Carney"? Gulf, with 73 per cent old oil and 27 per cent new oil, will have a windfall of $59.8 million. Imperial, with 62 per cent old oil and 38 per cent new oil, will have a windfall of $50.9 million. Shell has 88 per cent old oil and 12 per cent new oil. It will have a windfall of $43.7 million. Taxaco is the big winner. With 75 per cent old oil and 25 per cent new oil, it will have a windfall of about $76.8 million.

If you are going to have a rational energy policy and you are going to reward someone in the oil patch, the last company you would award would be Texaco. It is a large American multinational company with a very conservative record of reinvesting its profits. It is the most conservative company in the oil patch. Why give it the biggest benefit? That does not make sense.

I see a Member from Quebec. I do not know whether he was present at the energy committee. The Canadian Federation of Independent Petroleum Marketers, a very admirable group of small Canadian oil companies in the downstream, said that it got 15 per cent of the share of the downstream. That is the marketing, the selling, the gas stations and so on. I quote the following from its brief:

> Independents are generally cost efficient and provide the only true, effective competition in the market-place.

I say to the Conservative Members opposite that they should insist, as a corollary to this Western Accord, that the Government enter into a profit competition policy. You cannot give $75 million to Texaco and let it continue with its sort of restraint on competition that we have in the downstream market. If you want to have a free market, let's have a free market. That is what Conservative Members should be pushing for, and I hope they will do just that.

In Question Period today, there was reference to the studies of the Economic Council of Canada with regard to what is happening. I notice a pattern here. The Deputy Minister of Energy for Ontario complained about the deal. He said that the figures were inflated. He said:

> Energy Minister Pat Carney may be grossly exaggerating how many jobs will be created—

That was the gist of his remarks. I'm sorry, that was said by the director, the fellow who did the study for the Economic Council of Canada. The Minister of Finance stood up and said that we have a clarification. We had a statement by the Deputy Minister of Energy for Ontario and then we had a clarification. We had a statement by the head of IPAC a while ago and then we had a clarification. We had a statement from some official on defence and then we had a clarification. It is almost too much to be coincidental. When we do have an honest statement, the Government hammers on it and suddenly there is a clarification. That is the pattern here.

Mr. John Helliwell, a distinguished economist from British Columbia, says that you have to look at the effect of giving this big windfall to the industry. He said that if you do away with the petroleum gas revenue tax, it will create 15,000 jobs. However, he says that if you collect that amount in taxation to deal with the deficit to get it back, you will lose 40,000 jobs. Therefore, there is a net loss of 25,000 jobs.

Mr. Siddon: Let's look at his assumption.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister says we should look at his assumption. I say to the Minister that the Government has been unable to produce any models or studies on what it has done. It is a hope and a prayer. That is shocking. I raised today the matter of a document that I received from the Government. That is all the Government has. It analysed the Economic Council model, the model of the oil industry, and the Ontario model, all of which were widely divergent. I quote the following from the Energy, Mines and Resources statement:

> One should not attach too much importance to the numbers given because they are based on outdated and possibly unrealistic assumptions. Second, a conclusion is that given the variety of approaches followed and assumptions made, it is not surprising that different studies lead to different conclusions.

It says that there is no way you can tell. That is what the Minister of Finance, who is a straightforward fellow, got up and said in this House today, unlike the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), who throws around figures of 100,000 or 300,000 jobs. Don't do a con job on the Canadian people. The Canadian people are not that stupid. The Canadian people know that if you are going to give $2.5 billion to the oil industry, you will have to get the money back somehow. They know where the money will come from. It will come right out of their hides.

I have about a minute remaining. I want to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that it should do some things. It will have to take another look at the Atlantic Accord. With the PIP grants gone and the world price dropping, that puts it in jeopardy. It should look at the downstream competition policy. It should upgrade the Petroleum Monitoring Agency so that we know exactly what will be done with the money.

My prediction is that the oil companies will take the money and run. That is what they have done historically. They will repatriate it to the foreign shareholders. I regret that this Government has given up the better thrust of the NEP. That was Canadianization, conservation and an attempt to really get the energy industry to be Canadian-owned and working in an equitable way for all Canadians.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been the critic for the New Democratic Party for quite some time. We can see some progress. We see that he knows more than he used to know. However, we sometimes wonder what he really does know. I would like to challenge the Member. He indicated that the biggest windfall for any of the multinationals will be $76 million. Yesterday, a number of newspapers carried, in a very tiny box, the story that one company operating in this country indicated that because of the National Energy Program's demise, its investment in the year ahead would go up from $700 million to $1 billion, a $300-million increase in investment, to create jobs. That is a 43 per cent increase. Can the Hon. Member tell us which company that was? If he is monitoring the situation, he would know which company made that announcement. Does he agree with the announcement? Does he like its flavour?

• (1700)

Second, if the Hon. Member has done his homework, he could probably tell us how much money the consumers of the country were saved when the Minister negotiated no price increase on natural gas not only once but twice. How much money were the consumers of the country saved by that step and which company increased its investment plans for one year by $300 million as reported in the newspapers yesterday?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, first, I am not going to play Trivial Pursuit with the Hon. Member. If he wants to come over to my house tonight, we will play Trivial Pursuit over a cup of coffee or a beer.

The Hon. Member might be interested in knowing that the companies have been reinvesting since the beginning of this year. Most of the reinvestment had already been made in anticipation of a great many things. This was just an additional windfall.

Mr. Hawkes: The change in the energy program.

Mr. Waddell: No, most of it was already made. We are not going to see a heck of a big increase. The industry was already beginning to be on its way up. If the Hon. Member were honest, he would admit that.

As far as natural gas is concerned, one of the glaring things about the agreement, as I predicted, is that the agreement does not deregulate natural gas.

Mr. Hawkes: What about no price increase?

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member is yelling about price increases. There is no way, given the natural gas market, that there could have been any increase in price. We have a surplus in natural gas and we are selling out.

Mr. Hawkes: How much was saved?

Mr. Waddell: If the Hon. Member wants to listen to me, he can comment after.

The Hon. Member must know that we are selling out our natural gas at fire sale prices. We are exporting it to the United States.

Mr. Hawkes: Four hundred years' supply.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, 400-years' supply. A Minister of Energy rose in the House and said that we had a 300-year supply of oil, and that was when we were selling oil at $3 a barrel. That is why we are in this pickle today. We exported a lot of our cheap oil and we are still doing so. Now we are exporting natural gas. He must know that the oil industry in Canada, for its own purposes, wants to export. It wants more and more money and more cash flow. That is the pattern. However, that is not in the national interests of this country when looking at a long-term energy policy. The Hon. Member should face that fact and rise above being completely xenophobic. He should try to look at the entire nature of this country.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question. It was Imperial Oil, and I congratulate that company. In the last two years, it has invested about $700 million and this year, after the announcement was made, it decided to invest $1 billion, a $300-million increase. The industry, of course, was starting to rise with the election of a Progressive Conservative Government because it liked the tone, attitude and style of this Government. It liked the fact that we wanted the private sector to create the meaningful jobs. Naturally it began to invest in the last quarter. Today the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that things improved in the last quarter and will continue to improve with the Atlantic Accord and the Western Accord.

The Hon. Member is a westerner. Why, despite the devastation of western Canada because of the National Energy Program, does his Party continue to support this piece of socialist nonsense that was perpetrated on the Canadian people? He does continue to support it. He speaks out of both sides of his mouth at the same time.

Why does he condemn the Government for doing something that will not only improve the lot of western Canada but will improve the lot of my riding? In Brampton-Georgetown, there are 52 companies, each one of which I am personally aware, that directly supply the oil patch. It will mean jobs for them. There are 350 such companies in Mississauga and it will mean jobs for them. There are 2,500 companies in the Province of Ontario that directly supply the oil patch. Why is the Hon. Member attacking this so-called windfall to the multi-nationals when in fact that money will mean jobs right across the country?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is deservedly acquiring a reputation for being one of the thickest and dumbest Members of the House of Commons. He literally did not listen to my speech. I would invite him to read it. If he had listened to my speech, he would have heard that we do not support the National Energy Program. I gave an analysis of the good points and the bad points of that program. Why does he not listen? I will do him the favour of listening to what he has to say when he has something to say.

I have already said that job-creation is a hope and a prayer. He can say over and over again that jobs will be created, but the fact is that the studies do not show that. It is a capital-intensive industry. Of course some jobs will be created, but we do not know that 100,000 or 300,000 jobs will be created. It may be better to invest that money directly in the Hon. Member's constituency than to invest it in the oil industry.

Mr. Siddon: That's socialist.

Mr. Waddell: They can yell socialist at me or they can yell whatever they like. They may not agree with me but I suggest that they look at the facts.

Imperial Oil is a better company than Texaco in terms of reinvesting. Texaco is one of the worst companies in that respect. However, there is still a problem with Imperial Oil. The latest FIRA communique indicates that Imperial Oil Limited of Don Mills, Ontario, which is controlled by Exxon Corporation of New York, New York, has applied to acquire control of the business carried on by Super-Park-It Limited, Toronto, Ontario. Imperial Oil keeps on expanding. We are giving it more money and it is going to expand and expand. Some of that money is diverted. It is not simply put back into the oil patch. It controls the downstream and all the small Canadian producers get squeezed out.

I would suggest that the Hon. Member read what I said about the National Energy Program. He should not talk to me about being a westerner. I am a westerner. The West is made up not only of a few multi-national oil companies at the Petroleum Club in Calgary, it is made up also of ordinary Canadians in Vancouver, Lethbridge, Edmonton and Calgary.

Mr. McDermid: Who want jobs.

Mr. Waddell: Of course they want jobs, but we will not create very many jobs in Vancouver Centre by giving $75 million to Texaco. There are better ways of creating jobs, and the Hon. Member should look at them. He should realize why the Government was defeated in 1979. It was defeated because of that kind of head-in-the-sand attitude.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) a few questions, but first I would like to make a couple of points for the sake of clarity. If the Hon. Member were to look at the drilling record for the United States for the years 1980 to 1983, he would see that the decrease in drilling was 7.2 per cent. If he were to look at the same figures for Canada for the same years, he would notice that the decrease was 33 per cent. That is point one.

Point two, he says that there is no increase called for in the price of natural gas. If he were to read the Western Accord, he would find that the price of natural gas has been frozen. If he wishes to follow me, this is in Article 2, paragraph (i). The price was to go up by 25 cents. The addendum to the Memorandum of Intent dated June 30, 1983, in Article C, paragraph (iv), indicates that the price of natural gas was to go to 65 per cent of the TRAC price, and it is currently at 60.4 cents. It would have gone up 25 cents. The Hon. Member would know that because it is frozen, $450 million is coming from the producers and the people of western Canada to the consumers in order to create jobs. The Hon. Member would also know that there is to be a further $150 million decrease in the price of natural gas when the two taxes come off.

Having said that, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. He keeps talking about doing something different regarding the Atlantic Accord because we are to lose PIP. Two months ago, he said that PIP was a giveaway. Now he is saying that we have to do something about it. He should make up his mind. Is PIP a giveaway or should we do something about it? What is his solution?

• (1710)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make three points. One, I accept the Hon. Member's figures on the decrease in drilling in the United States and Canada. He said that it was minus 7.2 per cent in the United States and minus 33 per cent in Canada. That is the point which I was making. I said that part of the reason for that general decrease in drilling, which was reflected in the United States but made worse in Canada, was the National Energy Program. I said that in my speech, and I accept his figures.

Second, with respect to gas, the price has not increased for some time. Basically, the Accord puts off the issue of gas. That issue is still to be negotiated. It is the big problem between Alberta and Ontario. It will be negotiated after the Ontario election, in the fall. It is a hard issue with which to deal. But gas has not yet been deregulated. If gas were deregulated, the price would fall. That would be a big windfall for consumers. But we will have to wait for that deregulation.

Third, he asked about my position with respect to PIP. I believe that my position is perfectly consistent. I argued from the beginning that PIP was wasteful and that it was not the proper way in which to go about Canadianization. But, PIP is going from the East Coast. If we read what the Atlantic Energy Ministers and other people are saying, it provided encouragement. It is the only way in which Canadian companies have been involved. It will now be dropped, so something will have to replace it. An incentive to explore is required. The world market price is too low for Hibernia or the oil sands. The companies will have to be provided with some sort of incentive to drill. If it is not PIP, it will have to be something else.

Mr. Siddon: How about profit?

Mr. Waddell: Well, if the Member wants to go with no incentives at all, the companies will not do it because the world oil price is too low.

I have a couple of suggestions which I have made in the past. One is a tax-based system. The problem with that is that it can be abused just as the super depletion allowances were abused—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. Is the House willing to give him an extra two minutes so that he can complete his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

[Translation]

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of sadness that I rise in the House today to speak to the motion moved by my Liberal colleague. The purpose of the motion is to condemn the Progressive Conservative Government for its lack of interest in fighting unemployment and its incompetence in concluding the energy agreement.

Mr. Speaker, let us recall the first action taken by this Government, or rather by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8. First of all, job creation projects worth $4 billion were cut. Of these $4 billion, $1 billion would have been spent in Quebec. However, this measure was applauded by all Progressive Conservative Members.

If we look at a list of projects cut by this Government, we see first of all the $6.2 million cut from the dairy program, including $2.48 million in Quebec. At the CBC: $75 million cut, $18 million in Quebec. The purpose: to create unemployment. Research and development in the energy field: $60.8 million in Canada, $15.2 million in Quebec. Fisheries and Oceans: $11.7 million in Canada, $2.34 million in Quebec. In housing, and this is intolerable, in an area that is essential and very important to all Canadians, subsidized housing: $9.6 million, $2.4 million in Quebec. In the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, and I intend to give a few more details later on: $29.4 million, $7.3 million in Quebec. Regional industrial expansion, which is very important to Quebec's regions and to regions across Canada: $200 million, $50 million less for Quebec. At VIA Rail: $93 million and $23.25 million in Quebec. The VIA Rail maintenance centre that was supposed to be built in Montreal has been postponed, and not a word from the Quebec Members about this.

As far as student loan programs are concerned, during the election campaign they said they were going to be very open and generous. That was the word used by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Today, Canadians realize it was a lot of rhetoric, because when it is time to give Canadians living on modest and low incomes what they need, he is not as "generous".

The student loans program: $5 million cut, $1.25 million in Quebec. Canagrex: $6.6 million, $1.65 million in Quebec. The manpower industrial traning program, a program that helps re-train workers on the job and introduce technological change in a humane manner: $40 million in Canada and $10 million in Quebec. The Canadian Home Insulation Program: $84 million, $21 million in Quebec. Cutbacks with a specific impact on certain regions in Quebec included $4.9 million that would have been spent on pharmaceutical laboratories in Trois-Rivières and research laboratories in Victoriaville. The Quebec Members are applauding. At least I can congratulate the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) who is fighting these cutbacks. I must say that Members who are doing so in the caucus over there are few and far between, and I think it is important to acknowledge the Progressive Conservative Members from Quebec who do have the courage to defend these interests. Hi-tech equipment at the CBC: $10 million, $2.5 million in Quebec. Natural gas lateral connections, and this is strictly in Quebec: an energy-related cutback of $85 million. Parks Canada: $19.5 million in Canada and $4.86 million in Quebec. Capital expenditures at Fisheries and Oceans: $18.1 million in Canada and $4.52 million in Quebec. The "Vieux Port" in Montreal and renovation of the marina in Chicoutimi: $3.5 million. The electrochemical institute in Shawinigan and the research institute in Edmonton: $3.6 million in Canada and $1.8 million in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the total number of cuts in all these programs . . . When the Minister of Finance announced the cutbacks, he insisted at the time that there would be more job creation and that interest rates would go down. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. What happened? The unemployment rate went up, and not just the statistics. In the newspapers we read that the real unemployment rate is 4 per cent higher, because in Canada we have 500,000 workers who are discouraged and have not been looking for work since September 4. All of this was accomplished by the Progressive Conservatives.

The Prime Minister has been asking Canadians to live within their means, Mr. Speaker. Was the Prime Minister living whithin his means when he received the President of the United States in Quebec? When he had this big party, this big show just for the Conservative Members, paid for with taxpayers' money?

Another newspaper article: When we need help, Ottawa does not show up. (Roger Dagenais, from the riding of Verdun); Le Devoir: Research spending—Quebec is falling behind Ontario. Via Rail is Montreal's loss and Toronto's gain. That is the result.

Mr. Speaker, I see the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) who cannot even rise from his seat to speak to the House. All he does is shout, and the people of Lac-Saint-Jean say he is not looking after his riding.

Mr. Speaker, what was the Prime Minister's priority? The first priority of the Conservatives was typical of this Prime Minister: to go out and buy new uniforms for our Canadian Forces. I say typical, because the Prime Minister's philosophy is that appearances count above all else. As far as the rest is concerned, nothing has changed. And this wasteful exercise ignored the results of a survey in which 60 per cent of Canadians were opposed to this silly decision.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): I am so glad.

Mr. Malépart: I see the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) who says he is so glad about all this.

And now for the next big decision of this Progressive Conservative Government. Regardless of all the promises they made across this country, when the Prime Minister saw that Star Trek's Captain Spock, a fellow Canadian, was more popular than he was, he decided to get into "Star Wars". Mr. Speaker, that is incredible! We do not need Star Wars. What this Government should be doing is fighting unemployment.

In an article by Lise Bissonnette in Le Devoir, we read: Tricky spinoffs—Are Canadians ready to agree to the militarisation of space for the sake of jobs? These are the questions the people of Quebec and Canadians in general are worried about today, Mr. Speaker, because of a Party that conducted its election campaign under false pretences. The Minister of Finance himself said in an interview that during the election campaign they did not tell the truth because they knew they were going to do the exact opposite of what they were saying. In the housing sector, there are Members in the House—and I am not referring to the new Members—who do not even know what social housing is all about. But the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) knows very well that social housing is an important issue in Canada. He is aware of the importance of low-cost housing, co-operative housing, and facilities for retired and prematurely retired people, for low and average income families. Mr. Speaker, the Government is spending $9 million for social housing, talk about the multinationals, nobody listens to the citizens.

Through rehabilitation and renovation programs, the former Canadian Government did much to improve the quality of housing and make sure that Canadians would have suitable housing at prices they could afford. This program was widely used throughout Canada, in each and every riding, but it has been cut back to the tune of $29 million. Quebec was hit harder than any other province by that cut-back—35.74 per cent less for Quebec, only 9.5 per cent less for Ontario. One of these days some Members—and the Prime Minister first—will have to face the music. He will have to stop showing off and find answers to hard questions.

Here are some newspaper headlines: "Social Housing an Urgent Priority", "Federal Rehabilitation Aid Must Be Maintained". There are thousands of people throughout Canada—particularly in the Montreal and Quebec City areas—who are waiting for the Minister responsible for the CMHC to decide whether the RRAP program will be funded to build co-operative housing. Hundreds of projects are still on the drawing board, but they will never see the light of day if they decide to cancel this co-operative housing program. As a result of such a decision, co-operative housing will disappear in Canada, especially in Quebec where it is very popular. In addition, any social housing project carried out as cooperative housing will no longer be within the means of low and average income families, so they will be built strictly for richer people.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that with respect to this matter all Hon. Members in this House will urge the Minister in charge of CMHC to maintain the RRSP program in connection with co-operative housing.

Mr. Speaker, I came here prepared for a 20-minute speech, and I hope to get questions from Members opposite. This may be the only way to get them to rise so that people may come to know them a little. But I will conclude my remarks and let my colleague make his speech. I would simply say that on another important matter, there is still time to do something for all those Canadians, the 80,000 single, separated or divorced Canadians. This will not pass in committee—

Mr. Bernier: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Malépart: The Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) does not know a thing about anything, he sounds silly when he says that. He does not even know how that works. He should enquire, and put pressure on his Minister in order that an amendment be introduced in committee, in May, to prevent discrimination. I am sure that even though the Hon. Member for Beauce likes to pitch insults through his hat, he himself agrees on that. But if he does not, I will send him the names of senior citizens who will be penalized by his decision. In the future, he will get to know what he is voting for.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy hearing my hon. rotund friend speak in the House. He always adds a little colour to the goings on here. I do not think there is any question in this House that Quebec in fact has and is playing its part and, I might say, contributing its fair share, in getting Canada's fiscal house in order. But if all of these wonderful programs that the Hon. Member time and again stands up and talks about were so great, would he tell us why the people of Quebec so thoroughly repudiated the Liberal Government in the last election?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, usually the Hon. Member does a much better job with his questions. I am afraid this one shows some lack of judgment. The programs were in place before the elections. Tory members from Quebec, and the Prime Minister himself promised to do more. But those members would not be here if the Prime Minister had told the people the truth, if he had told them that those programs would be cut. That was the result of the last elections.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about truth. He was around in 1981, as I was, when his Party stood up and thoroughly condemned the then Government of the day for daring to suggest that it put a three-cents a litre tax on gasoline, and then when that Party was in government it proceeded to put 45 cents a gallon tax on gasoline in the next three years. If that Party is talking about telling the truth to the Canadian people, I wish my hon. rotund friend would level with them.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I therefore withdraw what I said. I thought he was a bright member, but he does not recall any difference between the tax and the oil price. The problem with the then Minister of Finance is not just the 18 cents a litre, increase, but what the Liberals opposed . . . I see the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques). Congratulations on returning from your trip. The people in your constituency are looking for you.

What I am telling the Hon. Member has to do with the 18 cents tax which we fought against. Never did the Liberals force any 18 cents tax on gas upon Quebecers and other Canadians. The Hon. Member recalls that Premier Bill Davis, a Conservative, if I am not mistaken, was against such a measure introduced by the then Progressive Conservative Government, and Quebec's Premier, René Lévesque, who certainly is no Liberal but has a chance of becoming one if you insist on doing him in with your transfer payments, also disagreed with your decision at that time.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member is exactly right, Mr. Speaker. The Premier of Ontario was opposed to that tax, but I can tell him as well that the Premier of Ontario was opposed to the 46-cents a gallon taxes—not price increase—that was placed by the Liberal Government on the price of gasoline at the pumps over the next three years. I might add that on June 1, a great number of those taxes, I am pleased to say, will be coming off and this will be reflected at the pumps.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member allowing me to refer to the energy agreement that is prejudicial to Quebecers. He is saying to himself: Taxes are removed. However they are not removed for the benefit of the consumers, but for the benefit of the wealthiest multinationals, to let them make still more money. His Minister told us... The Minister of Finance earlier, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) his Minister, nobody can assure us... The Minister would not assure us that in the agreement which he signed, no price control provision has been included. Even the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), who sits behind you and is still a Progressive Conservative, says so. Ask the Quebec Retailers' Association. They will tell you they do not support that, as long as there is no mechanism to ensure that there will be no coalition, and no oil price increase to harm consumers.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I continually hear from the Liberals and the New Democratic Party that we are giving something away. Don't they realize that this money belongs to the oil companies? They have earned it. The Liberals took so much of it away that the companies could not even invest any. That is why we had a lack of jobs from the national energy policy. The producers earned the money. We are not giving them anything. We are only taking a reasonable amount from them as taxes rather than taking it all away so that there is no incentive. Look at what happened in Alberta with regard to incentive. This is how we differ from the socialists. They do not want to provide an incentive. They think everyone will work for the good of the state. It does not work that way. People need an incentive. They need to make something. That is why they are going to reinvest this money, because they can see the opportunity to make more money. They are not going to be robbed by the Government of every cent they make.

• (1730)

The oil companies came into Alberta in the ealry 1940s without 1 cent of government money. They invested millions of dollars and found scores, perhaps hundreds, of dry holes before they hit oil at Leduc. The incentive was there. They knew that once they struck oil they would make a profit and be allowed to keep most of it. They knew it would not all be confiscated from them as the socialists and Liberals are advocating.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to hear the Honourable Member say that the Government did not take away all the money and that it should provide incentives for Canadians, but while I agree with that, the difference is that you want to give this money to the multinationals, to the wealthiest in our society, while I want to give it to middle and low income Canadians. That is the difference. I also recall what the Hon. Member did in the past. Did he rise to protect the 80,000 people who will be discriminated against because of Bill C-26? I recall that when you, who have just spoken, sat on the side of the Opposition, you were against our making a change in the 6 and 5 program to help the recipients of old age security. What the Liberals did was to take money from the multinationals and redistribute it amongst those who needed it the most.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Mercier (Ms. Jacques) rising on a question or a comment?

Ms. Jacques: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that the statement he made earlier to the effect that I was always on holidays and that I was never in my constituency was inaccurate, because I do work in my constituency and I also attend the sittings of this House. I also have comment about what the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie said earlier to the effect that we were having parties with the taxpayers' money. I would like to ask what proof he has of this, because we have not thrown a party yet while you have been partying for 20 years.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on her second intervention in this House. The first had been written by the Office of the Prime Minister, but she made the second by herself and I am happy that I was the one to wake her up and to challenge the Progressive Conservatives. However, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier certainly does not know politics. She is wondering which parties I am talking about. The last one held in Quebec City for the President of the United States was hosted by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney).

An Hon. Member: $300,000!

Mr. Malépart: That party was only for Conservatives. How many people in your constituency were there? You were able to invite four or five people as a reward for their campaign work. The trip to Russia organized by the Minister of External Affairs was another big party, also some sort of a reward for Conservative Members! The Minister refused to be accompanied by Members of the Opposition, while there had already been another trip organized with representatives of the other parties. Mr. Speaker, there was a big bash for the Queen's visit, and there was another one for Christmas. Everyone remembers all the Christmas trees. There have been a lot of parties.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to reply to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Ville-Marie—

An Hon. Member: Sainte-Marie!

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): —because what he does in this House is not to make speeches, but to give us a deluge of words while being totally bankrupt of ideas. We have the impression of hearing a juke box. It is always the same song and the same old story. A while ago, he said: The people of Lac-Saint-Jean do not see you in the House. The people of Lac-Saint-Jean are not interested in seeing me hold forth in the House as he does. If I dared speak in this House as he has just done, the people of Lac-Saint-Jean and of all Canada would be embarrassed.

Mr. Rossi: Fine, hide behind the curtains!

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I had lunch with some people from the Canadian Forum—

Mr. Rossi: That is not at all relevant, Mr. Speaker. He wants to tell us about his lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: I suggest that the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) should focus his attention on the current issue and avoid making constant digressions.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): As I indicated earlier in my comments, Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to deal with the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) because he constantly moved from one point to the next. He never referred to the settlement . . . you know, the agreement. About the tax on gas, for instance, he failed to mention that they had defeated a Progressive Conservative government in 1980 by—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allocated to questions and comments has now expired. Nevertheless, I am willing to grant 30 seconds to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to reply but very briefly.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I will be quite brief. One member said that my comments are inconsistent. I will point out to him that I was re-elected in a much more difficult period than when he was elected. I was re-elected to defend the interests of 80,000 senior citizens. If the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) wants to ridicule them, that is his business. I am here to protect the citizens in need of public housing. If the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean does not give a damn, that is his problem, but I was re-elected to defend their interests.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) on a point of order.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I have never ridiculed the 85,000 persons mentioned by the Hon. Member.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate with the Hon. Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton).

Supply

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the motion under discussion this afternoon, and particularly to represent my dynamic and forthright colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), who is today in western Canada continuing her discussions with industry leaders and investors.

Major changes to Canadian energy policy have been announced by the Government in the past few weeks. First, the Atlantic Accord was reached between the Governments of Newfoundland and Canada just six weeks ago. Then the Western Accord was concluded by the Minister just last week with the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. These accords mark a clean break with the energy policies of previous Governments. Such a change was clearly required. The previous Government's NEP was, first and foremost, unfair to the Canadian oil industry. It represented an unwanted intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. It embarrassed Canadians internationally through blatant policies of discrimination and exploitation. It cost many Canadians their jobs and resulted in forgone economic prosperity. The economy as a whole was smothered.

These policies of the past have been replaced and now all Canadians will benefit. Of course, energy policy changes must fit within the Government's broad over-all policy approach.

● (1740)

As noted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the Regina Conference of First Ministers, this Government has two fundamental objectives: economic renewal and national reconciliation.

Further, as I have noted, previous energy policies and the policy development process itself conflicted with the foregoing objectives. They deprived the provinces of any strong say in energy management and crippled an industry that could have been a source of strength to the Canadian economy.

The new policies have already begun to work in turning this situation around. Key new intitiatives flow from both the Western and Atlantic Accords. For example, I have learned that my colleague, Miss Cavey, at a meeting in Calgary yesterday, was approached by one of the drilling organizations and told that it has already added two new drilling rigs, even without knowing the details of the Western Accord.

The Atlantic Accord establishes a co-operative regime for offshore resource management that will achieve a number of objectives, including increased energy security and economic prosperity for all Canadians but especially for Newfoundlanders. It will also provide for revenue sharing on the same basis as if these resources were on land. It will further provide a stable and fair regime for Newfoundland, rigorous protection of the environment and fishing industries, and will also improve safety for offshore work, all the while ensuring that the Government of Canada has the ability to achieve the national objective of energy self-sufficiency.

I recently had the pleasure of visiting Newfoundland to discuss the mining issues with the Hon. Gerry Din, the Minister of Mines and Resources of Newfoundland. While there as his guest, we visited the Confederation Building and I met the Premier of Newfoundland, Brian Peckford. Of course, yesterday he celebrated his third victory in Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Layton: What pleased me was that I had observed a Canadian leader in Brian Peckford in the past who seemed to be bitter and unhappy with the relationship between Newfoundland and the rest of Canada. The man I met two or three weeks ago has become proud as a partner in Canada.

The Western Accord outlines three major areas of change. The first is deregulation of crude oil pricing in Canada. The current administered pricing system is inefficient and provides no benefit to consumers. Major energy analysts have noted that they expect prices to fall under this new regime. It therefore puzzles me why anyone would defend the old regime.

The new system will remove unnecessary regulation to free market forces with established provisions to protect consumers in the event of serious changes in world markets.

[Translation]

The second element deals with a complete review of the system in Canada as far as prices and marketing of natural gas are concerned. First the market price will be frozen as a step toward a market based system.

Quebec is very important for us. The price of gas will be 25 per cent lower than the level planned under the previous system. The opposition parties seem to be the only ones ready to defend it.

[English]

The final element of the Western Accord deals with the fiscal regime applicable to the petroleum industry. The changes have removed the discriminatory elements so evident and destructive previously. As well, powerful new investment incentives have been introduced. For example, the elimination of the PGRT on new production will create the atmosphere for reinvestment on a large scale in Canada. As was noted by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) this afternoon, there has been a track record of reinvestment in Canada of over 100 per cent of annual profits, but during the past four years of the National Energy Program application, that rate of reinvestment plunged to one-half.

Elimination of the PGRT will increase industry cash flow and provide a strong incentive to explore and develop new oil and gas resources. It will mean that the major projects, such as Venture and Hibernia, the Alberta oil sands, the Beaufort Sea and the Vancouver Island projects of this country, will be able to attract the necessary capital to be commercially viable. Over-all, these energy Accords represent a major achievement in terms of the Government's objectives of national reconciliation and economic renewal.

It took the previous Government nearly two years of bitterness to strong-arm a pricing and fiscal regime, but we have established a common policy framework within six months, and it is not a forced agreement. It was one which different levels of Governments supported.

Of course, the previous Government totally repudiated the basic aspirations of the people of Newfoundland and was never able to reach an accord with that province. During my visit, Premier Peckford assured me that the benefits to Newfoundland would be very sound and long-lasting. I met recently with the western provinces' Ministers, Paul Schoenhals of Saskatchewan, John Zaozirny of Alberta and Steven Rogers of British Columbia, all of whom negotiated with our Energy Minister. I am aware that they respect the good will which surrounded my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as she presented, with characteristic firmness, the federal Government's position. It is no longer a contestation but a co-operative consultation which governs our country.

The Atlantic Accord gave Newfoundland and Labrador equality within our Confederation by allowing the offshore resources to be treated as if they were on land, in the interest of a strong, united Canada. The Western Accord maintains this spirit of Confederation by ending discrimination against the western provinces—discrimination imposed in a cruel and arbitrary fashion by the Liberal Government's National Energy Program.

Both accords are aimed at ensuring energy security for all Canadians by encouraging and developing our vital energy resources. These two Accords have settled many of the outstanding national energy issues. They are examples of a new process of national consultation and reconciliation.

The age of discord is over. I hope that the Atlantic Accord and the Western Accord will be remembered as symbols of the determination of federal and provincial Governments to work together for the benefit of all Canadians. While each of these Accords has a strong regional emphasis, the benefits are truly national.

I believe, with others, that these two energy Accords constitute the most dramatic achievement to date of the new Conservative Government. There is considerable professional analysis on the record of the immense employment impacts from a renewed energy industry. The industry has already begun to announce investments and revive and enhance investment programs. Potential energy investments are spread across the country, as we heard earlier in the debate, from the Vancouver Island pipeline, to Hibernia oil; Venture gas developments off the East Coast, to northern energy developments, and conventional gas drilling and oil sands development in Western Canada.

A renewed energy industry will mean increased investment across Canada. I remind Hon. Members that about one-third of the new jobs from a renewed industry will be created in the industrial centres of Ontario and Quebec. Thus, a healthy oil industry means renewed prosperity across Canada.

The original natives who made Canada their home brought their energy with them. The early settlers and the couriers des bois were energetic and resourceful. We have been blessed with a storehouse of energy in all its forms. Let us put this to work together.

I would like to take this opportunity to advise the House that in my capacity as Minister of State for Mines I recently released a discussion paper to industry, labour and the provinces which outlines and develops the state of the mining industry in Canada. It raises the questions which must be faced in order to develop the potential that our natural resources have always had. With 20 per cent of our foreign exchange and 4 per cent of our Gross National Product, the mining sector represents one of Canada's strong resource-based industries.

I am pleased that we are already getting feedback from the provinces, from the industry and from labour representatives on how this industry can be structured and reinforced for the future. Our consultation process in the mining sector includes contacts with each of the Mines Ministers. It will be followed up with a second round of review here in Ottawa, shortly after the Budget. We will also be holding a Minerals Outlook Conference. This year's theme is structural change and economic renewal. For the first time this is a joint effort with the Mining Association of Canada. After the Minerals Outlook Conference, I intend to face a number of issues of concern arising from our consultations, to follow up the many private meetings that I have already held with the industry.

• (1750)

The Canadian mining industry needs investment. I think the slow nature of the world market for minerals plus the uncertainties of the regime and the policies of the previous Government have resulted in uncertainty in the mining sector. I am happy to advise the House that in those conversations across the country I have found a sense of a positive future for the mining industry. I am proud to be part of this Government to assist in that development.

As a first step we wish to foster the kind of investment climate that we so badly need. One of the first acts of this Government was to change the Foreign Review Agency and to create Investment Canada.

Mr. Boudria: Sell out Canada.

Mr. Layton: We will continue to work toward making Canada a place where investment once more is welcome.

Because it is a first occasion for me as a Member to speak in this House, I thought I might express a special appreciation to all of those in my home, the lakeshore of Montreal, specifically in the riding of Lachine, for giving me the opportunity to serve in this Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Layton: I know I will be expressing the feelings of everyone ever elected to Parliament when I say that I have a sense of responsibility and, to a certain degree, a sense of awe that I am here as a trustee in this place. I assure my constituents, I assure Members and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that with those experiences I have had in my life, I will be happy to work in this Parliament toward making Canada a place for business, a place for oil accords, and a place for the mining industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Minister's comments about consultation on his discussion paper. I would like to report briefly on a tour I took two weeks ago in northwestern Ontario. It was called past, present and future of one-industry mining communities. We started in Atikokan, a community that lost its main employer, an iron ore mine about five or six years ago. We went up to the Red Lake Ear Falls area which, as the Minister is aware, is undergoing the shut-down of one of its major employers, the Griffith Mine. We went on to Marathon to take a look at how that community and the community of Manitouwadge are dealing with the boom cycle of Hemlo. We found that as a society we have not yet learned to put in place the mechanisms that we need to protect those communities for the day when their resources, whether of the mineral type, the wood fibre type or even the fishing type run out. I invite the Minister to travel that route with me sometime during his process of consultation, to hear first hand from the men of Atikokan in the age group of 55 to 60 to 62 who cannot get a job in a community that has 40 per cent unemployment. I would like him to come to Ear Falls to talk to the families who are worried about the equity they have built up in their homes and who want to stay there. These people do not want to be relocated. Then I would like the Minister to come to Hemlo to see what we could do to protect that community for a time 10 or 20 years down the road when its resources run out. I would be very pleased if the Minister would consider making the tour with me.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus). The conditions he described relating to certain mining communities, particularly across the remote North of Canada are serious. There are two cycles at work, as the Hon. Member knows. The mining cycle is very real. Ore is not an infinite source. Coupled with this is the economic cycle which is often completely beyond the control of the industry of which it is a part. It is often beyond the control even of our own Canadian authorities.

I acknowledge and welcome the opportunity to visit such communities with him. I have already had the privilege of visiting in the northern part of Ontario. I have been to Timmins, and to Kirkland Lake. I know there are serious problems also in the Eastern Townships of Quebec. We are addressing them as quickly and as effectively as we can. I know the area on the north shore of Quebec and what has happened to the iron ore industry there. I know that also is a particular concern. These communities, towns, their people and their families are all affected. Together with the other Departments of Governments that have a responsibility in these economic cycles, it is my hope we will develop a policy that will address and respond to those very real concerns of people who live in a one-industry town, many of which are mining towns.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) on his first speech in the House. It was very enlightening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I have a couple of comments on the energy agreement. Some figures as to job creation have been thrown around. The figure has been mentioned somewhere of from 100,000 to 300,000 jobs. All of these estimates have come from the private sector, from groups other than within Government which have taken a look at the impact on the National Energy Program and said that somewhere in this range job creation will happen. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has been quoting those figures. I think the impact of the agreement will be very significant.

There is one other area of both energy agreements which has not had the attention paid to it that it should have. I am speaking of the unifying force which these agreements have had for everyone across Canada. Over the last 15 years we know that the Prime Minister of this country has loved a good fight. He was an antagonist. He was a pugilist. We have seen Newfoundland argue and disagree with the previous administration. We have seen the West argue, and we have seen Ontario disagree with everybody. We have seen Quebec upset about various agreements. It is interesting to note that the agreements which have been signed have had a unifying force from coast to coast.

I know the Hon. Member is very interested in this subject because it is something about which he has talked over the many, many years he has served in private and public life. I would like him to comment on the unifying side of these agreements and what is going on in Canada today.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). Certainly in all of the discussions in which I have been privileged to share during the past months as Minister of State for Mines there is a sense of renewed goodwill. Confidence in Canada extends from one coast to the other. I made my very first visit to Newfoundland and I was pleased with the warmth that came from that province. This feeling applies right across the country to the West Coast. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, is also very much at home there.

I would like to conclude and to wish all my colleagues a happy Easter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), proceedings on the motion have expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 3, this House stands adjourned until Monday, April 15, 1985 at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned.

BELL CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) for debate, may I indicate to him and to the House that there is a ruling I will be delivering later this morning. Unfortunately, it is not ready at this moment. I suggest therefore that the Hon. Member resume debate and I will be back later with the ruling requested by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have almost completed my remarks, but I was interested in the ruling which the Chair has indicated will be given later today concerning the appropriateness of this Bill since it was introduced as a Government Bill. It attempts to amend a series of what were Private Members' Bills. In light of that I wonder whether the Bill itself should not have been introduced as a Private Member's Bill and argued as a consequence under Private Members' Business instead of taking up the regular time of the House.

The Bill itself is seen by us on this side at least as an effort by Bell Canada to reorganize itself in a manner, as I was saying on April 2 when the debate began, so as to change the structure of the Corporation to make it possible for Bell Canada to omit the cross-subsidization that now occurs between ordinary users of telephones and those heavy users who are in business in the large metropolitan areas.

As you will know, Mr. Speaker, and as many people in my riding are very much aware, there is a move being contemplated by CN-CP. We think perhaps there is a move by CN-CP to get a hold of the very lucrative long distance, big business part of the communications network. Bell Canada would like to be able to supply services between the very large centres and very large businesses. Bell would be prepared to grant reduced rates for high volumes which are evident in the very large metropolitan areas and Bell could offer a lower per unit rate.

What we think Bell is attempting to do by reorganizing itself is to set itself up into a structure that would permit Bell to put its ordinary household telephone service into a separate corporation which would not have the benefit of cross-subsidization available from the very lucrative long distance business rate. It would mean in the end that users of telephones—and this is of great concern to people in my area because they tend to be by Canadian standards in rather remote communities, small communities—would be left in the position of having to pay two, three or four times more for the use of a telephone and some of them will find they will not be able to afford to keep their telephones. It is a question even in very large urban areas as to whether people who are currently on welfare, or on pensions eroded by inflation, will be able to keep telephones. It is extremely important for those people to be as close as the end of the telephone to their neighbours and to services for their medical, social, or commercial needs.

We think the move by Bell Canada to break itself into very small units is not something in the public interest. As I said in my remarks on April 2, we have seen this kind of thing happen with the CPR which gradually divested itself of all its very profitable business and left itself essentially with just the railway part of the business which is perceived as a public service. As a result the public purse is subjected to calls upon it to provide subsidies to keep a very necessary public service going. We fear that is a project Bell Canada has in mind; that Bell is attempting, through the use of telephones in homes, something Bell realizes the public will not forgo, to put itself in a good position to raid the public treasury through the CRTC, which for political reasons would obviously require that the service continue to be supplied.

We think Bell Canada should continue to stay in the organizational structure it now has, to use some of its very profitable subsections of its business to subsidize the over-all community. This is not just because we are stubborn and want to hold things up; it is because we think it makes good economic sense to have sources of long distance business located in every household, whether that household is made up of old age pensioners, welfare recipients, or people living in remote communities.

We urge this House to defeat this Bill. We urge the Government to withdraw it and permit those remote communities and the people on lower incomes to have complete access to the full service available to them now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments? Debate.

• (1110)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to take a lot of time discussing Bill C-19 today, but I have a few thoughts which I would like to put on the record. Obviously this specific legislation is extremely important in terms of the Government's legislative timetable. However, I believe there is a great deal more associated with the points of this Bill than perhaps meets the eye at first glance.

The way I see it, Bell Canada has been operating in a monopolistic situation for some time. It is highly regulated by Government. Government hears representations on a regular and frequent basis by which Bell makes the case that a certain profit is necessary for the continuation of its service. We appreciate that. We understand the need for that general approach. However, when Bell Canada indicates that it must have a return of 15 per cent, 18 per cent or 20 per cent on its investment, then we begin to have some concerns. During these difficult economic times, many sectors of the economy do not have such returns on their investments. Perhaps they are fortunate if they have any return at all in certain sectors. But that is not the issue.

Over the years Bell Canada has operated within a highly regulated environment and has been guaranteed a profit. After years and years of that particular approach, we see quite a radical and substantial departure from that process. While Bell Canada expects to receive its profits in terms of the telephone system and the service it provides, it now wants to take those substantial profits and invest them into other enterprises.

I ask the House to give some thought to this notion. On the one hand we are saying to Canadians that we will permit this corporation to be guaranteed a profit from its provision of telephone services, a substantial and decent profit at that. On the other hand, rather than seeing that profit reinvested into new telecommunications research and development programs, into better ways to provide service to Canadians, or seeing those profits returned to its shareholders, we are saying that Bell can take the profit and put it into some other venture at its discretion or choosing.

I remember another corporation which went through a similar process over the years, and that is our friend, Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Friend?

Mr. Riis: I use that term loosely. Canadian Pacific, again a highly regulated corporation providing in a sense a monopoly service in vast parts of the land and guaranteed profits, has been allowed over the years to take the profits from that monopolistic situation and reinvest them in a variety of economic pursuits.

The people of Canada are providing those profits. Is it unrealistic to expect at least a certain portion of those profits to be either reinvested in research and development in the telephone service or to provide a lowering of rates? We are here as parliamentarians not to find ways and means for Bell Canada to make more profits. That is not our role. Our role involves a multitude of purposes, one of which is to ensure that the people receiving a service from Bell Canada and paying a particular rate for that service are getting a reasonable deal.

When I hear a request from the new Government to allow those profits which accumulate year after year not to be reinvested for improved service or be used for decreasing rates, but to be used for Bell Canada to get involved in a number of economic pursuits, I wonder if we are doing our job. I wonder if the taxpayers of Canada are requiring us to support this kind of legislation which is here for no other purpose than to allow Bell Canada to invest in a variety of other areas.

This is taking place because we as a country have no over-all telecommunications policy. One area in which we take some pride is in fact the telecommunications area. We say that Canada is on the leading edge of a number of technologies in the telecommunications area, yet we are absolutely vacant of any over-all telecommunications policy. We are the second largest country in the world with people strung out along the southern boundary. There are hundreds of thousands of kilometres across this country. To have no telecommunications policy seems to be a real shortcoming.

To be introducing legislation like Bill C-19 in the absence of this over-all, blanket, long-term telecommunications policy seems to really be a case of the cart before the horse. In what context are we to make our decision? What is it we are attempting to do with this Bill? When it was introduced, this Bill simply said that all of the changes had been made and now they have to be legalized. The Government has made all of the changes. Bell Canada came to it with a number of requests and it has now met every request that it raised before it. The Government then said: "Oh my gosh, there were other requests, other groups making comments. The CRTC, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Bureau of Competition Policy and many other intervenors were concerned". The Government ignored all of those folks and all of those groups as well as all of the representations they made and listened carefully to what Bell Canada wanted. It has given Bell everything it requested.

I ask Hon. Members who are assembled here today on our first day back from the short recess whether we are doing our job if we simply put into practice all of the requests made by a corporation in Canada and ignore the representations made by so many individuals, groups and agencies. If we pass this Bill, that is essentially what we are doing. One could raise the point as to whether we are doing our job if we allow this legislation to pass with very little discussion and debate as it moves to committee stage.

I appreciate that this is simply a discussion of the principle of the Bill. We will have an opportunity as soon as it leaves this House and goes to committee to look at some of the particulars. However, this is the time when the particulars at least have to be flagged. We want to hear from Hon. Members on the Government side that they are concerned about A, B, C and D and that they want to examine them with witnesses in committee. However, that is not what we are hearing. We are hearing no debate, just a muteness rising from the benches of the Government. This is a serious oversight.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): We just want to hear what you fellows have to say.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the point that the Hon. Member makes, that they want to hear what the various Opposition Members have to say. That is a fair comment. We do want to say that we are particularly concerned about the lack of research and development in the telecommunications industry, something this Bill fails to come to grips with. As parliamentarians, we have all had over our desks numerous articles and reports about the fact that research and development in the telecommunications field is moving southward, whether it is Northern Telecom or any other corporation that may be involved. More and more of our research and development is being moved southward. It is something that we as Canadians ought to become very concerned about.

This Bill is an opportunity to recognize that particular, apparent process and to require Bell Canada to take some initiative, to take some aggressive steps in terms of guaranteeing that research and development in this critical telecommunications field will in fact continue in Canada. Let us recognize what is going on. More and more often we are seeing corporations moving from regulated areas into non-regulated areas. We are seeing them using profits that they have accumulated in the regulated areas to reinvest into other areas. While this diversification has some good points, and there is no question about that, there are also some very insidious concerns that are being raised by this process.

Earlier today the Government announced regulations to change the financial institutions of Canada quite substantially. For example, a trust company that was unable to get involved with major loans of a commercial nature will now perhaps have the opportunity to open up a bank and call it a trust company bank. There will be another entire set of banks called Schedule C banks in the system. Again, this allows diversification of interest.

With that kind of movement in the market-place arises a certain concentration of power. There are few western industrialized countries that allow for the concentration of economic and financial power as we do here in Canada. The Bill before us and the announcements made by the Government today have indicated that there will be a concentration of power. Trans-national, multinational and national corporations will move into a variety of other economic interests.

We as parliamentarians have a responsibility to the people of Canada. We must ask ourselves if this Bill is in the best interest of the people of Canada. We must ask ourselves if this Bill will provide for better phone service for the people of Canada. The speakers to whom I have listened and the reports which I have read would indicate that it is not clear whether or not this is necessarily the case. As a matter of fact, it looks as though this is part of the process that will result in higher rates for local phone calls.

I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that this Bill gives Bell Canada virtually everything it wants. Bell Canada officials could probably have written this Bill themselves.

Mr. Orlikow: They probably did.

Mr. Riis: My friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), says that they probably did. Nevertheless, they laid out a list of requirements that they would like to see put into legislation. This legislation gives them virtually everything they asked for.

This legislation is being enacted in the absence of any over-all telecommunications policy, and that is really a failure in the development of public policy, particularly in the critical area of telecommunications where there is a great deal of change and where Canada plays a significant role in the international community. This area is very critical in a country as large as ours. Again, I am afraid I must cast some aspersions not only on the present Government but also on my Liberal colleagues. When they were in power for such a long period of time, this critical piece of public legislation was either overlooked or simply never dealt with.

My other concern is that the profits of Bell Canada as they relate to its telephone system do not necessarily go back to the subscribers in any way. The subscribers pay more and more to guarantee a return to the corporation. Do subscribers receive improved service? Do they receive any of the benefits from more efficient systems? Indirectly they do, but financially, they certainly do not. Do subscribers benefit from new and additional research and development? Not necessarily. As a matter of fact, this legislation just may provide the opening for which corporations of this nature are looking that will enable them to drain more and more of their research and development opportunities into another country.

We have many concerns. Previous speakers have specifically identified some of them. We will certainly be raising these concerns in committee as soon as possible. I do ask members of the Government opposite to consider seriously our amendments when they are brought forward. Too often Government Members feel that they have an obligation not to listen very carefully to the points which are made by Government backbenchers or members of the Opposition in committee. However, many of us feel very strongly about this Bill. Members on all sides of the House have spent a considerable amount of time studying it and communicating with individuals and groups who are deeply concerned about the far-reaching implications of Bill C-19. I ask Members on all sides of the House to give fair consideration to the amendments which will be proposed.

• (1125)

Hopefully, by doing that, we will ensure that Bill C-19 will not only provide better services to telephone subscribers, but will also assist in promoting research and development in Canada. I hope it will also raise the appropriate flags in terms of additional corporate concentration and providing certain corporations with an overwhelming powerful mandate when overseeing economic activities in a variety of spheres. We are seeing that in the proposed legislation which was introduced earlier today concerning financial institutions, and it is a similar situation in the telecommunications industry.

Finally, I would ask the Minister responsible to take the matter of the lack of a telecommunications policy in Canada very seriously and place it as a high priority in terms of the legislation which is to be brought forward. It is a matter of critical concern for the reasons which I have outlined. With the introduction of a telecommunications policy, I believe the Government would find that the Opposition Parties would support it with some enthusiasm. A telecommunications policy is badly needed. It is absolutely critical. If we look at other countries of a similar size, we see that they all have a telecommunications policy which is more advanced than ours. It is time for us to update the policy at least to the 1960s, and we should strive to update it to the 1990s.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? If not, we will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I can only stand and say: "Here we go again". What we are doing in this legislation has been witnessed throughout the history of the corporate structure in Canada. We are being faced with a situation which has been repeated over and over again.

Many of the services which have been provided to Canadians began as services which were assisted by the Government and continued by the Government. Our Party feels strongly that these services should continue to be services and not profit-making operations. Consequently, we are very dismayed that the Government has recognized and accepted this corporate power, and is throwing in the additional factor of deregulation. By putting those two factors together in this legislation, the Government is giving Bell Canada an opportunity to make its money-making operations profitable to itself and not to the country.

We can foresee in future years that Bell Canada will tell the Government that it cannot provide telephone service because it is not profitable. Bell Canada will tell the Government that if it wants to continue the service it will have to pay for it. We can look back at the history of Canada and see that this process has gone on before. As the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the previous speaker just indicated, the Canadian Pacific Railway is probably as good an example as we have of this particular approach. What this Bill does, Mr. Speaker, is legalize the reorganization of Bell Canada and it is a perfect example of how corporations, which for many years had a monopoly and a guaranteed profit, are permitted to spin off into different fields than their original objectives and to use the profits made in the regulated fields to make huge capital gains and unlimited profits.

• (1130)

I suggest that what this Bill really does is allow Bell Canada to do in the 1980s what the CPR did earlier. Our Party is very disturbed that the Government does not recognize that it has a responsibility to provide the kinds of services which the people of Canada have had at a fairly reasonable rate for a long time. The previous Government regulated those services so that the population was able to receive that reasonable rate. When 20 per cent to 30 per cent of the population using telephones across the country are at the poverty line or below, any increase in telephone rates is likely to make it impossible for them to keep telephones in their homes. If the industry is deregulated, as suggested in this Bill, we will allow the telephone companies by this Bill and the partner Bill, Bill C-20, to charge more for their telephone service and eventually eliminate the opportunity for some people to have telephones at all.

The CRTC was supposed to be a government agency which regulated communications in the country. The present Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) just last week was very articulate in stating that the CRTC would be doing exactly that and would not only provide the service that the people of Canada want but would listen to them. These two Bills indicate that the people of Canada cannot speak as loudly as the corporations because this Bill is exactly what Bell Canada wants. This Bill is not what the CRTC wants, it is not what the consumers want and it is not even what the Government wants. What we have here is a Bill which gives Bell Canada what it wants.

I suppose there is no better example of corporate control of the Government opposite than this Bill, which is a real testament of the kind of corporate power we have in Canada. Instead of the CRTC regulating communications as it was supposed to do, what we have is Bell Canada taking on the CRTC, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Bureau of Competition Policy and all manner of people who have intervened in the public hearings. It has seemingly fought them all off and got exactly what it wanted in the area of communications. The Government has backed off and produced a Bill which only legislates what is actually already in place. It allows the Bell Canada Corporation to join Canadian Pacific and the other major companies which prospered heavily while they had a government monopoly. When they had established themselves as one of the corporate giants in the country, they then decided they would take their assets and use those assets to control other areas of industry. They now say: "Well, the service that we were intended to provide is now too expensive and you will have to help us pay for it". I would challenge any Hon. Member of the Government to give us any proof that two years or five years down the road Bell Canada will not come to the Government and say it cannot afford to provide telecommunication services at the price the Government wants it to charge and, therefore, it must have some subsidies to keep its operation going, just as the CPR operates a huge corporation which is very profitable and asks us to subsidize the movement of every train it operates.

In this Bill as well we have the Conservative "baby", I suppose, of deregulation which we face in almost every industry across the country. The regulation which has served us well for many years is now being tossed out and what we are receiving instead is the kind of approach taken by corporations like Bell Canada which is that of take the money and run. Bell Canada is almost entirely free in this situation to do as it pleases in the market-place with assets which were acquired from the people of Canada when that corporation had a monopoly. Existing Bell telephone service still remains under the CRTC regulations but without the important financial support which provided the kind of cross-subsidization which made it possible to hold down telephone rates all across Canada. What we will have is increased costs now and increasing costs looming in the future, so that some time down the road the idea of a telephone being available to every household in Canada will cease to exist because the costs will become too great for that 25 per cent to 30 per cent of the population which is already at the poverty line or below.

What we have in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, can best be described, I suppose, as a genuine failure on the part of Government to develop a public policy for the good of the people of Canada. We in this Party fully expect that the analogy which we have presented of the Canadian Pacific Railway is going to happen. In fact, it has already happened to a certain extent as far as Bell Canada is concerned. Bell Canada Enterprise will become rich in just the way that Canadian Pacific Investments has prospered at the expense of the users of CP Rail. This need not have happened as far as the CPR is concerned, and it need not happen here.

When this Bill goes to committee, Mr. Speaker, we need to make sure that we separate the two ideas of service and profit. Like the railways used to be operated, communications in Canada is operated as a service to the people of Canada. But the railways are now being operated for profit and that is what is going to happen to communications; it will be operated for profit in the future.

Mr. Lewis: What is the matter with profits?

Mr. Hovdebo: Profits are okay if you put them in the right spot. Profits are not okay when you make them the be-all and end-all for areas of service such as medicare or telecommunications. These services should not be carried on for profit but as a service to the people of Canada. When we allow services to be carried on so as to make excess profits, we as Members of Parliament are failing in our duty to provide the best kind of service possible for the people of Canada.

I have one more point that I want to make, Mr. Speaker, and that is that we feel that this Bill is simply a good example of how much the previous Liberal Government and the present Conservative Government defer to corporate power. This Government says it has a mandate for change. It has had every opportunity to examine and change this Bill. Bell Canada has given us reason to take a look at its operations with the provocative action of Bell Canada International in acquiring as a subsidiary the Cable and Wireless Company of Great Britain. But this Government did not take the opportunity. So we believe that major changes should be made in this Bill and we should wait for a national telecommunications policy before we pass this Bill into law.

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt to advise Hon. Members of the decision I have reached pursuant to the request of the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

On Tuesday, April 2, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) moved the second reading of Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, and the question was proposed to the House. The Minister gave a very detailed explanation of the history and purposes of the Bill. This was added to by the Hon. Members for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) and Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Later in the debate the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre asked the Chair to examine the Bill to see if it was proceeding properly through the House and specifically he requested the Chair to examine the Bill to see if it should not be classed as a private Bill.

Private Bills are defined on page 891 of Erskine May's Twentieth Edition in the following terms:

> Private bills are bills for the particular interest or benefit of any person or persons. Whether they be for the interest of an individual, of a public company or corporation, or of a county, district or other locality, they are equally distinguished from measures of public policy; and this distinction is marked in the very manner of their introduction.

This definition is confirmed in Citation 700 from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states:

> A public bill relates to matters of public policy while a private bill relates to matters of a particular interest or benefit to a person or persons.

The same citation indicates that the British hybrid Bill—that is, a public Bill affecting private interests—is not recognized in Canadian practice. It also indicates that a Bill containing provisions which are essentially a feature of a private Bill cannot be introduced as a public Bill.

Citation 836 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states:

> Private legislation is legislation of a special kind for conferring particular powers or benefits on any person or body of persons, including individuals and private corporations, in excess of or in conflict with the general law.

Citation 838 sets out four principles which have been followed in determining whether a private Bill should not be allowed to proceed as such, but should be introduced as a public Bill. The first of these principles is the essential one, namely that public policy is affected.

Given these definitions and principles the determination as to whether a Bill is a private Bill or a public Bill should be fairly straightforward. However, the Canadian practice, both in the federal Parliament and the provincial Legislatures, has not always been consistent. I do not propose to go into any detail with regard to these inconsistencies, because the immediate duty of the Chair is to make a determination in respect of Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada.

This Bill deals with a company incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act in 1982 but it is a company which was first incorporated by private legislation in 1880. The present Bill makes provision for duties and obligations which the company must follow but it goes on to place restrictions on the company obviously not found elsewhere. Thus the Bill at once provides for exceptions to the general law and at the same time it imposes obligations on the company. The Bill also goes on to give the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission authority over the company, and the right to make certain orders towards it, as well as to demand certain information from it.

The first 10 clauses of this Bill, including the declaration that the works of the company are works for the general advantage of Canada, are, in effect, a reformulation of the provisions of the private Bills or statutes under which Bell was established and continued since 1880. These statutes are listed in Clause 14 of the Bill. While the question whether a Bill is properly characterized as private or public does not arise frequently, there are precedents that are of assistance to the Chair. After examining them the Chair feels that it must rely on the February 22, 1971 ruling of then Speaker Lamoureux.

In that case Bill C-219, an Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, was before the House and Messrs. Baldwin and Lambert, then the Members for Peace River and Edmonton West, argued long and hard about the regularity of that Bill. Experienced as they were, their arguments did not convince the Chair. In that case, Speaker Lamoureux mentioned a third class or category of Bills, that is "hybrid Bills", a class of Bills that he ruled does not exist in Canadian practice.

Speaker Lamoureux was clear in 1971 that:

—in order that a bill be designated as private it should not and cannot include any feature of public policy because such characterization will transcend any private nature it may have.

He went on to find that where a Bill was not purely private but also affected the public interest, it must be treated as a public Bill.

It is clear to me that while this Bill affects private interests, it also clearly affects public policy concerning, as it does, a multiplicity of public interests.

The conclusive argument, in my view, is to be found in Clause 3 of the Bill, which states:

In the event of any inconsistency between the provisions of this Act and any other Act of Parliament or anything issued, made or established under that other Act, the provisions of this Act prevail.

In the opinion of the Chair such a provision could only be included in a public Bill since a private Act, being an exception to the general law, could not prevail over any other Act of Parliament. It is therefore the view of the Chair that Bill C-19 is properly before the House as a public Bill.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is as follows. Mr. Masse, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

MEAT INSPECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-33, an Act respecting the import and export of and interprovincial trade in meat products, the registration of establishments, the inspection of animals and meat products in registered establishments and the standards for those establishments and for animals slaughtered and meat products prepared in those establishments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has already had occasion to discuss the main points of Bill C-33 in this House. The Minister explained very aptly our reasons for amalgamating in a single Act the present legislation on federal meat inspection and the humane slaughter of animals. With the passage of the new legislation, it will be necessary to repeal the current Meat and Canned Foods Act which has become obsolete. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, elaborate on several points that will, I am sure, help to clarify this debate.

The proposed legislation will make it possible to further modernize and enhance the credibility of our Canadian meat inspection system which already enjoys an excellent reputation, both on our domestic markets and outside Canada. When we consider that the new legislation will replace an Act that goes back to 1907, it is not exactly a luxury. At the time, Canada had only 27 federally inspected abattoirs, and to ensure quality control, there was a grand total of 39 veterinarians, all of whom were, at that time, trained in the United States. Today, we have over 500 abattoirs and meat processing plants licensed by Agriculture Canada, and a team consisting of more than 500 veterinarians and inspectors who monitor the use of the meat inspection legend on between 85 or 90 per cent of meat products marketed in Canada and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, our emphasis on the proper handling of the meat we consume in this country goes back even further. In fact, 200 years earlier, in 1707 to be exact, the French Government in Canada had adopted a ruling that controlled the slaughter of animals, both from the point of view of production and animal health. It is therefore clear that the Canadian Government and the authorities that preceded it before 1867 have had an ongoing concern for both meat production and animal health.

Mr. Speaker, today, in 1985, we are not going to criticize our present meat inspection system. It has already passed the test of time, and I do not think anyone will deny that. However, it is also clear that Agriculture Canada should continue to increase and upgrade the protection Canadian consumers need.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-33 will also put us in a better position to meet the very strict standards set by our various trading partners across the world. This is a very important point when we consider that annually, export sales of meat produced in Canada generate more than three quarters of a billion dollars. Since competition in this sector is often fierce, it is imperative to maintain the highest possible standards for quality and quality control.

Mr. Speaker, it is not enough to introduce regulations to ensure high health standards. The legislator must also close several legal loopholes so that our courts can deal with businesses and individuals, small though their number may be as we have seen in the past, who would otherwise be able to take advantage of such situations with almost complete impunity.

Stricter controls will not only provide a higher standard of hygiene for our domestic products but, as far as foreign imports are concerned, will also make it possible to deny entry of or to destroy, meat and meat products that are tainted or do not meet Canadian standards. Bill C-33 would also provide for charging a fee for the inspection of imported meat and meat products upon entry into this country and if necessary, for re-inspection once the products have reached registered establishments. Protection of the federal meat inspection legend will discourage misuse of this guarantee of fitness for human consumption. It will help reinforce the credibility of the inspection system and further protect the consumer, which is one of the principal aims of this legislation.

Other provisions have been made in accordance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. From now on, a search warrant will be required to inspect residential premises, and the police must be present if force must be used. The Bill provides that the requirements for humane slaughter of animals will apply to all establishments that are federally licensed. Mr. Speaker, at the present time, standards for humane slaughter must be met only when the meat or meat products are to be sold on international or interprovincial markets. One of the provisions of Bill C-33 will make it possible to withhold from slaughter animals affected by chemical, antibiotic or other substances that could make the meat and meat products unfit for human consumption. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the proposed legislation does not provide for any increase in our present inspection services and will therefore not involve additional expenditures.

If we consider the body of legislation being proposed, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that it is mainly a matter of updating legislation that has been on the books for nearly 80 years and is extremely important. Usually, consumers are not often, and probably rarely, concerned about this kind of legislation. The general public depends on the Government and its legislators or the executive authority to monitor the fitness for human consumption of meat and meat inspection and sales both inside and outside the country. People are rarely concerned about this kind of legislation. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the Government I represent thinks it is important, from time to time, to revise and update legislation that has been on the books for a number of years. This particular legislation, and I think we can rely on the opposition to help us, tends to be more technical. While doing away with a number of legal provisions, we want to update a piece of legislation that is important and continue to provide the assurance—and that is probably the most important aspect of this Bill—that Canadian consumers can continue to rely on existing services. Other types of legislation and other announcements made in this Parliament since last November have reflected the Government's will to reduce its spending and to ensure that the Government can also, to a certain extent, recover the costs—

• (1200)

Mr. Boudria: By charging exorbitant fees!

Mr. Blais: Yes . . . When my hon. friend, the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) refers to exorbitant, he must be referring to the deficit we were left by the previous administration, and I agree wholeheartedly. Indeed, to reduce the exorbitant deficit we now have to cope with, we must take very stringent measures to control the deficit and Government spending.

Mr. Speaker, I said a few minutes ago that this legislation will certainly not increase Government spending, and that we must give the Canadian public and Canadian consumers the assurance that meat inspection in Canada, both for the domestic and the foreign market, will be carried out, without having to increase costs. I think this is a very important guarantee. I see that my hon. friend from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is dying to intervene. He will have a chance to do so in a few minutes. Mr. Speaker, because of the foregoing considerations, I urgently recommend that the second reading stage of the Meat Inspection Bill be adopted as quickly as possible.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): On behalf of my Party, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-33. I listened attentively to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) in which he referred to the outstanding reputation of Canada's meat inspection system. That is true. In my opinion, no one will question the fact that Canada's excellent meat inspection system is world famous.

As I was listening to the Hon. Member's remarks, Mr. Speaker, I had the impression that he was actually taking issue with the budget cut-back program of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in which he raised the possibility of higher rates for inspecting meat and many other foodstuffs, which would have the effect of jeopardizing the meat inspection system that the Hon. Member so eloquently praised. I must say that I share his concern about the Minister of Finance's intention to go ahead with budget cut-backs and slash Government spending at the expense of Canadian farmers. I am glad to see that the Hon. Member for Bellechasse agrees with me that we cannot stand still, that we must protest vigorously to the Minister of Finance against these unacceptable increases which I mentioned earlier and about which the Hon. Member for Bellechasse is trying to convey the message that he does not quite understand what I am saying.

In any case, I agree with him that our meat inspection system is second to none and that we must keep it at any cost.

One of the obvious reasons for introducing this Bill in the House is that legislation concerning meat inspection must be made consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, particularly with respect to inspectors who, until now, could enter a private dwelling without a warrant or a court order on the pretext that meat had to be inspected. In my opinion, all Hon. Members will be glad to know that henceforth we will be in full compliance with the new Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We are proud indeed to see that this new Bill is in keeping with the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[English]

The provisions of Bill C-33 are such that they will prescribe by regulation certain inspection fees which the Minister will be able to levy on meat products and certain carcasses of meat products. While of course Members will be agreeable that there are certain inspection fees which should be levied on meat products that are imported into Canada, I have some difficulty with some of the proposals from the Government over the last few months, particularly as they apply to adding inspection fees of various kinds on different agricultural products.

We know that the Ontario Pork Council has severely objected to the proposal to have a 26-cent carcass inspection fee for hogs. The Ontario Cattlemen's Association has also protested, as have several other groups from across the country. These protests have come not only from meat products areas but from several other areas. The Horticultural Council, for instance, has objected to fees being charged on agricultural products. The Feed Growers' Association has said that it will now have fees in the order of $1,000 per grower.

I think we should seize this opportunity to remind the Government that if it is going to reduce the deficit, the last person who should be affected is the farmer. Farmers are very ill-equipped at the present time and generally are not in good financial situations. Farming is a capital-intensive industry with low profits. Especially at this time farmers are in very difficult positions and definitely cannot afford any increase in inspection fees. However, if the Government wants to levy fees on meat being imported into Canada, I must say I will not have too much difficulty with that proposition. We know that several meat products entering Canada do so at rates subsidized by foreign governments. This puts some of our farmers in difficulty, and perhaps it will serve as a lever to bring the prices slightly back up to where they should be, and therefore not continue the unfair competition we have.

I have a few issues relating to specific clauses of the Bill that I would like to raise with the Parliamentary Secretary. First, in terms of application, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about Section 20(b) of the Act. Perhaps he could indicate to us how the provisions concerning the suitability of persons operating registered establishments are to be put in practice. I have read the Bill. There is not too much mentioned in the Bill itself as to Section 20(b) and that particular aspect. The Minister referred to the suitability of individuals in his briefing notes.

What is deemed to be a suitable versus an unsuitable applicant? Are we referring to persons who may have—

An Hon. Member: No Liberals.

Mr. Boudria: I am glad the Hon. Member brought that up. He was just saying no Liberals. I was going to ask if this could perhaps lend itself to patronage. I was somewhat reluctant to bring it up in those terms but a Conservative Member in this House has brought it up. Perhaps the Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) does bring up an interesting point to which the Parliamentary Secretary could refer.

Are we referring here to people who have had a bad record in terms of being meat processing plant operators, individuals who could have been charged several times and who generally have failed to respect the law?

As much as we could be in agreement with that clause, Mr. Speaker, I am a bit at a loss to determine how we could reconcile that clause with the Charter of Rights. If someone were charged 20 years ago with a contravention of preceding legislation, would that individual be deemed unsuitable because of his past? If that is the case, are we again offending the Charter of Rights by suggesting that what someone may have done a number of years ago could be used against him or her in a future application? Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could comment upon that particular clause of the Bill.

• (1210)

I also have a question concerning Clause 22(1) of the Bill. As it is presently drafted, the Bill is organized in such a way that if a person convicted of certain offences under subsection 21(3) and subject to a fine is in default of that fine, no prison punishment will be imposed. Why is that? From a cursory reading of the Bill, it seems to suggest that if the individual does not pay his fine, nothing else will be done to him or he will not be put in jail. I am wondering why it is explained in those particular terms. It is almost an open invitation to someone not to pay a fine levied against him, knowing that nothing else will happen. Perhaps there is a reasonable explanation which the Parliamentary Secretary could share with the House. However, I must say that I am a little concerned about the way in which it is presently drafted, that if someone does not pay a fine levied against him, he will not be imprisoned.

Mr. Hovdebo: They are trying to be humane.

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps the Government is trying to be humane but, all puns aside, I must say that we are dealing with an important issue—the preservation of the meat inspection system. The Parliamentary Secretary said that all Canadians are very proud of the system and that it is second to none in the world. We would want to ensure that the system remains as good and as strong as it is now. Surely an indication that a default in payment of a fine would not be further prosecuted would not enhance the chances of the legislation being observed by individuals in that particular line of business.

In closing, of course our Party is in agreement with the provisions of the Bill relating to the Charter of Rights. We want our laws to adhere to and respect the Charter of Rights. Of course we are in agreement with that part of the Bill and with the general principle of consolidation. However, we are concerned with the general trend of the Government to increase inspection fees. We feel that inspection fees, be they on meat products or any other agricultural product, are for the benefit of consumers generally and therefore should not be paid for by farmers. If ever there was a time when implementing inspection fees for Canadian farmers would be appropriate—and I am not sure there will ever be such a time—surely that time is not now with the very difficult economic conditions with which Canadian farmers have to live. The $32.3 million which will be generated by the Government in recovering inspection fees will not be a saving, if it causes a similar amount of financial default, bankruptcy or otherwise on the part of Canadian farmers.

I reiterate that position on behalf of our Party to the Parliamentary Secretary, in the hope that he will be able to convince his colleague and friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), not to levy those exorbitant charges on Canadian farmers.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the presentation of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais). The Bill itself purports to tie together some old meat inspection laws. It is an attempt to consolidate the old Humane Slaughter of Food Animals Act, the Meat and Canned Foods Act and the Meat Inspection Act and replace them with this Bill which is before us at the moment and is known as Bill C-33.

When I listened to the Hon. Member for Bellechasse, I was left with the impression that the only reason for introducing the Bill was because the old ones were 70 years or 80 years old. I guess they wanted it on new paper. I am not sure that the humane slaughter of animals will be extended to some provincial jurisdiction under the provisions of the Bill, but that is what I understood the Parliamentary Secretary to say.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) saw this as an attempt to bring the Act up to the provisions required by the Charter of Rights, since that is about to come into play. I really question why the whole Bill was necessary if it was only to increase humane slaughter provisions and provide for adherence to the Charter. One of the all-encompassing Bills which occur from time when minor amendments are made to bring laws up to current practice or requirements of the Charter could have been used in this case.

As I look at this Bill and discuss its subject matter, I realize a number of questions were not answered in the dissertation of the Hon. Member for Bellechasse. I hope we will be able to get answers from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) when the Bill goes before committee. I have some suspicion that it is a necessity to go along with the cost recovery program announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last November.

Some of the requirements listed in the mid section of the Bill seem to look forward to that and provide some startling power or lack of power in terms of the frequency of inspection levels program initiated under the previous Minister of Agriculture. It seems that it is being pursued with even more haste by the current Minister. In addition, the frequency of inspection levels program was an effort by the Department of Agriculture to pull back from the financing of the inspection of meat products and some canned products in plants and leave inspections up to the jurisdiction of the plants themselves. In other words, the plants would be responsible for keeping the public's interest at heart and for their own monitoring. They would provide their own inspectors, but the rules would continue to be set by the federal Government. Plant employees would be hired to look after the regulations and to make certain that their employers adhered to the rules. If that is not a conflict of interest, I do not know what is. This Government has proposed to spread that even further so that inspections would be conducted at many more places. The responsibility for hiring and training inspectors and looking after inspections, again in the public interest, would fall with the corporation hiring the inspector.

There are some strange things in the Act. My hon. friend in the Liberal Party alluded to some of them. He indicated that Clause 22 pointed out that if fines imposed as punishment were not paid, they would just rest. He failed to explain that there is a subsection indicating that the federal Government can have a judgment rendered against the person in the next court by way of civil proceedings. In the very unlikely event that the meat packing plant went out of business, there would be a mechanics' lien against it, I suppose. That virtually never happens because these corporations have an almost unending life. From the point of view of the very large corporate meat packing plants, the big three or four, the effect would be almost non-existent.

● (1220)

What worries me even more is when you go down the list to the next clauses. You find, and I quote:

—it is sufficient proof of the offence to establish that it was committed by an employee or agent of the accused—

The accused is the corporation.

—whether or not the employee or agent is identified or has been prosecuted for the offence, unless the accused establishes that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

Management can always opt out of any responsibility by saying they did not know what the inspector was doing. Management hires the inspectors and provides them with the method of operation and tells them how to operate. However, if there is any subsequent problem from the spot checks that will continue to occur by federal officials, management can say they cannot help it, the guy or the gal doing the job was not doing the proper job and it is not their problem. The Bill goes on to point out in Clause 24:

Where a corporation commits an offence under this Act,—

In the unlikely event that the federal spot checker finds that the corporation has been negligent and the court finds it as well, and I continue to quote:

—any officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to the punishment provided for the offence whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted.

The way that is worded and knowing how the meat packing industry operates, probably 99 times out of 100 that would result in the inspector being fined or sent to jail, if that is the punishment, rather than his manager or the leadership of the corporation. This puts the inspector in an invidious position. He or she is required to carry out on one hand the laws of Canada and on the other hand the requirements of his or her employer. The law as we are about to pass it provides that the employer is pretty well hands off. He sets the rules. He pays the employee and he fires the employee. Therefore, the employee is very much under the thumb of the employer, if the employer is not in any way responsible for the actions of that employee. As long as a directive is given verbally, it is very difficult to introduce that evidence into court. The employee has no way to go except to be fired and take the punishment that is meted out under this Act. The employer simply continues on his merry way, breaking the intention of the laws of Canada. He runs through a lot of employees, making them the scapegoats for the company's actions.

There are some loose ends in this proposal that will have to be checked in committee. I am truly sorry that the Minister was not here to explain why this Bill has to be brought in at this time. The explanation given by the Parliamentary Secretary only focused on humane slaughter, to which no one objects. It was in the old Act. It provided adequate safeguards whereby animals going into slaughter would be treated humanely and slaughtered humanely. That is not an adequate excuse for introducing a new Bill. The argument that this brings the search and seizure provisions in line with the Charter is not a legitimate excuse for bringing in the Bill. I suspect that this is very much one and the same as a necessary contribution to a carrying out of the cost recovery process that was initiated on November 8 last.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture did not deal with that. I hope we will be given ample opportunity to discuss this with the Minister when the Bill goes to committee. It is extremely important because, under the proposed extra charges, in some cases the small processors will be forced out of business. That will be as a result of the fees they will be charged. They are not in a category where current regulations permit them to do their own inspection. They must have a federal inspector, both ante-mortem and post-mortem. A veterinary inspector has to make certain the animals were healthy and free from residue, antibiotics, before going into the slaughterhouse. They have to do a post-mortem inspection to make certain there are no anomalies that may make the meat unfit for use.

In those provinces which make use of federal inspectors, there will be a minimum charge of $125 per plant. A lot of these plants only slaughter or process a few dozen head per day. This will run their costs close to an extra $10 per head compared with their counterparts in the larger centres. It will much reduce their competitive ability. It continues a process that has to be slowed down of concentrating economic activity in very large centres to the disadvantage of the very small.

There are vast spaces in this country between the metropolitan centres. The economy of this country cannot survive if those centres are reduced to the point where they cannot supply basic goods and services. The populations of those areas will ultimately be forced out of the hinterland and into the metropolitan areas if this kind of policy continues. Frankly, I do not see how Canada can continue to make way for an economic recovery when vast regions of the country upon which that recovery is based are put at such a disadvantage that there can be no economic activity taking place there. It is discriminatory to small businesses, the producers as well as the consumers who would prefer to use local products, slaughtered and processed in the small communities.

The questions raised by this Bill, while not raised by the Minister, are questions that must and will be raised in committees. Canada's farm community, Canada's food processing and meat processing industry require the answers. It is not in the best interests of Canadians to come in with a program as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did last November 8 which discriminates against small businesses and small communities to the advantage of the very large centres and the very large processing plants.

We have some difficulty with this Bill since it leaves far more questions than were answered by the Hon. Member who introduced it for the Government. We hope that when we get to committee the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and his officials will have clear and straightforward answers and will not try to hide and stonewall as sometimes has been the wont of Ministers of Agriculture, both past and present, when appearing before the committee.

• (1230)

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the discussion on Bill C-33. The Bill is not as ominous as the two previous speakers have tried to make it out to be. As the Bill states, it is simply an Act respecting the import and export of and interprovincial trade in meat products, the registration of establishments, the inspection of animals in registered establishments, the standards for these establisments and the standards for animals slaughtered and meat products prepared in these establishments. As the Member who spoke previously said, this Bill has been introduced to update some of the other Acts and to put everything under one cover. These Acts include the Meat Inspection Act, the Humane Slaughter of Food Animals Act and the Meat and Canned Foods Act. Most of these regulations have now been brought up to date.

I had the pleasure of working under the old Health of Animals Act and the Meat Inspection Act for several years after graduating from the Ontario Veterinary College. As other Members have said, our meat inspection system is the best in the world and I can certainly attest to that. We can rest assured that anything that has the "Canada Approved" stamp on it is respected all over the world.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are two inspection systems in Canada, the federal inspection system and the provincial inspection system. Anything that is exported or goes from one province to another has to have the federal stamp on it. Anything that is used within the province of origin pretty well falls under the meat inspection system of that particular province although there is nothing to prevent a federal meat inspector from also acting in that capacity.

Ante-mortem inspections are carried on by veterinarians at all plants in order to determine whether or not anything peculiar is evident at that time. This prevents the wrong animal from going to slaughter. Quite often, very little is done at ante-mortem inspections and the key role is played when the animals are slaughtered on the killing floors. I can say from the outset that there is a great deal of co-operation received from every person who works in a slaughterhouse or abattoir. All inspectors receive the utmost of co-operation for the simple reason that most of a plant's employees buy their own meat at that plant and they would not want to sell anything that they would not want to eat themselves. Some of those people have worked in abattoirs for 25, 30 or 35 years and they have very keen eyesight, to say the least. They were certainly of great help to us when we were inspecting in those plants.

There is nothing in the Act that has anything to do with inspection charges. I read every one of these clauses very thoroughly and none of them deals with that. I do not think that it is quite right to read something like that into Bill C-33. As well, the issue of spot checks was raised. There are no spot checks that take place at the time of the actual slaughter of the animal. Those inspections are done very, very thoroughly under the jurisdiction of a veterinarian with the assistance of primary products inspectors who actually do the knife work. The primary products inspectors are supervised by the veterinarians and they certainly do a very excellent job. They are quite qualified to do what they are doing. It is up to the veterinarian to look at carcasses that have been railed out for some reason or other by the primary products inspectors.

The number of veterinarians employed by the federal Department of Agriculture is in the vicinity of 273 at the last count. They carry an extensive responsibility in assuring that we do have the best inspection system in the world and that our products are very well received. Of course, there are instances when inspectors from other countries will come to Canada just as inspectors from Canada have the right to go to the plants in other countries. Other inspectors come here to make sure that our plants are adequate and we go there to make sure that their plants are adequate before we actually allow the importation of their products into our country.

As I read them, the regulations do nothing more than update the old regulations that have been in existence since almost the turn of the century and, as I mentioned earlier, bring them under one cover so that they can be more easily scrutinized and followed by the professionals in the inspection system under Agriculture Canada.

There is not much more I wish to say except that I welcome these regulations. Certainly they will go a long way toward updating the whole process of the meat inspection system and giving the authority necessary to keep our inspection system on the high level it is at present.

Right now we are short of veterinarians in the public sector both provincially and federally. This is due primarily to the fact that there are not enough graduates from the three veterinary colleges in Canada. Many of those who graduate go into private practice and this makes it very difficult for the Governments to employ them. The new veterinary college that will be opening in Prince Edward Island in the very near future will hopefully alleviate the problem and enable us to fill these more than 100 positions in the federal public sector that are vacant. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me these few moments to comment on Bill C-33.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I understood the Hon. Member to say that he thought that this Bill had nothing to do with the implementation of fees and that it was not necessary as a part of the package to implement the cost recovery program. I wonder if he would care to comment on Clause 20, Subclause (g), in which it is indicated quite clearly that some of the powers that will be provided under this Act will include provisions for the inspection of establishments and registered establishments and the animals and meat products in registered establishments and—this is the point at issue—prescribing the fees payable therefor. Subclause (h) provides for the re-inspection of meat products and also prescribes the fees payable therefor. If it is not the Government's intention to use this Act as a means of providing for fees, is the Government prepared to exclude those particular words when we get into committee?

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, nothing has been decided regarding whether or not fees will be charged. There are ongoing discussions between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and this sector as well as other sectors of the agricultural industry.

Fees could also apply to the fact that the establishments always paid for overtime. If the inspector had to be on overtime, it was the duty and responsibility of the plant to pay that overtime. Those subclauses could very well apply to any overtime that may be charged, as was the case on many, many occasions when I was with the Department in that capacity.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like it made clear that the Hon. Member is apparently now telling us that this does give the power by regulation to impose those fees and that he does now recognize that there is such a power in this Act.

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, I said no such thing. I said that fees could mean overtime as well. As I said earlier, nothing has been decided about whether or not there will be extra charges as far as inspections are concerned. These discussions are still ongoing and nothing has yet been determined.

• (1240)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat confusing that an economic statement was presented to the House on November 8 and, when it pleases them, Government Members say that all of the items which were proposed in that statement are not the intention or the policy of the Government. If it was not the intention of the Government, why did it bring forward those items? If it was the intention of the Government to create discussion, why were those items not presented in the form of a study or discussion paper? The practice over the last 100 years has been, when an economic statement is presented, that it becomes the policy of the Government. I cannot understand why Members are deluding themselves into thinking that the economic statement and the position of the Government is somehow not now the policy of the Government. There has been no indication that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is willing to forgo the money which he is intending to collect, or the money which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will collect for him. The Minister of Agriculture has not indicated that he is willing to forgo that amount of money. Therefore, why do Government Members insist on telling us that these are matters which are still being considered when it is quite clearly the policy of the Government, and the Minister of Finance who needs the extra $65 million and who will cut $33 million from the Department's estimates?

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would take the trouble to look at former Acts covering the health of animals and the Meat Inspection Act, he would see that the legislation was very similar and that the overtime period which inspectors were required to work was described as fees. I would suggest that the Hon. Member take a look at those Acts, which have been in effect since the turn of the century. If I am not mistaken, the Hon. Member will discover that those Acts are the same as this legislation.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have great difficulty understanding why the time of the House is being taken up with the regurgitation of Acts and powers which have existed since the turn of the century if this new legislation will not do anything differently. Why are we wasting our time if it is exactly the same?

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we are wasting time. We are attempting to put everything under one cover. If the Hon. Member has any idea of the difficulty in working with several Acts, he would realize that a lot of time was wasted in that respect. Now that everything is under one cover, it is much easier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) on debate.

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate and to set the record straight with respect to statements which were made by previous speakers.

Our meat inspection system is recognized world-wide as the best in the world. For people to cast aspersions on the system does not serve agriculture or the meat packing industry well.

The system has not only protected consumers, it has allowed them the luxury of having the full confidence that all foods that they buy that bear the "Canada Approved" stamp will be wholesome and free from bacteria or germs. There has been no thought of reducing the inspection or increasing the costs under the cost recovery program. It has simply been a matter of redistributing the costs in order that the people who benefit from the inspection will pay a share.

The Minister promised from the very outset that he was prepared to negotiate with all the commodities and that inspection fees would not be imposed until an agreement was reached with the commodities on a fee structure.

As I previously pointed out, our major plants have a world-wide reputation. I want to assure Hon. Members opposite that those plants will do nothing to harm that reputation. Our meat packers export a tremendous volume of products. The only way in which they can maintain the ability to export those products is through maintaining their high standards.

It was mentioned that the plants were involved in the hiring of inspectors. I would suggest that that is not correct. Federal inspectors are hired by the federal Government, and therefore they come under the jurisdiction of the federal Government.

The allegation that this Bill was introduced simply to facilitate the implementation of cost recovery in inspection services is erroneous. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has had that authority all along and this Bill will not change that authority.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to set the record straight. I look forward to questions from the Opposition on the points which I have raised.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, quite rightly the Hon. Member pointed out that we have a good inspection service in Canada which is recognized world-wide. We are prone to say that we have the best, but in some cases we still must take second place to the United States. The United States does not always recognize our standards as being equal to their standards. The United States sends their inspectors to Canada, and occasionally they have been known to turn down some of the plants with standards which we considered adequate for the export of meats. In some cases the United States considered the standards to be inadequate and our plants had to change their standards to suit the Americans in order to continue with the shipments. While our standards may be the highest in the world, they are not always perceived to be so by some of our major customers.

The Member pointed out that the system was in place and that there were no changes proposed in this legislation. I must return to my previous question: If there are no changes proposed in this legislation, and as the legislation has existed for 70 or 80 years and is well understood by everyone involved, why is the Government introducing it?

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), I will tell him that I did not indicate that there were no changes in the Bill. There are changes in the Bill. Those changes mainly deal with streamlining the legislation and addressing the sections which pertain to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. He also indicated that the Americans do not necessarily accept our inspection system and that they send their own inspectors. I agree with him. That is absolutely correct. However, we also send our inspectors to their meat plants. It is a reciprocal agreement which allows the plants to ship products back and forth across the border with limited interference.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) said in his preamble that he would set the record straight and correct those who had cast aspersions on the meat inspection system. As I remember from the debate which took place, the Parliamentary Secretary began his remarks by indicating that Canada has the greatest meat inspection system in the world. I said the same thing, and if I remember correctly, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) also began his remarks in a similar manner. I am wondering, was the Hon. Member referring to debates which happened in this House or elsewhere?

● (1250)

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I would have to agree with the Hon. Member that he did start his preamble by saying that we had one of the best systems in the world, but he then started to cast doubts about certain Sections within the Act.

Mr. Boudria: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. Fraleigh: It has a lot to do with it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I just want to add very briefly that recognizing we have a good system does not mean that I approve of everything the Government does. For this Government to think that it is always on the side of righteousness and that anyone who even questions its legislation is somehow on the wrong side of the fence just goes to explain to you, Mr. Speaker, that very arrogant attitude which is developing in the minds of Hon. Members of this Government. After only a few months in office, the attitude that we in this House cannot even stand up and question sections of this Bill because if we question this Bill we must have something against the agricultural industry is preposterous, and the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh), who knows a lot more about agriculture than most Hon. Members of this House, should know better. He should not make ridiculous statements like that.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to this Bill being referred to committee and the Hon. Member coming to committee on a regular basis to debate it. The only times I have seen him show up at meetings of the agricultural committee have been when he simply wanted to score political marks rather than be constructive. I look forward to seeing him participate in the debate in committee.

Mr. Boudria: You show up too.

Mr. Fraleigh: I will be there.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been some very valid questions raised with regard to some of the sections in the Bill which I will attempt to answer, hopefully, to the satisfaction of Hon. Members opposite. If I have any time left I will make a few general comments on the Bill.

First, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) raised a couple of good questions. One question had to do with Section 20(b) of the Bill which proposes to separate the registration and licensing of a meat packing establishment. Our concern is that presently an establishment is licensed and if there is a problem associated with the continuation of that facility, the Government has no choice but to simply delicense the operation and it ceases to function. What is proposed in this Bill is to register an operator and license the plant. That is very similar to what is done with an automobile on the highway. We license the vehicle and license the operator to drive it. If there are troubles with the operator, we simply take away his operator's licence. The vehicle itself can still operate.

In the case of the meat packing establishment, there is presently no provision for separation. Therefore, if there is a problem we simply have to shut the plant down, which I do not believe serves anyone very well. What we are proposing in the Bill is to separate the operator from the establishment so that if there is a problem with the operator, we can stop the operator. The establishment itself will still be licensed and can be operated by someone else which will provide, hopefully, the opportunity for some continuity of service to the producers in that area. I think that makes reasonable sense. If there are some concerns with the way that procedure is to be carried out, those issues can be raised at committee and if there is a problem we can certainly look at it. I hope that clarifies that section.

With regard to Section 22(1) which was raised by the Hon. Member, it is my understanding that Section 21(3) ahead of it has no provision for a jail sentence. It is simply a fine. The legal opinion is that we cannot then come down to a subsequent section of the Act and by the back door make provision for a jail sentence. That section, as it was explained to me—I am not a lawyer but it makes sense to me—is put there to be consistent with the Act. I hope that answers the Hon. Member's question with regard to Section 22(1). We are just being consistent throughout the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) expressed concern with Section 24. Frankly, I do not understand the concern he raises because, as I read the section, it is very clear that the section is designed to make the officers and people associated with the operations of the company financially liable so that they will do exactly the opposite to the concern the Hon. Member raised in his question. Again, if there is some possibility of another interpretation, then I think that is something which should certainly be raised at committee. As I understand it, it is not the intention of the amendment in this Bill to shift the responsibility for any problems which may come about to the inspectors. As I read the section in the Act, it does exactly the opposite. And if my interpretation is correct, then I think that should satisfy the concern of the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre.

With regard to the question he raised about Section 20(g) and 20(h) of the Bill, I can tell him that this is nothing new. The provisions to provide for fees are in the present legislation. There really is nothing new. So to say that what is being done by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) with respect to cost recovery in Section 20(g) and Section 20(h) in this Bill is something new is not correct, because there are provisions in the present legislation for fees to be prescribed.

With respect to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) that we have the best meat inspection service in the world, I think that is certainly the case. If we wanted to be a little more modest about it, we might say that there are no meat inspection services around that are any better—which is another way of saying we have the best. I have been in some of the plants mentioned by the Hon. Member but have not worked under the Act, as has the distinguished Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) who is probably as good an authority in this House as we are going to have. I believe we should pay attention to him when he says it is a lot better to work under one Act than to have three or four separate Acts where sometimes there can be mixed signals. Essentially, that is the intention of this Bill.

Going back to the question of how Canada's meat inspection service works, I agree that we do have a very good meat inspection service and the consumer in this country is very well served by it. But that does not mean we cannot improve it even more, especially when we realize what goes on back and forth across the border. Sometimes it gets to be a contest between the different inspectors on each side of the border as to who can be the most picky about the conditions, and I want to suggest that in terms of having some of our plants delicensed, that is more of the reason than our falling down on our side of the border with respect to having a well qualified meat inspection service.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill which I think the Government should take responsibility for. It is something which is going to consolidate various Acts and make the whole system work a little better. Hopefully we will find the process a little easier to administer and better understood by the people to whom it applies. It will also be a little more economical to administer. It does provide some additional protection to consumers in the sense that there is provision to reinspect meat products coming in from other countries, which was not there before. It also provides additional protection for the humane slaughter of animals. As I understand it, the present humane slaughter requirements apply only for shipment outside of the province. If the product was not going to move out of the province and there was some question about it, it was previously difficult to make the humane slaughter of animal provisions work. This Bill eliminates that problem because it applies to all products regardless of whether they travel outside of our borders or not. It further protects against the misuse of seals for grading and inspection. I think this is a Bill which should go to committee and if there are some legitimate concerns, and there have been some good questions raised here this morning, I am sure the Minister will be more than happy to take them into consideration in looking at amendments to the Bill.

It is getting very close to one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Bill—

Mr. Althouse: Call it one o'clock.

Mr. Hovdebo: Perhaps I can ask that question after lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS CHEMICALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a leak of the highly toxic chemical PCB occurred between Kenora and Vermilion Bay from a tractor trailer carrying this chemical from Montreal to Edmonton for disposal. As you know, this substance has two effects which we are all concerned with damage to the environment, because PCBs in a liquid state persist in the environment and do not break down, and, of course, the harm to human health. Will the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) give leadership, initiate talks with her provincial colleagues, and put pressure on them to have this problem tackled through technological disposal within each province rather than having waste hauled thousands of kilometres across the country to disposal sites?

This matter falls under provincial jurisdiction, but the Minister of the Environment should show leadership by calling a meeting in Ottawa with her provincial colleagues to discuss better management of waste and resolve the problem of transprovincial shipments of hazardous chemicals.

WOMEN

SEARCH FOR EQUALITY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, April 17, women will take a very important step in their search for equality, for on that day, Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms will come into force.

This section prohibits any discrimination based on sex, among other things, and that is a significant victory for women since it will now be possible to take legal action to uphold their rights.

The Legal Education and Action Fund has been established for that purpose. In a way, this non-profit organization will be used as a means to defend women's rights. It will use the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to help women bring before the courts any case of discrimination against them.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to urge all Hon. Members of the House to wear the "A Date With Equality" button. Wednesday will be a memorable day for all Canadians, women and men alike. After all, the best deals are made in an ambience of equality.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GROWING OF SEMI-DWARF WHEAT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, if one were to set in motion a process to study the merits of legalizing the use of marijuana, you would not expect the process to be carried out by someone who had just planted 100 acres of the crop. That would not be logical nor acceptable. So what can we say about a very real and similar case before us regarding the use of unprescribed semi-dwarf wheats? They are not now licensed in Canada because they are of lower quality than current spring wheat varieties. Their being undistinguishable leads inevitably to mixing and the consequent downgrading of Canada's current pre-eminent world position as a most reliable supplier of top quality wheat, wheat which can be blended with domestic wheats of importing countries everywhere.

It is no accident that Canadian granaries are nearly empty at the end of each crop year at a time when American and European stocks have been building. We have consistently offered superior quality, and that quality has been beyond question.

The Government has decided to review the admissibility of the undistinguishable and therefore currently unlicensed varieties, which is its prerogative, but should the job be handled by a man who admitted in this House to growing such varieties? How can the report be deemed to be objective? These varieties cannot now be licensed in Canada or legally imported into Canada. Since the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has admitted that he is guilty as charged, I urge him to turn over the responsibility for reviewing this matter to someone in a less compromising position, in the interest of maintaining the credibility of this multibillion dollar industry in the eyes of our customers abroad.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SOVIET UNION—MINISTER'S REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) displayed great courage during his recent trip to the Soviet Union when he raised the matter of political prisoners languishing in Soviet labour camps, and in particular the case of Danylo Shumuk, one of many unjustly imprisoned Ukrainians whose families in Canada have been waiting many years to be reunited with them. On behalf of all freedom-loving Canadians concerned with human rights, I convey to the Minister their support, admiration, and pride that the Government of Canada has the fortitude and compassion to come to the defence of persecuted human rights activists incarcerated for exercising the right to live peaceably in the global community.

As a signatory of the 1975 Helsinki Accord, the Soviet Union is responsible for upholding the provisions of family reunification, freedom of conscience, freedom of travel, freedom of thought, and freedom of religion or belief. It must be held accountable for flagrant violations of that agreement. Future agreements with the Soviets hinge on their willingness to honour past agreements.

After many years of silence by the previous Liberal Government, we are happy to announce to Canadians that the Progressive Conservative Government actively defends, and will continue to defend, the rights of all persons who are exiled, persecuted, or unjustly imprisoned.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTERIM PAYMENT

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, many of us from Saskatchewan have welcomed this crop year's interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. It comes as good news that the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has announced the interim payment at $450 million. This is the largest single pay-out under this program, and for Saskatchewan farmers it will mean $254.6 million. Farmers rightly claim that the grain stabilization program involves a large amount of their own money. They are correct, but in the past they suffered under a Liberal Government which never managed the program effectively and neglected western Canada. This pay-out now means a significant amount of money will be in the hands of producers before seeding.

Prior to the election our Party promised a fair and flexible grain stabilization program. The farmers wanted this, and they wanted our Government. Another promise made, another promise kept.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TAX CREDIT PROPOSAL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, volunteers, more than two million of them, work in thousands of organizations in fields as diverse as amateur sports, dramatics, health and welfare. If paid, their work would cost Governments billions of dollars. In this time of recession they are finding it increasingly difficult to finance their activities.

For a number of years the voluntary organizations called on the Government to eliminate the automatic $100 deduction for charitable purposes permitted to all income tax payers, which the former Government did, and replace it by a give and take option whereby every taxpayer would be given a 50 per cent tax credit for any contribution to a recognized charity. Such a method would eliminate the present unfair situation whereby people with high incomes, who pay income tax at a higher rate than people with low or middle incomes, can get a bigger deduction.

This proposal was endorsed by the NDP, and by the Progressive Conservative Party when it was in the opposition. I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to incorporate this principle in the Income Tax Act when he brings forth his next Budget.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

CONTRIBUTION MADE BY VOLUNTARY SECTOR

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay homage to society's most innovating sector, the voluntary sector, which accounts for about 1.7 per cent of our GNP, employs nearly 200,000 people, and constitutes a network through which close to 25 per cent of Canadians generously give their time and energy.

This being the National Week of the Voluntary Sector, I would urge Hon. Members to consider the contribution made by that sector. It has proved able to find new and moderately-priced solutions to a wide variety of individual and collective needs. This spirit of community initiative has to be acknowledged as having a significant economic impact. There are many good reasons to keep a closer contact with the voluntary sector. First, it is the most efficient means to promote the active participation of citizens and to make Canadians prouder of themselves, while at the same time being a boon to society as a whole. Participation in community or cultural organizations and working together to meet the needs of the community create a confident and resourceful society.

In addition, the voluntary sector has shown leadership in job training. Youths, native women and the handicapped alike have all found promising training prospects and, in many instances, full time jobs.

I want to take this opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her allotted time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTANCE OF SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform Parliament of the urgent need to act on behalf of our Canadian sugar-beet producers. In Ottawa today we have over 100 representatives of the 1,500 Canadian sugar-beet producers, from Alberta, Manitoba, and Quebec. Those people also represent approximately 1,200 industrial jobs in the three provinces, plus over 5,000 indirect jobs in machinery, fertilizer, chemical, and services industries.

Canada is the only western nation of some 41 which does not protect its domestic sugar industry. Eighty-five per cent of world sugar trades at prices set by the Governments of producing countries. Canada's price is determined by the 15 per cent which is world surplus. While this is good for consumers at the present price of four cents a pound, we should be reminded of what can happen if the price returns to its 1975 level of 83 cents a pound U.S. We need a policy which protects consumers during times of high prices and still maintains our industry during temporarily depressed world markets.

Our current domestic production of 12 per cent of consumption acts as our only real measure of protection. If we lose this, we will be 100 per cent dependent on large multinational companies and foreign Governments to supply this major staple in Canadian diets. Once this industry is gone it will be lost forever, as the start-up costs are high.

Time is of the essence. The 1985 crop must be planted now, and the growers need assistance to produce this year's crop, as well as consideration by the Government of a national sugar policy.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PLEA FROM CHILDREN OF PARSONS POND, NFLD.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, recently I received correspondence from the children of the community of Parsons Pond in my riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe.

Parsons Pond is a small rural community situated on the Great Northern Peninsula of Newfoundland. Like other communities situated on the Northern Peninsula, it lacks many of the facilities that are taken for granted in cities such as Ottawa. I refer to decent water, sewers, paved community roads, adequate recreational facilities for young people and, of course, enough job opportunities for the citizens of Parsons Pond.

These problems are constant irritants to the people of Parsons Pond, but they are not what the 10 children of Parsons Pond wrote me about. Let me quote directly from one of their letters:

Dear Mr. Tobin:

As a student in the community of Parsons Pond, nuclear destruction seems a long ways away. However, the incident is possible. Would you please do all in your power to make sure that the Canadian Government does everything in its power to prevent a Global War? We want to live to be adults in the future.

Thank you
Brent Caines

We are the bows from which our children are sent forth as living arrows. If their flight through life is to be long and fulfilling, then let us turn away from participation in the deadly nuclear game. Let Canada say absolutely not, instead of maybe, to the American invitation to participate in star wars development.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PAY-OUT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, on April 7 the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) announced the largest pay-out in the history of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Prairie Canada was jubilant. The hard pressed agricultural economy was about to receive a respectable return from its own investment.

It was disappointing, however, that this announcement received barely a breath of comment from the major media. Those persons who sit above and behind you, Mr. Speaker, and whose duty it is to keep us pure, need to be informed and reminded of the importance of reporting on the world's most important industry, agriculture.

An Alberta observation is that the media are virtually never in the Legislature during an agricultural debate.

On the Continent of Africa, where malnutrition and starvation are rampant, not one Government gives even a moderate priority to agriculture. Sadly, it is a world fact that no national Government anywhere gives a top priority to agriculture. The peoples of the world have come to believe that agriculture lacks excitement. Yet every day 40,000 children under the age of five die of starvation.

The science and business of food production is an exciting and demanding challenge. Surely Doug Fisher could stand taller in the interest of agriculture. And I ask, rhetorically, of course, where is Mike Duffy when it comes to defending food? I tell those big reporters that there is a lot of the world that would like to "Eat Too, Brute".

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last September 4, when the Prime Minister won the election, there were 1.385 million Canadians out of work. Seven months and 11 days later, there are 1.450 million Canadians out of work. Why are there more Canadians looking for a job now than on the day he won the election?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in excess of 100,000 new jobs have been created. There are new and strong indications of investment and recovery.

My hon. friend, having been a Minister of Finance, knows of some of the time it takes. We have put in place an energy agreement with Newfoundland—Labrador, as well as another important energy agreement with western Canada, that will throw off many employment opportunities. We have begun a new relationship of civility and co-operation with the provinces to launch new job creation projects.

I believe that the stage has been set for a rebirth of confidence and new job-creation possibilities that involve the entire country, and that will do honour to this Parliament throughout its life.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION OF YOUNG UNEMPLOYED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister has mentioned a number of programs that, although they were announced some time ago, have yet to be implemented. In September, the Prime Minister and his Government cancelled a special program called First Chance, a billion-dollar program that would have given 100,000 young Canadians an opportunity to acquire experience on the job. Today, 505,000 young Canadians under 25 are looking for work, far more than on election day.

My question to the Prime Minister is this: Is he going to stop making promises to Canadian youth and start doing something for young Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition is aware, in Regina the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a job creation program of historic dimensions and of particular interest to Canadian youth, and I think we are already seeing the results of this program. I certainly agree that the unemployment rate is too high in Canada. It is too high today, it will certainly be too high tomorrow as it was too high a year and a half ago. It is a major problem for all governments and for all levels of government. I can give my honourable colleague the assurance that we are loyally and, I trust, honourably, all the Members of this House, working with all governments to wipe out unemployment. As I said before, I agree unemployment is too high, and we are going to make an effort unique in our history to bring unemployment down in Canada, because our young people truly need jobs.

REQUEST FOR CREATION OF JOBS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will understand if I remind the House of his promise during the course of the summer and before, of jobs, jobs, jobs.

Mr. Deans: Tens of thousands.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Tens of thousands of jobs, overnight, once his Government took power. The Prime Minister has been in power for over seven months. Today he did not blame the past, as he is sometimes inclined to do, and I am glad to see that. However, would he give the House the assurance that he will start fulfilling those promises that he made to Canadians when he was in opposition and during the election campaign? Will he produce more jobs because that is the underlying reason for any economy in any country?

● (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will readily acknowledge, as sustained by any subjective data, that indeed, as he indicated, there are tens and tens of thousands of new jobs that have been created since September 4. That is an absolute fact.

Mr. Deans: That has always been true.

Mr. Broadbent: That has been true since 1933.

Mr. Mulroney: There is the voice of 17 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: He was at 17 per cent in 1933, and he is still there today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Pretty soon the unemployment will match our percentage.

Mr. Mulroney: We have been creating jobs. Interest rates have been declining. There is a strong rebirth of confidence in the private sector in job creation.

Mr. Broadbent: Where?

Mr. Mulroney: There are tremendous new possibilities emerging out of complex and, I think, very effective energy sector negotiations that took place. There are new prospects in Atlantic Canada. All of this is coming on stream in a new sense of harmony which a Budget will reinforce, and we believe that Canada can do infinitely better than the 1.6 million jobless which the Liberals left on snow banks. We can do a lot better and we guarantee that we will improve. That is for sure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a consultative group on disarmament and an arms adviser to the Prime Minister's Government disagreed with his policy on star wars, and in view of the fact that in the universities of this land and in many places all across the country there is more and more opposition to star wars will the Prime Minister answer the following question? The Ambassador of Disarmament to the United Nations, an appointee of the Government, told 2,500 members of the Physicians for Social Responsibility in Toronto on Saturday that they should go out into the streets of Canada to show their opposition to the star wars madness. Will the Prime Minister tell us whether this is the new policy of the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that was a rather liberal interpretation of what was said by the relevant Ambassador.

An Hon. Member: Is he still employed?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The proposal that was made by the Ambassador on Disarmament was that Canadians should, as they had in the past, take advantage of those values which we are defending here, the values of freedom, to express their views, even when they disagree with the Government. That is a position and a value which this Government actively supports.

With regard to the consultative group, it is true that there was a report by the consultative group. It is true that that report does take issue with some of the positions of the Government. It is also true that when the hon. gentleman was Secretary of State for External Affairs he would not appoint a consultative group on arms control and disarmament because he was not interested in the opinions of anyone outside his Government.

UNITED STATES INVITATION—CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN PEOPLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister does not want to answer that question, I will direct a supplementary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

We set up the Institute for International Peace, and we tabled a Bill in Parliament to which the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs objected, and today he is trying to use it and it is now one of this Government's initiatives. In any case, considering this Government's commitment to consulting Canadians and the fact that opposition to Star Wars is growing daily in this country, is this Government going to live up to its commitment to consulting Canadians and let the arbitrary 60-day deadline imposed by President Reagan on Star Wars pass, and ask Canadians for their opinion before involving this country in a policy that will be disastrous to world peace?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First of all, Mr. Speaker, as far as the Institute is concerned, I can inform the Hon. Member that the Institute was supported and, in fact, improved by Members of this Party, and today, the independence of the Institute is being actively supported by the present Government of Canada.

Regarding the invitation extended by the United States, I would like to point out that it is being considered. As far as consulting the Canadian public is concerned, the Canadian people were consulted on September 4 of last year.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR REDUCTION TARGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister, of course, has an abiding concern with the truth, and he will know the reality is that the rate of job creation for the last six months is lower than for the previous six months, and that unemployment has increased in three of the last four months when figures were produced.

Since the Parliament of Canada in the past has set targets for reducing the rate of inflation that ultimately became effective, will the Government commit itself to the same kind of target principle when it comes to unemployment, and will the Prime Minister commit his Government to bring down unemployment, say by a minimum of 2.5 per cent, during the next 12 months?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose if the Hon. Member had a formula, or the Leader of the Opposition, or anyone else, that he could give me, whereby we can bring down unemployment by 2.5 per cent in the next month or two, I would grab it and say thank you, and I know the country would too.

In point of fact what we are trying to do, and I think with some success, is to lower interest rates, to get government spending under control, and to create a climate favourable for investment for job creation. There have been indications of lower interest rates, greater foreign investment, and national investment. There have been instruments of growth and economic prosperity in place in western Canada, for example, which in job creation will be of remarkable proportions, and in eastern Canada and elsewhere. I think with all of this coming together, with a genuine desire by the Government of Canada to create a climate that rewards risk and entrepreneurship, that the small business sector, the people who take the risks who create the jobs, the farmers, the fishermen, the small businessmen, will get a break, and in getting a break they will create jobs for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister asked for suggestions. We have given him many from this side of the House. I remind him that it was in the election campaign in the summer of 1984 that he promised the people of Canada he would produce tens of thousands of jobs overnight. We want to see where those jobs are.

TAX REDUCTION PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Considering the Cabinet that he happens to lead has been remarkably bereft of positive ideas about job creation, at least one of his backbenchers in the last week or so, the Member for York East, has joined with others in making a positive suggestion about stimulating the economy and, therefore, the creation of more jobs, by giving Canadians a tax break. There is something positive and constructive. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that he will act on this constructive idea when the Budget is brought down next month?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any constructive suggestion from the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I acknowledge that we have been getting tremendous ideas from a tremendous caucus, not only from the Member for York East, whom I salute, but from all of the other Members of the Conservative caucus who have contributed some magnificent ideas which are being considered by the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the New Democratic Party, that Party sent a task force across the country. The NDP copied the Minister of Employment and Immigration's ideas. The New Democrats announced their new policy after the Minister of Employment and Immigration had brought in the greatest program of job creation heard in this country in decades.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I see, Mr. Speaker, that the Easter break has not changed the theatre. I shall try the Minister of Finance to see if we can get some commitment to action from him.

BUDGET INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, let me now put a question to the Minister of Finance. The only action which the Government has taken so far is to announce a number of cut-backs in a whole variety of programs which have led to the reduction of jobs, just as it did in Great Britain, West Germany, British Columbia, and a lot of other places that took the same approach. Will the Minister of Finance assure us and, more important, the people of Canada, that when he brings in his Budget the old cut-back approach will be abandoned and that he will bring in some stimulative measures which will create more jobs and give Canadians some good reason to be optimistic about their future?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am amused that the Hon. Member should take this approach. I believe it was the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor who was expressing a great deal of concern about the level of the federal government deficit, and now his Leader is ambivalent and does not know which way he should be going. I suggest that he wait until the week of May 20 when we will be bringing down a Budget which will give a clear signal to the people of Canada that there is a new environment, an environment wherein small-businessmen, people who have demonstrated a clear ability to create jobs, will be given the opportunity to do just that and solve our unemployment problems.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is on the same topic of how we go about creating jobs and also preserving them. As he probably knows, within a matter of days the major sugar beet industry in Alberta, Manitoba, and Quebec will be put out of business because of lack of action by the Government. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board has failed to obtain any form of agreement from Cabinet on remedial measures to deal with a problem which will put some 1,500 growers into the ground and result in the loss of some 600 to 800 production jobs.

Will the Prime Minister, as he has sometimes in the past, particularly in the Domtar case, personally intervene to ensure that Cabinet this week will deal with the sugar-beet problem and provide direct assistance to the growers so that they will not be put out of business?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what the Government is doing. We are coming to a decision as quickly as we can. There are sugar-beet growers in town this week; many of them are in the gallery. It was 75 degrees yesterday in southern Manitoba. The planting season is upon us in southern Alberta, and they are very quick to plant in Quebec. We know all that.

The reason we are in this mess is the previous Government, of which that Member was a part, did absolutely nothing about it. We are not doing that. We are accepting our responsibility, and are intending to do something about it.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can no longer get away with that kind of excuse. The sugar-beet growers who are in town today expected action two months ago from the Government and did not get it. Will there be action this week? Will it be positive action? Will the Government provide direct, immediate assistance to sugar-beet growers before they go out of business because of government inaction?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to an excuse. If there ever was anyone to ask for an excuse on behalf of agriculture, it is that Member. He has been in the House since last November, and this is the second time he has asked a question on agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Just take some action on it.

Mr. Mayer: We will have a decision this week and we hope that it will be favourable—

Some Hon. Members: Hope!

Mr. Mayer: —because we are interested in agriculture. When that Member was responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, he did not even know enough to sign papers to get the cash advances out, so western farmers had to wait an extra month. Let's not talk about action; we'll get some.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. On March 11 the Minister of Agriculture, in reply to a question of mine concerning the future of the sugar-beet industry in Manitoba, Alberta, and Quebec, replied that he hoped to have an announcement to make within the next week. The Minister, speaking for the Government today, said perhaps this week. What happened to the last three weeks when the Minister promised that there would be a clear-cut policy from the Government? What will the policy be? Instead of just hopes, could we have a guarantee of what the announcement will be, and when?

An Hon. Member: Sweeten it up, Charlie.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, for the first time the federal Government is taking the sugar-beet industry seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: I know as well as anyone that ideally we would have liked to have a decision sooner. We know that. That is why the growers are here today. However, the point is that we are still in the process of deciding, and we will have a decision this week.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the process of deciding is still ongoing, and since the Minister of Agriculture indicated that he would have a decision within a week, more than four weeks ago, could the Minister tell us what are the problems? What is holding up the decision? What new information has made the promise of the Minister of Agriculture non-existent?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, again, for the first time we are looking at the prospects of developing a long-range sugar policy. One certainly does not do those kinds of things overnight, as I quickly found out. If the Hon. Member looked into it, he would find that out as well. I went into it with every intention of having something done as quickly as we possibly could, certainly sooner than this. Ideally we would have liked an answer sooner than this, but the point is that we are looking at a long-range policy and those kinds of things are not developed overnight.

As I said, we must have a decision this week because the season for planting sugar-beets is upon us. If we do not plant sugar-beets this year, we will lose a very important industry.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REQUEST FOR ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering the serious escalation in South Africa—every day we have more reports of killings, riots, and human rights violations, a very real threat to peace internationally—is the Government now ready to re-examine its policy, to implement economic sanctions against South Africa, and to implement a mandatory program with respect to Canadians doing business in South Africa, all this to help in the battle against apartheid and to bring justice to the black African citizens of South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have reported on previous occasions in the House, indeed the Government is undertaking a very thorough review of the appropriate Canadian policy toward South Africa. That review is under way now. Its purpose is to do everything effective that we can to reduce the sin and crime of apartheid.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the review which is going on. However, considering the growing escalation in South Africa, would the Minister not agree that something should be done immediately with respect to this matter? So that we could have the support of the entire House, would he do this review in consultation with the opposition Parties? Then Parliament could speak with one voice against this horrible crime against humanity.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think all Hon. Members of the House would agree that what we most need is to take action that would be effective, and that that means a co-ordination of action with other countries. That is one of the factors which has to be considered by the Government of Canada and by the Parliament of Canada.

With regard to the question of consultation, I would be pleased to engage in consultation either with official spokesmen of the two other Parties in the House or with persons they might designate, with an eye to seeing whether there might be unanimous agreement in the House of Commons on any statement, or position which might be taken.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In view of the attempt being made to save some 600 jobs at White Farm Equipment in Brantford, Ontario, would the Minister meet with the company president, Mr. William Sinclair, as soon as possible?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Brant, that meeting has been scheduled for midweek.

FINANCIAL GUARANTEE PROPOSAL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the provincial Minister for Youth, who is also the provincial Member for Brantford accused the federal Government by asking: "Where was the action in Ottawa which might have helped us pull something off?" Would the Minister assure the House that he would at least look into the possibility of extending financial guarantees to the company during its troubled period?

• (1440)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I know that he must be aware of the fact that the Hon. Member for Cambridge brought this to our attention. We have, through our officials, met with Mr. Sinclair. We heard his approximately $50 million refinancing plan and where he felt the Government could be of some help. We have been in touch with the provincial authorities. In short, we have it in hand. We will be meeting with Mr. Sinclair in midweek, but we have nothing further to confirm or otherwise at the present time.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

TRANSFER OF EDMONTON BASE COMMANDER

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Will the Minister indicate why the Department of National Defence has transferred Commanding Officer Colonel de Tracey to an Ottawa desk job, even though the results of the inquiry into the crash of the two C-130 Hercules at Canadian Forces Base Edmonton have not yet been released? Will the Minister also give the assurance that this outstanding individual will be allowed to continue in advancement in the Armed Forces?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, base commander Colonel de Tracey is being transferred to responsibilities here in Ottawa for which there was an outstanding vacancy and which, I am sure, he will fill in an outstanding way. With respect to the accident itself, if the inquiry is complete, it is not yet in my hands, but I can assure the Hon. Member that the posting for Colonel de Tracey was intended as a matter of course, notwithstanding the events that took place.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS CHEMICALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of the Minister of the Environment to the scary experience of people in northern Ontario, and, for that matter, all people along the route from Montreal to Edmonton, following the spill which occurred over the weekend on the Trans-Canada Highway. Considering the danger that PCBs pose to human health as well as to the environment, I would like to ask the Minister what action she intends to take in order to prevent this occurrence from happening again.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to predict all hazardous situations that may occur, such as the spilling of PCBs, among others. Although this incident falls under provincial responsibility, I immediately got in touch with my colleague Minister Kells who gave me the following information. If Hon. Members are interested in knowing what immediate steps he took . . . if you are not interested I can simply not say anything more.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister does not realize that the trailer was travelling from Quebec all the way to Alberta and, therefore, there is a responsibility which goes well beyond the responsibility of one single provincial Minister of the Environment. What action, if any, does the Minister intend to take? Is she going to take any more interest in this matter of toxic substances than in acid rain? She failed to attend an international, high level meeting last weekend in Quebec City. Neither she nor the envoy on acid rain took the trouble to attend. What action is she going to take with regard to toxic substances?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will reply to both questions, including the one which was an accusation. I could not possibly attend the Quebec City meeting on acid rain since I was in Sweden to meet with my counterparts and getting information on the way they protect their environment.

As to the measures taken, it is a matter of co-operation between the federal Government and the province, and as a former Minister, the Hon. Member knows very well that the first steps must be taken by the province. The provincial Department has kept me informed about what has been done so far, and today I was in touch with the office of Minister Kells.

INDUSTRY

PORT CARTIER PULP AND PAPER MILL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I believe the Minister knows that a report came out last week that strongly stressed the need to expand our economy to get people back to work through community initiatives, and to get greater corporate accountability in our country. I want to ask the Minister about a specific case which demonstrates vividly the problems that come up when corporate accountability is not there. What is the Minister prepared to do about the case of ITT Rayonier in Port Cartier which, despite the strong claims from that community, is dismantling the pulp and paper mill within that community? Would he intervene personally and see to it that a different direction is taken which meets the needs of that community?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, that case is of course being reviewed by our Department, but at this time we have no statement to make.

SINGLE INDUSTRY COMMUNITIES—DIVERSIFICATION FUND RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, no statement, when 2,000 jobs and $130 million worth of Canadian Government or federal-provincial investment are involved in a project, is surely inexcusable. Does the Minister not believe that this case demonstrates clearly one of the points we made in our action group this past week that single industry communities need a diversification fund to give them a chance to develop other kinds of industrial activities so that they are not so dependent upon a single industry?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the question relates to my constituency—

[Translation]

—I can tell the Hon. Member that I worked earnestly with a group of private investors to attract . . . Yes, but what can you expect! I see Hon. Members of the Liberal Party are smiling. It was under the Liberal Government that the Port Cartier mill went under, the Liberals were in office when that happened. They find that funny. The people of Quebec will see that the Liberals find that funny today. Well, I certainly do not find that funny, nor does the NDP Member, and I thank him for his assistance. I went to my riding last week and told the people: either we attract private investors who were turned down when the Liberals were in office, or we will put federal facilities in the city of Port Cartier to make sure that Port Cartier and the riding of Manicouagan pull through.

REFUGEES

COMPOSITION OF REFUGEE ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week all Canadians were saddened to learn that one of the country's most outstanding citizens, the former Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, Florence Bird, had been denied re-appointment on the refugee advisory committee in a "Dear Flo" letter that she received from the Minister. Can the Minister tell this House what possible reason she had to refuse this reappointment, recognizing the proven skills, competence, and experience of the individual in question?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the communication that was sent to Mrs. Bird indeed conveyed my deepest regard for the contribution that she has made over many years to this country. I can also tell the Hon. Member that no one recognizes the emerging new areas of refugee concern in this country better than Mrs. Bird and what has happened in response to those changes. There are many new fields of expertise that are developing. It is important that we draw on these new fields of expertise from across the country. I would say that, in conjunction and in consultation with the refugee communities of this country, we will be able to do so.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister now come clear with this House and tell us whether or not she is merely apologizing for the Prime Minister, who is obviously attempting to replace competence with another Tory hack?

● (1450)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the Hon. Member is not very well informed about the committee. It is a Ministerial Advisory Committee. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the persons who will be appointed to this committee are persons who have humanitarian concerns at heart, who are dealing with refugee problems; people who know the situation, not only in this country but in other countries around the world where we must address the refugee question in deeper terms than it was addressed by the past Governments.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

TRANSFER OF EDMONTON BASE COMMANDER

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence end is supplementary to the question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Pembina. The posting of Colonel De Tracey to a dead and desk job in Ottawa was, as the Minister said, a matter of course notwithstanding the crash event that preceded his posting. Colonel De Tracey was scheduled to attend the National Defence College in Ottawa in preparation for promotion. Will the Minister guarantee that Colonel De Tracey will be allowed to attend the National Defence College, or will the upper echelon of DND in Ottawa be allowed to tie a can to this very highly regarded career officer of the Armed Forces?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will appreciate that with the 83,000 service personnel that comprise the Canadian Armed Forces, there is a routine of postings from time to time which take officers and men to different parts of the country for different jobs, and indeed to international postings. In this case Colonel De Tracey was due for posting. He is now going to be occupying a position in the Department relating to the Director of the Establishment of Requirements, a significant posting for him. If I took the Hon. Member's question correctly, this should not be regarded as casting the kind of inference that was suggested. He is going to an important posting with an important responsibility. With respect to the staff college, I have not seen the recent list of attendees at the staff college, but I will make inquiries in that respect.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

DISCUSSION PAPER CONTENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who referred earlier to the creation of a new environment. In that same spirit, today he and the Government released a discussion paper on financial institutions which, by and large, does nothing less than create a financial in-breeding system between the financial and commercial institutions. Considering that the proposed discussion paper will now allow a single individual to own a bank in Canada, will the Minister explain how the creation of a "Rosenberg Bank of Canada" will actually help Canadian consumers and borrowers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the paper that my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, tabled today is very clear in its attempts to introduce a new degree of competition into the financial system. It also takes very much into account the importance of the protection of the depositor and in that regard has recommended some very clear and tough conflict-of-interest and self-dealing rules, as well as an increase in the degree of regulation that the financial community would have.

INDIVIDUAL OWNERSHIP OF BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will return to the same question. I would like the Minister of Finance to explain, in terms of providing services to Canadians, how legislation flowing from this discussion paper, which would enable a single individual to be the sole owner of a Canadian bank, will assist the Canadian financial system by providing more competition and a higher level of safe service to the borrower?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member has not had a chance to read the paper through. If he does, he will see that there are some very, very tough conflict-of-interest rules, or self-dealing rules, that will not allow people to take advantage of ownership positions when dealing with the use of the depositor's funds. That, in connection with the tougher and more comprehensive regulatory environment that will be introduced as well, will protect the depositor from the abuses to which the Hon. Member has alluded.

AIR CANADA

BILINGUALISM PRINCIPLES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport, who, in speaking to the Association des gens de l'air, apparently promised to keep the pilot training centre in Montreal and also ensure that Air Canada personnel would always reflect Canada's linguistic reality. Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows: Has the Minister given Air Canada specific instructions, in writing? If so, does he intend to table them in the House? If the answer is no, how does the Minister intend to make sure that his promise materializes?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, Saturday evening we announced in Quebec City that we expected Air Canada to act in accordance with the principles that apply with respect to bilingualism within the corporation in terms of reflecting the percentage of Francophones in this country. We have also asked the corporation to take the principle of bilingualism into account in training pilots and personnel at the Montreal centre. To date we have given no instructions, and it is not up to us to give Air Canada written instructions in this respect. I believe the corporation has taken note of the comments and observations of the Department of Transport. Eventually, we intend to take steps that will prove to be at least as useful as those taken by the former government to apply the same kind of policy.

AIR TRANSPORT

QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Transport is supposed to have a special mandate for dealing with issues that concern Quebec. I would like to know what he has done and exactly what he intends to do to ensure that Montreal becomes once again a major centre for international transportation.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that I have no specific mandate for Quebec issues. The Minister of Transport and myself share the various issues that concern the Department.

As for the Hon. Member's question, it is not up to the Government of Canada to determine whether Montreal or Toronto or any other city should be what he refers to as the major transportation centre. The present focus of Canada's economy has put the majority of the corporation's operations in Toronto, and it is with this in mind that the corporation is managing its operations. Should the economic situation change, the company's policy will change with it. However, I would like to repeat that it is not up to the Government of Canada to determine whether Montreal, or Toronto, for that matter, should be the transportation capital.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. As the Minister knows, there are over 1,500 sugar beet growers in the country, and for the first time in over 15 years producers from Quebec, Manitoba, and Alberta are working together, in contrast to what happened under the previous Government which used to split those growers apart.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is there a question?

Mr. Thacker: Will the Minister assure those growers that the Cabinet will take a decision this week?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we have the answer. We have had questions from all sides of the House. This morning I had a chance to meet with the representatives and I realized that since growers, Members of provincial Legislatures, and members of Chambers of Commerce are involved, this sector represents a broad spectrum of the economy. There are people representing labour who are interested as well. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that we will take everyone's point of view into account when we arrive at a decision, and we will do it as quickly as we possibly can.

MULTICULTURALISM

FUNDING OF ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. The Intercultural Communications Program is recognized by his Department as providing support for multicultural organizations that undertake activities which are designed to increase intercultural understanding, especially in the smaller cities of Canada.

Funding in the Ontario region has been tight for some time, but officials of the Department have assured organizations that the level would not be cut back this year. However, suddenly, in the last several days it seems clear that there has been a reduction. During this week when the Constitution's equality provisions are coming into effect, will the Minister explain the reason for this sudden change in plans and the reduction in funding for multicultural organizations?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the reduction in funding, in terms of the Department of Multiculturalism, is in line with the over-all reductions which have been taken by all government Departments. I can assure the Hon. Member that there will be no reductions which will directly affect any of the work to which he has alluded in his question. I do not anticipate that, and my Department does not anticipate that, because that type of work, especially as we move into a whole new area in terms of the Charter and the questions relating to it, is far too important to the country to have any major reduction.

PRIVILEGE

PUBLICATION OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE REPORT PRIOR TO PRESENTATION IN HOUSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, Members will recall that on April 3 I rose in my place and indicated that it was my intention, at the first sitting of the House after the Easter break, to raise a question of privilege related to the publication by The Toronto Star and The Citizen of Ottawa of the second report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration prior to the presentation of the report in the House of Commons.

With respect to the question of privilege, we must establish in this Chamber that a prima facie case of privilege does exist and that the subject matter should therefore be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I would like to present to the Table, and for your information, Mr. Speaker, copies of the two articles. One was written by Joe O'Donnell of The Toronto Star and was published on April 1, 1985, prior to three o'clock of that day when the standing committee report was presented to the House of Commons. The other article was written by Jim Robb of The Citizen of Ottawa and was published on Monday, April 1, prior to the presentation in the House of the committee report at three o'clock. I would like to make these articles available to the Table Officers because I would like to quote from them later on, and, Mr. Speaker, you may wish to have the Table Officers read them.

I would like to refer to two or three references—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I can hear the objection. In fact, the Hon. Member has the capacity to submit those matters to myself as part of the submission. However, he does not have the capacity to have them tabled. I appreciate the distinction which is being raised by Members opposite, and that distinction will be honoured.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to your attention Citation 606 of Beauchesne's at page 196. The citation comes from Chapter 15 of Beauchesne's which deals with standing, special and joint committees, and reads as follows:

(1) Disobedience to the orders of a committee, provided those orders are within the scope of the committee's authority, is a contempt of the House by which the committee was appointed.

I would like to turn to page 199 of Beauchesne's, Citation 628, which refers to in camera sittings of committees. It reads as follows:

(1) A committee, having the right to exclude strangers at any time, it may be inferred, has the right to sit in private and have its proceedings protected by privilege. The publication of its proceedings in that case would be an offence which the House could deal with upon receiving a report from the committee.

I would like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the committee did, indeed, submit its report. The citation continues:

(2) The purpose of in camera sittings is to allow Members to feel free to negotiate, discuss, deliberate and, sometimes, compromise without the glare of publicity, which might add to the difficulties of agreeing to reports when it is desirable that these proceedings be treated in confidence. The final decision of whether to sit in camera, however, rests with the Members themselves.

In other words, the members of any given committee of the House have the power to order themselves to sit in camera or to sit in public. They have been given that power by the whole House in the belief that it is a necessary power to the proper performance of their public responsibility.

I would like to refer to Citation 647 of Beauchesne's, which is found on page 203. The citation reads:

(1) No act done at any committee should be divulged before it has been reported to the House. Upon this principle the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, on April 21, 1937, resolved "That the evidence taken by any select committee of this House and the documents presented to such committee and which have not been reported to the House, ought not to be published by any member of such committee or by any other person". The publication of proceedings of committees conducted with closed doors or of reports of committees before they are available to Members, will, however, constitute a breach of privilege. May, p. 146.

There is a subsequent paragraph which refers to the Canadian situation. I believe that I must quote from it as I believe that the current situation deviates from that and it is important to point that out. It reads as follows:

(2) In Canada, when a question of privilege was raised concerning the publication of a committee report before it was presented to the House, the Speaker ruled that the matter could not be resolved as in the British practice because the motion appeared to attack the press for publishing the confidential document but did not attack Members of the House for their attitude in respect of their own confidential documents, and in missing this point, it missed something most important with respect to the privileges of the House.

That precedent was established on June 23, 1977, but it is not the only precedent. I was able to discover two other precedents. All three cases dealt with draft reports which were under consideration by standing committees or special committees of the House of Commons. The difference, I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, is that we are dealing with a committee report in its final form, which was published by the two newspapers in question prior to its presentation in the House of Commons. Indeed, that report is currently before the House of Commons and is, therefore, out of the hands of the committee and in the hands of the total House.

There is a well known and well established understanding among Members of the House of Commons, and I believe the understanding extends to the press, that reports are to be treated as confidential prior to their presentation in the House. If there is any doubt about that, Beauchesne's makes it clear. That is the general case.

The specific case of this particular standing committee, and the way in which it approached its task, I believe has to be identified for all Members. Indeed, this may be the first committee of the House of Commons that has utilized the new rules in terms of deciding what it wished to investigate and the way in which it wished to investigate. The committee went through the investigation procedure and actually made a report to the House, which brings us to the last step, which requires the Government to respond within 120 days. If it is not the first, it is certainly one of the first to take advantage of the new power.

The committee wrestled in the beginning with a lot of issues about how best to do it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, I suspect, is now entering into what is very clearly becoming the argument which he wishes to put on the floor should the matter be found to be a prima facie case. I suggest that the Hon. Member has probably by now put forward the precedents he wishes the Chair to consider. The Chair is prepared to hear any further precedents on that matter, but I believe the Hon. Member knows that he should restrict himself to arguments with regard to the prima facie case and not make a speech about the importance of the matter should the matter be placed before the House for debate.

● (1510)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I may indeed be straying—I had hoped I was not—but in the minutes of the committee, which are before the House, the Speaker will find a deliberate set of orders, if you like, ways in which the committee ordered itself to behave. That includes a series of in camera meetings to deal with the subject matter of the report, and an in camera meeting to decide to make the report to the House of Commons. Therefore, the committee has ordered the confidentiality. I think that is perhaps an important point to make in terms of establishing—

Mr. Speaker: I repeat my comments: does the Hon. Member have anything further to say with regard to a prima facie case as opposed to the case he wishes to make should a prima facie case be found? Otherwise, I would have to suggest that the Hon. Member has finished.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you very much for your advice, Mr. Speaker. Can I draw to your attention the two newspaper articles which I have presented to you and quote from the second paragraph of each of these quite different articles? The Toronto Star states, "In a report to be presented today in the House of Commons and obtained by the Star yesterday". In The Citizen, the second paragraph of the article states, "To be tabled in the Commons today". That particular wording, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, tells all readers and tells Hon. Members of the House that the newspapers in question, the reporters and their editors, did indeed know that the report had not yet been presented to the House. Therefore, they did a deliberate act in terms of publishing it and, in committing that deliberate act, they showed contempt for this Chamber and contempt for the privileges of Hon. Members.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Hon. Member is still making the speech he wishes to make should the matter be ruled appropriate for debate. Does the Hon. Member have any further matters with regard to—well, I take it the Hon. Member does not.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, in attempting to prove a prima facie case of breach of privilege, has made reference to a number of sections of Beauchesne. He first quoted Citation 606 which reads as follows:

Disobedience to the orders of a committee, provided those orders are within the scope of the committee's authority, is a contempt of the House by which the committee was appointed.

However, I submit he did not bring before the House specifically, first, what orders were formally and properly adopted by the committee, second, how they were breached and, third, exactly by whom they were breached. The Hon. Member went on to refer to Citation 628 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads as follows:

A committee, having the right to exclude strangers at any time, it may be inferred, has the right to sit in private and have its proceedings protected by privilege. The publication of its proceedings in that case would be an offence which the House could deal with upon receiving a report from the committee.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the report referred to in this citation is a report that any of its proceedings were improperly disclosed prior to the proceedings being tabled in the House. Ordinarily, the House deals with matters in committee on receipt of a report from that committee about them. This citation does not deal with the submission of a report by a committee on the substance of its deliberations but rather a report about what the committee feels has been a breach of its orders or of its proper rules of good conduct. Therefore, I submit that the precedent in Citation 628, strictly speaking, does not apply to the circumstances in question.

The Hon. Member went on to quote at length from Citation 647 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads in part as follows:

> No act done at any committee should be divulged before it has been reported to the House.

Then the Hon. Member went on to quote what the citation says about a resolution of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom on April 21, 1937. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a closer reading of the current edition of May's Parliamentary Practice—because the citation read by my hon. friend is based on a quotation from May's—will show that this resolution has been superseded by an amendment of the Standing Orders of the United Kingdom House of Commons which allows a greater latitude in disclosing in a number of ways proceedings and reports of committees before they are fully disclosed to the House of Commons. Therefore, I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the citation in question, Citation 647, based as it is on a reference to May's at page 146, which in turn quotes a resolution of the United Kingdom House of Commons on April 21, 1937, has been superseded by a later and more up to date change in the Standing Orders of the United Kingdom as put forward in the more up to date edition of May's and, therefore, does not apply.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that ordinarily an Hon. Member, in seeking to establish a prima facie case of privilege, has to indicate his or her willingness to submit a motion in the proper form calling for the matter in question to be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections and Privileges, or for some other appropriate action to be taken. All the Hon. Member has done so far is to present to the House a number of interesting citations which, I respectfully submit, I have distinguished and shown not to apply. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any clear indication by the Hon. Member that, if you find a prima facie case of privilege, the Hon. Member will submit a motion in the proper form which clearly defines the nature of the breach of privilege, by whom the breach was made and when and what action he proposes should be taken; the Hon. Member, for this and all the reasons I have given, has not made a case for a prima facie finding of a breach of privilege. Therefore, the matter should not be accepted as a prima facie case of privilege, contrary to the submission of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, just to make one point of clarification, I have a written motion which I believe to be in appropriate form and I will be quite pleased to move it if you find, Mr. Speaker, that a prima facie case does exist.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have some sympathy for the position being put forward by the Hon. Member. I can well understand why he would want to have the confidentiality of the report maintained until such time as the House of Commons received it. I can understand as well that Hon. Members of the House might feel aggrieved that the report, or certain contents thereof, were divulged through a press statement in advance of the House itself having received the document. However, having said that, I am a little concerned that we are going on a wild goose chase or witch hunt which, in fact, may well be the case. Citation 647(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states:

> In Canada, when a question of privilege was raised concerning the publication of a committee report before it was presented to the House, the Speaker ruled that the matter could not be resolved as in the British practice because the motion appeared to attack the press for publishing the confidential document but did not attack Members of the House for their attitude in respect of their own confidential documents,—

It goes on to say that that in fact, therefore, probably did not constitute a breach of privilege. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is a risk to be taken by the press in publishing information—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, could the Hon. Member please bring himself to the prima facie question of privilege, not to the argument he may want to make should the House be debating the matter?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I thought in fact I was addressing whether or not there was a prima facie case. The case to be made has to fall within the context of the practice of the House of Commons and the practice of the House of Commons, as defined by Citation 647(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition would appear to speak directly to the matter raised by the Hon. Member inasmuch as what the Hon. Member is suggesting is that the press is out of line in publishing information given to it in advance of the report being tabled in the House of Commons. That matter has been dealt with previously and, as I understand the ruling, the suggestion that it was out of order, although gaining sympathy, was not upheld.

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker: As Members would expect, I take seriously the arguments which have been made. I am particularly grateful to Members on all sides who have chosen to present their arguments by way of citations and references which will be helpful. Since it is significant and since there have been different rulings on matters of this type in the Canadian practice, it would only be appropriate for me to reserve judgment, study the matter and come back to the House.

I have two further questions of privilege, or is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order?

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Then I have one remaining question of privilege, which I must hear because it is put to me that way, and then I will come to points of order.

This question of privilege apparently arises out of Question Period.

MR. RIIS—ALLEGED IMPROPER REMARK OF MR. THACKER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period I referred to a trust company which had been owned by Mr. Rosenberg, and suggested that now an individual is able singly to own a trust company. As a result of the report made public by the Government today, and if the report were to result in legislation, it would allow that same individual to be the sole owner of a chartered bank of Canada. I called that into question and referred to it as the Rosenberg bank because that was the individual who had some difficulties as head of a trust company in the Province of Ontario some months back. I could have referred to the Thacker bank or given it just about any other name. However, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) called out during Question Period that I was making a racist comment. The point, I suppose, was my referring to an individual, and if that is a racist comment, then I suppose we cannot refer to any individual. However, Mr. Rosenberg was chosen for that reason; it could just as easily have been, as I say, the Thacker bank of Canada or the Smith bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: We have a difficulty. That is not a question of privilege. The Member is raising a point of order with regard to the use of proper language.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that the Hansard reporter would have picked it up, but to the extent the Hon. Member has explained the point he raised, and I know him personally, and he has no intention of making those types of comments, then if it is on the Hansard record I would withdraw it unconditionally.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that will deal with the matter. On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid).

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McDERMID—ALLEGED PARLIAMENTARY COMMENT OF MR. WADDELL

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I found out that I gave you incorrectly notice of a question of privilege when it is a point of order. In the debate on Wednesday, April 3, 1985, as we were concluding the sitting for the day, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is deservedly acquiring a reputation for being one of the thickest and dumbest Members of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: I know opposition Members will applaud that. Although I have been called a lot worse by a lot better, I am asking that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway withdraw those remarks as they are unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown gave me notice of his intention to raise this matter which he thought in the beginning was a question of privilege. He is complaining that certain language used by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway was unparliamentary. The language in question was used on Wednesday, April 3, 1985, the last sitting day prior to the Easter recess. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown was in the House at the time. In the view of the Chair, the point of order should have been raised at the time the language complained of was used. The Chair is of the opinion that complaints of unparliamentary language or alleged unparliamentary language should not be pursued unless they are raised at the time the offending words are used. If I may take one moment to explain the reason for that, it is because it is only at the time the disorder results, which is why it is called a point of order, that the question of whether disorder has been created can be determined. I refer specifically to the point of order just raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

However, I should like to add in general terms that the Chair deplores the use of the kind of language complained of. Hon. Members should observe the normal courtesies in the course of debate. Offensive language, whether or not it is particularly unparliamentary, should always be avoided in the interests of good taste and the preservation of the dignity of our proceedings.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise to indicate that we are making progress today. I had understood that Bill C-19 might take some time. I had an indication from the NDP it was going to take a long time, so we are very pleased that we were able to deal with it this morning.

As Your Honour will know, we therefore move to consideration of Bill C-33. I wanted to advise the House that if we are able to conclude that Bill today, and I am hoping we will, we will then move to Bill C-36 relating to the Aeronautics Act.

I would also like to advise the House at this time that I would like to designate tomorrow as the second allotted day in the Supply period in this trimester, and, therefore, the business for tomorrow will be debate on a motion from the Opposition.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, even though technically the Government House Leader can designate tomorrow as the second allotted day, generally there is more notice given of this type of thing so that the opposition Parties can consult among themselves as to whose day it should be and have sufficient time to prepare the debate on the Opposition Day. I just wanted to signal to you, Sir, and to the House, my concern as to the manner in which the Government House Leader has designated tomorrow as an Opposition Day. I regret that in doing it in this way he is not showing due respect for the importance our rules have given to the concept of Opposition Days, and I hope he will do better in future. If he does not, then the next report card he gets from the press will be a lot worse than the one he got last weekend.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, what are we going to do about the Opposition Day is quite a legitimate question because the fact is that one of us has to be prepared to put down a motion for debate within the next hour and a half. That does pose somewhat of a problem. However, I do want to apologize to the Government House Leader for allowing his legislation to get past second reading. I thought the Government wanted the legislation to go to committee, and I want to assure him that the Bill will take a long time to pass. It has only just been referred to committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by members of the Opposition. I tried to consult with them concerning the disposition of business, as I always do. The fact is we did make progress and so the government Party is always in the position, and we are quite prepared to do so, to receive notice before six o'clock of any opposition motion. We do not require a long time to defend our record because it is a very defendable and wonderful record. On the other hand, if the opposition Parties cannot find anything to debate, they should let me know and I will try maybe to give them some help on how to operate as an Opposition.

RAOUL WALLENBERG HONORARY CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-233 to proclaim Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada, and requesting his return to freedom.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Corneille: Today I have the honour and privilege to introduce a Bill to make Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada. It is a Bill which doubtless is of special interest to the Speaker himself. This Bill is intended as a one-time unique response and is not intended to set a precedent.

During World War II in Budapest, Hungary, this Swedish diplomat, at great risk to his life, saved tens of thousands of Jews who otherwise would have gone to the gas chambers of Auschwitz, by making these people honorary citizens of Sweden.

In a non-partisan and unified effort, we can do for him what he did for others and try to save his life by making him an honorary citizen of Canada. This will give him the opportunity to impress upon his—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that this time is allowed for a very short summary of the purpose of the Bill. I take it that the Hon. Member is concluding his remarks.

Mr. de Corneille: I just want to add one thing. This will give us the opportunity to impress upon his Soviet captors for 40 years that this man is revered enough by Canadians to make him one of us and thereby justify our right to speak on his behalf.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know that the Speaker must officially disapprove of all bootlegging. I refer specifically to the Hon. Member's earlier comment in his remarks.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

DEFENCE INDUSTRY PRODUCTIVITY PROGRAM

Question No. 168—Mr. Stackhouse:

In 1983, what were the total expenditures of the Defence Industry Productivity Program including salaries, publicity and grants?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): The defence Industry Productivity Program (DIPP) expenditures for the fiscal year 1983-84 were as follows:

Contributions:	$144,231,855
Loans:	$ 534,389

The related expenses for DIPP for the fiscal year 1983-84 totalled approximately $2.5 million. This figure is made up of salaries for personnel evaluating and processing projects, contract costs, assets management and audit costs. There are no publicity costs for DIPP. However, a press release is prepared to inform the public of commitments made by the Government and the salaries related to this activity are included in the above figure.

EXPERT ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON THE MANAGEMENT OF SEVERE PAIN

Question No. 180—Mr. Stackhouse:

In 1983-84, how often did the Expert Advisory Committee on the Management of Severe Pain meet and what reports or recommendations did it publish?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Six times.

2. (i) Cancer Pain—Report of the Expert Advisory Committee on the Management of Severe Pain in Cancer Patients.

(ii) Cancer Pain—A Monograph on the Management of Cancer Pain.

CMHC—SURVEY OF VACANCY RATES

Question No. 232—Mr. Howie:

Has the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation conducted a survey of rental accommodation vacancy rates in Saint John, Moncton and Fredericton, New Brunswick since January 1, 1984 and, if so, on what date was the most recent survey completed and what were the rates disclosed in each case?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

Order Paper Questions

Since January 1, 1984, CMHC has conducted two apartment-vacancy surveys in Saint John, Moncton and Fredericton: one in April and another in October, 1984. The results of the most recent survey (October, 1984) where as follows:

Saint John	4.5 per cent
Moncton	0.8 per cent
Fredericton	0.5 per cent

The survey in these centres covers all private apartment structures containing six units and over.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Question No. 275—Mr. de Corneille:

Is the Department of Communications presently re-organizing the offices of the National Film Board throughout Canada and, if so (a) which offices will (i) be closed (ii) remain open (b) at what date in each case (c) how many persons will lose their jobs?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): The NFB's new mandate calls for several changes in its production and distribution activities and the reallocation of internal resources. This includes the gradual consolidation of its library-distribution system into larger regional centres and an increased emphasis on having its productions delivered via new distribution and exhibition modes.

Greater reliance on the new delivery technologies, as well as gains in efficiency and quality of service resulting from consolidation will mean better service to users and a more vital contribution, by the NFB, to Canadian cultural and social life.

The NFB's finalized five-year operational plan outlining how the Board plans to implement these, and other changes has not been completed.

RESEARCH INTO USE OF BACILLUS THURINGIENSIS

Question No. 284—Mr. Caccia:

Is the research on the use of Bacillus Thuringiensis as an alternative to chemical product spraying to destroy the spruce budworm, being transferred from the Laurentian Forest Research Centre in Sainte-Foy, Quebec to the Forest Pest Management Institute in Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): No.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEAT INSPECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of Agriculture) that Bill C-33, an Act respecting the import and export of and interprovincial trade in meat products, the registration of establishments, the inspection of animals and meat products in registered establishments and the standards for those establishments and for animals slaughtered and meat products prepared in those establishments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: I should indicate to the House that there are nine minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech by the Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). Therefore, I will recognize Members for further questions and comments.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, first I want to apologize to the Minister for keeping him here because I am sure that he has other things to do.

Since this is a Bill which will establish a new Act, there will be new regulations which may affect the long established regulations concerning the procedures for hiring veterinarians as for the pre-inspection as well as the post-inspection of slaughters. Are there any guarantees that those procedures will be maintained in the new regulations, because this Bill provides an opportunity to change the whole structure of the inspection process?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, essentially, I can answer the question in the affirmative. My understanding of the legislation is that there is no intent to change hiring practices.

If the Hon. Member wants to compare Section 6 of the old Bill with Clause 12 of this Bill, he will see that they are essentially the same except for one difference. Clause 12(3) states that the Minister may designate any person as an analyst for the purposes of this Act. That is the only real difference.

I am told that the reason for Clause 12(3) is that in the past, when issues affecting this subject went to court, it would have been useful if the Minister could have designated someone as an analyst to act on behalf of the Crown as far as court proceedings are concerned.

In answer to the Hon. Member, there will be no changes, as I understand, to the hiring practices that are presently in place, with the exception that the Bill provides for someone to be designated as an analyst when there is deemed to be a need for an analyst.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on this Bill because I feel its intent is in contradiction to what the Government and its Members have expressed as its policy.

The purpose of this Bill is, hopefully, to improve the Act by combining several other Acts that are already in effect. Therefore, the contradiction is that while this legislation may improve the already excellent inspection services, the Government, in its cut-backs during the last several months, has taken steps to reduce the number of inspectors, reduce the need for inspections and eliminate the requirement to have inspectors at the plants at all times.

The Government has strongly defended this action in the committee and the House. This Bill is intended to improve the structure, yet, according to meat inspectors, the Government has moved to decrease the amount of inspection taking place in the abattoirs. Therefore, one must question why the Government is putting this Bill before the House.

● (1540)

First, it has been suggested that the possibility of collecting fees was already in the old Bill and therefore it was not necessary to pass this Bill for the new fee structure to be put in place. However, because of the suggestion by the Department in the last little while that it is going to reduce the number of inspectors and will start charging fees for the inspection of meat, it looks as though this Bill is a requirement to make it possible to carry this out smoothly.

I mentioned earlier that we had hoped there would be some improvement in this Bill as far as inspection was concerned. If you read the Bill carefully, Mr. Speaker, you will find that a lot of the meat inspection is left to regulation. That is why I asked the question of the Minister a few moments ago. For instance, there is nothing in the Bill which gives us any indication of the qualifications of inspectors. That is left to regulations, I assume. All the Bill says is, "The Minister may designate any person as an inspector for the purposes of this Act." It is not necessarily a veterinarian in the case of post-inspection, or any inspection as far as that goes.

Also, at the present time federal inspectors work for the Government. There is no indication in this Bill that they will continue to work for the Government. Again I refer to what has been going on in committee and in the House regarding meat inspection. There has been at least an assumption on the part of government Members that a certain amount of inspection in the future will be left to the plant and will be controlled by the plant. There is no indication in the Bill that from now on, as in the past, federal inspectors will be employees of the Department of Agriculture. All it says is that "the Minister may designate any person as an inspector for the purposes of this Act."

As I said before, there has been an indication that possibly there will be a move to leave the responsibility of inspection to the processor himself. Again, by whom will the inspectors be employed? That is something we want to clarify in committee. Second, we are already well into discussion—indeed I think it has gone further than that. We are well into the establishment of a cost recovery program that will reduce the budget of the Department of Agriculture by $33 million. That $33 million, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have indicated, will be recovered from inspection fees. Those inspection fees will be paid by the processing industry, although we know from experience that most likely they will be paid by the producer, that is, taken from the price paid for the slaughtered animal. We have a cost recovery program being established or already in place and the Bill being put before the House allows the changing of regulations so that this cost recovery program can be put into effect. You must recognize, Mr. Speaker, that we have to suspect that the two are related.

If, as we have been told in committee and also in the House, these cost recovery fees are going to be put in place and there is the possibility that the inspector will be hired by the corporation rather than the Government, then we will have a situation where, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), said, a large corporation which kills a large number of animals can easily put somebody on staff in place and pay for the inspection done, thus keeping inspection costs very low. The alternative for a small operation with a small number of carcasses to have a member of its staff appointed as an inspector is unlikely. The cost for that small operation will be much greater because the fees will be established directly by the Minister of Agriculture in his cost recovery program. Consequently, there is an almost built-in discrimination against the small abattoir that wants to provide the best quality of inspected meats to its neighbourhood or to its neighbouring communities. The small operator will be forced to pay much more for his inspection than the large corporation.

Prescribing how the inspection will be done is part of this Bill. I think we also have a concern that because we are passing this Bill and are able to establish a new set of regulations without necessarily following past and well established regulations or procedures of the past—and this is something we would like to find out in committee—we must be sure that the new regulations do not allow a kind of loose relationship between the large corporation and the government inspection process. Again I have to suggest that we suspect the relationship between large corporations and this Government are such that the large corporation is likely to get the easiest end of this operation.

Mr. Mazankowski: Prove it.

Mr. Hovdebo: There are a number of questions which come out of this Bill which need to be looked at and which need to be part of the discussion in committee. We and the people of Canada need to know that the structure which is being put in place by this new Bill will be as adequate as that which we have had in the past and that the regulations to be drafted after this Bill is passed will guarantee the same kind of structure which may not or will not discriminate against the small producer or processor. This seems to be indicated in the Bill as it is presently written.

● (1550)

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I should like very briefly to allay three of the concerns of the Hon. Member. First, the frequency of inspection level has nothing to do with this Bill at all. In fact, if the Hon. Member wants to check, we have 38 more inspectors in operation now than was the case before we assumed power. However, let me say again that it really has nothing to do with this Bill.

With regard to his concern about subclauses 12(1) and 12(2), the reason that the regulations need to be flexible is that when we export out of the country, the EEC particularly requires that veterinarians do the inspections. However, in the United States, for instance, that is not the case. We are trying to allow for some flexibility in the Bill so that we do not bind ourselves totally to having veterinarians at additional cost doing inspections which can be done presently by inspectors. We do not see a concern there, and I hope I have answered the Hon. Member's point.

With regard to having companies hire inspectors, there is no provision in the Bill for that. In fact, it is up to the Minister to designate who the inspector shall be.

Finally, the Hon. Member indicated that the Bill seemed to favour larger operators over smaller ones. That is certainly not its intent nor is that the case, as I read the Bill. If he has those concerns, I hope he raises them in committee and gets them clarified or satisfied because that is not the case.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's answer very much. The three concerns to which he referred are taken care of by the present regulations, but they are not taken care of in the new Bill. I am concerned about some kind of guarantee or at least a concern on the part of the Government that care will be taken when the regulations are written.

Mr. Mayer: I think all of us on all sides of the House approached the revisions to the three Bills and combining them into one with the noblest of motives. Obviously that would have to apply to the regulations if in fact we are to achieve some of the things we want to achieve in the Bill. That is the intent of the Bill.

As I said, the Hon. Member should raise those issues in committee and make sure he is satisfied there. Some of the regulations should be flexible to allow us to make the best use of the people we have. I hope he is satisfied that the regulations will be drafted with those kinds of motives in mind, to maintain the inspection service we have had in the past and to give us as good a chance to export with as little problem in terms of health standards as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Mr. Wise, seconded by Mr. Crosbie, moves that Bill C-33, an Act respecting the import and export of an interprovincial trade in meat products, the registration of establishments, the inspection of animals and meat products in registered establishments and the standards for those establishments and for animals slaughtered and meat products prepared in those establishments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

AERONAUTICS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased this afternoon to have an opportunity to introduce Bill C-36 for second reading. It is a very important Bill. It is part of the complete reorganization of Canadian aeronautics legislation. Essentially the purpose of the Act is to provide for a framework to allow a safe national transportation system to be instituted to serve all parts of Canada. We are looking at legislation covering all parts of Canada, including areas in the far North which cannot practically be served by any means of transportation other than air.

At the outset I should say that the work in drafting the Bill and pulling it all together was the culmination of tremendous effort on the part of officials in Transport Canada and previous Ministers. While the legislation is very complex and technical in nature, by and large it will serve as a very satisfactory framework for the continued growth of the aviation sector in Canada.

Also I remind the House that there has been a tremendous amount of consultation with the industry, with special interest groups and indeed with the public at large with regard to the provisions of the Bill.

I think all of us recall the establishment of the Dubin inquiry, appointed by the previous Conservative Government in 1979. It was charged with the task of investigating and reporting on, among other matters, the investigation of accidents and reporting systems, investigation of incidents involving aircraft, and the formulation of the laws, regulations and rules necessary for the safe and proper navigation of aircraft. As a result of this very intensive and comprehensive inquiry on aviation safety, the Dubin Commission presented three volumes of recommendations in its report. They were unveiled to the public between May, 1981 and February, 1982.

The major recommendations were in the areas of airworthiness, accident and incident investigation reporting, enforcement of laws and regulations, navigational aids, uncontrolled airports and personnel. The Dubin recommendations on accident and incident investigations in Volume 1 resulted in the passage of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act. It was introduced in the House by the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, and was passed. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board is now operational.

The Aeronautics Act amendment Bill with which we are now dealing implements the legislative recommendations of Volumes 2 and 3 of the Dubin Commission and represents the first attempt at a comprehensive scheme of amendments for the Aeronautics Act since the Act was passed in 1919. I believe there were some minor modifications in 1921. Essentially, the legislation which has been on the books heretofore was the product of the 1919 variety, and I think we all recognize that there have been some tremendous changes in the aviation business between 1919 and 1985.

The proposed amendments will strengthen the Department's enforcement program with stronger enforcement powers and increased penalties. These should prevent a recurrence of the situations described by Mr. Justice Dubin such as unlicensed air carriers which operate in an unsafe manner and undercut legitimate competitors and which are not deterred by the currently available penalties; operators who fail to comply with safety standards and continue to operate unsafe aircraft; and individuals who ignore the rules of the air or the instructions of air traffic controllers while operating aircraft.

In his findings Mr. Justice Dubin cited many examples of these situations. The proposed amendments will give the Department the necessary tools for more vigorous enforcement. In order to enhance the enforcement of the Act, the offences will be reorganized so that some may be prosecuted by indictment, fines will be increased, and there will be new penalties for operating an illegal commercial air service including the possible forfeiture of the aircraft.

● (1600)

The amendments also increase the administrative powers of enforcement as well as suspending or cancelling a licence. The Department will be able to assess monetary penalties varying up to maximum of $1,000 for certain regulatory offences. This is a relatively new concept in Canada, but it is used by the Federal Aviation Authority in the United States and has been advocated by the aviation community in Canada.

The proposals for more vigorous enforcement, however, will be balanced by a method of review of administrative enforcement decisions. The establishment of an independent civil aviation tribunal, as recommended by Mr. Justice Dubin, will provide a vehicle for such a review. This body will hear and determine appeals from administrative penalties in an expeditious and fairly informal fashion. It will provide two opportunities for challenging the Department's decision, first by an application to a single member of the tribunal and then to a panel of the three members.

In most cases the tribunal can substitute its own decision for that of the Department, but where the matter would involve medical qualifications or professional incompetence, the tribunal will be limited to affirming the departmental decision or referring the matter back to the Department on the basis that the Department has a responsibility to the public to ensure the competence of those involved in aviation. The tribunal will be composed of people representing expertise in the various areas of aeronautics. Most will serve on a part-time basis and members will be drawn from all parts of Canada. The aim of the tribunal is to provide a system whereby these matters can be decided in an expeditious and informal manner by persons who have the technical knowledge of all factors involved.

The amendments to the Bill also permit the consolidation of the aeronautical regulations system by expanding existing regulatory powers and introducing new regulatory powers so that all requirements necessary for aviation safety can be mandatory. Heretofore some of these matters could only be dealt with by administrative recommendations.

Some of the new areas of regulatory activity will include: airworthiness of aeronautical products such as aircraft engines and propellers; the location of aerodromes so that they will be sited in a manner that will lessen the risk of mid-air collision; air navigation facilities so that the increasing number of private aids will operate to the same standard as those provided by the Department of Transport; regulations with respect to the handling of aviation fuel to ensure that proper fuels are used and that these fuels are free of contaminants will be included in the new areas of regulation; liability insurance for private aircraft so that the public may be assured of compensation for damage caused by aircraft.

Concurrently with the development of these amendments, the Department of Transport has been engaged in a massive revision of the existing air regulations in order to present them in a new consolidated format that will be easier for the aviation public to understand. It is very clear that in order to have a system of laws and regulations and in order for those laws and regulations to be respected and their integrity to be upheld, there must be some assurance that the laws and regulations are clearly understood, that they are spelled out in fairly clear and coherent language. As a result of the many developments that have taken place in the aviation industry since 1919, some of the wording and some of the interpretations with respect to the rules and regulations have caused some problems in terms of the administration and the enforcement of these rules and regulations.

There are as well provisions in the Bill with respect to zoning. These provisions are aimed at clarifying the purposes of procedures used in zoning and also to extend zoning powers to areas around air navigation facilities. The amendments distinguish between zoning at airports for safety purposes, such as the safe landing and taking off of aircraft, and for purposes that are incompatible with airports, such as protecting access or preventing developments that would be affected by noise. The latter type of zoning is authorized only at federal airports and airport sites. Where zoning is aimed at incompatible land uses, the interest of the province in planning the development of areas around airports is recognized by a requirement for provincial participation in the zoning process.

The new power to zone around air navigation facilities is aimed at preventing development of lands in a way that would interfere with air navigation signals that provide information vital to the safe operation of aircraft using the facility. The current provision that provides for compensation for loss in value of land because of zoning is repealed. The reason is that it will make the law compatible with provincial and municipal laws. At the present time provinces and municipalities do not compensate for these losses. As a matter of fact, apart from a number of settlements made 20 years ago, there have been only two cases where applications for such compensation have been made.

With respect to fees, amendments are incorporated into this legislation aimed at improving the collection of fees. They provide for interest on overdue accounts and the authority to require a bond or letter of credit as security for fees which will be exercised where there is history of non-payment or late payment of fees. This measure incorporates good business practices. It also provides that a court order may be obtained authorizing the Government to detain an aircraft until any outstanding fees have been paid. It is recognized that there has been insufficient clout in the hands of the Department of Transport on many occasions to exercise the necessary powers to collect fees that have been outstanding and past due.

The amendments provide a procedure whereby doctors and optometrists who believe their pilot patients have a condition that could lead to an aviation accident can be sure that the Department of Transport is made aware of that condition. The amendments provide that where the doctor or the optometrist feels such a condition exists, the doctor or optometrist must advise the patient to report the condition to the Department of Transport. As well, the patient must then report his condition and the doctor or the optometrist must, within 72 hours, confirm that the report has been made.

As a result of the report, the pilot will be examined by departmental doctors and a determination made as to whether his licence should continue. Doctors and optometrists will be protected against legal actions arising out of making these reports. This amendment tries to strike a balance between the confidential relationship between the doctor and his patient and the public interest in having only those persons who are medically fit operating aircraft.

The remainder of the amendments are aimed at modernizing the wording of the Act, updating it and authorizing current departmental practices such as the provision of navigational aids, the publication of aeronautical information, and the provision of aid to non-federal airports. What we are doing is upgrading a piece of legislation that has certainly served us well but clearly needs to be updated and modernized in tune with the realities of the 1980s, 1990s and the 21st century.

As I said earlier, the provisions of this Bill have been discussed exhaustively over the years during which they were developed with the aviation community, the public, special interest groups and, I suspect, Members of Parliament. While it is a technical and rather detailed Bill it is very important because it will provide the framework for the aviation community in Canada for some time. A lot of Members have a very particular interest in this kind of legislation. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), has been active in the work done on many pieces of legislation having to do with aviation safety. It is an issue with which all Members are deeply concerned.

What we are trying to do here is to strike a balance whereby an effective framework can be put in place to ensure the safety and security of the aviation environment. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax-East (Mr. Forrestall), the Parliamentary secretary, has been a long-standing advocate of better ways and means of ensuring the safety off all modes of transportation. As a matter of fact, I think Members will recall that over the course of seven or eight years, he had presented a private Member's Bill recommending the establishment of an independent accident investigation board. While this has not been implemented in its totality, at least a portion of it has. I think there are a number of recommendations and suggestions indicating that it might very well be in Canada's best interest to opt for a multimodal safety board. The Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) has also been very closely involved in matters relating to aviation and particularly aviation safety.

I commend the Bill to all Hon. Members of the House. I want to assure them that they will have the utmost co-operation. We will provide the kind of departmental advice, assistance and briefings that will ensure that they will understand all aspects of the Bill. I commend the Bill to the House for quick passage with the assurance that there will be ample time to deal with all elements of it during the course of the committee considerations. I suspect that if it is deemed desirable to call witnesses, that could also be done, but I think Members will quickly find that there has already been a very exhaustive consultative process. Nonetheless, if information is required from the Department or from my own office, we will certainly be very pleased to make it available. I thank Hon. Members for this opportunity and I hope that we can move quickly to have this matter referred to the committee, at which time we can consider it in much more detail.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows:

The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—Acid rain—Canada-United States discussions. (b) Niagara River pollution; The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—Unemployment Insurance—Inclusion of severance pay in income calculation. (b) Effect on laid-off workers; and the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata)—Administration of Justice—Premier's trial—Prime Minister's knowledge of marijuana find. (b)) Date of inquiry.

AERONAUTICS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski: That Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the Bill to amend the Aeronautics Act, Bill C-36, and to give the Hon. Member the assurance that the Official Opposition supports this Bill and will co-operate with the Government in referring the Bill to committee as soon as possible.

I should remind the House that this Bill is the result, as the Minister himself said earlier, of numerous consultations that took place in recent years with the various parties involved in the aviation sector. I believe the Minister recalled that, in 1978, a task force was created in the Department of Transport to start a review of all aeronautics regulations, in order to introduce appropriate amendments to the Aeronautics Act and provide this vital industry in Canada with modern legislation to meet the needs of the hour and of 20th and even 21st century aeronautics. Consequently, I am very pleased to see that all the major parties concerned were consulted and consulted often in the past few years, preparatory to drafting what is before the House today as Bill C-36.

I am equally pleased with the decision to incorporate in this Bill the principal recommendations made by the Dubin Commission of Inquiry on Aviation Safety in Canada. This Commission, which was formed when my hon. friend, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), was doing his first stint, that is, during his short mandate . . .

As his first mandate as Minister of Transport in 1979, he had the good fortune of creating that commission which did an excellent job. All Canadians must be grateful to Mr. Justice Dubin for his exceptional work which ended with a whole series of important recommendations we now find embodied in and implemented through specific amendments to the Aeronautics Act. I thank the Minister for following up on many of the Dubin report recommendations.

I should like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that if we in Canada believe that deregulation is a must if we want to foster more competition on behalf of consumers, on behalf of civil aviation users, it is just as important to admit that deregulation would not be advisable with respect to safety. I am pleased to see that the Bill advocates stricter and more severe regulations on aviation safety and the protection of Canadians. To me, that is essential. We can have confidence in the airlines, in market forces concerning user services, in the range of prices and services made available to passengers, but I do not think we can give free rein to the companies when it comes to air safety. Therefore, though the former Liberal Government was in favour of deregulation to make users benefit from improved competition, it too had every intention of implementing stricter aviation safety regulations.

I am pleased to see that this Government has decided to seek the same objectives we had in mind a few years ago to make sure that the air travelling public and air terminal users are better protected in a safer environment.

I want to make a point concerning incidents that have occurred, such as the aircraft forced down at Gimli in Manitoba because of fuel shortage. I have been told that the Government has received or is about to receive the report on that incident. It is to be expected that the report will contain suggestions and recommendations which might bear directly on this Bill. I am not advocating a delay in the adoption of the Bill, for it will certainly be referred to a parliamentary committee for clause by clause consideration. But until the Bill comes up for third reading, if the Minister gets the report on the Gimli incident, I would like the report to be tabled in the House and made public so that we might consider its recommendations and perhaps learn something and take it into account before final passage of Bill C-36.

Finally, I want to thank the Minister for his generous offer to give a technical briefing on the various aspects of the Bill to Hon. Members who sit on the parliamentary committee to which the Bill will be referred. It is obviously a very complicated piece of legislation and I am sure that senior officials of his Department or a few experts could give the required briefing to the Members of the parliamentary committee who will do the clause by clause study of this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude therefore my comments by congratulating the Minister who has introduced a legislation which assuredly is nearly identical in every respect to the one which his predecessor could have introduced if the Canadian electorate had voted differently. I can assure him that although this may be a golden opportunity to make a whole series of speeches on the needs of our respective constituents, the area of transportation being so vast that each and everyone of us could rise and make representations on behalf of our respective ridings and constituents . . . But the Official Opposition will show magnanimity; it will not abuse the time of the House, because we recognize that this is a technical bill, not a political one; we will not play politics with this bill, preferring to help the government provide Canada with a modern and effective legislation in the area of aeronautics.

● (1620)

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the eagerness of the Minister to have the Bill dealt with in the House as quickly as possible in order that it can be referred to committee. It has been a long time in the making. I have listened to discussions in Transport Committee meetings with seven different Ministers of Transport during the last 17 years and on every occasion the matter of rewriting the Aeronautics Act arose.

I suppose the delay has been due to the new developments in technology and the increased variety of aircraft. Those factors have meant, and will continue to mean in the future, that the regulations have to be updated continually.

The Bill allows the Ministry to administer the regulations. However, most of the areas which affect the industry or civil aviation are not contained in the Bill but exist only in the regulations over which the Minister has complete control.

The Bill itself is not very technical. It merely establishes the machinery and the bureaucracy for the regulatory powers. I submit that much analysis of the regulations will be required before the effect of the legislation can be measured. In that light, I hope the Minister will make the commitment that the committee, in dealing with the second reading of the Bill, will have access to the regulations, if they have been printed, which will be brought in under this legislation. The committee should go over every regulation which is proposed under this legislation and, as well, should hear witnesses from the various groups which are directly or closely involved in civil aviation.

I appreciate that there has been a great deal of consultation with concerned groups, including the Canadian Owners and Pilots Association, the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, air traffic controllers, the Saskatchewan Flying Farmers Association, and others. However, being consulted with respect to the Bill is different from being consulted on the actual detailed regulations. Some of that consultation may have already taken place. But in any case I would ask the Minister if the regulations have been printed and if they will be referred to the committee in conjunction with this Bill. In addition, will the committee be allowed to hear witnesses with respect to the regulations? I find very little in the Bill with which the organizations or other interested groups would take serious issue or to which they would take exception. I suspect that if there are serious exceptions they will arise from the regulations.

Canada has more pilots and planes per capita than any other country in the world. The fact that this Act has not had a good going-over since the 1920s should suggest that a sufficient amount of time must be allocated in committee to ensure that proper consultation is held with the public regarding the regulations. The Bill gives the Minister complete control over the regulations and operations, as well as over security and the imposition of charges for the use of air services. Again, I hope the Minister will depart from the practices which were too often carried out by previous Ministers who arbitrarily made decisions with little or no consultations, including consultations with the standing committee. I am confident that the Minister, with his long-standing membership on the committee and his hard work and experience, will want to hold those consultations.

The legislation not only gives the Minister complete control over the regulations and operations, it also gives him the power to appoint members to a board of inquiry in order to investigate an incident or accident involving an aircraft which affects safety. I hope the Minister will call upon all the various agencies and organizations and ask them to provide a list of names of people who have expertise from which he can choose. I realize the Minister will want to choose a few people himself, but that is a way of consulting which would provide a broad cross-section of people who have knowledge and expertise regarding air safety and the investigation of incidents and accidents.

I agree that the Ministry of Transport should not investigate accidents which pertain to the regulations that the Department will enforce. I agree that those kinds of investigations should be carried out outside the Ministry. However, I thought that the CTC would have been strengthened and its independence increased. I feel that the Air Transport Committee of the CTC should have been strengthened and that its investigatory powers should have been enlarged. If that had been done, it would not be necessary to set up independent tribunals. But I suppose it is a case of six of one and half a dozen of the other. Whether it is an additional body which is appointed from time to time to investigate an accident as it pertains to safety, or whether the CTC Air Transport Committee does it, it still must be done in each case. However, I believe that the establishment of an independent tribunal for each separate incident or accident would mean a much greater cost, unless the CTC was to maintain a permanent staff which would have the expertise to analyse and keep records about incidents and accidents, so that as and when a tribunal is appointed a staff would be immediately available to it. Those people would then become part of the staff of the tribunal, rather than of the Canadian Transport Commission.

A former Minister of Transport, Jean-Luc Pepin, and myself, were the only two members on the committee who opposed the degree of deregulation which was being suggested by the Government of that day and supported by members of the Conservative Party. I took issue with this for a number of reasons, not the least of which is that deregulation in the areas in which it has occurred is nothing more than a return to, or an appeal to, mediocrity. We are now in the situation where air fares are cheaper for some people in some places and more costly for some people in other places. Service to isolated, small and medium-sized communities, as I predicted, has worsened. We can hardly blame the major air carriers, be they regional or national, but if they can vacate a small market and rely only on the larger markets then we will find we have a multiplicity of jerk-water outfits which start out by leasing second-hand aircraft and hiring laid off crews, running a mediocre operation and giving mediocre service to the smaller markets. There has already been a number of instances where this deterioration, this appeal to mediocrity, has taken place.

There is another danger, Mr. Speaker—and I am confident the Minister is aware of it in the back of his mind—when Government panders to this appeal to, "get Government off our backs. There's too much regulation, too much government and we want a free and open market system". When we go the route of deregulating the air industry, for example, we can end up in a rut of shortcuts and lack of enforcement of regulations which are in place, whether or not they are adequate, because the industry wants government off its back. We have heard these kinds of speeches from inside and outside Parliament for a number of years.

I want to say, Sir, that as far as we in the New Democratic Party are concerned, there are three kinds of regulations: First, there is safety and airworthiness. There cannot be, must not be, and I am confident with this Minister that there will not be, any compromise and our safety standards will be updated frequently and strengthened. There can be no compromise on safety regulations and airworthiness no matter how tough economically it is for the operator. Second, there is the whole matter of entry and exist and the use of aerodromes and airports which are build at the taxpayers' expense. There must be a measure of regulation in that area because when we allow entry and exit in and out of cities there shoud be no remote or isolated area in Canada, no small or middle-sized city in this country, that would not be able to depend on a reasonably permanent basis of civil aviation services. If there is no regulation, there will be so many "inners" and "outers" we won't know from one year to the next which airline is operating into one's city. And it has already started, Mr. Speaker. There must be regulation on the whole matter of entry and exit into a route. If an airline, be it small, medium or large, wishes to enter into a route or a pair of cities, it should not be allowed to pick just the good market and leave out the isolated and small and middle-sized communities. It should be prepared and required to take a mix of the market. If it is not prepared to accept some of the bad with the good then obviously there will be worse service for the people in the isolated and small and middle-sized communities because the market is not there so that the airlines can make a big profit. If they want the whole market deregulated, free and open for them to go into, then there surely must be some regulatory obligation placed upon them to provide a reasonable and equitable mix of service no matter where that service is located in the country. Without that, Mr. Speaker, the situation will continue to deteriorate. There will be areas in the northern parts of Canada and in small cities even up to the size of my own city, which will have a deterioration in the quality of service. That has already started. Some degree of regulation of the whole matter of entry and exit should be maintained.

The third class of regulation is the matter of fares. As far as we in this Party are concerned, if someone is dumb enough to sell an airline ticket at less than what it costs, that is his problem. It will be to the benefit of the travelling public. I have been amazed to see over the past couple of years the jungle of air fares which is already in place in this country. A fare which applies one day out of one city does not apply in that city two or three months later, but does apply in another city. They might want to do the same thing as the variable rate on grain and say, "If you all go into Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal, we can give you real cheap seats". How one gets to those places is another matter, Mr. Speaker. Some good friends of mine went on a trip overseas and the only way they could get the cheap overseas air fare was to drive from Saskatoon to Calgary, leave their car with friends there and drive back when they returned. It was that or pay a regular air fare to Winnipeg or Toronto. That is not what one would call equitable service, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, a limited amount of regulation is required in the matter of fares. A fare which is going to apply to one part of a route must apply to every other part of the route. They should not be able to pick out some and leave out others because that discriminates against some people in this country because of where they happen to live. The more we allow this to happen, the more our very limited market in Canada becomes fractionalized.

We are not in a position because of the size of our market to copy what is happening in the United States or Europe where there are high density markets. To apply some or any of their regulatory regime to our situation, I suggest, is a misapplication because we have a northern climate, a massive geography and a widely and thinly scattered population. What might apply in a high density, heavy market route out of New York, Los Angeles, Chicago or, for that matter, Toronto or Vancouver, does not and cannot apply to the rest of Canada. That would be economic nonsense. If we allow the market to be fractionalized under a multiplicity of airlines, what will happen is that they will take turns losing money. As they lose money, one of three things might happen. First, they might go belly up; second, they might go to the Government to get a subsidy, or third, they might merge with a larger airline. It is inevitable because of the size of the market in Canada that we will see the day when we will be back to just three or four viable airlines operating in this country. That is all we can afford. We need three or four dozen airlines like we need a hole in the head. They would not be able to supply a good enough service and will divide the market up so small that the big guys will run the little guys into the ground. Then the big guys will have a monopoly at the places they select because they can go in and out of them when they damn well please. They don't have to get approval of a fare, all they have to do is file it. It has gotten as bad as the CPR freight rates.

We appreciate the need for this legislation. We support the complete updating and revamping of the whole regulatory regime in civil aviation. We ask the Minister, before the regulations are gazetted, that they be sent to the Transport Committee, that witnesses be invited and that the Committee go over every single regulation. This should be an annual practice as and when new or updated regulations are to be implemented. They should be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and we can hear from the people concerned. Similarly, as and when a regulation has outlived its usefulness it would be nice if the Minister came and told us about it and pointed out what regulations can be eliminated. We have had too many eliminated where there was no consultation.

• (1640)

I hope the Minister will continue to conduct himself in the manner in which he has in the preparation of this legislation. To be fair about it, a lot of work and preparation has been done by two, three or four of his predecessors. We also hope there will be time to go through it in concert with the regulations envisaged. I suspect the committee is going to have a bit of difficulty in getting at it because it is faced with the Estimates and the Air Canada annual report, CNR, VIA Rail and all the other things on the committee's plate. Given that, we may not be able to finish this before the end of June, but I assure the Minister, on behalf of his Parliamentary Secretary, that we will work hard at it as quickly as we can once the Bill is through second reading. I believe we are having a steering committee meeting tomorrow and no doubt we will discuss when we can start dealing with this Bill or mix it in with the Estimates. We cannot do much about the Estimates anyway, so maybe we should send the Minister a letter and say they are done.

Mr. Lewis: Get that in writing.

Mr. Benjamin: I have only seen one amendment to the Estimates in 17 years being passed in committee and in the House, and I have seen quite a few Estimates.

In closing, if the Minister will carry out that sort of a schedule, I know the committee will be anxious to co-operate. We want to hear from all the different organizations he has consulted with in the course of his drafting of the Bill and legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Mazankowski: On a question or comment, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The first round is 40 minutes without any question or comments. We now proceed to the next round and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, not having occupied this position for a long period of time, I would like the opportunity to respond to some of the questions the Hon. Member raised. I think he would want me to respond, and if I have an opportunity at some point in time I would appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Minister will have that opportunity. Other Members will be rising to debate this Bill and he will have the opportunity then, as well as on closing of the debate. But we are now starting the 20 minute round of speeches with 10 minutes for questions or comments.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the observations I wish to make this afternoon are partly in response not only to the spokesman on transport matters for the NDP, but also to the interesting points and observations raised by the critic of the Official Opposition. This is a somewhat unique Bill. The Minister in his opening remarks suggested that it has been some 65 or 66 years since this Parliament has had an opportunity on which to bring together—not that there has not been prior work with respect to amendments—in a legislative form some of the very necessary, and we hope adequate, amendments which we all know are so needed and which we hope will be welcomed by the industry.

I am not sure which is older, the Act or Mary Poppins. On the other hand, we are attempting to bring the Aeronautics Act into the 1980s. We hope that the work not only of the present Government but of previous Governments as well will serve the industry at least over the foreseable future. Hopefully this will be a basis for allowing the orderly, safe and efficient development of this industry in Canada through to the turn of the century. In that context, I am sure the Minister will have an opportunity, as I do so now, to welcome the assurance of support from both the Official Opposition and the NDP with respect to this measure.

A question has been raised with respect to a technical briefing concerning this Act. It is a technical matter, and this is something to which the present Minister and Government, in a spirit of consultation, is quite prepared to accede and would indeed welcome. I might just say as an aside to the NDP spokesman that indeed steps to achieve that were already in motion earlier today. They were superseded by the presence of the Bill itself, otherwise he might have had the opportunity of obtaining that type of briefing together with members of the Official Opposition. It is still not too late for that type of technical briefing and, if that is the wish, I am sure arrangements can be made to accommodate Members.

In that same vein, I want to comment very briefly on a further observation or request made by opposition spokesmen with respect to regulations. Over the years the regulations which flow from legislation have always been a matter of concern to members of the Opposition particularly, but I can assure you and all members of the Opposition that the regulatory process which will come into place once this measure has been dealt with here in the House and in the committee will be a matter of concern to all, and I am sure favourable consideration can be given with respect to a review. I hasten to add the simple but very obvious caveat—and I am sure the Hon.

Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will appreciate this—that the current Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is, if anything, not a presumptuous person. Nor would he dare tread upon the territory of the distinguished Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport or, indeed, the members of that august body by presuming for one moment that the committee might make substantive changes in the legislation, thus frustrating and circumventing the proper utility of the regulations which flow from it. Having said that, the matter is too serious for we to be facetious and I do not intend to be that.

This measure is an over-all attempt to bring some sanity to the industry. Very few pieces of legislation have survived as long as has this one. I think to the original drafters must go the accolades and admiration of those of us here in the mid-1980s simply because it has stood up that long. Whatever else might be said about it, it must reflect the wisdom of those who looked at a very fledgling industry. I believe that their wisdom and foresight has sustained it admirably well. Now, as a result of conflicts between jurisdictions and conflicts with federal requirements and provincial and municipal authorities, there is a need for an entirely different framework in order to provide the air industry with a means for a more orderly development in the future.

● (1650)

The Minister has spoken briefly on the general principles of the Bill. These include safety, zoning, the new medical requirements as well as other aspects. I trust that this legislation will be discussed at some length in committee because in certain aspects we are introducing a unique principle. I refer to the requirement for medical information.

Some jurisdictions in Canada allow certain actions by medical authorities to be taken not necessarily with the fullest consent of the individual concerned. In this respect, I suggest it is important to consider that part of the Bill carefully. Let me read into the record the more operative parts of the medical requirement provision in the Bill. Clause 5.5(1) states:

> Where a physician or an optometrist believes on reasonable grounds that a patient is a flight crew member, an air traffic controller or other holder of a Canadian aviation document that, to the knowledge of the physician or optometrist, imposes standards of medical fitness, the physician or optometrist shall, if in his opinion the patient has a medical condition that is likely to constitute a hazard to aviation safety—

—take certain steps. Hopefully, in recognition of the privacy of such information, the first step to be taken is to direct the physician or optometrist to advise the patient of his condition. That patient will be advised to inform the appropriate medical authorities within the Department of Transport of that condition.

The physician or optometrist would then ascertain from the Minister within 72 hours whether the patient has reported the condition, and if he has not, the physician or optometrist is required to transmit that information.

We are dealing with the important principle of the privacy of medical information. It is the inviolate position that exists between the doctor and his patient. I believe it is important that Canadians understand this measure because it is the first step by a federal authority and the first step contemplated by an Act of Parliament. Some provinces have taken steps in this direction as concerns impaired drivers and other issues.

I believe that Clause 5.5(3) is innovative and progressive in terms of safety while at the same time recognizing the right to the privacy of individual Canadians. That clause states:

> The Minister may make such use of any information provided pursuant to subsection (1) or (2) as he considers necessary in the interests of aviation safety.

This Bill ensures the sanctity of such information and I believe it is important for the committee to pay close attention to those clauses of the Bill.

Furthermore, it is my hope that the committee will consider some of the regulatory questions that were raised by the Hon. Member for Regina West which can best be explained in the committee. I appreciate having had the opportunity to make a very brief intervention.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary on their comments and their efforts to update legislation with respect to aeronautic safety and the administration of airports.

At the present time there is a controversy in Simcoe County over the best location for a municipal airport. The City of Barrie favours a location south of Barrie, close to Toronto, in the township of Innisville. This will cause development to take place south of Barrie. Unfortunately, the town council of Innisville is opposed to that.

The people of my community in the City of Orillia, the business community and surrounding area, believe the airport should be located between Barrie and Orillia. It is a location that makes much more sense for the community. It would serve both communities equally well and prove to be an economic asset.

Does this Bill provide for an independent review process by an independent body to consider the economic implications and social considerations and aeronautical considerations so that it does not remain a controversy between two cities? Since taxpayers at all levels are, in effect, footing the bill, is there provision in the Bill for that kind of independent review process to take place?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have to answer at another time. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ADVISABILITY OF GRANTING RIGHT TO POLITICAL PARTICIPATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be empowered to study the question of granting to federal public employees the full political participation enjoyed by other Canadians and, that the Committee report its findings to the House no later than June 28, 1985.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to take the time of the House, but I would like to know whether it is in order for this House to study this motion at this time. Members will remember that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) did try the courts on this issue, I think it was last year. I understand he gave indications that he would also pursue this in the courts with the support of the unions.

Has the Hon. Member pursued this matter in the courts? Has he taken action before the courts? If he has, it changes the picture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member now saying that this particular item is before the courts?

Mr. Gauthier: I am asking whether it is before the courts, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think what we should do is to go ahead with the debate and the Hon. Member will probably answer that question in the debate.

Mr. Gauthier: You may enlighten me here, Mr. Speaker, but if the question is before the courts it is not for us in this House to discuss the matter at this time. If it is not before the courts, fine. I want to participate. I want to make it clear at this time that this House cannot, if the question is sub judice, talk about it. I am asking the Chair to confirm or deny whether the question is before the courts.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. You may recall that, I believe a couple or three months ago, this House debated my Private Member's Bill on the same topic. There were no objections raised. Whether or not this matter is before the courts I have not the faintest idea, but this is the number one court in Canada and we debated the subject a couple of months ago. I do not know why we cannot do it again.

Mr. Cassidy: I appreciate the chance to speak on this motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Would the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) like to answer the question so that we may commence the debate in Private Members' Hour?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this specific motion is that the question should be referred to a committee of the House. That is not a question before the courts. The courts have no power at all to look to that particular question. In response to the Hon. Member's question, the answer is that the matter of referring this question to a committee of the House is not before the courts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe that pretty well answers the question. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the chance to speak to this issue. The purpose of this motion today is to get action on a matter of vital importance to 250,000 federal public employees, namely the issue of political rights. It is an issue in which both the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party spoke quite categorically during the course of the 1984 election campaign indicating they were in favour of giving full political rights to the vast majority of federal public employees.

The situation right now, and we have an election campaign in the Province of Ontario, is that despite the promises made by the Government last summer, the Conservative Party, that it would act to give political rights to federal employees, they are still in a situation where they cannot tell exactly what kind of participation they can enjoy in the current political campaign. The current law says that they must not work in a campaign. Does that mean federal public employees can put up a sign for a political candidate? They do not know. Can they knock on doors? It is not clear. Can they wear a button? It is not certain. Could a public servant's wife or a 14-year old son or daughter participate in a campaign? That also is not known, Mr. Speaker. In fact, there was a conflict between the guidelines now in force from the Public Service Commission which state that public employees should not act or speak in a politically partisan manner nor should they act in a way that would give rise to the perception that they may not be able to perform their duties in a politically non-partisan manner. Those are the guidelines laid down to public service employees and given to the employer and through which disciplinary action may be taken. That is in direct conflict with the promise made by the Government when the Conservatives were campaigning last summer. So far, unfortunately, there has been no action in order to sort out that particular conflict.

This motion is also particularly relevant because on Wednesday this week the equality section of the Charter of Rights will come into force. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the equality provisions of the Charter grant "equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination" to any citizen of Canada. I am sure that was intended not to exclude people who worked for the Government of Canada.

The specific measure I have here is designed to implement the promise which the Conservatives made in the summer, that is, that the matter would be referred at an early date to a committee of Parliament in order that it be studied. This motion is to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, but because of the danger or the fear that some people have had that this could lead to the issue being pigeon-holed in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, my resolution calls for the matter to be reported back with recommendations by the standing committee no later than June 28, 1985. In other words, action is required. It is not good enough to leave us hanging with vague promises in the hope that something might then occur. What I want to do in raising this issue with the House of Commons is to seek to urge the Government to carry through with its promise of extended political rights to workers in the Public Service.

I would now like to quote a couple of the promises which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made last summer. He was very explicit in making his promise of political rights. In responding to public sector unions, he said:

> We believe that this matter should be addressed by an all-Party parliamentary committee in consultation with Public Service organizations and we believe the situation can be quickly resolved.

He said the restrictions on Public Service political activity:

> —are unnecessary and likely not justifiable under the terms of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

It is now seven months since the Prime Minister took office. This week also sees the proclamation of the equality section of the Charter of Rights. There are some very specific and immediate reasons why we need action now. Nothing has been done to free up those public employees who may want to be involved in the Ontario provincial election. An election has been called in the Yukon. The same situation will prevail there. Goodness knows what may happen if we do not act with respect to all the other provincial campaigns that are to take place in the very near future.

Second, the Government could be losing its will on this issue. I hope to hear reassurance today that that is not the case. Delays in action may be related to divisions within the Cabinet. Certain elements of the senior civil service are resisting action on political rights. That has been reflected in the points of view which have been enunciated by the President of the Public Service Commission and also by the Commissioner of the Public Service Commission, Jennifer McQueen, both of whom seem to take the view that, unless they are instructed otherwise by legislation from Parliament, neutrality on the part of the Public Service is a requirement and that it should extend to every person, to a secretary, a truck driver and a data entry clerk. Everybody in Government should be neutral so that advice coming to Ministers and to the Cabinet from a handful of people at the peak of the civil service can be seen to be impartial.

I contrast that with the response given to the Public Service Alliance by the Progressive Conservatives during the election.

The Conservatives stated:

> The P.C. Party favours a general removal of the restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants covered by collective agreements. These restrictions are unnecessary and may not be justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There are some senior public servants whose job responsibilities are very political in nature nad whose rights should be somewhat restricted to prevent conflict of interest, but we are confident that these people could be covered separately without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.

● (1710)

Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act indicates that Public Service employees cannot hold office in a political Party or attend conventions as delegates. The Progressive Conservatives stated, that most public servants should be free to participate in the internal activities of a political Party and that only if they wanted to become candidates should they request and be granted leave of absence from the employer.

This statement indicates that we are not really talking about the issue as to whether political rights should be granted to most people who work in the Public Service of Canada, but when that will occur and how soon. I note with approval that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in fact has initiated discussions with public sector unions on the issue of political rights. This began three months ago. Unfortunately there is yet to be a concrete proposal put on the table or made public. I hope that in the course of today's debate we might in fact have such a proposal made public.

The Government should in fact lay out its plan now. I would like to see the concurrence of the unions, which I believe will come very quickly, because they have made their decision in support of the principle of political rights absolutely crystal clear. That would allow us to proceed with legislation. Legislation could come into the House of Commons now. It could be debated, quickly go to committee and be brought back to Parliament for adoption before the end of June. I would much prefer to see that occur than even to have this issue referred to a committee, as my motion proposes. My motion, however, is designed to give us an opportunity to debate the issue and perhaps to give the Government an opportunity to indicate that it will be acting very shortly with legislation so that we could see it occur and adopted before the end of June.

If that is the commitment of the Government there is no need for the issue to go to a parliamentary committee. Let us see the legislation. However, if this question is being linked to four or five other questions now under discussion with Public Service unions, I would have to say that I have some misgivings. Because of the Charter, because of the fundamental importance in a democratic society of the issue of political rights for so many people who happen to work for the Government of Canada, it seems to me that we cannot use this as a bargaining chip, something which might be taken away if the unions were not amenable on other things on which the Government was trying to get a resolution.

I believe it is time, since early action was promised, to separate this one out in order to take early action if the other issues are to take longer to resolve. I call upon the Government to take action so that we can act upon this and put it into law before June 28, before Parliament actually rises for the summer recess.

This issue has been discussed in the House of Commons more frequently in the last few months than in the preceding six years. I am pleased to see that. The only time it was discussed in the previous Parliament was on the two occasions when a Bill to provide for political rights for people in the Public Service, in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), was debated during Private Members' Hour. A number of Members on all sides have spoken favourably to this particular issue. Recently, the Public Service Alliance in fact circulated a questionnaire or letter to all Hon. Members asking whether they supported the declared position of their Party in favour of political rights. I am pleased to say that some 50 Members, mainly from the New Democratic Party and from the Progressive Conservative Party, have already responded to the Alliance by indicating that they support those principles, that they support the position taken by their Parties during the course of the 1984 election campaign.

I urge all Members to talk with their staff to find that letter which may be in their files awaiting a response and to respond favourably. I also urge them to work through their party caucuses and other means to make sure that the issue does not stay on the shelf but is acted upon very soon.

This is a very important issue for me because my riding is a public sector one with a large number of people who work for the Government of Canada. Many of those people have in fact worked in election campaigns in the past, are doing so now and would like to continue to do so in the future. However, some of them felt intimidated because of the guidelines circulated by the Public Service Commission. If not that, then certainly they feel misgivings because of the wording of Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. They are looking for direction from Parliament. They are looking for an opening for them to have democratic rights from Parliament.

I am committed and I intend to continue to pursue this issue of political rights until it is resolved. It is of direct importance not only to a quarter of a million federal public employees, but our decision in Parliament on the issue will touch another 200,000 people who work indirectly for the Government of Canada through Crown corporations, as well as countless people who work in provincial government employ and provincial government corporations.

The idea that one cannot even tell whether or not one can put up an election sign for a political candidate, that one might run the risk of being fired under Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act, is ridiculous in this day and age. Even though that section has never in fact been invoked, it is there as a threat. It is used as a threat. In fact people are called on the carpet from time to time and reminded of the wording of the legislation. In my opinion it is clearly in violation of the constitutional Charter of Rights guarantees to freedom of speech, to freedom of association and to equality under the law.

As my friend from Ottawa East pointed out, a number of people in the Public Service initiated, along with me, a court case last summer. I do not want to talk too much about it, Mr. Speaker, for the reasons you have indicated, because we are now talking about whether or not this general question should be referred to a committee of the House of Commons. However, as the Hon. Member for Regina West pointed out, this is the supreme court of the land. It would be wrong to delay action by the Government of Canada pending any determination by the courts on this matter. We have the right to act. Legislation could come in. That legislation could supersede any particular court case. I hope very much that in fact that would be the case.

I want to suggest to all Hon. Members that the current situation is truly ridiculous. In 1967 the Public Service Employment Act confirmed a ban on political activity but has allowed a number of specific exemptions. Those exemptions include the fact that a Public Service employee can stand for Parliament with the consent of the Public Service Commission. Therefore we have the curious situation which prevails right now in a riding in Cornwall, in the provincial election campaign, where a Public Service employee working for Transport Canada has received permission to stand as a candidate. If defeated—and I am confident that he will be elected to the Ontario legislature—

Mr. Lewis: He must be a Conservative.

Mr. Cassidy: He is an NDP member. Were he to be defeated, he would then face the fact that he might find his recent selection as the president of the riding association, of which he is a member, to be in contravention of the guidelines despite the fact that he was able to be so partisan that he could in fact be a candidate. That is a very bizarre situation, a situation which cries out for rectification.

We have the situation where in practice many people of the government Party, of the Liberal Party and of my Party participate in election campaigns, particularly in the Ottawa area. Some of them are the mainstay of particular riding associations, yet they always participate with one eye over the shoulder in case someone might read them the riot act and tell them that that is not the way to go.

In 1980, the Liberals, then in opposition, promised broadened political rights. They forgot that promise during the course of their term in office after 1980, something which I very much regret. I am anxious as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to make sure that the new Government does not break the very categorical promises which were made at that time and I believe were endorsed by all the Ottawa Members particularly. There is reason to act as well because of the Charter, because of the experience we have had with more stringent application of the present rules, because of the guidelines of the Public Service, because of the Fraser case, and because of heightened awareness on all sides that something needs to be done.

Of course I am in support of the concept of collective bargaining. Although the Government said that it would refer this matter to a committee, if through the process of discussion with the unions it can come up with a specific proposal, I would say more power to it. Let us do that with unions on side and let us have a determination of the matter through the House.

I am uncomfortable with the determination of this issue before the courts because frankly, despite the Charter and everything else, it is something we should be able to determine on our own, without the need to refer it to the courts. I should like to make a specific proposal at this time in terms of what I think the legislation can and should contain. I hope either now or at other times Hon. Members will see fit to concur with this particular proposal.

• (1720)

In the first place, I believe that political rights should be granted on as broad a base as possible for people who work for the Government of Canada. Article 1 of the Charter provides for exemptions from the fundamental freedoms which are laid out in the Charter. Those exemptions apply only in the case of the reasonable limits that are prescribed by law which can demonstrably be justified in a free and democratic society.

The jurisprudence which is developing makes it quite clear that those limits should be very narrow. I therefore want to propose, since my time is up, that we grant full political rights to all people in the Public Service of Canada who are members of bargaining units. That would immediately open up political rights to 80 or 85 per cent of the people who work for the Government of Canada. The rule would be very clear and very simple. If you are in the union, in the Public Service Alliance, PIPS or some other union, you have political rights.

The legislation should indicate that the people at the top of the Public Service, deputy ministers and people in the executive category, the top 3,000 or 4,000 perhaps, should have to adhere to the doctrine of neutrality. Those people who are in the management category, not in bargaining units but not at the very senior levels, should probably be looked at on some kind of a case by case basis. It is harder to determine whether or not they can in fact be politically active without jeopardizing the need for neutrality at or near the top of the civil service.

That is a concrete and constructive proposal which I believe would enable us to act now and give political rights to the vast bulk of people who work for the people of Canada through the Public Service of Canada. It would give them—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: Are you agreed?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, I guess I should say "agreed".

Mr. Benjamin: Then sit down.

Mr. Gauthier: I won't sit down just yet. I have a few words to say.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for giving us the opportunity to look at this subject matter again, the question of political rights of public servants in Canada. Indeed, in the Ottawa area, in the national capital region, it is an important subject which comes up at election time, be it federal, provincial or otherwise. This question, of course, has been thoroughly discussed in the House and in committee. I would like to refer the House to the reports of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates of last year where we had as a witness the Public Service Commission. Extensive discussions were held then with the Commission with regard to Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act and Section 7 of the Financial Administration Act which gives managers the right to discipline public servants. There are ways and means of looking at this subject from every angle.

I submit that since the D'Avignon report was published in 1979, this subject has been thoroughly canvassed by the national capital members at least and I think we are of one opinion on this question. We believe that the law should be changed to allow public servants in support, administrative and other categories the right to participate fully in the political process, as it was given to them by the Charter of Rights, Section 2(3), which is, of course, modified by Section 1 which says that this Charter applies within reasonable limits.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the proposition by the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that the issue is not before the courts. As the House is aware, at election time last year, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre had asked the Federal Court for an injunction to limit the scope of Section 32.

[English]

I refer Members to articles in the press of December, 1984 which stated that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre had not succeeded in convincing the courts that the question required immediate study. The Federal Court said that the question required in-depth study. As there were only two weeks until the election from when he made his request for an injunction, the Federal Court said that although the subject is important, it requires in-depth study and, therefore, it would not grant an injunction on the basis of that short a time limit.

I take it from the answers to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member assured the House that the matter is not sub judice, that the question is not before the courts, and the only question that is before this House and before this court is indeed, "Are public servants authorized in law to participate fully in the political process?"

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I can be very precise, and I hope the Hon. Member does not pursue this too much because I think this is a co-operative kind of debate, I stated that the question as to whether or not this matter should be referred to a standing committee of the House of Commons was not before the courts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to address that question also because it is another question that is of importance to Members of this House. On the first question, I take it that we have that assurance. Therefore, it follows that indeed the question is before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and has been there since May 2, 1984. I submit that our rules and regulations are quite simple and clear on that matter.

The Public Service Commission tables it's annual report in the House every May. Last year it was tabled on May 2. This year it will probably be tabled in the beginning of the month of May. It tables the report and that report is referred to the committee automatically, under our new rules. A committee can pick up any subject that it wants which is referred to it by way of an annual report. Standing Order 46(4) reads:

Reports, returns or other papers laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament shall thereupon be deemed to have been permanently referred to the committee designated by the Member tabling the report, return or paper.

If we look at the annual report for 1983, we see that there is reference to political rights. It is indeed in this report.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am going to read the passage on page 28:

Leave authorized for the purpose of political activity under section 32 of the Act—

—the section in question.

—any employee wishing to stand for elected office or seek nomination in a federal, provincial or territorial election, shall submit to the Commission an application for leave without pay.

And the text elaborates further on this question.

The matter has been referred to a committee, which can therefore put the question on its agenda, examine it as much as it cares to and report on the matter to the House, which report may receive a response, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 69(13).

[English]

In our Standing Orders we have a very useful Standing Order, 69(13), which reads:

Within 120 days of the presentation of a committee report, the government shall, upon the request of the Committee, table a comprehensive response.

The Government could be asked by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates today, tonight, tomorrow if you want, to make its position known in a comprehensive manner on the matter of political rights of public servants. In my view, that would meet the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre quite adequately, thank you very much.

I know the Hon. Member understands the process. I know he will bring it up in the committee, as I did over the years, and as did the former Member for Ottawa Centre, Mr. Evans, and as did many other Members, including the past Member for Nepean-Carleton, Mr. Baker. I have been here for twelve and a half years. I do not know of a year that went by without having some Member of the Ottawa Carleton area bring the subject to the attention of this House, which I think is interesting in that it proves that we are indeed interested.

It is true, as the Member said, that public servants in the Ottawa area do participate in the political process. They do participate in federal elections and provincial elections. We now have a provincial election. If you read Dialogue Express put out by the Commission last year—and this is what got our committee going—you see that it is signed by the three commissioners, Mr. Gallant, Mrs. McQueen and Mr. Lacombe. It states:

Federal public service employees should not undertake activities, assume responsibilities or make public statements of a politically partisan nature or of a kind which could give rise to the perception that they may not be able to perform their duties as public servants in a politically impartial manner.

● (1730)

It goes on to say:

—employees should not personally campaign for or against political parties or candidates—

—employees should not become involved in the solicitation, collection, distribution or administration of the finances of political parties—

—employees should not assume any official functions or be elected to any recognized offices, including being a delegate to meetings or leadership conventions—

The fourth point is interesting. It does not say "should not" but it says "must not". That language is a little stronger. It reads:

—employees must not stand for elected office or seek nomination in a federal, provincial or territorial election—

That is clear Shakespearian English. The problem is that I disagree with the interpretation given by the Commission to Section 32, as does the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Many of us disagree with the interpretation being given to Section 32.

We dealt with this issue before in committee and in the House. What is now required is for the Government to take its courage into its own hands and come up with a position so that any Member of the House can understand—

[Translation]

—"clair comme de l'eau de roche", as they say in French—

[English]

—the position of the Government. I will not recite or read again the communication read into the record by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. Perhaps I should read it again. This communication was from the previous Leader of the Official Opposition to Mr. Jack Donegani dated August 14, 1984. It reads:

The PC Party believes that the present restrictions on political activity are unnecessary and likely not justifiable under the terms of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. While the rights of some senior public servants must be restricted in order to prevent conflict of interest, we feel that this issue could be addressed without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.

I agree.

Mr. Lewis: Then cross the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: No, I will not cross the floor on that issue. I have been saying for 12 years that I agree with those who think reasonably and believe that this issue is indeed intimidating public servants. It makes them feel uneasy when putting up signs on their lawns. I have had people in my riding put "hers" on signs because the public servants, him, did not want the signs to be known as theirs. They wanted them to be known as being "her" signs. It is a situation which I believe must be clarified. It does not make sense.

D'Avignon's report indicates that we should adopt the British system by having three categories of public servants: those who are free to participate, those who must get clearance from the Commission before they participate, and those who cannot participate at all because they give advice to the Government in the higher echelons. I think that is a reasonable approach to the question at hand.

Again, I must congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre for bringing this up today. I would hope that he would join with me, return to the committee and possibly have the Chairman of the committee and the Chairman of the steering committee agree that we can make a report to the House within the next few weeks, have that report tabled in the House and concurred in and then ask the Government to put its position forward in a clear manner. That will avoid expensive legal costs to the Alliance or whoever is backing the Hon. Member on this case. I know that judges will probably have to rule on that matter. I hope they are not doing it right now. If they are, I apologize to them. I have a great deal of respect for judges so I would not want to be speaking about something which is sub judice. I am talking about something which has been referred to a committee. I agree with him and I hope the House will also agree.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to participate in this discussion for a few moments. First, I would like to suggest that from the very clear question that was put at the opening of this debate and the reply given by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), my understanding is that the matter is not before the courts now but that it had been before the courts back in September of last year. It is certainly not before the courts now, and if it is, then obviously his answer was more than evasive.

The important thing we want to discuss today is the merits of the case within the framework and atmosphere in which we deal with these things. I do not think that there is any doubt in my mind or the mind of any other Member of Parliament who comes to the National Capital Region that public servants by and large should be given full political rights, rights which they have not had in the past. I say that because we are all too familiar with public servants who do work on our election campaigns and, if we believe the interpretation of the Public Service Commission, are working on our election campaigns illegally. I would feel very sorry for any Canadian citizen who is involved in a political process if that citizen is classified as doing something illegal. I do feel that this is a subject which we should and will deal with in the not too distant future.

The important thing we must consider is that in the last 12 years I have been here, and particularly in the last five or six years, this matter has been discussed more and more openly. A momentum and consensus have been building up among members of all Parties that the public servants should be given full political freedoms and that if they are disallowed from having those full political freedoms at this time, then the law should be changed.

Having said that, I would draw to the attention of the House the remarks already drawn to attention by the previous two speakers, point number four in a letter put out by the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party last August during the election campaign. It has already been read into the record but it indicates that the Progressive Conservative Party favours a general removal of restrictions on political activities for public servants. That clearly states my concern, and I think our Party's concern, for carrying on this process and opening up the political arena to those people who are public servants. I say that with the knowledge that I had some involvement in the phrasing and writing of this article which came out as part of our Party's platform on public servants.

I say that also because perhaps I bring a different point of view to this issue in that I am perhaps the only person in this Chamber who was a public servant who got fired because he sought a federal nomination. Having lost my job over that and feeling, some 12 or 13 years ago, that it was unfair and unjust and having taken it to the Divisional Court and three years later received my response, I must admit that I have always felt that I opted out by not taking the matter further to the Supreme Court of Canada. However, at the time it did not seem that important since I was already through my second federal election campaign before the Divisional Court of Ontario dealt with the matter. There is a reported decision on that matter in the law books.

I personally felt very strongly about this issue at a time when the few dollars that were involved were very, very crucial to my well-being and that of my family. I have not lessened my interest in the topic. However, I ask all Members to consider that the Party of which I happen to be a member, the Party which forms the Government of the day, did make that promise during the last election campaign along with a number of other promises.

Seven months is not a very long period of time. We have implemented quite a few of the commitments that were made during the election campaign, and those commitments are not being introduced and passed within the first six months willy-nilly. One could not possibly, in a well organized and planned program, introduce all the commitments which a Party makes in an election campaign within six months. We have a four-year term, and throughout those four years, I hope that all those commitments will be introduced, passed and become the order of the day in this country. Not all can be dealt with during the first six months leaving three and a half years before we implement any other programs. I think that they should be balanced over a period of time.

Having said that, since we are a federal Government looking at a federal situation, I do not see why we should be rushing into this matter within the first six or seven months. It has been a long-standing sore and I do not believe that it has to be wiped out in six months.

● (1740)

Having said that, I would like to point out, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) who introduced the motion stated, that the Government has not been sitting back and doing nothing. The Government has begun to negotiate with the unions. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is discussing this matter with the unions at the present time.

That is exactly what the Government said about the fourth point. The Government feels that the people who are in the bargaining units should be relieved of the illegality of this matter. Because the Government is currently bargaining with the unions, I feel that it is inappropriate to bring the matter forward in other forums. However, in many situations negotiations are very touchy and I do not want to build up false hopes. In addition, I certainly hope that no Member would use this forum to obtain a political advantage during the provincial election campaign. That would be demagoguery. I hope that Members have the better interests of federal public servants in mind, in order that this matter can be resolved before the next federal election.

This Government is the first Government which has taken the step to put the matter on the bargaining table, and I believe the Government should be commended for that initial step. However, if for some reason the topic is not resolved during the negotiations with an agreement arrived at which excludes the topic of political rights for public servants, we will still have about three-and-a-half years left in this term to deal with the issue. The issue could be resolved by way of a motion, by the route which was suggested by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), by striking a special committee in the House, or by way of a Private Member's Bill. I would whole-heartedly support the other means by which this matter could be brought forward for full discussion at a later stage. However, I believe it is important to allow the current negotiating process to continue.

Several matters were raised, such as a person putting a sign on his front lawn. In such case I would ask the person if they owned the house in joint tenancy, and if so, the sign should be put on an appropriate portion of the front lawn. Most people own their homes in joint tenancy and I do not think that the Public Service Commission would get excited about that situation. If it does—and if it is of value—I would offer my services free of charge to defend that person. However, such person might want to pay for services and get someone more skilled than I am in the courts. I have not been in the courts for a long period of time. But, I do feel strongly about the matter.

The guidelines which were published during the last election campaign by the Public Service Commission had never before been published in such a hard-nosed, definitive and brutal manner. During the previous four election campaigns in which I had been a candidate the matter was not as controversial as it became during the last election campaign. I felt that the Public Service Commission took a very insensitive and dogmatic position, which both surprised and concerned me. However, that action may have crystalized the point and brought it into focus. Because of its actions, the Public Service Commission has now joined the debate.

I do not think there is anything else that can be said at this time. Along with Members from all sides of the House, I support the aim, intention and goal of ensuring that public servants, at least those in the bargaining units, have the full rights of all other Canadians in the political process of Canada. I am not convinced, however, that bringing up this matter at the present time is furthering that end. I believe it is unfortunate that the matter was brought up at this time when negotiations are ongoing. I hope those negotiations are successful. Should they not bear the fruit which I optimistically hope they will bear, then I believe the matter should come before the House and subsequently go to committee to be dealt with at that time.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the political rights of public servants are an issue which is very close to my heart. In my opinion, Canadians who earn their living as public servants have the right to act as full-fledged citizens, and choosing a government and exercising one's franchise are of course some of the rights of full-fledged citizens. I am therefore very happy that we are discussing this subject today, but I would like the issue of the rights of civil servants to be dealt with and not just the matter of a few isolated political rights which it may seem appropriate at this time to give back to public servants without taking into account the whole context in which federal public servants operate in Canada.

[English]

We know, for instance, that political neutrality is an essential requirement in the federal Public Service, particularly in retaining its credibility with the democratic society which it serves.

The question is, if the restrictions which are currently in place are diminished, what else can we put in place to ensure the political neutrality of the public service? We must address the question of political rights by looking at five elements.

We must look at the question from the point of view of Parliament. We know that the historical interests of Parliament have stemmed from the need to remove the influence of the Crown from the electoral process. A related concern of both parliamentarians and Ministers is that officials should not use their public positions to promote their personal political philosophies. Such conduct, rightly, is seen as a contravention of democratic politics. Also, Ministers share many of the same concerns as parliamentarians. They have an additional interest, namely, that they should be assured that the advice which they receive is not motivated by partisan or other types of political considerations. They must also be assured, in the execution of decisions and the administration of policies, that their officials act in good faith.

The Public Service, which aspires to serve Governments of different political complexions, has an interest which is complementary to that of Ministers. Its own rationale depends on being perceived as the impartial servant of the Government that holds office. It is correspondingly important that the public should not feel that political allegiancies enter into or affect their dealings with government agencies. Therefore, the Public Service has an interest in ensuring that its professionalism is protected in whatever rules and regulations apply to the exercise of political rights. We must determine where the rights of public servants meet those of the public.

Individual public servants are affected mainly if they wish to exercise political rights. That has become increasingly visible as the Public Service has increased in number. However, as has been pointed out by previous speakers, there are many public servants who perform routine functions that are not inherently governmental. It seems illogical not to permit those individuals greater political freedom than individuals whose sole service to Government is to give advice on policy, or who have a direct interface with the public on a day to day basis. In those cases, the individuals would find it very difficult to be objective, as they are deeply involved in the political choices.

We must also know that the public interest is diverse as well. The public must be assured that political allegiance is not a factor in the dealings it has with government departments and agencies. It will expect advancement in the Public Service to be on grounds of merit and efficiency, not on political inclination.

That brings up the whole matter of the merit system and the business of intervention within the professional Public Service which has gone on in the past decade and which has diminished the professionalism of the Civil Service. It has created many problems for certain civil servants who wanted to give objective advice but felt the pressure imposed upon them, perhaps by a superior or colleague who seemed to have been appointed rather than having arrived at this position of authority through simple merit and competence.

Therefore, if we are going to look at the political rights of civil servants, we must also look at the merit principle in the Civil Service. We must ensure that the public servant is protected between elections from pressures being put on him or her to give advice which is other than objective and professional. I believe that is as important an element as that of extending political rights to civil servants. We cannot look at increasing one set of political rights without looking at the responsibilities, the climate and the environment in which these public servants must work.

The Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle which completed its review in 1979, stated, and I quote:

> With respect to public servants who perform a regulatory role, many intervenors stated that these public servants should not be given freedom to participate in party politics. Otherwise, the public might well perceive that a licence denial had political connotations when, in fact, it stemmed from failure to meet the requirements for granting of a licence.

That is one example which is given by the special committee. It continues:

> The theme of most intervenors who took this position was that, when public servants are in direct contact with the general public, they must be seen to be politically neutral.

Government must be perceived to serve the public and to serve the public good. Public servants in the employ of the Government must also be professional and be perceived by the public as serving its interests first and foremost. It cannot make any discrimination on the basis of age, sex, race, religion or political belief.

I believe that when we look at the political rights of civil servants, we must also remember the ultimate right of every citizen to receive objective service for the taxes they pay to the treasury every year. In addition, Government has a basic concern with the concept of public interest. It must deliver services directed toward the public good and needs impartial employees.

In determining the extent to which public servants should be permitted to participate in the political process, we must endeavour to strike a balance between the individual's rights and freedoms enshrined in the Canadian Charter and at least two other very important rights, namely, the right of the Government to receive objective information and impartial advice based on professional expertise, and the right of the Canadian public to be confident that its public servants deliver the Government's services in a professional and impartial manner. Any relaxation of the current rules should not compromise these principles. Any changes in the current legislative provisions must not be undertaken before the impact of the long-term consequences for the Government, the Canadian people and the Public Service itself has been thoroughly explored.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to engage in this debate and to put some thoughts on the record as to where I might stand with respect to the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), to have the matter of political rights for public servants referred to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee. I am one who has always supported the view that parliamentary committees should be in a position to examine important issues such as political rights for public servants. However, I believe in this particular instance, given the process in which we are involved at the present time with the public servants, given the progress which the particular issue has made over the course of the past few years, and given the way it was highlighted during the last election, it makes sense at the present time to continue to have it as an active matter of discussion between the Government and the Public Service. That is, of course, the case at this time.

There is no question that it must be a great disappointment to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that during his long years in the House, most of the time during which he was a member of the governing party, there was absolutely no progress made on this important issue by the Liberal Government. That is actually very, very sad. From that standpoint, I join with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, in complimenting him for bringing the issue to the fore. I am sure that because of the very fact that our Party is obviously much more concerned about the political rights of public servants than the Liberal Party was over the past years, we will see considerable progress made.

I would not for a minute, though, want the New Democratic Party to think—and I interject a personal note here—that we are looking at this from any concern as to who will benefit from the efforts of the public servants when the time comes that they are given greater political rights as public servants. I can tell the member of the New Democratic Party that when that happens they are going to come to our Party in droves, because they like winners and not losers, and I include my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier in that comment. Our printing presses are operating at the present time printing membership cards. Obviously, they saw the light on September 4 and they will see the light even more clearly when they participate in an active political party which is going somewhere.

Mr. Gauthier: Down.

Mr. Lewis: Down from 53 per cent to 56 per cent. I remind the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier that "down" is the way the New Democratic Party went. He seems to be in sort of the same position.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised during the election campaign that he would expand political rights for public servants. He is a man of his word, as everyone knows, and I can assure Hon. Members of the Opposition Parties that this is a matter which is up for current discussion.

There is no question but that we understand the possible ramifications of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms coming in on April 17. The Hon. Member's particular lawsuit is before the courts. I do happen to agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre when he suggests that it was not sub judice for this particular forum, that is, the House of Commons, because it is not a matter of discussing the issue of public servants' rights. The issues, as the Hon. Member quite rightly said, is whether or not it was something which could be sent to a parliamentary committee for discussion.

• (1800)

If I may call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to continue on and enlighten my colleagues in the other Party at an appropriate time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Private Members' Hour has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS. (B) NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in raising the question of acid rain in March, with the then upcoming conference in Quebec City, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave me a quite explicit and articulate demonstration of his capacity for public relations and empty promises, as well as an attempt to rewrite Canadian history in the field of acid rain. The commitment made at the time was that Canada would be strong and active on the national and international scene in defence of Canada's acid rain concerns and our desire to progressively cut acid rain in order to protect our lakes, forests, agriculture, our health, and industry in general. Therefore, the initiative taken last week by the eastern Canadian premiers and the governors of the New England States is to be commended. Actually it should be expanded to include western Canadian premiers and the governors of the U.S. west coast States.

However, what I find distressing, in light of the rhetoric of the Prime Minister last March, is who was not there in Quebec City. It turns out that the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) was not there. Not only was she not there, but also the acid rain envoy, former Premier Bill Davis, was not there. Their absence, of course, created some concern as to how serious Canada is on this issue; if it does not find the time to send its spokesperson on the environment and the new Canadian envoy on acid rain to watch the proceedings and take up the issues as they are raised during that kind of event.

I refer specifically to that old red herring raised by Governor Sununu of New Hampshire. He is famous for saying that Canadians on a per capita basis produce more acid rain than the Americans do. He then leaves the impression that it is a one-sided type of responsibility which rests entirely on our shoulders. Of course, the truth is far from that.

Of course, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) was there to defend the Canadian position, and I commend him. But the Minister of the Environment was not there and, because of her knowledge of the subject and the input she would have been able to make, she could have taken on Governor Sununu and told him, look, my friend, this is not the politics of per capita, this the politics of who is downwind to whom and who is producing more substance upwind from the other.

The facts are that while Canada produces some 4.6 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide a year, the U.S. produces almost six times as much or 26 million tonnes a year and we are downwind to them. That is an argument that Mr. Sununu did not hear in New Hampshire. He should have heard it from the Minister of the Environment. Instead, he went home with a notion that he had somehow scored some points.

He also did not hear that in Canada we at least have a reduction program in place which provides for cuts of 25 per cent in our sulphur dioxide emissions between 1980 and 1990. The U.S. does not have such a program in place. Furthermore, we have a very important political commitment of an additional 25 per cent cut in SO^2 emissions by 1994, so that the total cut will be 50 per cent. Again, Mr. Sununu goes home after no one was there to give him this kind of message on behalf of the federal Government.

One could continue on this theme but it would be at the risk of giving Governor Sununu too much importance. However, it is important that we do not leave it up to Americans like Professor Eville Gorham, Professor of Ecology at the University of Minnesota, to come to Canada's defence. He is reported in The Citizen as saying at the end of the day that Governor Sununu's statement was quite unfriendly and unwarranted. That is a fact.

I will conclude because I also would like to know what the Government is planning to do in the next few months, during the period leading to the Helsinki Agreement when a protocol will be signed by the EEC nations, Canada, the Nordic nations and most of the Western and Eastern European nations, committing themselves to a cut of a minimum of 30 per cent by 1993. I submit that this is the time for Canada to become very active on the international scene and to put pressure on our friends south of the border.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to clarify something the Liberal environment critic said. We were in fact very well represented in Quebec City. Several officials of my Department attended the meeting organized by the Quebec Government and the Northeastern American states. In addition, my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), who is a former Minister of the Environment, and therefore quite familiar with this issue, was well able to put forward the Canadian position, which he did with great distinction.

Naturally, I was not in Quebec City, Mr. Speaker, as this meeting had first been scheduled for the month of March but that date was later changed to April by the Quebec Government and I had already planned discussions at that time with my OECD counterparts in Paris and in Stockholm, where I met with many ministers and looked at how Sweden protects its environment. As Hon. Members are aware, that country was the first to create a Department of the Environment and it was at the invitation of the Swedish Government that I visited there. I was not on holidays, as it was maliciously suggested.

What surprises me, Mr. Speaker, is that the environment critic finds all his information in the newspapers, and often not in the best ones. If there were a newspaper strike tomorrow, I believe he would be unable to ask any questions in the House. I would really feel quite sorry for him.

Mr. Speaker, today I would like to tell you what our Government has done about acid rain. Contrary to what the environment critic suggested, the federal Government has made a lot of progress in its fight against acid rain. We have implemented a program to reduce emissions from Canadian sources of acid rain and guaranteed financial support to the foundries which are unable to pay for anti-pollution devices themselves. We have guaranteed financial assistance for research, monitoring programs and the development of new clean-up technologies. We have announced very strict emission standards for automobiles and light trucks.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, we have a most comprehensive policy to fight acid rain at the present time, and I believe that this Government, which has succeeded in implementing this policy and concerted approach within six months of its coming to power, should be commended and not constantly criticized by my hon. colleague, the former Minister of the Environment, who would like us to believe that the previous Government did much in the environmental field, even though it did nothing: the only comprehensive policy to have ever been implemented in Canada is basically the one developed by this Government.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—INCLUSION OF SEVERANCE PAY IN INCOME CALCULATION. (B) EFFECT ON LAID-OFF WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on March 22, 26, again on April 1, and earlier in the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration, I tried to put questions to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) with respect to her proposal to include severance pay as income under the Unemployment Insurance Act. This would mean that those people who were given severance pay when they were dismissed from their jobs would have to use that severance pay to cover the basic necessities of life because unemployment insurance would be delayed.

What does this mean? It means that a lot of people who would otherwise roll over that severance pay into a pension plan, who would use that severance pay to move to another place in Canada where there were better employment opportunities, who would use that severance pay to set themselves up in a business and to re-establish themselves in employment, would not be able to do it any longer because they would have to use that money for the basic needs of life.

I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration whether she had made any impact studies before introducing these matters. I got no answer. I asked her to delay the implementation of the program which was to go in effect on April 1 so she could consult and do impact studies. Again she refused. As a matter of fact the only answer I got was that she did in fact have consultations. She wondered why I took so long in putting questions to her about this subject, that I only started in March. I might say that I was in touch with her office much sooner by telephone and by letter but I only started raising the subject in March in committee, that is correct.

The Minister put those questions to me. I must ask her whether she gives the same answer to all those people who are writing letters to us. Did she say that to the people who raised this issue at her own economic summit called by the Conservative Government when two-thirds of the people at that summit signed a petition asking for a delay? Did she insult them as well and ask why they were only raising the matter at that time? The Toronto Star only raised it in an editorial on April 13.

I have example after example here of people who raised this matter only in the month of March and later even the Government. I have a memo leaked to me by an official in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. This is a memo from one of the directors of staff relations to all regional personnel managers. He said that several queries concerning the treatment of severance pay for unemployment insurance benefits have prompted the following explanation of the proposed changes that will "probably" be implemented March 31, 1985. Although we have not received official notification of the changes, we have contacted CEIC representatives and obtained the following information". That memo was dated March 12, 1985. In that department they still had not received any information.

Then there is the bulletin of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada—this is in the middle of March. It states that it regrets having to provide only an unofficial interpretation of these important changes. Along with other public service unions, the Professional Institute has requested a delay in the implementation of the changes to allow further studies. To date, however, it had not received a reply to that request or an official interpretation from Treasury Board.

All kinds of people were confused by these announcements, and rightly so. The Minister said these were announced on November 8. All we had announced on November 8 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was a short paragraph on page 13 of his speech which said:

> In order to make the (U.I.C.) program more effective and less costly, a number of adminsitrative changes related to the determination of eligibility for benefits will be made.

In the Blue Book tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) it states simply, "separation payments—employment and immigration—$60 million—separation payments are not considered to be earned income when eligibility for unemployment insurance is determined". That is all. It is obvious that it took a lot of people a lot of time to find out what are the implications of this decision to make severance pay income for unemployment insurance purposes. People only began to see the implications after the Christmas recess, and they then started to write us letters. Because of that, when we saw what the implications were, we started to escalate our questions to the Minister asking for a delay. What was originally only a very sketchy program became a very complicated one.

• (1815)

The Minister accused me of loafing around, not doing my job earlier, or not putting questions to her in December. It is interesting to note that it was only on March 29 that the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission announced approval of regulatory changes in the treatment of severance payments for unemployment insurance. The regulations were only adopted in late March. Then on December 21, the only other notice we had following the November 8 statement, the day on which we adjourned for Christmas, the Minister issued a press release saying that the implementation date for the treatment of severance payments would be March 31, 1985.

How much consultation did she do in the period from November 8 to December 21 on this important issue? The Parliamentary Secretary is here. He is an honest man. I know he will table for us today all groups, unions and employee groups that were consulted on this matter. I hope they were not just ones the Minister hand-picked. I hope she did a very thorough consultative job in the six weeks to which I referred. I should like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell us who in fact the Minister consulted with on the implementation of this program. Let us have the names of the people and the organizations.

The Minister has already admitted that there were no impact studies. She said that the Minister of Finance should have done impact studies. The Minister of Finance said that they should have been done by the Minister of Employment. However, none were done. This is a very serious program which touches a lot of people. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell us how many people it touches. Once more will he advise the Minister to delay this very harsh and very inequitable program?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) just said that I am an honest man, but perhaps he will be disappointed because honesty has nothing to do with reading off a long list of names of people who were consulted. Another thing about which I am pleased is that my colleague has withdrawn his remarks concerning everything he had seen about this important change. Quite true, it was in Mr. Wilson's statement and speech, for the Hon. Member admitted later that, on December 21, the Minister had issued a press release on the changes and that many articles have been published since then. As to the organizations that were consulted, it would be difficult for me to mention them all because there were quite a few consultations.

As announced by the Minister, it was decided that the new rules would take effect on March 31. The Act has been amended, unemployment benefits will be delayed or reduced in accordance with benefits paid when employment ends. These benefits include severance pay, earned paid leave, bonuses, gratuities, salary paid in lieu of advance notice, vacation leave and retroactive pay. The purpose of these important changes is to make sure that all employment income is treated the same way under the Unemployment Insurance Plan. They will eliminate compensations from two sources while maintaining all the benefits of the program, namely, the replacement of lost income while avoiding double payments.

On the other hand, to ensure fairness between the old legislation and the new one, a whole series of programs have been announced to allow people who had negotiated agreements in good faith following collective bargainings or a plant closing, because the problem had come to light between November 8 and December 21 as a result of consultations or questions within our caucus and from both sides of the House. The interim measures announced on December 21 will apply from March 31, 1985, and in the case of retirees, from January 1, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that anything can be added to what I have just said.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—PREMIER'S TRIAL—PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF MARIJUANA FIND. (B) DATE INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, on March 4 I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) when he first advised the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that marijuana was allegedly found in the luggage of Premier Hatfield. I had asked the question on a number of other occasions. I was not given an answer by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) or the Solicitor General. I put the question to the Solicitor General on March 4. Rather than the Solicitor General standing up to answer the question, the Minister of Justice stood up. It was somewhat strange that the Minister of Justice should stand to defend the Solicitor General when only a week and a half before he indicated that had he been in Opposition he would have asked for the resignation of the Solicitor General for his deplorable and disgraceful secret meeting with Premier Hatfield at the Chateau Laurier on October 7. I asked when the Prime Minister was first advised. The Minister of Justice stood up and indicated that the Prime Minister was told the day before charges were laid. The charges were laid on October 26. The Minister of Justice told this House that the Prime Minister first became aware of the fact that marijuana was found in Premeir Hatfield's luggage on October 25. That is utter nonsense. I hope that was not a deliberate attempt to mislead the House, but in fact it was a deliberate misstatement of fact. I would like to state why.

The marijuana was found on September 25, 1984. The Solicitor General indicated that he was first made aware on September 26 that the marijuana was found. He indicated that the Commissioner of the RCMP advised him of that fact.

On October 20, 1984 the Fredericton Gleaner ran a major story, indicating that a senior New Brunswick politician was being investigated for a particular drug offence. At that point in time it was not known who this senior New Brunswick politician was. That was October 20. On October 22, Premier Hatfield held a press conference to indicate that it was he who was under investigation. He also declared his innocence in the matter. It was national news from coast to coast. It was reported in every newspaper in this country. On every radio station and television station that marijuana was found in Premier Hatfield's luggage. That was on October 22. We have the Minister of Justice telling us in this House and the Canadian people that the Prime Minister was not aware of the fact that marijuana was found until October 25, the day before charges were laid.

One can see how ludicrous and misleading that statement was. By making that statement, the Minister of Justice was suggesting that the Prime Minister was closeted somewhere for three days, without access to newspapers, television or radio, that he was totally unaware of what was going on in this country. I indicated that it was utter nonsense. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will stand in the House today to apologize to this House and the Canadian people with respect to when the Prime Minister was first made aware that marijuana was found.

It is curious why the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General refused to be forthcoming with respect to this incident. We in the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, have been concerned from the very start that there has been a very basic breach of that fundamental principle of our criminal justice system, that all persons be treated equally before the law. This Government is involved in stonewalling. It refuses to be forthright and refuses to give us answers to the very necessary questions that are being asked as a result of the so-called MacKay-Hatfield affair. One can only conclude that the Government, the Prime Minister, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice have something to hide.

We in the Opposition have consistently asked for an independent judicial inquiry into the whole matter to determine how extensive the political interference was. We know for a fact that the Solicitor General, on his own admission, met secretly with Premier Hatfield on October 7 at the Chateau Laurier to further discuss the case. The mere fact that he met with Premier Hatfield would suggest extremely poor judgment, not only on the part of the Solicitor General but also on the part of Premier Hatfield for asking for that particular meeting.

● (1825)

The point we in opposition have been trying to make is that it is basic and fundamental that all persons be treated equally before the law. It was clear to us that Premier Hatfield was given that audience with the Solicitor General because he was a Premier of a province. Had it been Joe Blow from Kokomo, or a poor teenager from the other side of the tracks in York South-Weston, he would not have been given an audience with the Solicitor General of Canada.

Members of the legal community are unanimous with respect to the propriety of the Solicitor General meeting secretly with Premier Hatfield. They say it was wrong, that it is not the role of the Solicitor General to personally involve himself in a criminal investigation. Members of the media are almost unanimous on the matter. They are unanimous in the belief that the Solicitor General exercised poor judgment. Some have gone so far as to call for his resignation. The Solicitor General has refused to resign. He is continually clinging to power.

At this point, we are waiting for the internal RCMP report which was promised us weeks and weeks ago. We are hoping that it will come forward, and will give us the answers to those very basic questions for which we and the Canadian people have been waiting.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on March 4 the Hon. Member asked the question which is the subject-matter of his comments today. At that time, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said the following:

> The reason I am rising to reply, Mr. Speaker, is that I informed the Prime Minister the day before the charges were laid that charges were to be laid against Premier Hatfield.

Since that time, to the best of my recollection, the Minister of Justice has appeared before the committee on the Estimates. The Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) has appeared twice, but in both cases, the hearings were terminated because of a vote in the House, although there was a brief opportunity for questioning. I know that the Solicitor General will be appearing on Estimates within the next week. The Hon. Member who has every right to pose whatever questions he sees fit with respect to this matter will have an opportunity to ask these questions of the Solicitor General. Indeed, he has such an opportunity every day in Question Period.

I do not intend to give hearsay upon hearsay today. All I can say is what I know the Minister of Justice has said, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was advised that charges were going to be laid against the Premier, and that that advice was given the day before charges were in fact laid.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

That this House calls upon the Government to immediately bring in stimulative proposals to reduce unemployment by a minimum of 2.5 per cent within the next 12 months, given the failure of the Government to live up to its commitment to make job creation its number one priority, and its pursuit, instead, of a policy of cutbacks which has led to a rise in unemployment in three of the last four months.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to be able to move this Opposition Day motion today. It is particularly fine to do so with the kind of billing which was given to it yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In answer to a question by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Prime Minister said the following:

—I suppose if the Hon. Member had a formula, or the Leader of the Opposition, or anyone else, that he could give me, whereby we can bring down unemployment by 2.5 per cent in the next month or two, I would grab it and say thank you, and I know the country would too.

Last week the Action Group of the New Democratic Party, after completing a tour across the country and talking with over 400 groups and individuals, released to the public a plan or an approach. I certainly cannot promise people here or people in the country that this approach would reduce the unemployment rate by 2.5 per cent in a month or two, but it would certainly give the country the kind of direction which, over the next year, would take our unemployment rate from the present unacceptable, humanly tragic level of 11.2 per cent down by that 2.5 per cent about which we talked yesterday in the House of Commons. That is a commitment which I think the people of Canada are demanding. It is a commitment which they feel is urgent and crucial, a commitment which they feel is only just, given the promises and the positions taken by the Government and the present Prime Minister prior to his election.

What we have in Canada is a crisis for people. I want to commence my remarks this morning by talking about some of the people I met across the country in the national tour which our Action Group organized to reach out to communities across Canada. There were some tragic stories which pointed out in a deeply emotional way to me the sense of human loss that we as a country are experiencing because of the existing tragic unemployment figures.

For instance, I want to talk about a man named Robert MacDonald in Cape Breton who has spent over 18 months criss-crossing the country putting in applications to company after company and not succeeding in finding a position. I want to talk about the unemployed construction workers who met us en masse in Edmonton and conveyed to us, in their anger and in their concern, their own outrage at unemployment rates of 75 per cent to 80 per cent in some of the particular skills which they represented in that city. I want to talk about the unemployed textile workers, most of whom were women 50 years to 55 years of age. They met us in Montreal. These women told us that their lives had lost meaning, that their capacity to provide for the needs of their families had been stripped away from them, and that their own sense of pride in the country was being sapped by the cruel way in which they were being treated as middle-aged unemployed women.

I want to talk about a young man, Pierre Desjardins in Moncton, who indicated to us that this was the year of the youth, yet those who come out of university in Moncton face unemployment rather than the prospect of jobs. I want to talk about Ron and Tony Camponi, Métis leaders in Saskatoon. They told me about the 200 units of Métis housing produced in Saskatoon for which Métis construction workers could not even bid in the last three years.

I want to talk about young people like Terry Bellavance who spoke to us in Thunder Bay on behalf of the Ontario March of Dimes. He is one of the many disabled or handicapped people in the country. He is looking for a chance to play a fair role in this community, a chance to live the life to which every Canadian is entitled.

I do not want to talk only about the human tragedy because the most exciting part of this tour or the most exciting part of this experience was for me to hear from people across the country that they felt this was not a tragedy which was unavoidable. It is not a tragedy that we simply have to accept. It is something that it is possible, by action, direction and leadership, to do something about. The people from whom I want to bring the message to this House of Commons are people like the woman named Core Strandberg of Vancouver who sat down with us and spent an afternoon talking in detail about the economic development corporations springing up across British Columbia, 36 of them in total. She showed a kind of grassroots dynamism and potential that we have to support and encourage.

I want to talk to you about women like Laurilie Kilgour of Hamilton who, despite discouragement and her difficulty as a woman in getting financing from our banking system, started a small graphics factory. She built it up into a thriving small business, providing employment within that community. She built it up despite the Government rather than with the support and encouragement of the Government.

I want to talk to you about people like Richard Cashin of St. John's and Jack Nichol in British Columbia who told us about the vast potential that is there if we build on our fish resources on both coasts of this country. I want to talk to you about people like Rick Fuerth from the Essex County Federation of Agriculture in my constituency. He told us in detail about the jobs that are there if we in this country give the kind of support to agriculture, one of our key resource sectors, that it deserves.

I want to talk to you about people like the young man from the unemployed Action Centre in Thunder Bay. He came before us and said that here in Thunder Bay just down the road is a shipyard that used to produce new ships. He said it used to provide thousands of jobs, but now does not do so because we have let the shipping industry in this country disappear. We have not given it the kind of support and encouragement that the jobs of Canadian people demand and deserve.

I want to talk to you about the Federation of New Brunswick Woodlot Owners, small owners who came to us and said that if we gave them the support instead of giving it to the large forest companies, they would reforest this province and they would do it by providing extra jobs as well. I want to talk to you about groups like the Mining Association of Canada who came to us and talked with excitement about the potential that is there for taking the new technology in this country, marrying it together with the tremendous resource base and the mineral sector that we have, and turning us into a country that can produce the mining equipment that a country as rich in resources as this country is deserves to be producing.

The ideas are there, the potential is there and the capacity is there. What is needed is a sense of will, a sense of leadership to realize this potential. In the report we put out last week, we attempted to provide that sense of direction and leadership. We did so around three broad themes because we think there is an answer that can focus on three broad directions of change.

The first is a community self-direction, a philosophy that says, let's give support and encouragement to these hundreds and hundreds of community development organizations, co-operatives, small business organizations, and municipal Governments that want to take the potential that is there at the community level and turn it into jobs. They gave us detailed recommendations and ideas to do so. We have included those recommendations within our report. I recommend them to the Government. They are not designed to embarrass or score partisan points, but to put across the message from Canadians that they believe something can be done in this country and that they have serious ideas to suggest. These are ideas we have summed up around the notions of how to encourage and open up the potential for community co-operatives, how to assist economic development corporations throughout the country, how to find detailed ways to give real help to small business, and how to give assistance to municipal Governments so that they can do what the Federation of Canadian Municipalities has said is crucial, and that is, to rebuild the infrastructure in this country. However, in order to achieve this, it takes more than simply saying, "Let 100 flowers bloom". We cannot simply say that we will encourage all of these things to take place.

• (1115)

As well, we need to have a sense of national self-direction. We need to have a philosophy indicating that to achieve this kind of community self-direction, we need a sense at the national level of corporate accountability. We need a commitment from the large-scale corporate sector to pay its fair share of taxation, to take its proper role in the training needs of the country, and to give us an indication of a sense of responsibility to communities so that when a large corporation wants to shut down a plant, it talks with the community and gives it a chance to develop some kind of alternative by having workers take it over or by having a local economic development corporation take it over.

There must be as well a sense of independence in our interest rate policy. There must be a serious effort to build on our resources. We have to practise a structure of fair trade rather than throw ourselves at the mercy of the rest of the world with the kind of free trade philosophy that does not recognize how tough and harsh the international economy actually is.

Besides this sense of community self-direction and national self-direction, we need a profound commitment to equity and equality in the workplace. Across the country, we have not given that equity and equality to the women who make up half of our workforce, to the disabled who rightly demand their fair share of the benefits we in this country have to offer, to visible minorities and to those who represent ethnocultural communities. There has to be a sense of equity established through aggressive action, which frankly must be more aggressive than the action the Minister has yet taken.

That is the kind of broad direction that we see possible. It is a direction that we have described in something like 70 recommendations. However, we must take the first step now. We need a Budget that takes that first step now. In six weeks' time, we can have a Budget that puts jobs first. We can have a Budget that makes serious moves toward cutting our unemployment rate by 2.5 per cent and giving us the 300,000 extra jobs that would be necessary to do that.

We have to stop playing Chicken Little over the deficit. The deficit is an important concern. We in this Party have always recognized that. However, if we rush around the country saying that the sky is falling and we have to worry about the deficit, we will not get the jobs this country needs and, just as ironically, we will not get the deficit down.

When this kind of preaching started in this country in 1975, the deficit was $3 billion. There has been Budget after Budget which has told us that we must be concerned about the deficit and that we must bring it down. As that has happened year by year, we have seen the deficit rise to $36 billion. I predict now, as I have predicted before, that if we have a Budget that concentrates on cut-backs and reducing the deficit, it will result a year from now in fewer jobs and a higher deficit than we presently have. The only way to get the deficit down over the next three to five years is to take the kind of approach which we are talking about in our counter-Budget that will put stimulus into the economy and get Canada growing once more. We have laid out a budget plan which is based on shifts within the Budget, shifts of expenditure and shifts of taxation, shifts which will bring us an extra 4.2 billion in spending, $3.1 billion on community development, and $1.1 billion on resource upgrading. It would shift $2.7 billion of tax breaks from the commitment to the corporate tax sector and the wealthy to a commitment to tax breaks for the working people. Another $2.7 billion can be saved in interest rate reductions and in reducing the rate of unemployment.

• (1120)

To succeed in this new direction we need a different approach. We need to give real help to small businesses and communities, not the Conservative Government's give-aways to large oil companies and the Commercial Bank of Canada. We need a real priority for jobs, not the Conservative Government's paralysis over cut-backs and deficits. We need real moves to build our resources, not the Conservative Government's delays on reforestation and its dismal record on agriculture. We need real efforts to build on our industrial base through fair trade, not the Conservative Government's sense of sell-out that free trade and "Warehouse Canada" represent. We need a Government that means what it says. We need a Government that comes through with the promise and the commitment to make jobs a priority. We need a Government that Canadians will not have to say is a mean-spirited Government which wants to run on the backs of the unemployed by way of changes such as the severance pay and retirement points which the Minister will bring in. In doing those things it will shift the problems of the economy on the backs of the people who deserve to suffer the least.

There is, as the Prime Minister asked us yesterday, an approach, a path, and a plan which would cut the unemployment rate by 2.5 per cent. I urge the Government to follow that direction, not the dismal and sorry direction in which it has begun.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member? If not, I will recognize the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on debate.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first I want to say that I very much welcome this opportunity to respond on behalf of the Government to the motion which has been put before the House today by the New Democratic Party. It gives me an opportunity to comment on what the Government is doing—a record which I feel is very substantial for a period of six months. It also gives me an opportunity to comment on the recommendations that were brought forward by the Task Force on Unemployment which was set up by the New Democratic Party.

I found the report interesting. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I gave him and his colleagues the courtesy of reading through it. I did not examine it all in detail but I did look at it. I want to say that I think it was a good effort on their part and I think it was an important thing to do, that is, to go out and consult with people across the country on this very important issue. I know because that is what I have been doing for the last number of months.

• (1125)

Certainly, trying to come to grips with this issue can only be done at the local level. I think that both the people in government and those who are on the New Democratic Party task force have tried to do that. It has not yet dawned on the Hon. Members of the Liberal Party that that approach is one they also should be taking, but perhaps having read the two reports of the two Parties, they will begin to think about getting jobs for people other than all those Liberal candidates who were defeated last autumn.

I would like to comment on whether or not this Canada unlimited project, which promises to solve all the problems of unemployment, is really going to be able to do that. What I found when I first saw the results in the newspaper reports was the tone, the things which had been discovered and, in fact, the reversal of New Democratic policy in the field of job-creation, unemployment and training. The first headline I saw read, "NDP Thrust would put Job Funds into Community Hands". Abandoning the big centralized machine of former years, that is the way it would go.

Mr. Althouse: Seven or eight years ago.

Miss MacDonald: Well, if the Hon. Member would look at the Government's labour market strategy and at the various programs which have already been put in place, he would find that community based plans are indeed the thrust of the Government's undertakings. The next headline I saw in the newspapers read, "NDP Proposes Job-Creation Without Big Deficit Increase". Surely, Sir, that is a real change of mind for those hon. members of the New Democratic Party. I welcome what they have to say. I know, as well as my colleagues, that we have to stimulate job-creation, create more jobs, but at the same time we have to be very fearful of adding to the weight of a deficit.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is quoted as saying, "We simply can't accept that we have large deficits continuing. It doesn't make any sense". We have been trying to tell the New Democratic Party that for some time. Of course, it does not make any sense, and I am glad to see in that Party's report a recognition of the things which should be done. The Hon. Member talked about corporate accountability, bringing in the private sector. The whole plan which has been outlined in the last few months, in moving away from the short-term job-creation dead-end which used to be in effect, is to bring in the co-operation of the provinces and the private sector. Certainly there should be more contribution by the private sector and what we are already doing is taking that into account.

It seems to me, Sir, that these things are in the report which I read and which I welcome because I think there is a dawning of a new light in the New Democratic Party. I think it shows that, having gone out and consulted with the people of Canada, those Hon. Members now realize where action must be taken, what people want and how it can best be incorporated. As a result of that, I expect the wholehearted support of the New Democratic Party for the steps the Government is taking in this regard. Who knows, the New Democratic Party may even recover somewhat from that 17 per cent if it pursues these very sensible methods.

Mr. King: Not much, though.

Miss MacDonald: My colleague says, "Not much", but we will look at it over the months. Unfortunately, even though the NDP has presented some interesting proposals, not terrifically original but some ideas in the field of job-creation, it cannot wean itself completely away from thinking that there has to be a sudden cure of all ills by Government and that it is going to happen overnight. Those Hon. Members still have the feeling that somehow you can utter a few sentences and total unemployment, total deficits and the total difficulties we are facing will be eradicated. I suppose they take that approach because that is part of their long-term thinking. They cannot move away from it because, of course, they do not face the reality of day-to-day Government. They can indulge in euphoric thinking. From time to time Members indulge in this business of sitting and thinking about what can be done in the abstract. They realize they will not have to put some of these grandiose schemes into practice. Indeed, with 17 per cent of the electorate supporting them, why should they think that way? It is not likely that they will have to take on those responsibilities very soon. But we do have to take on those responsibilities and we have to consider all the factors.

• (1130)

We, Mr. Speaker, have to consider the deficit. We have to consider interest rates. We have to consider industrial investment policy, world trade, tax reform, energy policy, labour market development and much, much more. We have to deal with these issues, and we are. As my colleagues will know, we are dealing with them in the new energy agreements on both the East Coast and the West Coast. Governments have struggled for years to obtain these energy agreements, but we have accomplished it and the agreements will generate new wealth and create new jobs.

We are dealing with these issues through measures to improve the environment. We are dealing with them through the control of Government waste. We are dealing with them in a taxpayers' Bill of Rights. Not least of all, we are dealing with them in a new labour market strategy which was announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in February of this year. As the NDP has discovered in its trip across the country, that strategy is dealing with these issues. It is working with Canadians at the community level, with other Governments, labour organizations, and businesses large and small. For the first time this strategy is based on multi-year fundings so that one can begin to plan ahead. It reflects the regional diversity of this country and allows training, job creation and human resource development to go ahead according to the needs of the various parts of this country.

I ask you to look at the commitments we have already made, Sir; some $80 million over and above previous commitments for skills investment to help retrain that 46 year old warehouseman or the middle-aged woman whose job is being phased out, to help them retrain before they actually lose their jobs. That is a commitment which has not been made before and one we think we should be moving into with the help of business and other Governments.

There is $350 million for job development over and above what had been committed before. Any one of us in this House, no matter from what Party, who has seen or met or talked with someone who has been unemployed for long, recognizes his or her plight and knows that something has to be done about it so that a person does not face a lifetime without work. This money has been committed to create long-term jobs in concert with the provinces and private sector, jobs of a substantive nature rather than the short-term dead-end projects of the past.

There is $125 million for job entry to help young people entering the workforce for the first time to bridge the gap and make the transition from school to work with on-site experience. The same applies to women coming into the labour force for the first time, or perhaps re-entering the labour force after having been absent for a while. This program will help them to get into real jobs which will provide security and a future.

Just as we want individuals to have these opportunities, Sir, we want communities to have them as well. That is why we have earmarked $40 million to community futures, to look at communities which are in decline or where their industry could be in decline and ask what should be done beforehand to turn that situation around. I may say that I appreciate hearing from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who was up in Labrador and did a study of some of the communities there. He sent me a copy of that section of the report. I thank him for sending it to me because I know that we have the same interests at heart in trying to avoid the catastrophe which can happen to single industry towns and the people who live in them.

Sir, these measures in this new labour strategy indicate that this Government is taking a new approach with a new openness, a new and imaginative development of human resources and job creation while recognizing regional disparity. That is why we have earmarked $100 million for innovation and experimentation in this field. We look to Canadians to provide the creativity and ingenuity that they have to help in the search for answers. I have already talked with people, groups and organizations; people in organized labour, women's groups, people from the private sector and provincial Governments. I have asked them to come forward with ideas or pilot projects to see how we can move into this new world of work; to see that the experimental projects which prove successful can be utilized in other parts of the country.

It is the first time a Government has earmarked $100 million for innovation and I know, from talking with such organizations as the CLC, that they will be coming to us with their suggestions on how this money can be utilized. I say this, Mr. Speaker, because when this strategy was introduced at the First Ministers' Conference in Regina, among other people who happened to comment on it was the Minister responsible for economic security in Manitoba, Mr. Evans, and he said, "It is a move in the right direction". The Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Pawley, commented very favourably on the way in which the labour market strategy was developing, and indeed put his Government's approval on it.

I mention that because I think this is something we all have to work at. I do not think any single Government or any single sector can resolve this issue on its own. That is why we have sought opportunities to create permanent jobs for hundreds of thousands of Canadians. Opportunities! It is a key word, Sir, but central to those opportunities is another thing which I have enunciated here in the House which is being worked on at present and which Hon. Members will shortly be able to support when legislation is brought before the House. I am talking about the principle of employment equity, because that is central to any labour market strategy. We are determined that, once and for all, women, disabled persons, native people, and visible minorities will get the opportunities they should have in Canada's workforce in the market-place. They should do so as equal partners, having the same opportunity as anyone else. This in itself is a breakthrough. The Hon. Member may not believe so, but I can tell him that in the House of Commons it is a breakthrough.

We have gone further than this. I was pleased to announce last month that we are establishing a new code of conduct that will ensure employment equity in the Public Service and that will lead to a concept that we all endorse, the implementation of equal pay for work of equal value. These steps will lead to meaningful jobs for Canadians for ongoing periods. We have to establish solid and good foundations. That is what this new labour market strategy is attempting to do. We are optimistic about it.

I was glad that the NDP went across the country and discovered that the country is optimistic and there is confidence. I feel that there is very much confidence. I have just returned from a meeting of OECD countries in Italy on employment and technology. I was struck by the pessimism which abounds on this issue in many of the European countries as shown through their Governments. That same lack of confidence does not exist here in Canada. It does not exist because the people of Canada themselves are confident about the future. The Government has been stimulating that confidence in the market-place.

Some headlines in the press which indicate this confidence include one in the Montreal Gazette which reads: "Employment Outlook Best In Years, Survey Finds". The Toronto Globe and Mail said: "Prospects for Jobless Appear Brighter". The Telegraph Journal of Saint John, New Brunswick carried a headline which reads: "Summer-Job Situation Looks Bright". A headline in The Ottawa Citizen reads: "Job Outlook Improving StatsCan". In The Toronto Star one headline reads: "Small Firms Seen Creating 200,000 Jobs in Half a Year".

There is confidence in the country that this very great issue can be tackled, Mr. Speaker. There is confidence and there is a response. The Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has set the tone for the NDP in criticizing the Challenge '85 program for students. As negative as he has been, and as much as he has tried to undermine that program and do away with jobs for young people this summer, 150,000 new jobs have been submitted, and the private sector itself has added an additional 50,000 jobs. It has added just under $100 million to a government established fund of $205 million. That fund has gone from $200 million to $300 million. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville is still trying to run it down and undermine it. That is a rather discouraging thing for young people.

Mr. Murphy: Where are the jobs?

Miss MacDonald: These people ask, "Where are the jobs?" They do not want young people to have jobs this summer. That is their whole approach. The difference between the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party, whose Members do not take this issue up, and the Conservative Party is that we have faith in the people of Canada. We have faith that we will be able to bring unemployment down. We know that new jobs are there and are being created. We know that the new labour market strategy which is now under way is stimulating the people, the businesses, and the Governments of the country to create the jobs and the wealth that is necessary. That, Sir, is triggering our economic renewal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question relating to her reference to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I would like to ask her what action she has taken due to the many representations made on behalf of the 210 fishermen in Bonavista Bay. The Minister received a telex from the Premier of Newfoundland, the Minister of Fisheries, and the Minister of Social Development some three or four months ago. Does the Minister remember the case of the 210 fishermen who had been judged as having had over-payments in unemployment insurance?

Miss MacDonald: I know exactly what you are talking about. Go right ahead.

Mr. Baker: I just want to point out to the Minister, in a reference to unemployment insurance, the danger of the Minister and the Government giving a signal to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and employment offices across the country with regard to unemployment insurance in those particular offices.

When unemployment insurance benefits are examined, in the case of fish companies, you may find that an unemployment insurance stamp was given for two weeks when there was legally only one shipment on the books. When the audit is done it may said that that fisherman did not deserve those two weeks of unemployment insurance, although he did in 1982 or 1983, as most of these audits are determining. The fact of the matter is that those groups of fishermen and workers are judged to be guilty of an over-payment from the Commission and they have to pay back thousands of dollars.

In the case of the 210 fishermen in Bonavista Bay the Government of Newfoundland made a request for the Minister to intervene and to try to overlook the problem with these 210 workers. Can the Minister report to the House? Has she got her book with her that she can perhaps look at? Does she know of the 210 fishermen in Bonavista Bay that I am talking about?

Miss MacDonald: I am quite familiar with Bonavista Bay. The Hon. Member will know that. He will also know that in the case he raises the mistake was made by the company concerned. I think he will understand that. He will also know that every person involved has a right to appeal. The Commission has notified every individual to file an appeal in this case. Any claims for repayment have been held up pending those appeals.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the Minister's speech. As always, her heart is in the right place. It is her head and, unfortunately, her partisanship that gets her into trouble. There is a certain potential to deal with substance that she demonstrated in her speech. It is unfortunate that she found it necessary to launch cheap shots at my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), at the end of her otherwise fairly civilized discourse.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Unfortunately, civilized discourse is not Party commitment. Our quarrel is not with this Minister. This Minister is not the Mr. Scrooge or the Chicken Little of the Government running around saying that the sky is falling. The Minister who deserves that title is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). As this Minister knows, he is the one who has been giving her trouble and making it difficult for her to do the things she has been talking about.

• (1150)

We have magnificent ideas and plans that the Minister has talked about. I have to ask her why only $40 million, why only $80 million? Why the small sums of money for what are excellent ideas? I know the answer. The answer has to do with the Scrooge-like quality of the people who run this Government.

I have a set of questions for the Minister. Since she has said she has had a chance to read our report, let me ask her if in Cabinet she will advocate the $2.7 billion in tax breaks that we recommend for middle and lower income people? Will she advocate $850 million for a community development fund? Will she advocate the proposal of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities for a $12 billion ten-year program to upgrade municipal infrastructure? Will she advocate a technology fund of $200 million a year? Will she accept the commitment to reforestation, the commitment to fisheries, and the commitment to agriculture? Will she see to it that her Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) puts that into effect? Will she see to it that new tax sources that could be tapped by asking corporations to make the very simple step of paying interest on deferred taxes are tapped? Will she accept the proposal that we raise taxes for upper income people to the fair levels that were there under Mr. MacEachen in the past? Will she, in short, make the kind of rhetorical commitment which she and her Party are so magnificent in making and try to translate it into real action instead of empty phrases? Will she see to it that we get real help for small business community development instead of seeing that $1.5 billion goes to the multinational oil companies and $60 billion to the Canadian Commercial Bank? Will the Minister put her own career on the line, her own commitment to fight in Cabinet for a serious "jobs first" Budget? If so, she will have my support.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell the Hon. Member that I have been putting my political career on the line every day since 1972, and I can tell him that the people in my district seem to feel that the way I have been doing that has merited their support. I hope I can continue to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I must say I listened to the questions that have been posed by the Hon. Member. But what happens is that he then blows his case. I know that in his comments on his report he said that we have to be concerned about the deficit. There was a recognition that the size of the deficit has its dangers. But then the Hon. Member turned around and posed questions to me such as: Would I add $12 billion to the expenditures here, and add some other billions there? I have to tell the Hon. Member that he cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Deans: Of course you can.

Miss MacDonald: That is what the whole story is about. There can be a proper basis for a labour market strategy, and on that you build, but you do not try to resolve things only by throwing money at them. You try to accomplish this by developing human resources. I have to tell the Hon. Member that of all the Ministers in this Cabinet, there is no one who has received better treatment from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) than I have. There is no one else who can show that in the last few months he or she has received $900 million from him. That is not a bad beginning.

Mr. Deans: The rest of them were a bunch of slackers. That is the problem. I agree they are not pushing enough.

Miss MacDonald: And so, Mr. Speaker, I just mentioned that that $900 million is going into all sorts of measures which I tried to outline and which are going to be very beneficial. Starting now with the summer program, they are allowing people to train and equip themselves for the jobs and the work in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A short supplementary from the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate. (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to thank the Minister for her answer, which was in substance that people would not have to pay until the judgment is made, if the judgment is against them. My point was that in pursuing the audits and checking on unemployment insurance, you are going to run into thousands of those problems and you are going to have thousands of people who will have to pay money back to the Government when they should not have to pay it back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to start by saying that we fully support the motion before the House. We believe that stimulus is necessary to deal with the unemployment situation, that goals are necessary, and that priorities are necessary. I want to say right away that we along with the Party that presented the motion do not believe the Government's approach is working. We do not think the approach will work and we feel that the Government has not lived up to the promises made during the election campaign.

With respect to this very important issue, I refer to a Gallup poll published on January 28, 1985. It reported that 56 per cent of Canadians believe that unemployment is still Canada's major problem. That is correct, of course, and if we look at the figures, Mr. Speaker, we will see why.

In January, 1984, last year, when the Liberals were in power and we were coming out of the recession, the rate of unemployment was 11.4 per cent. In June of last year the unemployment rate went down to 11.2 per cent. It hit a low in the middle of the summer, in July, of 11 per cent, and then in September, the month when the Conservative Government was elected, the unemployment rate went up to 11.6 per cent. It has been around that level since then.

Miss MacDonald: Not less than last year at this time.

Mr. Allmand: In October, the unemployment rate was 11.2 per cent, in November, it was 11.3 per cent, in January, it was 11.2 per cent, in February, it was 11.0 per cent and in March, it was 11.2 per cent.

As you can see from the figures, Mr. Speaker, there is relatively little change in the unemployment figures over the last year. Let us look at the averages in the year's preceding 1984. In 1979, the average unemployment rate was 7.4 per cent, in 1980, it was 7.5 per cent, in 1981, it was 7.5 per cent, and then the rate jumped to 11 per cent in 1982 with the recession which hit the entire western developed world. That rate has stayed around 11 per cent since 1982, hitting its worst year in 1983 in the pit of the recession.

The Government had said over and over that once it was elected great confidence would be restored in the country, that businessmen would invest, that employment would climb and that unemployment would decline. As I pointed out, the figures do not show that. Not only do the figures not show that, but I want to use a tactic that was used very well by the Minister herself and also by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who likes to quote headlines from newspapers.

I have here a Canadian Press story published in the Gazette dated October 5, 1984. It reads, "Economists forecast slowdown in Canada". That is from the Conference Board of Canada. A Gallup Poll of January 7, 1985 reports that fewer today expect unemployment to fall. Fewer expect unemployment to fall, that is the Conference Board's confidence in the Conservative Government which was supposed to instil all sorts of confidence. A story in The Globe and Mail, the great Conservative newspaper, dated December 5, reads, "Production and Employment drop sharply". On January 7, 1985, also from The Globe and Mail a headline reads, "Forty-two per cent expect increase in jobless in 1985". From March 26, 1985, we have a Canadian Press story which is headed, "Most forecasters expect high unemployment in 1986".

• (1200)

The confidence which was supposed to return to Canada with the election of this Government, as was promised, is not there. It is not there as shown in the Gallup polls. It is not there as indicated by economists who analyse the situation. The Government's approach is not working and will not work. We need stimulus, but the Government is giving us cuts as exemplified in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8. In fact, it is withdrawing stimulus from the Canadian labour market rather than increasing it.

As I said, two things are necessary—we should have stimulus and we should have goals. Yesterday I was pleased when the Leader of the New Democratic Party rose in the House and asked whether we could have a six and five program for unemployment. I have been saying that myself for several years now. As a matter of fact, in the report of the task force on employment opportunities published in 1981, we recommended a full employment policy. I am pleased to say that Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party supported that recommendation for a full employment policy, but the two Conservative Members on the committee dissented from that recommendation.

It is important to indicate that every time Governments in this country have fixed exact goals for unemployment, they have come close to attaining those goals. As was pointed out yesterday, under the six and five program for inflation, by setting those goals over a three-year period—and other factors came into play—inflation came down from approximately 13 per cent to less than 5 per cent because that was made a priority and it was a goal.

Let us look at the two other times since the Second World War when the Government of this country made full employment its goal and came very close to achieving it. In 1945, right after the war, the Liberal Government of Canada published a white paper on full employment. It set out goals to achieve full employment and the means of doing so. In the period from 1946 to 1953, the average rate of unemployment was 3 per cent. The next time a goal was set for full employment was when the Liberal Government set up the Economic Council of Canada in 1963. In its first report of 1964, it recommended a full employment policy. Immediately following that time, in the period from 1965 to 1967, the rate of unemployment was 3.8 per cent. We can see that when we set goals, as we did with the six and five for inflation and as we did in 1946 and 1964 for employment, we come close to achieving them because those goals are priorities and those priorities prevail over all other matters which come before the Government.

When I say that stimulus is necessary, of course I do not mean any kind of stimulus. I mean a well thought out and appropriate stimulus, a stimulus which is appropriate to our geography, population, resources, trading partners, and to the fact that we live next to the United States and so on. It must be a well balanced stimulus policy. It must be done in consultation and in co-operation with private business, trade unions, consumers' groups and so on.

Furthermore, we cannot continually look to the United States for programs to borrow. Canada is not the United States. As a matter of fact, if we were to judge Canada on economic bases alone, Canada would not exist. If we simply decided whether Canada was worth-while in economic terms, we would decide that it would not be, that we should join the United States; we would probably be better off economically if we were part of the United States. However, long ago, in 1867 and before, we decided for political reasons that we did not want to be Americans. We decided that we wanted to pay the political price to be Canadians which, as all of us know in the House, requires subsidies, cross-subsidies, building national railways, the CBC and airlines, to bring together the thin ribbon of population which extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific. That is Canada, that very thin ribbon of population of about 25 million people living next to one of the largest and most powerful countries in the world. We cannot judge Canada in economic terms alone or simply think of it in economic terms. We have to balance the economic and the political, and the political means that there must be government intervention in the right measure to ensure that our economy works vis-à-vis the American economy and the economies of the other trading blocs in the world such as the European community, Japan and so on. Our survival in this country, our survival politically, economically, socially and culturally, depends upon the right amount of intervention by Canadian Governments.

The greatest years of prosperity in Canada were those years when the Government played an active role with the private sector. It was not those years when the Government was absent or when the Government withdrew. The years we had the least unemployment and the greatest growth was when there was a proper partnership between Government and the private sector.

In arguing for a certain amount of stimulation, I am not arguing for over-regulation, undue centralization or waste. Not at all. We can have stimulus; intervention into the economy without undue regulation, without undue centralization and waste. These are not necessary. These were not necessary in the past when we had great years of economic boom in Canada.

I have been critical of the Government's policy. The Government seems to say, if we believe the speeches of the Minister of Finance and other economic Ministers in the Government, that to a great extent the deficit is responsible for unemployment and, therefore, to attack the deficit the Government should withdraw from programs and thereby stimulate the economy. If it withdraws, the Government argues, the private sector will pick up things and produce the jobs which are required. I do not support that policy. I do not think it will work.

They may say in response that our policies did not work either, and they have said that. I do not agree. Our policies were not perfect, but I would argue that they worked better and eventually would have brought more success to solving these problems than their policy. We believe in stimulating the economy and we believe in goals.

Let us look at the programs which were set up under previous Liberal Governments. There was the establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which was transformed into DRIE. There were the policies of the Department of Supply and Services to ensure that through the purchasing policy of the Government we stimulated employment in different parts of the country. There were transportation policies to double track the railways, and there were housing policies. All these things were in conjunction with the creation of jobs and the stimulation of the economy. I could continue to list the type of programs we put into effect—LEAD, the job corp, career access, Canada Works and so on. Liberal Governments have always made a very substantial commitment to job stimulation.

As an example I should like to refer to a report which talked about the period from 1980 to 1985. It indicated that the Government's vigorous response to the need for direct employment action was reflected in the total spending figures for the five fiscal years ending March 31, 1985. For direct job creation in that period, $3.8 billion was spent, rising from $310 million per year in 1980-81 to $1.2 billion in 1984-85. That shows a Liberal commitment to direct job creation. With respect to human resources training, that is training and retraining programs, $5 billion was spent during that period, rising from $800 million to $1.2 billion per year over the same period of time. The total for direct job creation and human resources training under Liberal Governments over the past five years comes to $8.5 billion.

They say that our programs did not work. I admit that all things are relative, but in the years when Mr. Trudeau was Prime Minister from 1968 until he resigned last year, three million jobs were created. There were 40 per cent more Canadians employed in 1984 than there were in 1968. That compares with the other six leading countries of this world which only had an increase of 13 per cent. During that period in Canada, our labour force grew at twice the rate of the six largest OECD countries. Even in the year coming out of the recession, in 1983, there were 400,000 new jobs created, although the labour force in that year grew 58 per cent faster than in the United States.

• (1210)

My point is that through stimulative programs, the problem was being attacked. It was being attacked despite very complex and difficult problems, despite a very fast growing labour force. We could all be more tolerant of the Conservatives and more sympathetic to their position today if they had been honest during the election campaign, if they had been frank during the election campaign and admitted at that time, as they are doing now, that the problems are complex and difficult, that in a free economy, in a free society there are no quick fixes. During the election campaign they had all the answers. I refer again, because I think the Canadian people must be reminded of this, to the statement of the Prime Minister on July 5 in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, when he said:

> You are going to see tens upon tens of thousands of jobs being created just as quickly as a new Government can be sworn in.

We know how ridiculous that statement was. It was not honest. It was not a frank assessment of the economic situation in Canada. The Canadian people have to be reminded of that. As I said a few minutes ago, we would be more tolerant today of the problems and approaches of the Government if it had been frank during the election campaign.

There are some who believe that if you do stimulate the economy to create the jobs, you will bring back inflation and that inflation will get out of hand. I want to indicate that that is not necessary. Several countries have dealt with both problems. It is not a question of dealing either with inflation or unemployment. You can deal with both at the same time. I will refer to some other countries with which we trade.

In Japan in 1983, the unemployment rate was 2.7 per cent and the inflation rate was 1.8 per cent. There was quite considerable success on both counts. In Austria, the unemployment rate was 4.5 per cent and the inflation rate 3.8 per cent, in Norway there was 3.3 per cent unemployment and a 7.1 per cent inflation, and in Sweden there was 3.5 per cent unemployment and a 9.2 per cent inflation.

The point is that you can do both. I believe this should be done through setting goals, establishing stimulative programs, making our Canadian industry as efficient and competitive as possible to compete with those countries, by having the proper programs for retraining and mobility and by making adjustments in our work time schedule. That means shorter work weeks, longer holidays, incentives for early retirement and so on.

There are a lot of jobs out there. Last year before the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, the Canadian Council on Social Development indicated to us that it alone had discovered 300,000 jobs in its area of concern which had to be created but were not being created because there was not enough financing to put those jobs on line.

The Government has not done very much. It put into place the Canada Works Program for this winter. That was a Liberal program. We congratulate it. It was the right thing to do. The Government put Challenge '85 in place for next summer. That is a poor copy of the Summer Works Program of last year. Aside from that, it has done nothing. The statement in Regina in February at the First Ministers' Conference was a lot of promises and a lot of proposals, but they have not been put into effect. They have not been implemented. There is no action yet, only discussion and study.

I was very disappointed with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). I wanted to ask her a question on this, Mr. Speaker, but you did not recognize me. She praised the members of the New Democratic Party for their task force. I agree that it was a very good idea. At the same time, in attempting to be very partisan, she said that the Conservatives believe in consultation, the NDP believe in consultation, but the Liberals obviously do not. I want to put on record again the consultation that took place in the last Parliament with respect to unemployment.

The task force, of which I was Chairman and of which the Hon. Member from Calgary was Vice-Chairman, entitled Employment Opportunities for the '80s, heard over 342 groups and witnesses all across this country. It was a very strong consultative process. Then there was the task force on skilled development, the program Paid Educational Leave, the task force on major capital projects, the task force "In the Chips" regarding technology and employment, the task force on labour market development, the House of Commons committee on profit sharing. I could go on and on.

I will conclude by saying that we need goals and stimulus. What we need in this country is a six and five program for unemployment and to put behind it the same political will as we had behind the six and five program for inflation. We will see unemployment come down and come down quickly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, can my seatmate give us more details about the efforts that were made during the time of the former Government to have effective consultation?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are other questions and comments for the Hon. Member, if he would like to take them after his short reply to his seatmate.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this makes up for the fact that I could not put a question to the Minister because she is not here now. I mentioned that 56 per cent of Canadians think that unemployment is the major problem in this country, and we have only two Ministers in the House. The Minister only listened to part of the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member has been around here long enough to know that he should not mention who is in the House and who is not. If he would like to answer his seatmate's comment, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the direction given by the Speaker. I hope that that direction will be followed on all sides.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You can be assured it will be.

Mr. Allmand: There is very little interest shown by the Government in the problem which Canadians think is the most important. When the Minister was making her speech, I felt that she was very unfair in trying to indicate that the Liberal Party was not interested in consultation. That is why I wanted to put on record the many consultative processes, the many task forces, the many commissions dealing with employment that were set up and operated in the last Parliament. In fact, there were eight task forces established right after the election in 1980, all of them dealing with economic questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question.

First of all, the Hon. Member referred to "Challenge '85" as a poor copy of the Canada Works programs, but when he got onto the subject of statistics, he mentioned the enthusiastic response of the public and private sectors and of communities across the country. I think there is a contradiction here.

Second, regarding the new approach taken in Regina and what the critics have to say about it, I think that what happened in Regina is that for the first time the Federal Government and the provinces were able to agree on six new ways to create jobs.

We believe in consultation too, and consultations were in fact conducted across the country by the Minister. The New Democratic Party also held consultations and came up with some very good reports. However, this was in response to a formal request from all organizations, including Chambers of Commerce, and these programs are going to be implemented next September. Challenge '85 has already given us some idea of what we can look forward to, and I do not see why we should not give this new program a chance to prove itself. I think there is indeed a contradiction in all this.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, with respect to Challenge '85, the Minister announced certain figures in which she claims great success for the program. She says it has already created so many jobs. I want to wait and see if those jobs are in fact created because I do not see that happening in my riding. In my riding, there seems to be more or less what we had last year. We will wait and see.

• (1220)

Just before Easter, a question was put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration by a Conservative Member regarding how many applications were granted in the private sector under Challenge '85. The Minister rose and said that the answer was 29,000. We immediately phoned her office and asked how many jobs were created under Challenge '85 through municipalities and community organizations. A representative in the Minister's office told us that that was not public information and that we could not receive that information. I replied by saying that a Conservative Member had risen and asked the Minister how many jobs were created in the private sector to which she responded right away by saying 29,000. I asked why she could not tell us how many were created through municipalities and community groups. I was told that it could not be done. Later on, the Minister came up with a global figure of how many jobs would be created under Challenge '85. We will wait and see how many jobs are created and we will wait and see where they are created.

There are two criteria on which we can judge this program. One is the number of jobs that are created and the other is the other goals it sets for itself; whether or not those goals will do something to help the advancement of the careers of young people and the quality of those jobs with respect to the communities. I know that a lot of the groups that were being helped last year like associations for the blind and daycare centres are being left out this year. They are not receiving the same funding. They are getting a smaller slice of the pie this year than they did last year.

Companies that make toilet seats or ice cream cones are getting a bigger share of the pie than groups that are helping the impoverished, the lame, the crippled and the aged. While I am not against that, I am opposed to the fact that there is not a greater share of the program for the community groups. We will wait until the program is over to judge whether or not it has been a success. We will be back here next fall and we will see then the results of the program.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I was happy to hear the Liberal Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) say that he would like to make his judgments on the basis of a completed program. I think we can do that already with regard to the Liberal administration. In his presentation to the House, the Hon. Member spoke of the task force on employment opportunities which he headed. He mentioned that the members of the New Democratic Party who were on that task force supported the goal of full employment and that he and others who were on that task force also supported the goal of full employment. He made passing reference to the fact that Conservative Members on that task force did not do so.

The question we must ask ourselves is, what did the Liberal Government do with that recommendation? Did the Liberal Government, through a Throne Speech or a piece of legislation, say that full employment was its goal? Did the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), ever make that his goal? Did the former President of the Treasury Board, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), ever say that that was the goal of the Government? Did any of the people who share the front benches with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East who were Cabinet Ministers so few months ago ever say that full employment was their goal? The Hon. Member will have a chance to respond, but I think the answer to each and every one of those questions is no, it was never a Liberal commitment to have full employment. What is the position of their Party now? Could the Hon. Member tell us that?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct. The Government never accepted that recommendation in the period following the report. But I have continued to press for it. As a matter of fact, I pointed out that Liberal Governments in the past had accepted it. I described the situation in the period of 1945 to 1956 and then in the period from 1964. Previous Liberal Governments under Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Pearson accepted the goal and almost achieved it. They had 3 per cent unemployment in the period following 1950 and they had 3.8 per cent unemployment in the period of time under Mr. Pearson.

I continue to press for that goal because, as I pointed out, if a Government, whether it be a Liberal or an NDP Government, sets that as its goal, it can be achieved. When we set the six and five program as our goal for inflation and made that our highest priority, it was achieved. To me, the proof is there that if the political will is there, it can be done.

I am confident that through the renewal of our Party, we are going to accept that goal. There are many people here today who agree with me. I cannot tell the Hon. Member that that is the official Party line yet, but I am telling him that that is the way to go.

By the way, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, when he was Minister of Employment and Immigration, put out a paper in 1983 called Perspectives on Employment in which he used other terminology which went in that direction. I thought that it was a step in the right direction but it did not go as far as I would have liked. However, we are now in the process or restoring and renewing ourselves and I am sure that that is the direction we must go. It is certainly—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, everyone begins by saying that it is a pleasure to take part in a debate such as this one. In fact, it is not. The truth of the master is that I would much rather that there was no necessity for a debate such as this, that the Government had brought forward proposals that had begun to address the problems of those who are unemployed and that it had started to talk about the needs of those who have been neglected for 10, 20 or 30 years.

Let me first focus upon the issue about which we are speaking. We are talking about a motion that calls upon the Government to bring in immediately stimulative proposals to reduce unemployment by a minimum of 2.5 per cent within the next 12 months. We based our need for putting this motion forward on the fact that the Government has failed to live up to its commitment to make job creation its number one priority. Instead of living up to that commitment, the Government has pursued cut-backs which have in fact led to unemployment in three out of the last four months. That is what we are debating here today. We are debating whether or not the Government has in fact lived up to the commitments that it made prior to the 1984 election.

I believe any fair-minded individual looking at the record of the Government could not help but come to the conclusion that the Government has failed miserably to live up to its commitment. In fact, one could not help but come to the conclusion that at the time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that if the Tories were elected, they would immediately create tens of thousands of new jobs, that commitment was made without the benefit of the support of the Prime Minister's colleagues, without the understanding of the problems of Canada and in fact was made simply for the purpose of achieving for the Conservative Party additional votes at the polls on a promise it never intended to keep and which has been cast aside.

In her comments, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said that we have to have confidence in Canada's future. I do not disagree with that. I think we have to have confidence. There is no other land with such an abundance of resources as Canada. There is no other land in the world that has available to it the kind of access that we have to the markets of the world, should we choose to use it. Over many, many years, however, the difficulty has been that Canada's economic infrastructure has not been permitted to pursue the markets of the world in an attempt to enhance the manufacturing capacity of this country. It has not been permitted to manufacture products for world distribution. It was denied that opportunity by virtue of the fact that, to a large extent, Canada's employers are branch plants of American and European employers who have no interest in allowing the Canadian economy to grow and compete with the parent companies' home bases. That has been one of the fundamental problems that has confronted Canada and therefore confronted the need to develop an over-all economic strategy that would involve the major component parts of the economy including the major manufacturers. That has been one of the inhibiting factors to Canada's realization of a long-term goal that we could and should be a major part of the economic thrust of the world. We cannot begin to deal with Canada's fundamental problems until we begin to deal with the basic structure of the manufacturing sector. We must create policy which will encourage those in the manufacturing sector to realize both the domestic requirements and the international potentials. They must be freed from the shackles which have been imposed upon them by Governments and the administrative head offices of their enterprises.

● (1230)

The Minister asked us to deal with facts. I would like to deal with some of the facts as I see them.

The first fact is that there are 1.3 million people unemployed today. There is nothing being done by the Government to move in an attempt to create for those people—many of whom are long-term unemployed—the opportunity to get back to work.

The second fact is that unemployment has risen in three of the last four months. It is a fact that job creation, both private and public, has been inadequate in Canada for the last five years. It is a fact that this Government, by virtue of its economic statement in November, moved to eliminate jobs in Canada.

It is a fact that the youth unemployment program which was brought forward by the Government had, as a major component, the involvement of the private sector. However, companies in the private sector in many cases were in the position in which they had already laid off people and were unable, even if they had been willing, to participate and to create the employment which we require.

It is a fact that unemployment among those who are disabled in Canada is now running upward of 60 per cent of those who would be eligible to become employed. In looking at those numbers we must bear in mind that 10 per cent of our population falls into the category of being disabled.

It is a fact that private initiative in Canada has been lagging since the middle 1970s. It is a fact that this Government moved to remove $1 billion from the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada in September, 1984. The effect of that move was devastating on consumers, consumer-oriented manufacturers, and those who provide the services in almost every community in Canada.

It is a fact that not one program was brought forward by the Government which was specifically aimed at meeting the problems of those people who fall into the category of being between the ages of 55 and 65. Those people have given years and years of hard work in an attempt to hold their families together and build society, but not one program has been aimed at assisting them. Now they find that the plant or factory in which they worked, the mine, the office or the store by which they were employed no longer requires their services. There is not a single community in Canada which does not provide an adequate example of people who have spent a lifetime working in the community, building and developing the resources in that community, who now discover, as a result of the economic downturn, that they have been cast out as if they were trash. Not one program from this Government has been aimed specifically at trying to combat that problem.

It is a fact that there is not a special municipal project oriented as an employment-type program worth its name. We could visit any community and ask the local mayor, council and local community groups if there are not projects which are both necessary and could be proceeded with quickly if the funding were available. Every community which I have visited,—whether it be in the Yukon where I was last weekend, southern Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia or the Maritime Provinces—without exception, has projects which are both necessary and could be proceeded with quickly if the funding were made available. But this Government has failed to come forward with the necessary funding. It is clear that money spent on projects in local communities would enhance the value of Canada.

If a new sewage, sanitation or disposal plant were built in a community, it would enhance the value of the community and, therefore, the value of the country as a whole. There could be a major road rebuilding program which would enhance the value of a community and, therefore, the country as a whole. The money which would be spent on those kinds of projects would remain in Canada. The employment which would be created from those kinds of expenditures would be employment at the local level for people who are now unemployed and who ought to be working. The materials which would be used in undertaking those kinds of projects would come from Canada, would be manufactured by Canadians, and would be put in place by Canadians. Therefore, we in this country would derive 100 per cent of the benefit. It is a fact that this Government refused to move forward on that front in order to try to meet the needs of the communities.

It is a fact that there has been no emphasis placed by this Government on the problems of single-industry towns. We could go to the Eastern Townships of Quebec and, without exception, we would see that town after town is a single-industry based town. Those single industries are now under tremendous pressure in many cases. Of course, the most recent case occurred in Windsor, and it took the Prime Minister himself to intervene, to go in with money after the opposition Parties had pressured the Government to do that. It could have been done a month or two months previously, but it had to be held off so the Prime Minister could get the maximum benefit from the announcement. Those people sat in despair. They were concerned about their futures. They recognized that everything for which they had worked was in jeopardy. But this Government waited until the Prime Minister had his hair cut and put on a new suit before the statement was made. The statement ought to have been made months before.

It is a fact that there has been absolutely no resource sector priorization. The forest industry, which is the backbone of so many communities across Canada, is an example. Where is the money for the continuing requirements of the forest industry? When has the Government said that it would move on that front in order to put the tens of thousands of people, who have been unemployed for the better part of the last two years, back to work? The Government has failed to come forward with a single program to combat that particular problem, regardless of whether it exists in British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec or the Maritimes.

It is a fact that this Government seems to be determined to foist on to the backs of the working people the tremendous pressures which flow from the economic mismanagement of years of Liberal administration at the federal level and years of Conservative administration at the provincial level. This Government is unable or unwilling to meet the demands of establishing a clear economic path for Canada which would satisfy our needs in the long run, while, at the same time, providing the necessary support for the people who are being asked to carry the enormous burdens of unemployment during this, hopefully, short-run period of economic uncertainty. And the facts go on.

• (1240)

It is a fact, for example, that $1.5 billion could be found for the multi-national oil companies by this Government but it could not find the necessary hundreds of thousands of dollars in order to meet the demands and requirements of other equally important parts of Canada's economy. It is a fact that when the Canadian Commercial Bank went under, the Government could find $60 million from a Budget in which it claimed there was no money available. The Government could find $60 million to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank, but when the farmers of this country were going bankrupt in record numbers, it could not even find it in its heart to commiserate, never mind finding the money to assist in offsetting the losses which were being incurred. It is a fact that when the small business people of this country were looking to the Government for some assistance when high interest rates were the order of the day—just some months ago—this Government could not find any way to help because, after all, the coffers of the Government were extended to the absolute maximum; there was no more money. But when the multi-nationals needed $1.5 billion, when the Commercial Bank needed $60 million, the Government just reached back, as if it was nothing, took the money out of the bag and said, "There it is, guys. Go to it. You are our friends. The others are not. We'll look after you. The hell with everyone else". That is the Government we are addressing today.

Mr. Gormley: Nonsense!

Mr. Deans: The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) says that is nonsense. The reason why this Government gets away with these things is that Hon. Members like the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake do not stand in their places and challenge the Government to do what is right rather than what is expedient. In my own community I find that plants are closing. The previous Government funded the take-over of Admiral by Inglis. We asked the previous Government to make some provision for guaranteeing the jobs of those who were already working for Inglis, to take some steps to protect those people from the potential job losses which were evident in the future. The previous Liberal administration did not take the necessary steps. Now I ask the Minister who is in charge of regional economic expansion if he will take some steps, but he tells me he cannot, it is a rationalization process and if those people lose their jobs, that's just too bad. He said it in a nicer way, perhaps, that he does not feel it would be appropriate to intervene in any way.

Why is it not appropriate to intervene in a situation where a company is closing down in one place, opening up in another, and throwing families out onto the street? Why is that not appropriate action for a Government? Why is it not appropriate for the Government to sit down with companies which are closing down simply in order to maximize profits which are already significantly higher than need be? Why is it not appropriate for a Government to sit down and talk to them about their obligation to the community in which they are located? I suggest that that is part of the problem with this Government. It is oriented to bigness, anything that's big, anything to do with millions of dollars and billions of dollars, but when it comes right down to ordinary people who are unemployed and who need some help and someone to stand up for them, where is this Government? It is nowhere to be found. And that is what is wrong with this Government.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, we presented a whole host of very reasonable suggestions as to how this question could be dealt with. Not only did we ask the Government to spend money wisely and well but we even suggested how the Government might raise the necessary money. We suggested the adjustments which could be made in the expenditure patterns in order to ensure that the money we were saying could be spent, was spent without an inordinate increase in the deficit. But what does the Government do? It stands up and tells us, "We still cannot afford to go ahead with it. It is unfortunate. We feel sorry for the people who are detrimentally affected, but we just can't see a way to raise that money".

Why can Government not raise the money we are suggesting should be raised? Its corporate friends are now being asked to donate a hundred dollars to the Brian Mulroney fund in Quebec so that they can have direct access to the Government. That is why. It is because this Government operates on patronage and patronage alone. It is because this Government does not give a damn about the ordinary individual no matter what it says. That is why this motion is before this House, Mr. Speaker, and that is why this Government has to answer for seven months of neglect of the people whom it said it was going to represent and whom it has failed to represent.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, my question has two parts. I heard my hon. friend say earlier that we were spending money and were prepared to give money to multinational corporations without really doing an in-depth study. In fact, just two minutes before, we were discussing the case of a municipality, and I am referring to Windsor, Quebec.

I could not agree more with my hon. friend when he says that people should be made to face up to their responsibilities. In the case of Windsor, that is exactly what happened, Mr. Speaker. What is the Government supposed to do when a company which made a profit of $90 or $95 million last year and distributed over $200 million in dividends in the past eight years, turns around and asks the Government for $100 million? The same company did not invest any capital during the last 30 years because it wanted to close the plant, but all of a sudden it found that there were new possibilities on the market. What did the Government do? It looked at the matter from a different perspective and made the company face up to its own responsibilities.

My hon. friend also said that there were no programs for municipalities that are in fact company towns, or programs for the 45 and up age group. He knows perfectly well that in Regina, the federal and provincial governments agreed to set up two of those programs, as part of the six avenues for job creation now being developed as a result of the Regina Conference. We are now working on these programs to have everything ready by next September. Even the report published after the NDP group held its consultations across Canada made it quite clear that the first requirement for setting up a job creation program was to have federal, provincial and municipal authorities working together. That is what we started off doing, and we are going to bring the resulting programs to the country. That is what we are working on, including these two specific programs.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary could tell us what new information became available in Windsor that was not available a month ago. And how would he relate the attitude in Windsor to the attitude taken by the Government to the multi-national oil companies which will take from the federal Treasury of Canada $1.5 billion that they do not need either? They will receive money which can be spent by them to undertake projects that they were already being compensated for through the tax structure. I do not understand how the Government can have this double standard.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question and I will follow it with a comment. I appreciated the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). As many of the Hon. Members in this room would expect, I was interested when he referred—

Mr. Young: It was an excellent speech.

Mr. Murphy: It was an excellent speech.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: I will admit that there are times when he does not make excellent speeches. But in a very serious vein, Mr. Speaker, in the substance of the speech of the Hon. Member he did talk about the need to provide funding for Canadian municipalities. I notice that the mayors of the major municipalities have made the same point which was made in the report of our action group on jobs, that is, that there has to be money in order that those municipalities can provide the waterworks, the sewage, and the infrastructure which is needed in their communities. I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that in Manitoba the provincial New Democratic Party Government has taken that exact approach. There is what is called a Community Assets Program which provides school gyms and the type of infrastructure which is needed in those communities. It provides jobs in the short run and in the long term it provides the assets which are needed for those communities. There is also a parallel program, the Main Street Manitoba Program, which upgrades the community in co-operation and in partnership with the municipalities, the business community and the province. That is the type of program I believe the Member was speaking about.

• (1250)

Mr. Deans: Exactly.

Mr. Murphy: The question I have deals with another group. Since tomorrow is the day when the equality provisions of our Constitution come into effect, I think this is significant. The Member who has been involved in this area for many, many years is the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). I think we should congratulate him for his work two weeks ago in a standing committee of this House in getting the committee to recommend that certain sections of the Elections Act which discriminate against certain classes of mentally handicapped Canadians be eliminated. The question is this. The International Labour Organization passed Convention 159 on Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment for Disabled Persons. In other words, it is a proposal which talks about increasing opportunity and removing discrimination against physically handicapped and other disabled persons. I know that the coalition of provincial organizations concerned with the handicapped has asked Canada to sign that convention and I wonder if he could state the position of the NDP on that issue.

Mr. Deans: I will do so very briefly. Not only do we support the signing of the agreement, but we were hoping that perhaps through some negotiation with the Government we might get a unanimous resolution from the House of Commons which would allow the Government to proceed with the full support of everyone to indicate to the ILO and the world that the time has come for discrimination against the disabled to be put to an end. We cannot afford it any more. Not only that, it has been wrong for years, and a succession of Governments have failed to deal with it.

So I think my colleague from Beaches, together with others in our caucus, will be attempting to put together a support base within the House of Commons within the next two or three days for the resolution we hope the Government will ultimately agree with which will indicate world-wide that we in Canada want an end to all discrimination against people who find themselves in the unfortunate position of being disabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to comment and ask the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party to stop using their Party's time to complain, because in any case, whatever action the Government will take, it will never satisfy the Members of the New Democratic Party.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) referred earlier to the Government's actions with respect to the multinationals. I think the Hon. Member should not forget that these companies are responsible for a considerable share of this country's productivity and that they are major creators of jobs for Canadian citizens.

I would also remind the Hon. Member that the report they published recently contains the same information we on the Government side already had through the results of the election on September 4, and that, if his party persists in using this kind of motion to waste the time of the House, they will soon see a 2.5 per cent reduction in their membership, because the people of this country want Government policies, the policies we have explained to Canadians and are now putting into practice.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I understand the situation vis-à-vis the positions of the multinationals.

[English]

The problem is simply that the multinationals, for years, and even to this very date, refused to deal with what is in the best interests of Canada. They deal only with what is in the best interest of the multinational itself without ever taking into account the needs of Canada's future growth. Our complaint is not that they exist or that they exist within Canada; our complaint is that there is no regulation or law in Canada which requires them to operate in Canada's best interests.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) asked me why the previous Liberal Government did not accept the recommendation of the task force on employment opportunities for a full employment policy. That recommendation was made by Liberal and NDP Members on that task force. I explained that the Government did not accept that recommendation but, on the other hand, accepted that there should be an expansionary or stimulative policy, and it put a lot of money into employment creation.

In this motion there is no commitment to full employment but a request that the Government reduce unemployment by 2.5 per cent over the next 12 months. I support the motion because I think it is a step in the right direction considering the policies of this Government, but does it mean that the NDP also has abandoned a full employment policy?

Mr. Deans: I am glad the Hon. Member asked the question. Of course we have not. What we are putting forward right now is an interim policy with the situation as it is right at this moment. It is our opinion that the Government has both the financial and other resources which would allow it to move forward at a pace of about 2.5 per cent a year at the moment in the reduction of unemployment. However, we expect that this will be continued over a number of years and that within three to four years we will find ourselves in a situation where we will be back to the level where we were talking about full employment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, jobs, jobs, jobs. We in the Conservative Party of Canada ran an election campaign on jobs and said we would create jobs. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has reminded the House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that as soon as we changed Governments there would be tens of thousands of new jobs. Well, I stand here in this House today with statistics from the first six months of this Government's life which indicate there are 112,000 Canadians working today who would not have had a job under the other Government. When you talk about tens of thousands of jobs, 10,000 into 112,000 goes 11 times; that is 11 times we have kept that promise in the first six months. But we are not satisfied and we will do better and I hope they begin to recognize what we have been doing for this country.

Not only have we created those 112,000 new jobs, which means new taxpayers instead of tax spenders, but let us compare that with the same period of time in 1983 and 1984, September to March. At that time, under the previous Government unemployment in this country went up by 38,000 people. The record of this Government in a comparable period of time in 1984-85 is that of 48,000 fewer unemployed. The total change of 38,000 plus 48,000 is 86,000 jobs, and that is an important statistic.

Let me give you a third statistic which is also important. Ever since this country had the opportunity to throw out the previous Government there has been a change in the participation rate. It has gone up because people have hope. They believed the Prime Minister of this country and the Conservative Members during the election that we would dedicate our efforts to straightening out the economy and create jobs for Canadians. They believed it and have begun to look for work. That is what a participation rate is about, and that rate is up, it will stay up, and we anticipate it will go even higher because we will be creating the jobs which enable people to have the kind of standard of living Canadians deserve, which they are used to and which they must have.

I am just barely getting warmed up, but I see it is one o'clock. I believe I will have the floor again at three o'clock and I look forward to expanding on my remarks at that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, April 17, marks a historic date for Canada's disabled people. As of Wednesday, discrimination based on physical and mental disability will be unconstitutional.

Disabled people in Canada have fought long and hard for a fair chance to do many things most of us take for granted. For example, the simple process of gathering information from newspapers, books, and magazines can be difficult, if not impossible, for a blind person.

Last week I had the opportunity of touring, with the Chairman of the Board of the Metropolitan Toronto Library Board, Mr. Irv Sherman, the newly opened Metro Toronto Library Centre for disabled persons. This excellent centre has a variety of information services for disabled people, including a Kurzweil Reading Machine that actually reads aloud from a printed text in a synthetic voice.

On the eve of the implementation of equality rights, I urge the Government to continue to open the door of opportunity for Canada's disabled people.

FORESTRY

DELAY IN COMPLETING AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, there is still no federal-provincial forestry agreement in place in British Columbia in spite of Conservative promises of federal-provincial co-operation and help to the forest industry. While waiting for that agreement to be signed, 2,300 workers in the Canada Works Forestry Program face lay-offs. Last week I met over 100 of these men and women on their last day of work. Funding had run out, and new funds had not been allocated.

These people want to know why negotiations always have to wait until the last minute. As one worker said, maybe if more of the people doing the negotiating lived hand-to-mouth like the workers who depend on the programs, they would not be quite so casual in the way in which they negotiate for new funds.

It now appears that the Department of Employment and Immigration has offered to pay wages, but not overhead, for the program until the end of June. The companies object to paying anything at all, even though their forest lands get the benefit of the work that is being done. We can only ask if this is an example of the much touted "new mood of co-operation" between the Conservative Government and private business. Is this the kind of free enterprise that is going to create jobs for two million out-of-work Canadians?

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the sign reads "Government For Sale". For $100 you can now join the Brian Mulroney Club. Membership will allow you access to your Member of Parliament, as unbelievable as that may seem, but it is not guaranteed that you will find a solution to your problem. Tory organizers expect many members to join within months.

The Government was elected to serve Canadians, not to sell their services. This is the most outrageous of all the atrocities that have been perpetrated by the Conservative Party on the people of Canada. What can we expect next? Tory Members peddling Brian Mulroney's picture for $10 to their supporters in their own constituencies?

To all Tory Members in the House I say that we on this side of the House we do not charge to help the people of Canada. Mr. Speaker, please advise the constituents of other ridings that the Liberals are here to serve everyone, rich and poor alike.

AGRICULTURE

DEVELOPMENT OF NEW WHEAT STRAINS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the issue of unlicensed utility wheat has received considerable press in the past, not only in recent weeks but over the past years. One has only to look at the various strains that have been developed in an attempt to maximize production to be aware of this.

We have seen the introduction of triticale, and the development and licensing of HY320 as examples of this. It was only natural that farmers, who are neighbours in spite of the fact that the Canada-U.S. border separates their farms, would discuss and exchange not only ideas but seed as well. To ignore this fact, and many other problems of agriculture, was a tactic often employed by the previous Liberal administration.

Calling together all interested parties, from growers to grain company officials, particularly those who represent companies co-operatively owned by the producers, demonstrates that the consultative process is alive and well in the Government. We recognize that agriculture is a pillar of the Canadian economy and are trying to provide another option for hard-pressed producers. I commend the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board for his actions, and call on all Members of the House to applaud him for his insight in dealing with this problem.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow marks the fiftieth anniversary of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, an organization which has become part of the very fabric of the Prairies. Established by a Conservative Government on April 17, 1935, the PFRA was born at a time of unprecedented drought conditions in the rural west. Through its emphasis on long-term planning and conservation, the PFRA helped western agriculture to survive and, later, to prosper. For example, the Palliser triangle, once the infamous dust bowl of the Prairies, is again agriculturally productive, thanks in large part to the PFRA.

Tonight at the University of Manitoba this historic anniversary is being marked with a seminar attended by numerous experts in water and soil conservation who will discuss the organization's past and its future. All this comes at a time when consideration is being given to basic structural changes in the PFRA.

I commend my colleague, the Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), for putting forth recommendations which will be considered by the Agriculture Committee in the near future. Apart from these recommendations, Mr. Speaker, agricultural technology and growing public awareness about conservation have created new challenges for this organization.

I am confident that, just as it met its goals in the past, the PFRA will rise to the challenges of the future. I congratulate PFRA officials on this historic occasion. I wish them every success in their deliberations this evening.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to send a warning to all Canadians who are concerned about a growing trend by Governments seriously to misrepresent facts for their own partisan purposes.

S.O. 21

In his classic novel 1984 George Orwell presented a chilling portrait of a Government that used the control of language as a means to control its people. It consciously and insidiously twisted and distorted the meaning of words until the resulting language, called newspeak, proclaimed that love was hate, war was peace, and freedom was slavery.

Since the Government was elected a short seven months ago, the proliferation of newspeak has grown to alarming proportions. Nowhere is this more apparent than when it comes to the Government's pronouncements on unemployment. Yesterday's performance by that master of newspeak himself, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), indicates that the level of misrepresentation by the Government has reached new heights.

Yesterday the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) pointed out that the rate of job creation in the last six months is lower than in the previous six months, and that in fact unemployment has increased in three of the last four months. Yet the Prime Minister continues to say that there has been "a rebirth in confidence in the private sector resulting in job creation". There are 65,000 more Canadians unemployed today than when the Prime Minister assumed office. These are the facts, yet the Government will have us believe otherwise.

It is a dangerous practice to deny the truth. One could foresee the day when the Government creates a Minister of Information to tell what is truth and what is not. Canadians do not want their Government to tell them that black is white, or that unemployment is going down when in fact it is going up.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time is expired.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

HAMILTON REGIONAL INCINERATOR

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, a Tory is a Tory is a very sad story for the City of Hamilton. Just as our tight-lipped Premier was in Hamilton announcing the creation of a measely 10 jobs, the federal Government was refusing to honour its commitment of $2.4 million for the upgrading of the regional incinerator. It would be funny if it were not such a threat to the health of the people of Hamilton. This upgrading is absolutely critical because SWARU has been emitting dioxins into the air breathed by hundreds of thousands of people in the Niagara region. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) can find $1 billion for oil companies, but she cannot find $2.4 million to protect Hamiltonians from cancer causing agents.

This political story does not end here. The regional chairman, who also happens to be a current candidate for the Tories in Ontario, sent a telex to the Ministers involved to say that this funding was critical and the freeze was a severe shock. The candidate sent copies to the Members for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson) and Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), but skipped right over the riding of Hamilton East where the residents will be most affected by the cut-back.

The Tory candidate thought it was more important to protect the Government than to protect the citizens of Hamilton. She has hidden the truth from the Opposition and shown that her only interest is in protecting fellow Conservatives. The Tories in Ontario have always left Hamilton in the cold, except when it came to foisting schemes of regional government and rapid transit on the people. Now we see that their Ottawa cousins are cut from the same sackcloth.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REMARKABLE WORK DONE BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DURING VISIT TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, after having the privilege of accompanying the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on his recent visit to the Soviet Union, I must say that the Minister did a remarkable job in situations and circumstances that were not always easy.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this trip was, first and foremost, to provide for a better mutual understanding between our two countries, to establish a relationship with the Soviets and to re-establish lines of communications which had been neglected for more than a year.

Mr. Speaker, during our visits to Leningrad, Novosibirsk, Moscow and Kiev, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was always clear and consistent in what he had to say. Although our two countries will always have political differences, we must seek, above all, the points of interest we have in common and maintain a constant dialogue. Mr. Speaker, there are no two countries in this world that are more similar than the Soviet Union and Canada, whether we are referring to climate, or wide open spaces or our economies, which we would do well to develop together.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the recent visit by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Soviet Union will, in the months or years to come, provide considerable benefits for Canada, both from the economic and the social and cultural point of view.

CHALLENGE '85

STUDENT EMPLOYMENT EXPERIENCE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—DISTRIBUTION OF APPLICATIONS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament have been advised that they will receive copies of the SEED Program applications involving more than four jobs, for their review. This is so in all Provinces except Saskatchewan where, we are informed, Members will not be consulted, apparently as a result of an agreement made between the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), Conservative Members, and the Conservative Government in that Province. Why the New Democratic Members of Parliament from Saskatchewan were not consulted when this decision was taken requires an explanation that, hopefully, will soon be forthcoming.

Much was made of the wage subsidized career orientation of Challenge '85, which we said would impede job creation given the late announcement of the program. Challenge '85 is now claimed to have produced more jobs than Summer Canada. If that is so, we applaud that fact, but we know that if it is so it results from the absence of criteria to ensure career orientation.

Under the SEED Program, proposals are assessed on a first come, first served basis, with little scrutiny. The program does not have a mechanism to determine if proposals are career oriented or whether full-time workers will be displaced. It should also be noted that the continuous scrutiny that characterized Summer Canada, that is, three visits per project, is not being carried out.

Finally, it should be noted that, contrary to other commitments made by the Government, the SEED Program does not have a requirement that Summer Canada had—

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR END TO INEFFICIENCY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I would venture to say that no other government Department or Crown corporation has received as much criticism as that levelled against Canada Post Corporation. Increasingly this Crown corporation is being seen as a high-cost, low-efficiency operation.

Canada Post Corporation, which was established in October, 1981, has had nearly four years in order to improve its performance. Its establishment as a Crown Corporation gave the Canadian public expectations of improved service. Instead we are faced with a situation of postal rates continuing to increase while the efficiency of postal services continues to decline. Is there no end to this vicious circle which saps both the federal treasury and the patience of the Canadian public? I believe that it is time to put an end to this unbearable situation.

Both management and labour must recognize that problems exist. They must also discover what these problems are, and arrive at a consensus on how to eliminate them. It serves neither the interests of management nor labour to blame each other for the inefficiency of Canada Post. Both sides are part of the problem, and therefore must also be part of the solution. We in Government can assist in the resolution of this problem by letting it be known that we will no longer allow the status quo to continue. It is time for action, Mr. Speaker.

THE ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENT OF DR. JANET WARDLAW TO HEAD INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I and many other Members of this Chamber received a button that we were supposed to wear which referred to equality and most of us did. What surprises me is that the Party circulating the button, at least to me, made no representation about our Party's willingness to support people especially women, in important positions. I have not heard one word from my colleagues on my left about the appointment of that extraordinary Canadian, Dr. Janet Wardlaw, to be the Chairman of the International Development Research Centre. I would be happy if they had opened up and welcomed such a tremendous appointment, Mr. Speaker. Where were you? Where were you?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CHEMICAL SPILL ALONG TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment, but in her absence, and I think I understand why, I would like to put my question to the Prime Minister.

The Minister of the Environment demonstrated quite clearly yesterday a lack of appreciation of the scope of the environmental disaster that occurred on the Trans-Canada Highway when PCBs were leaked along that highway. More important, the Minister of the Environment demonstrated a complete lack of understanding of federal responsibility for that disaster in attributing the jurisdiction as a provincial one.

Has the Prime Minister communicated with his Minister of the Environment and asked her whether she is now aware that officials of the Department of the Environment in Edmonton were notified, 48 hours before the PCBs were shipped by Kinetic Ecological Research Group, of the following information: the type of vehicle to be used; the vehicle licence number; the driver's name and address; the type of material and volume of material to be shipped, and the route to be followed?

Will the Prime Minister consult with the Minister of the Environment to ask her to come before this House and admit that under the Environmental Contaminant Act, a federal Act, she has a primary responsibility, not diluted by provincial jurisdiction, for the prevention and cleanup of spills of dangerous chemicals?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Environment I want to respond to my right hon. friend and advise him that it is a matter of some pride to this Party that that Act, which the right hon. gentleman has just cited, was supported by this Party, and appropriately so, and that regulations under that Act are important. They are indeed part and parcel of that part of federal jurisdiction which is of help in these cases.

As the right hon. gentleman knows, the Department is fully informed of the situation. Consideration is being given to the event that caused this mishap. As the right hon. gentleman also knows, the question of PCB control is incredibly complex. There is divided jurisdiction on it. There are severe problems in terms of obtaining sufficient public support for proper plants for the destruction of these particular contaminants.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Prime Minister has not responded to this question because the extent of this particular situation is wider than he and his Government may suspect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ONTARIO MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me put a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who is acting for the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Nunziata: Always acting.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans agree on behalf of his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, with the statement by her counterpart, the Ontario Minister of the Environment, Mr. Morley Kells, with respect to the potential human fallout as a result of the PCB spill, when he said yesterday:

> If you are a rat eating PCBs on the Trans-Canada, you might have some problems.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is Copps when we need her? Let's get the rat pack.

● (1420)

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, we on this side, and I am sure the Hon. Minister whom I am representing today, would not want to see our animal friends, any more than anybody else, suffer as a consequence of a PCB spill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: The rats are friends of yours, not ours. They belong to the Mulroney club.

Mr. Fraser: Of course I am constrained to say what she might have to say about non-animal rats, but that is another matter completely. I will take the representations of the right hon. gentleman to my colleague. I am sure she can deal with this other aspect of the problem when she is next in the House.

TOXICITY OF PCBS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have known the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for a long time, but that answer will give him an F too. I want to ask him, on behalf of his colleague, does she not realize that one kilogram of PCBs would be enough, if taken by fish, to make half a million fish unfit for human consumption. Are the Minister and his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, aware that Dr. Joseph Cummings of the University of Western Ontario, a respected geneticist, has already consulted this morning with several people in northern Ontario complaining of the symptoms of PCB exposure, and has described the statement by the Environment Minister's provincial counterpart, the Hon. Morley Kells, as totally appalling in the circumstances? This is not just a matter of animals. It is a matter of human health. The Minister and his Government had better start to realize what kind of situation they have here.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the questions which are coming from the right hon. gentleman are interesting in terms of their factual content or otherwise. There is no question as to where this Party or the Minister I am representing today stands on the concern and danger of PCBs. However, part of the reason this happened is because the former Government had plenty of time to put proper regulations into effect and did not do so.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMPANY'S COMPLIANCE WITH REGULATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of the Environment realizes the gravity of the situation today in contrast to yesterday. In her absence I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the developments which have taken place, could the Minister reassure the House that he is satisfied the trailer company in question has complied with regulations and legislation under federal jurisdiction, under his jurisdiction in particular?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member knows, the accident is currently being investigated by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment. Officials in my Department, and those particularly associated with the transportation of dangerous goods, are collaborating with provincial authorities to determine the cause of the leak and to ensure that all regulations were in fact followed. Of course, upon the completion of that investigation, we will be in a better position to advise the Hon. Member and the House on precisely what took place.

ROLE OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Now that he has an opportunity to give, at last, some positive leadership in the environment, having given negative leadership so far by slashing the Department so irrationally last November, will he speak to that weak-minded Premier of Ontario and shake him up in terms of his responsibility in looking after the health of the people of Ontario in the affected communities near the Trans-Canada Highway, and take into hand the management of this critical situation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we have indicated the great seriousness with which we regard the matter raised quite properly by my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, and have given assurances of a full commitment of the resources of the federal Government, in co-operation with the provinces, to deal with it. I think that would be the stand of any Government. It is ours. I do not think, notwithstanding his best efforts, my hon. friend from Davenport assists the Liberal Party in Ontario in its provincial election by attempting to defame an outstanding Canadian, the Premier of Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I think the people of Ontario are looking for leadership. They are going to get it from Premier Miller, not from people who indulge in character assassination like the Hon. Member for Davenport.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, whose colleague, the Minister of the Environment, wrote me recently to indicate that officials had been working for some years with Transport Canada staff on the transport of dangerous goods, in particular on hazardous wastes and emergencies. While consultation is very nice, we have a PCB spill apparently stretching the length of the Trans-Canada Highway from Kenora to Thunder Bay. Since the Minister of Transport is responsible for the transportation of dangerous goods, I should like to ask him whether further measures are contemplated under that Act. Are systems such as escorts and convoys being looked at? To his knowledge, were all applicable regulations observed in this case?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. There has been consultation and there has been action. As a matter of fact the transportation of dangerous goods regulations have indeed been proclaimed and will take effect on July 1. That is as soon as it is practically possible to put these regulations in place. It has been done in consultation with the industry, and there has been a certain degree of hardship imposed. Nonetheless, that announcement has been made. Naturally, when the regulations become effective, all transportation of dangerous goods in Canada and, indeed, trans-border, will have to conform to those regulations.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. My constituents will not be pleased to know that they have to wait until the tourist season for protection. Frankly, since we have the federal Minister of the Environment and the provincial Minister of the Environment discounting, or taking this situation lightly, will the Minister of Transport provide leadership in the matter of handling toxic substances? Will he assure the House that the situation will be reviewed in light of this experience?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members of the House, that we are taking this issue seriously. We are showing leadership. The fact of the matter is that we accelerated the proclamation of the regulations under the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act by several months. That took some convincing, and it took a lot of consultation. As I said earlier, my departmental officials are working very closely with the Department of the Environment for the Province of Ontario to ensure that an adequate investigation is carried out, and to ensure that all necessary precautions were in fact followed and will be followed in the future.

CONTENTS OF TRANSFORMER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but wonder whether or not Premier Miller gave the Prime Minister that little speech the last time he sat on his knee, or whether the Prime Minister made it up himself.

My question is directed to the Acting Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He should know that the transformer in question from which the PCBs were spilt contained 384 gallons of PCBs. We know where 100 gallons of those 384 gallons are, because they are in the storage tank of the truck. What we do not know is how much of the remaining 284 gallons is still in the transformer, if any. Given the serious consequences of having those 284 gallons spilt along the TransCanada Highway, possibly from Montreal to Kenora, will the Minister now undertake to determine in Kenora how much of the remaining 284 gallons of PCBs is still in that transformer, if any? That will point to just how serious this spillage may be in fact.

• (1430)

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister I can tell the House that this still is, of course, taken very seriously. I can also tell the House that the regulations that my friend, the Minister of Transport, referred to, are coming in on July 1, earlier than they otherwise would have been because my friends on the other side, when they were in Government, had not brought the regulations up to date. I can also tell the Hon. Member that, in consultation and working with all of the people who are involved in this and who can give any information, the matter is being taken seriously. As soon as a more factual report can be given to this House, it most certainly will be given.

REQUEST THAT BLOOD ANALYSIS TESTS BE CONDUCTED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, when environmental officials are saying the only danger is to rats, and we do not know where over 284 gallons of PCBs are, I do not think it is being taken seriously. I think they ought to wake up.

Mr. Crosbie: Tobin for leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I don't have your ambitions, John. Only you have a blind ambition to be leader. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I am trying hard. A respected geneticist at the University of Western Ontario this morning heard from people who are apparently suffering the symptoms of PCB exposure. Will the Minister instruct, along with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that a mobile unit be put in place to allow PCB blood analysis tests to be done where requested? That facility is currently not available in Kenora and people are reportedly suffering from what appear to be symptoms of PCB exposure.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member, as the Prime Minister has already stated, that if there is anything that the federal Government can do to help, in either the management of this situation or in the area of health, we will not study it but, rather, we will act.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Given what the Minister had to say earlier, could the Minister declare a moratorium on the transportation of dangerous substances such as PCBs until July 1, so that no more transportation of these dangerous substances will occur until the proper regulations are in place?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party will have to get its act together. I brought in a piece of legislation yesterday having to do with the Aeronautics Act, concerning safety and security in the air. The chief spokesman for the New Democratic Party said they were not going to pass this legislation until they saw the regulations. One of the reasons the regulations had been so long in being proclaimed and formulated with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods is that that Party wanted to see the regulations at the time that the transportation of dangerous goods legislation was being passed. It has taken some time. Quite frankly, notwithstanding the fact that the transportation of dangerous goods regulations are coming into effect on July 1, many truckers are conforming to the regulations because they are now made public and they will be enforced effective July 1.

DEBATE ON LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I deliberately asked the question in a way that would not provoke that kind of defensive reaction. All I asked the Minister was whether he would consider a moratorium until July 1. I did not ask him to distort the facts of the debate around the transportation of dangerous goods legislation. I spoke on that Bill. I remember that we passed it quickly. We did not ask to see the regulations before we let it go through.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the reason why I responded in the way I did was simply the fact that in an earlier answer I indicated that the Department of the Environment of the Province of Ontario is investigating the cause of the accident. Our officials are working very closely with the Department of the Environment of Ontario and monitoring the situation. Whatever corrective steps need to be taken, will be taken. I thought the Hon. Member would appreciate the fact that surely we should ascertain all the facts before we take the kind of hurried action that he is recommending to the House today.

ENERGY

FUTURE OF GULF CANADA CORPORATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It follows from the take-over of Gulf America by Chevron. Will the Minister assure the House that all necessary steps are being taken to ensure that Canadian buyers are found for Gulf Canada, which is now 25 per cent Canadian owned?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the Hon. Member for Trinity, as she probably knows the Chevron people have given until the end of this month for Canadians to come forth and make a bid on the Gulf shares that they own, approximately 60 per cent of Gulf Canada. I understand that active negotiations are taking place with at least one Canadian buyer.

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN ONTARIO

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I trust that the Government has indeed learned from Texaco Canada's recent take-over of Canadian Reserve Oil and Gas Limited, which resulted in $980 million leaving Canada. Clearly this benefit to foreign producers must be paid for by Canadian consumers. My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will the Minister now admit that Ontario consumers are facing price increases at the gas pump and in their homes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member cannot have it two ways, to say that they do not want any of these companies to go to non-resident companies and on the other hand to say that they have to be sold to Canadians. If they are sold to Canadians, the money goes out of the country. You cannot have it both ways. I say to the Hon. Member, in response to the specific question on the Budget, she knows when the Budget will be coming. She will get an answer at that time.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN IN QUEBEC

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It has been reported that a Mr. Guy Dionne, representing the Conservative Party in the Province of Quebec as the chief recruitment officer for something called the Club Mulroney, has indicated to businessmen in Quebec that if they will pay $100 to the PC fund, their concerns will be given speedy consideration by the Cabinet. Is that true?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what is true is that Brian Mulroney clubs are springing up all over the place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It's like the daffodils on Parliament Hill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It just is not the same unless you hear that voice from Bay Street representing those international, multinational corporations. I tell you, they must get a big hosing when billing time comes around with an employer like that. The whole Quebec Bar is asking why he doesn't practise in Quebec. I read of the existence of this latest group of clubs. The only clubs, as my hon. friend knows, that would be authorized are those pursuant to the federal statutes which deal with the financing of federal parties. If you contribute to the Conservative Party, you get no more advantage than any other Party, except you get a marvelously good feeling.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CLUB MEMBERSHIP TERMS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, part of the good feeling is not having to listen to the blarney. My question, however, is important for public purposes. Is it true that if businessmen in the Province of Quebec join the Brian Mulroney club and contribute $100 to the PC Canada fund that they will be given speedy consideration of their concerns by the Cabinet and the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No.

• (1440)

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister prepared to tell those people who have joined the club on that understanding that they will not be given such consideration?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Liberal Party, for which one had to knock on special doors, all Canadians receive special consideration from this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: No Party led the Conservative Party in contributions from small donors in the last number of years. The reason we got 56 per cent of the unionized vote in this country is that unionized people are tired of this kind of attitude coming from the NDP. They want leadership; they want a happy face; and they want an Ian Deans club!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—INTERNAL INVESTIGATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Solicitor General, who is absent today, will be joining the Brian Mulroney club and not the Ian Deans club, for his own good. In his absence, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice when the RCMP report into the Hatfield affair will be made public.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the report is not yet completed. When it is completed, the Minister will decide whether or not it should be made public.

ROLE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of this very unacceptable and long delay in dealing with important questions, which include the allegations of the Premier of New Brunswick against members of the RCMP, and considering that the Solicitor General himself is implicated in the Hatfield affair, does the Minister of Justice not think that it is about time for him to take charge of this investigation, make sure that there is a full investigation, and make sure that a report is indeed made to the Canadian people?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Government does not propose to interfere in the administration of the RCMP. They are well capable of looking after themselves with their integrity that has been recognized now for 100 years. It is time for the hon. gentleman to stop trying to make political capital out of other people's misfortunes.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I address it to him urgently. I returned from my riding with countless requests from the medical community in London and elsewhere expressing concern about Medical Research Council funding. With rapidly approaching deadlines for research projects in the medical field, I must ask the Minister when he will give the House his response to the Medical Research Council's request that its funding be restored to at least last year's level.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member. As he is aware, there is a five-year plan, and funding above the "A" base had not been provided for by the former administration. I was hoping to make an announcement in the House today, but it is an Opposition Day. I will be making an announcement later today indicating that not only will we restore the funding to last year's level but we will increase the level of funding to some $158 million, well above the "A" base and well above last year's level.

Oral Questions

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

COURT TESTS OF EQUALITY PROVISIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Tomorrow Canadian women will celebrate their achievement of equality under the Charter of Rights. As the Minister knows, the real fight now begins as cases are tested before the courts. Does the Minister agree with Judge Bertha Wilson who has said that, to be fair and effective, cases which are to test equality under the Charter must be selected independently of political bias and government intervention?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker—sorry, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I was thinking of Madam Justice Wilson who was a year behind me in law school but has now outpaced me in legal knowledge. The short answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is yes, but I know that there is a hook to come so let's get on with it.

FUNDING OF WOMEN'S CASES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): You got it, Mr. Minister, and here it is. As the Minister knows, Charter words are meaningless and women are really not interested in hearing words. What they want is access to legal services so they can actually achieve equality. Tomorrow, will the Minister of Justice, leading in the forefront with all the fanfare he wishes, celebrate equality by designating major funding for an independent endowment rather than a government Department, through a credible organization such as the Legal Action and Education Fund, so that women may fight equality cases under the Charter?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter that is currently under discussion in the Government, and particularly in the Department of the Secretary of State. As the Hon. Member knows, it is the Secretary of State who is the Minister of the Government in charge of matters relating to women. A decision will be made later. I will discuss it with the Hon. Member tomorrow when we attend the cocktail party that will be held in celebration of the April 17 equality day.

REFUGEES

EXPERTISE IN COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the decision not to reappoint Florence Bird. Yesterday, in answer to my question on Florence Bird, the Minister explained that she was looking for fields of expertise in new areas of refugee concerns. In view of the fact that the report of Rabbi Gunther Plaut will contain the important recommendations on which to make these new areas of policy known, and in view of the fact that the Minister herself claimed only a few days ago that she did not have knowledge of the contents of the report, can she now tell the House where she obtained the information leading her to believe that Mrs. Bird did not have this new area of expertise?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has had very little to do with the refugee community throughout this country or indeed, I gather, in any other country.

Mr. Crosbie: He is a refugee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to explain to him that the situation in the world, with the migration of peoples coming from countries where there has been increased instability, has caused a very different set of circumstances here in this country. People in the legal profession, people in community organizations, and people in religious organizations, have been concentrating on certain areas in recent years. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that there is a great deal of expertise to be tapped in this country, and I can assure him that that will be done.

QUALIFICATIONS INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Canadian public and all refugees will be glad to hear the remarks made by the Attorney General and Minister of Justice. Since Amnesty International, the Inter-Church Committee, and other refugee organizations have all supported the reappointment of Florence Bird to the Status Advisory Committee, and since Mrs. Bird has been involved in the evolution of refugee policy all along, could the Minister now tell us in which field of expertise Mrs. Bird is lacking?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there are many people in this country who have specific expertise to bring to this humanitarian cause. I would also assure him that it will be much easier for this Government to determine who those individuals are than it is for the Liberal Party to choose a national director of its Party.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CASE OF DISMISSED EMPLOYEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Recent press reports have suggested that the Canada Post Corporation has resisted an independent investigation of allegations which were made by Mr. Ad Varma. Are the reports accurate, and does the Government still have confidence in the Corporation's President, Mr. Michael Warren?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the fact that there was a difference of view between an employee and the Corporation some many months ago. I understand there are in excess of 60,000 employees in the Corporation and this was one who was seeking redress. Both the Corporation and the Minister—who performs so brilliantly, not only in running the Revenue Department, but in being responsible for the Corporation as well—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I have a supplementary.

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister has a supplementary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Both the President, and the Minister, in whom we have absolute confidence, have been dealing with this issue with a view to effecting the proper solution. We expect that will be the case, and we hope it is. There has been an allegation of injustice, and if that is the case we would want to correct it.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REOPENING OF FOREX COMPANY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion which concerns the reopening of Forex in the Abitibi region. Considering the fact that re-establishing this major industry, thus creating thousands of jobs, will depend on the participation of the Governments of Quebec and Canada in this project, is the Minister now prepared to grant the $2 million subsidy for production investment requested by Forex?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, as he probably knows, our Department is analysing a proposal which was put to us by Forex. It involves the joining together of five sawmills in the area. We are giving it not only immediate attention but, to the best of our ability, we are trying to facilitate the move which is being contemplated by the promoters of the deal.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Province of Quebec is apparently awaiting a decision from the federal Government, can the Minister assure the House that the decision will be positive and that the Government of Canada will play its role in terms of re-establishing an important regional industry, an industry in which working people will have a share, and an industry which will directly create 1,000 jobs in the Abitibi region, which is one of the worst economic and most devastated areas in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member must bear in mind that Quebec's information was received by Ottawa yesterday. As I have indicated, we are analysing the proposal and, in due course, we will give the decision. I do not think the Hon. Member would expect me to give a negative or positive decision today, one day after we received the facts.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it concerns the Japanese-Canadian redress issue. Unfortunately, talks between the Government and that community are at a standstill. As a result, the Japanese Canadian Association has petitioned, telephoned, written, and telexed the Prime Minister's office urging and asking for a meeting with him so that a mutually agreeable proposal can be obtained. Therefore I would ask the Prime Minister why he has consistently refused to meet with the leadership of the national association so that the solution can be obtained. What is he afraid of?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the Leader of the Opposition bursts into frenetic applause, let me place this in context.

On the final day that the former Liberal Prime Minister sat in this seat, I rose as Leader of the Opposition and I asked, on behalf of the Conservative Party and all Canadians, that redress be given to the Japanese-Canadian community. The Liberal Leader and Prime Minister said no, and all the Liberals cheered. That was a black day for the Liberal Party, and it was a black day for civil liberties in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: That's not true.

Mr. Mulroney: That is what happened. Since then, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism has made significant offers to the Japanese-Canadian community, and my door remains open to them at all times.

Mr. Allmand: Tell the truth.

Mr. Mulroney: I will tell the truth. It was so bad that you stood there and you applauded the former Prime Minister and the then—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Mulroney: You should be ashamed of yourselves.

REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Japanese community watching this Question Period would be just disgusted to see the partisan response of this Prime Minister. He is in power now and he has to do something about it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear! hear!

Mr. Marchi: The truth of the matter is that you are holding a gun to the community's head and saying: "If it's not my way, it is no way". They are not satisified with the response of your Government.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to assure the House and the Japanese community that he would have at least five minutes of his schedule to sit down with them so that a sense of understanding and dialogue can prevail, as he so often said during the campaign, before the campaign, and immediately after the campaign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely my point. The present Leader of the Opposition and the present Prime Minister stood together against the Liberal Party of the day last June when it refused justice and redress for Japanese-Canadian. Those are the facts. That is what the Japanese-Canadian community saw. They saw the Liberal Party saying no, and they saw the Conservative Party saying: "Yes, we want to be of assistance". They saw the Minister of State for Multiculturalism bringing in a serious proposal and saying: "We would like to sit down and possibly do more". What we do reject is the categoric rejection of decency in minority rights as espoused by the Liberal Prime Minister who sat in the House that day. It was a black day for liberalism and a black day for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NEGOTIATION OF SETTLEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I read what the right hon. gentleman said when he was Leader of the Opposition and sat right here on the last day of the last Parliament. He knows where I stand. He is now the Prime Minister of this country and he leads the Government. He promised a settlement with Japanese-Canadians on a basis acceptable to them. That has not happened. Those negotiations have been unilaterally imposed. What is he going to do about it now?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party, having said no to the Japanese community for 40 years, has the temerity to yell "now". Shame. Shame on all of you, except your Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the Liberal Party today was the only one who had the courage to stand up and disagree with that band of sheep at the time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Now it's a majority. You were opposed to redress for the Japanese—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. This House is not a place for Members to shout at each other across the aisle. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

PROPOSED RENTAL INCREASES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, this Party fought for Japanese-Canadians years ago.

My question is directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC. The Minister's Department has notified a number of tenants in a number of CMHC-controlled apartment dwellings, including the Main Square complex in Toronto, that his Department intends to increase rents by over 12 per cent a month in many buildings. Will the Minister assure the House that the Government and CMHC will not proceed with this rent gouging policy? Will they contain any increases in CMHC controlled buildings to within the 4 per cent limit which has been promised by the Ontario Government?

• (1500)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer specifically apartment by apartment, but I can assure the Hon. Member that if there are difficulties because of a rent increase by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, there are provisions for that and there will be an understanding if these rent increases cause personal hardship to those tenants. These rental increases are considered in an over-all period of recovering from the six and five program imposed by the previous administration which, in many cases, left the rents far, far below even the low end of market rent in a lot of CMHC held properties.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO ONTARIO RENT REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, many senior citizens in those building, because of the increase are going to lose the $50 increase in the GIS. I would ask the Minister one simple question. Would he agree to submit those rental increases to the Ontario Rent Review Board?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the rental increases which have been proposed by CMHC are those increases which are necessary to provide a return to the Canadian taxpayer from dwellings where—

Mr. Deans: Oh, come on!

Mr. McKnight: If there are any tenants in properties owned by CMHC who are under severe hardship, or any form of hardship, they have the right and the knowledge of application for either increased rental subsidies or rent geared to income components in apartments for which CMHC is responsible.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALLMAND—REMARK OF THE PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has a question of privilege.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in the House today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that all Liberals in the House in the last Parliament supported a position which was opposed to the settlement of the Japanese question.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Prime Minister, and this House that in the last Parliament there was a committee of this House, with a majority of Liberals, which put out a unanimous report recommending the settlement of that matter—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Allmand: —so a large number of Liberals in this House did not do what the Prime Minister said. He is completely wrong on that matter.

Mr. Gauthier: Bravo!

Mr. Speaker: Does any other Hon. Member have a question of privilege? There are no other questions of privilege.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 247 and 265.

[Text]

STORAGE SITES FOR HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

Question No. 247—Mr. Caccia:

1. What is the total number of storage sites in Canada that contain (a) lethal gasses (b) hazardous products?

2. What types of lethal gasses or hazardous products are stored and, what are their (a) quantities (b) exact locations?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment):

1 and 2. Control of manufacture, storage and use of lethal gasses and hazardous products is a provincial responsibility, and as such this question is subject to the provisions of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, Citation 357(dd).

UIC OVERPAYMENTS

Question No. 265—Mr. Heap:

1. How many persons in each province and in Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver received unemployment insurance payments and were subsequently ruled uninsurable by the Pension Appeal Board (TEG Int. Case 1982)?

2. What amount (a) was paid by UIC to persons in this category (b) has been recovered from persons in this category?

3. How many persons have paid back all or part of their overpayments?

4. How many persons have paid back money through retention or part or all of their (a) unemployment insurance (b) welfare payments they subsequently received?

5. How many persons have appealed their overpayments to the Board of Referees, Umpire and Tax Court of Canada and how many (a) won their case

(b) lost their case and, how many partial reductions of overpayments demanded of them have been allowed?

6. What amount was repaid to companies who were relieved from repaying unemployment insurance premiums by this decision?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Department of National Revenue as follows:

1. The overpayments which have been established as of February 15, 1985, are as follows:

Prince Edward Island	— 0
Newfoundland	— 0
Nova Scotia	— 3
New Brunswick	— 3
Quebec	— 7 (4 of which were in Montreal)
Ontario	— 348 (263 of which were in Toronto)
Manitoba	— 2
Saskatchewan	— 0
Alberta	— 14
British Columbia	— 5 (3 of which were in Vancouver)

2. (a) $1,850,069. (b) $42,899.

3. Fifty-eight.

4. (a) 25, (b) Nil.

5. (a)(i) 102 persons have appealed to the Board of Referees. Of these, 18 appellants have won their cases, 41 have lost, and 43 cases have not yet been heard. (ii) 30 persons have appealed to the Umpire, but none of these cases has been heard. (iii) 179 persons have appealed to the Tax Court of Canada. In the only appeal heard to date, the Tax Court of Canada found in the favour of the appellant. This decision is under appeal to the Federal Court of Canada but has not been heard to date.

(b) There are no partial reductions of overpayments in the appeal process.

6. $708,340.03.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—UNEMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Langdon:

That this House calls upon the Government to immediately bring in stimulative proposals to reduce unemployment by a minimum of 2.5 per cent within the next 12 months, given the failure of the Government to live up to its commitment to make job-creation its number one priority, and its pursuit, instead, of a policy of cut-backs which has led to a rise in unemployment in three of the last four months.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I promised Hon. Members of the House this morning that I would continue to expand on my opening remarks. In listening to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), who was the second speaker for the New Democratic Party this morning, I wondered if he could recognize a government program or policy which created a job because he stood and talked about the Western Accord which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) signed some two and a half weeks ago. I would just like to read some of the headlines in the newspapers in my riding which flow directly from that Accord. The Calgary Herald states, "Demand for Engineers on the Upswing. Cranes May Once Again Break Skyline". Another headline reads, "Large Scale Energy Projects Seen Possible". The last, and perhaps the most important headline, Mr. Speaker, reads, "Student Job Picture Brighter". That Mr. Speaker, is a piece of public policy which creates jobs.

I sat in this House and watched the Liberal Government with its majority ram down the throats of Canadians, without sufficient thought, a piece of public policy in the energy field which chased $18 billion of capital out of this country. That is 18 thousand million dollars which was chased out of Canada into the United States of America, Australia, the Arab States, Mexico, or somewhere else, along with the jobs. We, in essence, through a single piece of public policy, were in the business of exporting jobs. And when the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain stands in this Chamber, having been a part of all that experience, and fails to recognize that the complete abandonment of the National Energy Program is the greatest single piece of job-generating public policy that any Government has brought forward in this country in recent memory, then I simply feel sorry for his capacity to learn from experience.

The New Democratic Party convened a task force which went around the country hearing witnesses. The task force wrote a report and today we have an Opposition Day based on an NDP motion. In the report of the task force there is some good news and some bad news. If I could just start, in the interests of non-partisan debate, with the good news, I would suggest that in the 72 recommendations there are an awful lot which are copied from previous Progressive Conservative Party task force reports and the report of the parliamentary subcommittee on Employment Opportunities for the '80s. That is the good news. The even better news is that the new Government, in a brief period of six months, has acted on many of those recommendations and by the time the NDP laid the report on the table, those particular policies were under way and in many cases implemented. I draw attention particularly to the NDP recommendation that the Government of Canada make every effort to purchase from Canadian suppliers. That is being done. That was one of the first things the new Government set in train.

There is a recommendation that foreign firms with subsidiary branch plants in Canada be required, be asked, be encouraged, whatever, to put more investment into this country, to produce more goods within this country. And, Mr. Speaker, every step this Government has taken—not in one single way but in lots of ways—has been dedicated in part toward that end. The whole issue of Investment Canada which the Opposition has tried to filibuster is simply going in the direction of the recommendation. Underlying everything is the need for business confidence if we are going to get the economy turned around and get those jobs back. Certainly by its behaviours this Government has shown that it is going in that direction. That is the good news, Mr. Speaker, the extent to which the report copies from previous reports and already implemented strategy.

It almost makes me sad to have to stand in this Chamber, having read the report, knowing there were university academics involved in its preparation, because it will perhaps mislead some people. But I am even more disturbed by what appears to me to be some fatal flaws in logic. One of the key thoughts behind the report is that the federal deficit should be expanded for the purpose of creating jobs. They lay out some data and tell us that since 1975, when the Government moved to restraint, unemployment went from 6.9 per cent to 11 per cent. Therefore, they say, restraint is bad and a bigger deficit is good. But, Mr. Speaker, the federal deficit went up in that decade and is now 10 times larger than it was in 1975. How on earth could a university-trained person make the statement that the deficit increasing 10 times in 10 years is restraint? It defies logic. There has been no restraint in Canada. There has been no common sense in Canada. To conclude on the basis of the Canadian experience that restraint does not work is pure lunacy and would get you flunked in any basic economics course in the country.

When I was elected to this House some 17 cents out of every tax dollar went to pay interest on the public debt. That was six years ago. Today it is close to 36 cents. We used to have 83 cents out of every tax dollar to spend on programs, and now we have 64 cents. That is what the increase in the deficit has done. It means that the federal Government has to borrow 92 per cent of the projected savings of Canadians. That leaves 8 per cent for Canadians to buy a car, a home or a boat. That is why we have had to reach out to borrow money abroad, and when you do that you have to send interest payments out of the country. So following this whole period of economic insanity and excessive borrowing we have increasing unemployment. That is the reality.

The NDP talks about Canadians wanting government leadership in four main areas. It has met groups of people, talked to Canadians, listened to them, and it says we need leadership in four key areas. Job expansion is the top priority, and we agree. We agreed during the election and we agree today. We have to get a million and a half people back to work. Another of those four key areas was removing inequities in employment. We believe that is true and we commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) for moving so swiftly on the Abella report to do something concrete and positive which has been needed for a long time. We agree that Canadians see that as a key area and we are pleased to have made a start. The third area is that of tax reform, and here also we believe the NDP is right; Canadians want tax reform. We may disagree on the kind of reform or on some of the details, but Canadians want it, and let me tell the NDP that the Western Accord is a revision of Canadian tax policy with enormous job creation potential. We believe it is something the voters of this country wanted and are glad they got. We will see other examples of tax policy changes.

We now come to the fourth area, that of more direct government involvement in productive investment. But Canadians did not tell the NDP that that is what they wanted. If the NDP gerrymandered specific groups, they may have got that message, but that is the only way. Either that or the NDP invented this as the fourth key area to go along with the ideology with which it started. But that is not something that Canadians believe. Canadians have had very little experience with direct government investment that has been productive. By and large, their experience is that the least productive way to go about things is through direct government involvement. It leads in many, many cases to waste and inefficiency and there are temptations for patronage and all kinds of negative things. We believe—and I think any well conducted scientific poll would support the notion—that Canadians want Government out of the direct investment field. They want private sector investment. They want real long-term jobs. They want jobs with career potential, jobs which exist because there is a product or service that somebody wants to purchase. That is where efficiency comes from. That is where the long-term economic health of this nation comes from. That is is where progress comes from.

There is a committee of this House of Commons, the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, where we have laboured long and hard since the middle of January on our investigation of immigration. We have heard a lot of witnesses and produced the first and second reports. We are now writing the third report and beginning investigation today into another area, that of refugees. The second report said that, where immigration was concerned, we should have a population goal in mind. We believe that that goal should be an increase in the population and that immigration is an important factor in increasing Canada's population. Because of birth and death rates we will require increased immigration.

But we said that, in dealing with that increase, we should take a portion—right now about 2 per cent, perhaps in time that number will be 3 per cent or even 4 per cent—and go around the world to seek out entrepreneurs, people with cash, people with experience, people with a product who want to come to Canada with their families and create businesses and jobs for Canadians. This is a job-creation program through immigration. It would not disturb family reunification or refugees; in fact, there would be more of those. We said, let us take a part of that increase and create jobs for Canadians. We have a little bit of experience which suggests that the few people in that category we have let in have created 24,000 jobs already. They brought an average of $800,000 of equity capital apiece and created 24,000 jobs. If we can expand that and make it 10 times larger, that would be a quarter of a million jobs at a time when we have 1.5 million unemployed people.

The NDP and the Liberals went to a press conference and said that they do not want that job creation. That is the essence of what they said. They said they would rather play politics on the heads of Canadians than do something sane and sensible in terms of job creation in the country such as encouraging the people with business ideas and capital expenditures to create jobs and futures for Canadians. The NDP and the Liberals said publicly that that is a bad idea. If they want to say publicly that that is a bad idea, I simply suggest to them that they are beginning, if they have not already done so, to lose any credibility they may have had on the job-creation issue. That job-creation idea does not cost the taxpayers a dime. It could produce jobs for one-quarter of a million people. When they reverse their stand on that it may be worth-while to look at some of their other ideas.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of his speech before the break the Hon. Member referred to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) promise during the election campaign that they would create tens upon tens of thousands of jobs. The Hon. Member said that they had achieved that promise and created 100,000 jobs. Of course he did not say that they have also cancelled and lost hundreds of thousands of jobs. How else can it be explained that in August of 1984 the unemployment rate was 11.2 per cent and in March, nearly seven months after they took office, the rate is still 11.2 per cent? Of course some new jobs were created, but at the same time they cut a lot of jobs in the Public Service, the cultural agencies, the CBC, and the Department of the Environment. Surely when the Prime Minister made those promises during the election campaign he meant that there would be additional jobs created rather than a total loss in jobs. I think the Hon. Member should be honest and fair in talking about this. I would like him to explain this. Did the Prime Minister mean that while jobs would be created they would also cut out jobs? Why did he not say that during the election campaign? Why was he not frank with the Canadian people?

With regard to the immigration report that the committee produced a week or so ago, I must remind the Hon. Member that the entrepreneurial program was started by a Liberal Government. It was started by the Member right here when he was Minister. We are not opposed to the entrepreneurial program. We started it. We are opposed to the way in which the recommendation was made which gave priority to people in a certain category, people with money. We are opposed to that and to other parts of the report, but we are not opposed to the entrepreneurial program. That was our program.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member reads the report. He voted against it. It does not say anything about priority for people with money, not one single word. I challenge him to come to the House with the report and show me where it says that.

With regard to the other issue which the Hon. Member raised, there are adjusted and unadjusted figures which come out of the labour force survey. The only honest, decent comparison is year over year. We have just been through March of 1985. There were 10,864,000 Canadians employed in March of 1985 and 10,595,000 Canadians employed in March of 1984. This March there were 269,000 more people employed than last year in the same month. That is progress, Mr. Speaker. The month before it was 217,000. That is the record of the Government. Whatever crib sheet the Member is cribbing from was created somewhere in Alice in Wonderland. It does not relate to the true job situation in Canada.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the portions of the intervention of the Hon. Member across the way which had anything to do with the debate today. I was interested to hear him say that he supported, in essence, the New Democratic Party call in the document for tax reform. I wonder whether he is serious. Are the tax changes which accorded benefits to the oil companies typical of what he foresees as tax reforms intended to benefit the people who spoke to us?

He tells us that no Canadians anywhere in the land want increased direct government expenditure of any kind. It may be appropriate for him to address the report of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities which quite clearly indicates that not only does it want direct government investment, but that it is necessary job-creating investment. Does the Hon. Member oppose the direct government investment involved in renewing our forests, fisheries, energy and education? Has he been across the country and seen that the needs which his own Government should support, in part through direct government investment, are the very needs the people of the country want to see met and which will create jobs?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the issue of direct government involvement in productive investment is listed in the NDP report as one of the key areas. I do not quarrel with the reality that government funds will be better spent in the creation of a solid infrastructure. I do quarrel with the assertion in their document that Canadians would identify that as one of the four key areas. Starting with an ideological persuasion they used selective perception, drawing from two or three briefs, to arrive at that. It is not a conclusion that Canadians, chosen at random, would reach. That is not the mood of the country. The mood is to do the things which create permanent, long-term jobs in the private sector. That is a justifiable mood because we have gone too far in the other direction.

They asked me whether I was in favour of tax breaks for the oil industry. Mr. Speaker, I have always been in favour of stopping and correcting the highway robbery of a single industry based in a single geographic region of the country, especially when that highway robbery chased jobs out of the country. Yes, I am in favour of a fair, just taxation policy that encourages jobs rather than discouraging them. That is the type of tax reform policy the country needs.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just said that he knows what the mood of the country is. In relation to his elitist and narrow-minded immigration report, I ask how he got the mood of the country through that process when there were only seven witnesses from the Immigration Department. There was not a single witness from the immigrant aid societies, the ethnocultural groups, the unions, the economic community, or any Canadian who would be interested in the immigration policy of the country.

The Chairman and his band of right-wing Tories said in that report that no economic study was done, whether independently or by the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson), correlating the immigration targets and the employment and labour force goals of the Government. Despite that, they went on to say that they feel the country needs rich immigrants, which is also to overlook the fact that thousands upon thousands of immigrants of poor and average income came to the country and became successful businessmen. Thousands of those immigrants came to this country and took jobs that some Canadians did not want. Thousands of those immigrants came to this country and brought their skills and trades. All immigrants regardless of economic standing and status contribute to this economy by being consumers in this economy. They come here, they buy a home, they buy a car and so forth. While we as a Party support and encourage people with entrepreneurial spirit and capability to consider this country as their new homeland, we are suggesting that that is not the only way to prosperity and to build economic growth in Canada. Immigrants came here in the past. Immigrants can continue to come in the future and will add economically as well. Any immigration policy founded on the cornerstone of only rich immigrants is an insensitive, non-compassionate and regressive policy that is in keeping with this Government.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, over the last three years the Liberal Party of Canada choked off immigration and increased the proportion of rich people who came here under that policy. That is what the Hon. Member's Government did for the last three years.

Our Party is recommending an increase in immigration. Within that increase we want to create jobs. We believe we are on the right track. We have said not a single word about cutting off the kind of immigrants which the Hon. Member talks about. All of us in this country come from stock of that kind. Our relatives came here with nothing. They created this country and they created our standard of living. We believe that must continue. The Hon. Member belongs to a party that was choking that concept to death. We are opening it up again, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we have had several opportunities in this House over the last session to debate in various forms the issue of employment. I want to compliment the Members of the New Democratic Party for having brought this motion forward and for once again giving Parliamentarians a chance to address what all of our constituents would say is one of the most important, if not the most important issue, along with that of the nuclear arms question, that we were sent here to look at and examine.

I want to say that we compliment the New Democrats as well on their initiative in going across the country to find out about job creation. Like many other Members of Parliament, we thought it was about time the Government found out about job creation. We are very glad that the New Democrats took the opportunity to do so and to share some of those findings with us.

What is important about the timing of this debate is that it comes at a time some five weeks before, we hope, the federal budget, that long awaited panacea promised us by various Members of the Government opposite that is to provide all the answers to problems raised. Every time a question has been asked in this House about where the jobs are, we hear them say, "Wait until the budget comes". Everything up to now has been preliminary. What is disturbing about that is we are still seeing fundamental conflicts taking place in the Conservative Government over the best way to approach the question of economic growth and job creation.

I do not dispute the Government's interest about this, we must express a very deep concern about the Government's ability and competence in this regard, and its ability to find the proper answers. What we have seen evidenced so far is a continual contradiction of goals and purposes, means and ends. The Conservative Government has replaced any coherence or consistency with public relations, flackery and promises for the future. We have seen a consistent pattern of one Minister falling over another, of cancelling one program and replacing it with another without giving any sense of objective or direction as to where the Minister wants to take his or her department or this Government. That mistaken problem of developing any logical or effective economic strategy has once again been high-lighted by the remarks we have just heard from the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who really is a shimmering mass of contradiction sheathed in a growing sense of his own self-importance.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it does not add up to what this country is asking for. I think the New Democratic caucus in its examination, and individual Members of our caucus in their own constituencies, know what Canadians want. People wish this Government well. They did give them a mandate, there is no question about that. People now want this Government to perform. People want to see the results of that performance.

What I want to do in part this afternoon is express those concerns, speaking if I might just for my constituents, those to whom I have spoken during the Easter break. First, they want to know what this Government is trying to achieve. This Government has many Ministers. Let me choose one in particular, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), who has been a great advocate of the idea that the market will solve our problems. That chorus has been echoed time and time again by Conservative Members of Parliament who decry past efforts at public investment job creation and industrial programs that have been attempted to give small businesses in different regions a chance to develop their business prospects and opportunities. "No," they say, "those programs are all wrong. They do not work. We are going to rely upon the market to solve the problems."

What do we have, Mr. Speaker? We have Domtar, we have Petrosar, and we have White. We have the same kind of inconsistency which the Tories were talking about. Where is the market in those cases? I do not know. I guess what happened is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) called in the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, rapped his knuckles and said, "The real market is the political market in Quebec. It is not the economic market that we are concerned about according to our theory." We happen to think that maybe they made the right choice and we should be providing incentives for industry to establish.

But we have a Government preaching theology on the one hand and practising a very different religion on the other. It ends up in a mass of confusion. The Tories do not have an industrial policy. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion time and time again finds himself being contradicted by his boss, just as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) finds himself being contradicted. We need not go through the long history because Members of the House are well aware of the Minister of Finance saying, "We must first take a look at social programs", and the Prime Minister saying, "No, we can't". We remember the Minister of Finance saying, "We are going to provide restraints in these areas of Government programs", and the Prime Minister saying, "No, we can't".

What we have seen up to now is simply Ministers of the Crown bumping into each other, or trying to stay out of each other's way but not producing any clear formula, any clear program, any clear development that will give Canadians some sense of where they are going. That is the fundamental problem we face. We have a Government that came into power without knowing what to do. The Conservatives had their pet theories, but those theories have been abandoned and thrown on the scrap heap. Now they are going from day to day, week to week, changing their minds. changing their programs, and what they end up doing is relying upon previous and past Liberal programs, ones they were so critical about in the election and which they said did not work. But that is the only source of economic initiative which the Tories have been able to provide so far.

Let me give you another example, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) stands up in this House and lauds the new revolution in job creation, the great sort of Renaissance that we will have in new training activities, except first she cuts back substantially on the amount of money in the programs. With regard to the summer programs for youth, a group of people who rely substantially on federal assistance, with the exception of two provinces every province has had its allocation cut back over last year. When you look at the figures, you see that the young people of this country are being short-changed. No new jobs are being provided.

What about the great promise that the Tories are going to provide career related internships? I agree with that because when I saw a Minister I brought that program into being—three years ago. There is nothing new or revolutionary about it. The program has been given a new name. It has been given cosmetic treatment. It offers nothing new in the way of new job creation. The single new initiative by Conservatives for young people has been to cut back the actual expenditure of money for summer youth jobs. That is the only new initiative they have taken for young people. Now we see that the same kind of chicanery is taking place in the so-called Regina manifesto. Approximately $540 million was offered to provide for new training, or new skills development to prepare Canadians for future jobs. However, in the meantime they cancelled the programs which were in place and have not got around to replacing them.

One prime example which illustrates this in a very vivid way was brought to my attention when I met with representatives of the Outreach program in my constituency over the Easter holiday. Their primary job is to help older women to get back into the workforce. They provide employment counselling and job training to enable those who need to return to the workforce to acquire the skills they need to obtain jobs. They showed me a list of potential jobs which were available to those women. What was missing was training for those jobs.

I asked what had happened because at one time we had the skills growth fund and new training programs. They had been cancelled by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. For some reason or other she did not believe there should be assistance for older women to obtain basic upgrading in skills in order to get into technical training programs. They have been cancelled and nothing has been put in their place. Even though jobs may be available, these older women cannot fill them because this great new revolutionary Government which was to do everything for Canadians has not got around to plugging the holes or filling the vacuums. This vital area of providing training for women who want to get into the workforce is all up in the air. Nothing has been offered.

Is that the new kind of economic renewal about which we are talking? They are denying women skills in the workforce. Is this the new Renaissance which the Minister of Employment and Immigration has been promising? I checked further as to why the replacement has not taken place, and I was told that they were consulting again with the provinces, and with everyone else. Consultations have been going on for seven months. I asked when the new program would be ready, and I was told that it may be six or seven months from now. They may be ready to announce the replacements at that point, so we will have lost a full year of opportunity for Canadians to be trained. That does not make sense. That is not effective management; that is not competent Government. That is not providing leadership in the job-creation area. It was simply getting rid of programs because they were "Liberal" programs, but they do not have the wit or ability to manage quickly any replacements so that there will be a continuity of training in the country. I hope Conservative Members of Parliament will be listening to their constituents and taking soundings. That is the reality of what is taking place.

I should like to deal with the great economic conference, when all kinds of people were brought together for consultation. Those people made one mistake. They told the Ministers at the conference something they did not want to hear. They told them that their programs were not working and that the obsessive concentration on deficit reduction would in fact increase unemployment, not help it. The Minister of Finance refused to listen, he just said that they could not be right. Then they brought together 150 of the top corporate leaders, union leaders, educators and community leaders. When these leaders had the honesty to tell it as it was, they were dismissed. The reality is there.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West waxed eloquently about all the prospects. I should like to refer to a report of the Conference Board of Canada, a board which I think Hon. Members of the House agree represents no particular partisan interests. It compiled a report based upon the findings of 18 different private economic forecasters in Canada, everything from banks to university groups and all independent groups in between. What is their forecast for next year and the year after? The growth rate is expected to be 2.8 per cent, possibly closer to 2.2 per cent. This represents a substantial decline from the 4 per cent average growth rate over the past two years. All those policies which were ridiculed and criticized by the Prime Minister and others created a growth rate of 4 per cent over the past two years. The best efforts of this Government, with all the new confidence, motivation and consultation, will result in, according to the 18 best forecasters in Canada, 2.8 per cent at best, and 2.2 per cent at worst. Something is going wrong in the system somewhere.

With that kind of forecast in mind, one would think the Government would start to rethink its position and provide some different judgment on the application of its ideas and principles. We still have this obsessive adherence to a theology with nothing taking its place, no application or implementation of the program. We are now faced with a country in economic limbo, a country seized with uncertainty, a country without real economic leadership or direction. We are now heading to a point where there is a down curve on the economic horizon and there is no compass to provide some form of direction. This is why it is important in these debates to put forward the kinds of positions which are necessary and important to create economic growth.

Let me deal with the issue of the fiscal management of the country. I should like to give a word of warning to government Members opposite. As they move toward budget date, and the examination of how they will reduce the deficit, we plead with them to make a simple calculation—any reduction should be based upon jobs gained, not jobs lost. As the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) pointed out earlier today, the end result of the November statement of the Minister of Finance was not a net increase in employment, it was a net decrease in employment. That was the basic problem. We have continually asked the Minister of Finance to show us wrong or to disprove that basic equation. He had refused to do so because he knows we are right. He knows that in fact the end result has been a net reduction in employment, not a net creation of jobs.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West pulled out year over year figures, but he refused or somehow forgot to make the observation that there is also growth in the labour force in those year over year figures. Of course there are changes. There is natural population growth. People come out of school and go into the labour market. We add 200,000 or 300,000 per year to the labour market simply as a result of the number of young people leaving educational institutions. There is a real problem in relation to the basic equation which will be applied to any form of deficit reduction.

Let us take a look at the question of public investment, which I heard the Hon. Member for Calgary West decry, and all its influences. A report of the NDP caucus, based upon a report on which we and the Canadian Federation of Municipalities worked last year, pointed out that there should be a minimum of something like $12 billion of investment in public infrastructure.

● (1550)

The repair of roads, sewers, sewerways, the very basic lifeblood of the country, will need a major infusion of capital over the next five years. Otherwise the ability to gain productivity and to provide for the basic economic cycle to take place will be eliminated.

Mr. Orlikow: Helping the railways.

Mr. Axworthy: My colleague points out an interesting case. When the Conservatives were in opposition a year ago, along with the New Democrats, they opposed to the very end the Western Grain Transportation Act, which is now putting close to $1.5 billion a year of new capital investment into exactly what the NDP call for; public investment and new infrastructure. There would not be the investment in our railway system in western Canada, which is one of the few stimulants taking place, if we had not had the courage to bring that in over their opposition. That is the reason there is major capital investment going into that which the NDP is now recommending. But they are a year too late. I wish they had written that report a year ago and that their colleagues at that time could have listened to their good advice.

At the same time, let us talk about the Western Accord. The Hon. Member for Calgary West said it will result in a major change to the economy. When you read the report, the only one to gain will be Texaco, which has the lowest rate of capital investment of any oil company in Canada. The losers will be the very Canadian oil companies which have been investing large sums of capital in energy development over the last four years.

Let's regard this debate as an opening round of the Budget debate. Let's look at it was a warning signal for the Conservatives to try and get their act straight, to forget their theology and, more importantly, to try to put together some coherence in their economic policies so when we get to the Budget on May 20, we will at least know what they stand for and not simply what they stand against.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) aware that in the Toronto area the Challenge '85 program introduced by the Minister has led to a situation where private businesses offering career opportunities to young people this summer have over-subscribed the $9 million allotted to the Toronto area. There are so many career-oriented jobs offered by business that were not otherwise available that the employment created by that $9 million will be dramatically higher than the past year, simply because the Government is only paying half of the wage cost, and that is limited to $2.50 an hour. Is he aware that the Department, in co-operation with the Province of Ontario, using the Ontario stimulus fund of $1.25 an hour has created a great number more summer jobs this year than ever before in the past?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) that the original paternity of the seed program was the NEED program which I introduced when I was Minister of Employment and Immigration in 1983. We put $5 million of federal funds forward. With that we attracted an additional $650 million of private sector and provincial funds. The Conservative Government is following a very effective and useful program which was strated by the Liberal Government in 1983, a program which at that time was roundly criticized by the Member himself for not working as well as it should.

I do not object to the notion of using federal job-creation funds as an incentive for private sector and provincial and municipal funds, because that is what I did. That is the program we introduced. It was our Government that put forward the career internship which provided that kind of incentive. What I object to is the way in which the summer youth program has provided major cancellations and restraints upon a number of community organizations and groups that also have to rely upon summer grants.

You can go from constituency to constituency in this country and find that day care centres, women abuse centres, various forms of social, ethnic and immigration centres cannot get their summer money. I deny the fallacy that their jobs are somehow second rate compared to jobs at a McDonald's restaurant. We should be equally as sensitive about the jobs created for the volunteer sector, the community sector and the service sector. That also gives young people an understanding about the community in which they live. It gives young Canadians an opportunity to develop real skills that we will need in the future to help disadvantaged Canadians, and there will be a lot more disadvantaged Canadians the longer this Government stays in power.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry ought to know that the Challenge '85 program does not provide assistance to McDonald's for serving hamburgers. You might get that kind of assistance from the Province of Ontario job-creation program, but this is a career-oriented program. All sorts of proposals have been turned down because they do not supply enough career instruction and assistance. Even at that, the program is over-subscribed. Surely the Member should stand in his place today and congratulate the Minister for a well-thought-out summer program. As he said, perhaps it follows some of his own thinking.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be the first to say that the highest form of flattery is to copy what one has done before. If the Minister is simply copying what the previous Minister of Employment introduced, it shows that at least she is showing good sense in one area of her administration.

I want to provide some correction before the Hon. Member for Mississauga South gets carried away. Every summer program is over-subscribed. Every summer program had three or four times the applications that could be funded. It is nothing new. The fact is that there is always an awful lot more demand than there is supply, which I regret as much as he does. I want to know why the supply of money was cut back this year as opposed to being increased, as it naturally should have been.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) referred in his speech to the debate we had when his Government brought forward the legislation to change the Crow rate. He indicated quite correctly that Members of the New Democratic Party had opposed that Bill. At that time, because we opposed it vigorously and kept it from being passed quickly, we were attacked by the Hon. Member, saying that we were holding up the Bill and preventing hundreds of thousands of jobs from being created. I want to ask the Hon. Member what has happened to those thousands of jobs. The Hon. Member knows that in our city, a city which we both represent, as in many other cities, both the CNR and CPR, instead of hiring hundreds or thousands of new workers, have in fact been laying off workers. What happened to those predictions made by the Member who was then Minister? Also, how does the Minister explain that many of the farm organizations are now having very serious reservations about the supposed good effects that were to come from the passage of that Bill?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to answer that question, if I may, because the Hon. Member and I share constituencies in the same area of Winnipeg. First, I would point out to him that in the past year some 45 new companies made application for assistance to develop new products related to the Western Grain Transportation program. Within our city, there will either be expansion of existing companies or new companies coming to the city strictly to provide new products and services to the railway expansion program. That creates a wide variety of jobs in the private sector. It is being duplicated in western cities and towns right across the three prairie provinces and British Columbia.

● (1600)

The Hon. Member asked about the layoffs. I too am concerned about the layoffs. Let me explain to the Hon. Member the reasons for the layoffs. The CNR announced 170 layoffs in the Transcona shops because both the federal Conservative Government and the provincial New Democratic Government are not living up to an agreement that we signed a year ago for the construction and rehabilitation of new boxcars in the Transcona shops to provide for running-stock to the Churchill area. They have dragged their feet, slowed the program down and have not required CN to produce those 1,000 boxcars. There is simply a lack of will and commitment on the part of both the federal Conservatives and the provincial NDPs to make that program come into effect and to provide work for the people in the Transcona shops. It would seem to me that the Hon. Member and his colleagues from Winnipeg would do much better if they were to talk to the provincial Minister of Transport who was a signatory to that agreement and ask him why he is backing away from that agreement and therefore causing those layoffs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): A very short supplementary.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Manitoba Government is operating with as large a deficit as it possibly can, something for which it is being criticized very severely by the provincial Conservative opposition. However, this is happening not only in Winnipeg. There have been layoffs all across both systems. We were told so many times by the Minister and his colleagues that the passage of that Bill would mean new business, not just for grain but for coal, sulphur and potash that would be shipped cheaper and more efficiently. We were told there would be a tremendous increase in business. The fact is that business is down and there are layoffs, and not just temporary layoffs. Both the CPR and the CNR have made it very clear to their workers and the unions that they foresee very substantial permanent reductions in staff in the next few years. That is what concerns me, and I wonder what the former Minister has to say about that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The period for questions and comments is now over. We shall resume debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate on a motion presented by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). That motion states:

> That this House calls upon the Government to immediately bring in stimulative proposals to reduce unemployment by a minimum of 2½ percent within the next 12 months, given the failure of the Government to live up to its commitment to make job creation its number-one priority, and its pursuit, instead, of a policy of cutbacks which has led to a rise in unemployment in three of the last four months.

If we think a national rate of unemployment of 11.2 per cent is rough and tough on Canadians, then let us think about single-industry towns. In single-industry towns, the unemployment rate is much more stifling than 11.2 per cent. There are in excess of 811 single-industry towns across the country.

Earlier I heard the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) talking about the NDP task force. He indicated that when the NDP task force went across the country, perhaps it heard only from people who leaned further to the left than the right. That suggestion was contained in his comments.

I come from a single-industry community. It has been mining from its very inception. We started with forestry, and then after we killed all the forests we set up the mines. Then we smelted close to the ground and the sulphur fumes killed off whatever trees had escaped the woodcutters' saws.

Let me put on record a letter signed by the Chairman of the Regional Municipality of Sudbury. By no stretch of the imagination is he a democratic socialist.

Mr. Orlikow: Probably a Conservative.

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, I would not want to give the Chairman a bad name. Certainly his letter is very poignant and concise. I think it puts this debate in some perspective. The letter is addressed to the Hon. Frank Miller. He writes:

> Dear Mr. Premier:
> As you are aware, the Regional Municipality of Sudbury continues to suffer the after-effects of the recent recession through a high rate of unemployment, a situation exacerbated by ongoing staff reductions by Inco Limited Falconbridge Limited.
> While economic stabilization has been occurring in many other communities across the Province, such is not the case in the Regional Municipality of Sudbury and other Northern communities which depend heavily on a natural resources base. Over the past three years, Sudbury Region has been developing an economic diversification strategy which, in the long-term, we are confident will lead to recovery and eventual new growth.
> It is in the short-term that we are experiencing our greatest difficulty. The impact of the recession is manifesting itself in a very serious and rapidly expanding welfare caseload. This not only threatens to severely stifle our economic recovery efforts, but also to substantially increase the Ontario Government's share of the cost of carrying the social welfare burden in our community.
>
> At the peak of the recession, the Region's welfare caseload reached 3,400, which was an all-time high. With the assistance of the CO-ED job-creation programs, we were able to reduce that caseload to 2,300. Had those short-term job creation programs not been available, our caseload could easily have reached upwards of 4,000. As a result of these dramatic reductions in our welfare caseload, a gross saving of $6.5 million was realized of which the Region's share was $1.3 million.

Because the Region's two major employers, Inco Limited and Falconbridge, provided us with their five-year staff reduction programs, we have been able to forecast the impact on our welfare caseload. Repeatedly, over the past two years, we have been warning your responsible Ministers and their senior staffs of the need to accommodate anticipated welfare caseload increases. Our caseload forecasts are rapidly becoming reality because already we have reached a high level of 3,300 cases, including several hundred young people. In addition, the Region has provided a 1985 budget allocation to accommodate only 2,400 cases during the summer months. It is apparent that the shortfall between available municipal funding and the cost of providing for as many as 900 more cases will produce compounded economic consequences for this community if other alternatives are not available.

We have been informed by both the Federal Government and the Provincial Government that job creation funding will be directed at the private sector. In this community, we cannot understand how this is going to take care of our immediate short-term problem because it is virtually impossible for the private sector in our already depressed economy to create sufficient jobs to pick up the shortfall. Our private sector, exclusive of Inco Limited and Falconbridge Limited which are large multinational corporations, is considerably smaller than in other municipalities of comparable size, and many of these firms produce for and hence depend upon the mining industry.

I think that is relevant, because in single-industry communities there is no private sector. The Government of the day across the way seems to be directing all of its economic energies and incentive programs to the private sector. As I have pointed out, in over 811 single-industry communities there is no extensive private sector. So instead of reducing the unemployment rate it will be exacerbated, as pointed out in the letter written by Mr. Tom Davies, Chairman of the Regional Municipality of Sudbury.

What is it that we can do in the short term to create jobs? I can think of the situation in my own riding. The week before the Easter break, I raised in the House the question of refining resources. It seems absolutely ridiculous that in 1985 resources mined in this country are shipped abroad to be refined outside the borders of Canada. Yet, that is the situation with Falconbridge Nickel Mines. It ships the nickel matte from the Sudbury Basin to Norway, and it has been doing that for the last 40-odd years. It has been shipped to Norway to be refined. However, the International Nickel Company of Canada is not allowed to ship its nickel matte to be refined somewhere else because there is a law in the Province of Ontario.

• (1610)

The Province of Ontario's Mining Act states that resources which are mined in Ontario must be refined in Canada. We would have preferred it to have read "Ontario", but that is fine, it must be refined in Canada. But, Section 104 of the same Act states that it does not apply to Falconbridge Nickel Mines. It seems to me that "a Tory is a Tory is a Tory", and it is a Tory Government which has been running the Province of Ontario for the last 44 years. The Tories wrote the Mining Act.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, you can applaud, but that kind of leeway which has been given to Falconbridge indicates who really calls the shots in Tory circles. It is not the people who matter most, it is the rich people who matter most, and preferably the corporations. In fact, we have been after the provincial Tory Government of Ontario to have Falconbridge refine the nickel in the Sudbury Basin.

In the last two years the hourly workforce has been reduced from 2,800 to some 1,700 or 1,800. There were 900 jobs which disappeared. Now comes the dénouement. Falconbridge now has an opportunity to buy nickel in Botswana because the AMEX Corporation is pulling out of nickel operations there. So, Falconbridge wants to get a larger share of the world market for nickel and moves into the Botswana market. Falconbridge is taking the Botswana nickel matte and shipping it to Norway to be refined. As a result of that, Falconbridge has to expand the refining capacity in Norway to the tune of $41.5 million Canadian.

It would seem only fair, if this Government is concerned about jobs and the principle that resources should be refined were they are mined, that as a self-respecting Government it should stand by that principle. The Government should tell Falconbridge to build a refinery in the Sudbury Basin to refine Canadian nickel, and to send the scrap to the Falconbridge operation to be smelted. We are not only sending out the matte to be refined in Norway, but we are importing the scrap into Sudbury from which nickel is extracted. That does not create jobs.

The private sector, which the Government worships and bows down to, is not in the business of creating jobs. The private sector is not a manpower centre and is not interested in whether Canadians work. The private sector is interested in what it can get out of the country. The cheaper it can extract to maximize its profits, the more it will do it. We should tell Falconbridge that it cannot do that. The $41.5 million would be a good down payment on a new refinery.

The other day the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton), who thought Sudbury was a basement, said that he did not know to what I was referring when I asked him a question. He said that he would check with Falconbridge. He did check and sent me a letter. In his letter he said that he checked with Falconbridge and that a new refinery would cost in excess of $200 million and, therefore, the company could not afford to build a new refinery in the Sudbury Basin. However, on April 4, Mr. Peter McBride, who is a spokesman for Falconbridge, said that it would cost at least $125 million to build a Canadian refinery. Well, I would suggest that $41.5 million would be a good down payment on a new refinery. Indeed, I would suggest that both the provincial and federal Governments ought to take equity in the remainder of the $125 million and build a refinery. If that was done, those Governments would have been honest to the principle that resources should be refined where they are mined.

At the rate at which mines are closing today, the Minister of State for Mines will soon be the "Minister without mines".

Mr. McCurdy: The mineless Minister.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. The Hon. Member said "the mineless Minister". He will lose his car and his chauffeur. We would not want to do that to the Minister.

The Minister said that he understood the plight of Falconbridge. He said that the Government does not want to create a regulatory environment which would lead corporations to be unproductive. Well, we in the Sudbury Basin are not asking the Government to create a regulatory environment. We simply want the Government to say to its Tory friends in Ontario: "Remove Section 104 of the Ontario Mining Act and let Falconbridge be subject to the laws of the province and the country".

Not only was I a member of the NDP jobs task force, I also toured with my colleagues in northwestern Ontario. We visited communities which were single-industry towns. If one were to look at this on a time span basis, we visited communities which represented the past, the present and the future. We went to Atikokan and saw what happened in the past. We saw our past practices and our past inabilities in dealing with the whole question of single-industry towns, in diversification and job creation. We saw a town in which the mine had run out of ore. The people living in the community in the past had been completely dependent on the mines. Some problems were evident. The fact that the cost of maintaining the services in the municipality fell on fewer shoulders and a more narrow assessment base resulted in home owners having to pay a fantastic cost in order to maintain the infrastructure, let alone putting in new infrastructure. As we went from town to town, that issue arose again and again. We saw a need for a municipal fund from which municipalities could draw, not only to refurbish infrastructure, but to provide improved services to the communities. In my own riding there are still communities where the people cannot drink the water from the well because it is contaminated. People have to drive miles to bring back jars of good water.

We went to other communities. The Griffith mine in Ear Falls is closing after advertising during the previous two years in an effort to attract workers. They put a large advertisement in the newspaper which says in part, "The Griffith mine is a part of this growth, lending a stable economic base to the Red Lake-Ear Falls area with a future that will extend into the 21st century". But last fall it was announced that the Griffith mine is closing and over 700 workers are going to be without work. Just the week before the company convinced several workers to buy the company homes in which they were living and lock themselves into a mortgage.

We recommended that there should be a diversification fund for single industry towns because the local communities are aware of their own needs. Local communities want to have some say in and some control over their economic destiny. In fact, the provision of a diversification fund would allow them that flexibility, control and ability to grow and develop and create jobs.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) —Immigration Committee report (a) Entrepreneurship advocacy (b) Consideration of report; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) (a) Request for moratorium on transportation ofdangerous substances (b) Debate on legislation; the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley)—Canadian Wheat Board—Price of winter wheat.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—UNEMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Landgon:

That this House calls upon the Government to immediately bring in stimulative proposals to reduce unemployment by a minimum of 2½ per cent within the next 12 months, given the failure of the Government to live up to its commitment to make job creation its number one priority, and its pursuit, instead, of a policy of cutbacks which has led to a rise in unemployment in three of the last four months.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the Opposition certainly reflects their good intentions in emphasizing the need for creating jobs in Canada. However, we intend to make it clear to the House that our hon. friends in the Opposition have completely lost touch with reality.

Mr. Speaker, in our Agenda for Economic Renewal tabled last November, we set forth the strategy to be followed in three key areas namely, first of all, limiting and ultimately reversing the massive build-up in public debt; second, redefining the role of government so that it provides a better framework for growth and job creation and less of an obstacle to change and innovation; and third, adopting policies that foster greater innovation, increased international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and growth of new enterprise. Without this kind of strategy, Canada as it is today will not be able to sustain durable economic growth that will create jobs.

I shall, if I may, review each of these points. The rising deficit and our cumulative debt are a serious threat to economic growth and renewal. It is not so much a matter of ideology as simply recognizing the very serious problem caused by the disastrous effect of compound interest on the national debt. Gaining absolute control over the deficit is not an end in itself, but it is the only way we can achieve our objective to create jobs and sustainable growth. That is why this Government announced last November that putting its fiscal house in order would be the first item on its agenda for economic renewal. It is also why we have quickly taken steps to control public spending effectively and efficiently.

We believe that if we are to control the deficit, our priority must be to reduce Government spending, which implies more efficient management of Government programs. Improving efficiency of management practices in our public administration is essential, but this alone will not resolve the problems created by the deficit. We will have to examine existing programs and carefully scrutinize Government spending, but nevertheless, total expenditures are so high compared with Government revenues, that even if every possible measure is taken to reduce spending, the deficit and cumulative debt may continue to be a problem. Although necessary to ensure economic growth, controlling the deficit alone is not enough. That is why we said last November that two other elements were equally important if we were to achieve our goal of creating jobs and sustainable growth.

The second requirement is to redefine the role of Government so that it becomes less of an obstacle to growth. An intricate web of regulations, subsidies and other forms of intervention has built up over the years. What seemed to be straightforward protective measures at the time have now become, in many cases, an economic straight-jacket. This network of Government intervention has created a major obstacle to growth—more diffuse, less easy to measure and quantify but every bit as real as our present financial problems.

We are trying gradually to remove these obstacles in order to be able to establish a framework of policies that will promote the creation of jobs and economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, the Members of the Opposition would like us to act quickly and do the exact opposite of what we are doing now. Our answer is simple. We have been quick to intervene in a number of areas. In other areas, however, we have not yet done so because it is very important to attain a better understanding of available options and to establish a better basis for co-operation, so that when we do make our decisions, they will produce the best possible results.

To this end, the Government has developed a very specific program, and we are ready and determined to act: first of all, to promote healthy competitiveness by adopting updated competition legislation; to relieve small businesses of their unproductive administrative paper burden; to simplify regulations for transport, communications, and financial services. In this connection, I might remind the House that yesterday, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) released in Montreal a discussion paper that is intended to pave the way for the first major revisions in decades to the regulations governing financial institutions; to update our copyright and patent legislation; to simplify our tax system; to streamline our system for providing grants to industry; to remove obstacles to investment; to free the oil and gas industry from the restrictions of extreme regulation and taxation; and to reform many other areas of public policy.

We are resolved to deal with these issues and with many others, but without undue haste, so as to be sure to succeed on our first try, something some members of the Opposition do not seem to understand, Mr. Speaker.

We must do a lot more than just redefining the role of government and removing obstacles to growth. We must act to foster a positive climate for investment, innovation, and increased international competitiveness. That is the third aspect of our strategy for economic renewal.

Allow me to explain where we are focussing our efforts. Suppose we consider investment. If we want to promote sustained economic growth, we must encourage investment in new production areas that will create jobs. The energy sector has a major role to play in economic renewal, and growth in this industry will resume if we go back to a pricing system determined by market conditions, if we go back to more realistic and sounder tax incentives and if we remove the burden of regulations. We feel that a strong and expanding energy sector is essential to our national economy, not only to ensure security of our oil supplies and not just because the energy sector represents 30 per cent of total private investment, but also because it constitutes a major customer for businesses, both large and small, in all regions of this country.

• (1630)

Let us consider external trade. Guaranteed access to foreign markets is another essential element of any realistic economic recovery strategy. A number of reasons justify such a statement, the most obvious being the fact that millions of Canadian men and women are now employed in industries ranging from forestry to car manufacturing, and that they would not be working if there were no foreign markets. In turn, those jobs create others so that Canadians can respond to the needs of our exporters.

In other words, external trade creates jobs, and losing access to foreign markets means fewer jobs. It is as simple as that.

But that is not the only factor to consider. Guaranteed market access is a must if we want to compete on the international scene, as it is for creating economies of scale and competitive specializations, and for the kind of industrial adjustments that will enable us to boost our exports while at the same time coping more easily with competitive imports here in Canada. A major factor to consider before deciding to build a plant is whether or not foreign markets are readily available.

It is a decisive factor in attracting job-creating foreign investments and making sure that our national companies can expand from their Canadian base.

New technology also offers opportunities to produce new goods and services and create jobs, but above all it will protect many other jobs in existing industries through higher productivity. New technology ought to be considered as a powerful tool which will help us improve our competitiveness on international markets.

What we mean is this: it is important to develop high technology, and even more so to use that technology in traditional industries such as textiles and clothing, forestry and mining, car manufacturing, and particularly the steel industry.

That is why we put so much emphasis on research and development, just as we do on the adoption, use and expansion of the best technology available. We believe that to be crucial if we are to remain competitive and raise our standard of living.

If we want to make the best of technology, we must train and recycle young and middle-aged Canadian men and women and teach them how to use those new tools. We must also be resigned to the fact that technological advance will force some Canadian workers to keep up with this evolution. It is a fact we cannot ignore, or else we might stand to lose even more existing jobs. The workers themselves have a major role to play in coping with this evolution. We must make sure that, besides providing support income for those whose needs are temporary, our programs are consistent with the training and mobility of workers facing a bleak outlook. The answer is to give them opportunities to develop new skills and encourage workers to take a chance by seeking employment in other fields or moving to other regions.

To clear up all possible misunderstanding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that it is important not only to create jobs that provide Canadian men and women with the major means to get their share of the wealth within the Canadian society, but it is equally important to create the wealth which Canadian men and women can share through a whole range of services, including a social security system, the purpose of which is to help those who need them and cannot provide for themselves.

These are areas which are given very high priority by our government, Mr. Speaker. We have been working on them ever since last September, but there are no miracle cures to our economic woes, no short cuts toward creating jobs and wealth. Canadians are aware that if prosperity were the result of spending and indebtedness, it would have been ours a long time ago. But such is not the case, and we will have to work still harder and more intelligently to achieve our growth potential, a healthy and lasting growth which will help us create new jobs for all Canadian men and women who are anxious to work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions. Comments. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the somewhat intellectual discourse of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) whom I have often seen walking along corridors while reading impressive-looking documents. After what we have just heard, I must say that students of 16 or 17 would certainly have appreciated those remarks. But what Canadians now need most is not exalted theories, stately syntheses and lofty philosophical principles, but concrete things like jobs, jobs and more jobs. I can appreciate how easy it must be to blame the former administration for everything under the sun, but the fact is that September 4 was eight months ago, and I ask the following question: What have you actually done to create jobs?

Mr. Lanthier: This answer calls for—

Mr. Boudria: It will not take long to answer that!

Mr. Lanthier: Unfortunately the question calls for an answer that might be somewhat theoretical. One might give a quick answer with figures—

An Hon. Member: You are talking about the jobs you have made Canadians lose during twenty years.

Mr. Lanthier: That was not the purpose of my response. On behalf of my Department, I accept the question which requires detailed information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): A supplementary question. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: If I cannot get an answer, I could perhaps deal with another aspect of the question. I agree that Canada's financial situation is rather precarious. However, how do you explain, in the light of what you have just said, that your Government has decided to invest in the neighbourhood of $50 million to change the uniforms of the Armed Forces and to increase in defence budget by some $600 million and that it recently accepted to send an additional 1,000 troops to Europe while, here in Canada, in my constituency and yours, there is such a desperate need for money to create jobs—

Mr. Blais: Domtar!

Mr. Tardif: Exactly.

Mr. Lanthier: I also accept that question and I shall reply eventually.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose some questions with reference to the deficit. The Hon. Member has spoken in customary Conservative tones with respect to this issue, as befits a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. However, I want to ask if he would be prepared to concede that, just as we would have predicted, by trying to focus on the deficit, making it a preoccupation, we have in fact seen an increase in the deficit in this country since this Government has taken power. Secondly, would he be prepared to confirm, given the intellectual approach that was suggested, that there are of course other ways to control deficits besides reducing expenditures? For example, by increasing taxes and acting on the suggestions of our task force report, that it be no longer possible for companies to deduct the interest expense involved in taking over other companies, something the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself talked about at the National Economic Conference. Does he not agree that it would be a good idea for companies that have large amounts of deferred taxation to pay interest on it? Does he not agree that these too would contribute to concern about the deficit and permit the extra expenditures which would give us the jobs we need in the country? Finally, would the Member not agree that if we decreased interest rates by two to three percentage points that too would have a significant impact on the deficit in the country?

• (1640)

We have had varied estimates. One economist at the University of British Columbia suggested that there would be a saving of $1 billion in the deficit for each decrease of a single point in the interest rate. I myself think that is probably an over-estimate because bonds will be due in different years. At the very least, bringing interest rates down two to three percentages points would save $600 million to $900 million. That is the estimate within our report. Surely the Member would agree that all of this would give us much greater capacity to be making the essential expenditures to provide encouragement to private investment that would increase jobs in the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: The same applies. I shall accept the question on behalf of my Department, but I want to point out something immediately. All the qualifications which were suggested by the Hon. Member in saying that I would probably accept such or such a question are to be accepted neither by myself nor by my Department. We shall eventually provide an adequate answer to his question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. Early in his speech, he told us that the policy of his Government was to reduce public expenditures in order to create jobs. I am wondering whether he could be more specific and explain how eliminating jobs in the public sector can create jobs. Indeed, in my constituency and in the National Capital Region, in the area which I represent, if someone loses his job, this does not create any employment. The same is probably true elsewhere in the country. However, my constituents still wonder how the process of eliminating their jobs can create other jobs. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can develop this point and explain to my constituents how they can expect to find more jobs when they are being laid off?

Mr. Lanthier: I do not want to be looked upon again as a theoretician, but I think that it is rather simplistic to establish a relationship between cutting expenses or eliminating a job while not understanding that cutting expenses may mean that another job is created elsewhere. There are jobs that are more meaningful than those in the public service. However, once again, I accept this question and we shall provide a reply eventually.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today on the motion presented by our New Democratic Party colleagues. First, I would like to talk about the unemployment situation in my riding. I had hoped that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) would hear what we are saying today, so that acting on behalf of his Minister, he could create some jobs in my riding. But he is no longer with us—and I am not saying he is away from the House because that would be out of order—but let us say that I would have liked to have seen him here.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, the riding or rather part of the riding I represent, namely Prescott, which most of the Members of this House living in the East have had occasion to cross in travelling to their ridings—Prescott has 1,686 unemployed. That is a very high unemployment rate, and it has been for some time, increasing all the while. I can assure the House that the people in my riding who saw the results on election day remembered this Government's promises and expected the Government to create new jobs. They are still waiting, Mr. Speaker. This Government was elected eight months ago, and there has not been a single new job in my riding. In fact, there are fewer jobs now than there were on election day last year.

[English]

Before the Government was elected it made several promises to the Canadian people. I have referred to them before on occasion in the House. We have put together a document called "338 Tory Promises". I will read a few of them regarding employment, particularly unemployment amongst our youth.

During the election campaign the Government told us how it would streamline government programs and make them efficient. The most innnovative thing they could do last winter was to use some of the Canada Works Programs of the previous Government, which they had chastised before. That is not very innovative. If the programs were not good enough while they were in Opposition, one would wonder why they are all of a sudden good enough when they are in Government. Although they had only been in power for about three months, they had claimed for a few years that they were ready to take over. However, they could not organize a better winter works program. They simply used the program which was in place before, always claiming that it was no good to start with.

With regard to young people, Mr. Speaker, you will remember that the Government said it would scrap the Liberal program for youth summer employment because they felt it was not adequate and they would have a better one. Months passed, Mr. Speaker. Many people phoned their Members of Parliament asking about the youth program Challenge '85. The forms for that program were distributed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). A little kit was sent to all Members of Parliament. The first thing I did when I got that kit was phone the Minister's office to ask for 150 application forms to give to businesses in my riding. After all, the least we could do was try to make this program work, notwithstanding the fact that it was started too late and was poorly organized.

The Minister's office said that they could not give me forms. I asked why and was told that they did not have them but that they would be at the Canada Employment centres. I argued that. I came into the House and talked to the Minister personally. Lo and behold, when I went back to my office a couple of hours later there were all kinds of forms. There was a stack of them about an inch thick, or 2.54 centimetres if you wish.

I brought those forms to my constituency office and my constituents used them and sent them to the Government. The Government then said they were the wrong forms. Do you believe this? The Minister sent them to my office and they were the wrong forms. A couple of weeks later we got new forms from the Minister. The program was supposed to end at the end of March and it was March 20 when we got the forms. There were only a few days left for all employers to apply. If the Government did not intentionally try to sabotage this program, it certainly did a very good accidental job of achieving that result.

It is now mid-April. Today businesses from my riding were contacting me asking whether I had any news about the Challenge '85 applications which they had submitted. There is nothing I can tell them. Our young people are finishing school now. Other programs are starting. They do not know whether they will be accepted by this program. They do not know whether the youth will be going to work elsewhere. They are not sure what to do. They are waiting and we cannot get any answers.

This is not the fault of the people at the various Canada Employment centres. They did their best to make this thing work. It was so poorly designed and started so late that it was almost impossible for it to work. I cannot help but wonder how the staff working for the department managed to do anything at all. It must be very difficult for them, and I know they are working very hard, but it is impossible.

What the Government has failed to recognize is that it should have kept the previous program that was in place, made it work. When the Government was ready for a change and it had designed a new program it should have introduced it then. I recognize that the Government has the right to do what it did, it is the Government after all, but you do not cancel something and then think later of maybe doing something else. First you find alternatives and then you change. You do not do the reverse. That logic is something you would understand, Mr. Speaker, but obviously not this Conservative Government. That kind of logic has escaped this Government.

Let us review some of the promises the Government has made to young people in this 338-promise document to which I referred a while ago, Mr. Speaker. This Government made lots of promises to our youth. It was trying to get young people to knock on doors and canvass. This Government promised everything to the youth. Under youth employment, it said, "encourage young people to remain in school, ensure training components in all job creation programs, provide incentives to encourage private sector training programs, the utilization of UIC benefits for training purposes, and encourage local training councils." These councils would identify training needs and co-ordinate training programs, establish a refundable employer tax credit for employers to hire and train young people for specific periods of time.

There are 12 promises here for our young people. As far as I can see, none of them have been adopted by this Government and it is now eight months after the election. This Government has yet to fulfil one promise to our young people. It must be very disheartening. I see one Member saying to me, "Yes, we did". I do not know, perhaps this Government has appointed a person on another board that I have not heard about and that constitutes a job creation program to which the Hon. Member is referring. But this is not good enough for the rest of the young people who are waiting for a real meaningful effort on the part of their Government.

This Government when elected claimed it was ready to take over, ready to run the country. I see some Conservative Members in this House, the ones sitting at the edges on this side, what we refer to as the "book-ends" or the "surfers". Surfers means they were elected with the tide and they will go out with the tide in three years' time. The book-ends in this House are nodding in agreement that this Government was ready to take over. Why is it that this is the longest period of time after an election in the history of this country without a budget? Is that synonymous with good government, Mr. Speaker, a Government that cannot even present its financial package to the House of Commons eight months after coming into office? Not only that, but we will have to wait another month before we get the budget.

There happens to be in the intervening month an Ontario election. Some of us say that it is a mere coincidence that an Ontario election is looming. The Tories in Ontario are not doing so well. Their popularity is going down daily. That popularity will go down a lot more before the election, and we will have the election of the next Liberal provincial government. The popularity of the Provincial Tories is going down. They know they have a noose down around their necks in the person of the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson.) He will impose on the people of Canada major taxation increases and present a disastrous budget immediately after the Ontario provincial election. Then, Mr. Speaker, you can understand why it was that the Premier of Ontario paid a visit to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and that this visit had two purposes. One was to object that he had not been consulted on the western oil deal, and second, to ensure that under no circumstances would we see a federal budget before that election. As bad as the Tories are doing now provincially, they would have done worse later because of the disastrous budget we have coming. I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, being the non-partisan person that you are, would understand this, although your colleagues obviously do not.

Hon. Members will remember that on November 8, 1984, the Minister of Finance introduced his program known as the Expenditure Review. This Expenditure Review program, commonly known as the "Black Thursday Program", was a program of cut-backs. Many of these cut-backs were in the area of employment. Hon. Members will recall that a little earlier I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) how does one create employment by cutting jobs. He took notice of the question. He did not answer it.

Let me review some of the employment creation initiatives that were cut-back by the same people who said they were going to create jobs. The Employment Assistance Entitlement Program had a $200 million cut back. Let us see what this program did. The Unemployment Insurance Act provided for the establishment of an employment services program and this program was cut back. This service is now gone. The unemployment insurance payments have been cut back by $5.8 million; the mobility program was cut by $2.8 million. Let me speak briefly about mobility grants.

I have a constituent who is in Alberta at the present time. He left two or three years ago and went to work out there, but now he does not have a job. He has a job offer here in the City of Ottawa which he could take immediately. Because these mobility grants have been curtailed severely, he cannot take up this job in Ottawa. The unemployment insurance people told him that once he has exhausted his unemployment insurance benefits then they would pay him to move. If you can understand the logic of this, Mr. Speaker, I am glad. Under these new rules my constituent will have to be on unemployment for about eight months drawing money out of the federal treasury before we give him money to come back here to a job he could have today if we were to allow him to come back. If that logic escapes you, Mr. Speaker, you are not the only one. It escapes me as well, and it escapes my constituent. Seemingly that makes sense to the Minister of Finance. Perhaps to no one else, but to him it does. To make someone draw eight months more of unemployment insurance benefit before paying the mobility grant that he could be given today, seeing that he has a job promised is the policy of this Government toward creating employment, and I do not understand it. It is small wonder that this program is not working.

On November 8, the Minister of Finance introduced that program of cut-backs to which I referred earlier and which I described as the "Black Thursday Program". I see that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) is here. He will recall this document that was given to Cabinet Ministers which contains the answers they were supposed to give to journalists when interviewed about the cut-backs. There were questions on the census but they have become redundant now because the census has been reinstated, as we know. I applaud the Minister for that. I know he wanted it all along. He was only trying to twist the arm of the Minister of Finance. Obviously he managed to swing it, and I am glad he did.

● (1700)

However, I should like to read some of the questions and answers on employment. The following was a tentative question which someone in the press was supposed to ask the Minister:

Why is employment pension income considered as earned income when eligibility for unemployment insurance is determined?

The Minister was supposed to answer as follows:

Changes in the UI program, which will result in pension income arising from employment being deducted from UI benefits, will eliminate double payments and reinforce the concept that UI is an income replacement scheme.

That is the only reason many people in the country, including military personnel and others, contributed to unemployment insurance. Otherwise they would have no possibility of collecting it. Obviously what we should do now is refund their premiums from the beginning in that we have made them join a program from which they could not benefit.

Another tentative question reads:

What is the object of the changes in the Employment Assistance and Entitlement Program?

The Minister is supposed to answer as follows:

A strengthened interview program for all claimants on regular benefits will better determine their needs for employment services.

Now I know from where the Minister of Employment picked up this line when she referred to it in the House. The Minister of Finance had given it to her in a briefing book. She was supposed to say it to the public. That is ridiculous. The answer given by the Minister got her no place.

In conclusion, our Party is very much dissatisfied with the efforts of this Government in creating employment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we think this Government should get down to business and meet the commitments it made during the last election campaign. If they made those commitments at the time, they should have made sure they would be able to meet them. Of course today, every Canadian knows that Conservative promises are never kept.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. First of all, I do not think my hon. friend was very resourceful. If he failed to find any forms for Challenge '85 projects, I think he must have been going about it the wrong way, because—

Mr. Boudria: I got them, but they were not the right ones.

Mr. Hudon: Oh, so you were able to judge whether they were or not.

Something else. There is something I fail to understand in the Hon. Member's comments on unemployment insurance. He says that some people who have paid premiums all their lives will never have a chance to get unemployment insurance benefits. I have a question for my hon. friend. If you have been paying for fire insurance on your home all your life, are you going to set your house on fire because you did not have a chance to collect the insurance? That kind of argument does not hold water. Unemployment insurance was introduced to provide funds for people who are looking for work. Today, there are people, and this probably includes me, and I say probably who hope they never have to apply for unemployment insurance benefits. In any case, the year before I retire, I am not going to say: I had better become unemployed so that I can get back the money I invested. Unemployment insurance is not an investment, it is insurance to tide you over a bad situation.

An Hon. Member: People have become used to thinking like that.

Mr. Hudon: There are cases, and this happens with the complicity of certain companies or heads of businesses, where there are programs under which people are entitled not only to unemployment insurance benefits but also to their salary and benefits. Unemployment insurance was not meant to be used that way, and here we have people complaining loudly that it is a shame that some people will never get back any unemployment insurance benefits in return for the money they invested. I do not understand that kind of logic. I wish my hon. friend would explain, because I do not see it. Maybe it is because like the Hon. Member, I do not understand forms.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I should be delighted to provide some explanations for the Hon. Member opposite, and slowly, if he prefers, to be sure he understands. First of all, when I referred to forms . . .I said earlier that the forms I got from the Minister herself were not the right forms. This means that the Minister of Employment and Immigration issued forms that were incorrect. They had to be withdrawn and new forms issued in Ontario. This is just to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister herself did not know which form was the correct one.

Now, about unemployment insurance benefits: I agree with the Hon. Member opposite that when we pay an insurance premium, we do not expect to get a return on that investment. An insurance is an insurance. Yet, Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do that a number of years ago, several categories of people did not contribute to the Unemployment Insurance Plan because they were not likely ever to collect benefits. A case in point is the Armed Forces personnel. An unemployed soldier is a rather rare commodity. The only benefits to which they were entitled were those they could collect the very last year before they retired at age 64 or 65. Those were the only benefits they could collect. When they were allowed to join the scheme, it was done with the understanding that they would benefit one way or another. If I said to the hon. member opposite who mentioned his fire insurance that no matter how much insurance he paid for, he would not get a cent if his house was destroyed by a fire, he would certainly try to buy insurance protection elsewhere. For those people who joined the unemployment insurance scheme and who are now deprived of these last benefits, they will not get anything. Therefore, they were misled when they were allowed to join a scheme out of which they are not getting anything. And it was the Federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who, following his assesment of the government's programs and expenditures and his decision to make cutbacks everywhere, has excluded these people.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add, in connection with what I was saying about the forms which are difficult to obtain in Ontario that there is in the House now a member of the Progressive Conservative Party whose staff had to call my office to borrow mine, my forms, for he was unable to obtain them from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). And if you asked me to mention his name, I would certainly do so.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member confirm that in the 32nd Parliament it took the Liberal Government eight months and 18 days to present a Budget, that that Government presented a financial statement on April 21, 1980 and got around to presenting a Budget on October 30 of the same year? Does he think that the attitude of this Government in presenting a financial statement on November 8 and proposing to present a Budget on May 21 was any different than the activity of the Liberal Government in the 32nd Parliament?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I guess all of Canada has now found out the date of the Budget. I am quite pleased to hear this. Now of course all Canadians are aware that the Budget date, according to the Hon. Member across the way, is now

May 21. I am glad to hear that announcement. Perhaps people in the press and elsewhere have now finally found out from the Government exactly when it intends to present its Budget. It is about time it did something.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House, authored by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), suggests that unemployment should be lowered by 2.5 per cent and that the Government should commit itself to that goal. It is natural, given the content of the resolution, that reference should be made to the recently released report of the New Democratic Party task force on jobs. One might have hoped that the discussion would have been a constructive and informed one.

• (1710)

One was inevitably disappointed to discover that as usual the debate turned, not upon the content of the resolution, the content of the report or the exercise that resulted in its production. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) stood before us and told us that the report of the New Democratic Party job action group was constructive, interesting, had some good suggestions, and then proceeded to criticize it, not on the basis of its content, but on press report after press report. It soon became clear that that was the only source of information to which she could refer.

That should not have been particularly surprising. The Minister of Employment and Immigration knew almost as much about her Challenge '85 student summer employment program as she did about the task force report. She insists on reiterating what she said when the program was announced. She said it will be based on wage subsidized career-oriented jobs which will prepare students for the work world.

The fact is that although she claims there are larger numbers of applications than there were previously, the criteria that would have produced the kinds of jobs that she was going to achieve were not being applied. The fact is that no applications involving fewer than four student employees is being subjected to any test of whether or not the jobs are career oriented. That is fine.

In the sense that jobs are created, and the Minister reverted to a few standards, indeed reverted to standards which are less rigorous than Summer Canada, her claim that more jobs are being created may in fact be correct. Many of us who would have expected her to achieve the goals she indicated thought she would have attempted to ensure that there was some measure of career orientation, that permanent jobs were not being lost, that the career content of those jobs would be supervised to ensure their achievement during the period of employment. We were also concerned about the fact that in contrast to Summer Canada of last year, there is no affirmative action portion, in spite of Government commitments to the contrary, which would have assured reasonable participation by natives, women, visible minorities and ethnic groups.

We heard the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who was similarly well informed about the document, insisting that the document surely had to be the result of going from city to city across this country, some 24 of them, and speaking only to supporters of the New Democratic Party. It was kind of exciting news, at least to this Member, to discover that the Canadian Automobile Parts Manufacturers, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, association of small businesses, and women's organizations all across this country support not the Liberals or the Conservatives, but the New Democratic Party. Similarly, small woodlot owners, industry associations, forest industry associations are all suddenly New Democratic Party supporters. Of course that is nonsense. There was no discrimination in the selection of those who appeared before us.

There was one thing that came out of the whole exercise loud and clear. It was that the priority of this House should be the creation of jobs. Some Members opposite will remember when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that "we are going to see tens of thousands of jobs being created just as quickly as the new Government is sworn in". He has encountered some impediments. We decided to take him at his word, his word having been that he, in spite of his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and others on that side of the House, was interested in job creation. If one refers to some of the statements made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, he will see that the Prime Minister said that we are going to get local communities and small business more involved in job creation. This is going to be accomplished by a program of community self-help which will be launched through the establishment of the Canada Opportunity Development Board. But it should be noted that he did not say exactly what this board would do. There are 70 recommendations in this report which specify what such kinds of community economic development boards might do and how they might be encouraged by the Government.

We should pause for just a moment to consider some of the other criticisms which we have heard from across the way. We have heard that the New Democratic Party proposes that all of the solutions to employment must be achieved by direct government investments, the implication being the take-over of industry and everything else. I would suggest that Members opposite look at the report. They will find that there is very little relationship to that stereotype. What we have attempted to do is to present to the Government some suggestions by which it might approach the goal that the Prime Minister indicated he was attempting to achieve.

The issue of job creation has been laid aside by and large in an effort to combat the deficit, as if knocking down or cutting the deficit were not only an economic imperative but a moral imperative. It is kind of interesting to hear the rhetoric of the deficit cutters. I suppose that many of them have not noticed that this kind of commitment, which has been cited as having been made in British Columbia, has failed. Indeed, it has increased the amount of unemployment, cut the number of jobs and placed a number of businesses in serious difficulty. On the contrary, in Manitoba, where the converse approach was taken, jobs were created.

If one looks at various western nations which have attempted to solve their economic problems by using the cutting of the deficit as a target, he will see that they too have failed. On the contrary, one should look at the very interesting Canadian experience during World War II where the deficit achieved levels amounting to 21 per cent of Gross National Expenditures and averaged some 17 per cent of the GNE for a three-year period, yet the rate of unemployment was cut from 11.2 per cent to about 1 per cent and the deficit was wiped out in about three years.

Members may consider that this is irrelevant, that it is a question of expenditures for wartime. However, it is interesting to note that those who preach supply side economics are completely unconscious of the fact that products will not be bought by unemployed consumers. In the United States, where supply side economics and deficit cutting has been preached, indeed preached from the pulpit, deficits have accumulated on the basis of military expenditures, and this has indeed resulted in jobs and economic growth. Canadians across this land fear that our new dependency on the United States will hook us to the philosophy sometimes articulated in this Chamber that we can create jobs by increased military expenditures, by becoming starry-eyed about star wars.

There is one thing we have found across this country that should be clearly enunciated here. In spite of the high rates of unemployment and a deep sense of concern about the future of families, young people and people of all ages, Canadians have become convinced, and we heard this from one ocean to the other, that this country has the resources. It has the human talent to determine its own economic future and to create jobs without turning beyond our borders for help. Just as we do not want to look to Washington or New York for the solutions to our problems in respect to economic growth and job creation, so too do the regions reject the notion that the solution to our ecnomic difficulties and job-creation problems is to be found in the centralized bureaucracy not only of government but of the exploitative profit making of large corporations.

There is nowhere in this report where the New Democratic Party proposes to reject the involvement of large corporations and businesses in job creation. However, it does insist that whether they be a domestic or foreign company, they be obliged to fulfil the needs of Canadians with respect to job creation, increased exports, increased research and development and all of those things which are necessary for the creation of jobs in this country.

To return to the statement by the Prime Minister indicating that he looked to creating community development agencies, I wish Members opposite would read the report because there are constructive suggestions contained therein, the common thread of which is shared by people all across the country. We do have the resources. We are tired of having those resources exploited by others for the benefit of others while we in our regions and communities suffer job losses. We know that the forests, the fisheries, the agricultural sector and any of our natural resources have the potential through secondary manufacturing to create jobs, the kinds of jobs we in the local regions understand best. Those sectors can give us the wherewithal by which to do it.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration stood before us supposedly discussing this document and said that they are going to do all kinds of new things with respect to training, retraining, preparing young people for jobs and preparing older people for the necessity of adapting to new jobs. That is fine. However, it is insufficient in the magnitude in which she has proposed it because it only addresses part of the report. There is not much sense in training or retraining people if the jobs are not there.

There now exists considerable literature on how municipal Governments in co-operation with other sectors of the community can engage in analyses of the advantages and disadvantages of the resources, both human and otherwise, that are available, and to engage in long-term planning so that priorities can be established which will allow the growth of co-operatives, small businesses and means by which jobs can be produced based upon the resources possessed by the local communities. When we talk of a government expenditure of $850 million for community development incentives, we are not talking about spreading money around, we are talking at least in part about providing communities not only with the means of financing by with tax changes which will encourage local investment and will provide the kind of expert help that is often needed in order for communities to engage in these activities.

The Federation of Canadian Municipalities recognizes the merit of this approach. I would advise Members opposite to read the report of the New Democratic Party and to read the recommendations of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. If they did so, they would realize that with a very small increase in the deficit, jobs can be created with increased emphasis on local initiatives and less dependency on megaprojects.

We have been told that Members of the New Democratic Party have suddenly realized the problems associated with deficits. I do not know where in the world this attitude arose, but I will say that if the recommendations of our report were followed, the amount of deficit that would be accumulated would be no greater than the tax forgivenesses obtained by the oil companies as a result of the Western Accord, and there would be the production of far more jobs.

I hope that over the coming weeks members of the government Party and of the Official Opposition will engage in a very carefully reading of our document. I am not going to suggest for a moment that it provides the final answer to all of the questions that are being posed by the Canadian people, but, by God, the least Hon. Members can do is look at alternative answers rather than engaging in an ideological and partisan debate that has no reference to the recommendations made, or to the needs of the Canadian people. If they do that, then we will all have at least shared in the opportunity promised by the Prime Minister for all of us, and for all Canadian people to be consulted in an effort to achieve not a cut deficit as a goal but jobs as not only a goal but as a moral imperative.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would take this occasion to very briefly announce the proposed business and arrangements for tomorrow. In terms of the business, it is my intention to call Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Aeronautics Act, a Bill which is at second reading debate stage. This will be followed by Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, a Bill which is at the report stage.

There may be a disposition to deal with item No. 17 under the heading of Government Business on the Order Paper, the CN pension reference. If my discussions with members of the New Democratic Party in particular are concluded satisfactorily tomorrow morning, I would be inclined to call that item as the first item of business tomorrow. There will be a limit number of speakers on that particular matter.

As well, we have agreement between all Parties to have statements made tomorrow when the House convenes at 2 p.m. regarding the Charter of Rights equality provisions. The understanding is that there will be one speaker per Party taking approximately five-minutes. There was an agreement, therefore, that we would move back Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21 as well as Question Period to allow by unanimous consent those statements to be made at the top of the afternoon. If you were to seek unanimous consent for these proposals, Mr. Speaker, I think you would find that they would meet with the satisfaction of all Members.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we have indeed been consulted and would be agreeable with regard to the statement proposed by the Hon. Government House Leader provided, of course, that the Question Period which will be pushed back will last a full 45 minutes. With regard to the other items of business, we have to go along with the wishes of the Government.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, just to be clear, statements will be made at 2 p.m., followed by the normal 15 minutes of Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21, followed by the Question Period. After we have completed the CN pension reference, Bill C-36 and Bill C-18, what does the Hon. President of the Privy Council propose to do; that is, after four o'clock?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my consultations have led me to believe that we would be prepared to move on to third reading of Bill C-18, but I am not sure there is a disposition to do so. However, I am prepared to consider that if there is time available. I would be happy to carry on and to conclude that debate.

I should say that on Thursday it is my intention to bring forward Bill C-39, a Bill relating to equalization. That item will certainly be brought forward, depending upon the progress we make on tomorrow's legislation. I intend to bring that item forward for debate on Thursday in any event.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my understanding that the Hon. President of the Privy Council does not have that in writing. The House has heard the suggestion. Is there unanimous consent to proceed on this matter tomorrow?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Agreed and so ordered.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 62—UNEMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Langdon:

That this House calls upon the Government to immediately bring in stimulative proposals to reduce unemployment by a minimum of 2.5 per cent within the next 12 months, given the failure of the Government to live up to its commitment to make job creation its number one priority, and its pursuit, instead, of a policy of cut-backs which has led to a rise in unemployment in three of the last four months.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). In this Party we believe in investment coming into Canada. We believe that foreign investment is one of the means by which to create jobs. I have seen how the Canadian investment which has been flowing out of this country since 1976 has created thousands of jobs in the United States. Canadian investors have developed in Texas, Florida, California, Kentucky and other states because there was not a healthy investment climate in Canada. However, they do not invest there, build a plant and then close it down and go away, as has been suggested by some Members. That is why we support investment from foreign countries coming into Canada to create jobs.

In the 1960s the provincial Government in Manitoba held a large economic and investment conference in Winnipeg. It was attended by U.S. and European investors. The policy of encouraging foreign investment has been adopted by the current NDP Government of Manitoba. It is holding investment seminars in the United States to encourage investment. The NDP Government of Manitoba has a policy to encourage foreign investment. American investors are going to Manitoba to invest. That will create jobs. It is a policy which has been adopted from previous Conservative Governments in Manitoba. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, as the federal NDP is opposed to foreign investment, does he support what the NDP Government of Manitoba is doing, which is encouraging foreign investment in that province to create jobs, or does he have a separate policy from that of the NDP Government in Manitoba?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member seems not to have paid any attention to what I said. Let me reiterate. Canadian people are saying that the future of this country can not be predicated on foreign investment. That is not to say that foreign investment should not be had. Canadians are saying that they want control over the economic destiny of this country. If there is to be foreign investment then it should be conditional, as it is in Manitoba, on the creation of jobs for Canadians.

The fact of the matter is that experts in the United States have pointed out in the strongest terms that there is an improbability of large investment in Canada for anything but basic resources, not secondary manufacturing. That will mean a deficit in jobs. If there is to be foreign investment in Canada then it should be conditional on meeting the needs of Canadians, whether the needs be jobs, ensuring that research that research and development is performed or that exports are encouraged elsewhere. I cannot understand why the Hon. Member would reject those factors as reasonable requirements for foreign investors.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, at no time have we ever suggested that we wanted investment to come into Canada which would not create jobs and do something worthwhile. I do not know if the Hon. Member is trying to imply that the Government is saying that money is to come in, that it will not go to any place and do nothing. Naturally, foreign investors will come forward with a proposal. The purpose of encouraging foreign investment is to create jobs, not just to encourage money to come into Canada. I do not know what the Hon. Member is trying to suggest. We will ensure that it will do something worthwhile for Canada. That is the purpose of it. He is trying to intimate that we are not interested in Canada or Canadian jobs. Most certainly we are. By the sound of it, he has been reading from out investment paper, because what he said is exactly what we have proposed and what we would do if foreign investment came into this country. We would ensure that it would stay here and create jobs.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, that was an extraordinary exercise but an extremely confused response. I do not know whether Hon. Members have noticed, but Investment Canada imposes no requirements on foreign investment. No one suggested that in some vague sense the Government is not interested in creating jobs. The real issue is; Does it know how to create jobs? That is the question.

I am not in this House to tell the Hon. Member about the opinion of this Party or my opinion. I have described the view of Canadians. They want to control the destiny of the country. They do not want someone else doing it. In particular, they do not want the Canadian economy to be tied to star wars or the priorities of the Americans.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, the latest Gallup poll would indicate that we have the support of the Canadian people. Our Party has just risen three points in the Gallup poll. So, if what the Hon. Member is saying is correct, I am sure we would hear something about it. I am not hearing those kinds of protests from my constituents or others. They have complete faith in us. They realize when we are talking about foreign investment that we want to create jobs.

As to the Hon. Member's comments regarding star wars, it is not to bring nuclear weapons into this country. We are talking about research, not developing nuclear weapons. In no way have we ever said that we would support any star wars concept which would develop nuclear weapons. However, we are in the space age today. There is no use burying your head in the sand. We had better get involved in space development in Canada, as will other countries. There is nothing wrong with that as long as it has nothing to do with developing bombs.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I believe it was Bacon who asserted that politicians had some greater responsibility at times than to reflect popular opinion, and that it was necessary for politicians, who represent the leadership of the country, to engage in a little thought. It is certainly not to engage in thought to refer to the polls as the response to an idea. Surely the Member must understand—and I do not think it is beyond his comprehension to understand—that engaging in research in star wars is unacceptable to many people of this country. It is unacceptable as a means of job creation. There are too many needs in this country that, if met, would create jobs. It is not necessary to resort to defence spending as a means of job creation for that purpose.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to make a short comment in response to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). The last time he came back from South Africa he tried to speak the truth and explain to us that Canada could learn lessons from that nation. I am not surprised that he does not have an understanding of where the world is really at. If I could be allowed to deviate for a second, a couple of years ago the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine came back from South Africa—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) knows full well that that has nothing to do and is not related to the subject-matter which the House is discussing today.

Mr. Murphy: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I had every plan in the world to leave it, but one Member on the government side did not appear to understand the record of the Hon. Member on human rights.

• (1740)

The Hon. Member who spoke before on behalf of the New Democratic Party was a member of city council in Windsor. He has had a lot of experience in that area. One of the main suggestions of the New Democratic Party job action task force on jobs was the creation of jobs for Canadians by having certain projects such as waterworks, sewers and other infrastructures done by municipalities. If the Hon. Member could spend a few moments explaining that to us, I think it would be of value to the House.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, there is not the slightest question in this world that municipalities all across this country have needs in infrastructure which have to be met. These involve roads, sewers, water supplies, waterworks, every manner of infrastructure. Reconstruction is required to a cost of around $12 billion. A tremendous number of jobs will be created, so this is a reasonable investment. It is an investment just as valuable as star wars.

Mr. McKenzie: Now we know why you are at 17 in the polls.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now ended. We will resume debate.

[Translation]

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon).

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the motion which is before the House now and which I must try to deal with is nothing more than a piece of rhetoric on the part of the New Democratic Party, which calls upon the Government to bring in immediately stimulative proposals to reduce unemployment by 2½ per cent within the next 12 months, and blames the Government for not living up to its commitment to make job creation its number one priority.

On the other hand, we know that this motion is intended as the end result, the crowning piece of the famous report which a group of members of that party brought forth following their visit through various parts of the country in an effort to get support for their ideas, judging from media reports both during and after their tour. With what result? I do not intend to play politics with that, Mr. Speaker. I will merely quote from what was reported in the papers. For instance, here is a Canadian Press article signed by Eric Courchesne which stated that their report was merely an extension of the NDP platform, and I quote:

[English]

"its recommendations are in large part an expansion of earlier NDP proposals".

[Translation]

Anthony Westell, a Toronto Star columnist, has written that the NDP task force, "having started as a lion in January to solve the unemployment problem, has given birth to a mouse in April". In addition, Carol Goar of The Toronto Star has recorded a diversion in NDP philosophy, as others have, when she wrote on April 11 that "the New Democrats, after promoting for at least two decades a vigorous centralizing strategy" have been getting throughout the country "a signal telling them that interventions must obtain at the local and municipal levels".

By the way, Mr. Speaker, this is what this Government has promoted and accomplished through a policy which I will discuss later on and which is based on a more practical cooperation with other levels of government and the private sector.

On the evening the NDP report was published, we heard similar comments on television. For instance, Robert Duffy said that the report contained—

[English]

"pretty traditional ideas. It sounded like the conservative ideas about the deficit".

[Translation]

Indeed, many analysts have pointed out that the New Democrats were no longer in favour of an unrestrained deficit, and as noted in The Toronto Star:

[English]

"backed away from the traditional NDP position that much bigger government deficits are needed to curb unemployment".

[Translation]

In other words, they agree to a deficit, but not necessarily to an overly large deficit.

Then again columnist Don McGillivy has written that:

[English]

"the action group's report is fairly confused and confusing on what should be done to create jobs".

• (1750)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that report was published on April 10, and it carried so much interest that it was a mere five days later, on April 15, that the Journal de Montréal paid any attention to it in an article entitled:

The NDP proposes the creation of 300,000 jobs.

Yes, five days later. In addition, on April 15, the newspaper Le Devoir also had an article on this important report which said, and I quote:

—announced last week.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, that new report was readily recognized as being old hat and its authors acknowledged that a centralizing policy of unrestrained expenditures with no thought being given to the deficit was no longer saleable. On the other hand, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration said during the debate this morning, the New Democrats must still be congratulated on having admitted that their policies could go no further, or at least not as far as they had suggested until then, in other words on having recognized the effectiveness of this Government's initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the strategy of this Government, which I shall now discuss, is not the perfect solution for, in a world where every country is faced with unemployment problems, if there were any magic solution, it would already have been found and implemented. However, there are alternate options, and it is in support of these options that the Canadian people expressed their views last September, and it is also what has guided the policy of this Government since then, both in the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance on November 8 and in the many consultations undertaken by a great number of Ministers, such as the Minister of Employment and Immigration, before the new strategy was announced at the Federal-Provincial Conference in Regina and the National Economic Conference held here in Ottawa a few weeks ago.

One of the Government's objectives has been to launch a national dialogue and restore—especially in the private sector, which is the driving force of our economy—a climate of confidence designed to promote the establishment of new industries and the expansion or reorientation of many others already in operation. This has been the purpose of the initiatives I have just referred to, and of the new orientations with which I am more familiar in my current responsibilities as Parliamentary Secretary, namely job creation and manpower training, whereas more emphasis has been laid on practical training, practical jobs, and closer coordination between the provincial and federal Governments and the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, the employment outlook is already much brighter, a fact which was confirmed a few days ago in Montreal when I attended the seminar of an association of college and university employment whose role, as Hon. Members know, is to make it easier for university and college graduates to join the labour market. I was told that this year more graduates will be able to land jobs in their own field of specialization and that chances are better that those jobs will turn out to be permanent.

Employers have regained confidence in the future of our national economy, and so have workers who are rejoining the labour market in ever increasing numbers. The over-all employment statistics reflect that encouraging trend, but the main point is that such a change in attitude can only contribute to make the situation even better.

With respect to manpower training and job creation, the Government has made a special effort to simplify programs, a sector which has been highlighted by the new labour market development strategy, while much duplication has been eliminated, with the result that we are getting better co-operation from the provinces, including Quebec, as everybody knows.

New formulas have also been designed so that the programs will be more readily accessible to all Canadians, including some people who need special assistance such as, for example, the handicapped, native people, and others who are often called quitters or drop-outs. I would be remiss if I failed to mention in passing that the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a few weeks ago an employment equality program which was unanimously greeted as a historic step in the evolution of the status of women in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the new labour market development strategy is clearly geared to future manpower requirements in Canada, yet it does take into consideration the current technological revolution which is changing our lives at an ever accelerating rate.

In addition, instead of being designed for the short term—if that were so, as was the practice until now, the workers would not be getting anywhere—most of our programs will henceforth be extended over many years so as to ensure better coordination and greater practical efficiency.

The Challenge '85 Program for the benefit of young people this summer was given a more practical approach particularly to provide them with jobs along the line of the careers they have chosen. We also know that the private sector will play a greater role in it and recent figures provided this morning by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on results attained so far indicate that the program is understood—that there are people who do not even understand the formulas is beyond me—supported and, despite the concerns expressed in some circles, will succeed far beyond initial expectations. Again, the co-operation not only with private enterprise but with the provinces and municipalities has been beneficial. The young are more confident and I repeat that I was able to see that for myself when I recently attended the convention of the University and College Placement Association held in Montreal on March 28 last.

If time allows, Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate on what six main bases lies the new labour market development strategy that the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced at the recent federal-provincial conference in Regina. The first allotment of $80 million was earmarked for manpower training. The second allotment of $350 million for employment development is designed to help people who have been without work for a long time and need retraining to land a job.

In that respect, the Minister of Employment and Immigration pointed out last March 19 that these new programs will have to meet the needs of the regions, be flexible, and call for community participation. The Government and the private sector must share responsibilities. On March 19, the Minister also stressed the fact that small business must play a leading role. Mr. Speaker, there is the third allotment of $125 million for vocational integration. Those are programs for youths who are school drop-outs and unable to find employment, as well as for a great number of women who want to join the labour force for the first time.

These programs are aimed at specific groups and have been set up with the co-operation of the provinces. They feature counselling, training and actual job experience. They are also designed to help the handicapped, native people and other underprivileged groups.

The fourth part is a $40 million program for the development of communities, to assist towns and cities whose economy is often based on one or two industries in trouble or even forced out of business. Obviously, co-operation is essential in that area not only between senior governments but also with the municipalities and industries concerned. All federal departments which could provide some assistance are also involved.

Fifthly, Mr. Speaker, innovation will be encouraged through a program with a budget of $100 million during the 1985-86 fiscal year to stimulate innovation in the labour market through new pilot projects and new undertakings in the private sector. This also includes the re-entry of women on the labour market, the alternance between work and education and pilot projects for the restructuration of working conditions.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, before concluding, the sixth part of the new strategy for the development of the labour market will have at its disposal $65 million to eliminate any manpower shortage. Indeed, in spite of the high rate of unemployment, some employers are looking desperately for qualified workers. This program is aimed at improving prospects concerning future needs of the private sector and to make sure that employers hire more women.

Before concluding, if you allow me to borrow terms usually used by grammarians, I would say that we did not go from the imperfect to past perfect, but we have surely made some improvements.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the motion we have before us today deals with a very important matter, the joblessness people are still experiencing in Canada despite all the promises we had in the last election. I was part of the jobs action group of the NDP and many of the proposals brought forward by my colleagues today came out of the consultations we had in a large number of communities from coast to coast. We started in St. John's, Newfoundland, where unemployment is very high, and went right across to Vancouver Island on the West Coast. Since I have a very short time left to me, let me just highlight some of the very constructive proposals which came from these communities for creatively working at dealing with the unemployment rate and making job creation a priority of the Government instead of slashing programs.

These communities told us they wanted local initiatives. They wanted producer co-ops and community development in their own communities controlled by them. They told us they were tired of having multinational corporations coming into their communities, extracting resources, making money and leaving. We heard this all across Canada. As a result, one of the proposals was that there be special funds available for community initiatives, ensure that co-ops and community development and not government corporations qualify for existing business assistance. The report suggests that there be reduced tax rates on community initiatives, that there be marketing and financial management assistance, and that employees in communities have the right of first refusal to purchase the assets of a company which would otherwise be shutting down. In that way they could keep the company going and see that the profits get ploughed back into the community. It suggests that the federal Government itself give its business to credit unions and caisses populaires which are prepared to finance community projects. This is a way of putting our own public money into businesses which will aid other businesses.

We should see that a community diversification fund is established, funded by profits made in single industry towns by the corporations, so that the community would not be struck dead when the plant has a shutdown, temporary or long term. There should be an extension of tax credits, like political tax credits, to individuals who donate to voluntary and charitable organizations which produce new jobs. These are constructive and important proposals and we wish the Government would listen and include them in the Budget will be coming down next month.

Another important point made to us by communities hit by unemployment came from women's groups because they are still hit harder by unemployment than men, and when they are working, are still earning less money. One of the important points these groups made is that the service jobs which have expanded enormously in the last decade, jobs in education, health care and child care, have been cut back through federal and provincial Government so called restraint programs. This is something I think a Conservative Government really has to pay attention to. The ideological blinders the Conservatives wear keep them from developing public sector jobs because of their preference for the public sector, regardless of the cost in jobs or to women. These are good jobs which mean improvement in the quality of life for Canadians. We are not just talking about jobs for the sake of jobs but jobs which will actually improve the way Canadians live. These jobs have been very important for women who have improved their chances enormously in the last decade through the expansion of this sector, and they are the people who are hit by the compressions budgétaires in this sector.

Finally, I would like to point to the youth initiative fund we have proposed. While a tenth of adults are unemployed, a fifth of young people are unemployed in Canada. This is shocking. Young people coming out of school can look to long periods of job search, and often not end up with jobs at all. We have proposed a youth initiative fund, initially at $600 million, for new initiatives in community and social services, energy conservation, environmental protection and arts and culture. This would produce some 40,000 new jobs, an important and constructive proposal.

Let me also, as the arts and culture critic for the NDP caucus, say that we heard from arts and culture groups. This part of the economy has an enormous job potential. It is growing, and even with cutbacks in Government funding over the last decade more people have been going into arts and culture because the audience is there and Canadians want to see expansion in this area. It is a simple fact that for every dollar put into arts and culture expenditure, there is a six-fold return, compared to dollars put into manufacturing, because such a high proportion of this funding comes back in salaries and is returned to government in taxes and can be ploughed back for further investment. Money spent by government in arts and culture means good jobs for Canadians, which in turn improves the quality of life of Canadians.

● (1800)

In conclusion I would like to point out that the proposals which the NDP caucus has brought forward are very constructive. We have the evidence of other countries with social democratic governments, and of the Government of Manitoba which has instituted constructive proposals and job initiation funds with the result of lower unemployment and economic growth. We know it can be done. We are not talking about abstract theories. We are talking about realities where people and governments put jobs and building communities first. It can be done and we propose the measures to do it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The debate being concluded, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings on the motion before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 62(11).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—COMMITTEE REPORT—ENTREPRENEURSHIP ADVOCACY. (B) CONSIDERATION OF REPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the adjournment debate, following up on a question I asked on April 2 of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). The question dealt with the recent report of Conservative Members on the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which suggested that our immigration levels be increased in the coming years largely with immigrants who are entrepreneurs. In very simple, everyday language the recommendation suggested that immigration increases should only involve rich immigrants.

My question on April 2 was whether the Minister agreed with this premise and whether she was prepared to act on it, or whether she was prepared to replace that with a thorough and genuine parliamentary process in close concert with Canadians. At the time the Minister was not in the House. The Acting Minister got up, ranted and raved, but went around the issue quite nicely. I am hopeful that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister will provide some sense of leadership and given an answer to the question.

My Party and I are certainly not opposed to having entrepreneurs consider Canada their new home. We encourage and support that. In fact, the entrepreneur stream within the immigration policy was instituted by this Party while it was in Government. However, we feel that rich immigrants should not be the cornerstone of an immigration policy. To embark on this path would be to turn back the clock on what has been the development of a progressive and compassionate policy within the context of a multicultural and multilingual Canada. That policy values the principle of family re-unification and the principle of assisting family streams so that Canadians can have the opportunity of sponsoring relatives and friends from abroad.

I would like to quote the recommendation which is really the essence of the report. It is Item 9 under Economic Considerations. It reads:

> When the economic consideration is paramount in increasing the immigration level, then the fundamental principle should be the active recruitment of people who are either self-supporting, or who can clearly contribute to the growth of the Canadian economy. For example: those who fit current regulations for entrepreneurial immigration . . . bring with them investment capital which they will use to create new jobs and export potential, . . . self-employed immigrants, etc. The current consultation process for 1986 should focus on ways to encourage, in every possible way, increasing the number of people whose immigration to Canada would enhance our economic capacity.

● (1805)

A recent article in The Toronto Star quoted the chairman of that Standing Committee who suggested that the ideal immigrant:

> —should come from a developed nation, preferably the U.S. or one of the Western European countries—should have a good business background, equity capital in the neighbourhood of $500,000 and an impulse to create.

I am surprised that the chairman did not go further and propose that specifications on an individual's hair colour, weight and height be added to the list of criteria that he has outlined for this Parliament.

The essence of the matter is that the guts of this report completely overlooks the contributions that thousands upon thousands of poor and average income immigrants have made to this country, and that the Government is trying to suggest that if you do not happen to be rich then you have not or cannot contribute to the economic growth of this country. That premise is completely false. The premise is that thousands of immigrants, poor and average income immigrants, have contributed to this country and have taken jobs. They have become successful businessmen, and that will continue to be the case in future.

The direction is very worrisome but the process by which the directions were formulated are equally as worrisome, Mr. Speaker. There was not one single witness outside of employment and immigration employees to appear before the committee. There was not one ethno-cultural group invited, nor one immigrant aid society, nor one union, nor one professor, nor one economist. Nor was any economic study done on this question.

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, even though I have here a prepared answer, I wish nevertheless to elaborate on the assertion that has just been made by my colleague. "The process is worrisome" . . . Well, the House of Commons has decided to set up committees to study specific problems and we have heard some witnesses. It should be said as well that there may have been more witnesses than opposition members during the committee sittings.

We have heard witnesses and we have never come to a conclusion, Mr. Speaker, whereby the policy of family reunification was set aside. This policy remains a priority, as well as the one concerning refugees. Immigration covers many aspects, it is a large area in which many possibilities are explored and we have decided, within that framework, to stress this particular aspect. This does not mean however that other areas are overlooked. Is the Minister going to answer? As you may see when you read the last paragraph of the report, the Minister has a number of days to give her reply. Why does the Hon. Member claim right now that the Minister has not answered since she has a few days to do it? We are trying to put the emphasis on one specific area in order to encourage entrepreneurs who will also create jobs to come to this country. This does not mean that we give up family reunification. It is recognized that they are consumers, as well as the people whom you call "regular or ordinary". It is widely recognized but we are allowed, as a committee, to stress one particular group which we would like to see coming to Canada in larger numbers.

This is the substance of the report and the Hon. Minister will table in the House, within the deadline provided in our Standing Orders, the report or the reply concerning those recommendations. But this report must be considered in its particular outlook. We were studying the case of entrepreneurs as we are now beginning to study that of refugees. When the committee studies and tables a report on refugees, it will not mean that entrepreneurs will be left aside. We must look at all possibilities within an immigration policy which the Minister undertook to review under the revision process and this is what committees are here for. We hear witnesses, we table a report, a reply will be forthcoming from the Department and in the meantime, we will continue to consider all other aspects.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES. (B) DEBATE ON LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on a question I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) today about a series of spills of PCBs which occurred just a few days ago between Thunder Bay and Kenora, eventually discovered when the truck in question pulled into a gas station in Kenora.

Before following up on my question, I should just like to say that this kind of incident was bound to happen. It was only a matter of time, really, before our collective negligence—and I say collective negligence because I am not trying to point the finger at anyone in particular—with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods caught up with us. This incident is a sign of those practices having caught up with us, as it happens to have occurred before the regulations, which are supposed to be in place as a result of the transportation of dangerous goods Bill, took effect.

One has to ask why it takes so long to get regulations in place. I ask that question not just of this Government but of all Governments. I certainly had the impression when we passed the transportation of dangerous goods legislation in the House a couple of years ago that certain things would come into effect and that people could breathe a little easier about the transportation of dangerous goods. However, that turns out not to be the case. I know there have been some regulations with respect to rail transportation, but the ones having to do with road transportation apparently have not come into effect. One just wonders why there cannot be a more speedy process when it comes to the regulations which follow legislation.

I put my question to the Minister in a very non-partisan and objective way about having a moratorium on any further shipments of these kinds of substances between now and July 1 when the new regulations will come into effect. The Minister responded by going into a tirade about the NDP wanting to see the regulations back when the Bill was passed. Then he brought up the question of the new aeronautics Bill. In all these cases we have not tried to prevent speedy passage of legislation. All we argue is that it would be nice if at the same time we were able to see the regulations. That is the substance of what is going on.

It would be nice if the House of Commons actually had the opportunity sometime to see what are the regulations that follow such legislation. I know the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has been of that opinion himself, having spent many years on the transport committee. It would be nice if Members of Parliament did not just have a set of principles in front of them, but actually something about which they could seek opinions with respect to effectiveness. That is all the NDP has ever argued for in that regard. I am sorry the Minister decided to be so defensive about it and did not answer the question whether we would consider a moratorium between now and July 1, although I took it from his answer that he would not consider it.

This brings up the larger question of how we as a society face up to the fact that we have created all this waste. Our way of life, particularly since the second world war, with increasing dependence on synthetic substances, for instance, has created mountains of waste which we now do not know what to do with. Sooner or later we will have to face up to the fact that in our way of life, or in our way of doing things, whether for profit, convenience, efficiency or whatever, we have in a way sown the wind and reaped the whirlwind. We are reaping the whirlwind now in that we have this manifold list of problems we have to deal with, whether it is toxic wastes in the Great Lakes, the transportation of PCBs, acid rain or whatever. These are just a few examples—perhaps the ones which have been given more attention—of the ways in which our way of life is catching up with us. We have to face difficult questions about whether we continue, even with regulations, to transport these dangerous wastes from one province to another, across the country from Ontario or Quebec to Alberta, or whether we opt for the option of having indigenous waste disposal. That is to say having it happen on a province by province basis so that we do not subject areas in between to the risks that will inevitably remain, in spite of whatever kind of regulations we adopt.

• (1815)

It is clear that we need to reduce our dependence on these substances. This will not help with respect to PCBs. PCBs have already been banned. It is just a question of dealing with the PCBs we already have. There are many other substances which are continually coming into existence as a result of technological and scientific innovation. We will only find out years from now the environmental effects. We need to ask ourselves whether we want to become even more dependent on these kinds of substances, or whether we want to begin to find ways of lessening this dependence. That is the direction we ought to go. Instead of looking for the next technological fix, we ought to be considering ways of using more natural substances, substances which do not pose the dangers that these pose.

Finally, I might say to the Government that it would find there would be a great deal of public support for this. It is one of the tragedies of the cuts that have taken place with respect to the environment. People are willing to support government spending when it comes to environmental protection. They do not want to see cut-backs in that area. There are plenty of things they would like to see cut, but environmental protection is not one of them. If this Government could sense that and go ahead and spend whatever it has to spend and do whatever it has to do face up to the problem of interprovincial transport of dangerous goods—acid rain, toxic wastes in the Great Lakes or wherever it happens to be—it would find there would be no public outcry whatsoever. Instead, there would be a collective sigh of relief that we finally have a Government that is not afraid to spend that kind of money and do what is needed to be done.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I welcome and of course share the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member with respect to this matter. I must advise him that it is simply not within the power of the federal Government alone to accede to the recommendation he puts forward. Such a sweeping prohibition is simply not within the federal Government's capacity alone to effect.

Transportation of dangerous goods is a complex subject involving the interests of federal, provincial and municipal authorities. It involves a variety of authorities at all levels. It involves the necessity of the federal, provincial and municipal Governments acting in concert. To act in concert there must be a rationalized, harmonious compilation of all of the existing regulations that are dedicated to the very fair proposition the Member has put forward. It is fair in the sense of the concern that all Canadians have. It is a concern that the residents of the Kenora River area have had in the last day or two and will have until the formal investigation is completed, the results are known and the follow-up work and acitivities can take place. The regulations we are dealing with pick up the responsibility that we must face to industry and to society in general.

I have to use the term impassioned plea, but I understand from whence it came. On the other hand, were we to ban all such movements, what about gasoline trucks and chlorine for our water systems? Would the Hon. Member have us put a moratorium on all of those until such time as the regulations come into effect on July 1? Is that what he is suggesting? His question tended to imply that. We move some 200 million tonnes of chemicals annually in this country. We cannot simply interrupt that because of the impact it would have on society in general.

The Government has indicated that it is taking measured responses to this accident. An investigation is being conducted jointly by Transport Canada and appropriate provincial Government staff into the circumstances of the leakage, and this can be done now that the emergency response actions are concluded or nearly concluded.

• (1820)

On the basis of that investigation, appropriate, specific and deliberate considered actions will be taken to reduce the probability of such an accident in the future. I trust the Hon. Member will accept this as a partial response, and accept as well the Minister's concern and, I am sure the concern of all those involved.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—PRICE OF WINTER WHEAT

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my comments on the Adjournment Debate tonight to the Canadian Wheat Board. My comments follow a question I asked earlier regarding winter wheat production, particularly the pricing pool in which winter wheat presently operates along with spring wheat.

By way of background, in my home Province of Saskatchewan winter wheat has enjoyed a particular popularity of late. As recently as 1983 there were 150,000 acres seeded to winter wheat. The next year, 1984, that figure had more than doubled to 350,000 acres seeded to winter wheat. By the time the 1985 winter wheat harvest is off, within the next two months, it should have exceeded about one million acres for this crop year.

Many farmers who in the past five or 10 years have begun growing winter wheat have the concern that, due to the unique nature of their wheat and its growing popularity, it should be put in its own separate pricing pool within the Canadian Wheat Board pricing system. They request this on the basis of their belief that in presently sharing the system with spring wheat they are subsidizing the price of spring wheat due to the export position of winter wheat. One young farmer has written to me indicating that he feels as a winter wheat producer that he is subsidizing spring wheat producers to the extent of $1 per bushel. I know that the Canadian Wheat Board has stated on many occasions that, with the varieties of grain it is marketing and selling abroad, it does not like to have in one pricing pool the cross-subsidization of one kind of grain with another.

Winter wheat is being sold and has been sold in the past few years primarily to the eastern area of our world, including China and India. The relatively good proximity of western Canada to the Port of Vancouver and the ease with which we can move winter wheat to the eastern countries that have expressed an interest in it further backs up the concern of farmers that by selling their product in the same pricing pool as spring wheat they may not in fact be getting the best independent price for their product.

To look further at the effect winter wheat has had on the growing patterns of Saskatchewan farmers, we should consider the increase of late in bushels of winter wheat grown. In 1984, in the Province of Saskatchewan alone, farmers produced nine million bushels of winter wheat. With many more farmers entertaining the thought of beginning to grow winter wheat, and with the farmers who are now doing so, it is my thought as their Member of Parliament that the Canadian Wheat Board ought first of all to address the question of whether or not winter wheat should be put in its own pricing pool and, second, do this with an eye to the present market and the present timing.

Winter wheat by its very nature is seeded in the fall and harvested in the spring. The winter wheat harvest will be occurring in Saskatchewan within the next couple of months, and producers who have this concern are interested in seeing if the Canadian Wheat Board will give some consideration to this matter, if it will consider the implementation of any program, keeping in mind that the harvest will soon be off and the producers will then be looking to sell their product through the Canadian Wheat Board. It is a good time to ask the Canadian Wheat Board to consider this matter expeditiously. If action is to be taken, it should be done soon.

● (1825)

I would like to conclude my remarks in further support of the many farmers in my constituency who have been growing winter wheat over the past winter. They have only started in the past two or three years to begin actively growing winter wheat. Generally, winter cereals have been one reason for example, within the European Economic Community, why the British farmer has had an incredible turnaround during the past ten years. Britain was a very heavy importer of Canadian grain. It is now a world exporter of grain. Through winter cereals, such as winter wheat, the British farmers found that they can have a good yield wheat if winter conditions are favourable for growing. I would ask the Canadian Wheat Board to give this matter further consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) has raised a very interesting question. Indeed it is true that the acreage planted with winter wheat in Alberta and Saskatchewan has increased substantially in recent years. In 1981, 300,00 acres were planted and we already have 1,750,000 acres in 1985, which is quite considerable. Even in Alberta, as well as in Saskatchewan, the acreage planted has increased quite substantially.

The problem may not lie strictly at this level as it is only for the past eleven years that red winter wheat exports have never exceeded the high of 269,000 which had been reached in 1981-82. The following year, exports fell to 129,000 tons, but they again increased to 258,000 tons in 1983-84.

In fact, last year, these exports accounted for only 1.4 per cent of total Canadian wheat exports. In 1983-84, all red winter wheat exports were shipped to two markets, India and China. The previous year, all our exports went to China, while, in the years before that, they went to a greater number of markets. However, in the six or seven years previous, 60 per cent of the winter wheat had always been exported through CIDA, which purchased the wheat and shipped it to the various countries receiving Canadian food assistance.

Mr. Speaker—

[English]

This export profile will be cause for concern in considering a separate pool for red winter wheat. The dependence on a few markets for exports of red winter wheat could present a risk that a separate pool may be more exposed to the requirements of a few countries. Especially important to bear in mind would be the risk that with the larger production of red winter wheat which can be expected in 1985, finding markets for these larger quantities may be more difficult than finding markets for the smaller quantities of past years, particularly as they would be marketed mainly in competition with U.S. red winter, which is their major class of wheat. In view of such uncertainties, the producers of winter wheat may welcome the benefits of pooling all wheat other than Durum in a single pool until such time as the experience with larger quantities of winter wheat is adequate to judge whether it would be advantageous to have a separate pool.

[Translation]

I can assure my hon. colleague that the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) is well aware of this situation and, as he has already stated in this House, he is getting ready to refer the matter to the Wheat Board. As soon as consultations are completed, the forecasts will be made known.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EQUALITY PROVISIONS IN EFFECT

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the Order made Tuesday, April 16, 1985, the House will now proceed to hear statements with regard to the Charter of Rights equality provisions.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the Government of Canada to celebrate the coming into effect of the equality rights provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As of today the Constitution of Canada guarantees that every individual in Canada is equal before and under the law, and has the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, or mental or physical disability.

This is an important milestone in the evolution of Canada and Canadian values. It is furthermore the constitutional extension of the 1960 Bill of Rights championed by the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker and which formed an important part of the Progressive Conservative record of concern for and commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms.

[Translation]

Hon. Members will no doubt recall that during the historic debate in Parliament on the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, our Party made every effort to have Canadians from all walks of life participate in the proceedings of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

Equality rights, which from now on are enshrined in our Constitution, enjoy the support of Canadians in every part of this country and the support of all the parties represented in this House.

The coming into effect of the provisions of Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is for Canada an important step towards the full recognition and broad application of equality rights. That does not mean that our work is done. Today, we are being asked to start a new phase.

[English]

The attainment of equality is an evolving process. It is not always easy to make adjustments to the complex inheritance of the past in order to accommodate changing values. It is for this reason that the coming into effect of Section 15 was delayed for three years, so that Parliament and the Legislative Assemblies of the Provinces and Territories could bring about conformity between current laws and policies and the requirements of the equality provisions of the Charter.

This required that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) review over 1,100 federal statutes, an unprecedented task. As a result of this review, the Minister introduced the first Charter Compliance Bill in the House of Commons on January 31 of this year. Published at the same time was a discussion paper on equality issues in federal laws. A special subcommittee of this House has been established to examine this paper and to consult with Canadians. The work of this Committee will be vital in ensuring the conformity of our laws with the equality provisions of the Charter. One such further change is now before the House. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has introduced Bill C-31 to remove sexual discrimination from the Indian Act.

[Translation]

However, I must point out that it is not enough to review certain rights and to eliminate certain legal obstacles to equality. We must also, where necessary, adopt a new attitude and modify our policies, programs and practices.

In certain areas, it will be necessary to take measures for affirmative action or social development, in order to correct the inequities resulting from various forms of discrimination practised in the past.

[English]

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate solemnly the commitment of the Government to pursue meaningful equality. Since we took office we have acted as vigorously and as expeditiously as possible to honour this commitment. That is why the Government adopted a dynamic approach to self-government for aboriginal peoples. That is why, in our response to the Abella Report, we accepted the concept of employment equity. That is why we are moving to implement the Obstacles report respecting the disabled, and that is why government commitments arising from the Equality Now! report on visible minorities are being fulfilled.

Hon. Members will no doubt recall the following words from the November 5 Speech from the Throne:

> As the women of Canada know, there is some distance between the principle of equality, widely accepted, and its reality, still far short of achievement.

We are acting as quickly as possible to close this gap. Since this Government took office the number of women in Cabinet has risen to the highest level ever, and the percentage of Order in Council appointments held by women has risen from 15 to 22 per cent—a substantial increase in a brief period of time, but one that will be improved upon continually.

[Translation]

Parliament and the Government of Canada will have a duty to help Canadians progress towards full compliance with equality rights, both in our legislation and in practice. It was in that perspective that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) recently announced the very substantial grants to be made to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the Coalition of Provincial Organizations for the Disabled.

● (1410)

[English]

I said earlier that the event we celebrate today is not the end of a process but an important watershed, an opportunity for a new beginning. In the area of human rights, Canada has a record of which it can be proud, and the capacity to do even better and thus serve as a model society for others to emulate.

Creating an open, free, and egalitarian society, however, requires more than constitutional provisions, sound laws, and effective government programs. It requires a deep and abiding sense of fairness on the part of all Canadians. It is within our reach as a people to ensure that all our acts are guided by generosity and tolerance, fraternity and understanding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, today is a great day for all Canadians as a result of the coming into force of the equality rights Section of the Charter. As a Liberal, I am proud that my Party fought long and hard not only to patriate the Constitution but also to include in the Constitution a Charter of Rights and Freedoms which is of fundamental importance to all Canadians.

The history of mankind has been the struggle of civilized people against the forces od darkness and evil to defend the rights, liberties, and dignities of their fellow human beings. In a global sense we are all part of a minority, and thus subject to the tyranny of the majority. If we are not protected by the rule of the law which is embedded in the rock of our Constitution, what is left?

Today equality becomes not merely protected by law; it becomes the very foundation stone upon which all laws must either stand or fall. But we cannot rely only on laws and courts to end discrimination in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have come a very long way since 1867. Perhaps all the values we have acquired in this country over the past 118 years may be summed up today as we formally acknowledge that all citizens are equal before the law in Canada, that there are no longer any second-class citizens in our society, and that our land no longer harbours people who cannot clearly express their religious, cultural and linguistic differences, while at the same time standing as proud citizens of the country which is perhaps the freest in the world.

The progress we have made in this House in recent years as a result of the new Constitution ranks us among the world's leading countries, but even though we do have today a constitutional statute under which all citizens enjoy rights, it is imperative that Canadians too adopt a new attitude. Generosity, tolerance, understanding and frankness must become national virtues. We must be able to show respect for every region of this country, for every individual in our society, because when we travel we find out that Canada is known the world over as a country which has shown that building a great nation in such a diversified world is not an impossible endeavour. Canada stands for two official languages and comprises a myriad of religious groups. It is also home to different cultural communities, yet more and more we realize that no matter where one may be, from British Columbia to Newfoundland, one can rest assured that one's francophone fellow Canadians are respected, that if one is a Quebecer, one knows that women, the handicapped and the elderly are treated with equality in our society.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that all Hon. Members of the House are justified in rejoicing today. Of course, this achievement did not come about without difficulty.

● (1415)

[English]

We have had a lot of fights over these things. A lot of speeches were made; there was a lot of emotion, and a lot of delays. But today, whoever is in this House who was here some years ago, will realize that out of the struggle of the mind and the spirit of this House came the equality rights which guarantee that all Canadians are equal. For that, Canada is a better country. I hope that all Canadians will apply the virtue of the equality clause in their daily lives. It is for all Canadians an achievement of greatness. Canada is the land of opportunity, the land of equality, and the land of tolerance par excellence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, there can be few days more significant in the history of a nation than today, the day upon which Section 15, the equality rights Section of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, comes into effect.

The NDP, and the CCF before it, have always solidly supported the concept of an effectively entrenched Charter of Rights without the possibility of override. Indeed, it was a distinguished lawyer and former judge, Thomas Berger, who perhaps put it best in his book Fragile Freedoms, when he wrote:

> Judges may not always be wiser than politicians, but they should be able to stand more firmly against angry winds blowing in the streets.

Therefore, today should be a day for rejoicing and celebrating, particularly by those groups which have been most affected by decades of inequality, be they women's groups or minorities.

The passage of the Constitution three years ago gave rise to tremendous hopes and expectations by millions of Canadians that Governments, both federal and provincial, would take seriously their obligations to amend legislation to bring it into compliance with the provisions of the Charter.

[Translation]

I am sure that we all deeply regret the fact that the Province of Quebec was not signatory to the constitutional agreement. That is why Quebec chose to avail itself of the notwithstanding clause in Section 33 of the Charter, with the result that Quebecers are being denied important rights under the Charter, including equality rights under Section 15. We all hope that, before too long, a new formula will be found to enable six million Quebecers to become full-fledged participants under the terms of the Constitution of Canada.

[English]

What should have been a day of rejoicing and celebrating is instead, unfortunately, also tinged with a sense of anger and betrayal—betrayal of the hopes and dreams of women and minorities for real legislative change, and anger that Governments have not yet made a reality of the promise of full equality. Three years have passed, many studies have been done, and there is still no legislation of substance to implement real equality.

How can we possibly explain to two million disabled Canadians that the only change in laws affecting them was a change in the wording in the Canada Shipping Act, which changed the word "lunacy" to the words "mental disability"? How do we defend before Canadian women, who fought with incredible energy and strength for real and meaningful equality and who continue to be the victims of discrimination at home and at work, the failure of Governments to make long overdue changes in areas such as pension legislation and unemployment insurance provisions? Can we really say there exists full equality in Canada when five women lost their jobs in the Canadian Armed Forces solely on the basis of sexual orientation? The inaction of Governments means that women and minorities will be forced into the courts to define and defend their rights.

Despite the promises by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the election campaign to provide financial assistance for important litigation under the equality rights Section of the Charter of Rights, no funding announcement has been made so far. Declarations of rights, without adequate enforcement mechanisms, make a mockery of the concept of full equality. As Frank Scott said so eloquently:

> The trappings of democracy hang loosely on an emaciated body politic.

As the role of the judiciary is significantly enhanced and strengthened, the time has come to make fundamental changes to the way in which judges are appointed, to ensure an independent and outstanding bench, with far more women and minorities represented—judges who display sensitivity to the complex and often novel rights issues which are raised in the context of the Charter of Rights.

Let us take this opportunity, on the date of the coming into force of the equality rights Section, to rededicate ourselves as parliamentarians and Canadians to the creation of full equality for all in Canada, using strong affirmative action where necessary. Let us not wait for the courts to speak but rather let us move forward now to make that promise of equality, received with such hope and such optimism in 1982, a reality in 1985.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ELLEN FAIRCLOUGH, RENAUDE LAPOINTE, AND GRACE MACINNIS

Mr. Speaker: Out of respect for the day, and respect for their contributions to this day, may I signal the presence in our gallery of three distinguised Canadian parliamentarians; the Hon. Ellen Fairclough, the Hon. Senator Renaude Lapointe, and Mrs. Grace MacInnis.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—UNITED KINGDOM PUBLIC OPINION POLL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that an opinion poll was published in Britain this morning on the attitude of the British public toward acid rain. The poll found that 55 per cent of the British people are prepared to pay the additional hydro costs which would be incurred by the United Kingdom if they were to join the 30 per cent club initiated by Canada in March, 1984, when ten like-minded nations committed themselves to a 30 per cent reduction of SO_2 emissions by 1983.

There are now 20 nations, including Canada, which have joined the 30 per cent club, but seven European countries, namely, the United Kingdom, Ireland, Spain, Portugal, Greece, Yugoslavia, and Turkey, have still to join. The United Kingdom is responsible for the creation of European acid rain in the amount of 4 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide annually, or one-fifth of western Europe's total. This opinion poll demonstrates significant public awareness of the problems concerning acid rain.

I am sure that Hon. Members of this House, and Canadians at large, welcome the news that the British public supports the need for action on acid rain. In addition, we hope that this poll will motivate the British Government to join the 30 per cent club and become a signatory of the Helsinki Agreement in July of this year. This, for us in Canada, would be a desirable development because we will then be looking south to the United States Government to follow suit—

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in this morning's The Globe and Mail, the Prime Minister's Office boasted about the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has kept an earlier promise to pay for his family's food bills. We are informed that he wrote a cheque for $4,000 covering the period from September 17, 1984, to March 31, 1985. Canadians should take a close look at these figures because, if they do, they will be surprised at what they discover. If you cover the 170-day period and multiply it by three meals a day for the five-person Mulroney family, you will generate a total of 2,550 meals over this period—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malone: Tell us what Trudeau did.

Mr. Marchi: Accordingly, when one divides the $4,000 by the amount of meals consumed, the average cost of the Mulroney meal, per person, is $1.50. The Prime Minister is certainly the winner of today's "The Price is Right" game. A coffee and a bologna sandwich cost more. This even beats the parliamentary cafeteria prices which the Prime Minister complained about only months ago. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what average Canadian family pays as little as $1.50 per meal? The attempt of the Prime Minister to be perceived as paying his way is a complete sham, and it underestimates people's intelligence. He should fully honour his earlier commitment and not play his familiar deception game.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Marchi: The Prime Minister's latest food for thought to Canadians is insulting. His menu is completely unappetizing and distasteful—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

WOMEN'S STRUGGLE FOR EQUALITY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the women of Canada join all Canadians in celebrating the enactment of the equality Section of the Charter of Rights. I salute the many talented and determined women who came together in 1982 in the ad hoc committee to educate, lobby, formulate, and demand inclusion of Sections 15 and 28 in our Charter of Rights. Their efforts, supported by women parliamentarians, overcame many obstacles to achieve the beginnings of equality. But this is only a beginning. Unfortunately, Governments have not amended legislation to conform to Charter requirements. As a result, women, native people, the disabled, and other minority groups will be forced to fight for their rights through skilful lobbying, negotiations and litigation.

• (1425)

I urge the Government, on this momentous day, to prove its commitment to Section 15 by contributing to an independent, non-political endowment being established for legal action. We will truly celebrate equality when women have equal opportunities for full employment, equal pay for work of equal value, paid parental leave, universal day care, reproductive choice, and an end to violence and poverty in all our communities.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

IMPLEMENTATION OF SECTION 15

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege to rise in the House on the very day that Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms becomes effective.

Section 15 contains only two sentences, but those two sentences enshrine equality rights for all Canadians in the Canadian Constitution. Furthermore, Section 15 affirms the legal right of Canadian women to full equality with their male counterparts in all areas of our society.

Mr. Speaker, I think the fact that this section becomes effective this year is particularly significant, since 1985 marks the end of the United Nations decade for women, and Canada has taken an active part in all the activities organized around this decade.

We can be proud of what we have accomplished during the past ten years in promoting the rights of Canadian women and improving the status of women throughout the world.

Furthermore, on November 5, the Federal Government made a firm commitment in the Speech from the Throne to close the gap that exists between the principle of equality and its application. Legislation has already been tabled in the House to respond to women's needs, and today, Mr. Speaker, the Charter has launched a major challenge to Canadian men and women. With the help of the Federal Government . . .

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

TRIBUTE TO WOMEN'S INTEREST IN CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, today is the third anniversary of the coming into effect of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but it will be today, April 17, 1985, that will be recorded in history as the day the Charter truly came into effect, for what is a Charter of Rights and Freedoms without guarantees of equality?

Today I want to pay special tribute to Canadian women who took a special interest in constitutional reform. They took the issue of equality rights and made it their personal cause. Because of their investment of time, energy, and hope, it is paying off for all of us today. Later today many of those women will join together in Room 200 of the West Block, a room of historic significance, where the Constitutional Committee held its hearings and where the ad hoc women's meetings were held in February, 1981.

Tonight we shall remember the dedication of the women of the past, women such as Nellie McClung and Agnes McPhail, who pioneered equality for women in Canada. We shall honour the women of today who played such an important role in ensuring the inclusion of equality provisions for women in the Charter, who shall continue that determined struggle in their presentations to our parliamentary committee on equality rights, and before the courts with the help of the legal education and action fund.

Finally, tonight we shall pause for a moment in anticipation of the success of the women of the future, your daughters and mine, who can grow and prosper in a country and society which respect differences but demand equality—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

ANGUS MacINNIS'S DEFENCE OF JAPANESE CANADIANS IN 1941

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and other Members who saw the exchange yesterday in this House on the subject of Canadians of Japanese origin, to these words spoken in this House on February 25, 1941, by Angus MacInnis, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, and I quote:

● (1430)

If we are to have harmonious and friendly relations between the oriental population and the rest of our British Columbia citizens, we must stop discriminating against and abusing the orientals. We must find some common ground on which we can work, and I think it can be found . . . I am satisfied that if we treat the Japanese and our other oriental citizens right, we shall get their loyalty, because they are no longer orientals in the accepted sense of that term. They would feel as much out of place in Japan as we would. I know them, speak to them; I visit them and have them in my home, and I have not the slightest doubt that what I say is correct. If we are to avoid the troubles that other countries have had with racial minorities, then we must take a realistic view of the situation in British Columbia and attempt to make these people feel at home among us. We will secure their loyalty by fairness and kindness and by the practice of those other attributes which we exercise in our relations with other people.

Let us evoke that spirit and have genuine negotiations for an apology and appropriate compensation to Canadians of Japanese origin.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

SECTION 15

Mr. Roger Clinch (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Sub-committee on Rights and Freedoms, I welcome this opportunity today to comment on Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The work performed by the Sub-committee will give the people of Canada a chance to shape and influence the practical applications of these fundamental rights and freedoms. These will include equality before the law, equality under the law, and equal protection and benefit of the law.

[English]

Today we celebrate the entrenchment of equality rights in the Charter. The implementation of this clause signals a commitment by Governments to move at full speed toward the goal of full equality for all Canadians. This is a date with equality. All individuals are now guaranteed equality, not as a right to be acquired but as a state that exists, not just in the laws themselves, but also in their administration. From this day on all Canadians can be assured that the Government's commitment to equality is more than an enunciation of principle. It has become the instrument to address actively injustices that have prevailed far too long.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

IMPLEMENTATION OF SECTION 15

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today is a great day for women, as a number of my female colleagues have already said. Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is now in effect.

Perhaps I may remind the House that the initiative was taken under a Liberal Government. On April 17, 1982—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Pépin: —the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was officially proclaimed. However, Section 15 did not come into effect until three years later, since a large number of laws had to be amended to comply with this section.

S.O. 21

The search for equality for women, native peoples, visible minorities and the disabled is a long and complicated process. It is not enough to have this one section of the Charter come into effect. We must also make it possible for groups that so desire to use the tools or laws by which they are governed and which the Government makes available to them.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian men and women have been anxiously awaiting these tools. They include research funds to help people pay the cost of litigation before the courts, for instance. That is why I would urge this Government to reflect on various ways to help Canadian men and women achieve true equality.

IMPORTANCE OF RESPECT FOR RIGHT TO BE DIFFERENT

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): As equality rights committee co-chairman, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss indeed were I to remain silent on this day, April 17, 1985, a milestone in the evolution of all Canadian men and women. Unfortunately, this kind of evolution does have ups and downs, so our Government took the initiative of establishing this equality rights committee.

May all Canadians, men and women alike, make the best of this consultation process to pursue the debate which began a long time ago and which must go on until our institutions, our policies, our commitments, our actions and our attitudes fully reflect not so much the right to equality as respect for the right to be different.

Mr. Speaker, on this day when Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms Section 15 comes into effect, let us hope that our conception of human rights will encourage Canadian men and women to fulfil their aspirations.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, today is the fiftieth anniversary of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration. It was on April 17, 1935, that Royal Assent was given to the Act setting up the agency that did so much to rescue the Prairies from a crisis of drought and soil erosion. This agency, a vital part of the federal Agriculture Department, is still hard at work at soil and water conservation on the Prairies. A great deal has been done, but much remains to be done.

Our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) recognizes soil erosion as a most serious problem facing Canadian agriculture today, second only to farm financing. The future demands a great deal more public awareness of the need to conserve our soils, not only on the Prairies but throughout Canada. Farmers lose significantly when the quality of their soil deteriorates. When soil is blowing or washing away, money is always lost.

A public education program could help the PFRA, other public and private organizations and, most important, the farmers of Canada, to build on the past and increase their efforts to preserve and protect our threatened soils.

I know that our Minister of Agriculture is interested in taking steps toward setting up a national public education program to address this critical issue. I know he will need the co-operation and support of his provincial—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

RADIO STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. As I said earlier, today is a great day for all Canadians with the coming into effect of the equality clause in the Constitution. I presume that the Prime Minister agrees with the generous statement made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration about Section 15 and what it means for Canada. I only hope that the Minister of Justice, whose job it is to uphold our Constitution, will agree.

Does the Prime Minister agree with the very sad and very wrong comment of the Minister of Justice in a CBC radio interview this morning, in which the Minister said: "It is too bad that the Constitution allows courts to determine what constitutes discrimination"? Will the Prime Minister tell his Minister of Justice that the Constitution is supposed to protect minorities from the abuse of the majority, if necessary, through the courts? Will the Prime Minister tell his Minister of Justice that we would have a lot less court cases if the Government would start making changes in our laws now so that Canadians will not have to go to court to fight for their rights?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is wrong with the hon. gentleman. He is certainly quoting me out of context. It would be a lot better for the political system of the country if Hon. Members opposite could stop twisting and turning the truth in the wind every time they get up to speak.

[Translation]

DECLARATION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have here the text of the statement made on radio this morning by the Hon. Member in which he made very derogatory comments on activists among groups of women and disabled persons, and among visible minorities. In fact, the Hon. Minister of Justice said that Section 15 of the Constitution was a program aimed at creating jobs for lawyers only.

Is it not true that if he were doing his job right now, if Parliament were to amend forthwith all relevant statutes, fewer lawyers would have to defend minority groups?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already had an opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice on his outstanding contribution earlier today. As a long standing Member of Parliament, he should know that the Minister of Justice is always in an open and democratic frame of mind. He should know to what extent the Minister of Justice stands as a champion of the interests of our minorities. He has always behaved with dignity, as a strong supporter of the Charter and its implementation. He has indicated to what extent—

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Mulroney: I see that the Liberal backbenchers, when we are worrying about equality, are worrying about my food bills. I know that it shocks a Liberal to find a Prime Minister who is paying for his own food.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In paying deserved tribute to a former Minister of Justice who did a tremendous amount to bring about the constitutional arrangement—for which I salute him—I know that he would do no less to a distinguished colleague, the present Minister of Justice, who is equally committed to the advancement of the cause of equality and the attainment of fairness for all Canadians. I think that is widely recognized, and indeed by the Hon. Member himself.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF STATEMENT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Prime Minister. I only hope that he will tell the Minister of Justice that if he was making a joke it was not the time to make jokes about the rights of minorities, and that he should withdraw his statement and carry on with his responsibilities.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will act more in sorrow than in anger and will accept the hon. gentleman's apology for this nonsense later, when he comes to his senses.

THE ECONOMY

FORTHCOMING BUDGET—EFFECT ON INFLATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Acting Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister of Finance said that as a result of the Government's upcoming Budget, Canadians should expect the inflation rate to go up. In doing so, the Minister is fuelling inflationary expectations. By musing out loud, the Minister is personally making inflation worse at the time when the Government may decide to de-index certain social programs. Why does the Government want to introduce policies that will fuel inflation and damage the buying power of low and middle-income Canadians?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is obviously making inferences from the statement. Let me underline the fact that in the last three months the inflation rate has been 3.7 per cent. It is a record with which we are pleased and quite happy to have achieved.

I would only reassure the Hon. Member that the policies that will be introduced by this Government will be directed toward maintaining a level of inflation that is low and acceptable to all Canadians.

Mr. Garneau: I am amazed that the Acting Minister of Finance is talking about anti-inflation measures. The fact is that it is the six and five measure that really brought inflation down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance declared yesterday that inflation will go up as a result of the Budget. It is common knowledge that energy prices are a very important element in the consumer price index. After having given away $2.4 billion to the oil multinationals, is the Government prepared to increase gas taxes at the pump so that the real reason for inflation rising will depend on the taxes imposed by the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the preamble to his question, my colleague suggests a significant lag before the effects of government policies are felt. I can say to the House that the inflation performance during the last month could hardly be ascribed to policies going back several years.

With respect to policies which could be introduced, we certainly want to stimulate the economy and create jobs. In a system such as ours, some pressures will necessarily be felt. However, I think that the government intends, as stated by the Minister of Finance, to establish policies aimed at keeping the inflation rate at an acceptable level for Canadians and carry on the outstanding performance experienced during these past months.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

LITIGATION BY THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There is wide recognition that many claims under the Charter will be required by necessity to go before the courts for a resolution, to be brought by many women's groups, organizations of the disabled, and many visible minority groups. Do the Prime Minister and the Government continue to stand by their commitment which they made to the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped on August 14 last, to establish a rights and freedom defence fund, when he wrote to that organization and said: "A Progressive Conservative Government will financially assist all Charter of Rights cases deemed to be of national importance"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the Government's position. The question of court challenges and funding appears to presume a failure of the legislatures of Canada to bring existing laws in line with the Charter.

We are committed as a Government, and as a political Party we are no less committed than the NDP. I suppose that if there were a special area of responsibility—all areas are deserving—it would be with regard to the handicapped. I can assure you that we will not flag in our determination to ensure justice and fairness for those who deserve it under the Charter.

FUNDING OF LITIGATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, specifically, could the Prime Minister assure the House that any claims brought before the courts by disability organizations, women's groups, or visible minorities, that those cases will receive the financial support of the Government, because there is absolutely no question that they will be very expensive?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member to reflect for a moment on the possible significance of that question. As I understood it, the Hon. Member is not asking me to ensure that worthy and deserving causes of those who perhaps, lack the necessary resources, are placed in a position where they can bring worthy litigation forward. The Hon. Member appears to be asking whether the Government of Canada will not fund, willy-nilly, holus-bolus, every conceivable challenge that will be brought under the statutes.

Mr. Deans: He is not asking that.

Mr. Mulroney: Now the leader of the Ian Deans club says he is not asking that.

Mr. Deans: No, he is not. You know what he is asking. You can't obfuscate.

Mr. Mulroney: I will go back and look at the question as asked. If I am wrong, I will apologize to my hon. friend.

The question, as I understood it, seemed to imply an absolutely impossible situation of impending litigation. Our situation is that in those areas where the Government of Canada can and should act to be helpful in ensuring that litigants are capable of exercising their rights before the law, and they are in any way precluded from doing so, we shall act.

I cannot give a guarantee that we will finance every case that arises in every conceivable manner against every conceivable cause, under the Charter.

CENTRAL FUND INQUIRY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, since that was not the question I asked, will the Prime Minister advise the House whether the Government of Canada intends to establish a fund that will be of assistance to groups who cannot afford to go through the courts on their own, so that they can effectively fight for their rights before the courts? I am talking about a fund, not specific cases, but a central fund that groups can draw upon?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that it was one of the amendments put forward by the Progressive Conservative Party that ensured the creation of such funds to ensure that certain groups would be able to bring forward their rights. I salute my colleagues and those other Members of the House who supported that amendment at the time. I think it was extremely worth while, and we shall honour it.

WOMEN'S REMUNERATION—ROLE OF PROVINCES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Ninety per cent of workers are covered under provincial, not federal law. At the current rate of salary catch-up, Canadian women can expect equal pay with Canadian men in 97 years. Has the Prime Minister received assurances from the provinces that all Canadian women will be protected by the introduction of equal pay for work of equal value laws in every province?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received such assurances. I committed the Party and the Government to placing that question, and others involving dignity and equal opportunity for women, at the head of the list in terms of the premiers' conference in Regina, and I did precisely that. It remains a key item of all federal-provincial negotiations. This Party is deeply committed to that spirit of fairness and justice. I know the Hon. Member will be supportive of me and the Government as we proceed in this vital area of fairness to women.

REQUEST FOR FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in light of the importance of this issue, will the Prime Minister immediately call a First Ministers' conference on employment equity, or is he prepared to leave the question to people like the Premier of Ontario who is so out of touch with Canadian women—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —that when he was Treasurer he introduced a tax on tampons as a non-essential item?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): May I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that I am somewhat dismayed that on a day of such importance to women the object of the exercise would be clearly to score some cheap political points on behalf of the Liberal Party of Ontario. The Hon. Member inelegantly bailed out of the Liberal Party in opposition in Ontario, to wind up in an equally inelegant position here in Ottawa. We are here to defend and protect the rights of women. We want the advancement of women across the country, and that kind of attitude does not help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPICTION OF INDIANS IN DEPARTMENTAL PAMPHLET

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Secretary of State. Unfortunately the Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not protect aboriginal peoples against any biased and distorted version of history, particularly when it is in a government publication. The 1985 Canada Day application form, A Salute to Youth, says that colonists represent the youth of Canada's past, but it makes no mention of the fact that aboriginal peoples were here before.

Is the Minister aware that Indians are pictured as the enemy of Canadian youth when the pamphlet tells about a 15 year old girl, Madeleine de Verchères, who fought against Indian attacks for eight days to save her family seigneury? Was the Minister aware of these distortions? Will he withdraw this pamphlet, and will he apologize to the Indian, Inuit, and Métis people of Canada for this biased and unfair version of their history?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, I will certainly look at the document. I was not aware of that, but I will look at it. However, let me make this assertion to the Hon. Member. He may choose to pick one area which is an illustration of the whole question of stereotyping that affects not only women but many of our visible minorities and our native people. Part of the citizenship directory responsibility of the Secretary of State's Department is to tackle this, and to work along with Canada's indigenous group in order that together we can carry out community education. Today's celebrations are a part of that over-all sensitizing of the Canadian public.

STEREOTYPED VERSION OF HISTORY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will first of all attack this in his own Department with the people who are responsible for this kind of publication.

Does the Minister recognize that this type of stereotyped version of Canadian history has given false justification to our past denial of aboriginal rights, and that it is still operative in the case of Premiers such as Devine, Lougheed and Bennett? I ask him to look closely at this. What action is he prepared to take to ensure that a balanced view of Canadian history is given to Canadians so that we understand the basis of aboriginal rights?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, whatever the faults of my Department may be, one of them is not insensitivity in this area. There are committed men and women who are sensitive to this and are doing their best across the country to provide that type of education. I think the Hon. Member will agree that at the First Ministers' conference there was a further illustration of the sincerity of the Government to deal effectively with Canada's first peoples.

EMPLOYMENT

SYSTEMIC DISCRIMINATION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister deals with the systemic discrimination against women, that is, unintentional discrimination through the application of legislation and regulations. An increasing number of people concerned with equality in employment agree that this systemic discrimination remains one of the major obstacles to employment not only for women, but for native peoples, the visible minorities and the handicapped as well. Does the Prime Minister recognize that there is such a thing as systemic discrimination?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a most important issue. There is in our economy a built-in and progressive discrimination which victimizes women. There is for instance the so-called technological breakthrough which, by the end of this decade, will jeopardize over one million jobs held by women in the service industry, a far greater number than in the case of men. I can understand the hon. member's concern and, together with the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I have already taken some serious initiatives in the hope of reaching an agreement in order to improve the lot of the many women who are caught in this unfortunate and unfair predicament. I am grateful to the hon. member for raising this issue of vital importance for both Canadian men and women.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the Prime Minister apparently realizes the existence of discrimination within the system. This is by far the best kept secret in the marketplace.

However, I have a second question: In order to provide these groups with greater protection against this type of discrimination and against poverty, would the Prime Minister commit himself today to take the necessary remedial action and advise the House as to exactly when he intends to do so?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we had already taken a number of initiatives while in the opposition, because my colleagues and I had experienced in the private sector the well-founded claims the hon. member is making. Yes, we will indeed be faced within the foreseeable future with a human tragedy of major proportion. We have already implemented a number of manpower retraining schemes, created many new openings within small- and medium-size businesses to benefit women mostly, in order to do something useful and hopefully solve this problem. This is not something that can be done overnight, but I think we have taken a number of steps in the right direction and eventually will solve this most serious problem.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY CHEMICAL SPILL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to ask a question of the Minister of the Environment about whether, in light of the PCB spill, she intended to reinstate the four or five programs concerning research into the effects of PCBs, which were cancelled. However, she is not here again today, for the second time, and my question is directed to either the Minister of Transport or the Prime Minister, whomever would clear up the question of federal responsibility as it affects this PCB spill.

We have the Minister of the Environment announcing regulations which properly come under the Minister of Transport. Would the Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport indicate, if indeed there is a federal responsibility in this area, as I believe there is, why there is no one on the scene from Environment Canada; no one on the scene from the Canadian Transport Commission, Dangerous Goods Division; and only one person on the scene from Transport Canada, who is there for a purely technical assessment of the transformer which leaked? We had an announcement this morning having to do with regulations that will affect this kind of incident. Why do we have no federal people on the scene to speak of, except the one I mentioned?

● (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I want to inform the House that the Minister of the Environment is in Burlington and Toronto for two very full days of meetings with respect to acid rain and toxic materials. These are long standing commitments. I think the Hon. Member will recognize this is an obligation on her part to honour that invitation.

With respect to the other part of the question, within less than two hours of the incident, the Canutec organization of Transport Canada was informed. There has been collaboration on an ongoing basis. There is a representative on site. There has been collaboration with the federal Department of the Environment. We are working very closely together. The investigation is being spearheaded by the Ontario Department of the Environment, but in very close collaboration with both federal Departments. The Hon. Member should recognize that we recognize the gravity of the situation and are working very closely with the Department of the Environment of Ontario.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to get the impression of the gravity with which the Government considers this matter when the first person to arrive on the scene federally arrived this morning, not two hours but four days after the event. There is still no one on the scene from Environment Canada or the CTC. When will the Government take its responsibility, not just in this instance but in the over-all, ensuring that there is a federal responsibility in this area, not just by announcing regulations for July 1, but by stepping in and not relying on the Ontario Government to do this, and claiming a federal responsibility for preventing these kinds of incidents?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I repeat once again that the Province of Ontario has primary jurisdiction over this matter. It has taken the leadership role. The federal Departments of Transport and the Environment are collaborating and working together very closely. We will take whatever corrective action is necessary. We are now exploring the possibility of providing for a protection directive under Section 28 of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act.

EFFECT ON HIGHWAY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to my hon. friend, the Acting Minister of the Environment. I want the Minister to know that the people of northern Ontario are frightened and are very angry about the recent PCB spillage. Quite frankly, we have had enough. We have had mercury in the water, we have acid rain, and now we have a PCB spillage on the Trans-Canada Highway. The people of northern Ontario feel betrayed by this Government and by the Government of Ontario. What can the Minister tell us today to assure us that the Trans-Canada Highway is not going to become a path of poison?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Hon. Member rising here on behalf of people in his constituency and expressing, as is appropriate, the outrage and dismay that follow for all decent Canadians as a result of this incident. It is a very serious one. However, I have to say in response, as I said yesterday, that there is mixed jurisdiction in this. The federal Government is coming in with new regulations in July. One can say that they should have been here before. One can also say that perhaps somebody who was here before should have passed them.

People are on the site, and were on the site immediately. This is not a situation where no one did anything. You can ask federal legislators or federal administrators to go there, but in fact in practical terms the responsibility for looking after the traffic, assessing the damage, and doing something about the clean-up, happens to be with Ministry of the Environment of the Province of Ontario. That is our system, and there is nothing wrong with that. I say to the Hon. Member that the federal Government takes this matter very seriously. I would ask the Hon. Member to convey that very clearly to the people that he represents, and represents so adequately.

REQUEST FOR PREVENTIVE MEASURES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my constituents are tired of hearing about jurisdiction, responsibility, guidelines, and regulations. They feel that this Government and the Government of Ontario have betrayed them. PCBs were spilled. How can we be assured that this will not happen again, that there will not be another failure? What action does the Minister propose? People in northern Ontario want to know that this kind of avoidable accident will never happen again.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods, particularly the transportation of dangerous substances, our departmental officials are currently exploring the possibility of a protection directive under the provisions of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, Section 28, which may be implemented. It would provide for a kind of regulatory control and/or moratorium on the transportation of these substances. That is being looked into. If it is necessary to move in that direction, this Government will move in that direction.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR INTERPROVINCIAL TRUCKING

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the Minister of Transport. It would appear that there is nobody in charge of this matter. Do the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans not know that interprovincial and international trucking under the Constitution of Canada are totally the responsibility of the federal Government? Is it not correct that the Minister of Transport has allowed provincial Departments to move in and, as a result, there is a hodge-podge? Will the Minister agree that it is time for him to exercise the constitutional authority he has over interprovincial trucking, particularly in the case of the transportation of dangerous goods?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member, given his experience in the field of transportation. He should know better than to make the statement that he did. Truck transportation, both intra and extra-provincial, is a provincial matter. The Hon. Member can shake his head in the negative, but he knows darn well that that is the case. Under the transportation of dangerous goods regulations, and the need to promulgate regulations, that is exactly where the difficulty has arisen because there needs to be the capability and the cohesiveness of a regulatory system right across the country. We have been working with the provinces, trying to work out that kind of uniform system. On July 1 these regulations will be in effect. Having said that, there still is a code with respect to the handling and the manufacturing of these substances which is provided for by the Department of the Environment which is being followed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Minister of Transport knows perfectly well that the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada has been abrogated by the provinces. He still has the constitutional authority on interprovincial and international trucking. Because nobody is in charge, will the Minister take charge (a) on the investigation and (b), if he will not go for a moratorium on movements between now and July 1, will he ensure that any transportation of dangerous goods is convoyed, with inspections at least every 50 miles? Will he do that under the constitutional authority that he has under the Constitution of Canada and the National Transportation Act?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the New Democratic Party came very close to asking for a moratorium on the movement of all dangerous goods in Canada. The Member is now backing off. That would have even included farm chemicals, and the farmers might not get in a crop this year. I have indicated that the federal Departments of Transport and the Environment are very closely involved with the Department of the Environment of the Province of Ontario in monitoring and assessing this situation and investigating the accident. I said earlier that we are exploring the possibilities of providing for a protection directive under Section 28 of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act which could have the effect of meeting the request that the Hon. Member has submitted to the House this afternoon.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REGULATIONS AFFECTING PREGNANT PERSONNEL

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, today is a very special and important day in the history of Canada as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms becomes law. My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. There exists today within the Armed Forces a situation that blatantly discriminates against pregnant service personnel who must take leave without pay or use vacation time during their time of confinement. What action will the Minister take to redress this discrimination that exists within his Department and to bring the Armed Forces into line with the non-discriminatory provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I believe the Hon. Member is aware, regulations now exist in the Armed Forces accommodating the pregnancies of female personnel. It may well be that there are some deficiencies in those regulations. I have asked for an analysis and careful study to be done, and of course, at the same time, under Section 15, the Subcommittee of the Justice and Legal Affairs Standing Committee will undoubtedly be inquiring into these areas in its studies of the reference made to that committee by the Minister of Justice.

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT EQUALITY—COMPLIANCE BY COMPANIES CONTRACTING WITH GOVERNMENT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is not enough, of course, to give lip service today to equality. In the spirit of the Charter of Rights and to bring about employment equity, the Special Parliamentary Committee on the Disabled of the previous Liberal Government recommended that private sector companies doing more than $20,000 worth of business with the Government be required to take affirmative action and hire the handicapped. The Prime Minister, during the election campaign, assured handicapped persons that he would support this measure. However, in her recent reply to the Abella report, the Minister of Employment and Immigration only requires compliance by companies receiving contracts worth over $200,000. How can the Minister shortchange disabled and handicapped people in this way by leaving out thousands upon thousands of companies from compliance?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the provisions we have announced and the work that is being undertaken apply to 85 per cent of the business that is done with the Government by companies all across the country. We figured that 85 per cent, although not totally inclusive, is nevertheless a good beginning, and we will see that those measures are put in place so that there is equality for those persons who are handicapped, for visible minorities, for native groups, and for women.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that a contract for $1 million can be let through five contracts worth $200,000 each and the companies would be exempt. I am amazed that she would say what she has said. Nevertheless, since the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that people in business who have already adopted employment equity have seen substantial growth in their productivity, profits, and people, why did she not give this wonderful opportunity to all companies that receive contracts worth $20,000 and allow them to enjoy these benefits which she herself has outlined?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in my response I said that we were taking a first step. I think it is an important and very valuable first step. It is a first step, however, because we are at the beginning of a process. Had the previous Government thought it was worth while to do anything at all in this field, the women of Canada, the disabled, the native people, and the visible minorities would have been much further along the road. We are overcoming those obstacles. I trust the Hon. Member will give the provisions we have introduced the support they merit.

GRASSHOPPER THREAT TO PRAIRIE FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the Minister aware that this spring, prairie farmers will face the possibility of the worst grasshopper outbreak in several decades? Will the Minister inform the House of what steps his Department is taking to join with provincial Governments in preparing for that outbreak?

Ms. Copps: Well, spray them with PCBs.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I am aware of and deeply concerned over the potential outbreak of grasshopper infestations in western Canada during the 1985 season. According to surveys done in the latter part of 1984, the potential is much greater in Alberta and Saskatchewan. In the Hon. Member's home province of Manitoba, the possibility may be that the infestation there might well exceed the 1984 infestation by two and a half times.

I would like to assure the Hon. Member that our researchers and scientists throughout the network of research stations in western Canada are working in consultation and co-operation with the provincial Governments and the producer organizations. We have an alert system in place, and we will be able to inform producers of the day-to-day situation with respect to grasshopper infestations.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The very distinguished former Under-Secretary of State, George Ball, has written a devastating critique of star wars in this week's The New York Review of Books. Perhaps the Prime Minister may have seen it. It describes star wars as being deceptive, confused, and ill-considered, and as undermining deterrence and threatening to escalate the arms race to an unmanageable spiral. Has the Prime Minister read Mr. Ball's critique? Has he been listening to the concerns of ordinary Canadians, including those in the peace camp outside this building, about the devastating implications of star wars? If so, why has the Canadian Government not yet given an emphatic no to the whole concept of star wars, and an emphatic no to any Canadian participation in it whatsoever?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. As the only Party Leader to be present in the House of Commons on such an important day for women, I want to thank her as well for her contribution to the progress that has been made.

In point of fact, I did see the review written by Mr. Ball. He is a man of considerable reputation. The Hon. Member will recall that he held an important position in the U.S. administration. Mr. Ball held an important position in the administration when it was involved in Vietnam. He held certain views then that have not been borne out over the years. He now holds this view. I respect him for his analysis and for his point of view. I can tell the Hon. Member that it is not shared by our NATO allies. It is not shared by the Secretary-General of NATO. However, it is a view, and Mr. Ball is an outstanding person. It is a view that we will consider, along with many others.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister must know that it is not only George Ball who holds this view. I only quoted him because I thought the Prime Minister might have respected his opinion. May I then ask the Prime Minister directly, since the Minister of National Defence is keeping so quiet about this, if the Prime Minister believes that the whole star wars concept does undermine deterrence and changes the whole strategic doctrine? Does he share that view? Does he think the star wars concept has been ill-considered and ill-thought out? I would like to know upon what the Prime Minister bases his favourable view of star wars.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would just tell the Hon. Member that there are about half a dozen hypothetical questions locked into that one question. There is a position that the Secretary of State for External Affairs set out with great clarity and maturity on January 21 last, and it is the position of the Government. I suppose that if we were as sure as the Hon. Member opposite that there was no threat and no possibility of similar developments on the other side, we might be inclined to take a different view of certain developments. However, as the Secretary-General of NATO said, and the Hon. Member herself expressed respect for his view, it would be the height of imprudence not to proceed with research at this particular time.

We believe that there is a fundamental difference between the two sides. This one speaks to the moral issues of freedom, justice, and democracy, and that is where we stand. Those are the values that we will uphold while searching for a durable peace. The Hon. Member can be certain of that.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY WHETHER AMENDMENTS WILL BE MADE TO BILL C-26

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I think that the Minister will agree that today is a great day for all Canadian men and women, as Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which is intended to force all governments, at both the federal and provincial levels, to eliminate all discrimination against any individual, is coming into force.

In addition, to meet the commitments of the Conservative Party as expressed this afternoon by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare assure us immediately that he will introduce an amendment to Bill C-26 to provide for equality and true social justice, since he is well aware of the fact that, at the present time, Bill C-26 discriminates against 80,000 needy senior citizens in Canada, the great majority of whom are women? On this historic day, is the Minister willing to announce immediately such an amendment?

Point of Order—Mr. Epp (Provencher)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that Hon. Member should re-examine his own past. He sat in a Government that did nothing for the widows and widowers, which Bill C-26 does.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We should also consider on this day that, under the Bill itself, 85 per cent of the potential recipients are women. I wish he would support it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malépart: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, I am sorry, the time has expired.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

DEREGULATION OF LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) on Tuesday, April 16, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

DECORUM IN THE HOUSE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we all have rules in this House and there is a certain requirement for decorum. When a serious question is asked, such as that asked by the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) regarding the potential grasshopper infestation on the Prairies this year, I do not think it was proper for the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to have said that they should be sprayed with PCBs.

There are certain things which are not covered by the rules, but decorum does dictate other action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may have that view, but it is not a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, you should know that in the back benches on this side, PCB means "Progressive Conservative Bull". That is what we were talking about when we said PCBs.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MANAGEMENT-UNION RELATIONS

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to announce to the Hon. Members that the Government has reached an understanding with the Public Service unions on a number of issues that are important both to our employees and to the Treasury Board as the employer.

In recent months, I have had several meetings with union representatives to discuss these issues which had been pending for a number of years. The Government firmly believes that it must work together with the Public Service unions to get our economy going again and improve the standard of living of all Canadians, and it intends to succeed. It has always been our contention that the problems we are facing today can be solved. We know that our public administration must be made to function more effectively. We can improve it by making the Public Service more sensitive to the public's needs and also more effective. We can improve it by introducing new guidelines for co-operation, by holding consultations before making decisions and by setting common goals for settling important matters. The system adopted by this Government can serve as a model, and its aim is to create fair, effective and responsible labour-management relations in Canada.

[English]

As a result of the meetings which I held with Public Service union representatives, this Government has agreed to introduce in the Public Service a system of master agreement bargaining, a dental plan, a revised pension plan and improved workforce adjustment procedures.

On the issue of master agreement bargaining, I signed memoranda of understanding last week with representatives of the two major Public Service unions, the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada. The memoranda provide terms of reference under which it will be possible to negotiate master agreements covering approximately 80 per cent of the terms and conditions of employment which are now found in individual collective agreements.

Under the present system, negotiated terms and conditions of employment are bargained for each bargaining unit represented by each union. Some of the terms and conditions are unique to a bargaining unit, but in many cases similar collective agreement articles can be found in many agreements, often using exactly the same language. Yet, until now, those articles had to be negotiated separately for each collective agreement. For example, in the case of the Alliance, they would be negotiated for each of the 39 collective agreements. Under the master agreement system, such articles would be negotiated only once with the Alliance at a master table.

The master agreement approach to collective bargaining is much more efficient. Not only will we be required to spend less time at the bargaining table, thereby ultimately reducing the cost of the bargaining process, but collective agreements will be easier to administer and interpret.

Any impasses at the master agreement bargaining table will be resolved through a process of binding conciliation. Thus, the right to strike will not apply to items which will be included in master agreements.

[Translation]

It will be impossible to negotiate all conditions at the master table, Mr. Speaker, owing to the diversity of professional groups in the Public Service. This difficulty is acknowledged in the concept of second tier bargaining where the collective agreements of professional groups will be negotiated on an individual basis so as to settle clearly monetary issues such as rate of pay, benefits, working hours and paid holidays.

The second tier—bargaining of individual collective agreements—will operate much as it does now and will include staggered expiry dates and recourse to binding arbitration or conciliation-strike in case of deadlock.

Since the Public Service Staff Relations Act now provides for bargaining units negotiating on an individual basis, it will have to be amended to implement the system of master agreement bargaining. Both parts will be more effective and enjoy more freedom of action to solve labour issues.

Mr. Speaker, the Public Service Staff Relations Act has practically remained unchanged since it came into effect in 1967, and the Government will hold consultations on this issue with labour representatives and other interested parties.

With respect to Public Service pensions, the Government believes that contributors to the Public Service pension plan should have their say in the decision-making process which leads eventually to the definition and administration of policy. We are quite agreeable to the establishment of a joint management system. The system provides for the creation of a management committee chaired by an independent person and will be made up of at least twelve members representing the employer and the employees, on an equal basis. It will answer to me in my capacity as President of the Treasury Board.

[English]

It is our intention to bring the Public Service pension schemes more in line with those in the private sector. As a result, and in response to concerns expressed by employees, the public sector and the Auditor General, we will fund and finance Public Service pension plans in accordance with the accepted practices and standards of the major employers in the private sector.

• (1530)

I would like to underline four points. The current indexing will be replaced by an inflation protection feature dependent upon the earnings of the fund. The management board will review contribution rates and the plan features periodically and recommend adjustments. Unfunded actuarial liabilities resulting from past practices will be amortized within the plan in an orderly fashion over a period of not less than 25 years. Under the new proposals, benefits will be funded in advance. The fund will not accumulate further actuarial deficits.

Finally, pension accounts will be credited with interest earnings based on returns achieved in a representative sample of private sector plans. In all other aspects the Public Service plans will, as a minimum, generally meet the requirements of the federal Pension Benefits Standards Act. These changes will require legislative amendments which will be brought before this House following further consultation with the advisory committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act.

On the subject of a Public Service dental plan, I have signed an agreement setting out the principles under which a moderate plan will be introduced. A board of trustees will be appointed consisting of an independent chairperson and equal representation from the unions and the employer. This board of trustees will be responsible for the sound financial administration of the plan, which is to be self-insured.

An agreement has been reached on improvements to the workforce adjustment policy. The Government's policy is that employees whose jobs are no longer required will, as far as possible, be redeployed within the Public Service with retraining, if necessary. Briefly, major improvements to the policy include; first, the minimum notice to an employee whose job is being abolished will be increased from three months to four months, although Departments will endeavour to give at least six months' notice. Second, laid off persons will be eligible for retraining, and those accepting lower level positions will be provided with up to one year's salary protection.

The understanding reached on these issues, Mr. Speaker, goes a long way toward fulfilling the promises we made last summer during the federal election campaign. Two other issues will require further consultation. I have already mentioned one, the amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The other involves the political rights of public servants which need further careful consideration to ensure fairness and equity to all concerned. I am confident that these matters will also be satisfactorily resolved.

[Translation]

Collective efforts have led to those achievements of which Canadians are proudest. This Government listens, consults, finds innovative solutions to national problems. Genuine efforts are made to achieve results. The Progressive Conservative Government will reach its targets and live up to its commitments, for it has every intention of calling upon Canadians to help it meet all challenges.

Mr. Speaker, the measures announced today are the starting point of a new era in the field of labour-management relations in the federal administration. Those issues had been upsetting labour-management relations for many years. Yet, in the short time since this Government took office, it has succeeded in bargaining in a spirit of co-operation and, in so doing, finding responsible solutions.

In that same spirit, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to be open about our concerns and to keep those of our employees in mind. In our opinion, the employees, the federal Government as employer, and the people of Canada all stand to benefit.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) on having provided us with a copy of his statement a few hours before it was presented in the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is the employer that has the largest labour force in the country and it is therefore important, and even very important that the issues pertaining to the way the Government manages its human resources be discussed in this House, and if possible settled amicably.

[English]

There are four items in this statement, Mr. Speaker, which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) addresses. I would just like to repeat them: the system of master agreement bargaining, a dental plan, a revised pension plan and improved workforce adjustment procedures.

The system of master agreement, of course, is the same as that which was called either a common language agreement or a master wording agreement when the previous administration was negotiating for an agreement on this matter. I do not think the semantics are very important. The fact is that the previous Liberal administration for years had been talking with the unions about this process and had come to a certain understanding. The apple was ripe, the Minister picked it and I congratulate him for doing so. I believe it is a step in the right direction. However, I would like to remind him that humility sometimes helps and that he has to agree that past Presidents of the Treasury Board did accomplish a lot of work on this matter. I congratulate also the unions. The important part of this agreement is their acceptance of this master agreement. I take some joy in congratulating the Minister on his success in picking the apple, as I said, and bringing it forth in such a short time. The Minister talked about amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I would imagine that he will be coming forth soon with the required amendments to put in force a master agreement bargaining process.

There are certain things that we have addressed over the years—and when I say "we" I mean this Parliament and the employee organizations—in trying to improve employer-employee relations. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the long discussions which were held in regard to the designation process of employees; who designates them, how many are going to be designated, and what is the process which is to be used. I believe that has been an important factor in years gone by in preventing what I would call "amicable relations" from existing between the Treasury Board as an employer and the unions. I hope that anything which is done in terms of a master agreement will encourage public servants and their representatives, the negotiating and bargaining agents, to take the route of arbitration, that is the binding arbitration route, rather than to choose the conciliation-strike route. That is, I suppose, the main purpose of my comments with regards to the master contract and the amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. There is nothing in this declaration today, Mr. Speaker, which would lead, at least the public servants or myself at this time, to think that we can read into this announcement anything that will accomplish this. So I hope that the Minister will keep in mind that what we actually look for is an improved negotiating atmosphere in public servants' relations through that designation process, which indeed, in my short time here, has been a thorn in the side of the unions, and justifiably so.

The second question, of course, deals with the dental plan. The Minister talked about a new moderate dental plan. This is something for which, indeed, the Public Service of Canada has been asking for a long time. This is a major announcement and it is welcomed by this Party. But, again, it would have been appreciated if we could have had more specific information. There are an awful lot of questions to be asked, and a major statement of this importance without any financial details appended thereto leaves one wondering about the financial implications. What are the modalities of its application? Who pays for what? Is it pay-as-you-go, cost sharing, voluntary or optional? I would have appreciated at least some ballpark figures from the Minister in terms of the financial commitment, who pays what and who gets what. Nevertheless, I would again like to congratulate the Government and the unions and I say that it is a step in the right direction.

Before I get to the third item, I understand there is to be a board of trustees, which is a nice way of administering such a dental plan. I take it it will be looking into the costs and contributions from members. But what does self-insured mean? What does it mean to public servants? There are all kinds of ways and means of addressing this question, but I will have to wait for the Minister to table further information.

The pension issue, of course, is something that I like, having had very deep involvement and interest in the matter over the years. I will not expand on that too much because I think Members of the House understand that I could probably take up the rest of the afternoon in talking about indexing of Public Service pensions and probably bore you all to death with the subject. But I am pleased to see that the current problems of the so-called pension funds are going to be addressed. I am somewhat mystified by the pay-as-you-go basis which the Minister is taking. What exactly does it mean to public servants in terms of their contributions? It will be interesting to study that matter with him in due course when he comes forward with the legislation amending the pension fund legislation. We will wait for it before congratulating the Minister because it is a real hornet's nest, and he knows it too, I think.

[Translation]

The pension plan management system is interesting. However, I have some doubts about it. For instance, the Minister has said that he will be responsible for the management committee, which will include one chairman and twelve directors, at least twelve directors as stated in the press release, which suggests that there will be fair and equitable representation from both sides to be chosen and appointed by the Minister or by Order in Council following consultations with the unions, or rather, this is not explained in the—

Mr. de Cotret: Six to be appointed by the employer and six by the unions.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister has specified that six will be appointed by the employer, that is the Government, and six by the unions. This is one thing that the unions will find satisfactory. In any case, they will have their say on how the plan will be administered.

Now we have to determine how the monies due to the pension plan will be contributed within less than 25 years. Will the indexation fund and the pension fund be put together? Will this huge amount of money, the billions of dollars invested in those funds, be used to finance the whole plan or will the funds remain separate? The pension fund has well above $20 billion, but the indexation fund, which of course was set up more recently, is smaller and is the one which most often creates the actuarial problems we have discussed many times in this House.

The fourth point is—

[English]

—the workforce adjustment policies. There is nothing very new in this except that I applaud the commitment made by the Government to retrain those people who, through no fault of their own, because of modernization, technological change, and economic adjustments have been laid off or asked to leave.

As to the four-month extension, well, most Departments had three months and were asked to grant six months, and so now we have four months and we are going to ask them for at least six months. That is not a very big change but it is something in the bank and it will help public servants in adjusting to work changes in the Public Service.

The amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act are interesting. The House of Commons will recall that in 1976 a joint committee of this House and the Senate sat for close to a year and a half reviewing employer-employee relations in the Public Service of Canada following Jacob Finkelman's report to the House of Commons. I thought he did a very thorough and interesting study of this relationship. I would like to ask the Minister again to show celerity on this matter of bringing in amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. There are difficult problems at hand and I would like to see them resolved, so I am sure he can count on our support and co-operation in trying to come to grips with these amendments.

[Translation]

Concerning the promises made by the Government to the Public Service and the Canadian people during the electoral campaign, true enough, the Minister has kept four out of six of his own promises. This is a very good record, but the Minister has not dealt with the six or seven other interesting matters which were also the subject of promises. What about classification of positions, staffing, and a whole gamut of issues, such as technological changes, job designations which I mentioned earlier, and certain other things that are negotiable?

There certainly remains a lot to be done. The Minister will have a chance to examine these issues carefully and perhaps to propose changes shortly to render classification standards negotiable. In my opinion, this question is rather important at this time.

I therefore want to tell the Minister that he has shown that he is capable of doing something meaningful. We shall now see whether his legislation is adequate, and if I may speak for my colleagues in this House, I hope that the Minister will soon be in a position to introduce the amendments needed to implement the dental plan and bring about the required changes to the Act. If he has enough time, he may want to reply to some of the questions I have asked him.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this important announcement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). I congratulate him, his officials and the Public Service union representatives who worked long and hard with the Minister and his staff since January in coming to agreement in four of the six important areas which were on the table at the commencement of the discussions. It is true that not every promise made by the Progressive Conservatives during the election has been fulfilled, and some have been forgotten. Therefore, there is absolutely no question that this announcement is welcomed. It is a very positive announcement for the 250,000 men and women who work for the people of Canada, and it is very much, I believe, in the spirit of the commitment made by the Progressive Conservatives last year.

I recognize that there has been some give and take by the unions in their discussions with the Government. Specifically, in return for a master agreement, the unions have given up the right to strike regarding those items that are covered by the master agreement. These items will be refereed by a compulsory conciliation or arbitration process, and that is obviously a major concession on the part of the unions. I think they recognize that there were gains to be had, and I think that there are very positive gains in having common conditions for the most part for all people working in the Public Service of Canada.

● (1550)

I think it is important to free up the time of people who administer labour relations, both on the side of management of the civil service and on the side of public sector unions. If that time is used constructively I think it can lead to a much better climate for labour relations and to more positive and co-operative work arrangements. I think that is very important and I would like to see it copied in the private sector as well. This spirit is not entirely abroad in terms of labour management relations across the country.

The Minister is aware, for example, of the contrary position taken by the Governments of the Provinces of British Columbia and Quebec, both of which have acted to attempt to demean workers in the Public Service and to take their rights away. Those are very negative actions. In the private sector as well there have been many instances when employers have not been prepared to recognize the rights of workers to have unions and to participate in decisions. In effect, they have been trying to go back to the 19th century rather than to move forward into the 21st century.

I am sure the Minister is storing this up to be used perhaps in communications to his Party from time to time. I think it is fair to say that the proof of the pudding is in the eating.

[Translation]

This will depend on the manner in which the promises are kept. The spirit of the agreement is quite positive, but we will have to wait and see how the agreements that have been promised as well as the four other points the Minister has mentioned are implemented.

[English]

We certainly hope and expect that this will be carried out in the same spirit. I would personally like to congratulate the Minister because I think he has probably had something of a sticky wicket in terms of dealing with members of the senior civil service who were perhaps not totally in accord with what the Minister was putting forward in seeking to implement promises made by his Party last summer. I would ask those senior civil service employees who have to negotiate the agreements to recognize that at least two Parties in the House of Commons are very much committed to what the Minister has said today.

With regard to the Liberal Party, I welcome the comments of my friend from Ottawa-Vanier. It is true that while they were in power since 1968 they had the chance to bring in a dental plan, but they resisted it. They had the chance to move to a master agreement, but they refused to go along with that. They had the chance to reform pension arrangements, but they did not do it. If they have come around to that point of view now, I welcome that. I certainly hope that people in the Public Service recognize that there is a very strong political commitment to have these things translated into specific actions.

When the Minister sat down with the unions in January there were six different areas of concern. One of the areas not yet resolved is that of political rights. The Minister is confident that this matter "will be satisfactorily resolved". He states that the question of political rights "needs careful consideration to ensure fairness and equity to all concerned".

As the Minister knows, on Monday I initiated a debate on this particular question in the House of Commons. I initiated it because of my commitment and that of my Party to the question of winning political rights for people working for the Public Service of Canada. I was pleased to hear the positive comments of government Members such as the Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister (Mr. Lewis), as well as the positive comments of my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

I understand that some 50 Members of Parliament have now indicated in writing to the Public Service Alliance that they endorse the positions taken in favour of political rights by their respective Parties. Last summer, in response to the Alliance, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated quite explicitly that the Progressive Conservatives favour a general removal of the restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants who are covered by collective agreements. Perhaps the Minister will agree with me that in the spirit of what is being done today we can, in the future, refer to the people working for the Public Service of Canada as public sector workers rather than public servants, which may have a demeaning connotation. They are workers who do a very important job.

The excellent t.v. advertisements which have been put out by the Alliance over the last month or so have been surprising and positive for people in the country. They showed the range of occupations of Public Service employees working for the people of Canada. They are meteorologists, truck drivers, coast guards and those who do scientific work. It is certainly a far cry from the image of public employees as parasites drawing fancy salaries and sitting in fancy offices in Ottawa effectively doing nothing but conspiring to learn how they can get their next promotion. There may be one or two people like that, as there are in any organization, Mr. Speaker. However, the skill, commitment and engagement of the people who work for the people of Canada as public sector employees should be commended in the House of Commons in this particular discussion. I think it is reflected in what the Minister has done today.

However, public sector employees are not equal with regard to the question of political rights. The Minister's statement comes on the day when the equality section of the Charter has come into force. I hope that he will indicate today that he is now prepared, on behalf of the Government, to commit the Government to providing political rights to make public sector employees equal to all other Canadians.

While speaking in the debate on Monday I suggested very specifically that all people working for the Public Service of Canada who are in bargaining units—which would include over 200,000 of our public sector employees—should enjoy political rights on the same basis as all other Canadians, except perhaps with respect to the specific areas in which they are engaged. I suggested that the exclusion from political activity should only apply to the very senior civil service workers. There should perhaps be a system of qualified rights, as suggested in the D'Avignon report, for those management employees who are not in bargaining units but who are not in the top mandarin positions. In that case we may need a case-by-case means of determining which of those persons should have political rights and which should not.

People who ran in the federal election by taking leave from the Public Service were allowed to take leave, stand as candidates, and return to their former jobs in most cases without a political taint accompanying the fact that they were candidates for a particular political Party. Given those circumstances, I find it hard to understand why we cannot allow those public sector employees to enjoy full political rights. Their votes indicate that many of them support my Party, many support the Liberal Party, and a substantial number support the Progressive Conservative Party. In other words, public sector employees are a mirror of the country. By allowing a group of people who mirror the country to enjoy political rights we will not undermine impartiality.

With regard to specifics, we welcome the dental plan which had been so short-sightedly rejected by the Liberals. We will have to study the details, but it will certainly be welcomed by large numbers of people working in the Public Service. We welcome the new arrangement with respect to the pension plan provisions. I hope that the provisions for joint management will spread to the private sector. I would welcome legislation being put forward by one of the Minister's colleagues requiring that that be done with respect to pension plans in the private sector.

I would like to remind the Minister of the concerns of retirees about their pensions being rolled back under the six and five program of the previous Government. That represents a loss of an average of $1,000 a year for the superannuated federal Government employees. I hope that before the new regime comes into effect the Government will act in order to restore the base and indexation that were lost by those particular employees so that it will not be a lifetime loss.

In conclusion I would like to speak on the question of workforce redeployment. I hope that the retraining facilities and the management of lay-offs will be considered much more seriously than they have been in the past. I will comment on that later.

• (1600)

Finally, I hope that this does not represent a carrot on the stick and that the Budget and the Nielsen committee do not crack down on the public sector employees after what has been achieved today. I want to assure the Minister that if the Government plans to take after it has given, we will fight all the way and stand up for those public sector employees against arbitrary cuts and lay-offs. That being said, I welcome the announcement made today.

Mr. Speaker: Questions?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have some rather specific questions. My first question concerns political rights. Is the Minister prepared to undertake now that in principle the Government will at least provide virtually full political rights to all public sector employees in the Government of Canada who are members of bargaining units, recognizing that there may be some difficulty in defining what political rights may be provided to personnel in management categories?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I would have been the happiest person in the House had I been able to announce today an agreement and the resolution of all six issues that we have been discussing with the unions in such a co-operative and consultative fashion over the last six months.

As I mentioned today, we have reached agreement on four issues. One remaining issue concerns the PSSRA amendments which are more detailed and specific and take longer to negotiate. There is nothing ideological about that issue.

The other issue concerns a more difficult question. Even my hon. colleague, in his statement, raised a number of questions about how one defines certain things. All that I can assure my hon. friend is that discussions on this issue are under way. It is our commitment to pursue those discussions with the representatives of our various labour movements.

With respect to the question of political rights for public servants, as well as the amendments, globally, to the PSSRA, hopefully I will be in a position to make a statement in the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Public Service Alliance last summer, the Prime Minister stated that the Progressive Conservative Party favours a general removal of the restrictions to political activity, especially for those public sector workers who are covered by collective agreements. That is essentially what I was talking about.

Can we expect legislation that would essentially implement that commitment by the Progressive Conservatives during the election campaign before the House rises for the summer recess on June 28?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, once again, I would have been very happy to announce something today. It is an issue that is under active consideration by Government and by the representatives of all our public sector unions.

I believe that after having dealt successfully and very co-operatively on the first four issues, we will be able to do the same with the other issues.

The Hon. Member is asking me to give a definite date. I cannot give my hon. colleague a definitive date. All I can assure him of is that the fact that this was not announced today should not be seen as any indication that the Government does not accord this issue a high priority. It is just a matter of discussions and of reaching a mutual understanding with our colleagues on the labour side. This will continue very actively. What I have announced today is not the end but the beginning on a new era in labour relations.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of pensions, will the Minister undertake to supply both opposition Parties with the necessary documentation to study the subject matter so that we can understand and discuss this matter openly and also talk about the same questions?

As he knows, there are actuarial considerations and other economic factors involved in the whole question of pensions. It is an important subject and one which is very confusing. In order to allow time for us to look into it, will he give us the benefit of the information he has before him so that we can deal with it?

[Translation]

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to provide the House with all the necessary information on this issue. I have indicated today the major principles on which the employer and employee representatives have reached an agreement. Of course, there remain many details which will have to be finalized. A number of actuarial studies will have to be completed. But as soon as representatives from both sides have negotiated and approved the last details, I will be pleased to table them in the House for all to see and make appropriate comments. There are no problems.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions. I have a Private Members' Bill on the Order Paper, with respect to political nights, and there is an amendment by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) which says that the Bill be not now read a second time but the subject matter be referred to the appropriate committee of the House. Would the Minister prevail upon his House Leader to agree that that matter be called again and dealt with without further debate, in order that the subject matter of the Bill be referred to the appropriate committee, thus providing a vehicle for the Government and the Public Service unions to make their views known?

Second, does the Minister propose to continue the option of the right to strike, or will there be compulsory arbitration? Which route will he take?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first question, I am well aware of the Hon. Member's views with regard to referring this issue to a parliamentary committee. It is certainly something that I am more than happy to consider. However, I do take some objection to his suggestion that this would be necessary in order to provide a vehicle so that views can be made known. We have a vehicle which today has produced four very major amendments to the way we deal with labour-management relations.

Mr. Benjamin: I am trying to be helpful.

Mr. de Cotret: I appreciate that. That is why I am saying that in view of the Hon. Member's attempt to be helpful I will consider his point of view. I would like to pursue all the other methods of resolving this complex issue. We want it resolved and I believe that we are all working toward the same goal.

It is certainly something that I will consider and I will attempt to respond to the Hon. Member shortly on which way we would prefer to proceed.

The second point raised by the Hon. Member concerns the right to strike. It is not a question of giving up the right to strike or taking away the right to strike. I do not think that is an issue. We are essentially saying that the new scheme of bargaining at the master table was accepted mutually and was not something imposed by the Government. It was a question of both parties arriving at a mutually agreeable solution as to how to resolve an impasse should it arise at the master table. It is not arbitration, it is binding conciliation.

Perhaps I can give the Hon. Member some details about the way it would work. Rather than arbitration, there would be a system of binding conciliation whereby both the union involved, be it PIPS or PSAC, would appoint a conciliator and management would appointment a conciliator. They would be asked to agree jointly on an independent chairperson within a given period of time yet to be determined. Should those two appointed members, one from labour and one from management, not reach agreement within that time period, the chairperson would then be appointed by the chairman of the PSSRB.

Mr. Benjamin: Why not by you?

• (1610)

Mr. de Cotret: No, then it becomes too one-sided. I am sorry, but I think a fair deal has to be a fair deal. At that point, obviously, if the three agree it is binding. If there is a majority agreement it is binding. If the three agree to disagree, the chairperson's decision is the one that is binding on all parties.

From a legislative point of view, that is a very significant departure from the arbitration process we now have, because it gives a much more direct say to labour and to the employer in the selection of a panel.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: A very short question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister indicate whether there is a time schedule for implementing the four points he has mentioned today? Is there one for possible amendments? Will it take place during this session? Will it be completed within the present session? Can we expect the Minister to give us information about the dental plan? In other words, could the minister give us an idea of the time schedule agreed upon with the unions?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, when our negotiations started with labour associations, I expected that an agreement in principle would be reached for Easter. It was reached on Easter Monday; we unfortunately missed our goal by a day.

Obviously, it will take time to put into law what I announced today, and there will be unavoidable delays that should be respected in the House. For example, when we refer to the master agreement, the legislation must be amended and I think that it is useless to present only amendments concerning the master agreement when there is a long list of changes which are now being negotiated on other issues already mentioned by my colleague.

That is why we would like to introduce a series of amendments to the legislation. In the meantime, with respect to the master agreement, if my legal advice is correct, under a joint agreement with the unions, we can negotiate on that basis just the same. The unions have accepted the principle which must be ratified under the agreement and are willing, despite any amendment to the legislation, to proceed quickly with the negotiations on the master agreement.

The dental plan does not give rise to any legal problem, so we will carry on. It is merely a matter of mechanism to be determined.

As for adjustments to the labour force, they have already been approved and no amendment to the legislation is necessary; some change is needed but with agreement it could be done immediately. This means that pensions will be the issue which will require more consideration on the legislative level.

A calendar? I should like of course to introduce a bill as soon as possible. Some actuarial studies will be done by both parties to enable us to come to an agreement about the provisions of the bill, but I surely hope that a bill will be introduced before the end of this session.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 281, 282, and 283.

[Text]

NUMBER OF PERSONS PAYING NO INCOME TAX

Question No. 281—Mr. Stackhouse:

For the years (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 how many persons paid no income tax with income of (i) $100,000 or more (ii) $50,000 to $99,999 (iii) $40,000 to $49,999 (iv) $30,000 to $39,999 (v) $20,000 to $29,999 (vi) $10,000 to $19,999?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue):

Total Income Assessed[2]	Number of Non-taxable T1 Returns[1] 1980	1981	1982	1983[3]
(i)	830	1,490	836	1,120
(ii)	4,020	6,541	4,679	6,662
(iii)	4,335	5,774	5,201	6,760
(iv)	8,651	11,086	10,803	11,310
(v)	19,610	22,794	22,699	24,507
(vi)	91,859	114,269	187,476	256,681

Notes: 1. An individual's return is non-taxable when no tax federal and/or provincial) is assessed.
2. Total income assessed is the total of income from all sources (page 1 of T1 return) before subtracting allowable deductions or exemptions.
3. Data for 1983 tax year is preliminary. It reflects approximately 96 per cent of returns filed.

CORPORATE DEFERRAL OF INCOME TAX

Question No. 282—Mr. Stackhouse:

For the years (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 how many corporations were permitted to defer the payment of all or part of their income tax with a gross income of (i) $100,000,000 or more (ii) $50,000,000 to $99,999,999 (iii) $40,000,000 to $49,999,999 (iv) $30,000,000 to $39,999,999 (v) $20,000,000 to $29,999,999 (vi) $10,000,000 to $19,999,999 (vii) $5,000,000 to $9,999,999 (viii) $5,000,000 and under?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): The Income Tax Act does not allow corporations to defer the payment of income taxes. However, there is a quite separate item known as the "Provision for Deferred Income Taxes" that is often reported in a corporation statement as an expense. The amount shown is an estimate of taxes payable in future years because of timing differences in accounting for book purposes and taxation purposes. This amount is accumulated over the years and reported as a liability item "Reserve for future income tax" in the company's balance sheet.

	1980	1981
Number of corporations with "Provision for Deferred Income Taxes"	73,029	72,968

There are no statistics currently available on the number of these corporations by range of gross income or for years subsequent to 1981.

DEFERRAL OF INCOME TAX BY INDIVIDUALS

Question No. 283—Mr. Stackhouse:

For the years (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 how many individuals were allowed to defer payment of their income tax?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): The Income Tax Act does not allow individuals to defer payment of their income taxes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to rise briefly at this time with respect to the business of the House. Yesterday I alluded to the fact that I anticipated that Government Motion No. 17 respecting the reference of CN pensions to the Standing Committee on Transport would be dealt with today. Indeed that will be the first item of business.

There have been consultations between the Parties. If Your Honour places this matter before the House, there will be a disposition to accept the following motion:

That the motion appearing under Government Order No. 17 be amended by deleting all the words after the word "staff".

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is unanimous consent for that procedure.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

TRANSPORT

CNR PENSIONS—MOTION TO REFER TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study all matters related to the Canadian National Railways' pension system;

That the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the proposed order of reference and the amendment to which all the Parties unanimously agreed. The issue relates to the terms of reference with respect to CN pensions. I know many Hon. Members who have been in the House for quite some time have a particular interest in this issue, as do I. It has been around for a long time. I know they share a concern for the inadequacy of pensions for CN retirees. I think I can say quite safely that this extends beyond the ambit of CNR. Perhaps it would be more proper to address this question both to CN and to CP. Since CN is a Crown corporation, we have a responsibility to try to examine this issue in detail and, hopefully, reach a satisfactory conclusion.

It is in that spirit that I look forward to the comments of members of the New Democratic Party and of the Liberal Party. I am confident that they will find support for this measure and I hope that they will be able to support the reference. It is an issue which affects some 47,000 CN pensioners. Perhaps the implications will apply to other railway pensioners as well; let us hope so.

The Government is committed to ensuring that the matter of CN pensions receives the appropriate consideration of the Parliament of Canada. I say that because, as I indicated earlier, Members on all sides of the House for many years have had an abiding interest in this. There are Members here today who have participated in this issue before the standing committee. There have been many inquiries, such as the Hall inquiry on railway pensions in the mid-seventies and there was work following that.

I believe it is fair to say that Members have pursued this issue with a great amount of sincerity. We are trying to capitalize on that goodwill and sincerity to try and reach a fair and equitable solution by having this matter referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. I believe that the Standing Committee on Transport is really the appropriate vehicle to examine this issue. It is the appropriate forum for a number of reasons. First, it is a parliamentary body. I believe the committee will ensure that there are proper public hearings, which I believe is one of the things that is uppermost in the minds of pensioners. Representations that I have received indicate that the pensioners want the opportunity to discuss this issue in a public forum. They want the opportunity to present their concerns and grievances, and to hear the response of CN in front of their elected representatives in a duly constituted public forum. That is very important.

We on this side of the House believe that it is incumbent upon us to provide them with that opportunity. While there are some spokesmen from the Liberal Party, not necessarily in this Chamber today, who might take exception to the forum, I believe it is fair to say that the pensioners have recommended this kind of forum. I was pleased to note that in a CP article just recently Mr. J. Earl White, who has been referred to as the champion of the railway pensioners, said he was very encouraged by the action that the Government was taking. He is the head of the Vancouver based Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association. He retired in 1974 after 46 years of railway service and has been in the forefront of the battle for better pensions ever since. The article reads:

> He said in a telephone interview he asked Mazankowski for the committee study because the issue has been studied enough by outside experts .... Mazankowski understands the issue and will understand the committee's recommendation, White said, adding the committee study is needed to clear away any doubts of how the national railways have abused their employees' pension plan.

I cite that not only because he says some very flattering words about yours truly, but as well because we have captured the essence of what the pensioners want. I think they are pleased with the forum that we are proposing here today.
