OIL SUBSTITUTION AND CONSERVATION ACT CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works; and the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 3072).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the motion that the Bill be read six months hence. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I wish that this Bill would be read about 16 years from now so that as many of my constituents as possible could benefit from the very good programs which had been established by the former Liberal Government. These are the same programs, of course, which saw the axe on black Thursday, November 8, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled in the House the document known as "The Expenditure and Program Review". Of course, Mr. Speaker, this particular document should be known as "the expenditure and program cut-back", because that is all it is. I know that the Hon. House Leader, had he prepared this document, would have been a little more forthright and honest than the Minister of Finance and would have called this book what it is. So it was on black Thursday, November 8, that the axe fell on a number of very good Canadian programs which had been established by the former Liberal Government.

I am sure all the Conservative Members in this House this morning, if they were permitted to speak without being muzzled, would speak in favour of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the CHIP program as well. The Canadian Oil Substitution Program has been very successful. Because of the deadline of March 31, a number of people have rushed to convert their old, inefficient oil furnaces to better systems, such as heat pumps, forced air electric systems, natural gas, wood and so forth, and it has reached a point, Mr. Speaker, where many contractors have run out of the equipment to be installed. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), therefore, has been asked to extend the program. Perhaps if that Minister could extend the program she would, but her boss, the Minister of Finance, won't let her. The Minister of Finance, "Mike the knife" as he is commonly called by some of us in this House, is unable or is unwilling to allow the extension to this worth-while program. This is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker.

I mentioned a moment ago that a number of contractors have run out of equipment. Contractors in the Ottawa area, as a matter of fact, have written to all Hon. Members in the Ottawa area. I know the Conservative Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) have received letters but they have not raised this issue in the House at all, Mr. Speaker. Many people have signed contracts in good faith, and on time, and now will not be able to benefit from this program because of the fact there is no equipment left to instal.

There is another situation which has arisen as well. Some people have had their furnaces installed thinking that they would be eligible for the program. However, all the inspections cannot be carried out before March 31. The Parliamentary Secretary said last week that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has now agreed that those who had a completed installation by March 31, and were only awaiting the inspection, would be able to receive the benefit of the program. I find it passing strange, though, Mr. Speaker, that the contractors have not been made aware of this fact. Ontario Hydro, Ottawa Hydro and all the other agencies who are responsible for administering the program have not been made aware of this fact. It is fine and dandy that the Parliamentary Secretary, with his usual eloquence, has announced in this House that those people who had their installations completed by March 31 but had not had the inspection will still benefit, but I suggest it would help if the public servants in the Ministry as well as all other agencies concerned could be made aware of this fact.

There is another problem which arises, Mr. Speaker. When one of our constituents decides to get his furnace installed, the contractor comes in and proceeds with some part of the installation but because he is so short of components the installation cannot be completed by March 31. Although the installation is already begun, those people will not qualify at all. It is too late for them. They cannot back-track and phone the contractor to come and get the components which are already installed. That won't wash. The consumer is going to be forced to pay.

The very least this Government should do, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you know this being in the non-partisan position you are in, is extend the program until the fall so that installations can be properly done in the summer. Of course, the best solution is to cancel the Government's idea to start with and allow COSP to continue. But again, the big act of the Minister of Finance seems to be what takes effect in this House.

After the Government tabled its expenditure and program review documents it gave a briefing book to Cabinet Ministers which told them what to say if they were asked some embarrassing questions concerning the cut-backs. I have a copy of the briefing book here. There are things the Minister was supposed to say. I am sure the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has her copy handy right now so let us see what they are supposed to reply when asked about the CHIP program. This is supposed to be a question a journalist might ask a Minister: "What is the rationale behind phasing out the Canadian Home Insulation Program? Federal CHIP grants have proven very popular among Canadians". Here is the Minister's tailor-made reply. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary already knows this reply by heart because the Cabinet Minister must have given him a copy of the briefing book even though it is a secret document.

Mr. McDermid: I wrote it.

Mr. Boudria: Maybe he wrote it, Mr. Speaker. It says: "That's correct, and energy conservation in Canadian homes remains an important national objective. But we will have to pursue it in ways less costly to the federal treasury. Home owners will find that investing in energy conservation is still worthwhile, with or without grants. We have extended the program to March 31, 1986, to continue the impact on insulation manufacturers, contractors and consumers". Well, perhaps the Minister can get his home reinsulated without getting a grant, but the majority of my electors and the majority of the electors of the Hon. Member sitting right here cannot afford that. They need assistance to be able to do it.

Mr. McDermid: They have had it for eight years now; what have they been doing?

Mr. Boudria: Again the Parliamentary Secretary is perhaps in a financial position to do everything in one day, but some of my constituents are poor. They cannot afford it. They have to wait until they get the money. Unlike this Government, they cannot just borrow when they need to do something; they have to save up their money first.

Mr. McDermid: They have another year to go.

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps this Tory Government should learn how to do the same thing. The Parliamentary Secretary says they have another year to go. Yes, but at one half the benefit. They are going to be getting less, and that of course is totally unworkable.

Let us hear what the Cabinet Ministers were supposed to answer when they had questions on the oil substitution program. Here is a question: "Does the same reasoning apply to the winding up of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program?" The potential answer is: "Yes, to the extent that converting off oil is a good deal without Government financial help. The trend towards reduced use of oil is well established and federal incentives cannot be continued in a time of restraint". It is a time of restraint—

Mrs. Sparrow: That is right.

Mr. Boudria: —and that is why the grants have been cut off from low-income constituents. I see the Hon. Member from Scarborough—no? I forget the name of her riding. The Hon. Member beside me is saying that is right, it is a time of restraint. This Government says it is a time of restraint.

• (1115)

I am very sorry to have to conclude my remarks so soon, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to tell Hon. Members of all the extravagances of the Government since it has been in power. With unanimous consent of Members I would gladly tell them the cost of renovating Cabinet Ministers' offices.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to reflect on two or three concerns that have been brought to my attention by literally hundreds of my constituents in the last number of weeks. I am, of course, referring to the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program. For all intents and purposes these two programs will be closed down as of March 31 of this year. For most of Canada that is still wintertime. Most of the country is still coming out of the depths of that cold period. It is a difficult time to be making the transition from an oil furnace to a gas furnace, a wood-heated facility, or whatever.

I would like to make some comments on behalf of three groups this morning. The first group is that of the small businesses in my constituency which have been participating in these two programs. By definition these tend to be small businesses which are Canadian owned and community oriented. They contribute to the minor hockey leagues and the Boy Scouts in their communities. On the other hand there are the oil companies of Canada which tend to be dominated by foreign transnational companies.

It is interesting to note that while the Government is busy providing as much as a few billion dollars each year to the foreign multinational oil companies, the programs which have assisted ordinary Canadians and small businesses in the communities of Canada, namely the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program, are being terminated. Those programs were costing a few dollars a year and now the Government is going to tell those people that there is nothing for them any longer. However, the Government will continue with all its grants for the multinationals and it is going to allow them to raise the price of oil in Canada to world prices at the end of the month.

This is a real bonanza for companies such as Imperial Oil. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), has calculated what windfall profits will accrue to companies such as Imperial Oil. Hundreds of millions of dollars will accrue each year as a result of this policy of the Government. Whose side is the Government on? Is it on the side of small Canadian businesses which are involved in providing insulation and the necessary skills and equipment to move off oil? No, it is not on the side of that group, Mr. Speaker. The large multinational oil companies will be receiving benefits from the Government. That is my first point, and as my friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), says, it is a good point which must be made.

We must recognize, Mr. Speaker, that some communities are still in the process of receiving natural gas services. By coincidence my constituency happens to be one of those areas. In the last number of months the Inland Natural Gas Company of British Columbia, with some support from the federal and provincial Governments, has been extending services into seven communities in my constituency for the first time. Unfortunately, the thousands of families in these areas will not be able to take advantage of this program because they happen to be out of step with it.

That is why I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) put forward the suggestion that we should hold this legislation off for a number of months. Rather than terminate this support by March 31, it could be continued to at least the end of September so that people in communities throughout Canada can have access to this particular opportunity. It is a very reasoned amendment and if the Government believes in fairness and equity in the country, it should consider this six-month extension to give families in areas like Shuswap, in British Columbia, and Brant, in Ontario, a chance to use these programs. However, they will be cut off at the knees as a result of this very cold and callous decision by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) of this new Conservative Government.

This legislation also causes me some concern about our commitment to conservation. Canadians should be encouraged to become more concerned about conservation. The programs under this legislation were meant to give low and middle-income Canadians an incentive that would enable them to move off their dependency on the non-renewable resource of oil, which is becoming increasingly expensive.

The Government is not interested in encouraging conservation. It is more interested in assisting the multinational oil companies by allowing the price of oil to increase to the world price while providing no encouragement for average Canadians who want to be relieved from their dependency on this expensive form of energy. We should recognize that this legislation represents a regressive step because these programs have been recognized world-wide as a very progressive granting system that allowed ordinary Canadians to move off this dependency on oil energy.

The Government has indicated that it does not want to encourage conservation. Rather than assist Canadian-owned small businesses that participated in these programs, it would rather assist the multinationals. Such action would make ordinary Canadians question the Government's commitment to small businesses in Canada and to middle and low-income Canadians. It indicates very clearly that the support that the new Government gives is to the large multinational and transnational oil companies.

During the short life of these programs Canada saved approximately 42,000 barrels of oil per day. We have saved 15 million barrels of oil a year because Canadians have moved from their dependency on oil for home heating by using these programs. Yet they will be discontinued.

To date, nearly one million units have been converted across Canada. This is one Government program that has been a real success and has met with support from the people of Canada. The Government has eliminated a program that has been working, moved us from our dependency on oil and has assisted us to become more self-sufficient in oil production. It says now that this program is no longer required.

The Government's introduction of this legislation is a disgrace. Therefore I am pleased to be associated with my friend and colleague, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who has made the point that this legislation should be given a six-month hoist so that people who want to take advantage of these programs will have another six months to do so. In addition, perhaps it will give the Government time to come to its senses and see that this is a very regressive piece of legislation.

● (1125)

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) to whom I must respond said that if the back-benchers on the Government side had their way they would probably be agreeing with him and voting against this legislation. Sir, nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Penner: Lost your idealism?

Mr. Nickerson: The impetus for bringing in legislation such as this comes from Members on this side. How many times has the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) made the very recommendation that these two programs, the Oil Substitution and Conservation Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program, be dismissed? The intention of the former Liberal Government was to let the program go on until the end of 1990. What this Bill would do is advance that date until the end of this fiscal year. What we have is a difference of timing. The Liberals would not let the thing expire anyway. Now they get all excited about it and say this is the worst thing that ever happened to Canadians who have to heat their homes.

It is a great pleasure for me to be able to stand here today and say that I am 100 per cent fully in support of this legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: When it comes to the expenditure of very limited amounts of public moneys which this Government has available to it, our stated case is that we want that money to go where it can benefit the people who are most in need.

Mr. Boudria: Buy limousines. That is what you want to do.

Mr. Nickerson: The people most in need are not the ones who are taking advantage of programs such as the ones we are doing away with today. The people who are taking maximum advantage of these two programs are the people who are reasonably well off in Canadian society.

Mr. Waddell: Not so.

Mr. Nickerson: They are the people who have nice houses. It is good for them to be able to save a few dollars at taxpayers' expense. The people who really need assistance have not been taking advantage of these programs. It is the reasonably well off Canadians who have done so. It is our view on this side of the House that Canadians are responsible people.

It is not necessary for the Government, by means of programs such as this, to direct that people spend money in certain areas and not in others. We think that Canadians should be taxed as lightly as possible and that the maximum amount of funds be left in their pockets. We believe Canadians should make the decision as to how they want to spend those funds.

What the Liberals have been doing is what the NDP would undoubtedly do even more were that Party in power—but that is never likely to happen. They might, of course, come back as the Official Opposition a few years from now; that is a distinct possibility.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): A very real possibility.

Mr. Nickerson: Yes, the way the Liberals are acting is making it more and more a distinct possibility every day. The Liberals have been taking money out of people's pockets by way of high taxation and then giving it back to them in dribs and drabs in programs such as these. Canadians, however, have refuted that attitude. They said that they have had enough of that and that they want to make their own decisions. Canadians want to decide whether to spend their money on new furnaces, to drink it away in a bar, or to invest it in something. That is the people's decision, not the Government's decision to make. When Canadians were given the choice on September 4, they voted to make their own decisions.

Mr. Boudria: They voted for the promises and you broke them.

Mr. Nickerson: In programs such as the ones before us where the Government has to deal with thousands and thousands of individuals and all kinds of different contractors, administration is extremely difficult. We have to hire more and more people, put them into the Government's employ, and then they make the decision whether Fred Smith or Bill Jones will get this money.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is called job creation.

Mr. Nickerson: I do not think that is the way we should go about this. We should try and keep the Public Service to a minimum. We should not have to hire more and more people for very complicated systems of administration nor give these people the authority to say whether one person gets a grant and somebody else does not.

Mr. Waddell: If you did not give a grant to the Northwest Territories, it would disappear.

Mr. Nickerson: When Government has programs or legislation in effect, they should be easy to administer. A program should be something in black and white where one knows whether a person is eligible or not. It should not be necessary to have someone in the employ of the Government to make that decision for you.

• (1130)

It was part of the Liberal practice to try, wherever possible, to give out cheques to individuals regardless of the general expense. They took money out of the pockets of people and then gave it back to them in some form or another. Because of complicated administration, they got back maybe 60 cents on the dollar. By giving people these cheques, the Liberals were trying to buy votes. That was the idea behind this type of program. It was not to encourage oil conservation or all the great reasons which were given at the time. It was very simple: it was political. Somebody would have a $500 cheque from the Government and would say: "what great guys are these Liberals; we will vote for them". That was the idea but it did not work.

In my opinion the time is right for getting rid of these programs and others like them. We do not need to put it off for six months as is sought in the motion. The time for decision is now, and I hope we can vote on it in the very near future.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have read very carefully the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary in introducing this Bill. I have also listened carefully to the interventions of Government Members when I have been in the House. While they have made some persuasive arguments, I remain unconvinced that this Bill is at all wise.

The Bill proposes to eliminate two energy grant programs. COSP, which was introduced in 1977 to wind up on December 31, 1990, is being cut off from March 31, except for those who signed contracts before November 8. They will have up to June 30 to complete conversions. The second program, CHIP, which was introduced in 1977 to wind up at the end of 1987, is being cut off in 1986. In both cases I have the criticism that Canadians are being deprived of predictability and order, in that programs which they had reasonably expected to continue are being cut off.

However, the deadline in CHIP is a little more reasonable. The deadline for COSP is totally impractical. A winter-time deadline makes no sense. Gas companies cannot instal lines in frozen ground. At this time of the year, furnace suppliers are not making furnaces; they are making air-conditioners for summer. The program is needed, as evidenced by the fact that after the November 8 announcement there was a rush of applications. Consumers' Gas has been swamped and cannot possibly meet the requests by March 31. While I disagree with the intent of the Bill, a six-month deadline would at least make it slightly less objectionable and more practical.

Since 1980, over 425,000 Canadians have received grants to convert from oil to an alternative form of home heating. This has resulted in a reduction of some 10 million barrels of oil consumption each year. CHIP was also well used by Canadians. In 1983 alone, according to the figures of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the program produced a $500 million reduction in home heating costs. Contrary to what has been said by the Hon. Member who just spoke, this has not been a program predominantly used by the affluent. In fact, a very substantial number of people who used the program have had family incomes as low as $15,000 per year. It was a program which encouraged Canadians to invest in the future by conservation. It was also a program which enabled low and middle-income Canadians to reduce their fuel bills, thus leaving them more disposable income. Also the program was used by a number of small businesses and small contractors. In the present climate of restraint, it is not easy to see how the opportunities for employment that were thus created can be replaced.

In the November 8 economic statement not only were these two programs axed, most of the programs for renewable energy also became casualties of restraint. Generally I find this to be a short-sighted approach. It takes about 50 years to research, develop, test and implement an alternative energy structure, yet the Government is eliminating the entire Energy Division at the National Research Council; that is, 61 person-years, two-thirds being professional.

The total cuts in the area of energy research and development amount to over $600 million, and $34.6 million of this is being cut from the National Research Council. Before the cuts Canada was recognized as a leader in several areas of alternative energy development and opportunities for export were emerging. The cuts have jeopardized all this. Also sold short are the developing and least developed countries which might have been beneficiaries of Canadian research and development in alternative energy sources, such as vertical access wind turbines. We all know that part of the reason for the crushing debt loads of developing countries, a situation which also represents risks to our whole economic structure, is their energy payments.

Our own conventional crude oil reserves are finite. In the United States and Venezuela, conventional crude oil reserves have passed their peak. Even in the North Sea and the Soviet Union an end can be foreseen. The Government's cuts in alternative energy and its cancellation of programs encouraging conservation and off-oil conversion appear to be very short-sighted indeed.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to spend a few moments this morning talking about Bill C-24. We are now at the stage where we have moved to delay the passage of the Bill so that there can be six more months to consider the proposal.

The proposal is to cut COSP as well as CHIP. Both these programs are to die at the end of March, 1985. These announcements were made in the November 8, 1984 economic statement. No applicants, that is those who did not have contracts in progress prior to the economic statement, have been considered over the winter.

I should like to review the beginnings of the program, from where it came and why it was put into place. We are about half-way through a long-term program to upgrade housing and insulation through a retrofitting program on houses built prior to 1980. We are also attempting to wean Canadian home owners off so much dependency on Canadian fuel oil. The reason is that we are importing oil to heat houses, particularly in the Maritimes, Ontario and Quebec. This has been very high-cost oil. The idea was to reduce the requirement for oil by improving the insulation quality of the homes and, second, to switch from oil to heating fuels that are more likely to be available in the long term in Canada. The Government was trying to have people switch to natural gas, which is presumed to be in abundance for the next 25 or 30 years, wood or electricity. Very much of our electricity, in eastern Canada at least, comes from water power which we assume will be there for quite a long time.

The basic over-all reasons for the program appeared to make sense. In fact, they made so much sense that this part of the notorious National Energy Program was supported by the then opposition Conservatives, now the Government, as well as by this Party. All Parties supported this part of the National Energy Program. It was supported without reservation. The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) thought the program should go somewhat further than it did at the time it was being debated. However, there was no indication during the debate on the original motion to create the COSP or CHIP programs that the Conservative Party would hack it or stop the programs in mid-stream.

The programs have met their objectives thus far. They were to have continued until 1990. Both programs have got literally half-way through the objectives, even though half of the time has not elapsed in both cases. We have succeeded in creating jobs with this series of programs. To date under the COSP program, there have been some 50,000 person-years of employment created, all in the private sector; and as my friend from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out, all among the small-business sector of the country. The CHIP program, the insulation program, to date has created some 44,150 person-years of employment, again among very small businesses and contractors. The expectation was that the oil substitution program would have created, had it been allowed to run until 1990, some 59,000 person-years of employment, which would be even more than has been created thus far. The insulation program is estimated to have still another 30,000 person-years of employment that could be created had that program been continued.

What seems to have been the problem with the program? I do not think Canadians had any problem. The Government now seems to have a problem with the program. It has not explained to my satisfaction what is wrong with the general thesis that was followed in the program; that is, to wean people off dependence on oil. What is wrong with reducing the volume of oil used to heat houses?

We have had some good success. For example, as a result of the insulation program, just half-way through the program we have saved some 23,000 barrels of oil per day in this country. Put another way, that is enough to heat 360,000 Canadian homes for one more year. That could have been doubled had the program been allowed to run the full course of its term, yet the Government decided that is not good use of Canadian money.

This program has been used by people in the lower income group. Contrary to what some Government Members have said, their own Department of Energy pointed out in its study that the insulation program has constituted 43 per cent of all retrofitting work in the market-place. Sixty-five per cent of the insulation activities would not have occurred had it not been for CHIP.

Two-thirds of the people who did insulate their homes could not have afforded it or would not have had an incentive to do the insulation without the CHIP program. As well, it was found during the survey that the other one-third, or 37 per cent of CHIP users, would not have done any insulation at all had it not been for the program. They could not have seen their way clear to do the insulation without the assistance of the dollar for dollar matching up to a maximum of $800.

The program has been doing its job among the targeted group of Canadians. It has been reducing fuel bills for those Canadians who have thus far been able to take part in the program. It has reduced the total output of Canadian dollars to buy foreign oil, particularly that imported on the east side of the country. Therefore, the program has been doing its job. It is very hard for us to understand why, in spite of all these clear indications of success, the Government would so ruthlessly and so quickly cut out the program.

There are many areas of the country where natural gas is just now becoming available. The installation of the lines are now going in or will be going in over the course of the next year or two. We have been told by the industry that there is a surplus, relatively speaking, of natural gas compared to oil and that it makes good sense for Canadians to switch from one to the other.

Given the promise or intention of the Government to move to something called world prices, and we are not sure what that means, and given the fact that world prices seem to be hovering or perhaps falling, where is the incentive for people to move off oil on to gas? The feeling of a lot of people is that, given that the old furnace still works, why switch when oil prices might be coming down? Gas prices seem to be going up a little bit. These people are not too sure that the switch-over will make sense. Many will still continue on. In fact, I believe we would continue to have the kind of participation we have had in the past if the program were to continue its full term to the end of 1990. Those communities now having the gas available to them would find most of their residents switching from their current oil furnaces to natural gas. The over-all intention for the program would be completed. Canada would have become less dependent on imported oil.

The switch-over to the use of natural gas as well as the use of electricity and wood sources would result in Canadians being better off. Taxpayers would be better off because we would not be subsidizing the importation of oil. It would make good sense to use taxpayers' money to work at conserving the amount of energy we use. Instead, the Government has chosen another route, which we do not think will work.

We believe it makes good sense to spend the next six months reviewing the program. It would give the Minister and his officials time to review the data that they have before them. They could act on that in a good scientific way. The data tells them they should continue the program. This House thinks it should as well.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with those Members who have already spoken in saying that Bill C-24 which we are debating, which cancels two good Government programs, is regrettable in the extreme. The Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program were two programs which were effective and necessary.

Many Members from all Parties have in a variety of ways praised those two programs. We have been told that together the two programs have conserved 60,000 barrels of oil a day. That is no small accomplishment. We have also been told that as a result of COSP other forms of energy have been conserved. Canadians have been encouraged to use alternate sources of energy. That is something about which we talked for many years and now it is being done. Those two programs created jobs, and were used by all income groups. In fact, one-quarter of the family groupings which used the two programs were low-income families. Those families used the programs for a very good reason; they had to do something to cut the big heating bills which were imposed upon them because they used oil. Of course, other income groups took advantage of the program, but we should not forget that the grants for both of the programs were taxable and that the Government recovered 30 per cent to 50 per cent of the money. At the same time those grants performed a very useful undertaking for society. The Government does not have a fair, just and equitable anti-deficit policy. It is going to spend $105 billion this year. Canada will have the largest deficit which has ever been incurred in its history. The Government does not have an anti-deficit policy. If it had one, surely these two programs would be allowed to continue until their original expiry dates—1990, in the case of COSP, and 1987 in the case of CHIP. The cancellation of these two programs and the cutting of other programs, such as the regional development programs and programs in the Canadian Wildlife Service, is not for the purpose of reducing the deficit. Rather, the moneys are being gathered and redirected, diverted or siphoned to other areas which the Government feels have higher priorities. After several months it is becoming clear that the Government's priorities do not lie with programs for the people or the environment.

During the election campaign hundreds of promises were put forward by the Conservative Party. Most of those promises have already been forgotten and others have been disavowed. Some have been reinterpreted and many have been postponed indefinitely. It is no wonder. As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said during the election campaign, $20 billion was just too rich for our blood.

However, there is one promise to which the Government adhered, and that is the promise that it was going to cosy up to the United States administration. The Government has done that. We have lost FIRA, and programs for the people, the environment and regional development have been either discontinued or reduced. Why? Certainly, so that more money will be available. Money will come from the cut-backs in these programs, plus the money which the Government will borrow, and it will be directed toward defence expenditures.

A recent article in The Financial Post, dated March 16, indicated:

> The Department of National Defence is quickly emerging as a major force in Ottawa and a spender that will create problems in a Government pledged to bring the deficit under control.

In cosying up to the U.S. administration, Canada as a country has decided that it too has to pack bigger and better guns on its hips. Defence issues are now in the forefront of the Government's policy-making decisions. The Government has no anti-deficit policy, but it clearly has a pro-military policy. I think Canadians should wake up and realize that we cannot afford to be like the big guys on the block. It is silly for us to strut around as if we were a big power in world affairs—all colour co-ordinated too!

Mr. McDermid: What's that got to do with Bill C-24?

Mr. Penner: It has everything to do with Bill C-24, because some of the money will come from the termination of these programs. There are other more important national goals, objectives and priorities. I would remind the House that the decision to terminate COSP and CHIP is foolish and wrong-headed. I would like to illustrate why.

The Government continues to spend money to encourage the expansion of natural gas distribution systems. The Government has not yet decided to cancel that program, although we may hear more about that in the future. Citizens have responded very favourably to the possibility of tying into the new gas-line systems. Quite rightly, Canadians thought they had until 1990 to make a decision as to whether they would or would not do so. However, now the deadline is March 31, with a small extension to the end of June for people who applied before the end of November.

I am speaking about this today because that deadline and the extension discriminates against the people I represent. My constituents in northern Ontario will not have the opportunity to hook up to the new gas-line systems which are now under construction. Gas companies stopped accepting applications for hook-ups last December because they knew that it was impossible to break frost-covered ground during the winter or early spring. There will not be enough time for my constituents and other people in northern Ontario to take advantage of this last-minute opportunity by the end of June.

I am quite certain that Conservative Members from northern Ontario—the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher), the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais), and the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall)—must be raising their voices in strong protest in the Government caucus. They must be saying that it is unfair to northern Ontario. They must believe that COSP must be extended and that it should continue until 1990. At least, they should be saying that the program should not be terminated in June, because it is not fair. I am sure those three Tory Members are saying that, unless the Government yields and makes amendments to Bill C-24, they will join with the Liberals and the New Democrats and vote against the legislation.

The one Member who will have a problem will be the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie, as he is a member of the Cabinet. Of course, the only choice which he has is to resign. That man told us during the election campaign that he would put northern Ontario far ahead of government decisions which would impinge negatively on that region.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He said that?

Mr. Penner: He sure did. He said that he would represent the people of northern Ontario and that he would not let them down. The Hon. Members for Timmins-Chapleau and Timiskaming also said that. Now is the chance for them to show their true colours. Will they represent the region, or will they toe the line, take their orders and vote blindly against the region which elected them?

This Bill must be defeated. Bill C-24 is unacceptable. I do not think it can be improved in committee. I agree with the former speaker, as I too believe that the Government should take a fresh look at this legislation. The Government should listen to the three Tory Members from northern Ontario. They should support us today in hoisting the Bill for six months. These men should have an opportunity to bring the Government to its senses. At the end of that six-month period, I am sure the Government will admit that it made a mistake, that Bill C-24 is not a good idea and that it will provide better legislation.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to oppose Bill C-24 and to ask for a six-month hoist. I believe it makes no sense to deal with this Bill in the middle of winter when the program cannot be used by many northerners and people who cannot connect their gas lines in this type of weather.

• (1200)

The principle of the Bill also makes no sense, Mr. Speaker. I cannot understand why the Conservative Government wants to cut back on two very important programs, the Canada Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program. I might add that I believe the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, which is also being cut back, really should be considered in the same category.

Why does the Government want to cut grants which are very beneficial to low and middle-income home owners? I would think that probably the majority of homes in western and northern Canada are much older homes and have greater insulation problems. Why does the Government want to cut back on grants for these types of homes, turning against the whole philosophy of grants, and in turn give such large amounts to the oil companies either through direct grants or tax write-offs through the PIP program?

My colleague, our energy critic, tells me that $1.6 billion is being given away to oil companies this year, Mr. Speaker. I cannot understand why a Conservative Government, which says that it does not want give-aways or grants, would give that amount of money to the oil companies when it is taking $250 million away from both the Home Insulation Program and the Oil Substitution Program. Approximately $125 million is being cut from each of those programs this year. That really does not make any sense from the point of view of logic. It, of course, makes a great deal of sense from the point of view of the dogma and political philosophy of the Progressive Conservative Party.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are many reasons why these programs are important and a good investment. They really do not cost a lot, they improve homes, and they do stimulate small business. First, consumers will save on their heating costs and for many families who are in older homes this is quite an important item. It is of particular importance to senior citizens whose taxes are increasing and whose fuel costs are really going up, not to mention food costs. It is important to save on heating costs from the point of view of the consumer, particularly consumers who do not have a lot of money and could not insulate their homes without help. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, these programs also mean a great deal to northerners and people who do not have insulated homes, being perhaps the older homes in the east.

I cannot understand why the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) would support this Bill. Surely in the interests of his constituents he would oppose this Bill and would strongly support the kinds of programs which would help the people of his riding insulate their homes. Why is he supporting a program which is going to be imposed in the middle of winter when his own constituents cannot make use of it? Those who did not get in on the program previously would have had no chance to get in during the winter months. That is one of the reasons we believe a six-month hoist is very important.

As my colleague has also mentioned, there is the whole matter of energy conservation. That was the main reason, of course, that the Liberals brought these programs into existence in the first place. The speaker from the Liberal Party who just spoke a few moments ago said that 60,000 barrels of oil per day are saved through these programs. I agree with him that that is a significant saving. I spend part of my time on one of the Gulf Islands just off the mainland of British Columbia. Many people there are now heating with wood. Some people are experimenting with solar heating. There are many improved methods of heating now which make it very sensible to look at alternate energy sources. I think these kinds of grants to home owners make a great deal of sense, coupled with research and development.

The third point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that this program helps to improve our housing stock. The RRAP program, which the Conservative Government is now cutting back—about which the municipalities are very concerned—is another program that made a great deal of sense. It was used to improve older housing stock, to insulate and improve the quality of housing. It also enabled some people to subdivide their homes. In some communities where there is a tight housing problem many older people who have large homes are "over-housed", as CMHC refers to it. Through some of these programs it is possible to subdivide so they could perhaps have separate accommodations or in-law suites which would help to house more people. But they have to have some help in conversions and insulation. The CHIP and COSP programs were certainly valid programs from their point of view.

These programs are labour-intensive programs. They create and maintain jobs. In British Columbia we heard last week that 60 per cent or 70 per cent of construction workers are out of work. This is not only because there is a slack period in construction but also because of high technology being brought in. There are new methods of construction being used in large apartment buildings and major construction projects. We were told that in one high-rise development in downtown Vancouver which is using prefabricated methods—the walls are brought in and put up by cranes—they are now in the second stage of high technology and have reduced the number of carpenters needed to just three carpenters per high-rise. There is no question that many of these large projects are not using our skilled carpenters. Therefore, the smaller projects, home insulation and conversions to other heating methods, as well as the RRAP program to rehabilitate older housing, are very sensible from a job and labour intensive point of view.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) mentioned the importance of these programs to small businesses. I would have thought the Tories would have been concerned about small business. They certainly say they are. But when it comes right down to it, they are willing to whack the small businesses in local communities who are providing the kinds of services which home owners need through these two programs. They are not willing to whack the big businesses, the large oil companies and the grants they receive from the National Energy Program.

I think those are my main remarks at this point, Mr. Speaker. These two programs save on heating costs for consumers, they conserve energy and will help to improve our older housing stock. They create jobs, are labour intensive and are supports for small businesses, many of which are close to bankruptcy. We do not feel that this Bill should go forward. We want to have a delay of at least six months, because even if the Hon. Member for Western Arctic does not, we feel some concern for the people in the northern communities who have not had a chance to maximize their use of this program. We also have serious concerns about the economic, social and conservational values of these programs and what would be the result of cutting back on them altogether. We do ask for a six-month delay with the option to go ahead and continue these programs.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join other Hon. Members in asking the Government to postpone consideration of this Bill for at least six months. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have already had an opportunity to speak to this subject, and I said that up to now, all Government spokesmen had agreed these programs were good programs and had been truly beneficial to Canadians.

• (1210)

[English]

I had an opportunity of speaking once on this Bill and I am happy to be able to join with other Members who have called on the Government to accept at least a six-month delay in the implementation of this cut. The record is clear. We have heard Members from all sides of the House, including the Government side, state time and again that these programs have helped considerably in the conservation of energy. It is clear that in the first few years of this program the reduction in energy consumption by Canadians has been dramatic, but we know that we still have a long way to go. In fact, we are among the highest consumers of energy in the world.

The particular concern met by this program was the use of non-renewable energy resources. We have to get off oil if we are to utilize Canada's renewable energy resources. However, at the same time as Government Members stood in the House to say what a great program this was and how it helped Canadians of all income levels but particularly those of lesser means to develop conservation in their own homes, the Government insists on cutting it off.

There is one fallacy I would like to address which I think has muddied the waters regarding the Government's participation in this debate. Member after Member on the Government side has stood to say that this program was utilized only by wealthy Canadians. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding of Hamilton East, which happens to be the most industrialized riding in Canada, the average wage is well below what you would consider upper class living in Canada. I represent working people who, in many cases, are struggling to make ends meet. You know that primary industries like steel have been particularly hard hit in the last few years, and many of the workers in my riding were able to take advantage of the financial incentive of these programs to get off oil. So I ask those Government Members who claim that this was a program for the rich to table the figures because they will show that communities which are not seen to be rich communities, like certain remote areas of Newfoundland, were effective users of the program. People in ridings like Hamilton East were able to get a boost of, in some cases, up to $800 to assist them to get off the non-renewable oil which has been a bane in the world market-place since the mid-1970s. Unfortunately, at the same time the Government is cutting the program off.

What have we seen in its place? We have not seen an over-all global approach to Conservative energy policy. In fact, this legislation is typical of the Government's non-governing approach since September 4. No one would argue that the Conservatives have been given a massive mandate to govern and make tough decisions. But the tough decisions do not involve moving in piecemeal on programs like COSP without offering a panoramic vision of what we want to do to encourage Canadian-based renewable energy resource consumption. In fact, it has been a shooting gallery approach to economic reform. I feel like I am watching the ducks fall one by one and at the same time there is nothing coming up to replace them. Therefore, I would ask the Government to look at a six-month delay of this measure so that it can come back to the House with an over-all strategy for renewable energy consumption and conservation for all Canadians.

I know that Members on the Government side must get tired of hearing their own words thrown back at them, but I refer to the hundreds of promises made by the Conservatives during the election campaign in which they made energy a top priority. There were 39 promises made to the Canadian people dealing with everything from a kind of nirvana-like panacea that they would achieve with the Province of Alberta—and we have seen where that has gone—to support for the development of renewable energy sources for Canadian home owners. But as soon as they were elected we saw that the promises they made to get that little "X" on the ballot meant very little and they are now prepared to cut the very program which they said was of such help to middle and lower-income Canadians.

I frankly cannot help but support the statements made by my colleague from Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) when he said that this Bill discriminates against people in the north, including northern Ontario. I must warn this Government that, notwithstanding its cozy relationship with the provincial Conservatives, we are probably going to be in a provincial election campaign in the very near future and the people of northern Ontario are going to be watching this Government to see what kind of message it is sending out concerning support for the north. The verbiage is fine, the appointment of northern Ministers is fine; but when you look at the bread and butter issues like the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, you see that the Government is clearly discriminating against residents of northern Ontario.

I know the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior spent the weekend travelling through the north with Ontario Party Leader David Peterson, and anyone who has travelled through the north will be able to tell this Chamber that the people of northern Ontario recognize the discrimination which exists in Bills like this one. It is fine for Members from Toronto to say: "No problem; we can meet the March deadline and get the installations done before the end of June". But if you live in an area where there is frost up until late April or early May, those kinds of installations are going to be almost impossible. I would think, Mr. Speaker, that of the 211 Government Members, there are many who must occupy themselves with constituency matters because they do not have responsibilities as Ministers or Parliamentary Secretaries. I would think that at least these Members would be lobbying the Minister for an extension, if not a hoist of the Bill for six months, to allow those people living in northern communities to take advantage of the installation process. They could suggest to the Government that the northern portions of the country be allowed installations well into the summer. That would be of down to earth and practical assistance for Canadians. It would not be an esoteric attempt to obfuscate the fact that this Government is afraid to lead.

This Government has not said to the people it would table a plan for energy. It has not said it would table an agreement with Alberta. It has not come through with the hard decisions with respect to energy pricing and federal-provincial accords. Frankly, what this Government has introduced is a cheap attempt to tell the Canadian people that it is cutting back when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is swelling his own coffers and increasing his own staff by 54 per cent.

The Prime Minister and the Government are saying to the Canadian people that they are going to cut off the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, one of the few programs which the Conservatives still have in place to assist working Canadians and people who are trying to own their own homes. Anyone who has considered the increasing mortgage rates and the recent move of CMHC to double the cost of mortgage guarantees will know that the Government has already added at least a $3,000 burden on the average new home buyer across Canada. The people of Canada expect and want more from the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy).

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the Members of the Opposition are complaining because the Government is cutting a program here or there. They should ask themselves why the Government is cutting those programs. We have been in government for only six months and we inherited a deficit of $35 billion this year. We have to put the house in order; it is as simple as that. We cannot continue spending and spending. There is a time when we must put the house in order and start governing.

In this country we have had programs for industry and for home owners, but these programs have not contributed to the economic growth of the country. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) why she believes we should continue spending rather than studying the real problems of deficit reduction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn).

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I think the Member who was just on his feet thought we had a question period, but we are on short 10-minute speeches and do not. I would like to make a very brief intervention with respect to this Bill.

At the outset I would like to say how much I regret that the Government wants to get rid of the CHIP and COSP programs, both of which were extremely popular and effective. Shortly after the CHIP program was introduced I was in Washington with the acid rain sub-committee. Our American counterparts thought that it was such a wonderful program that they were going to make an effort to bring in a similar program in the United States. It was a very innovative program, as was COSP. Both of these programs directly benefited individuals. In the House we often talk about the little guy or the ordinary Canadian. These programs were targeted to ordinary Canadians and once again the Conservatives are ignoring ordinary Canadians by withdrawing both of these programs.

A few moments ago it was asked how we can continue to spend money and give grants. I agree that there is a very high deficit in the country of some $35 billion. It is not quite correct to say that it is entirely the fault of the previous Government. Nonetheless, we have a very high budgetary deficit, as does the United States. That ultra conservative country to the south of us has the biggest deficit in its history and it is growing at a rate five times faster than ours. That is primarily the result of grants, expenditures, or tax breaks to the arms industry. Where are the moral standards of the Government? The Government is cutting off grant programs to ordinary Canadians which help them heat their homes more efficiently and at less cost. Its great Republican buddies to the south have racked up an almost $200 billion deficit, most of which is spent on armaments. Who is right and who is wrong on this matter in a moral sense?

It is quite right to say that the CHIP and COSP programs cost the Government money in the short run. However, I am convinced that we are going to save money in the long run through job creation, more people working, more people paying taxes, lower fuel bills and lower costs of operating a home or small rental accommodations such as triplexes, duplexes and fourplexes. We are going to be less dependent on oil which is not a renewable source of energy. We have an abundance of natural gas and electricity in certain parts of the country. In my opinion terminating the COSP and CHIP programs is a backward step.

Many speakers this morning have addressed the deadline. I know that the fiscal year ends at the end of March. It is very strange that in this computerized age we cannot legally balance the Government's books by giving extensions of one, two, or three months. On March 31 there is still frost under most of Canada. It is unfair to try to force gas companies to switch over residential heating at this time of the year. It is inappropriate and unfair to the consumer.

I urgently request the Government to give a six-month extension, at least until September. In the summer time we can wait for our furnaces to be converted. In March that is virtually impossible on about 95 per cent of the land mass of Canada. I suppose in Windsor or along the north shore of Lake Erie the conversion can be made right now. However, in my riding of Brant, which is one of the most southern ridings in Canada and is only a few miles from Lake Erie, Union Gas has made the statement that there is no way it can fill all of the orders by the deadline. A lot of people are going to suffer as a result of this ridiculous deadline.

There are two or three points which I would like to stress, Mr. Speaker. The CHIP and COSP programs were excellent. Why defeat excellent programs? There are a lot of grant programs in the country which should be done away with, such as the huge tax concessions to the oil companies. We can get rid of those, but why hurt the ordinary Canadian householder who is trying to cut back on his overhead costs? Why not wait for a few months or a few years? Both of these programs are essential. They are economic in the long term. They will save the country untold amounts of money in the long term. It is a worth-while investment for the Government of Canada to continue to be involved in.

I have not heard of any changes in the American counterparts to the CHIP and COSP programs. When these programs were introduced they were world leaders in terms of making us less dependent on oil than we were a few years ago. I am convinced that by creating more jobs through the conversion program there will be more people working and therefore paying taxes, which will help to make up in the long term for what the Government may be losing in the short term. Let us not be penny wise and pound foolish. That is really what it boils down to.

I urgently ask the Government to give at least a three-month extension until the end of June. That would allow people to apply to the alternate energy companies to have the conversion done. I hope the Government will take these suggestions into consideration and make the appropriate changes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) has spoken on the amendment. There are no questions or comments on a 10-minute speech. Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Kindy: On a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make my own modest contribution to the debate on Bill C-24. First of all, I support a six-month postponement for this Bill because I think the Government would be ill-advised to terminate the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Oil Substitution Program before their expiry date.

We must not forget that the combined effect of these two programs is that Canadians are saving 60,000 barrels of oil daily, which is quite considerable, in addition to the benefits to individuals who may receive grants of up to $500 for home insulation and up to $800 for conversion of heating systems.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to go back in time to put these two programs in their proper context. Their history goes back to the 1973 energy crisis, when the oil-producing countries, and more specifically the members of OPEC, agreed unanimously to a drastic increase in the price of oil, a decision that had considerable repercussions internationally and resulted in a heavy outflow of capital from oil-consuming to oil-producing countries. Here in Canada, one of the most significant effects of the 1973 oil crisis was that we started to realize how limited our oil reserves actually were and that we could certainly not look forward to a future untroubled by concerns about our oil consumption. Besides making us realize that our oil reserves were not as abundant as we thought, the energy crisis also brought home to us how insecure our foreign oil supplies could be with the kind of changes that were taking place on the international oil market.

First of all, this decision by OPEC led countries to seek new sources of conventional oil that is, accelerate exploration. It also was instrumental in making countries look for alternative energy sources in order to lessen the impact of rising oil prices. Here in Canada, for instance, we had two megaprojects, and we tried to develop the oil sands. Today, however, because of downward fluctuating world oil prices, oil sands exploration projects that seemed promising have been put on hold. Because of lower oil prices, we are no longer certain that tapping these energy sources would be a viable undertaking. What would be the most logical reaction of oil-consuming countries that are trying to protect themselves against foreign controlled price fluctuations? It was to reduce demand in order to reduce consumption and also, and especially, in order to force down the price of oil on the international market.

I remember attending meetings with representatives of the OECD countries in Paris two years ago, where I found that the industrialized countries, in other words, the biggest oil consumers, were trying to align projects in order to try and reduce their dependence on OPEC with respect to oil prices and oil supplies. Debate centred constantly on the strongest and most basic weapon to deal with the anarchy on the oil market, and it was to reduce demand. And that is what most industrialized countries have done, with a great deal of success. We must not forget that in Canada, among the programs that have made a vital contribution towards reducing consumption, we have had the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Program, in addition to new Canadian standards aimed at reducing the consumption of gas on our highways. This finally produced the degree of co-ordination we have among oil-consuming countries today, and, interestingly, resulted in the present situation where we are seeing a drop in world prices which was, of course, aided and abetted by the arrival on the market of large quantities of North Sea oil. Nevertheless, it is essential that in the years to come, all countries that are big oil consumers introduce policies aimed at controlling oil consumption.

It is unfortunate that this Government should now be trying to terminate these programs before the date on which they are due to expire. I think this is tantamount to abdicating an essential responsibility that all industrialized and oil-consuming countries should have to introduce measures to ensure that world oil consumption is reduced to minimum acceptable levels.

Terminating these programs prematurely will, of course, have other disadvantages. These programs had been very well received by all Canadian consumers. There has been an unending stream of applications for grants at the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which dispenses the grants. Contractors have backlogs of home insulation jobs and home heating conversions for Canadians who want to convert from oil to gas or other forms of energy. All of this proves that the program has been a tremendous success, and at the same time, that Bill C-24 does not meet the expectations of Canadians. Canadians want these programs to continue, and that is the reason for that unending stream of applications to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Speaker, I represent a riding in downtown Montreal, where average incomes are far from high, where people live in homes that are often between 60 and 100 years old, which are poorly insulated and thus difficult to heat, so that heating bills are high and on top of that, people do not really have the money to pay those bills.

This program is very popular in my part of the country, because it saves people a lot of money. Mr. Speaker, there are old houses in the southern part of Montreal that are not insulated at all, because it was not customary to do so at the time they were built. Today, we find that by bringing these houses up to the insulation standards of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, we are actually cutting heating bills in half. This is of considerable benefit to the people living in these old buildings, in other words, to the consumer.

Another thing—once these houses have been insulated with the help of Government grants, and once heating bills have been reduced, there is an increase in general comfort. These homes have become more comfortable to live in because they are warmer in the winter and better insulated and sealed.

The program has been very successful for the reasons I just mentioned, and Canadian users of the program have now realized that the program was necesssary. When Members go back to their ridings on the weekend, people ask them: Fight for this measure as much as you can. The Government must not terminate these programs now. They must be allowed to continue.

That is exactly why our Party is opposed to Bill C-24. We think it would be the wrong decision to make.

We must not forget that the consumer who receives a grant under these programs, who insulates his home or changes over his heating system so as no longer to be dependent on oil, is getting long-term protection—in fact, protection for the lifetime of his home—against rising oil prices. It is an insurance policy. People are aware of the security that insulation or conversion provides.

Mr. Speaker, I have more questions for this Government.

What are we going to do with the enormous gas reserves we have in the West and in the North? They are there. They guarantee us a secure supply of gas for future decades. Why should we not continue to encourage Canadians to convert their heating systems from oil to gas, since we know that as far as liquid oil is concerned, we are trying very hard to find new oil but are having tremendous problems? As for gas, our potential is tremendous, and we should keep on encouraging Canadians to convert to gas.

In the province I represent, we have an abundance of electric power. Why should we sell this power to the U.S. if we can consume it here, once we have converted our heating systems?

• (1240)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. I think the legislation before the House is important and deserves serious consideration.

The purpose of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, is to cut back on these programs and to move up the date on which the programs are terminated, therefore limiting the number of Canadians who can benefit from these programs.

In that context this legislation is a part of the cuts announced by the Government last November 8. It is part of the Government's over-all strategy of cuts in government spending. This strategy of cutting public spending is quite contrary to what the Conservatives said in the election campaign. I am reminded of the words of one of the leading Members of the Conservative Party whom I cannot mention by name in this Chamber, but I am sure the Member will know to whom I refer. To paraphrase the Member's words, he said something to the effect that "if we told you before the election what we were going to do when in office, you just would not vote for us". That is a paraphrase.

Mr. Althouse: Is that the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)?

Mr. Keeper: I would have to ask the Speaker's direction as to whether I could name a particular Member. I am sure the Member knows who he is.

Mr. McDermid: Give him some credit then.

Mr. Keeper: I will not say whether it is the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie); I cannot say who it is.

Mr. McDermid: How do you know it is an accurate quote then?

Mr. Keeper: The Conservative Member who said that is not to be condemned for having said what he said because it was a display of honesty.

Mr. McDermid: Give us a hint. Is he in the House today?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Certainly the Member is within earshot.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: The Member is to be congratulated for his honesty and for his forthrightness in having said what he said.

Mrs. Sparrow: We are all honest.

Mr. Keeper: Unfortunately, that was not true of the Conservative campaign. In the campaign the Conservatives promised that they would not cut useful programs nor would they cut into worth-while public expenditures, but they would cut out waste in government spending. They said they would balance the books of the federal Government by cutting out unnecessary public expense. That is what was said during the election campaign. I think the Bill before us today needs to be examined in that light. Does it meet the criteria set out by the Conservative Party during the election campaign when the Conservatives said that they would reduce the deficit by cutting out wasteful public spending?

The Canadian Oil Substitution and Conservation Program is a program that provides an incentive for people to change the heating system of their homes from oil to gas or to something else. The program has been effective. It has resulted in a large number of people converting their heating system from oil to gas. This program helped not only individuals who took up the challenge and responded to the incentive to substitute or move away from oil to something else, but it helped in the conservation of a non-renewable resource. Once oil reserves have gone, there is no way to replace them. Once a barrel is empty, there is no tap to turn on to fill it up again.

I consider COSP to be a worth-while use of public money. It is an incentive for people to have their homes heated in a way that will cost them less and an incentive to preserve and conserve a non-renewable resource. I would challenge any Member of the Government to stand up in the House and justify the cutting back of this program in terms of which the Government spoke in the election. I challenge any Member of the Government to stand up now and say that this program is a waste of public money.

I consider this a very useful program. I welcome some response on this point from the Government side. It would be refreshing to see some of these Government Members on their feet contributing their thoughts in this debate. I would like to hear them say why they feel this program that gives grants to citizens to convert from oil heating to gas is a waste of public money. If any Member on that side takes up the challenge, and I am sure there is some brave soul across the way, I would also like them to explain—

Mr. McDermid: There are 211 of us.

Mr. Keeper: A pretty silent 211. I would like to hear them explain how they can reject a program based on incentives. I would have thought the notion of incentives was fundamental to Conservative philosophy. From the speeches I have heard Conservatives make, incentive is a sacred mechanism for stimulating action in the economy. Both COSP and CHIP are incentive programs. They are meant to stimulate activity in the private sector, which happens as a result. These programs have been successful in stimulating activity in the insulation of homes and the conversion of homes from oil to gas heating. The actual conversion and insulation work takes place through the private sector. It is an important economic activity and it is based on the principle of incentive.

I would like to hear somebody from the Government side of the House tell us why he or she is rejecting the mechanism of incentive for promoting economic activity and conservation. Why do the Conservatives characterize the use of public dollars as incentives as a waste? I would like some explanation on that.

This cut-back in the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and Canadian Home Insulation Program is part of the general strategy of cuts by the Government, cuts that have hit the arts very severely and cuts that have hit the CBC. I can think of two cuts in the CBC that are of concern to me. The program Identities is being taken off the CBC schedule. There is also a program called Our Native Land. Both of these programs contribute to the multicultural nature of Canada. Our Native Land is a program which helps to knit together the native community across the nation. I hope the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) would take the initiative he seems to have taken as it affected another program which was cut, The Friendly Giant. Obviously that was a worth-while program and deserved to be reinstated. I am glad the Government took some initiative in that regard.

Mr. Nickerson: You can't say that with a straight face.

Mr. Keeper: Well, I have children and I understand that they deeply appreciate the program. If the CBC can reinstate The Friendly Giant, why can it not reinstate Our Native Land and Identities? Why can the Government not take the initiative to alert the CBC to the need for doing that? Why can it not also reinstate the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program? I challenge Hon. Members opposite to rise and justify the cutting of these programs.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put forward some of the viewpoints of my constituents, not only those in Sudbury but also those in the riding of Nickel Belt. I realize there is another Hon. Member in the House who represents those constituents as well, but evidently similar concerns have been expressed by those constituents with respect to the decision of the Government to eliminate COSP. There would be very few of us who would object to the Government reviewing expenditures which were previously announced by other Governments.

As other Members in the House have indicated, COSP was well accepted by Canadians. Primarily it was a result of the requirements in the latter part of the 1970s and the early part of the 1980s, at which time we in Canada recognized that oil, being a non-renewable resource, would at some point in the future require alternatives put forward by consumers and companies to give Canadians an option in terms of the energy they choose to heat their homes. As a result of rapidly increasing prices in the oil price formula adopted by Canada in the early 1980s, a number of Canadians decided to switch from the use of oil to heat their homes to some other form of energy.

In particular, in northern Ontario a large number of constituents in my riding opted to use natural gas as an alternative to oil. This led to a great demand in that area for an extension of the gas line. This demand was met by the Liberal Government of the day approximately a year ago when it announced substantial incentives to extend the natural gas line throughout northern Ontario. As a result, a number of communities in northern Ontario anticipated the opportunity of switching from oil to natural gas.

Most Hon. Members of the House are aware that there is a difficult problem in northern Ontario in terms of weather, climatic conditions and the terrain. When the Government announced in the November 8 mini-statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that the conversion from oil to other products would be limited to March 31, 1985, it may not have caused as much a problem for constituents in other areas of the country who do not face the inhibiting factors of climate and terrain. The difficulty is that in late fall most of the construction process comes to a halt as a result of weather and frozen ground conditions. Therefore the deadline imposed by the Government is very difficult for people in northern Ontario who want to accommodate their desire to switch from oil to some other form of energy. Not only from the standpoint of people who wanted to switch from oil to another form of energy, but a number of Sudburians and other people in northern Ontario were interested in opting to use electricity as an alternate form of energy. As a result of the way in which the Government put forward its deadline of the spring of 1985, a great deal of difficulty is being experienced not only by the natural gas company but by hydro utilities in northern Ontario. They have not been able to keep up with the demand for the equipment required for the conversion process.

I have received numerous representations from companies and contractors which, in the rush to meet the deadline artificially imposed by the Government, have been unable to keep up with the demand. For example, there are back orders of some five to six months for propane gas tanks for people who want to go to propane rather than natural gas. The same problem is being experienced by the Sudbury Hydro Corporation in terms of getting the equipment required to convert from oil to electricity. In addition, many contractors have indicated to Members who represent constituencies in northern Ontario—and I am sure this is true for Hon. Members who represent people living in other northern parts of Canada—that with climate and terrain conditions it makes eminent sense for the Government to allow an extension of the phasing out. The concerns of constituents in northern Ontario as well as those in other parts of northern Canada should be taken into consideration because they have had experience with weather conditions and in terms of the ability of contractors to be able to accomplish the work. Frankly, the speed with which the Government acted in eliminating the conversion program has created many hardships for contractors and those people who wanted to take advantage of the grant to switch from oil to another form of energy. Consequently, they have been unable to proceed with their conversion.

For the benefit of Hon. Members who are present in the House, there is no question in my mind that the original intent of the Canadian Oil Conversion Program was successful. I believe the numbers show that some 60,000 barrels of oil per day have been saved as a result of conversion by a great number of Canadians from oil to another form of energy.

With respect to the energy program itself, I think most Canadians recognize that the one area in which there is an abundance of energy supply is that of natural gas. Mr. Speaker, in your great Province of Alberta, a fair degree of employment opportunity has been created by the increased demand for natural gas from that province into other areas of Canada. Only in the last year have lateral lines been made available to smaller communities in northern Ontario. Historically, when natural gas lines were extended, it was only through the major centres of northern Ontario.

This kind of change in program by the Government does not particularly damage the people in large centres in northern Ontario. A number of constituents living perhaps 20 to 25 miles away from the main line have over the years lobbied individual Members of Parliament to convince the Government to extend the lines to their smaller communities. This would have allowed those people to have the same amenities as those made available to constituents living in larger urban centres in northern Ontario.

The fact that the Government has asked for the program to be terminated is a valid use of the mandate given to it last September. However, I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would take into account the difficult terrain and the other things which I mentioned earlier concerning the lack of products needed for conversion to take place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before calling it one o'clock, the Hon. Member should know that he has a minute remaining as far as his speech is concerned. After three o'clock, if he wishes to use that one minute when Orders of the Day are called and the House resumes consideration of Bill C-24, he may do so.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

PORNOGRAPHY

DEFINITION OF OBSCENITY—CALL FOR NEW LEGISLATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, given the striking down by the Federal Court of Appeal of the Section of the Customs Tariff Act that has been used to prevent the importation of pornographic material into Canada, it is imperative that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), guided by the Fraser Report, which should be made public, move quickly to bring in legislation for a legally clear applicable definition of obscenity. Immediate updating of the relevant sections of the Criminal Code and the Customs Tariff Act is called for in order to give coherency in our laws, and control the entry and distribution of violent pornographic material.

This ruling underscores and substantiates claims by women's groups about the inefficacy of the law. They have long recommended revision and updating of the 117-year-old Customs Tariff Act, and time and again have pointed out to legislators that the wording of the Act is too vague in its definition of obscenity, that it provides inadequate protection to our society against the degradation and violence depicted and directed toward men, women, and children.

Under the present Act pornographic material falls under the classification of immoral and indecent publications, and with such a loose and imprecise definition to determine acceptable or objectionable material, it is no surprise that the court so ruled. Until we have action to change the laws, we have open, unprotected borders to this offensive material. The time for action is now.

ACID RAIN

RESULTS FROM MULRONEY-REAGAN MEETING

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Since major holidays have octaves, Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity yesterday to substitute for the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Murta) as Irishmen celebrated St. Patrick's Day in Montreal.

I am pleased to report that the major topic of conversation in Montreal yesterday was the great pride felt by all Irishmen in Montreal with respect to the concrete measures taken by a well-known Irishman—our own Prime Minister—and another Irishman to widen the scope of proceedings, thus paving the way for finding a solution to the acid rain problem which is a threat to Quebecers.

In addition, I am pleased to say that I rejoice at the great progress made yesterday during the Quebec City meeting when another outstanding Canadian, Mr. Davis, was appointed special envoy.

TELEVISION

FUNDING OF INDEPENDENT PRODUCTIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) of changes in criteria for funding of independent television production from the Canadian Broadcast Project Development Fund is welcome news only in the sense that it could have been worse. For the independent producers, whose work had dried up thanks to the CBC pulling out of the fund, the news means new contracts will be signed, work will go ahead, and they will stay in business instead of going bankrupt. But is this good enough? The decision shows the shortsightedness of the Government's cut-backs to the CBC last fall. Were it not for those cut-backs, the crisis in production would not have happened in the first place.

The Minister has used the opportunity to advance his own ideological agenda, an agenda never discussed in the election campaign, and contrary to Conservative promises made in the election campaign last summer. Government funding is moving away from the public sector, and government funding is moving away from the arm's length agencies. However, will there be any increase in good Canadian TV production? Unfortunately, that seems unlikely. The Minister has not put any more money into the pot.

Even with Telefilm Canada back in business now, with the ongoing CBC cut-backs over-all production will be down. The Minister's flying around the country in executive jets has not resulted in any cultural policies for our country that will fly. I suggest the Minister would be better advised, and our tax money better spent, if he would stay at home for a while—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, Saturday, before leaving Washington to go to Quebec City, Mr. Reagan—the President of the United States—declared that there was no country that was more important to the United States than Canada, and that relations with Canada were better than ever. He went on to say that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) was an energetic and effective defender of Canadian interests and a firm friend of the United States.

Sunday, all Canadians could see for themselves, either on television or on the spot in Quebec City, how relaxed relations are now between Canada and the United States. The Canadian and international press commented that the conditions for restoring harmonious relations between our two countries are now in place and that Canada can already start reaping the benefits. Canadians are all proud of their Prime Minister and they congratulate him.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have been constantly attacking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for not keeping campaign promises to the Canadian people. Today I stand in this House to apologize. There is one promise that he made on May 24, 1983, and that he kept word for word, when he said:

> There'll be jobs for Liberals and NDPs too after I have been Prime Minister for 15 years and I can't find a living, breathing Tory in the country.

On a daily basis since September 4 he has been appointing Tories, right, left, and centre, over a thousand of them. The criteria for appointments are simple: just be a Tory. Qualifications—who needs them?

The Prime Minister said he would appoint Liberals and NDPs after he was Prime Minister for 15 years. At the rate he's going now, he will run out of Tories in six months. The way he has been running the Government, I'm certain he realizes that he lacks the qualities needed to lead this country. He will not be around in 15 years, so he has to appoint them all in the first four years. Those are the only four years he will be in power.

The people of this country need jobs, jobs, jobs, not just jobs for Tories who are appointed by the Prime Minister.

SHIPBUILDING

SQUARE RIGGER PROJECT—SPIRIT OF CANADA

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House will recall the assembly of tall ships at the bicentennial celebrations in Quebec city last year. Regrettably, we had no Canadian tall ship of our own to participate. Thus it gives me great pleasure to advise the House about an exciting national project which is presently under way on the West Coast to correct this deficiency. A group of eminent Canadians from coast to coast has established the Pacific Tall Ship Association. This charitable, non-profit association, intends to build and operate Canada's first ocean going square rigger. The ship will be called the Spirit of Canada, and will primarily serve as a training vessel for young Canadians.

The proposed ship will be a steel hulled three-masted barque of approximately 130 feet, and will have the capacity to train 1,000 young Canadians annually. Fund raising is, of course, the major concern at this time since the group hopes to have the ship built and ready for Expo '86 in Vancouver. This project is widely supported by many Canadians. I, therefore, urge all Members of this House to support this very worthwhile project so that Canada's colours will be flown proudly wherever the Spirit of Canada travels on the high seas.

MINES AND MINING

FATAL SPILL AT YELLOWKNIFE MINE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on July 9, 1984, Gordon Lyle Davidson, aged 28, was killed by a spill of wet material in a Cominco gold mine in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories. This followed an earlier spill on March 17, 1984, that Cominco failed to report. There is now to be a full public inquiry into Davidson's death.

Yesterday the statute of limitations ran out on the earlier spill of March 17, 1984, but the Government failed to lay any prosecutions against Cominco. There is reason to believe that Cominco's failure to provide safeguards resulted in the tragic death. I believe that the statute of limitations should be extended to an inquiry into all circumstances of this case, including checking the actions of the Crown prosecutor and the Coroner's office. Cominco was allowed to escape prosecution, and many barriers were placed in the way of the union's lawyer. The buck passing in this case demonstrates a lack of concern over the rights of workers in the Northwest Territories.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—QUEBEC SUMMIT SUCCESS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is a proud day for all Canadians as we witness and follow the summit meeting in Quebec City between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan.

Canadians have been deeply concerned about deteriorating relations in many areas with the United States over the last six to ten years. Canadians are anxious to have a positive and constructive relationship with our American neighbours. The summit meeting was a landmark start in rebuilding that relationship.

Acid rain and the environment are priorities for Canadians and the Government. The appointment of U.S. former Transportation Secretary, Drew Lewis, and former Ontario Premier, Bill Davis, as special envoys to resolve the issue of acid rain is applauded.

To quote the Prime Minister:

> We have broken a three-year deadlock by agreeing to our common and shared responsibility to preserve our common environment.

Canadians are fortunate to have a Prime Minister who provides leadership, who resolves problems, and who is bringing a new direction to Canada. The Quebec summit is a splendid example of this leadership.

FISHERIES

CANCELLATION OF FISHING VESSEL INSURANCE SCHEME

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise to request the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) to announce this week the reversal of the Government's decision to cancel the fishing vessel insurance scheme, which was announced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has only until the end of this week to make up his mind. Fishermen want to know whether this is the policy of the Government, or whether the Government will pay attention to the objections which have been registered by provincial Governments and all the unions which represent fishermen in our country.

This week is zero hour. I hope that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will take the opportunity to make a ministerial statement before Friday and reverse the ill-advised cancellation of the scheme. The decision was reached with no consultation with provincial Governments and fishermen across the country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—SUMMIT MEETING BENEFITS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, yesterday will go down as a landmark in Canadian history. Not only did we celebrate the six-month anniversary of the swearing in of the new Conservative Government, but on St. Patrick's Day Canadians across the country watched with excitement and anticipation the historic summit meeting in Quebec City between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States.

The warmth of the welcome we have shown to the President and his wife has already been well documented in the American press. The New York Times has run major stories the last two days reporting to the American people the prospects which have arisen from the meeting for closer ties and understanding between our two countries.

In addition to the substantive discussions which have taken place, which have resulted in new joint plans on acid rain, the air defence accord, trade, military co-operation, and arms control, the meeting will have other long-lasting benefits for relationships not only between the two Governments but between the people of the two lands. It means investment. It means trade. It means tourism. It means jobs. And it means an economic vitality for the two countries.

The people of Canada and the United States who watched or read about the summit meetings will gain a new sense of encouragement and confidence that all of us who share the North American continent can, and will—

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PINE TREE LINE—ECONOMIC CONSEQUENCES OF BASE CLOSURES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) announced that the Pine Tree Line would be phased out and that most of the bases which are associated with that line would be phased out. Considering the economic hardships which will occur in the communities which are associated with those bases, both in terms of the military and civilian payrolls which will be eliminated, and the impact on the businesses which serve those bases, will the Minister of National Defence announce as soon as possible the time line for the phasing out? Also, would the Minister take steps to notify those Members of Parliament, in whose constituencies the closures will occur, and the mayors of the associated villages and communities, of the particular time line phase-out?

Due to the fact that military personnel will be transferred, will the Government take active steps to ensure that all civilian personnel who are attached to the Pine Tree Line bases will be provided opportunities for transfer within the Public Service, and that alternate uses for the bases will be considered?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES ENVOYS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. My question relates to the announcement of Mr. Davis and Mr. Lewis as part-time envoys on acid rain.

In view of the fact that we have in Canada—as initiated by previous Liberal Governments—a plan to cut smoke-stack emissions by 25 per cent between 1980 and 1990; a political and factual commitment to cut smoke-stack emissions by another 25 per cent by 1994; considering the fact that we are down wind of 26 million tonnes of smoke-stack emissions which emanate from the United States; and in view of the fact that there have been years of joint research on this matter, what will the Government know a year from now that it does not already know?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that the agreement which was arrived at yesterday, as stated by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States, certainly represents a significant move forward. I would point out to the Hon. Member that the agreement breaks the deadlock which has existed for a number of years. It is the first time that a President of the United States has acknowledged that the acid rain problem is one which we share, and that we must work jointly to resolve it. At the end of this year we will see the work which will have been accomplished by two very prominent envoys who were appointed to the job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATURE OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I hate to give a lesson in history to the Acting Prime Minister, but I would like to remind her that in 1981, during his visit to Ottawa, President Reagan made the exact recognition which he made yesterday. There is nothing new and nothing historical about it.

Would the Acting Prime Minister not admit that what was announced yesterday is a face-saving device which admits the political failure of the Prime Minister to convince his political counterpart that there is a problem which needs real action; and that it is a face-saving device which removes pressure for at least one year from the Washington administration? In essence, is it not just another do-nothing policy for another year?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Hon. Member's obsession with face-saving devices. People in his Party know all about them, as they have been dealing with those devices for the last number of months.

I would also say to the Hon. Member that in the last four years, he, as the previous Minister of that Department, was not able to achieve any agreement with the United States. He did not move the issue a single step forward. He should not sit there and speak sour grapes because movement is being made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the Deputy Minister is going to say next year to reassure maple syrup producers whose production is being affected by acid rain.

[English]

What will the Acting Prime Minister say to businesses in Muskoka and Haliburton? What will she say to the fishermen who are interested in the salmon spawning grounds of Nova Scotia? What will she say to the millions of Canadians who are concerned that this is the major health issue which is confronting us because it has not been dealt with by the major polluters who are emitting 26 million tonnes a year south of the border? What will she say to them?

● (1420)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, of course the Hon. Member would not even begin to admit that during his term of office in his Government's regime, it could not possibly come to an agreement with the provincial Governments. We have a $150 million agreement to begin to clean up acid rain in our own country which, of course, shows good intent as to what we can do and what we can accomplish. That is being done in Canada. That will show improvement. What is more, Mr. Speaker, that kind of movement forward will be seen in a bilateral sense in the next year. I would ask the Hon. Member to take the same positive approach as so many people in this country do when they do see that positive steps have been taken.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

UNITED STATES MISSILES—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO U.S. SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed as well to the Acting Prime Minister. This morning on Canada AM the United States Secretary of Defense, Caspar Weinberger, was asked what action the United States plans to take against Russian cruise missiles. The reporter asked: "Might this involve, for instance, launchers in Canada being placed in Canada?" Mr. Weinberger replied in part: "They'd be placed in the most effective way, but I think what we would try to do would be to locate the best places for defences, and some might be here".

Would the Acting Prime Minister tell the House why the Government has assured the Canadian people that placing United States missiles here in Canada is not even a possibility when this is obviously being worked on right now by the United States Government?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has been in the House on several occasions in the past when the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs made it abundantly clear that any decision along this line will be taken in Canada, and in Canada only. There is no contemplation of taking any decision of that nature here in Canada.

REQUEST THAT MINISTERS APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, based on the words of Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, placed on the public record, the Conservative Government has not yet told the whole story to the Canadian people. I ask the Acting Prime Minister if she will make a commitment today that before the week is out the Government will have the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of National Defence, appear before the External Affairs committee to tell the Canadian people, through the committee, exactly why it is contemplating—based on what was said by Caspar Weinberger—changing a long established policy of refusing to have U.S. missiles based in this country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence have been far more ready to appear before parliamentary committees than former Ministers of the previous Government. However, I would ask the Hon. Member to continue and state clearly what Mr. Weinberger said this morning. The statement he made this morning in that regard was that "Canadian obviously, as a sovereign nation, would make its own decisions". That fact is recognized in Washington. I wish it were recognized by the Libera Opposition.

PORNOGRAPHY

EFFECT OF COURT RULING ON CUSTOMS TARIFF ACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Last Thursday the Federal Court of Appeal in the Luscher decision unanimously struck down those parts of the customs tariff which prohibit immoral or indecent imports, finding them to be so vague and uncertain that they are of no force or effect. Will the Minister confirm that he will immediately issue new instructions respecting the court's judgment? And, given the fact that this decision effectively throws Canada's borders wide open in this area, will the Minister bring forward quick legislation in order to block the import not of explicit erotica, as in the Luscher decision, but of child pornography and violent pornography?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the Hon. Member's question deals with the status at the present time of that provision of the Customs Tariff. Because the courts have found that provision of the customs tariff to be ultra vires, it cannot be enforced by my Department. But my staff, however, will be under instructions that where they find, for example, a truckload of material coming in for distribution in Canada which is likely to be found to be illegal under the Criminal Code provisions, they will contact local police authorities and ask them to do their duty under the Criminal Code.

In so far as the second half of the Hon. Member's question is concerned, it deals with the essence of response to the work of the Fraser Committee. My colleague, the Minister of Justice, is the Minister responsible for this.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the Deputy Minister of National Revenue has said that despite the decision of the Court of Appeal it is "business as usual" for the Department, will the Minister explain this apparent contempt for Canada's judiciary? Rather than snubbing the courts, why is the Minister waiting for the Fraser Commission? Why does he not come forward immediately with badly needed legislation to fill this obvious gap?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I had a chance in Ottawa today to review the judge's decision. My instructions to my staff as of an hour ago were to issue new instructions to the border units stating that where the courts have found the provision is ultra vires the single most important principle which must be used as a guide is the rule of law. The Government is obliged to obey the law. It cannot take the law into its own hands. That is our instruction. We will, however, draw to the attention of the local authorities any importations which offend against the Criminal Code provisions.

Again, the Hon. Member in the second half of his question did not listen to my response to his first question. I do not have the authority to amend the Customs Tariff, nor do I have the authority to make changes to the Criminal Code. He may want to ask my colleague, the Minister of Justice, what action he intends to take as a result of the Fraser Committee's work, but that is an area in which I do not have any authority.

The Hon. Member, having counselled us to respect the rule of law, must also respect that I would not attempt to take the law into my own hands in terms of making proposals which I have no authority to make.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my further supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. We in this caucus are prepared to pass legislation within 24 hours which deals with the obvious gap which the Federal Court of Appeal has left in the area of child pornography and violent pornography. Is the Minister prepared, on behalf of his Government, to give an undertaking that he will immediately bring forward the necessary legislation to deal with this obvious gap and thereby ensure that Canada's borders are not in fact wide open, as the Court of Appeal decision now leaves them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to note that the hon. gentleman and his Party would support amendments or changes in that direction and would support legislation to replace the provisions now found to be ineffective. But I think the Hon. Member is being too selective. Pornography is pornography. I don't think that we can just concentrate on child pornography, or some other kind of pornography which particularly bothers the Hon. Member. When we bring in legislation, if that is the course we will adopt, we will bring in legislation which will apply to pornography whether it is child pornography or any other type of pornography. It will have to be quite specific in light of the decision that the court has given.

I can only advise the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, that we are reviewing the situation to see whether that is the best course. We are glad to have the co-operation of the New Democratic Party. I imagine that the Official Opposition is against pornography as well, and that it will join in seeing that the legislation will go through the House within a very short period of time. I welcome the assistance of Hon. Members on all sides of the House and I am sure that the Hon. Member's offer will be taken up in due course.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES ENVOYS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and it is in respect to the question of acid rain. A leading environmentalist has said that envoys are better than nothing. But with 30 million tonnes of sulpher dioxide falling on us every year, mainly from United States sources, and from Canadian sources to a lesser extent, killing lakes, destroying forests and crops, and affecting human health—and this is all documented by research—would the Minister tell the House how appointing two envoys would help this situation? Is it not simply delaying a program of action? We have heard it all before, Mr. Speaker. "Got a problem? Appoint a committee".

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has heard it all before, why did his Government not do something about it? For how many years have we heard this issue raised? Yes, we have done something about it. We have come to a very significant agreement with the provinces to move in this regard in Canada. We have come to an agreement with the United States to work jointly on this issue within the next year by appointing two people whom the Hon. Member may dismiss out of hand, but whom many people in this country believe are individuals who can move this very important issue forward to the solution which we all want to see.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has entirely missed the point. Is the Minister not aware that several plans of action were presented by the United States Environmental Protection Agency to the White House? All were rejected. Will the Minister tell the House what assurances the Canadian Government received that any recommendations flowing from the Davis-Lewis envoy team are going to be acted upon by the U.S. administration?

● (1430)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the assurances we have received are of the nature which shows in the relationship that exists between our two countries. In the last number of years we have seen a Government in Canada which tried to achieve things by fighting with its allies. We do not believe that is the way we should really go about things. We believe that the way we accomplish things is by working together, and that is what this agreement is really all about.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

JOB CREATION OPPORTUNITIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and concerns the job-creation potential in the arts and culture field. Is the Minister aware that 66 per cent of the revenues to arts and culture go into wages compared with roughly 20 per cent in manufacturing, and that the return in jobs is six times that per dollar invested compared with other sectors? Therefore, would she not agree that this presents enormous opportunities, and that restoring the cuts suffered by the Canada Council, Radio-Canada, and other agencies might be the best job creation scheme the Government could come up with?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do agree with at least a part of what the Hon. Member has said. It is because we realize the potential for job creation in the cultural community that the Minister of Communications and I have been working together in the Government's new labour market strategy, allocating money to make sure that there are programs in that $900 million which will be specifically addressed to the cultural community and the way in which jobs can be created in that very important sector.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister is aware of the practical effects of the Government's policy in this field since coming into office. There have been rallies all across the country, from Halifax to Victoria, and what the community is saying is the Government's policies right now are costing it jobs. Unemployment is going up, and people being trained as actors and actresses and in the arts colleges, and so forth, cannot get jobs because of these cut-backs. What good are these potential programs going to be if the practical result of the cut-backs is job losses?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member has not been following the discussion on the new job-creation sector because the jobs apply to the fiscal year 1985-86, coming into effect on April 1. It is for that very reason that the Minister of Communications is consulting with the cultural community and bringing that input back to the over-all plan of job creation, so that there will be new and more effective measures coming out of the allocation of funds devoted to the creation of jobs and the development of human resource potential.

TERRORISM

SEIZURE OF TURKISH EMBASSY IN OTTAWA—ADVANCE WARNING INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Acting Prime Minister. Last Friday the Secretary of State for External Affairs admitted that he had misled the House on the question of advance warning to Canada by the Turkish Government, even though he had made a thorough inquiry of his officials before making his erroneous statement. The correcting statement of last Friday was unacceptably vague. I want to ask the Government which Canadian officials were given the urgent Turkish warning, and what did they do with that information?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has stated, the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a comment to the House last Friday about the situation with regard to the Turkish Embassy. He indicated that he would be carrying out an immediate investigation. It is my understanding that the results of that investigation are now with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and he will be making a statement to the House in that regard on his return tomorrow.

REVIEW OF SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister about a statement of the Deputy Prime Minister to the effect that, 30 days before the incident at the Turkish Embassy, the security at that Embassy had been reviewed and upgraded. Can the Minister confirm that in fact the security was not upgraded at all, no additional resources were allocated to the Turkish Embassy, and in fact there was nothing more than a letter sent by the RCMP to the Pinkerton's guards telling them to be vigilant? What kind of an upgrading of security is that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the House that the investigation of this matter has been going on over the weekend, that the results of that investigation are now with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I presume with the Prime Minister, and that a statement on the result will be made tomorrow. I ask the Hon. Member, given the fact that these people had already been committed to a very important engagement, as we all recognize, in Quebec city, to wait until he hears that statement tomorrow.

ENERGY

OIL SUBSTITUTION AND CONSERVATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. There are people who want to take advantage of the Oil Substitution and Conservation Program. Is the Minister aware that gas line installations are being held up because the ground is frozen and parts have to be ordered, and that there is a waiting list, especially in Quebec and here in Ottawa? Could the Government—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, I think the Member is asking a question with regard to a Bill which is currently before the House. I am afraid that is not normally allowed. I am prepared to allow a different question by the Hon. Member, but not questions regarding a Bill currently being debated in the House of Commons today.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, let me then ask the Minister about a speech she gave in Vancouver last week. She suggested that she was interested in conservation. She said that energy use in residential housing could be cut back a further 30 per cent. Why, then, is the Government proceeding with measures to cut back conservation, and not interfering with grants to oil companies? Why is it taking this direction—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

TERRORISM

TURKISH EMBASSY ATTACK—THREAT POSED BY ARMENIAN TERRORISTS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. On January 29 I was advised by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service that Armenian terrorists were the greatest and most serious threat to Canadian security. I was assured that the threat was being monitored very closely and that the Intelligence Service had considerable intelligence information on the matter. Will the Acting Prime Minister confirm that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service failed to provide this intelligence to the RCMP and, specifically, confirm that the CSIS failed to notify the RCMP of the urgent advance warning from the Turkish authorities?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the Deputy Prime Minister was asked questions about security at the Turkish Embassy last week, he indicated that there was a full investigation under way. That investigation is being completed. When the results are made known, the Deputy Prime Minister will report to the House.

ADVANCE WARNING INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Prime Minister at least confirm today that that advance warning from Turkish authorities went to the CSIS and they in turn failed to pass that information on to the RCMP?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm that. I will take the question as notice and pass it on to the Minister responsible.

AIR CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who just released the list of the new board of directors for Air Canada, a very critical and major Crown corporation. At first glance it would appear that it is simply a list of Tory hacks, flacks, and bagmen.

Mr. Broadbent: On second glance, too.

Mr. Riis: On second glance it would look even more like that. Would the Minister explain to the House what criteria he used to select this very critical group of people to provide direction to one of Canada's most important Crown corporations?

● (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Hon. Member looks at the list again he will find that they are very distinguished and well qualified Canadians who represent all regions of the country. They will do a tremendous service to Air Canada, and a tremendous service to Canada.

APPOINTMENT OF DAVID ANGUS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, to be more specific, could the Minister expand on the point he just made by explaining how the major job of David Angus, which is raising funds for the Progressive Conservative Party across Canada, helps him in providing critical leadership and direction to Air Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the fact that he participates in a political Party should be held against him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: We encourage outstanding people to participate in the political scene. Mr. Angus happens to be a very distinguished lawyer who has a tremendous background in transportation, particularly in the marine and air sectors. His contribution to Air Canada will be clearly felt, not only by the corporation but indeed by all Canadians.

TRADE

BEEF IMPORTS FROM EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the representative of the Minister of Agriculture. Cattle producers are gravely concerned at the prospect of continuing high levels of importation of subsidized beef from the European Economic Community. Can the Minister advise that import limitations or quotas have been negotiated with these supplying countries?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Member raises an important question for the livestock industry. He will be aware that at the beginning of the year we indicated that we were prepared to use provisions under the Meat Import Act to restrict beef coming in from the European Community. They have since objected, and have threatened to increase tariffs on some of the agricultural products that we send to them.

We are staying in touch with the Community, and both Governments are working on a solution that will avoid what we believe to be retaliatory tariffs against some of the agricultural products which we send to the European community, while at the same time safeguarding the very important livestock industry against what many people believe to be damaging import competition. Hopefully, through further consultation we can arrive at a solution that will satisfy all parties in this matter.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on a supplementary question of last Wednesday which the Minister did not answer. Will the Minister tell the House if she is going to abolish—

Some Hon. Members: Which Minister?

Mr. MacLellan: Will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the House if she is going to abolish the petroleum and gas revenue tax as was promised by the Prime Minister on July 6, 1984, three days before the federal election was called?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will not be taking unilateral action as his Party did when it established the PGRT. As I have continually told the Member, the whole issue is under negotiation with the western producing provinces at this time. I will report to the House when those negotiations are completed.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Minister would not be taking unilateral action, because all of western Canada wants the petroleum and gas revenue tax abolished.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where were you in the last regime?

Mr. McDermid: Who put it there?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister proposing, and putting forward in her talks with the three western energy producing provinces, the abolition of the petroleum and gas revenue tax?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be more clear in saying that we are not negotiating in the media on this issue, and that I will report to the House when negotiations are completed. If the Member felt so strongly on this issue, surely he would have made his representations to his Party when it was imposing this hated tax on western Canada.

FOOD AND DRUGS

AVAILABILITY OF GENERIC DRUGS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If the Government responds to lobbying by multinational pharmaceutical companies, and generic drugs are no longer available for low-income people, it is estimated that this would cost Governments, under the Canada Assistance Plan, over $200 million. Does the Minister support this lobbying, and, if so, is he prepared to pay this cost?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Member again has far too narrow a view of a very complex issue. She must keep in mind the need for a supply of drugs at costs that are acceptable, on which we have consulted the Consumers Association. She should also realize, as I hope she does, that we would like to develop the pharmaceutical industry. We have seen a decline in it on the generic side. On the one side we have had some improvement. On the multinational side we have had a substantial decline.

Canadians who want more research and development and some world mandates in this highly technical field, realize that putting these two groups together with government officials to try to reach an agreement, is surely better than the regime we have now.

PATENT LAW INQUIRY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not agree with the Minister on these points and I do not think the Consumers Association would either. His Department is largely responsible for research and development. Will he, or will he not, oppose any changes to patent laws that will substantially raise drug prices for Canadians?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question. The Hon. Member is obviously of that school of thought that has dominated Canada so often, that it is cheaper to buy than to have research and development and a world mandate in Canada. Obviously the Government wants to have some research and development in Canada. The Government wants to ensure that we are a member of this high tech field, especially with regard to new drugs.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

CONTRIBUTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For the second time in only a few months, a federal agency is submitting that it is unnecessary, for the time being, to raise contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. The advisory committee on the Canada Pension Plan and the Chief Actuary are suggesting a gradual increase in contributions to the Plan.

In fact, the Minister of Finance announced some time ago that he and his provincial colleagues were considering increasing contributions. I would therefore ask the Minister whether he has read the report and if so, whether he agrees with the report's recommendations concerning contributions.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Member is correct when he states that the Ministers of Finance, including the federal Minister, have met in regard to considering the possibility of maintaining the financing of the Canada Pension Plan. There are basically three recommendations in the report to which he refers, from the Canada Pension Plan Advisory Committee. I cannot get into the specifics during this short period of time, but if one looks at those recommendations he will see that in general terms they are similar to the task force report on pension reform that was brought forward in the last Parliament. The real question that we must examine with the provinces is how to maintain a funding level which not only keeps in mind the capacity to pay, for both employees and employers, but as well keeping the plan viable.

PROVINCIAL INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the Canada Pension Plan is 20 years old this year. To keep the fund solvent and meet benefit requirements, we shall have to increase revenues. Will the Government bow to the wishes of the provinces and increase CPP contributions to the fund, or will the Government insist that the provinces start to repay over the years, on schedule as agreed, the $25 billion owing? Will it make that recommendation stick with the provinces?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Member raises a valid point in the sense that he recognizes that any changes to the Canada Pension Plan would have to be made jointly by the provinces and the federal Government. I will just remind the House that when the Canada Pension Plan was originally introduced it became a shared jurisdiction. It was for that reason that these arrangements were put forward as they were. The Government has said that it wants major pension plan reformation. There is not now a parallelism between the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan. There are a number of issues that must be dealt with.

If there are any increases in the premiums, at whatever time or level they might come, I believe the Hon. Member would join with me and most Members of the House in saying that we would also like to see some changes in benefits as have been identified by my statements and other earlier statements.

PETRO-CANADA

ATTEMPTS TO ACQUIRE CO-OP OUTLETS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources respecting letters I have received from the boards of directors of several Saskatchewan co-operatives protesting against attempts by Petro-Canada to acquire co-op bulk petroleum outlets.

Could the Minister advise the House why Petro-Canada is attempting to acquire the outlets of co-ops which represent a completely Canadian-owned segment of the petroleum industry? Furthermore, why has Petro-Canada not considered the impact of such take-overs on the planned co-op heavy oil refinery for Saskatchewan?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the concerns raised by the Hon. Member. I have passed those concerns on to Petro-Canada and I will respond to the Hon. Member when the information is available to me.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

ISOCYANATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would have directed my question to the Acting Prime Minister, given that this is the first time a woman has held that position—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: However, since the Minister of National Health and Welfare is here, I can direct my question to him. Recognizing the problems that developed due to the use of urea formaldehyde without proper consultation and proper understanding of its effects, will the Minister take steps now to ban the use of isocyanates until such time as a proper investigation has been undertaken to determine the effect that the use of those particular products could have on the health of workers and consumers?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question put forward by the Hon. Member does not lend itself to a simple answer in the House of Commons. I am sure that he has in mind, as well, the tragedy that happened in Bhopal, for example, and other safety measures with regard to these chemicals.

I have asked officials in my Department to re-examine our safety standards and requirements. At the moment, that is as much as I can report.

REQUEST FOR TEMPORARY BAN

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that isocyanates are widely used in the manufacturing processes here in Canada and that the effects on the individuals who have come into contact with them are irreversible? Recognizing the problems we have had in the past with similar substances, will he not now move at least on a temporary basis to ban their use until such time as the full effect can be determined and adequate protective measures can be put in place?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question is really the same as the first question which the Hon. Member asked. Therefore, my answer is also the same. It is easy to ask to ban a given product "until such time . . ." but obviously there are various factors that must be taken into consideration. It is my responsibility to look at the entire scene rather than simply agree to something that the Member puts forward in the manner he did.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the 160 political appointments that were made over the last three weeks, including an ambassador in waiting to Washington. The Prime Minister is quoted as saying, referring to patronage: "We are going to reform this instrument of our national life". He also promised, during the election campaign, a parliamentary committee to review political appointments. Which one of the 160 political appointments over the last three weeks will be reviewed by a parliamentary committee, if any?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the appointments that have been made by the Prime Minister and this Government include a great number of very fine Canadians, who, indeed, merit the appointments that they receive. I can certainly give the Hon. Member many examples of that.

I would also point out to the Hon. Member, as I am sure he knows, that the whole question of parliamentary reform and the reform of this Chamber is being examined under the very good supervision and direction of our colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East. One of the issues that he will be dealing with is that very important issue that the Hon. Member raises. I hope he will provide his input and lend his support to the work that is being done by the Hon. Member for St. John's East.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

This is a promise made by the Progressive Conservative Party, and I do not see why I should pay to help them keep their promises.

On July 16, during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister said, and I quote:

I was speaking to some Conservatives at the time, and that was what they wanted to hear. When speaking to Canadians during an election campaign—

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry, but the Hon. Member knows perfectly well a preamble is not allowed on a supplementary. I would therefore ask him to keep to the supplementary question.

Mr. Boudria: Does the Acting Prime Minister agree that this statement reflects the present policy of the Conservative Government, more so than other statements made during the election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the latest figures I have regarding the support for political parties in this country show that the number of people who identified with the Conservative Party was in the vicinity of 53 per cent; those with the Liberal Party, 25 per cent, and I believe those with the New Democratic Party were 21 per cent.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Oh, no.

Mr. Deans: Make it 22.

Miss MacDonald: I could have moved it up a few notches. However, in looking at the number of appointments from across the country, and with regard to representation, taking into account all of these people who fit within political parties, I would have to inform the Hon. Member that some of them, in fact the majority of them, would have to be people who supported the Conservative Party, because that is a reflection of the country today.

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST—PLIGHT OF UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, concerns Pioneer Trust. Can she confirm that there are ongoing negotiations between the federal Government and the Province of Saskatchewan in terms of working out a package to help the uninsured depositors of Pioneer Trust, recognizing that CDIC will not be able to help them? Are the federal Government and the provincial Government attempting to work out some package to help many widowers, retired businessmen, and others?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am in touch with the Minister of Finance in Saskatchewan.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, is the Government willing to have a public inquiry, because we understand that some commitment has been made by the Prime Minister's Office to have some form of inquiry? Can the Minister explain what type of inquiry will occur, whether it will be public, and who will head such an inquiry?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I have already pointed out in the House, this subject is under examination. I have already attempted to put the facts on the table for Hon. Members, and I will continue to keep them informed.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

UNIVERSITY RESEARCH—PROPOSED FIVE-YEAR PLAN

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It concerns the Government's support for research in science and engineering within the Canadian academic community. Ten days ago the Minister announced several millions of dollars in additional funding for research and development in Canadian universities. When we last formed the administration, we had a five-year program for support of research and development—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Tupper: Will the Minister tell the House if he will be introducing a new five-year program for research and development in the Canadian academic community?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, of course this Government and this Party have been committed to increasing the support and funding for research within our Canadian universities, for many years. Cabinet is presently reviewing the next five-year plan proposed by the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council. We were pleased to announce a week or two ago an additional $20 million in funding for the current fiscal year.

My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Last week, the Federal Government's figures demonstrated once and for all that Canadian workers have suffered a drop in earnings over the last three years. This means that this year, they will be receiving about 20 per cent less than the inflation rate in Canada.

[English]

Does the Minister not agree that this record of Canadian workers tightening their belts in tough times is in direct contradiction to the attitude expressed by the Prime Minister when he told Americans through Fortune magazine that our products are inferior, our deliveries unreliable, our expertise borrowed and our technology non-Canadian, in effect saying that the Canadian record is a disaster?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member begins her question the way she does because of the envy of Members in that Party who want to sing in harmony. They have not been able to do that within their own group for some time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to say that the main emphasis of this Government has been in the area of jobs, job creation, and in trying to bring more emphasis in that field. Although it has not been raised often by members of the Opposition, I think it is important to note that in the last month when the employment figures came down, it was shown for the first time since the recession had begun that between the months of January and February both the unemployment rate and the actual figures for unemployment had declined. This was the first time that that had taken place between the months of January and February since the recession began, and I think that is an important sign.

PETITIONS

SEIZURE OF FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which states that recent actions of the Health Protection Branch have resulted in the seizure of certain food supplements, including amino acids and certain herbal products, that these products have been readily available for many years and that when the undersigned inquired as to the reasons for this action, they were advised that they had been declared new drugs and would not be permitted to be sold. In order to obtain these products the petitioners must buy them in the United States at considerable inconvenience and cost. Wherefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to revoke the decision of the Health Protection Branch and return these products to the market-place without delay.

GIFT OF WARPLANES TO TURKEY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which is signed by hundreds of Canadians of Greek descent which states that the undersigned Canadians of Greek descent are very alarmed at the intentions of the Canadian Government to give 20 renovated fighter planes to Turkey and none to Greece. While there might be good reasons for Canada to support a NATO ally, Canada should not side with Turkey against Greece. Canada has a long tradition of fairness in world conflicts and should not get into a position of arming one side against the other.

DND—TRANSFER OF DIRECTORATE OF PAY SERVICES

Question No. 55—Mr. Howie:

1. Will the Department of National Defence directorate of pay services be transferred to Chatham, New Brunswick and, if so, during what period and how many persons will be employed in Chatham by the directorate?

2. Will a building be constructed to house the directorate and, if so, on what date will the construction be (a) commenced (b) concluded?

3. What is the current status of this project and has it received Treasury Board approval?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The government's commitment to retain CFB Chatham as an air base, in addition to the Training Center for the Low Level Air Defence System, will result in CFB Chatham maintaining its present employment level without the need to transfer the DND Pay Services.

DOLLAR COINS

Question No. 272—Mrs. Killens:

Does the Government intend to have issued, dollar coins and, if so, will provisions be made to include, on the coins, distinctive signs for the visually handicapped?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Canada now issues about 2,300,000 dollar coins annually. The Miscellaneous Estimates Committee is reviewing the matter of a $1 coin in more detail. The Royal Canadian Mint is recommending a revised coin design that takes into consideration the needs of the visually handicapped.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works; and the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 3072).

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): I know I have 60 seconds left, Mr. Speaker. I just want to implore the Government side to listen to the representations of Members of Parliament who represent constituents in northern Canada and allow an extension of the deadline for the phasing out of COSP, which would be of great benefit to the constituents in northern Canada who find, because of weather and a shortage of material, that contractors are unable to complete their work. This extension would go a long way to appeasing the viewpoints of our constituents.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak again to Bill C-24 on oil substitution and conservation and on home insulation. One of the real values of keeping this Bill before the House as long as it has been is that it gives the opportunity to people to let us know exactly how they feel about this Bill. Since I last spoke on the Bill a couple of weeks ago I have had about 20 letters, almost all taking the same position. People need this oil substitution Bill extended rather than cut. The idea of keeping a Bill before the House and maybe hoisting it for six months allows the public to take a good look at the Bill, to judge it and then let us know how they feel about it.

I strongly support a motion to hoist this Bill because that will give not only the people of Canada an opportunity to take a look at this Bill, but it will also give an opportunity to the present Government to back off and make use of the Bill in a different way.

As a matter of interest, I want to list a number of reasons that have been conveyed to me in letters from my constituents. The reason that comes most often from my constituency is that gas supply is just now reaching a person's farm or house. If this Bill cuts off the opportunity for substitution, that person will not be able to take advantage of the structure presently in place. Is that fair, Mr. Speaker? Just because gas does not reach an individual's home until this summer or the summer after, is he not going to be able to take advantage of the substitution grants?

A second reason and one which has been mentioned many times already is that the ground is frozen. People will not be able to dig until after April. Therefore a person is forced into a position where he will get less of the substitution grant than someone who was able to take advantage of it last fall.

The third reason one hears is from the person who has been planning to substitute his energy supply for years. Now he is only going to be able to do about half as much work as before. Another reason is that a person would have been able to afford conversion but cannot now because the grant will not be as big as expected. All of this is information that has been passed to us from our constituents.

I have not received—and I think the same goes for my colleagues—as many letters from people worried about the loss of CHIP grants, probably because that program has been used much more extensively and has not been dependent upon the availability of gas or other forms of fuel. However, the general tenor of the letters has been much the same, that it is unfair to take away these grants since some people have not had an opportunity to make use of them while other people, even in the same areas, have had an opportunity to do so. The other main point of view has been that future increases in costs of fuels will make them take advantage of the grant and therefore they would like that opportunity. Some people have indicated that they could not afford to do it before but will have to do it in the future, so why should they not receive the same support as have other people in the past?

There are a number of points which should be put on the record before we let the Bill go to committee or hopefully hoist it for six months, so that the Government can take a look at the effect of the Bill. This has been one of the most popular grant programs across the country. In fact, it might be the best possible job-creation program around. When a few dollars are put into the hands of people to make their homes more energy efficient, they usually make other improvements as well. Perhaps it would be best to expand this program and put more money into the hands of home owners so that they can improve the quality of their homes. These grants, along with RRAP grants, have almost been direct job-creation programs because as soon as the money is available to home owners to improve their homes, they hire someone to do the work. It is also a direct job-creation program in that it has a direct effect upon small businesses in the communities where the money is spent. Home owners purchase new furnaces and have them installed; home owners purchase insulation and have it installed. Its cancellation is unfair and discriminatory because a large group of the population has not had an opportunity to substitute oil with some different fuel. They are quite willing to do so now that a substitute fuel is becoming available to them.

Many speakers on the Government side have suggested that these grants went to higher income groups. A study conducted by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources indicates something quite different. Since these grants were taxable, the taxation system took away a certain portion of the amount payable, particularly for higher income groups. The Government is suggesting by this cut that it is no longer interested in conservation or in assisting lower income Canadians to reduce their costs. It has said that it will let the oil go to the world price and that it will not put in place a mechanism for people who cannot afford the world price to improve their homes so that they will not use as much oil. The money saved in conservation by individual home owners, as far as the Government is concerned, is money that it will not have to put out to purchase foreign oil.

Consequently, the business direction in this Bill is not for the good of the people, for the good of the country or for the good of the Government. Therefore it should take advantage of our hoist motion and keep this Bill off the books for at least six months, until it analyses its effects.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the discussion of this Bill today and certainly the motion before the House dealing with a six-month hoist. I would have preferred if this legislation had not been on the floor of the House of Commons at all, as I come from a province which specifically relied very heavily on the off-oil program, and which has the highest energy costs of the country.

We talk about energy conservation. What better method of keeping the price of oil low in the future than to have a quantity or surplus of oil and other forms of energy. Since COSP and CHIP were introduced by the former Government, they have saved the country 75,000 barrels of oil per day in consumption or the equivalent of 25 million to 30 million barrels of oil per year. An extremely significant amount of energy was saved by this off-oil program. I am sure my colleague from Calgary would like to see us spending millions of dollars on energy, but I say to her that I am from a part of the country which cannot afford to spend the dollars that are necessary.

Mrs. Sparrow: But you set the price.

Mr. Henderson: Poor people of my province cannot afford to spend the dollars necessary to keep fuel in their tanks.

Many people in my province have taken advantage of this program. Not only has it been good as far as conservation of the energy resource is concerned, but it has been excellent in terms of job creation. Numerous small contractors who supply and instal CSA approved furnaces, as well as the other heating apparatus which goes with them, have created many jobs in the last few years. While CHIP only provided grants in the amount of $500, the Government did not seem to understand the program. I have heard Hon. Members opposite speaking on the Bill. They seemed to say that it was another giveaway program, that it was something Canadians did not need. It was a taxable program. Certainly those in the higher income brackets had to pay taxes in the 45 per cent to 50 per cent range, but those in lower income brackets or those who did not have to pay income taxes received the entire $500. It was an excellent program in that respect. In my mind, at least, it benefited the people who needed it most.

I have received many inquiries since the Bill was introduced in the House by the Minister. The people in my province are frustrated, not only because of this Bill but because of a number of other programs. I would mention the high cost of energy. In the last few months this Government has introduced programs to increase potato inspection fees and meat inspection fees, to levy ferry rate increases, national park fee increases, increased berthage fees for fishermen and so on. There has been a litany of new programs introduced by the Government under the camouflage of reducing the deficit. COSP and CHIP are two such programs. At the same time, expenditures in the Prime Minister's office are being increased by $2 million. We see $50 million going to the Armed Forces for new uniforms. A record number of Cabinet Ministers have been appointed to this Government at extremely high cost.

Mr. McDermid: You are just sorry you are not in there.

Mr. Henderson: My friend says I'm sorry that I am not in there. If he was any good, he would be in there. We have all these programs being cut, and those affected will be the people who can least afford it.

Members on the Government side have talked about all the jobs that were lost in western Canada because of the National Energy Program. I agree that some jobs may have been lost, but when people in Atlantic Canada convert from oil to wood, they create jobs in that area. Atlantic Canada obtains its oil from offshore. For many years there was a subsidy program in place to help these Canadians. The dollars spent to purchase that oil left this country. However, a dollar spent on wood or other energy sources that we have in our own back yard is reinvested within the community. Every dollar spent generates another seven dollars in that community.

It is a shame to see what this Government is doing with these two very important programs. There are many people who insulate their homes from the outside, not the inside. The inside walls may be perfectly good. When they reshingle, they may tear off the boards from the outside. That could not be done between November 8 and now.

Other speakers have mentioned digging for gas lines and so on. I do not know whether that is entirely appropriate. I realize that you cannot dig as cheaply in the winter as in the summer, but the gas lines can be installed. However, not much can be done to the outside of a house in the winter in my area. If we cannot get this legislation withdrawn completely so that the programs will stay in effect until completion in 1990 for COSP and 1987 for CHIP, then the six-month hoist is a fair idea. It is not long enough, but the Government could use that six months to organize. When it receives input from Canadians, it will see the benefits of the program. It would also become aware of the job-creation aspects of the program.

The pittance of an incentive that was there had spin-off effects. If someone installed a wood furnace in my province, in many case he would often put in a new chimney, which created work for bricklayers and others. Most Prince Edward Islanders began burning oil in the early 1960s. Previous to that they burned wood. They got away from that in the days of cheap oil. Many of those furnaces needed replacement. Senior citizens and others were sometimes unable on their skimpy income to afford a proper conversion. This $500 or $800 given by the previous Government was of great benefit to them. Once again, this Government is penny wise and pound foolish by bringing this kind of legislation before the House of Commons to get rid of something which over the years has been an excellent program.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it may seem a bit strange that someone from Windsor should rise to express concern about the threatened demise of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program, especially given the warmth of our people and the moderation of our climate. In fact, it was not a concern until we felt the first cold wind of conservatism in this northern climate. That could only be explained by the ideology of the present Government, consistent with other cuts which had been applied, directed at cutting the deficit at any cost. It is another of these programs that in search of deficit cutting clearly has been introduced with little thought, just as with the cuts in the CBC and cuts in the environment which, in afterthought, were at least modified to some degree.

Both CHIP and COSP have as their purpose the conservation of energy. COSP was designed to encourage the conversion to alternate fuels, providing a 50 per cent grant or $800 maximum. The insulation program provided 60 per cent of cost to a maximum of $500. These programs met their intentions.

This is a country in which energy costs are very high. We have the highest rate of expenditure for energy of perhaps any country in the world. I would think that any program that is designed to reduce energy costs in this country would be supported by just about everyone in the country, with the possible exception of the Conservative Government. This is a country in which housing costs are fast outpacing the ability of people to pay, and energy costs are a significant component of that. Any programs that were designed to cut housing costs would be supported by almost anyone in the country, except this Conservative Government. This is a country in which we have limited oil resources. It is a non-renewable resource. Any program designed to conserve oil would make sense to anyone in this country, with the possible exception of this Conservative Government.

Imported oil is costly. It is needed in the east particularly. Any program designed to reduce imports of oil from elsewhere would, I am sure, be supported by almost everyone in this country, again with the exception of this Conservative Government. Unemployment is a critical program and any program designed to produce jobs would be approved by anybody in this country, except the Conservative Government. Indeed, because COSP and CHIP contribute to all these goals, they would be supported by almost everyone in the country. We must ask ourselves: Why are they not supported by the Conservative Government?

The Canadian Oil Substitution Program was introduced in 1980 to reduce oil use from 37 per cent to 10 per cent of residential energy. By 1984, half the target, or two million conversions had been reached. There are 42,000 barrels of oil per day which are saved, and householders are saving $634 per year. It means that the consumer will receive a return on his investment within two to three years.

Similarly, CHIP had a targeted conversion of 4.9 million residences by 1987. At the end of last year, 2.5 million residences had been converted. Many of the people who converted were low-income citizens. Indeed, a great proportion of the grants went to those who earned less than $15,000 a year. Those who took advantage of the cuts in fuel costs were able to reduce their expenses by 17 per cent through CHIP. It amounted to a saving of $207 per year. Therefore, they paid for their conversion within one year. Through CHIP, 23,000 barrels of oil per day were saved. A person who took advantage of both COSP and CHIP saved approximately $800 a year.

These two programs have been meeting their goals. For the Government to propose the termination of the programs can only mean that it is opposed to the goals. Certainly, that puts the Government at variance with almost everyone in the country.

Another aspect is the employment which these programs create. They not only meet an energy-saving need, but they are effective in job creation. As my colleague indicated earlier, the unemployment rate in Vancouver in the construction industry is 60 to 70 per cent, as it is in Windsor. These programs would produce jobs in the construction industry. They are labour-intensive programs. A lot of emphasis has been placed on the prospect of job creation in the oil industry and the atomic energy industry. If one looks at the oil industry, 18.9 person-years of work are produced for every million dollar expenditure. In the atomic energy field, 24 person-years of work are created for every million dollar expenditure. But almost 36 person-years of work are created for every million dollar expenditure in the conservation of energy. In fact, the number of jobs which have been created through CHIP has been superior to any of the figures which I have mentioned. In fact, through CHIP, 108 person-years of work are created for every million dollars of government expenditure. With the demise of CHIP, 30,000 person-years of work will be lost.

With respect to COSP, 50 person-years of work are created for every million dollars which is spent. Between 1981 and 1985, 50,000 jobs were created. With the termination of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, 59,000 person-years of work will be lost.

It is difficult to determine whether the Government has given any thought to the proposal which is before the House, that is to say, any thought beyond the ideological premise. When attempting to test the validity of a piece of legislation, one must hunt for a basic premise which is founded in reason, which has some logic and which has an element of common sense. But when a Government proposes an action which does not recognize that the ground is frozen in the winter in northern Canada, I believe that calls into question the thought which went into this legislation.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this legislation which relates to the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program. It strikes me that the motion to hoist Bill C-24 for six months is intelligent and one which would be greeted with a great deal of respect by Canadians. All Governments are entitled to an error in judgment. I consider this legislation to be a serious error in judgment.

In my city, the housing stock is very old and all kinds of government incentives are required, particularly in this time of decreasing income and increasing costs. Therefore, I strongly urge the Government to reconsider the Bill. Perhaps the Government should put it aside until a time when it can bring forward a more comprehensive program. In any case it should stop dealing with these issues by way of a piecemeal approach.

The Government made 38 energy promises during the election campaign. I believe that many of those promises were stated with good will, but they were stated in a glib way and were not fully thought out. I would ask the Government seriously to consider withdrawing this Bill. It should take the six months to consider the legislation carefully. Then it could come back with something which would make sense to the people in my riding as well as people in Montreal, Quebec City and those areas of the country where there is a lot of old housing stock.

Most families with two incomes are having a difficult time. Most families require two incomes. It is not a matter of both people wanting to work or wanting to express their creativity, but rather a matter of their having to work because they need the extra income. Any programs which will enable families to reduce their overhead costs, enable them to save money, and at the same time conserve energy, are valuable programs.

With respect to meeting government goals on job creation, what better programs could be used than CHIP or COSP? These programs provide an opportunity for manufacturers to produce new goods such as furnaces, and they also provide opportunities for the service sector to insulate attics etcetera. It creates jobs in the business and service sectors. In addition, families will be able to manage their budgets much more effectively.

It is a serious issue in a country which has a cold climate for almost six months of the year. Many northern parts of Canada cannot become involved in these programs, except for short periods in summer, because of climatic conditions. In converting to alternative resources and in using, particularly in Quebec, hydroelectric power or wood and gas, we will conserve approximately 65,000 barrels of oil per day. That is a very significant saving of a non-renewable resource. If we are serious about conservation, we must look at the subject in a comprehensive way.

A Member opposite referred to the fact that these programs were used only by the wealthy. That is not the case. As the previous speaker indicated, the programs have been used by many low-income families. Even when they are used by wealthy people, they are a taxable benefit. I understand that $1.3 million has been spent on home insulation and off-oil programs, but the Government has recovered over $300 million. I do not think that because these programs have been used by upper-income people they should be terminated. They have been a very important service to middle and low-income people as well.

By the way, regarding that 65,000 barrels of oil a day which has been saved, I believe there was an update by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources increasing that to 75,000 barrels a day. That saving of oil must be a very significant factor, particularly to the Party in opposition, and I am speaking about opposition across the floor to my philosophy.

So I recommend very strongly that the Government support the hoist motion, keep this Bill off the books for six months, go back to the drawing board and bring back a comprehensive plan which will deal with alternative energy, something that will be a good deal for both Alberta and Newfoundland where they have signed some kind of new agreements. Let us not continue to cut anywhere just for the sake of cutting. We have had enough of that. This is a lifeline into our own families and the use of our own resources. So I strongly recommend that we give this a second thought and support the motion.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, little wonder government Members want to put the question, because Bill C-24, I maintain, is one of the most embarrassing pieces of legislation this Government has introduced.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: I hear moans and groans from Members opposite. They maintain that in order to reduce the deficit we must cut back on programs like CHIP and COSP. They say that this is important in order to reduce the deficit and get the country back on its feet. But I suggest that if they would only look at the amount of money the Government is now spending under the ill-conceived National Energy Program, started by the Liberals and which subsidizes imported oil and, through grants and tax breaks, the oil industry, they would see that some 75,000 barrels of oil a day have been saved owing to these two programs at a cost of some $1.3 billion. Even that figure is misleading because approximately one third comes back to the federal and provincial Governments in the form of taxes. So let us put the figure at around $900 million and it results in a saving to the consumers of this country of some 75,000 barrels of oil a day. Compare that to the $17 billion odd committed at the end of 1983 to the National Energy Program which has produced only some 22,000 barrels of oil a day. Where are the economics? The economics are very simple. The Government commitment is to help the oil industry and the oil barons, not the home owners of this country.

Members opposite talk about reducing the deficit. Let me suggest to them that the best way is to tax the oil companies. Stop giving them all the tax breaks, the incentives and the grants. This Government can save the taxpayers of this country hundreds of millions, nay, billions of dollars. But will it reduce the deficit by attacking the almighty oil compaines? No, of course not. After all, deals and commitments have been made, and these have to be honoured. But what about the commitments to the home owners of this country, the people who benefited from the off-oil and insulation programs? Well, of course, they can be forgotten, thrown to the wind. So when I hear Conservative Members say that this is necessary in order to cut our deficit, I say B.S. If they were seriously concerned about reducing the deficit they would be reducing the costly parts, the supply parts of the energy program. But no, they are not reducing the supply part. They are not reducing the grants and bail-outs to the nuclear industry which has cost this country billions of dollars over the years. They are not reducing any of the grants and subsidies to the oil companies. No, not at all. But the programs which benefit ordinary Canadian men and women, yes, they will reduce those programs. It is indeed a sad moment when a Conservative Party which claims to be concerned about conserving is in fact the one that kills the program which attempts to encourage conservation.

What about the future? A report prepared by Canertech in December, 1983, suggested that the level of energy savings in this country over the next 10 years is up to the equivalent of 490,000 barrels of oil per day. This is based on 1983 dollars. That, Mr. Speaker, is the output of three or four mega-tar sands plants. In contrast, they would involve capital costs of about $60 billion and significant tax on royalty concessions. That is the potential of conservation in this country. We can conserve some 490,000 barrels of oil a day and do it a heck of a lot cheaper than building and financing mega-projects. But there is not a murmur about stopping any of those programs. After all, deals have been made, commitments have been made, and they must be honoured.

Given all this, surely it must make sense to Hon. Members that this Bill in front of us is foolishness. We must begin to recognize that oil is a finite resource. We must begin to conserve. It is in the national interest to do that. Surely it is about time that as a nation we began to recognize that the days of abundant resources are over. Is it not about time that the Conservative Party recognized its own roots as a conserving Party and paid more than just lip service to the slogan of conservation? They must reverse the legislation. But, no, they go in the opposite direction. Instead, the Conservative Members want to make the Canadian public captives of the oil industry. That is the real agenda that is involved here. They do not want Canadians to be self-sufficient. Rather, they want us to be captives of the oil industry in order to provide for the necessary markets to justify all the mega-projects. That is surely the only rational reason one could arrive at after looking at Bill C-24.

As I have pointed out, reducing the deficit is not a valid argument. If the Government were interested in reducing the deficit it could cut back on the subsidies and royalties it has given to the oil industry. Instead, it is eliminating the Canadian Home Insulation Program. I maintain that the Government wants the Canadian public to be captives of the utility and oil companies. That will cause Canadians to spend billions of dollars in the future to increase our energy and oil supplies. These expenditures would not be necessary to that degree if the Government would play a leading role in developing alternative energies and conservation measures.

Canadians are the largest consumers of energy in the world. In part that makes sense because we are a large country, sparsely populated, with a northern climate. There is much that can and should be done to conserve. Government has a responsibility. It must play a leading role in this. If the Government abdicates that responsibility, I predict that in the next election the people of Canada will turf it out because it has not fulfilled its important function of being a leader in this field.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to say a word or two in support of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act. I have been listening with great interest to the opposition Members today. If this were not my duty day in the House I may not have been listening to them quite as attentively. However, I have been listening to them with great interest.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in examining this Bill they have missed the point somewhat. When you look at the purpose of this Bill surely you must look at the original legislation and see what the purpose of that legislation was. Upon looking at that I am sure that all of us would come to the conclusion that this Bill was put forward to try to encourage the Canadian public to substitute one form of energy for another. It was aimed at encouraging energy conservation. It was aimed at encouraging all of us to change from oil to electricity, gas, or whatever.

The purpose of that is very laudable. However, is it not true that even if we had not provided an extra monetary incentive there would have been an incentive there to convert from oil and to conserve energy? When one remembers the concern that we all have about the lack of oil in the country and how the price of oil has escalated over the last few years, it is only logical to believe that, without this additional financial incentive, the Canadian public would have converted to another form of energy. The low-income Canadians, whom many of the members of the Opposition have talked about today, would have done it anyway because for them too it makes good economic sense. It certainly makes good sense when one considers that with fuel savings over a very short period of time they can save the capital cost which they would put into a conversion.

With regard to the job creation aspect which members of the Opposition have talked about, those jobs would have inevitably been created in any event. If it makes good economic sense to go off oil, whether or not you are provided with additional incentive, you will do it and you will create those jobs.

The question is whether this program was needed in the first place to create jobs and to encourage Canadians to convert to other forms of fuel. We are inevitably led to the conclusion that this extra incentive is not necessary. It is always difficult to get rid of something which is in place, and all of us would like to get a little money from the Government, but it really did not require that money from the Government to get us to convert from oil. We would have done that anyway and we will continue to do it even without this program. The Canadian public knows how to spend their money better than the Government does. They want to ensure that we have wise financial management in the country. The purpose of this Bill is to ensure that we get this country back on the right road to wise financial management.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member who just spoke had some time left for his speech. I wonder if I could seek unanimous consent of the House and his consent to put a question to him?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, we are proceeding under S.O. 35(2). We have 10-minute speeches. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could rebut some of the arguments of the hon. gentleman who just spoke in relation to areas where the conversions were made to wood and areas of rural Canada where the incomes of the people taking advantage of the program are not all that high. I refer specifically to people who are on fixed incomes, whether it be pensions or government incomes, like welfare. I think the main point that should be dealt with in this debate is that this program should remain in place for those people who do not have the incomes available to them to make the conversion.

When we discuss programs such as COSP, RRAP or any other home repair program in the country, we get into provincial rules and regulations. I am referring specifically to rules and regulations of provincial Departments of social services and welfare. In many cases the provincial Departments will not put up the total cost of such conversions. In fact, a great many social services recipients in the country had converted to heating with wood in rural areas simply because the federal grant was available and the provincial Departments of social services wanted to take advantage of it. In northern areas of the country, and in certain provinces like Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, provincial Departments of social services have converted the heating systems of particular families from oil to wood, producing a saving for the provincial Department of Social Services as well as for the people concerned.

Some Members have said during this debate that some of the people receiving this money are well off, or rich. They said that they are not the poor or medium-income people but, rather, the fairly well off people. Can you imagine that statement applying to someone converting to wood? I am sure you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that that is completely out of the question. Can you imagine a person who is well off cancelling his board of trade meeting because he does not have enough splits for the morning? It is likely that his wife would cancel a bridge party because she had some chainsaw oil on her new dress? Would a rich family discuss during their dinner, the problems of removing mer from softwood, or that they should only use hardwood so there would not be turpentine or mer on their hands? Would they talk about getting a new track for the chainsaw or how to overcome the exhaust problems of the chainsaw? Would those families worry about converting from a 14-inch saw to a 12-inch blade?

It is absolutely ludicrous for anyone to suggest that only rich people took advantage of the program as it relates to wood in the northern and rural parts of this country. Those programs should be maintained for people whose circumstances may have prevented them from being able to convert in the winter months when their heating bills have been as high as $300 a month.

With regard to these northern areas, I am surprised that the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) would not be encouraging the Government to maintain this program, if only for wood conversion.

Statistics show that it is in remote areas where the wood resource is available that this program was used to its greatest extent. Therefore, the Minister of State for Forestry has a vested interest in maintaining this program. People in those remote forested areas would simply pick up the debris off the logging roads if they could not get cutting permits. There is no question that there are enough fallen trees in our forests today to take care of all the woodstoves in any local area.

There are many rural areas in this country where the paper mills and private enterprise take advantage of softwoods. However, there are not many private entrepreneurs who make use of the hardwoods, which are left to die in the forests and create fire hazards. The Minister should have a special interest in this legislation for that reason, and he should suggest to the Minister responsible for this legislation that she maintain this program, if only for conversion to wood.

We are also debating an amendment for a six-month hoist. Such amendments are normally introduced for two reasons: either total disagreement with the Bill or a desire to put more pressing legislation before the Chamber. I think most Members in the House today would agree that there are more pressing matters facing the country today than that of eliminating a direct grant program to individuals. In fact, I would suggest that many would agree to a six-month hoist on all the legislation before the Chamber, because so much is happening that affects their constituencies which has not been explained by the Government. Those matters affect almost everything that happens with respect to transfers to individuals and their ability to take advantage of federal programs.

We have witnessed in the House this massive onslaught on transfers to individuals, no matter what program is involved. This was one of the easiest for the Government to attack. It was the only area in which it could make cuts. The Government will realize that there is very little that can be cut when it comes to transfers directly into the pockets of the Canadian people. Are you indicating that my time is up, Mr. Speaker? I will have to bow to your ruling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, I enjoy listening to him, but his time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 45, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. OIL SUBSTITUTION AND CONSERVATION ACT CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works; and the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 3072).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the motion to postpone this Bill for six months. I see the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) across the aisle. I do not know if he is familiar with the history of this place. Bob McGregor was the Member for York East for 23 years. Silent Bob McGregor never said anything in the House, but he made one mistake. At the end of 23 years, he rose to actually make a speech, and was promptly defeated in the next election. I do not know what will happen to the Hon. Member for York East, but he is a good Member and participates well in the House. Let me address some remarks with respect to what he said.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has not conducted a study into the Canadian off-oil program. It has studied the CHIP program and that study showed CHIP to be a useful program and one that was used by middle and low-income Canadians.

I suggest that the Government would be wise to conduct a study into the off-oil program before it blindly axes a program. I do not believe the Hon. Member would take such action and

I suggest to him that there are legitimate reasons to delay this Bill for six months with respect to off-oil conversion.

A six-month hoist is usually a symbolic motion indicating opposition to a Bill. However, this is not the case with respect to this amendment. We believe the Government should postpone the completion date of the off-oil program from March 31, 1985, to September 30, 1985.

Many Members have stood up to give examples from their constituencies of why the program should be maintained. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) cited the case of people in his riding who wanted to order parts for off-oil conversion but must wait for those parts to come from Montreal or Toronto. There have been cases of constituents from northern Ontario who cannot put in gas lines because the ground is frozen. A six-month delay of this legislation would allow more gas lines to be installed and for people to take advantage of the program to convert from oil, which is being depleted, to natural gas, of which there is a surplus.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) told us of the line-ups of people in his riding who want to apply for this particular program. The program is not that costly to the Government. Possibly one-third of the funds will go back to the Government in the form of taxes. These programs have resulted in a saving of approximately 45,000 barrels of oil per day, accounting for up to 3 per cent saving in the annual use of oil in Canada. If the Government wants to consult with people and be rational, it will consider our proposal to extend the deadline until September. It is only fair and just. There are Canadians in different parts of the country who cannot take advantage of the program.

I heard the Hon. Member for York East say Canadians will substitute anyway, that Canadians, being rational beings, will go to other forms of energy such as hydro, wood or natural gas rather than oil. I suggest to the Hon. Member that that may not be true and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Take that back.

Mr. McDermid: You are saying Canadians are not rational?

Mr. Waddell: No, I am not saying Canadians are not rational.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Canadians cannot afford it.

Mr. Waddell: Some Canadians cannot afford it. Some Canadians who may be able to afford it are looking at the price of world oil. I suggest they may be thinking that the price of world oil is going to drop. I think the price of world oil will drop in a short time.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The banks won't let it.

Mr. Waddell: It is already dropping. Canadians will say, "Why should we bother converting?". I get clippings from lots of different jurisdictions. I have been looking at clippings from some of the American commentators who are warning us. They say that we have made lots of progress in energy conservation, but now we are back-tracking. Energy conservation is getting out of fashion with the public because the public thinks the price of oil is going to go down.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Not in the long run.

Mr. Waddell: I think it will go down in the short run. We are going to have a problem because it is a depleting resource. The price will eventually go up. The price could go up very suddenly if this Gulf war escalates, particularly as it relates to the conflict between Iraq and Iran which is already escalating. If Saudi Arabia gets involved the price of oil will go up very rapidly. Once again Canadians will be caught.

The Government is giving Canadians $800 out of about $2,000 to change a furnace. It is a little bit of a carrot to help Canadians. Then there is $500 for CHIP. For once we have given the ordinary Canadian a break. Consumers are paying all the costs in this country. Oil companies are not the ones that are paying. It is our oil. Canadian consumers are paying 50 cents a litre for gas at the pump. Here we give poor ordinary Canadians a break. This Government has no problem in giving $1.6 billion to the oil companies. It has turned around and I do not understand what it is doing. The Government's first attack on the National Energy Program, which it justifiably criticized when in opposition—

Mr. McDermid: Which you supported.

Mr. Waddell: Which we did not support. We criticized the same things the Tories criticized. We supported the conservation aspects of the program. It is working. One million households have taken advantage of the off-oil program. Another 900,000 households are waiting. Why cut off the program? We have lean Canadian small business companies involved. What does the Government do, Mr. Speaker? It cuts them off and favours instead the largely fat big foreign-owned oil companies.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The Tories are against small businesses.

Mr. Waddell: Why is the Government attacking conservation first? Why do government Members stand up and say they are against grants? I heard the Member here and I heard the Member there. They are against grants. Are they against grants on regional diversification and regional employment? I heard the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) speak. I know his area. I lived in Yellowknife. If we cut off those grants, the whole place would die in a month. I heard the Member over here speak about cutting off grants. Some grants are good, some grants are bad. You cannot generally say that we have to cut off grants. We give grants. Are we going to cut off the home ownership program and the RRSPs? This is the modern world. The Government intervenes all over the place. In this one program the Government intervened on behalf of the ordinary Canadian, the home owner, and gave him a little bit of a break. This Government proposes to attack it now.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You should be ashamed of yourselves.

Mr. Waddell: I plead with this Government. At least in the interest of justice, give it another six months. You have people lining up waiting who cannot get on the list. Tories say they should have taken advantage of it before. They are human. They did not take advantage of it before.

Mr. Deans: Maybe they weren't working.

Mr. Waddell: Now they want to take advantage of it. Now we have a big burst of people who want to take advantage of it. It is a good program.

Mr. McDermid: You will want another six months, and then another six months.

Mr. Waddell: No, it will not be another six months. I say this to the Parliamentary Secretary, that he has my commitment on behalf of our Party that we will be prepared, if the Government gives a six-month extension, since the Tories have the majority and it is the Government's way, to let the Bill go through in September with very little debate. Is that not fair, Mr. Speaker? I think it is fair.

Mr. Deans: That is perfectly reasonable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It may be fair, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. I would specifically ask my colleagues to support the proposed amendment to hoist the Bill for six months. There are very cogent and important reasons that this Bill ought to be put on the backburner for at least six months.

First, I would like to comment on the question of consultation. This Government has promised to consult before it takes action. Over the last several months, we have been told time and time again that it is the desire of this Government to consult with interested parties before taking action. What form of consultation took place with respect to Bill C-24? Were interested groups given an opportunity to address the Government and indicate how the termination of this program at an early date would impact upon various important matters such as jobs?

The Government has continually promised that it would create jobs. Jobs, jobs, jobs was the promise during the election campaign. It is my understanding that this particular Bill bringing forward the termination date of two very popular programs will result in the net loss of jobs. I am not aware of the number of jobs, but this Government should make every effort possible to ensure that jobs are not lost. I know it is very difficult to create jobs, but when the Government takes very direct action resulting in the loss of jobs, it has to be very careful and vigilant that adequate consultation takes place.

With respect to the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, that program was and is a very popular program in my riding of York South-Weston. As the House is aware, the program provides subsidies of up to $800 to home owners who convert from oil to another form of fuel. This program was an extremely popular program not only for home owners in York South-Weston, but for home owners across the country.

When the program was initially introduced there was a very serious concern about the shortage of oil here and it was hoped that home owners would take advantage of the program in order to ensure that we did not run short of oil at a very early date. We have, of course, other forms of fuel that are far more economical and abundant. It was the intent of this legislation to provide home owners with some incentive to convert from a limited resource to other resources that are unlimited, if you will.

I am sure Hon. Members opposite will recognize and admit to the popularity of this program. Many Canadians have taken advantage of it. It was necessary as an incentive for Canadians to take advantage of it to provide subsidies to homeowners. Those subsidies were provided and, as a result, Canadian home owners converted. What the Government is proposing is that the termination date, which was originally December 31, 1987, be brought forward to March 31, 1986.

I suspect one of the reasons behind this particular piece of legislation is to save money. We fully recognize that the Government wants to reduce the deficit. I would simply ask Hon. Members opposite to be very sensitive to the cuts which take place and the ramifications of these particular cuts. For the sake of saving money with respect to these programs by bringing the termination date forward, the Government recognizes that jobs will be lost. One of the effects of these programs is the creation of jobs in the heating equipment market for installers of different furnaces and other individuals involved with conversion. In effect, by bringing forward the termination date, the result is a loss of jobs which are so badly needed at this point in time.

The other program which the Government is intending to cut short is the very important and popular CHIP which provided subsidies of up to $500 to home owners to upgrade insulation in their homes. As I indicated, these twin programs are very important and have considerably benefited the country.

The proposed six-month hoist will extend these programs and will give the Government on apportunity to start consulting with various interest groups. If the Government is sincere—and I believe it is—that consultation is key, I would ask what is the program in extending or delaying the Bill for a mere six months in order to give people an opportunity to come forward? Perhaps as a result of that consultative process, the Government might become convinced, where we as opposition Members might fail to convince it, that this legislation is bad. Perhaps it will be convinced by non-partisan individuals who will be harmed as a result of the change in the programs. At the very least, the consultative process could satisfy not only the Opposition but members of the public that the legislation is necessary.

I ask Hon. Members opposite to live up to the many promises they made during the election campaign, one of which was to consult with Canadians before taking action. When the legislation was originally introduced and put in place by the previous Government, in effect there was a contract of sorts with Canadian people. They were told that two programs would be put in place, that subsidies would be forthcoming from two particular programs, and that specific dates would be inserted in the legislation to tell people how long the programs would last. In effect, what the Government is suggesting breaches that contract with Canadians.

It is true that there was some advance warning to Canadians indicating that the programs would be ending, but I submit that sufficient advance notice was not given. In order for Canadians to budget adequately with respect to home repairs and other expenses relating to upgrading their homes and heating systems, more advance notice is necessary.

In conclusion, I ask Hon. Members opposite to give some very serious consideration to adopting the amendment in order to delay the matter for at least six months. I am sure each and every Member opposite has many home owners in his riding who have take advantage of the legislation and others who would like to take advantage of it. We know for a fact that many people have converted from oil to other forms of fuel. Also we know that there are many other people who would like to take advantage of the program but cannot because it will end at a very early date.

I thank the House for the opportunity to express my concerns with respect to Bill C-24. I hope the Government in its wisdom will reconsider its actions.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act. I think the use of the word "amend" is a little in error because the effect of this Bill will be to kill two very valuable programs of which many Canadians have taken advantage in their desire and concern to enter into programs of energy conservation. That is all the more the pity. In fact, if anything can be said about conservation measures, it is probably that they have been effective and have worked well. The Government is now stepping in to kill something of great advantage to many Canadians.

In my own constituency many people have spoken to me about the effect of this Bill and about their plans to upgrade their residence, to get off oil and on to some other alternate source of energy. Many of the arguments I have heard over the past several weeks during which the Bill has been before the House and prior to that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced his intention to introduce this measure in his economic statement, have been in complete opposition to what the Government is doing. I heard a government Member indicate earlier this afternoon that he felt there were far too many subsidies given by the Government to Canadians. I would readily agree with him, certainly in the way that this Government and previous Liberal Governments have handed out millions, if not billions, of Canadian taxpayers' dollars to the corporate sector. It is questionable as to whether or not ordinary Canadian taxpayers have benefited as a result.

The same argument cannot be made for this type of program. It has been well used. In his speech, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) made some excellent points about the value of the program, not only to individual taxpayers but in terms of the Government representing taxpayers across the country.

A good question to ask is: How much money will we spend to find the last drop of oil in the country? "The last drop of oil" is a definite way of putting it because it is a non-renewable resource. It is totally wrong for the Government to develop policy, to take away from existing policy and in effect to put all our eggs in one basket in terms of energy uses.

The Canadian Oil Substitution Program was introduced in 1980 in order to provide financial assistance for the conversion of heating systems in residential, commercial and industrial buildings off oil to a non oil-fired heating system. At this point I would like to mention a telephone call that I received from an elderly constituent, 82 or 83 years old. His sight has gone and obviously he has difficulty getting around. He would like to take advantage of this kind of program, but he does not know whether at his age it would be worth-while putting that kind of money into switching from oil to gas. There are no programs available to assist him with escalating heating costs. He read some of his bills to me over the last 10 years which showed what has happened to his heating costs over that length of time.

Rather than the Government initiating measures to cut back on existing programs which were extremely useful to many Canadians, perhaps it should have looked at expanding the kind of assistance available. In particular, it should look at the senior citizens of this country who are stuck with oil-fired furnaces, the heating costs of which have doubled if not tripled over the last 10 years. That would have been extremely useful, not only in terms of energy conservation, but in terms of offering assistance to elderly Canadians who really could use it as at this time.

In previous contributions in this House by Members who are now on the government side but who at one point not so long ago were on the opposition benches, and who will undoubtedly be back again if they keep introducing measures like this—

An Hon. Member: It will be sooner rather than later.

Mr. Young: It will be sooner rather than later. One prominent government Member who was then a prominent opposition Member in speaking on these programs, said, and it will come as no surprise that the Member is the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton)—

An Hon. Member: He is brilliant.

Mr. Young: He is brilliant and was brilliant when he was talking about this particular program. What he said is recorded for posterity at page 11099 of Hansard for June 30, 1981. The Hon. Member said, and I quote:

> It is a good philosophy to get as many people in the low technology systems as possible to move away from the consumption of oil. It is particularly good, if the alternative is cheaper not only than the present price of oil but the future price as well.

That was obviously said by a man of great wisdom. Members will greatly benefit if they listen to the experienced Members on the government side. This particular Member was a Minister in the Diefenbaker Cabinet. He made a tremendous contribution to the policies developed by the Prime Minister of that day. We all know what happened to that Government, but it was not due to the advice of the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. I have been at many, many gatherings and meetings around this place since 1980 and I know that the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain has said publicly on many occasions that if the Diefenbaker Government had listened to him, it would still be in office. He says it with such authority and conviction, I personally believe him.

If the Government were to listen to this particular gentleman, perhaps it would have a chance of coming back here as the Government after the next election. However, the way things are going, I doubt that very much. Some of them are very sensible people. I see my friend, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). He is a man of great wisdom. I can see in his eyes that he agrees with everything that I am saying. I am sure that at the caucus meeting on Wednesday morning he will advise the Cabinet that, after listening to me and my persuasive arguments, he is convinced that this program should in fact be extended for six months, as my good friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has proposed to the House. If the House has any sense, particularly the government side, it will agree to the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member. I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure unanimous consent would be available if the Hon. Member who just finished speaking would like to continue his remarks. However, I am very glad to have the opportunity to give my position on this Bill.

We have been very critical in Question Period in the House and elsewhere of the fact that this Government has not carried out the promises that it made during the course of the election campaign. What we are here to talk about today is something that it is doing which it never promised. I certainly do not remember hearing during the election campaign that the COSP and CHIP programs would be cancelled. I would have liked to have heard that from the Conservative candidate during the election campaign in my riding and elsewhere in the country. He would have been talking then about two of the most popular programs and most important programs of the Government which are being cancelled with a very short lead in time.

I do not know if Members opposite are in touch with their constituents enough to realize how serious the termination of these programs is. About two hours ago I received a telephone call from a constituent who wanted me to know that as soon as the deadline for conversion off oil was announced, he began to consider doing something about it in order to take advantage of this program. He got in touch with Consumers' Gas toward the end of January because he wanted Consumers' Gas to do the conversion. They would not even take down his name. They told him there was no point in his applying because they were not going to be able to bring him within the statute in time. He told me that there were a number of other people on his street in the same situation. If that was their situation, I am certain that there are thousands and thousands of people across the country who want to convert and are unable to do so because the deadlines that have been given just do not give them enough time.

I know that this Government is committed to trying to reduce the deficit. This is, at first blush, a program that would reduce the deficit because we were using tax money to try to help people insulate their homes and convert off oil. What a crazy program to try to meet the promise to reduce the deficit! This program is available to every single Canadian household. That is why I am so very distressed that this is the one they picked to try to meet their commitment to cut—

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Mr. Kaplan: Does the Hon. Member want to make a point? I would be willing to take a question from him right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for York Centre has the floor for 10 minutes. There are no questions or answers, please.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) offered the floor to me for a question in his time limit. I am prepared to ask him a question.

• (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary should be aware of this. If we are going to stick to the rules which we now have, under Standing Order 35(2) each Member is allowed a ten-minute speech. If the Parliamentary Secretary wants to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to put a question, I will have to ask the House if it will permit him to ask that question.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a rhetorical question. Will he please let me finish my speech? He can then have the floor and speak as long as he wants.

These two programs have been chosen by the Government as a means of reducing expenditures. That choice damages other priorities, which were priorities of the former Government, and I hope will continue to be priorities of this Government. Yet those priorities have been damaged by the decision to terminate these two programs.

One of those priorities was the very important government objective of attempting to achieve a balance between the consumption of oil and the consumption of other forms of energy which were more in keeping with the national resources of the country. The Government ought to know that the consumption of oil in Canada is in excess of what is produced domestically, while the consumption of natural gas is below what is produced domestically. The same thing could be said of electricity. If we consider the option of electricity as opposed to oil, oil must be imported, but electricity is a renewable resource which is exported. One of the goals of the programs was to attempt to get Canadians off oil and on to other forms of energy. I think the programs have been very successful. COSP reduced the consumption of oil at the rate of 60,000 barrels per day. That benefit will be lost unless other incentives can be found to encourage conversion.

One of the incentives to encourage conversion which exists is the fact that gas is cheaper than oil. Canadians who convert to gas save approximately 30 per cent on the cost of their fuel consumption. For some smaller homes, and the people who may not have liked the idea of paying the initial cost of the conversion, COSP really met a need. I think in the near future we will have confirmation that this program produced conversions at a rate which ordinary market forces could not meet.

The disappearance of this program will slow down the important conversion process from oil to other more available forms of Canadian energy. In addition, it will affect adversely our balance of payments, because if Canadians used domestic energy as opposed to imported energy, as far as balance of payments is concerned, the transaction would be neutral. The Government has taken a step which will require more foreign currency in order to buy something which Canadians consume. It will place adverse pressure on the dollar at a time when the dollar is close to the lowest it has ever been. I suppose when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) recently looked at the value of the dollar in American terms and said that he was not worried about it, he must have thought, "Why worry about a 72-cent dollar when there are still 72 cents left to go?" I say to the Government that it is something to worry about. Any existing program which is having the effect of protecting our balance of payments and protecting the value of the Canadian dollar should not be terminated, especially when the Government has not yet brought forward a budget. As far as we on this side of the House can gather, the Government has not realistically begun to look at the options which are available in a budget.

This legislation has two negative effects. First, it will slow down the rate of conversion from oil. Second, it will continue to place adverse pressure on the value of the Canadian dollar.

I would like to look at it from another point of view. I hope that the House will not object if I referred to particular cases in my constituency. The home insulation industry is characterized by small business. A lot of young people are setting up businesses. As well, the conversion program, which provides people with alternative ways of heating their homes, was creating a small business boom. The Government has thrown cold water on a very important industry. In introducing this legislation with such a short deadline—and I profoundly believe this—the Government has killed prospects for a number of new small businesses in Canada. In addition, it may well have killed a number of small businesses which are already established. It is an important industry. Energy conservation and conversion were two very important activities which will be adversely affected by this decision.

I would like the Government to tell us about the studies it has done which would justify the step that it has taken with this legislation. I do not see any basis for feeling secure in telling the new businesses in my riding and elsewhere that the Government has considered their situation and that they have reason to be confident that the Government's fanatical dedication to reducing the deficit at any price will not hurt them as badly as I think this legislation will. What does the Government have to say to the small businesses which were created by the legislation that was introduced by the former Government? It was legislation which was designed to and had the effect of achieving important benefits for the Canadian economy.

What will the Government put in place to encourage the very healthy process which has been cut off with such short notice? Many people who wanted to benefit from the programs, at a time when they could afford it or at a time when it suited their requirements, will not be able to do so. So far, the Government has only told us that it is confident—and without any basis for being so—that energy conservation measures will continue to be implemented and that conversion from oil will continue. I am not satisfied that the assurances which the Government has given to us will enable these two Canadian objectives to continue to be met. I would like to know what the Government has in mind for Canadian people who will suffer as a result of the programs which are being terminated.

I see that my time has almost expired. I wonder if I might have the unanimous consent of the House to continue, as I have two other points which I would like to make.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) on debate.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Government is proposing to terminate two programs which have done more good in Canadian society than any programs which I can recall, as far as home insulation and oil substitution are concerned, in the history of this country. The Government is proposing to terminate the Canadian Home Insulation Program on March 31, 1986. I, like other Members, have had telephone calls from constituents about that. As well, the Government is proposing to terminate the Canadian Oil Substitution Program on March 31 of this year, instead of its original termination date of December 31, 1990. As I say, judging from the correspondence, phone calls and even telegrams we have had from our constituents, we are not alone in saying that the CHIP and COSP programs have been very valuable and cost effective. Compare them with PIP grants, one of the disasters of the previous Government. I have yet to see any of the money which has gone into the PIP grants actually produce any real effective results. In fact, according to research done last year, much of the money was thrown down the tube when contrasted with the money spent on CHIP and COSP.

Mr. McDermid: PetroCan takes the most.

Ms. Jewett: I know the Parliamentary Secretary yells a lot, but he does not get up and defend this iniquitous legislation.

Mr. McDermid: This is the first time I have seen you in the House.

Ms. Jewett: As he knows, we are proposing a six-month hoist. If this Bill goes ahead and passes at second reading, it will pass in principle. It is all very well for Members opposite to say it will be going into committee, but there is no way, from my knowledge and experience, that the committee is going to be able to amend this Bill in such a way as to extend its application or restore the original dates of termination. So while there is always much benefit to be derived from legislation going to a Standing Committee of the House for further refinement, I think the fundamental point to be made here is that this Government simply would not accept in committee any changes to this legislation. The little bit of tinkering it might accept would have nothing to do with restoring the original termination dates or even extending the current termination dates of both programs.

As many Hon. Members have said, if the Government is serious about attacking the deficit, why does it not look at some things like the PIP grants which do not benefit Canadian society? Indeed, in many documented cases, the money has been thrown away with nothing having been achieved. Many of my constituents have already taken advantage of the CHIP and COSP programs and they are aware of their value.

Let me remind the House again that of the $885 million paid out in CHIP grants to the end of 1984, approximately $200 million flowed back to the federal and provincial Governments in the form of taxes. As well, 2.5 million housing units, representing about one third of the eligible housing stock built before 1977, have taken advantage of the CHIP program. That is about one third. Perhaps the point most significant of all is that the total energy savings attributable to CHIP is estimated at the equivalent of perhaps 45,000 barrels of oil per day. It is true that Energy, Mines and Resources estimates that in the absence of CHIP some 35 per cent of these savings would not have been achieved, but this still means that CHIP is calculated to have resulted in incremental energy savings of roughly 30,000 barrels a day of oil equivalent, and that is a major saving. Furthermore, the Department believes that if this program were continued, there would be further energy savings of 30 per cent.

Hon. Members will recall that the objective of COSP was to convert two million housing units off oil by 1990. If the Government could argue that we were not on target and the program had not been successful, we might understand the wish to terminate it. But in fact thus far almost one million housing units have been converted, and that is right on target. So why abandon the program?

It was observed in the other place that with the experience gained thus far in operating these two programs, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources projections indicated that there are substantially greater energy savings to be made than even the Department had originally anticipated. It was also noted that for older, poorly insulated and weather stripped homes, energy savings could be had at a cost of $5 per barrel of oil equivalent. Under some circumstances, the cost could be as low as $2 or $3 per barrel of oil equivalent.

So I ask once again, why should the Government remove two highly efficient programs which are on target and which meet the needs of Canadians? They help energy conservation in this country, so why is the Government abandoning the programs? We would like to hear from the Government to know the answer to that question.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I note that there are only a couple of minutes left and I will not get into the meat of what I had to say. Perhaps I will save that for another day. I cannot help but think, though, that this Government has managed in a short few weeks to redefine simony and turn it into a political art form. Once it was the selling of ecclesiastical preferment; now it is the selling of political preferment, and I cannot help but feel that this Bill exemplifies that as well as anything we have seen over the course of the last few months.

I want to tell you that I had the opportunity recently to consult a person who is perhaps not an international authority but certainly an authority in this field, namely, Heather Grant, who raised with me some of the serious problems that could flow from the discontinuance of this program. I want to share with the House this afternoon or tomorrow or some day later in the week—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member will have that opportunity. When the House meets again on Bill C-24, the Hon. Member will have nine minutes left in his speech.

Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved that Bill C-218, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased, and I think it is an appropriate day, to take the opportunity to present this Bill to the House. It calls for Canada to declare itself a nuclear weapons free zone. I would like to begin by quoting a few words that were uttered in 1959. "I believe that people in the long run are going to do more to promote peace than are governments. Indeed, I think that people want peace so much that one of these days government had better get out of their way and let them have it". That was said by General Dwight D. Eisenhower, then President of the United States.

How true are those words. Twenty-six years later this Bill addresses the undeniable will of the majority of Canadians. It gives them what they want, a nation free of participation in the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Time and time again the people of Canada have given us a clear direction. Almost half a million people signed the peace petition caravan which called for the establishment of Canada as a nuclear weapons free zone. There are over 80 such self-proclaimed zones already in Canada. I speak of various cities and municipalities. No Member of the House can ignore any longer the results of referendums that those communities held, the numerous polls, and the growing number of peace organizations dedicated to disarmament. It is clearly the will of the Canadian people to take this action.

I know support exists among Members on all sides of the House as well. Why is it then that we still allow the proponents of nuclear arms to continue to call the shots? I remember when it was still in fashion to believe in the ability to survive a nuclear war. We told our schoolchildren that all they had to do was to hide under their desks and close their eyes during an attack. Those children have grown up, and they are not buying that one any more. We have tried to assure them that a nuclear war will never happen as long as both sides maintain a suicidal level of the nuclear ability known as mutual assured destruction. However, understanding politicians as people do, they are not falling for that one either.

A case in point, Mr. Speaker, is the article on page three of last Friday's Globe and Mail. The headline reads, "Pentagon Cites Nuclear Winter as Reason for Arms Build-up". Now they are getting specific. No one wants a nuclear winter, so no one will start a nuclear war. Is it any wonder Canadians doubt the sanity of those who participate in that kind of an argument? Could you imagine what would happen if the Government adopted the same policy for gun control as the Pentagon has for nuclear arms control? It has to be a definition for the word "insanity".

We have also tried to give assurances that arms negotiations will eliminate the threat of nuclear war. I am sure all Canadians applaud any attempt at negotiating arms reductions and a lasting peace. We cannot deny, however, the fact that a generation of good intentions has passed and we are quickly approaching the point where a nuclear holocaust will become a mathematical certainty.

The majority of Canadians are no longer fooled. Despite the overwhelming amount of propaganda, misinformation and disinformation disseminated by the proponents of a nuclear deterrent, Canadians are mobilizing, as General Eisenhower predicted, to demand an end to the development of nuclear arms. Canadians realize that there must be a continuing diplomatic effort to reduce world tensions and that Canada must play an important role. But they also understand that as far as the nuclear threat is concerned, we must also take immediate action against the technology itself.

These weapons were first developed for use against the Germans and the Japanese. Since then we have befriended our previous enemy and have armed ourselves against a previous ally. Politics and alliances change, but human nature does not. There will never be real security in the world as long as nuclear weapons are allowed to exist, and they will never be dismantled if we leave it to the discretion of the superpowers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Unless we as Canadians address the moral question of the existence of nuclear weapons, we will find ourselves debating the same red herring argument of deterrence a generation from now under a completely new set of world conditions. That is, assuming that this House and the people it serves are still in existence.

As a veteran committed to the sovereignty of our nation I see no hypocrisy in wishing a strong, legitimate defence for Canada without participation in the nuclear arms race. This Bill is a very important beginning and one which naturally follows previous Canadian precedents as a world peace keeper. In 1967 the UN General Assembly welcomed, with Canadian support, the conclusion of a treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons in Latin America. Since then there has been considerable interest in the United Nations about the establishment of other nuclear weapons free zones. In 1975 Canada voted in favor of resolutions supporting the denuclearization of Africa and the consideration of creating nuclear free weapons zones in south Asia, the Middle East, and the South Pacific.

Our country agreed not to encourage the further development of nuclear weapons when we signed the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. We further agreed:

> Each non nuclear weapon state party to the treaty undertakes not to receive the transfer from any transferor whatsoever of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, or of control over such weapons or explosive devices, directly or indirectly; not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices; and not to seek or receive any assistance in the manufacture of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices.

We further supported the inclusion of a provision placing an obligation on nuclear weapon states parties to the treaty to negotiate effective restraints on the nuclear arms race and to meet their commitment to seek a halt to nuclear weapon testing. Surely, at the least, the spirit of this agreement has already been violated by the testing of the Cruise. The weapon itself is not functionable in this case without the testing of the delivery system. It is all one and the same. The spirit of the agreement has been violated by the manufacture of weapons components in Canada, not to mention the fact that there have been nuclear arms on Canadian soil.

However, if this agreement still reflects our intentions on this issue, then let us send this Bill to committee and take some positive actions toward the objective of the agreement we signed when we gave our word 17 years ago. It has been 17 years, Mr. Speaker, and we are still playing Simon Says with the two schoolyard bullies who have been taking no initiatives to get out of the game. That is what it will take: initiative, action and courage. But some Hon. Members will have a problem with getting up the courage to take a pacified stand on this issue. They will say, "Why should we if they are not going to as well?" But there will be followers. As we join New Zealand and a number of other nations, others will join us, and the positive effects of the international movement by countries like ours will eventually cover the globe.

There may be some who call the Bill anti-American or anti-NATO, but we have no commitment or no responsibility to NATO on nuclear weapons and there is no disloyalty in excusing ourselves from our friends' company while they are engaged in an activity which is morally wrong and not in our best interest. Did our mothers not teach us that?

The Bill is not anti anything other than nuclear weapons. It won't affect other forms of nuclear technology and it will not open the doors to a communist or any other invasion. We will have to debate this Bill for what it is, a bold move toward peace and an even bolder move toward the elimination of nuclear weapons. It has to start somewhere; it may as well start here.

It is impossible for this Bill to protect immediately the people of Canada from nuclear war, though I believe it will help in the long run. However, it does protect us from the ignorance of nuclear deterrent advocates and the false sense of security that they create in the minds of Canadians when they expose their simplistic myth of maintaining nuclear balance. Having taken a stand on this issue and having had our awareness raised, new opportunities of hope will be found.

Obviously, even more discussion on this topic raises hope. That is why the Bill also supports the idea of a world referendum on disarmament. Some Members will suggest that the idea is silly because no one wants a nuclear war, but there is nothing silly about a world discussion on this issue, leading to a democratic expression. Neither is there anything silly about the amount of support this initiative has around the world. Even the Soviet Union has said that it is prepared to investigate the methodology of the referendum with other interested countries. No, there is nothing silly about that, and all for an estimated cost of two cents per participant when done in concert with regular elections. I hope other Hon. Members do not have a problem with this part of the Bill. Certainly all Parties showed support for this initiative prior to the election when they were surveyed. When surveyed, 76 Liberal candidates said yes, nine said no; 84 Conservatives said yes, nine said no; and all 128 new Democrats who answered the survey said yes. Of the Conservatives showing support, 19 are now Cabinet Ministers.

I hope we can expect general support for the proposal for a world referendum as a golden opportunity to further the cause of peace through world discussion.

I have tried to make my comments brief. The Bill has been debated in the House on previous occasions. I am sure all Hon. Members have enough information to be able to form an opinion.

There are two other reasons that I urge the House to allow this Bill to be referred to the appropriate standing committee. One concerns Canada's credibility. We have had a marvelous record in peace-keeping. In beginning a good record of peace-making, if we are a nuclear weapons free zone, we can go to other countries to talk about a nuclear arms freeze, reduction and eventual elimination in a stronger position. If we are not party to or in possession of nuclear weapons or allow others to have nuclear weapons or delivery systems on Canadian territory, including the testing of weapons or delivery systems, we will be in a stronger position. There must be no hypocrisy when our nation goes to other nations to discuss this issue. This has nothing to do with our NATO commitment.

The other reason is that both the United States and the Soviet Union have a nuclear capacity within their territories and on the oceans that is sufficient to wipe all of us out anyway. There is no real necessity for Canada or dozens of other countries like us to be party to the possession of or to allow the stationing or testing of nuclear weapons and delivery systems to try to influence the deterrent or balance of power.

In the event that either or both of those nations were to launch a nuclear attack, they would overfly us and destroy us anyway. Any contribution that Canada would make to such a catastrophe would be so small as to make no difference in such a final suicidal result.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the adoption of Bill C-218, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone, has many implications which go well beyond the Bill's apparent, simple declaratory statement. The Bill, in effect, would require Canada's withdrawal from the security of 35 years' membership in NATO into questionable isolation and would abrogate a number of defensive bilateral agreements that Canada has with the United States.

On June 30, 1984, Canada removed the last remaining nuclear-tipped GENIE air-to-air missiles which were to be used in wartime in an air defence role by Canadian CF-101 Voodoo interceptors. The air defence role has now been taken over by CF-18 aircraft which can do the same job using conventional weapons system only. There are no nuclear weapons stationed on Canadian soil. Overflights of American aircraft with nuclear weapons, were they to occur, would take place only with the expressed permission of the Canadian Government. The same consultations and permission would be required for the deployment of any other nuclear weapons within Canadian territory.

Declaring Canada to be a nuclear weapons free zone would be a unilateral measure which is not supported by the Canadian Government. Unlike the originators of Bill C-218, the Canadian Government continues to believe in the concept of mutual security—a collective effort to deter aggression or to counter it if it occurs. That is why we are in the North Atlantic Alliance, which is also the framework for the NORAD agreement with the U.S.A. The Alliance relies on a deterrent strategy in which nuclear weapons play an important part. This is unfortunately unavoidable in the world as we know it.

The idea of a nuclear weapons free zone for Canada, with all its implications, would be realistic only if the Canadian Government were prepared to withdraw from the Alliance which has served us well and has helped to preserve peace for more than 35 years. The Canadian Government continues to believe that our defence partnership, co-operation and defence production sharing arrangements with our allies make a greater contribution to preserving peace and security than would our withdrawal into the uncertain isolation of a nuclear weapons free zone. As I have already mentioned, the Canadian Government does not support the idea of unilateral disarmament.

It is necessary for us to maintain our support for our NATO alliance until such time as disarmament is mutually agreed to by the great powers. In this context, we are particularly encouraged by the agreed objectives for the American-Soviet negotiations which are under way in Geneva, the prevention of an arms race in space and its termination on earth; the limitation and reduction of nuclear arms; and the strengthening of strategic stability, leading ultimately to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons.

Canada is a member of the North Atlantic Alliance, and has now been a member for thirty-five years. We joined the Alliance because we believed in the concept of collective security, a united effort to deter aggression or to counter it should conflict occur. There were many advantages to such an alliance. However, the most telling advantages were then, and continue to be, the united strength which accrued to the Alliance enabling it to resist undue external political and military pressures and reduction of the cost of defence by dispersing the burden of armaments among the member states. Similarly, NATO has enabled the West to speak with a unified voice on critical issues of international security and to pursue the progressive development of East-West relations in a coherent fashion. It is an invaluable forum for nations such as Canada to express their views and to exert a constructive and moderating influence on the policy directions taken by the Western powers in their relations vis-à-vis the East bloc.

The Alliance has relied for its security on a deterrent strategy in which nuclear weapons play an important role. Clearly, an alternative approach which could provide an equal measure of stability and strength, but which would not rely on nuclear weapons for its effect, is a desirable objective. Unfortunately, we have been unable to fashion a post-war world in which such policies would be either realistic or desirable for the maintenance of peace.

The NATO Alliance remains an indispensable tool for Canada to maintain an effective and influential voice toward the improvement of East-West relations.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What has NATO got to do with it?

Mr. Weiner: The idea of a nuclear weapons free zone for Canada would be realistic only if the Canadian Government were prepared to withdraw from the Alliance.

Mr. Althouse: You are on the wrong Bill.

Mr. Weiner: Would Canadian withdrawal from the Alliance enhance the prospects for peace and help to diminish the likelihood of nuclear catastrophe which continues to loom so threateningly in the distance? Were Canada to declare itself a nuclear weapons free zone, would this in any way reduce the devastating effects which a thermonuclear war would wreak on this country, and indeed the world?

Mr. Keeper: Yes.

Mr. Weiner: Would Canada's voice be listened to more seriously and would our words carry greater weight in the corridors of power around the world because we were no longer a member of the NATO Alliance?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What has NATO got to do with it?

Mr. Weiner: The answer to these questions remains unequivocally "No." Canada's possibilities for influencing these events would be greatly weakened and the stability of the East-West balance immeasurably shaken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. This is Private Members' Hour. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Weiner) has the floor. I would like to hear him—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): —I do not know about the other Members here. I would like to know whether his speech is relevant, but I cannot do that. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs has the floor.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, we would still remain vulnerable to the effects and results of a nuclear holocaust, but in the process, would reduce our influence and our capacity to help avert the very disaster which it is our most fervent desire to prevent. Not only this, but Canada would be forced to shoulder its defence burden alone, with infinitely greater expenditure, and Canada would have reduced security in the bargain.

The proposed Bill would also prohibit the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. NATO does not oblige Canada to test the Cruise missile. The decision by the previous Government to allow the United States to test unarmed air-launched Cruise missiles in Canada was seen as consistent with that Government's support for NATO's two-track policy which led to the deployment of ground-launched Cruise missiles in several NATO European countries. This Government decided to allow the United States to continue with its testing program because it believes that the Cruise missile is an essential element in the global balance of deterrence and is part of the Western response to the modernization by the Soviet Union of its offensive and defensive nuclear systems during the 1970s. This Soviet modernization continues into the 1980s.

The policy of allowing the United States to test air-launched Cruise missiles in Canada will be reviewed from time to time in the context of evolving progress in arms limitation and reduction negotiations.

Bill C-218 would also prohibit the manufacture of any components of nuclear weapons in Canada. Regarding Canadian co-operation in the production of U.S. Cruise missiles, Litton Systems Canada Limited was awarded the subcontract by the U.S. Department of Defense through its parent company in the United States, Litton Industries, to produce a portion of the inertial guidance system for the Cruise missile. Litton's participation in a small part of the Cruise missile vehicle program would not be taken as a change in Canadian policies instituted at the end of the 1960s to divest our Armed Forces of a nuclear weapons capability. It is, however, consistent with joint defence efforts with our NATO allies who rely in part on the maintenance of a credible nuclear deterrent in the face of the growing military threat from hostile forces.

Bill C-218 also proposes another unrealistic measure. It directs that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) shall, at the earliest opportunity following the coming into force of this Act, propose a motion to the General Assembly of the United Nations calling for a world referendum on nuclear disarmament.

The Canadian Government does not support the idea of a global referendum on disarmament. The proposal fails to acknowledge that the current situation in the disarmament and arms control field is largely the result of the lack of adequate international security arrangements and confidence among states which would ensure their security and national integrity at lower levels of arms. In the absence of such conditions, movement on disarmament will only come about after long and difficult negotiations among the parties involved.

Measures, such as the call for a world referendum on disarmament, will not solve these basic underlying problems which are preventing progress in this field. Real disarmament requires long and careful negotiations aimed at establishing mutual confidence and constructing adequate international security mechanisms to guarantee the safety of each state. We believe that the outcome of a world referendum is predictable: the vast majority of people who have even a basic understanding of the question would express support for disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, even though there would undoubtedly be vast differences of view on how to go about achieving it. Therefore, a world referendum, if held, would represent an expression of public opinion in favour of disarmament, but could not be a substitute for actual negotiation of verifiable international agreements.

There are other, more effective and less costly ways of bringing to bear on the militarily significant powers the world public's views on the need for arms control and disarmament which is, essentially, the objective of the world referendum. The Canadian Government's current effort through such mechanisms as the Disarmament Fund, is to seek to make Canadians more aware of the existence of the various issues and the background to them and to encourage a balanced discussion of them. The objective is to provide Canadians with the basis for making reasoned judgments on these issues and to enable them to make their views known more effectively.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada does not support a declaration of nuclear weapons free status for Canada because, while in some respects we may be regarded as a de facto nuclear weapons free zone following the withdrawal of the last nuclear capable aircraft from service with the Canadian Forces, we continue to participate fully in a defence alliance, NATO, which deploys a nuclear deterrent. The declaration of a nuclear weapons free zone in Canada would be inconsistent with membership in the Alliance as well as being inconsistent with the defence production sharing arrangements which we have with our allies.

You might want to ask a person out of work whether he would rather stay in the breadline instead of working in an arms factory. We had a defence procurement team which went across Canada helping Canadians find jobs and helping keep Canadians at work. They will be buying arms, whether or not we in Ontario want to sell them. There is some $320 billion worth of available business for Canadians to access into the United States. We now have about a $1 billion part of that business. As far as Canadians are concerned, it is a method of putting Canadians back to work. It is quite clear in our minds that we already have an ability to put people back to work. It is quite clear in our minds that we already have an ability to put people back to work. This Government was elected to create jobs. We can do it effectively by making use of some of the armamentarium we have available to us.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-218, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone. This Bill would declare Canada to be a nuclear weapons free nation. It is true that today, we have no nuclear weapons in Canada, so that the purpose of this Bill is to guarantee that in the future, there will be no nuclear weapons on our territory.

[English]

The Official Opposition supports the introduction of Bill C-218. We feel it is an appropriate time—

Mr. McDermid: That is something new.

Mr. Gauthier: I said that we support the introduction of Bill C-218. I do not see anyone in the House who would disagree with what I just said. The principle of debating a Bill in this House is something which all of us have supported at first reading, so I support the introduction of this Bill. That is clear. It is appropriate that at this time in Canada we debate the issues at hand and that the vital question of declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone be the object of a public debate.

In offering our support to this motion, we wish to make it absolutely clear at this time that we are neither for nor against the concept of a nuclear weapons free zone in Canada. Rather, we feel, as I have said, that this is an appropriate time in our history to have an in depth review of this complex matter so that all Canadians might participate in this crucial debate and help parliamentarians determine our future direction with regard to this question which is of fundamental importance to all Canadians.

We feel certain that the Government opposite will support this motion in light of its promise to the Canadian people to conduct an open government, one which will listen to the Canadian people and will strongly encourage the participation of all Canadians in our political system.

This question deserves a serious hearing. It deserves input from all Canadians. We have been promised over the last few months that indeed the House would be receiving two green papers—one on defence and one on external affairs. Here again we have an occasion to get to the essential matter of these important questions which preoccupy Canadians.

I do not want to debate the matter very long. I think there is some merit in having it discussed and referred to committee. I would just like to say that I strongly support the principle of the Bill. The implications, the ramifications, the "zap you are frozen" attitude is a bit naive. I should like to see more input from all Canadians who are interested in this matter. They can tell parliamentarians what they feel should be done. We must take time to listen. We must take time to consider.

Because of what the Parliamentary Secretary said and because I think there are some arguments which will prompt debate, serious consideration should be given to refusing to pass the Bill today. To avoid any difficulties in this regard, I would suggest that indeed the subject matter is very important. It is essential that we discuss it. The Bill could be withdrawn—and there is a formula for that—and the subject matter of it could be referred to a committee along with the other papers which will come forth, I understand, after we are finished with the "blarney summit" in Quebec City. I understand that the two papers I referred to will be tabled—the green paper on defence and the green paper on external affairs. Perhaps at that time we will address this question and have a chance to talk seriously about the matters of nuclear disarmament and a nuclear freeze in Canada.

Some time ago I had the honour and the pleasure of seeing a gentleman named James Stark run for the socialist party, the NDP, in my riding. Mr. Stark and I have had a long, ongoing relationship. I could point to letters which I have exchanged with Mr. Stark. I will not read them into the record because I have a personal view on this issue which I think is very valid; people in my riding know where I stand on the issue.

I should like to move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:
> "That Bill C-218 be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). In listening to his motion, I began to wonder whether or not the Opposition would treat the special committee on foreign affairs and national defence with any sense of seriousness.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What special committee?

Mr. Hawkes: Surely the subject matter of the Bill before us today belongs in the hands of that special committee. It must be an important part of what that committee discusses. It is almost inconceivable that we should conduct a thorough review of Canada's foreign affairs policy and Canada's defence policy without dealing with the nuclear issue. I think it would be a shame to have it fragmented into two forums.

If the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier ever comes to a vote, I would urge Members not to split the issue into two committees of the House. The proper context for discussion of this issue surely must be in that special committee which will hold hearings across the country and will totally explore our foreign affairs and defence policies.

Ms. Jewett: It is not set up yet.

Mr. Hawkes: I urge Hon. Members to do that, if in fact they face a vote on that matter.

Mr. Althouse: There is no special committee.

Mr. Hawkes: I have been here since five o'clock. Before the weekend I became aware that this subject matter would be brought up for debate today.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am following the debate and I am very interested in listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). To what special committee is he referring? To the best of my knowledge, no such special committee has been set up.

• (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. This is Private Members' Hour. The time is slowly approaching six o'clcok. There are other Members who would like to speak on this Bill. The Hon. Member for Calgary West has the floor.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of Members one of the differences that happen when you are elected to serve in this Chamber. Prior to election, one serves one's nation generally in the capacity of a private citizen. One of the obligations of citizenship in a democracy is to propose sets of ideas which should be discussed in public and should be advanced by different types of groups with different interests. The minute you join this Chamber, you assume a responsibility for decision-making. You not only propose, but you must dispose. You must make decisions.

I do not think there is a Member of this House of Commons who does not want and does not yearn for the day when nuclear weapons become a thing of the past, for the day when they no longer constitute a threat. It is the responsibility of those in this Chamber which is something different from that of private citizens, to make decisions which, to the best of our knowledge, are likely to lead us a step closer to that day. It is not just a forum for discussion. The responsibility of Members of Parliament is to reach decisions about the steps which might take us one step closer to the eradication of nuclear weapons on the face of the earth and the removal of that threat.

That is a special obligation. Our debate today would be wise to focus on whether or not the proposal which appears before us in the form of Bill C-218 is a wise step. Would it serve Canadians well? Would it serve the people of the world well if we were to take that step? It is our responsibility to make decisions.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) stood and the basic argument that he advanced in trying to encourage Members of this Chamber to support his Bill was the argument that if Canada were to take this unilateral action, other nations would follow. There is a germ of truth to that because Canada does enjoy a reputation for leadership in world affairs. I think it is correct to say that some nations would follow Canada's lead in this regard, but as responsible decision-makers, we have to ask ourselves which nations would follow. Would the U.S.S.R. or any member of the Eastern bloc follow our lead?

I recently had, what is a very unique opportunity for Members of this Chamber, that of being a member of Canada's delegation to the United Nations for 11 weeks this past fall. It was a unique opportunity to interact five days a week with representatives from the 159 member nations, the observer nations and the observer groups. Canada has taken the lead. Canada has been one of the leading nations in putting forward many initiatives. Who followed and who did not? Canada is a leading national when it comes to democracy. We believe in democracy. We espouse it. We say it is the best form of Government. It is the most humane, most sensitive and leads to the best standard of living for the most.

I stand here in the month of March 1985, knowing there are 159 member nations in the United Nations, less than 30 are democracies. We take the lead. We declare ourselves. We act in that fashion, and there are less than 30 others who join us in that activity, and none from the East bloc.

At the United Nations this fall, we worked very hard on getting passage through third committee and through plenary of two very important initiatives. One was the development of an international instrument that would enable us as a world community to do a better job of narcotics control. Another was the passage of an international covenant that would outlaw torture. I saw nations of this world and their delegations try to trade off. They said that if we would back off on our concerns about torture, they would support our concerns in terms of international narcotics control. All of that was taking place in a context where after 17 years the basic human rights covenant at the United Nations was signed by nearly half the nations. A large number that have signed it refused to sign the protocol which would allow for verifiability.

The reality is that we live in a world where the overwhelming majority of member states, led by the East bloc countries, will not allow an international organization like the United Nations to come into their country and verify whether or not torture is taking place and whether or not they are producing and transhipping drugs. That is the reality of the international community today. To stand in this Chamber and to think that a unilateral action, no matter how desirable the goal or the direction might be, is a way of leading the world defies the reality of experience.

The member nations do not follow just because you do. They do not follow in the direction that you go. They certainly do not follow by signing documents and allowing a kind of open door that would enable you to verify whether or not they keep those international covenants. That is how those member states behaved in the General Assembly context of the United Nations and in the private perspective.

This Bill says there shall be no nuclear arms in Canadian coastal waters. If we were to take that action as a nation state, the odds are reasonable that member states within the NATO alliance would respect our desire in that regard because they are democracies and they respect the sovereignty of states.

They would respect that, but would the East bloc? Would the Warsaw Pact respect the sovereignty of Canadian territorial waters? Do they today? Would they simply do so because we proclaim it? We are talking about nations that will not allow an international tribunal to come in and verify whether or not torture or human rights violations are taking place. It is incomprehensible from what we know about the Warsaw Pact countries and the way they operate that a debate such as the one that is taking place today, with people in the galleries and the press in the galleries, could even take place in those countries. Those people would not know about our initiative, unless their Government chose by means of propaganda to make them aware of it. We contrast that—

Mr. Benjamin: Go ahead, smother it.

Mr. Hawkes: The desire of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is to take this unilateral action in the belief that others will follow. I have tried to contrast that with the reality of the international community as we experience it. That is the reality. In my opening remarks I stated that we in this Chamber have a special responsibility for decision making on behalf of Canadian people. We have the responsibility to ensure that they can live in safety, without the fear of being taken over.

We could look at Afghanistan some five years later. We are a nation which has never started a war. We could also look at Iran and Iraq which have had 600,000 or 700,000 casualties in the last few years due to war. Those are real situations which exist in the world. Because Canada does not start a war it does not follow that other nations will not start a war. Our special responsibility in this Chamber is to make decisions, and hopefully, with respect to nuclear weapons, those decisions will be taken in the direction which will bring about a nuclear weapons free world.

I would like to read into the record a small part of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said at the United Nations about Canada's commitment to the topic which we are discussing today. In September of 1984 he said:

> We shall seek, through concrete and realistic steps, progress toward a comprehensive test ban treaty. We shall encourage superpower and multilateral discussion on all outer space weapons, and shall commission further studies on how a space weapons ban might be verified. We shall work for the success of next year's Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference, in order to prevent the horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons. We shall bring to bear our technical expertise in verification measures to ensure mutual confidence and security in areas where arms control agreements can be achieved. We shall encourage agreement on a mutual and balanced reduction of conventional forces in Europe, and hence reduce the danger of escalation to nuclear war. We shall continue to press for a verifiable convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons. Canada will continue its financial support of the World Disarmament Campaign. We shall, in addition, expect that the newly-created Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security will contribute its share of studies and advice on specific arms control proposals and measures to reduce international tension.

In other words, Canada is committed to achievable and realistic measures. It will continue to be an active participant in the Geneva conference on disarmament, in the Stockholm conference on confidence and security-building measures and disarmament in Europe, and in the Vienna mutual balanced force reductions talks.

Those are the kinds of steps which I hope would have all-Party endorsement. Then we would be a real player in the real world. Within that context, we could always move to help member nations take tiny steps toward the goal which we all want. Or we can cease to be a player. That may raise the position of our soapbox, but it will reduce the size of our influence. Surely members of all Parties in the Chamber would prefer that Canada have influence. It is an area in which there should be little political gain or loss. The over-all goal of restoring peace and stability in this world, and the goal of nuclear arms reduction and ultimate elimination, are goals which we all share. That is only achievable in a real world, by using real methods which are designed to work.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, since you have given me the floor, and pursuant to Beauchesne's, Citation 234, I therefore move, in accordance with Standing Order 8(4)(a), and I have the text of my motion here, to extend the time for this debate so that we can hear more Members on this subject—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Mr. Prud'homme, seconded by Ms. Copps, pursuant to Standing Order 8(4)(a), moves that the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour for daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-218. Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And more than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since more than 25 Members have risen, I declare the motion lost.

Motion (Mr. Prud'homme) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) on debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that I may speak until the end of the agreed time limit? I had prepared a very interesting speech, now unfortunately—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has two minutes.

Mr. Lanthier: All right. But the subject is far too broad for two minutes.

I just want to summarize in a few words the speech I prepared this afternoon. It is unfortunate to see the lack of order in this House, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, I sincerely believe I cannot support the proposal being made in Bill

C-218. I think this Bill should be voted down by the House, and in fact by any reasonable individual who does not believe in Santa Claus and who sincerely believes that we must be ready to cope with any situation that might occur. This is a Bill that cannot be taken seriously, and I do not think it should.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

TRUST COMPANIES—PIONEER TRUST COMPANY COLLAPSE. (B) REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise regarding the question I asked the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) on February 8 concerning Pioneer Trust. In my question, as on numerous other occasions, I asked the Minister and the Government to allow a public and independent inquiry into the affairs of Pioneer Trust and the reasons that it closed its doors. I believed at that time, and contiue to believe, that it is in the public interest that there should be a public inquiry.

Numerous people across western Canada have lost money because of the demise of Pioneer Trust. Many of them are retired and small-business people. Money belonging to widows is held in trust by various law firms. Such public institutions as the Government of Saskatchewan and the City of Regina and various hospitals throughout the province will have lost money because of the demise of Pioneer Trust. Therefore I think it is important that certain answers be given to the entire story behind the demise of Pioneer Trust.

It is important that the federal Government state clearly, through such an inquiry, what are its role and responsibilities. I feel that CDIC and the federal Government have been remiss in various instances regarding their duties as a financial watchdog. We find that the federal Government did not know the amount of uninsured deposits. It had to phone the provincial Government's Department of Finance to get a figure of some $24 million. Yet today that figure is up to some $40 million. In fact, I doubt if anyone really knows at this stage what the exact figure will be. This indicates that the Government, and particularly CDIC, are not equipped or capable of handling the situation.

On numerous occasions we have had the Minister state that the CDIC and the federal Government are not capable of carrying on their functions. For example, in an article in the Ottawa Citizen of March 2, 1985 the Minister said that the insurance system is plagued by serious problems involving everything from its financing to its function as a financial watchdog. On another occasion the Minister is quoted as saying in the Montreal Gazette that the extent of Pioneer's troubles were not known in time. One can gather from that, that the federal Government and the CDIC were not fully aware of the problems of Pioneer Trust. These are examples of how CDIC has been remiss in its duties as financial watchdog.

In a letter she sent me on March 7, the Minister admits she had not yet requested or received written assurances from the provincial Government regarding some guarantee to Pioneer Trust. Again I suggest that she and her Department were remiss in their duties. They extended the licence for Pioneer Trust without receiving those assurances from the provincial Government. As well, the Minister's letter indicated the Saskatchewan Government made the decision on February 4 not to proceed with the guarantee for Pioneer Trust. We want to know who knew about that decision before Pioneer closed its doors on February 7. We want to know if there were any people who knew this inside information, took advantage of it and either sold shares or withdrew uninsured deposits from Pioneer Trust.

We also find that the provincial Minister of Finance in Saskatchewan stated on several occasions that it is the federal Government who "held the gun to our heads" by threatening to lift Pioneer's licence. The provincial Minister of Finance seems to put much of the blame for the demise of Pioneer Trust on the Federal Government. I think a public inquiry would be helpful in ascertaining exactly who was responsible.

We have heard through press reports that some person in the Prime Minister's office seems to have given some assurance to the uninsured depositors that there would be a public inquiry. I hope that the spokesman for the Government today will be clear as to what type of inquiry the Prime Minister's office was promising.

I think it is important that we have a public inquiry for the sake of management. The senior management of Pioneer are prominent Saskatchewan business people. It is important for their reputation, if they are to continue to do business in the Province of Saskatchewan, that there be a public inquiry that shows exactly who was responsible and why Pioneer went broke. It is in their interest that a public inquiry be held to show that they did not make unethical loans or use bad business practices. It is important to senior management that such a public inquiry be held.

One must look at the role of the provincial Government. It made a guarantee without looking at the books of Pioneer Trust. I find this somewhat awesome from a Tory Government in Saskatchewan which claims to be business oriented and business minded. They made this guarantee without looking at the books and then withdrew the guarantee, making a bad situation ever worse. We do not know how much this will cost CDIC. We do not know how much the provincial Government will have to cough up. I think it is about time we had a public inquiry that firmly showed to the public, the depositors, and the shareholders of Pioneer Trust exactly what happened and who is responsible.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier). He has three minutes.

[English]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise to respond again to this important issue raised by the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). I recall vividly that he has raised this very same issue on several occasions before, including during a previous adjournment debate on February 12 of this year. Nevertheless, I am pleased to discuss the matter of Pioneer Trust and to once again put on the public record the Government's appropriate actions in these circumstances.

The Member will recall that on March 7 the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) sent a detailed letter to him outlining the issues surrounding the collapse of Pioneer Trust. In that letter the Minister of State for Finance clearly indicated the statutory authority of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. As the Member for Regina East knows perfectly well, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation can enter into an agency agreement only if an arrangement is the least costly method of meeting its obligations to the insured depositors.

At a meeting on February 4 the Board of Directors of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation concluded that the least costly method would be to pay off depositors immediately, up to the insured limit, once a winding up order was issued. Of course, once a company is placed in liquidation an agency agreement is no longer possible. The Member for Regina East will also be aware that there is no authority under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act to make direct payments to uninsured depositors.

The Minister of State for Finance was asked today in this Chamber whether the Prime Minister's office had suggested that she conduct a public inquiry into the collapse of Pioneer Trust. I have been asked by the Minister of State for Finance to reiterate that the Government is of the opinion that no public inquiry is warranted. The fact that we are here again discussing this very same issue is evidence that the Government is prepared to provide all Members of Parliament with as much information as possible about the circumstances surrounding the collapse of this company.

I would like to conclude by reminding all Hon. Members that in both the Speech from the Throne and the November 8 economic statement, this Government indicated that revisions to financial institutions legislation is a priority. In addition, a private sector committee, chaired by Mr. Robert Wyman, is currently examining the mandate and operations of Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. I think that these facts indicate clearly the commitment of this Government to the reform of financial institutions, as well as the priority of our Government's response to the Pioneer Trust situation.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—ANNOUNCEMENT OF QUOTAS AND PRICES. (B) WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—ADVANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last week I put a question to the Minister of State for the Canada Wheat Board asking when the Government would announce its initial price for grain and the quotas for grain. Traditionally, those announcements were made around the first of March so that farmers, when planting their crops for the year, could make wise and rational decisions based on the information provided by the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

When the Minister was a member of the Opposition, he was the first to complain if that deadline of March 1 was not met. The deadline has come and gone; it is now March 18. We want that information for the agricultural producers and grain farmers of western Canada.

There is a great deal of uncertainty this year due to reports that our grain exports will drop by some 25 per cent, from $5.5 billion last crop year to about $3 billion in this crop year. The day after I asked the question of the Minister in the House, a CP report from Vancouver indicated that grain shipments there were very low and over 100 elevator workers have been laid off. The article states:

> Buyers, including the Soviet Union and Japan, are turning to other suppliers, leaving the port without its usual lineup of ships waiting at anchor.
> "I've got practically no vessels," said Gary Dewar, a director of the Alberta Wheat Pool. "We've got all kinds of grain, but we've got no sales."
> George Hedalen of the Canadian Wheat Board, the federal agency that markets grain, attributed the situation to record crops last year in many grain-exporting countries. He said the strength of the dollar is also driving buyers to Australia, Argentina and Europe.
> Mr. Dewar said the Soviet Union allowed its grain contract with Canada to expire earlier this year and has not yet negotiated a new one. The current contract with China expires in July, while Japan, another big customer, is maintaining only minimum purchases under its agreement.

There is a great deal of concern and the Minister's tardiness in making the announcement is only causing that much more concern in the farming community of western Canada.

I suggest there is also a great deal of concern due to the policies of the United States Government which is reducing its support price on loans. There is a fear that the price will drop dramatically, and I believe that Canada should send a strong signal to the producers and the grain trade around the world that we intend to support and encourage our producers.

Although the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is meeting with the President of the United States in Quebec City, I am disappointed that there is no indication that he took up this important issue that is causing great concern in western grain producing circles.

I think it is important for the Government to announce those prices, the demand and quotas so that grain producers can make rational and wise decisions for the upcoming planting that will start within the next month.

Another concern is that with the drought and the increased input costs and falling land values there is even that much more uncertainty in western Canada and in the grain belt. I hope the Minister will be able to announce those initial prices tonight. I think it is essential that those prices be at least as high as last year. Clearly in-put costs are continuing to rise. Therefore it is essential that those initial prices be held up.

The other point I raised in my question to the Minister was the question of the payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. That Bill was not brought into the House until well into the new session. We dealt with it here in less than a day. It is reported that the total payment for the year will be about $1 billion this year. If it is a billion dollars it seems to me we should have an interim payment of at least $700 million so that the farmers who are suffering economically will have those funds available to them for the planting season. I hope the Minister is able to announce in the House, and not shilly-shally around, not only that he is going to make a $700 million interim payment but that he will have those cheques in the farmers' hands within a month so they will be available for that important period of time when they are buying seed, and facing the rest of their in-put costs, all of which have risen during this past year.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I think he rises some interesting points. I have to disagree with him on a couple of counts. He talks about the Government shilly-shallying around and wanting the Government to come clean in terms of the date on which the initial payments were announced and the date on which the pre-seeded acreage reports were in the paper.

Let me point out to the Hon. Member that in the last two years—the Hon. Member wanted us to have this out by March 1—the 1983-84 crop year, the initial payments were not announced until April 5, and in 1984-85 the initial payments were not announced until April 13. Two years ago pre-seeded acreage reports were put in the mail on April 20, which traditionally is about 10 days ahead of seeding. That is probably well after seeding starts in southern Alberta. The kicker is, and the Hon. Member is complaining about us not doing it on March 1, last year those reports were not in the mail until May 17. I farm. I have had a permit for 30 years. Basically we had an early spring last year. Seeding was all over by then.

The Hon. Member talks about pre-seeded acreage report. I said last week in response to the Hon. Member's question that it was going to press. We hope to have it finished and out well before the dates—I have just read them to him—that his government, the one of which he was a part, had them out a year and two years ago. The report will not be in the form of a pre-seeded acreage report.

Mr. Foster: You are two weeks late now.

Mr. Mayer: We are two weeks late according to the Hon. Member. Actually, if we did it now we would be about six weeks ahead of what the Liberal government did a year ago.

Mr. Foster: I have the press release. It was April 15 last year.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member indicates he is concerned about what producers are doing. We are certainly looking at making what has come to be known as a pre-seeded acreage report a lot more useful to farmers, because we are putting much more information in it. I hope it is something that farmers will find useful in helping with their planting. It will be out in time to be of some assistance to them in planting their crops.

There is one other thing I would like to point out to the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member asked me in his question, although he did not refer to it today, about announcing guaranteed quotas. I am not so sure he knows what a quota is.

Mr. Foster: Initial quota is what I said.

Mr. Mayer: Let me tell him that the last year it was ever done was in 1980-81 when quotas were guaranteed. He knows, and I pointed this out to him when answering his question, that there is no doubt western producers in particular are suffering a double whammy. At the very time we had low crops the rest of the world had virtually record or near record crops. Whether we like it or not we are very much dependent upon the export market for what we receive for our own products in this country.

One other point in conclusion, if I may, Mr. Speaker, because the Member refers to the Western Grain Stabilization Act payment. We very much appreciate the co-operation of all Parties in the House in passing the amendments. As I said before, and I will say it again, we will have payments in the hands of the producers in the form of an interim payment prior to spring seeding, namely, prior to May 1. It will be as large as we can possibly make it. I do not think it serves any useful purpose to speculate on the amount or to raise expectations and not be able to meet them. This certainly does not help producers as far as buffeting them around. We will make it as large as we possibly can and have it in their hands prior to the first of May.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—PETROLEUM GAS REVENUE TAX—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to elaborate the question I directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) concerning the National Energy Program.

The NEP brought into being in 1980 devastated the oil and gas industry in western Canada, especially in Alberta. That devastating policy was brought in somewhat by design. Up to that period of time Alberta had a thriving economy and things seemed to be going well. Once some of the provisions of the national energy policy were implemented, especially the one which hurt the industry the most—the PGRT—big and small producers alike, especially the small ones, were brought to their knees. Many rigs left Alberta and crossed the border to the United States. The unemployment situation, which was around 3 per cent in Alberta, rose in Calgary to 13 per cent, 14 per cent and 15 per cent, and the last indication is that in Edmonton the unemployment rate is 15.7 per cent.

This policy was brought in by design by the former Liberal Government. We as Conservatives criticized it and said that we would amend, change and phase out that national energy policy. Negotiations between oil producing provinces and the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have been going on for a few months. There are indications that they will come to an agreement. It is essential for that industry to be in a position to function like any other free enterprise company in the country. If we look at the PGRT provision, we find that it is discriminatory. It is a front-end tax. It taxes the oil industry on gross revenue and does not take into consideration that the industry first has to make some money before it is taxed. In this way even the consumer is being punished.

I hope our new Government will bring about a change in its taxation policy as far as the oil and gas industry is concerned. That industry is one that can create jobs in Canada. Not only will it create jobs in western Canada, but in central and eastern Canada as well. It is an industry which has a potential for growth. That is why it is important that it function normally.

The oil and gas industry is being singled out, not only by the Liberal Party but also by the NDP. I heard them today in the House criticizing the big fat cats. They forget that the industry has to find the oil, bring it out of the ground, refine it and sell it. It only receives a small portion of the total revenue. For example, the producers' share of a 50 cent litre of gas is only 6.5 cents. That is not too much. If they make any profit, they must pay taxes on that. Therefore, talking about big fat cats is not reasonable.

I hope that the negotiated conclusion will favour the oil and gas industry situated in western and eastern Canada. There are only a couple of weeks left. The negotiations are supposed to be terminated by the end of this month. Let us hope that the Government will have the foresight to allow this industry to function under its own steam.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) for expanding on his question to the Minister regarding the PGRT. He quite frequently participates in the House and it is a pleasure to reply to the Hon. Member this evening.

I think it is fair to say that this Government has been committed for quite some time to resolving the outstanding federal-provincial energy agreements. This House will remember that our election platform was based on this commitment. As early as June 1984, we presented Newfoundland with a draft of the Atlantic Accord. That was fulfilled on February 11, 1985. The quick and efficient manner in which this final accord was achieved is a perfect example of co-operative federalism. Of course, we are displaying the same co-operative approach with our friends during current negotiations with the western oil producing provinces.

We note the keen interest of Government Members, the Hon. Member for Calgary East being one of them, in the progress of these negotiations. I must reiterate that the Minister said as late as today in the House that negotiations have reached a sensitive point as Governments attempt to unravel a highly complex oil and gas pricing system and assess the impact on government revenues and, of course, the industry itself. To date, the parties to these negotiations have been successful in resolving a number of important issues and they are confident that an energy pricing agreement, which will be beneficial to all parties, will be struck in the near future.

As these negotiations have progressed, the federal Government has demonstrated its commitment to achieving a less complex and more beneficial energy system. This is what the Hon. Member was talking about. We have in place a flexible pricing arrangement for crude oil exports to the United States which, in concert with adjustments made to the National Energy Board's crude oil nominations and licensing system, should minimize the requirement to shut-in crude production from Alberta and Saskatchewan fields in the coming months. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) regards this federal relaxation of export controls as a significant step toward ultimate deregulation of Canadian crude oil prices and marketing procedures. Additionally, natural gas exports to the United States worth $4 billion last year are subject to flexible pricing arrangements between the buyer and the seller.

I conclude by saying the extension of the existing agreements between each province and the federal Government to March 31, 1985, was undertaken to ensure that the eventual agreements reached will reflect the best possible meeting of minds on an area of critical importance to the Canadian economy. We on the Government side of the House have complete confidence that this will be achieved. Undue haste or unseemly negotiating in public would not contribute to this objective.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—
CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House condemns the Government's failure in bilateral relations with the United States with particular reference to:

1. the failure to obtain an agreement from the United States to make a commitment to early action on its share of environmental damage due to acid rain; and

2. the failure to make specific, that Canada would not participate in any way in the star wars project of the United States.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Canadians and Americans across the border have been witnessing what the media have dubbed as the Shamrock Conference. Some have said that nothing was involved in the process which took place over a 24-hour period in Quebec City but a lot of media hype. Would that this were true. Regrettably it is not. Canadians and Americans have in fact seen what could perhaps be accurately described as the "Shamrock Shuffle", with President Reagan calling the tune and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) eagerly dancing along, taking us as a nation in an entirely new direction in terms of our relationship with the United States of America.

The resolution before the House, Mr. Speaker, refers to the failure of this Government's bilateral relationships with the United States, with particular reference to the continental problem of acid rain and the immense global problem of President Reagan's star wars project and our link with it. The resolution does deal concretely with these two important instances, but the point I want to make is that what is involved goes well beyond even those two important items in its seriousness.

Our history as a nation can be seen in one sense as one long struggle against assimilation. There has been throughout the time those of us in this Chamber have lived, as well as our ancestors, a tension between the conflicting poles of nationalism on the one hand and continentalism on the other.

It is a very interesting point of Canadian history that the Conservative Party, since Sir John A. Macdonald, on virtually every issue of substance during a time when it was the Government, has been on the nationalist side. Sir John A. Macdonald gave to Canada a new national policy. Robert Borden fought the Liberals of the day on the issue of reciprocity for what he deemed to be the Canadian interest. Bennett in the 1930s produced for Canada the CBC and Air Canada, standing up for what he perceived to be Canadian national interests in a continent which was dominated by the economic power and thrust of the United States of America. John Diefenbaker fought the campaign of 1957 on the issue of Canadian economic nationalism. He talked about the importance of Canadian control in certain key sectors of the Canadian economy. I would add, in relation to what is taking place in Central America today, that it was John Diefenbaker who resisted the pressures from the United States in 1959 to cut off relations with the new Government of Cuba. It was John Diefenbaker, although there was some confusion on his policy in this regard because he was a Canadian nationalist and sensitive to the growing dangers of the proliferation of nuclear weapons, who, in the final analysis, refused to take nuclear weapons for the Bomarc missiles here in Canada.

Now there is a new kind of Conservativism. Since the election of September 4 we have witnessed what I would describe as a decisive shift in the history of the Conservative Party and, so far as they are able to get away with it, in the history of our country. The election of September 4 was the crowning point of the North American neo-conservative continentalist movement that began in the 1970s and scored its first victory in 1980 with the election of President Reagan, and put the icing on the cake with the election of Brian Mulroney in Canada.

[Translation]

What has happened since the election? We have witnessed the impact of the Government's continentalism. First, they terminated FIRA. Then they made cutbacks in funding for the arts. What is the result for the economy? Since September, the Conservatives have simply approved all FIRA applications still pending.

Then came the summit. Two basic issues were on the agenda. First of all, acid rain and the damage it does to our buildings, the air we breathe, the water in our lakes, and our forests. Initially, President Reagan only had a report in mind—

● (1110)

But, Mr. Speaker, Brian got tough. In the earlier days of negotiations leading up to the summit meeting in Quebec City, he said through his officials: "Ronnie, a report is not good enough. The people of Canada are sensitive to the need for definite action on acid rain. Therefore I can't, as Prime Minister, go back merely with a commitment to make a report". So he laid down the law. On behalf of the people of Canada he said that rather than having only a report we must do something decisive. We got something decisive: we got a further study.

Over 3,000 studies have been done on the problem of acid rain, but the decisive new leadership that we have in Canada now on the important problem of acid rain tells the Americans that we need 3,001 studies. He went even further. He said: "You appoint an envoy on your side, Ronnie, and we'll appoint one on ours. Of course, we will not give them any mandate to take effective action and we won't give them any budget. We will pay them a dollar a year and they will get a lot of media attention. A year from now they can come back and tell us how much worse the problem has gotten because nothing was done. Then we'll have a look at it again".

I would like to say to the Government of Canada that the people of Canada are fed up with this kind of action. Our buildings are literally decaying. Our beautiful lakes are dying. Our forests are being multilated and our health is threatened. In the face of this they propose another study with an envoy added who will make a report. What an envoy they have selected for Canada, "Mr. Decisiveness" himself, Bill Davis. I want to say something about—

An Hon. Member: Look at his election results.

Mr. Broadbent: We on this side of the House measure success not simply by election results but in terms of principles that people fight for.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Remember the Constitution, Mr. Principle.

Mr. Broadbent: There are a lot of indifferent and uncaring jerks who have been elected around the world. That is not our definition of success.

Let us consider Mr. Davis' record on acid rain. This is the man who is going to stand up in Washington for Canada's interests on acid rain. First consider Ontario Hydro, Mr. Speaker. It is the third largest producer of acid rain in North America. Four years ago Ontario Hydro had a level of emissions reaching 600,000 tonnes. The Ministry of the Environment ordered it to cut this deplorable level of emissions to 300,000 tonnes by 1990. How did this Ontario Crown corporation responsible to Bill Davis' Government respond? Hydro said that it would instal the scrubbers necessary to make this possible, but then decided not to. Consequently, Hydro's production of emissions actually increased last year by an additional 4,000 tonnes. There is a wonderful record of a Crown corporation under the responsibility of Bill Davis!

Let us consider Inco in the Province of Ontario. Inco happens to be the largest producer of acid rain in North America. In 1970, Inco was producing 5,200 tonnes of sulphur dioxide per day. This was increasing health damage to people in this province and indeed in the United States. It was destroying our forests and polluting our lakes with those emissions day after day. What did the Ontario Government do under Bill Davis, that man of decisive action and commitment who is now going to speak to the United States Government on behalf of Canadians? The Government set out its standard in 1970 with the objective that the level of emissions should be reduced to 750 tonnes by 1978. In 1980, two years beyond the target set by the Government, it was producing three times the amount of the level of 2,500 tonnes set by the Conservatives. The Government had approved that level as a maximum, which was to be lowered to 1,950 tonnes by 1983.

The present performance of Inco seems to have made some progress if one considers it on an annual basis and compares it to recent years. However, if we consider the fact that there have been cut-backs in production as a result of massive lay-offs, the limited gains, that are nowhere near the standards set by the Government, virtually disappear.

I have said publicly that there are a number of things that Mr. Davis, as Premier, has done that have been good for the Province of Ontario. However, I suggest to the Hon. Member opposite who raised questions that Mr. Davis is the last person in the world to be fighting on our behalf about problems with acid rain, in this province or anywhere else.

I regret that the Prime Minister, who has talked about the importance of Parliament, could not be here on such a decisively important occasion following the summit. He spent a wonderful 48 hours parading in Quebec City. This debate flows directly from that summit and will involve the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Liberals as well as our Party. He ought to have been here for this important occasion.

Rather than set up another study calling for another report on acid rain, with an envoy whose credentials are not the best, to put it euphemistically, the Prime Minister ought to have told President Reagan that since Canada is prepared to put up a certain amount of money for this study, the Americans should contribute the same proportionate amount.

While I praise the Government for its decision to deal with acid rain, I am talking about bilateral relations. As I said the other day, the Prime Minister has decided to be a kid brother to Ronald Reagan instead of a good neighbour. He should have told the President of the United States that since his country has produced half of the acid rain problem that exists in Canada, the very least it should do as a nation is put up proportionately what Canada has put up to address this problem. In other words, he should have said that the United States ought to have put up somewhere between $1 billion and $1.5 billion to show the people of Canada that they want to be a good neighbour to Canadians. Such a message by the Prime Minister would have been a demonstration of some kind of Canadian leadership—not to demand more of the Americans but to demand proportionately what we are prepared to do ourselves.

I do not think the ink had dried on the negotiating papers leading up to the statement that was to be made on acid rain before we had an official from the State Department already saying to American journalists: "Don't be taken in, fellas; President Reagan has not changed his position on acid rain at all". There has been no departure in terms of policy for the Americans on acid rain, no change; it was all one massive PR exercise.

It seems to me the Canadian Government realized who it was dealing with when it comes to acid rain. Mr. Reagan has all the sensitivity in terms of the environment that you could expect of a man who said not many years ago when he was a politician in California and the problems of the forests in California were brought to his attention: "When you have seen one tree, you have seen them all". There is a man who is sensitive to the needs of the environment; his name, Ronald Reagan.

I am saying that our approach is not good enough. We should have demanded proportional action, and if we did not get it our Prime Minister could have come back with dignity. He could have said: "I went to bargain with the Americans. I did my best. We have our act together on acid rain here. We asked them to do proportionately what we did, but they said no". " I regret" he could have told us, "that we have decided to agree to disagree. I promised the people of Canada that I will continue with the struggle to get the Americans to pay their way, to do their share and to stop putting their garbage on our side of the fence". He could have come back with dignity even if he had lost the particular battle, as we do from time to time with our strong neighbour to the south, and he would have maintained the respect of all Canadians who are concerned about acid rain. Instead, he attempted to do a great smokescreen exercise, a PR exercise, that is worse than useless because it leaves the impression that something might be done with acid rain when it will not deal with the issue one bit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want now to turn to the second part of our resolution, and that concerns the issue of star wars. This brainchild of President Reagan and a handful of his advisers was first launched upon the world a year ago this week, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Deans: Two years ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Two years ago.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is the first mistake.

Mr. Broadbent: There he is, the master of facts, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). We will hear his brave contribution in a minute. A couple of years ago this scheme was proposed by President Reagan. Almost the whole world knows about it now. It is a plan to destroy ICBMs and intermediate range missiles before they reach the target. That is the scheme. It is also a scheme that is likely to involve the spending of some $70 to $100 billion between now and 1993 in the United States, according to the priorities set out by President Reagan.

The important point about this scheme is that it came from Mr. Reagan and a handful of his advisers. It was attacked by the Republicans in Congress. It was attacked by the Democrats in Congress. It was attacked by defence experts. It was attacked by church groups. It has, in fact, been attacked by western allies of the United States, who have temporarily kept quiet, as being either totally irrational as a concept for defence on the one hand, or destabilizing on the other, or both.

John Lamb, Executive Director of the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament, when he was echoing a widespread sentiment by defence experts on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean, said this about it:

> It is clear that star wars would severely upset the balance of East-West deterrence.

Even our late and unlamented former Minister of National Defence said last fall in one of the early give-aways that it would "fundamentally change the strategic relationship". If that does not mean it would be destabilizing in terms of East-West discussions in détente, I do not know what else it could mean.

● (1125)

The recent debate in Canada has focused on the link between star wars and our own defence policy, particularly with the updating of the DEW line of the North Warning System.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. He may proceed at this point only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the consideration of all Hon. Members of the House. Of course, we will reciprocate in terms of the other principal speakers.

When it comes to discussions of the star wars project and its linkage, or potential linkage, with the updating of our own DEW line, U.S. officials have repeatedly said that there was a linkage. On the other hand, Canadian Cabinet Ministers have repeatedly said the opposite. I would just like to put some of these comments on the record.

On January 16, Secretary of Defense Weinberger said that star wars, if deployed, would have to be backed up by an updated DEW line. He saw a linkage. The former Minister of National Defence, the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates), said just about a week later that there was no connection between star wars and the DEW line. Act three—Paul Nitze, key adviser on defence matters in the United States and a distinguished gentleman, said on March 6 that he acknowledged there could be a connection between star wars and the DEW line in the future. Our own Secretary of State for External Affairs, who always has his facts right, then said: "There is absolutely no connection between star wars and the DEW line". Richard Burt, a man who advises Canadian journalists, in doing what is called a backgrounder on the visit of President Reagan to our country, said: "Oh yes, there is a connection between star wars and the DEW line". Then when a reporter said: "Oh my goodness, the Canadian Government said the opposite", Mr. Burt said: "Oh my goodness, I made a mistake". Of course, the mistake was not what he had said in terms of its actual accuracy; his mistake was an error in judgment—he told the truth and he was not supposed to be telling us what it was all about.

As the Prime Minister always likes to do, I will leave the last word on this matter to President Reagan. Just yesterday President Reagan made an incredible speech, in many ways, on the eve of his departure from Canada. He included the following:

> We look forward to the possibility of sharing new developments in SDI technology with Canada.

He certainly sees some kind of possible or potential link arising from the openness of the Government of Canada, not the people of Canada, toward this project.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are unbelievable.

Mr. Broadbent: I hear the Minister saying that I am unbelievable.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Yes, indeed. I am prepared to have a referendum on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish he would get hold of the article released yesterday by Mr. Genscher, the Foreign Secretary of West Germany, who has raised many questions about star wars. If that does not cause him to think a little more, maybe he would look at the one by Geoffrey Howe, the British Foreign Secretary, who is certainly saying one thing privately to other members of NATO which expresses his serious concern about the star wars initiative and indeed is saying things publicly which express a great deal of concern about the project. We would like to see this coming from the Government of Canada, not simply from Great Britain and West Germany.

The points are very clear. Star wars is a destabilizing concept and initiative. It was opposed not only by Canadians; it was opposed, to his credit, by Walter Mondale in the United States. It has been opposed by many defence officials in the United States. It has been opposed by men and women around the world who want the Soviet Union and the United States to start de-escalating the armaments race instead of getting it going on an even higher track. The Government of Canada either has to be naive about this or misleading, or both, and the people of Canada can make their judgment. In either case, the people of Canada do not want any connection with the star wars project.

I want now to conclude my observations. I say as a person who has spent some time studying Canadian history and has just made a very brief reference to virtually every Conservative Prime Minister since Confederation, that there is a new drift. There is a clear departure from the past Conservative traditions. I say that this continentalist drift that is under way must be stopped.

Canadians do want to be good neighbours. We do want to be good friends. However, we recognize seriously that while our destinies are indeed connected, we must continue the struggle of our ancestors in this nation to build on our part of the continent a nation clearly linked by history and geography with our American friends and neighbours, but a nation clearly in command of its own political, military, economic and cultural decisions. Previous Conservative Governments in our history have understood that, in the final analysis, maintaining good relationships between neighbouring nations of unequal power requires constant vigilance on the part of Canada. It requires independence of thought, action and program. The new Conservative Government either does not understand this or, more alarmingly, does not care. The new Conservative Government has embarked upon the most radical change in Canada-U.S. relations in this century.

Misunderstanding the nature of loyalty, it is forgetting, as Escott Reid pointed out in a moving article in today's Citizen, that the loyal ally must at times oppose with all its determination the particular policies of its neighbour. Misunderstanding our own real cultural, economic and defence needs, the Conservative Government is prepared to leave us adrift on the tumultuous North American seas in the naive hope we can survive without a chart. Misunderstanding its obligation to provide confident leadership to Canadians, the new Government has decided to follow an American President. I urge strong support for the motion before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Act two.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not know whether the crowd will stay for the third act.

Mr. Lawrence: What crowd?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) points out that the Conservatives are huddled around their Minister to try and give the appearance of some cohesion for the television cameras.

I have observed with great interest, as has the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the events of the last weekend in Quebec City. One is always pleased and gratified to see written another chapter in the long and friendly history of relations between Canada and the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One must look carefully in order to assess the real importance of these meetings for Canada. What are the real and tangible achievements for the country? How significant are they?

I would like through you, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on having been in exceptionally fine voice on Sunday night. He, as you well know, Sir, is second to none in public life in his ability to carry a tune, but I want to echo what the Hon. Member for Oshawa has said. I would have thought that, having represented this country in imperial, almost presidential style over the weekend, he would have been here in the House of Commons to reply to the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I grant that in strict jurisdiction, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who is here with his small, carefully huddled coterie behind him, has jurisdiction over the debate, but the Prime Minister should be here. I want to draw to the attention of Your Honour that the Prime Minister has not participated in a debate in this House of Commons since Leader's Day at the opening of Parliament. It is all very well to have the photo opportunities with the new presidential seal. I suppose the reason he does not want to come in here for debate is that he cannot put that seal, under our rules, on his desk to speak. It has been tried before.

One is left wondering if there was not in all the events of last weekend somewhat less than might have met the eye. There was surely an event programmed primarily, in the words of a former President of the United States, to play in Peoria—Peoria, Illinois. My question is will it work in Weyburn, Saskatchewan? Will it resonate in Rimouski, Quebec?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have looked over the lists of the so-called agreements arising from the singing summit, and I would say that had there been another duet at the close of the meeting—and I am not surprised there was no encore—the song would not have been "When Irish Eyes are Smiling", but rather another well-known song, not Irish but American, "I Got Plenty of Nothing".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): From the attitude of the Government, the second line of that song would have been especially appropriate, and I wish the Prime Minister would have broken off into one of the well-known solos of his. That second line is "And nothing's plenty for me". You got it, Mr. Speaker!

In a more serious sense, with the greatest respect, we have witnessed in the past two days another example by this Government and this Prime Minister of what I call cosmetic politics where appearance takes precedence over reality, style over substance and package over policy. It is an approach to government that seems directed more by desire to placate, a need to please, an urge to be loved, than the ability to order priorities and a willingness to make choices.

There is no doubt that in an increasingly dependent world, Canada and the United States enjoy a special, unique relationship. Many would say that that relationship is not only unique, but historically very special, and I agree. Our two countries share similar values, many interests and, while geography has made us neighbours, as the late President John Kennedy used to say, history has made us friends. We do not, however, share every interest. There are differences and they too are real and important. Underlining those differences should not be interpreted as traces of anti-Americanism, but as a real regard on behalf of the people of Canada to exercise our own priorities and our own preferences.

With respect to what President Reagan wanted for last weekend's meeting, what did he want? Clearly he wanted a continuation of what he had already got from this Government over the last six months—the abolition of FIRA, the dismantling of the National Energy Program, a renewal of our Radar Distant Warning System in the North, whether it is part of star wars or not only history will judge—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Lloyd Axworthy has already judged it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have an amendment where we have taken our judgment because we believe what has happened, but you have not shown us—more Canadian troops for NATO; more study but no action on acid rain; and an example in Canada that the so-called nuclearology, and I am using American words, does not extend from New Zealand to North America.

• (1140)

We know what the President wanted because he told us. We know what he obtained. He obtained some of those things he perhaps deserved, and I do not criticize all of them in all of their aspects. But the question before this House is, what did we get? What did Canada get? For that matter, what did we want? We were not told what it was we wanted. We never saw the agenda. We in the House were never given a statement regarding Canada's priorities. Perhaps we should have wanted real and tangible progress on trade relations, but clearly the Government has not got its own act together regarding how far it wishes to go with the United States on free trade. Our country was not in a position to push this matter.

We on this side of the House, members of this Party, are in favour of enhancing and advancing our goal of better neighbourhood. We are in favour of improving our trade relationships and exploring new relationships with the United States in a way that does not yield or sacrifice our Canadian manufacturing base or employment base. Those things are vital for jobs.

If we had a choice of neighbours, looking around the world, who would we rather have as a neighbour? Would we rather be situated beside the Soviet Union or Mainland China? We are situated beside the most friendly group of people on the face of the earth and a great neighbour, I concede that. The point is that that relationship is an overwhelming one. Every Prime Minister of the country has had an opportunity to describe it. Yes, let us go for more trade but not at the expense of the independence of our foreign policy, the independence of our defence policy, our political sovereignty, our economic integrity or our cultural integrity. That is what worries us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We feel that those principles might well have been breached over the weekend in Quebec City. Who was the big winner? I suppose I would put St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, first. He was the undoubted winner.

The Prime Minister loves to weave tales about his modest upbringing as the barefoot boy from Baie Comeau. He likes to recall to his official biographer how he once sang for the then publisher of the Chicago Tribune who came to Baie Comeau to inspect his fiefdom, the Quebec North Shore Paper Company. The Prime Minister, as young Brian, used to sing American-Irish ditties for the colonel for which he would receive the odd $20. Well, the Prime Minister was singing for his supper again over the weekend. He is still singing.

The Prime Minister had his cap in hand. As a matter of fact, "Cap" got out of hand, did he not? The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs had a lot of trouble with "Cap" until they finally got his CTV interview straightened out.

In any event, there was such a great atmosphere at the meeting. It is too bad it had to be interrupted by a bit of work. Not much work was done but some business got taken care of. There were advance press releases just to loosen up the party so they could have a good time. I am sorry the good time had to be interrupted by two hours' work.

The Prime Minister did a lot of preparatory work in order to get a deal on acid rain. He began by saying the kinds of things the U.S. administration loves to hear. He seems to think that the United States Government could make a case for taking no action. He told U.S. officials that our record on acid rain was not as good as theirs. He said we had to go to the table with clean hands. We on this side of the House have dealt with this matter before. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), has dealt with it very explicitly.

The Prime Minister threw our cards away before he ever got to the bargaining table. Never mind that we had a program to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions by 25 per cent by 1990 and 50 per cent by 1994 and the U.S. had no such program. Never mind that the United States produces 19.6 million tonnes of nitrous oxide per year while we produce only 1.7 million tonnes. The Prime Minister gave the President of the United States an easy way out. He threw away our bargaining chips before he ever got to the table.

After laying that solid groundwork, the Prime Minister did try to recover. In preparation for the Summit meeting, the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) announced a plan to spend $300 million over the next 10 years to combat acid rain. The Hon. Member for Oshawa has been very explicit with respect to acid rain. Real progress in this area is measured by the definition of standards as goals. It is measured by agreement on regulations to promote those goals and the expenditure of money to meet those standards. We did not get any of that. Instead, we got special envoys and we will have more study and more talk.

We will have another year of Bill Davis, Mr. Environment himself. I will not repeat the words of the Hon. Member for Oshawa, but how about the record of Ontario Hydro? How about the record of Inco? With that sense of patriotism, a $1-a-year man who is probably overpaid at that—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, 99 cents overpaid.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would like to know from the Secretary of State for External Affairs what commitment the Prime Minister received from William Grenville Davis in terms of time. How much time will he dedicate to this particular enterprise?

Mr. Broadbent: He can do it in Florida.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He can always discuss the matter over baseball training with the Blue Jays in Florida. The Secretary of State for External Affairs just nodded, indicating that he would like to join that particular enterprise.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we also support the second part of this motion which concerns the position of the Progressive Conservative Government on the American star wars project.

However, I would like to make it clear that unlike the New Democratic Party, we believe in the need for solidarity with our NATO partners. We are not in favour of Canada's withdrawing from this organization. We are not isolationists. We are committed to our allies. We support the terms of this motion, but our support is not unqualified. However, although our approach is entirely different from the approach taken by the NDP, it also differs from the perspective taken by the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

We believe in supporting our friends and we believe in honouring our obligations. Of course, we will give our friends the benefit of the doubt. However, being a friend means having the courage to tell a friend the truth in times of stress regarding areas in which there is no doubt. We believe in speaking out to both superpowers regarding constructive dialogue in the search for an end to the arms race. This is why we suggested in an earlier amendment that the Strategic Defence Initiative be put on the agenda at Geneva for discussion between the two superpowers.

With regard to the Strategic Defence Initiative, or star wars, endorsed by this Government in its final communiqué, it means from our point of view telling our friends that there can be no more destabilizing element in the peace negotiations or in the escalation of the threat of confrontation than that particular initiative of the United States. That is why we want it on the agenda.

The Prime Minister has said that this view is anti-American. He knows nothing could be further from the truth. What is the connection between this and the new North Warning System and the possible deployment of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil? We were not shown the treaty. We were not allowed to discuss it. The Minister of Defence refused to appear before the committee. We are getting three clear answers from the Government: yes, no and maybe.

My friend the Hon. Member for Oshawa has referred to the various statements of Ministers and of the Prime Minister. I need not repeat them. What is said depends on what day of the week it is and on whether it is said in the House, outside in a scrum or in the luxury of those new refurbished offices. It depends on the Minister to which one speaks and whether or not he cleared his comments with "Cap", the United States Secretary of Defence. If he has not cleared his comments with "Cap", it depends on whether or not he has managed to get a restatement of those comments from the United States Secretary of Defense in time.

On a broader subject but still relating to the motion, successive Liberal governments have made our relationship with the United States the greatest economic relationship in the world. Americans are not only our best friends, they are also our best customers. However, it is a partnership. It is a mutual relationship of client, customer and merchant. It is an equal relationship. Americans are not only our best customers but, as we never hesitate to remind them, we are also their best customers.

As I said earlier, I believe we should improve our sense of neighbourhood. We should enhance our trading potential with the United States but never at the expense of our sovereignty, the independence of our foreign policy or our economic and cultural integrity.

I want to say that the shopping list which was attached to the communiqué was obviously designed to protect this Government from not having included a particular item on the agenda. In 1984, the level of our bilateral trade was more than $150 billion across the board. Canada enjoyed in 1984 a record trade balance with the United States of $16.6 billion. I want to underline to you, Sir, and to the Government, that this trade surplus was achieved at no expense to Canadian sovereignty and without concessions in defence and in our environment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What we want to know is how the Government plans to build on that achievement. As a result of the meeting in Quebec on Sunday, Canadians are really no closer to knowing what the Canadian Government will do to gain new markets in the United States. We are no closer to exploring avenues of enhanced trade with the United States. Primarily, I suppose, that is because although the President may have been willing to open up the borders completely, we do not know what the Government's position is. We do not believe the Government has a position and we would like to some day hear what its position is. In order to protect jobs in Canada's vital industries, in manufacturing as well as in our resources, Canada must seek to enhance that trade with the United States and, indeed, with every country.

Speaking as the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, I am particularly concerned with the Pacific Rim. But what did we get from the summit conference, from those two hours of paltry meetings? We got only a promise of more study. The time for Mr. Reagan to further open trade with Canada is short. There is new protectionism in the United States in the Congress, and even though the President may be powerless to resist by the time his mandate starts to run out, the President is now enjoying the full flower of his massive victory in the electoral collage. But his time will run on and his influence with the Congress will increasingly diminish. I think every Hon. Member in the House will know how that happens. The President may be powerless by the time the Prime Minister has gotten his act together and has come up with complete measures to help us in the Congress.

There is a fundamental gap in the thinking of the Prime Minister. He says proudly that the President will go to bat for Canada with Congress. We understand what he means. Americans certainly understand what he means. But I feel that the Prime Minister has struck out. I believe the Prime Minister does not understand the American system, the separation of powers, the independent jurisdiction of the Congress. It is the Congress which is threatening our steel industry. It is the Congress which is threatening our lumber exports. I want to tell Your Honour that this is why the President, wearing a green tie, said—and I enjoyed the remark—"Prime Minister, I am green with envy at your majority in the House of Commons". So am I, as a matter of fact.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why did he say he was green with envy? Because he knows that whatever this Government finally decides to do, if it decides to do anything, it can impose on this Parliament. But the President of the United States does not have that power. Here is the gap in the thinking of the Prime Minister. We throw the cards away—FIRA, defence, the environment, foreign policy, the National Energy Program—and we hope that the President will be able to influence the Congress. We should deal with the Congress before we throw those cards away.

It was a great weekend, Your Honour. The summit conference has taken place. You are sitting in a green chair. The bands have stopped playing and—I don't know whether Kipling wrote these words—"the tumult and the shouting died" for this particular exercise. But the real issues remain. There is an agenda between our two nations which is still largely unaddressed. I would point out to Your Honour that in the real world of international affairs, even between the best of friends the celebration is the culmination of a successful negotiation. The celebration, the blarney, the good fellowship, the song, should never be a preamble. The negotiations have not been concluded. We have not achieved a great deal. I want to say that while the summit conference was indeed great "show biz", the Government did not deliver for the country.

It is for this reason that we support the tone of the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa. We would, however, like to make it a little more explicit, so I add this amendment—

—seconded by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien):

[English]

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "rain" and by adding the following:

", and by allowing a one-year moratorium before any concrete action is taken by the United States despite the express wish of millions of Canadians and Americans; and

(b) the failure to make specific that Canada would not participate in any way in the star wars project of the United States and, especially, the failure to obtain ironclad guarantees that no nuclear arms will be stationed or deployed in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The question therefore before the House is the amendment. The Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me begin, if I might, by saying to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), as someone who has suffered through that position and knows all of its delights and limitations, that I thought he delivered today a very amusing and careful speech. Indeed, at times I thought it was even a slightly wistful speech, and I can understand that. I was particularly pleased to hear his remarks about the relations between Canada and the United States. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that if he votes today as he says he believes, he will vote against the motion and in favour of the very successful summit conference which was held on the weekend between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada.

I should make two comments about the observations which were raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition. First, I would simply make it clear to him again, as I have tried to do before, that the question of weapons in space is already very much on the agenda at Geneva. I am pleased to hear his words about that important question again. I can assure him that we in the Government, as any concerned people throughout the world, hope that progress might be made on the question of weapons in space in the Geneva negotiations.

My second point has to do with the question of guarantees that there would be no nuclear arms stationed on Canadian soil. I was rather surprised to hear a Liberal Leader use again the phrase "iron-clad guarantees". I did not think he would have the nerve to use that word after Marc Lalonde. However, the word is back in the Liberal vocabulary. I can assure the Leader of the Official Opposition, as I have assured this House of Commons on several occasions previously, that under agreements which he knows well there is a guarantee, there is a commitment, that any Canadian Government would have the right to refuse the stationing of nuclear weapons on our soil, and that this Government, if we believe that to be in the interests of Canada, would refuse the stationing of nuclear arms in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: "If".

Mr. Broadbent: If.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The word "if" is raised, and raised with particular force by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Yes, we expect to exercise our judgment. That is what a Government of Canada is all about. We will not be motivated by blind anti-Americanism, as is the Leader of the New Democratic Party. His mind is made up. He says, "If, if, if", and I recall the attitude he adopted during the great constitutional debate, a debate which spoke to the history and the nature of this country. Indeed, it was a debate which put to the test the degree to which he would respect or betray the interests and wishes of the people of western Canada who had sent the great majority of his caucus here to the House of Commons. He said "if, if, if," until the question became clear and then he cut and ran. He buckled and betrayed his Party, western Canada and Quebec, and showed his colours.

• (1200)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We heard in the speech of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) a familiar recitation of what we already know. He does not like Bill Davis. He does not like Ronald Reagan. He does not much like the American people.

Mr. Broadbent: Did you listen to the speech?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): So he expressed that sentiment again and again and again, as he has done time and again in this House and across the country. Indeed, he followed a quite disturbing pattern of distortion. He misquoted so often it was difficult to keep count. He misquoted me, he misquoted President Reagan, he misquoted Assistant Secretary Burt, he misquoted Ambassador Nitze and Secretary Weinberger. He quoted Mr. Genscher and Mr. Howe out of context. Indeed, he misquoted almost everyone who has spoken on this. But he knows better because the record is there and the Leader of the NDP, for whatever purpose, is deliberately distorting the record of what was said.

I think his purpose is clear. The Leader of the NDP will do literally anything for a headline. Just last Friday, for example, he associated me with the tragic death of the security guard at the Turkish Embassy. That won him a headline.

Mr. Broadbent: I wrote the headline, did I?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That won him a headline. Just days before, seeking other headlines, he quoted half the statement of U.S. Assistant Secretary Richard Burt. He did not quote the whole statement. He would not quote the whole truth. That, Sir, is a shoddy standard for the Party of Woodsworth, Caldwell and Douglas.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Many of these issues, particularly modern defence issues, are complicated and troubling. There is room for honest difference and there is a need for honest debate. That is why I brought the proposal for the North Warning System before a committee of this House for examination, the first time that had been done.

Ms. Jewett: For 64 minutes.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is why my officials and I stayed in our place, but the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) was not in hers. That is why officials and I stayed in our place in committee until the committee chairman received no more questions. That is why I recommended and have undertaken to have the renewal of Norad studied by that Committee, starting a full year before the deadline. That is why we are preparing the first parliamentary review of Canada's international relations in Canada's history.

There is no precedent for bringing Parliament into the debate like this. It has never been done before. However, if I have a duty, as I believe I have, to invite debate, then I believe Opposition Parties also have a duty, a duty to respect the facts, contribute genuinely to the formulation of policy appropriate to our modern sovereign country, and a duty not to abuse positions of trust in this Parliament by creating false fears.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Now, Sir, we have had a most successful summit at Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: What did we get?

Mr. Axworthy: Now there is a misunderstanding.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness, the previous two speakers were listened to.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps important to make the point in this House, where the Government enjoys, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition noted, a substantial majority, that this is not the first time the issue of relations between Canada and the United States arose in Canada. It arose during the election campaign. The undertaking to improve relations between these two free and sovereign nations was a major part of the election campaign. It is a question upon which Canadians cast their judgment. They did so in favour of a significant improvement in relations between Canada and the U.S. The summit is a demonstration that we are meeting our commitment to the people of Canada significantly to improve relations between the two free sovereign nations which share the northern half of this continent. That is being done in a way which fully serves and fully advances Canadian interests—I will elaborate on that later as will other Ministers—and which enhances Canadian sovereignty. My colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen), the former Member for Yukon, recalls—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Former?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Excuse me, the perpetual Member for Yukon, recalls—

Mr. Axworthy: He now represents Alaska.

Mr. Nunziata: You are the former Prime Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I just heard an intervention from—what is Mr. Nunziata's riding?

Ms. Copps: York South-Weston.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): York South-Weston. Well, we are all better off not commenting on the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

When the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence first came to this House as the Hon. Member for Yukon, he took with him on a trip once into the north of Canada the then Minister of Northern Affairs regarding an agreement which had been signed at that time. Under the terms of that agreement, as the Minister has made clear before, the state of our sovereignty was so weak Canadian Ministers had to seek the permission of American officials to have access to joint facilities on our soil. This agreement on the North Warning System, and indeed the spirit which has inspired the preparation of this summit, says we have had enough carelessness about Canadian sovereignty. It is time now for this country to affirm and advance our sovereignty. It is written into the North Warning System, as it was not before, and it inspires all of the actions followed by this Government in taking note and taking advantage of the fact that there has been a maturing of Canadian self-confidence over the years. We are now able, more able than we might have been before, to stand as equals with our friends the Americans and not live always in perpetual fear of them. We are our own people and this Government is prepared to admit that fact and act on it with pride.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I think it is important to note—and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition made reference to this, perhaps wistfully—that the personal relationship between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada could not be better. That can and will pay important dividends for Canada. It already has and it will in the future. It is clear now, if it was in doubt before, that on the great issues of freedom which are a source of division in the world, Canada is not neutral. We are renewing our partnership with the U.S.A. on a number of fronts. We are reasserting our membership in, and commitment to, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

There is clear evidence of strong public support for this approach. It was clear in the most recent public opinion polls. It is clear, I would judge, when Members of Parliament from all Parties go home and speak frankly with their constituents. As I will be saying again later, we believe this fact will give Canada a much more credible place and role in international affairs.

As my colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), will be saying later today, we have broken in this summit a three-year deadlock on acid rain. We have established a political process to provide a political result. A common problem, Sir, requires a common solution. The problem is not at the scientific level. It is not even at the environmental level. It is at the political level in the United States of America. We believe that the artistry of two powerful political personalities with influence and access to the leaders of the nation will help mobilize the necessary political consensus in the U.S. to get results.

That is what we are after. That is what we have been doing. Without a joint process we will never get results. That is where we were before Quebec. There was no movement. There were no results. That is why what has happened on acid rain marks a significant step forward for Canada, the United States and all of those who are concerned about the safety of our lakes, our livelihood and the fight against acid rain.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the success of this meeting in Quebec City is also due to the fact that the meeting took place in the "Vieille Capitale". The Quebec summit is both a Canadian and international achievement and was held in Quebec City, which has a very special character all its own.

During the past decade, the international news on Quebec centred mainly on the state of discord within the Canadian family. The summit has changed all this. It has revived Quebec City's international reputation as the city where Roosevelt and Churchill met and where the UN Food and Agriculture Organization was established. It has also revived Quebec City's international reputation as a Canadian city that is proud of its distinctive character.

For years, Ottawa has treated—

Mr. Chrétien: What about Montebello?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are hearing a voice from the past, the voice of the former Minister, the voice of the architect of a policy directed against Quebec, a policy that resulted in a dramatic rift within this country.

Mr. Speaker, for years Ottawa has treated Quebec with contempt. The message at the time was clear: if anything important was to happen in Canada, it would happen in Ottawa. Times have changed. The Government is treating the people and the Government of Quebec with respect as full-fledged members of our Canadian family. And when important events are scheduled, we have no hesitation in showing our pride in Quebec, and in showing that pride to the whole world.

The summit symbolizes the fact that Quebec is part of the Canadian family, that it is respected and unique, a source of pride and vitality. President Reagan recognized this yesterday in his speech. It is too bad that the NDP has immediately taken this opportunity to censure the Quebec City summit.

[English]

The Leader of the Opposition made reference specifically to questions of trade. They are obviously questions of deep importance. In the communiqué of the summit there is a declaration on trade which reflects the strong personal commitment of the two Leaders to create a more secure, predictable environment for trade.

More specifically, I will go over the points that have been agreed to at the summit and their importance to Canada. There is a specific commitment by the President and the Prime Minister to halt protectionism on cross-border trade in goods and services. I will deal with that for a moment, just in passing, to elaborate on the importance of that to Canada.

Members of the House will know, to our apprehension, of the crises that we have faced in recent months with regard to copper, steel, saltfish, softwood lumber and a growing list of products. There are protectionist forces growing in the United States. The International Trade Commission in that country has to approve applications for what is euphemistically called relief, but what means protection in the United States. The applications to that commission doubled in 1984. There is a trend at work which will be dangerous for Canada unless it is stopped.

The Leader of the Opposition suggested that the President does not have, or may lose, the power to help Canada in that regard as his term progresses. In Quebec this weekend the President of the United States affirmed clearly and specifically in writing that he is going to use that power to help Canada be safeguarded against protectionist sentiments in the United States of America. That means jobs and security and a greater sense of growth and possibilities in this country. That is an agreement and commitment which should be celebrated by all Members of the House who genuinely care about jobs in the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There is an agreement that there will be measures adopted to enhance access to each other's markets. A program has been launched to carry on the exploration for a means to facilitate and increase not only trade but also investment. This is highly important and I think the Leader of the Opposition would understand this even if the Leader of the New Democratic Party would not. There has been a stronger and clearer commitment on the part of both countries to work together for a stronger multilateral trading system and to use the combined influence of Canada and the United States, working with other countries in the world, to strengthen and protect the multilateral trading system.

There has been a commitment to reinvigorate Canada's role in defence, and thereby to strengthen our control of our own defence. There have been attempts again today to pretend that the North Warning System somehow involves Canada in the Strategic Defence Initiative of the United States. That, Sir, is false. The question will be raised as to what guarantees there are that the North Warning System will not somehow be changed to serve other purposes. There are these guarantees. First, we wrote into the agreement a guarantee of sovereignty, an expression of Canadian sovereignty that was not there before. We have the guarantees of consultation. We have the long-standing and reaffirmed guarantee that before there is any action taken that would affect Canadian policy there will be the right of the Canadian Government to decide. That is clear. That was reaffirmed. That is a protection against the transformation of the North Warning System into any other kind of system.

The fear that is expressed is that somehow or other this radar system would be transferred into a part of the Strategic Defence Initiative. That is simply impossible. It is technically impossible. We are talking about an earth-based system modernizing a 25-year-old radar network. North Warning has no capacity or capability against ballistic extra-atmospheric missiles.

Mr. Axworthy: But it complements it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It can be used only against Cruise and manned bombers.

Mr. Axworthy: Why don't you use your head? Don't be so stupid. Don't be so silly.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is technically impossible to do what the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and others are trying to create fear in Canada about. It is technically impossible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: You are a dummy. You guys better start thinking. You've got your head in the sand.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs that the official time has expired. He may proceed with unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Axworthy: His time expired long ago.

Mr. Broadbent: It's terrific entertainment, keep going.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the House. I have just outlined the facts that make it impossible for the North Warning System to become part of SDI. I know that facts can always be ignored or can be given a false and sinister twist. You can create fear about anything. You can create fear about fluoride in the water. You can create fear about Margaret Laurence being taught in the schools. You can create fear about radar in the Canadian north. In the face of arguments like that it is fair to ask precisely what the Opposition Parties would do to replace a northern radar system that has holes in it.

Some Members of Parliament, particularly the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry who likes to speak from his seat and to interrupt debate in the House, have suggested that we should leave this system for further study. It has been studied for nine years.

Mr. Kindy: So has acid rain.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Senate committee said in a report that the present system would allow the Soviet Union to fly bombers, largely undetected, into the heart of North America and to launch an attack virtually without warning against command and control of our communications centre. That is the situation which exists now. No one seriously disputes that. So people who ask for more studies are asking that the holes in our north grow larger. What would they do about these large holes in our north? Would they ask the Soviets to please not send missiles or their bombers until we finish our study? Or would they ask the Americans to look after our north for us? To do the first is to sacrifice our security. To do the second would be to sacrifice our sovereignty.

• (1220)

This is not a lecture series to the Socialist International. We are talking here about Canadian sovereignty and Canadian security in a world where deterrence is the best defence. Deterrence requires warning. If the warning does not work, the system does not work and the temptation is larger for missiles to be shot through the holes in our roof—missiles whose targets would be Canadian cities and Canadian individuals as well as American cities and American individuals.

No one in the House likes to think of missiles being fired at any target. But missiles exist—Soviet missiles targeted at us and western missiles targeted at the Soviet Union. Until we find a way to remove them we must find practical ways to discourage their use. The system of mutual deterrence works. None of the missiles has been fired precisely because it was known that warning systems would warn and allow deadly retaliation. This world is dangerous enough. We should not increase the danger by weakening the warning system that deters attack.

We have in this agreement a commitment to strengthen political level consultation on all security issues; on defence issues, on arms control issues, on defence economic co-operation. We are being consulted closely. We have stressed the importance of those consultations for alliance solidarity.

We are a full partner in NATO and, as the declaration underlines, the strength of our alliance rests on the "unique and individual contributions of its sovereign members in the pursuit of our common goal of peace with freedom". We do not intend to behave as some kind of a bystander in NATO. We seek to enhance our influence in NATO councils and we are doing just that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: Just what Reagan wanted.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have, as a specific result of this summit, improved defence economic co-operation, strengthening existing arrangements, reducing impediments, stopping the erosion that has occurred. We have important statements regarding arms control, statements strengthening joint research—

Mr. Axworthy: Reagan was very good.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —references to multilateral arms control forums as well as bilateral.

Mr. Axworthy: Reagan was great on that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I would hope that Members of Parliament who profess to be interested in these questions would read with some care the declaration.

Mr. Axworthy: You sure had an influence on Reagan.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In this communiqué we have a statement on the adherence by Canada and by the United States to the ABM Treaty that I think should be noted with care by Members of the House. I want to read that portion of the declaration signed by the President and the Prime Minister:

> In this regard, we agree that steps beyond research—
> In strategic defence initiative:
> —would, in view of the ABM Treaty, be matters for discussion and negotiation.

Mr. Axworthy: Just like this weekend when we gave everything to Reagan.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That solemn commitment should make clear—

Mr. Axworthy: Negotiation on our knees? Is that the idea?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is increasingly difficult, even for as practised a parliamentarian as me, to be able to make the point that I believe needs to be made in the face of constant interruptions, particularly from the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I can only conclude that he does not want to know what has been agreed. I can only conclude that he does not want to know the facts.

He has been concerned in the House, for whatever reason, about the degree to which there would be adherence to the ABM Treaty, about what might come from the Strategic Defence Initiative. He has an undertaking, written and signed by the President and the Prime Minister, that indicates the prominence and the central role of the ABM Treaty in this question.

We also have in the statement a very important Canadian addition and flavour with regard to regional conflict, with the encouragement and support of the strengthening of multilateral and international mechanisms for the peaceful resolution of disputes, promoting, as the communiqué states:

> Each by our distinctive contributions, the social, economic and political development essential to the achievement of a stable and enduring peace.

That is consistent with traditional Canadian policy and attitudes toward regional conflict.

These are advantages that are tangible and well known. They were won by the summit at Quebec. Some of them may have a dramatic impact on vital Canadian issues; on jobs, trade and on the very life of our lakes and our forests.

But already the argument is being made that in exchange for these tangible advantages to Canada, friendship with the United States somehow costs us influence; influence with developing countries—

Mr. Broadbent: Who made that argument, Joe?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —or with the Soviet Union, influence in Europe, influence with international organizations or elsewhere.

Mr. Broadbent: Who said that?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Before accepting that simple black and white view of the world, I invite Canadians to examine two kinds of evidence. First, in reality, did the fact that our relations with the United States were strained give us any extra influence elsewhere? Canada has historically been able to take advantage of our influence as a non-colonial, respected middle power. That tradition was begun when no one questioned our friendship with the United States, when everyone accepted that two democratic neighbours would be friends. Our influence internationally has to do with the nature of Canada, not just with the nature of our relations with the United States.

It is worth asking what actual concrete progress was made in disarmament, in development or in relations with any region that would be threatened now. In the interest of honest debate, let those who argued that there is a high cost indicate specifically what that cost is.

Ms. Copps: Jobs.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Jobs, says the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: The steel industry. Did they deliver on steel?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What we have now in this country is a deep and grave threat to the security of Canadian jobs because of protectionist measures in the United States. If the Hon. Member from Hamilton had been watching, she would now—

Mr. Speaker: Order. With due respect to the Members who are barracking on the side, I am being asked by one side to tell the Member who has the floor to be quiet. Surely that is an improper request. With great respect, the Member is entitled to be heard.

Mr. Axworthy: We are waiting for him to say something reasonable.

An Hon. Member: Ask him to say something useful. She is asking him to say something.

Mr. Speaker: Let me suggest to Hon. Members who are still barracking that when they seek the floor later in the day they should expect exactly the same treatment from Members opposite, and not complain.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I regret to note that the disrespect shown Ministers speaking on this side is also shown the Speaker of the House of Commons. I would hope that that practice would not continue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Let me reply to the Member for Hamilton East who shouted a comment from her seat. She is quite correct that what is at issue here is jobs. The threat to jobs is the growing protectionist pressure in the United States. As a specific result of the summit at Quebec, we have a guarantee that the President of the United States will come to the defence of Canada against protectionist influence in that country. That means protection for jobs in this country and that is one of the reasons we believe it is important to have good relations with the President of the United States.

The second kind of evidence is to see, in these last six months since the people of Canada voted dramatically and emphatically for an improvement in relations between Canada and the United States, whether Canada's admitted friendship with the United States has in fact limited our influence elswhere. That friendship did not stop Canada from playing a leading role in bringing relief to Ethiopia, although the regime in that country is deeply disliked by the United States. It did not stop the Prime Minister from having a highly successful meeting in the Caribbean. We have demonstrated to our NATO allies that they have two strong friends in North America, not just one. We have provided our unique expertise in peace-keeping to the Contadora countries in Central America. We have been invited by all sides to help in the Sinai. We are working from within to reform the organization of UNESCO, an organization the United States has left. We are making our independent review of the appropriate policy toward South Africa. The Prime Minister has already had a most productive meeting with Mr. Gorbachev, and within weeks I will be undertaking the first visit to the Soviet Union by a Canadian Foreign Minister in twelve years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are convinced that a constructive relationship with the United States will not only strengthen our postion here at home but also in the councils of the world. Our voice, our role, and our influence will benefit because we will be more credible. Strong nations are rejected. Confident nations are listened to.

Mr. Broadbent: You are neither.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We know there has been a burgeoning of confidence in this country. It may not be shared by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and that question was judged in the election when his Party lost seats and this Government was given a dramatic majority almost unparalleled in our history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We know there has been an assertion of confidence in this country. As for Canadians who might have been worried in the past—

Mr. Broadbent: They are more worried than ever.

Mr. Axworthy: For good reason.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —that our culture was too weak to stand up to the influence of the United States, we know that that sense of vulnerability has been replaced by a new sense of Canadian confidence. We know that that can be turned to Canada's advantage, not only as it has been in our relations with the United States but also in the role we intend to play as an active influence on events internationally.

We are here as a Government elected by a self-confident Canadian electorate. We are here as a Government determined to express that self-confidence. We began that expression in the summit at Quebec. We intend to carry it on in other aspects of the international policy of Canada. I would hope there will be a greater demonstration of confidence in Canada by Members of this House. They can begin that by voting against the motion today and by voting for the success that was found in the summit between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to comment briefly on the motion before the House today.

I think we have had some interesting speeches, but first of all, I would like to consider several comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who astounded me by the way he referred to the Prime Minister's initiative in inviting the President of the United States to Quebec. He should have realized, before he rose in the House, that when a few years ago we received the heads of State of seven major Western countries, we received them in Quebec, at Montebello, and not only President Reagan, but also the President of France, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Chancellor of West Germany, the Prime Minister of Japan and the Prime Minister of Italy. What you did on the weekend is nothing compared to what we did in Montebello. As they say, it was small beer compared with what we did in the riding of the hon. lady sitting across the way from me. Why didn't she rise and tell the House: My riding was well served when we received all those international figures in the riding of Argenteuil-Papineau, and Quebec City on the weekend was just small beer.

Now I think this is all part of the image, and I think there is cause for concern because the present Government is basically a public relations Government. It is a lot of show, but when you dig deeper there is no substance. Nothing at all. Obviously, everybody falls for the old public relations trick. They say we are great friends with the Americans. Of course we are friends with the Americans, and we will remain so. However, there is a price that one does not pay in politics. There is a price, a very important one. Here in Canada, in the past five years, we have succeeded in keeping this country together, despite a great many problems. We had the referendum. We patriated the Constitution. We gave Canada a charter of rights and freedoms, and what is happening now? Canada's own sovereignty is being jeopardized by this irresponsible desire to be close to the Americans. As my leader said a few minutes ago: What, since September, have we received from the American Government in return? Of course President Reagan is happy to be here. If I were the President I would be very happy too, because since September he has had everything he wanted—

An Hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Chrétien: —in every area. And what did we get in return? Nothing! The Prime Minister is being praised for his qualities as an able negotiator. Since when does a negotiator show his cards to his opponents, and say: Are we going to be friends? You are a nice man, Mr. Reagan. We helped you, so you are going to help us.

[English]

Look at the reality, Mr. Speaker. They speak about free trade, that great virtue of free trade. On January 28 this year the President of the United States, the same Mr. Reagan, put a ban on products made in Canada. They were not to go to the United States because of a problem in the United States with sugar production. They were complaining about the fact that Canadians had taken advantage of the American market strictly on a commercial basis. What did they do? They placed a restriction on our goods. No more products from Canada. I can go on about steel and any other sector.

Americans talk free trade. My Leader was absolutely right in what he said. I was Minister of Trade, Secretary of State for External Affairs and Minister of Finance. One deals with the White House. The Americans are always very nice to us. It is in their interests to be very nice to us. They all do that, but I will give you an example of how the Americans act, Mr. Speaker.

I remember when we had a problem in trade. Canada had a minimum deficit of $2 billion that year in tourist trade. I went to the United States. I spoke to the Secretary of Commerce, Juanita Kreps, and I spoke also with Vice-President Mondale. I told them that when Americans come to Canada for a convention they cannot deduct from their expenses their expenditures in Canada, but Canadians who go to a convention in the United States can. I asked them why they couldn't do what we did. The Americans all agreed with me that what they did made no sense, but there was nothing they could do in the White House because two Senators representing a border state said they would not go along with a change unless Canadians did something for the Americans in the State of New York. At the time there was a television problem at the border, a completely unrelated matter.

Goodwill was there. Vice-President Mondale said the situation made no sense. Everybody agreed. But it took years to resolve it. That was at a time when we had a deficit of $2 billion every year in tourist trade.

Mr. McDermid: When you get along there is no problem.

Mr. Chrétien: I am just explaining the difficulty. It is easy to have a nice little talk with the President of the United States, but because of the division of power in that state the White House can pass the buck to the Representatives or the Senators and wash their hands of it. Here in Canada the Prime Minister, especially having 211 Members, can do anything he wants. He can even abolish the Senate if he wants. We have to be realistic and face the reality of what is going on.

I would like to go back to the problem of defence and the agreement of last weekend. I feel strongly about this. The Leader of the New Democratic Party named all the statesmen. When officials are questioned and when they react on the spur of the moment, they tell us, that they might deploy something here. We are for a change in the system. We are not opposed to it. We have said that many times. The DEW line has to be replaced. We need a new system in the north that will plug the hole. We do not disagree with that. We negotiated and we agreed with that. The question we are asking is whether it is linked to star wars. Caspar Weinberger said that twice. Paul Nitze and other officials said the same thing. It was always on the spur of the moment, and that was logical.

The Minister rose a moment ago and said that it was just a warning system. I agree. But when will he explain that a large portion of the committed money will be spent to build airstrips in the north? Why airstrips? A radar system does not need huge airstrips. Why will they build a series of major airstrips there? We would like to know. Is it just to receive Twin Otters? I have been in the north many times in my life and they cannot even land Twin Otters on the tundra.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is for Erik's plane.

Mr. Chrétien: Erik can land any plane on any lake, so he does not need big airstrips. No one is giving us an explanation.

We want to know the views of the Americans over the long term. It is very easy for us to say that we will have the right to say no, but what will our position be after we have let them spend money to build airstrips and to instal infrastructure. Can we go to them later on and say: "Don't use it, we don't like it"?

At the beginning of my political career I remember very well what happened with the Bomarc. There was an agreement. It was signed in good will with the Americans, and so on. When Mr. Diefenbaker realized that there was to be a deployment of the Bomarc in Canada, he said that it was not what he had intended and he backed away. At that time we said that if we had signed the agreement we had to respect our word. I remember I had a problem about voting on it myself. I talked with Mr. Harkness, a great gentleman, and asked him whether we were committed. He said: "Mr. Chrétien, a Tory I am". There was no greater Conservative in spirit or at heart than he. He said that Canada had given its word and that he had to accept it. That was why he resigned from Cabinet. When that agreement was signed in 1957, no one knew exactly what would be the consequences. However, it took Canada 22 years to get out of it. It was only last summer that the last Bomarc left Canada. Now we have no nuclear warheads on our soil.

What are we doing now? In the north we are letting them build large airstrips. Mr. Weinberger said over the weekend that the missiles, the defense weapons, would be located where it was best. He said that it might be in the United States, on ships, or in Canada. Of course it will be in Canada, if they need it.

What will be the position of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) or the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark)? Will they say that they have changed their minds, that they let them build airstrips but they do not like it? They will have to condition themselves. They have rightly said "if it is in the best interests of Canada". When they use the word "if", they are telling the Americans that they are open to their move. The question is not "if". Are we or are we not in favour of the deployment of nuclear arms on Canadian soil? There should be no compromise on that. If the decision is yes, they should say yes. They should tell the truth rather than create conditions where we do not know what will happen. We want the truth.

I know why they said "if". It is because in their own minds there could be some situation where they will have no choice. This is why Canadians are disturbed at the moment. We want candour in that regard. If they can make an argument that because of our commitment to NATO and NORAD we have to make Canadian soil available for defence, that strategically Canada has to become the battleground of a nuclear war, let us accept it. Some other countries have accepted deployment on their soil. Germany, despite the controversy, has accepted that. Great Britain has accepted that. In Canada we have been unanimous in the House; even today the Government told us that it was opposed to the deployment of any nuclear arms on Canadian soil. When it makes such a statement, it has to take the step to ensure that it never happens. This is why we are critical of the Government, because of its ambivalence in that regard. It is not to score political points; we want to know the truth.

Some comments were made again this morning which indicated that facts have not been given to Canadians on this very important issue. We learned not long ago from a leaked document in the United States that some of its strategy included the use of some of the bases in Canada, that some of our bases, like the one at Cold Lake, could be used for that purpose. If there is an emergency and in their strategy they decide to use Canadian soil, we will not be in a very good position to tell the Americans not to use these bases or these airstrips into which they have put billions of dollars to develop them in the north. These are the questions we want answered. It is the future of our country.

Why are we opposed to SDI? It is not new. When President Reagan announced the program some two years ago, there was discussion in the House about this new development and we unanimously condemned SDI. Why?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was led by Mr. Trudeau.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Trudeau, and it was seconded by the Leader of the Opposition and so on. Everyone commended Mr. Trudeau at that time for his peace mission. Why are we opposed to SDI? It is because we believe it is a new escalation. The Russians will not let the Americans do it and not match it. When we were in government we had to make some very difficult decisions. We permitted testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. We were in favour of the two-track policy. We had an impression, or even a conviction, that the U.S.S.R. had gone ahead, so we decided to conduct more tests in an attempt to arrive at an equilibrium between the quality of armaments on both sides.

What is the other side of the two-track policy? After we have virtually reached that plateau, suffocation is supposed to come, reduction is supposed to come. SDI is against this idea. It is a new step forward. It has always been like that since 1941. It has always been a research program. When the Manhattan project was developed during the war, it was a research program.

At this time I am reading a book on Truman. Days before he dropped the bomb on Hiroshima, there was a debate in the U.S. administration as to whether it should explode the bomb in the Bay of Tokyo and not hurt any people. It would have told the Japanese that the Americans had the bomb but they would not have had to use it. At the beginning of the program most scientists who wanted to develop the bomb hoped that it would never have to be used. But it was used. I do not know what they are up to with SDI. I am not a scientist. There is much controversy about it around the world at this time, not only in Canada. The external affairs minister for England talked about that. Everyone talks about it. There has been a lot of pressure. Everyone comes onside eventually, but everyone has a lot of apprehension about it. We have apprehension. What worries me is what happens after a mistake is made.

Again in Quebec City yesterday, Defence Secretary Weinberger said: "Of course, it might be in Canada". We could have attributed that to an error, to a slip of the tongue a few months ago, but he said it again yesterday. Two weeks ago a press reporter asked Paul Nitze about it and he said "Of course". After that they clarified it. It is an indication that in the minds of the Americans they have no doubt. Of course, they say they will respect the jurisdiction of Canada. Of course, Margaret Thatcher could have said no to deployment. Of course, the Germans could have said no to deployment eventually. Some are still trying. However, when we create the climate or the environment, we are trapped and the pressure is on us.

That is exactly why we are asking the question. If it is for the good of Canada and if it is rationally explained to us, we might say yes; but as a Canadian I believe we are making a fundamental mistake in playing our cards like that. It is one thing to say to the Americans that they are welcome in Canada, that Canada is for sale and so on, but look what happened with the flow of capital in September. It has not flowed south-north, it has flowed north-south.

Look at the market. In one week there was such an outflow of capital from Canada, for many reasons, that the Government had to borrow $2.5 billion. Why? It was because American money was leaving Canada and we had to buy Canadian dollars. We had no choice. That is the reality.

As my Leader said a few minutes ago, the Americans are our best friends. What do we expect from our best friends? We expect respect and truth. I do not need anybody to pat my back. I hope my friends will come to me and tell me the truth. Those are real friends.

Very often we can be useful to the Americans, if we are not seen as the fifty-first state. We can be useful because we are a different country. We have access to some countries to which they do not.

I remember the last day I was Minister of Finance in 1979. I signed an agreement with Algeria. I asked why they wanted to do business with Canada. They told me it was because Canada is the only country in the world which could give them North American technology in French. Some 40 countries around the world have French as their first or second language. They look to Canada. Any Member of this House who travels abroad knows that they do not receive the same reaction when they show their Canadian passport. That is because we have a credibility of our own. The Americans are different. Some people look at them as having imperialist ideas. I do not look at them in that way. I do not say that they have. However, some people do believe that.

Canadians do not have any ambition like that. Canadians can go anywhere in the world with a different approach. Sometimes that can be very useful. We have not done everything that has been accomplished since 1867 to end up in 1985 wondering whether one day we will still be a country. You cannot rest all your faith for the future on Washington. If all decisions are made there, one day the urge will be for Canada to be there. On that day, it will be over: we will become the fifty-first state of America. That has been the history of this world.

Integration should come slowly. What would be the price to pay for that? With my personal cultural background, I believe that would be the end of the French fact, like it or not. There are more people who speak Spanish or Italian in the United States than there are people who speak French in Canada. When we want to have our rights protected there—

An Hon. Member: Speak in French!

Mr. Chrétien: I speak in French a lot more often than anyone of you people.

And there lies the danger. We have not been fighting for 111 years to build a country just to end up tomorrow morning . . . because we might just have economic benefits if we were very close to the United States. Nonsense! Right now, 83 per cent of our trade is with the United States, but we have always made sure that our own sectors were protected. When we negotiated the auto pact, we made sure there would be something in it for Canada—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And it was reciprocal!

Mr. Chrétien: —along with—it was reciprocal—control mechanisms. You can do all the business you want with the United States but, as the Leader of the Liberal Party said a few minutes ago, the interests of Congress often differ from those of the White House. Oftentimes the United States have protective measures which the central Government cannot—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his speech until one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: Continue in French!

Mr. Chrétien: Interests do differ. Governing the United States is not an easy task. I have had dealings with American Governments for 17 years and I witnessed the frustration of their administration. Administering Canada may be difficult, but nowhere near as much as administering the United States. More often than not protective measures are taken by American States, and when that happens there is practically nothing the central American Government can do about it. That is the kind of experience we have every day. For instance, the enforcement of American extraterritorial legislation which we are regularly faced with and about which the administration does not do anything.

Another recent problem which I want to raise in the House today—good relations are fine, but Canadian interests ought to come first—concerns a Canadian bank that was forced to break another country's law to meet the requirements of the American administration.

[English]

A few months ago there was a situation in the United States where the Bank of Nova Scotia was forced to break the laws of a third country in order to avoid United States personnel being put in jail. What kind of friendship is that? What about our own integrity?

We had the same problems in the uranium cartel. The Americans were asking the Canadian company to do certain things. Foreign companies with the head office in the United States and a branch in Canada could do things which the law of Canada did not permit them to do. There are a lot of these situations. When you go there and say "I am a nice guy, I will sing along with you", you must remember that the Americans are tough bargainers. They are not kids. They have seen people before and they know the difference between a smile and strength. They always respect strength.

It is easy to have parties and it is sometimes easier to make people laugh, but when you talk about a country like Canada which has had great success with the Americans, you have to be sure that they know that we are neighbours and not assimilated within the system. It is very frustrating when you talk to those who take Canada for granted all the time. They do not like us to ask any questions. They are offended if we do ask questions.

There is not one week when I do not pick up a magazine which shows politicians blaming the administration for this and for that. There is not one day of the week when there is not a split in the White House on policy. Therefore, should we as Canadians not be able to say what we think? What kind of maturity is that? I am sure that the President of the United States would rather have a good, frank, open discussion on an issue than to have a pat on the back. I am sure that he would listen to a good argument. Do not kid yourselves, the Americans love Canada, but they will invest in Canada only if they can make a buck. If they are going to lose money, they will not come here.

What we are very disappointed about is the lack of candour and the naivety of the Government. If the Government wants to make a deal with the Americans on SDI and wants to make Canada available for nuclear armaments, other countries have done it. Germany, England, Italy and other European countries have done it. There is no shame to it. However, do not try to have it both ways. If you do not want it, say so. Do not create a situation where they will have the absolute right eventually to say it was not written down, but we created the condition whereby they could come if they wanted.

If you do not want to have somebody at your home on a Saturday night because you want a quiet evening, do not invite a bunch of your friends to come for a beer! Do not invite them if you do not want them. I have had that experience a few times.

It is a serious problem. The people of Canada want candour. They want the truth. If we act as a senior partner with the Americans and we treat them as an equal, even if we are smaller in terms of population, they will respect us. However, if we just play to their cue, if we just go and sing for them, they will be nice to us, but eventually we will lose our independence. Canadians from sea to sea have put too much into building a society that is different, one that is our own, that we shall never be assimilated into the United States. We are too proud to be Canadian.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE—SIGNING OF PROTOCOL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the mandate given to Messrs. Davis and Lewis on acid rain includes "identifying efforts to improve the U.S. and Canadian environments". It is hard to say which efforts need to be identified after all these years. In any case, it would be a serious mistake for the Government of Canada at this point to hope that, one year from now, Messrs. Davis and Lewis will deliver on their mandate without help. Actually they need a lot of help. Their efforts have a chance to succeed if the United States will sign, next July in Helsinki, the ECE protocol on acid rain which contains a provision to cut smoke-stack emissions by 30 per cent by 1993.

From now on, Canada should launch an initiative aimed at those friendly nations ready to sign the protocol urging them to press the United States to become one of the signatory parties. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has failed to convince President Reagan on the acid rain question. The next step is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to help Canada generate international support for our cause. If the Americans can be convinced to go to Helsinki to sign the protocol, then the foundation will have been laid for a Canada-United States agreement.

Between now and July, the focus on acid rain must shift to the international scene. Twenty nations, including Canada, have already agreed to sign—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAYOFFS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made yesterday of a further 474 layoffs by the CNR, on top of the 225 announced earlier this month, makes a mockery of the promise of Conservative Members that their election would result in jobs, jobs, and more jobs. It also exposes once again the lies the CNR told its employees about all the work that would be waiting for them if only the Crow rate were changed.

I understood that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) had undertaken to speak to the President of the CNR, and VIA, about the earlier layoffs, on the basis that cancelling coach work in anticipation of new equipment might prove to be shortsighted, particularly in light of the rail passenger services that are to be restored this year. That layoff has now been compounded by another equally short-sighted move on the part of the CNR.

When is the Government going to take charge of the CNR and order it to stop putting its short-term accounting needs ahead of the economic future of the country? The rolling stock is there to be repaired. If the Government has any confidence in its own economic policies, then why not prepare for that future, build up a fleet of rolling stock, keep people working, and families anxiety-free, and avoid the pathetic absurdity of having even more Canadians out of work when, as is so clearly the case with car men and other railroaders, there is work that could be usefully continued?

TERRORISM

SEIZURE OF TURKISH EMBASSY—TRIBUTE TO OTTAWA POLICE FORCE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, many of us celebrated the Feast of St. Patrick on Sunday, and some celebrated in splendid colour in Quebec city. As we refreshed our Irish heritage, we acknowledged the credit that St. Patrick deserves for his saintly efforts to bring the peaceful word to Ireland. His risks were high and sometimes violent, but he did his job and met his challenge.

Last week in Ottawa an unacceptable terrorist attack took place at the Turkish Embassy that resulted in the tragic loss of life of a Pinkerton's security man, Mr. Claude Brunelle, and caused serious injuries to the Turkish ambassador, Ambassador Kirca. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) spoke of the co-operative actions between the RCMP and the Ottawa Police Force. That is true, but I would like to underline the fact that the Ottawa Police took most of the risks in response to this unpredictable act of violence.

Protection of embassies in Ottawa is a federal responsibility, but any criminal offence that takes place within city property, whether it be public or private, federal or international in nature, in the Province of Ontario has traditionally become the immediate responsibility of the local police force. Within three minutes of being called, the Ottawa Police were on the scene. Constable Michel Prudhomme saw Ambassador Kirca lying on the ground and risked his own life by jumping a fence to pull the ambassador to safety.

A four-hour standoff ensued, under the command of Staff Inspector Wilfred Longchamps of the Ottawa Police. The terrorists were then arrested by his SWAT team, with no further loss of life. I am proud of the quick, efficient, brave and professional actions of the City of Ottawa Police. They did their job and also met their challenge. Let us give credit where credit is due.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLITICAL PARTIES

LEVEL OF SUPPORT FOR NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY DEFENCE POLICY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, just six and a half months ago the people of Canada were engaged in a general election. The Progressive Conservative Party made its position very clear regarding defence. Conservative Members made it clear that we intended to spend more on NATO and our defence forces, and to increase the size of our standing army. In the same election campaign the New Democratic Party had a peace platform which was in great contrast to ours.

As a result of that election campaign, the Conservative Party gained an unprecedented number of seats in the House of Commons and the largest popular vote as well as the largest percentage of the popular vote. In contrast, the New Democratic Party lost eight seats in the West, and lowered its popular vote and the percentage of that popular vote campaigning on its defence platform.

Now that members of the NDP are in opposition, they would almost have the people of Canada believe that the Government of Canada is violating the popular will, when that will was made clear just seven months ago. It would appear that members of the New Democratic Party agree with democratic institutions and democratic decisions only if they conform to their position.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

PREMIER'S TRIAL—ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the internal investigation being undertaken by the RCMP into the Hatfield affair, Hon. Members should know what the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay), as an opposition Member, had to say about the Liberal access to information Bill. On January 29, 1981, the present Minister said:

> There must be a genuine willingness in this place to give information on a reasonable basis with reasonable time limits to Hon. Members.

In particular, the Solicitor General complained about the delays he was encountering with respect to getting answers to questions on the Order Paper. He said that the delays were not in keeping with the spirit of the access to information legislation. At that time the Hon. Member said to the Government:

> If you're going to talk the talk, you have got to walk the walk.

Canadians want to see the Solicitor General walk the walk. They want to see how committed he is to the noble principle of access to information.

Yesterday I placed over 200 specific questions relating to the Hatfield case on the Order Paper in an attempt to get some answers. The Canadian people, and particularly the people of New Brunswick, want some meaningful answers to questions in regard to this case, and they want them soon. They do not want secret meetings and secret internal reports, where the administration of their system of justice is concerned. I call on the Solicitor General to make public immediately the RCMP's internal investigation into the Hatfield affair.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

QUEBEC SUMMIT MEETING—ECONOMIC RESULTS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, during the past few days, this country has witnessed important events on the international scene.

The summit meeting held in Quebec City was conducted very successfully by the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I want to congratulate the Prime Minister who was a source of national pride and who deserved the admiration of Canadians the world over, whatever certain Members of the Opposition may think. I felt very proud to be a Canadian and to belong to a country that was making a long-awaited return to the international scene. The cordiality and spirit of co-operation that pervaded the meeting between the two heads of State, Mr. Reagan and the Right Hon. Prime Minister, will be a decisive factor in determining the future of our two countries.

Coming from a riding where there is a very strong military presence, I was particularly pleased with the agreement ratified by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada on upgrading the North Warning System. Over the years, our DEW line and Canadian Pine Tree line radar systems have become vulnerable. It is a good thing that Canada will be one of the best protected nations in the world in case of a conflict. Not only was this upgrading strategically desirable, but it will also inject more than $7 billion into our economy, with 88 per cent coming from the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I am justly proud to be a Quebecer and a Canadian, and to represent part of our Canadian community in this House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—SUCCESS OF QUEBEC SUMMIT MEETING

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, finally Canada has had a summit with the U.S.A. that was positive. The two leaders, of Irish stock, reached seven important agreements, one of which tackles all aspects of acid rain.

The Liberals are red faced; their 16 years in office saw acid rain pollution get worse and worse. No wonder they are green with envy. The NDP, of course, continue to specialize in bashing the Americans. Both the Liberals and the NDP are so negative that they refuse to see anything good in anything done by the Tories or the Americans.

The Liberals and the NDP do not speak for Canada. The Progressive Conservative Party was given that responsibility after the people heard and analysed its policies on acid rain, defence, and trade. They rejected both opposition Parties.

At the summit the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reflected the thinking of the vast majority of Canadians when he stood firmly and four square for the sovereignty of our nation, for international security, and for the upgrading of our northern radar system. All of these things strengthen our sovereignty. Canadians are a proud people, and we refuse to kowtow to any nation.

● (1410)

Canadians are proud of you, Mr. Prime Minister, and of your Ministers, and as for the harping of the Liberals and the New Democratic Party, forget it. The best way to describe that is in the words of the poet: "All is yellow to the jaundiced eye".

S.O. 21

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS ON REGIONAL PROGRAMMING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the cut-backs in CBC funding represent not only broken promises but disrupted services and lost opportunities. Regional programming has been especially badly hit, some regions more so than others. Newfoundland and Labrador have suffered some of the worst blows with the closing of the Gander station and the reduction of half of the sation in Labrador City.

The cuts in Gander have since been rescinded, showing that the CBC is able to respond with good sense to public outcry. It is time now for the cuts in Labrador City to be rescinded. Because of those cuts there will be no local TV programming whatsoever for a substantial area with no commercial stations.

Isolated parts of Canada vitally depend on the CBC. These are not the areas which should be cut. We have a national public broadcasting system. Its duty is to serve the whole of the country, including small and distant communities. It is a fact of life in Canada that services to such areas are costly for the size of the population served, but that is our country. Patriotic duty requires us all, urban and rural, south and north, to support necessary services for all parts of Canada.

It is time for this Parliament to send a message to Monsieur Juneau and the CBC to restore regional programming, rescind the cut-backs in Labrador City, and get on with the job of uniting Canadians.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

RENOVATION OF MINISTERIAL OFFICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, since the election of September 4 the Government has embarked upon a program of cost cutting. It has cut assistance to the unemployed, terminated grants under the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, increased fees for farmers, and threatened to cut universality. You name it, it cuts it.

In the same period of restraint, some six months, Cabinet Ministers have embellished their Taj Mahal offices on Parliament Hill. Here are some examples of the cost of these office renovations. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) has spent approximately $10,000 renovating his office. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who is responsible for universality, spent $22,327. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) spent $7,887. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) spent $13,496. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) spent $7,950. And the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton), whoever that is, spent $17,712. A total of $130,000 has been spent in this manner. An amount of $173,000 was spent to purchase new cars, and $30,000 was spent on car rentals. That is a thrifty Government for you, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

QUEBEC SUMMIT MEETING—RESULTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the brilliant success of the Quebec City summit.

By placing our relationship with the United States in an atmosphere of trust and friendship, the Prime Minister of Canada has given a new impetus to Canada-U.S. relations.

This decision clearly demonstrates and consolidates the politics of reconciliation initiated by our Government within our Confederation and in our relations with our neighbour to the South. By eliminating irritants between our two governments, we will increase investor confidence and promote trade between our two countries.

This meeting gave the Prime Minister an opportunity to show his guests the unique character of Quebec and the restored unity of Canada.

The 24-hour summit has accelerated the taking of steps that may lead to major decisions and definite results. The meeting was a productive one in terms of expanding trade and settling the acid rain issue. With respect to pollution and the threat it represents to the environment, the President to the United States has acknowledged the extent of the problem and mentioned the need to protect our common environment.

Where trade is concerned, there is a commitment to promote the cause of more open and multilateral trade. Initiating a freer basis for trade in goods and services cannot be other than beneficial to the Canadian economy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—ACID RAIN ISSUE—QUEBEC SUMMIT MEETING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Official Opposition): Mr. Speaker, you were in the chair this morning when I spoke in the House setting forth our views of the meeting of the Prime Minister with the President of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am glad we got that out of the way early, Mr. Speaker. I regret very much that the Prime Minister was not in the House this morning for the debate. I might remind him that he has not spoken on an issue since Leaders' Day at the opening of this Parliament. However, I want to congratulate the Prime Minister for setting a great tone in Quebec City. But what did we really achieve? Why was the Prime Minister unable to persuade the President of the United States to agree to mutually enforceable standards and regulations, and a significant commitment of money, toward cleaning up a mutual problem, namely, the poisoning of our air by the acid rain across our borders? Why was the Prime Minister forced to settle for a face-saving one-year moratorium instead of some immediate action?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I missed my right hon. friend's speech this morning. He said I have not spoken very often in the House. I try to speak on serious motions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The hon. gentleman asks about acid rain—

Mr. Broadbent: And you don't take acid rain seriously.

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: —acid rain impasse broken.

[English]

"Reagan and Mulroney break three-year impasse".

[Translation]

The summit! The first agreement on acid rain.

[English]

I think that is the kind of—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: —progress which had been lacking. There was a complete deadlock for three years—

Mr. Broadbent: Now it's just dead.

Mr. Mulroney: —and we managed to break the deadlock, to appoint remarkable people as our envoys and do something which the poor and rather pathetic Liberals failed to do for years, namely, to begin the process of rebuilding our economies and our environments together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I don't think you have fallen for that attempt to rewrite history.

APPOINTMENT OF ENVOYS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Official Opposition): I suppose I should admire William Grenville Davis for volunteering, as a dollar-a-year man—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's all he could get, too.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Maybe he is overpaid at that. I don't know what he is supposed to do. But could the Prime Minister tell us why we need more research and more study? If the Prime Minister has already convinced the President of the United States of the gravity of the situation, then why are we not getting action? Why just two envoys, with a one-year moratorium?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition would feel it advantageous to disparage Bill Davis, one of the most outstanding public figures in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Having done such damage to his own Party, the Leader of the Opposition is now ensuring, by comments like that, that the New Democratic Party will form the Official Opposition in Ontario after the next provincial election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Can you guarantee that?

Mr. Mulroney: If my right hon. friend cares to read the leading editorial in Le Droit this morning:

[Translation]

No one in his right mind would have thought that the Quebec City summit would result in joint Canada-U.S. action on the pollution sources responsible for acid rain ... The appointment of the ex-Premier of Ontario, Bill Davis and the ex-Secretary of Transportation of the United States, Mr. Drew Lewis, is exactly what we hope to see.

[English]

I think there was an acknowledgement by all reasonably objective people, that we inherited a very serious, complex matter. We initiated—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You still have it.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, indeed, because only the tooth fairy and the New Democratic Party would believe it goes away by invective.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: No, just a little bit of backbone.

● (1420)

Mr. Mulroney: Oh, I knew I was going to miss you while I was away for a week, but I did not know how much.

We introduced a national program designed to clean up our acid rain. I think it is widely regarded as an outstanding initiative, and we are going to try to proceed that way with our neighbours to clean up our common environment.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister almost broke up before he finished that particular sentence. If the game is to read newspaper headlines, I have one from The Globe and Mail this morning by Ronald Anderson—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —which says "Mulroney wasting mandate in vacillation and indecision".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I recognize that the Prime Minister, out of friendship for the President, and in admiration of Mr. Reagan's presidential style, has now adopted his own imperial coat of arms which he carries around with him and props up for every speech. But the Prime Minister is not yet the President or Chief of State. The Queen has her own representative in this country, and I want to ask the Prime Minister why he was so discourteous as to fail to invite the Governor Genral, who represents the Head of State of this country, to meet the American Head of State, being the President, particularly when the Prime Minister entertained the President in the Governor General's own residence in the Quebec Citadel? What is the reason for this particular lack of civility on the part of the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): If the Leader of the Opposition had trouble with the name Anderson, imagine what he would do with Hnatyshyn.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A real Canadian name.

Mr. Mulroney: I carry around a podium; he should carry a dictionary.

With regard to the insignia, it is one and the same Canadian insignia that Mr. Trudeau used, so there ought not to be any great concern about it.

I want to tell my right hon. friend, because I know he is aware of the esteem, indeed affection, that I have, as do we all, for Her Excellency the Governor General, that I can say that she was consulted throughout by me, and that she very kindly offered the use of the Citadel for a signing ceremony during what was a working visit, not a state visit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It was a working visit and her staff, headed by Mr. Butler, were there. As I have had the occasion to do many times, I have conveyed my thanks to Her Excellency for this gracious gesture.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, talking about newspapers, I think that I was not too proud—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: I am not using it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let me take this moment to say that I think the newspaper clippings are about even and we might leave it at that, please.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think we need to start newspaper wars and escalate them until we get to a big one. May I indicate to all Members, please, that they should know that the production of documents in the House by way of display is not permitted. May I just simply indicate that?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: With great respect to those who choose to barrack again, I did not cut off the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he did the same thing. I am trying to say that I would appreciate, please, no more of it from either side.

Mr. Chrétien: You know I will not use it. I just wanted to say that, after a summit like that, I think the cartoon in La Presse today indicated exactly what is happening in Canada. There is the American flag, and they have added a little Maple Leaf to it. With the kind of servility we have seen over the weekend, that is exactly what we can expect from people about the future of Canada.

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM—CONSTRUCTION OF AIRSTRIPS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, talking about serious problems, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. We all agree that we need to upgrade the DEW Line in Canada and we need the North Warning System. We all agree that we need some surveillance. But can he explain to Canadians why there will be a series of airstrips built everywhere in the North, while under the DEW Line system we did not need these airstrips? Is it for skidoo races? Is it for fishing trips?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yukon Erik's plane.

Mr. Chrétien: Or is it to welcome some offensive or defensive armaments from the Americans, to be used in Canada's North in the future?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am—

Some Hon. Members: Leader.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —pleased to be able to correct the misimpression of the Hon. Member who spoke earlier in the House. Those airstrips are there to service radar aircraft which are larger than the Twin Otters that the Hon. Member was suggesting today we should be using to defend our North.

CONSTRUCTION OF AIRPORTS IN NORTH—PURPOSE OF UTILIZATION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Can the Minister convince the House or convince Canadians that if he lets the U.S. spend hundreds of millions or even billions of dollars to build much bigger airports in the North, these will never be used for defence purposes but only by planes from time to time in order to service these radar stations, something we have not had to do in the past 25 years, since the DEW Line has worked perfectly well without building airports at each Northern station?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to point out that an agreement exists between Canada and the U.S., giving the Canadian Government the right to refuse the entry of nuclear weapons here in Canada. We in the Progressive Conservative Government want to exercise that right in case of a state of emergency. The former Minister has indicated that such a situation was not necessary in the past, and I agree, but as we have so often said, and I believe he will acknowledge this, there have been changes in the Soviet threat. The system that was set up for our defence is no longer adequate. We must have a system that is adequate in the light of present threats.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—CANADA-UNITED STATES ACCORD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the accord that he has signed with President Reagan, and it concerns acid rain as well. Before the meeting in Quebec city took place, the Government of Canada indicated that its position was a call for action. The American position, before the conference, was that they wanted further studies. I understand that in negotiations there has to be some give and take, but my question is simply this. Why did the Canadian Government do all the giving and the American Government do all the taking? Why did the Canadian Government end up accepting the American position completely?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The answer, as my hon. friend knows, is that the suggestions in his question are false. I assume that he placed them in that context inadvertently because he will recognize, as a senior Member of the House and someone concerned with this issue, that in point of fact it was on hold, unfortunately, for the last three years. Nothing had been done at all.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Thanks to the United States.

Mr. Mulroney: Absolutely nothing. I think, if my hon. friend agrees that it is a serious issue, he should listen to the answer.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I was on that committee for four years.

Mr. Mulroney: Oh, he is getting the answer he wants from his seatmate, so thank you very much.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I knew you didn't have it.

• (1430)

CONTENT OF ACCORD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, who does most of his research by reading newspaper clippings, just might have read the report signed by all members of the committee, including Conservative members, which said that the problem with acid rain in North America lies on the American side of the border. That was said by all Members representing all Parties.

During the past 24 hours some 77,000 tonnes of acid rain have fallen somewhere in North America. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House of Commons why he signed an accord with the United States that does not commit them to spending one more penny, to passing one more regulation, or to changing the situation one bit? As a result of this accord, a year from now we could end up with the same amount of acid rain coming from the other side of the border as comes today. Why did he so completely sell out Canadian interests on this issue?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that we could end up in an unacceptable situation a year from now. He may be right, because when you conclude agreements in the real world you do so on the basis of good faith and a mutual commitment. We have an acknowledgement, for the first time, of the commonality of the problem, which never existed before. We have an acknowledgement from the President of the United States that a joint program is required to resolve it. We have the appointment of two very high-ranking—which is widely acknowledged—emissaries to present programs and to help both Governments develop the consensus that is required, certainly on the American side. I think that in Canada we are generally agreed on the manner in which we would like to proceed.

If my hon. friend is fair at all, he will acknowledge that there was serious and substantial progress made on a highly complex and volatile issue. While he may be right if there was bad faith, we may turn out to be right in having taken these steps which will ensure clean air for Canadians and Americans as well. That is the beginning of the process.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, one thing was very clear. Right after the ink was dry on the negotiation papers in Quebec city a senior official, or spokesperson for the State Department, said that President Reagan had not changed his position on acid rain one bit since arriving in Canada.

The Government put up $150 million to take action on this joint problem with the United States, for which we on this side complimented the Government. What did the Prime Minister ask of the American Government? We know that he ended up with nothing, but what did he open with? Did he ask the Americans to put up a comparable amount, such as $1.5 billion? Did he ask them to put up $600 million, or $200 million? What kind of action did the Prime Minister demand of the United States to protect our interests in acid rain, half of which problem is due to the United States of America?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree that half of the problem is due to the United States of America. We, as a national Canadian Government, sensitive to environmental questions, have responded for our half with the most massive undertaking ever announced by a national Government in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What did you ask for?

Mr. Mulroney: We then went further and initiated the beginnings of a process that I believe, with hard bargaining, will result in substantial—

An Hon. Member: We don't have forever.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes indeed, it is a process that is going to take a little while. As the editorialist in Le Droit said, only if you believe in Santa Clause would you believe it would be otherwise. We don't believe in Santa Claus. We know that it is tough sledding. We know it is a serious problem, but we are ready to make that commitment and to make this project work on behalf of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—RESEARCH PROGRAM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the past the Prime Minister and many of his colleagues have said that there will, in no way whatsoever, ever be an involvement by this country in the star wars or SDI program. In the joint communiqué from the summit meeting in Quebec there was an announcement that we would now be engaged in new joint defence programs. The President of the United Sates also put forward, in his luncheon address, an invitation for Canada to become involved in the development of the new technology.

Does this indicate that Canada is negotiating with the United States for an involvement in the $25 billion R and D program that is now under way in the United States? Will he give us assurances in the House that no Canadian firm, or subsidiary of any foreign firm operating in Canada, will in any way, shape, or form be involved in anything to do with research, development, or manufacture of star wars technology?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been no such request by the United States, no such invitation, and no such negotiation. For some time, including during the time when the Hon. Member was a Minister of the Crown, Canada has been involved in space research with the United States. Most Canadians were very proud of the Canadarm project. Most Canadians are very proud of Marc Garneau. Most Canadians would be alarmed by the suggestion of the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry that we should turn our back on any involvement with any kind of peaceful space investigation. I give the assurance to the Hon. Member that Canada will continue to respect and to be bound by, our commitment to the ABM treaty.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the Governor General was not invited to the Quebec meeting, but I thought surely the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be there. If he was there, he would know that in the luncheon address of the President of the United States he clearly put forward an invitation to this country to begin sharing in the technology related to the star wars development. Furthermore, the communiqué enunciates that we will now be involved in negotiations in the sharing of it.

I did not ask him about Marc Garneau or the space station. I asked him whether it is the clear policy of the Government that we will not be involved in any way, shape, or form in the research and development work or activity related to the star wars technology. Can we have that assurance from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, rather than the tippy-toe dancing that he has been doing for the last few months?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question.

Mr. Axworthy: No, you haven't.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I presume that, if the Hon. Member has any interest other than mischief, he would want to know that Canada intends to honour our obligations under the ABM treaty. Not only do we intend to honour them, but we now have a document signed by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada which reaffirms the intention of both Canada and the United States to respect the ABM treaty in so far as SDI is concerned.

Mr. Axworthy: Are we going to do R and D though?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and arises out of the so-called Shamrock Summit. The Prime Minister will recall some of the accolades that he received for his rendition of "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Given the inaction on the acid rain front, next time they meet we will all be able to join with him in a rendition of "Raindrops Keep Falling On My Head".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Given that the Canadian position is to act on acid rain and the American position is to study acid rain, and given that he came out of the meeting agreeing to study acid rain rather than to act on it, how can he maintain, with any kind of credibility, that he did not cave in to the American position on acid rain?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I had not planned to sing today, but I would respond to an ovation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Sing your answer.

Ms. Mitchell: You're very cute, Brian.

Mr. Axworthy: Where's your tin cup, Brian?

Mr. Mulroney: I think many objective commentators—

An Hon. Member: It's serious.

Mr. Mulroney: I know it is a serious question. I can tell, because the Hon. Member has his vest on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: When I see a socialist with a three piece suit, I know it is important.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I think objective reporters and commentators everywhere have recognized and pointed out two matters. First, Canada has made a remarkable effort to clean up its own act. It is long overdue, and we recognize that. We have brought together, with the provinces and the private sector, a massive plan to clean up our own problems in these areas. I think that objective observers also recognize that we have set in place a framework in which this can be done on a continental basis as well.

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN ENVOY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, why on earth would the Prime Minister think it is significant to appoint the former Premier of Ontario, Mr. William Davis, as Canada's envoy in this respect, when it was the actions of the Ontario Government in the early 1980s cancelling scrubbers that were intended for Ontario Hydro generating plants that contributed to the degeneration of the political climate around acid rain originally, and produced part of the deadlock that the Prime Minister is so fond of speaking about?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, now I will have to change my mind. After that, the NDP will come third, again and again, in Ontario.

In point of fact—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Fascinating.

Mr. Mulroney: I think there is a general—

Ms. Copps: We are waiting for the answer.

Mr. Mulroney: I came back from the summit early, because I just could not be away from that voice.

I think it is generally recognized that there is a political problem, and it is important that we have people of independent reputation and accomplishment, with access to the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada, because this is fundamentally a political problem.

Mr. Lewis is recognized, as a former Secretary in Mr. Reagan's Cabinet, as a man of great accomplishment, influence, and access to the President. Mr. Davis is recognized by all objective Canadians, including members of the Opposition who have learned to acquire a healthy respect for him, as an outstanding Canadian who will do a great job for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, I will address my question to the Prime Minister. There must have been more substance in the discussions between the Prime Minister and the President during the summit that we have seen in the reports or in the releases. At least we would hope so.

I want the Prime Minister to know that we on this side of the House want him to succeed in his relationship with the United States, and to see concrete measures take place with respect to acid rain and see major breakthroughs in trade. We all know that we have not seen them yet.

Let me give the Prime Minister this opportunity to tell us whether he dealt with the issue of saltfish quotas which has created a loss of jobs in his own riding, and upon which immediate action could be taken by the President? Did he discuss with the President immediate action on restrictions placed on foodstuffs containing sugar, which are creating hundreds of lay-offs in this country and will create many more?

While it is fine to conduct an examination of irritants, there are steps that must be taken now in order to put people back to work and find new jobs for Canadians. It is not enough to examine, discuss, and have task force studies.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for what I suppose are his words of modest congratulations. I tell him that I shall remember him with affection, because that is the first word of support that the Government of Canada has received with regard to its relationship with the United States of America from the Liberal Party since September 4.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It is the first word we have had in support of an ally.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You weren't here this morning.

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the Opposition said that I was not here this morning. I am sorry that I missed that outstanding speech, but I will read it as soon as I go home tonight.

Mr. Axworthy: Another broken promise.

Mr. Broadbent: Another sacred trust.

Mr. Mulroney: We dealt with saltfish, foodstuffs, steel, timber, and asbestos. I believe I can say to my hon. friend from Saint-Henri-Westmount that we dealt very specifically with those concerns that trouble him and have troubled me.

Mr. Johnston: I am glad that they were dealt with, but Canadians have not yet had a concrete yardstick with which to measure the results. I hope we will hear more about what those results might be in the coming days.

FINANCE

BUDGET DATE INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We have seen a series of good show pieces. While this is not intended as any kind of criticism, the Prime Minister must surely rank amongst the great impresarios that we have seen in this country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There should be an amusement tax on the Prime Minister.

Mr. Johnston: Recognizing the importance of unemployment, interest rates, and giving economic direction to the country, will the Minister of Finance dispel the rumour which I heard this morning on the CBC, that the Government intends to defer its budget, not in the interest of the problems of the economy but in the interest of Mr. Miller who is rumoured to be holding an election in the month of May? Will he tell us that the budget timetable will in no way be affected by the political exigencies or imperatives of the Premier of Ontario?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can think my way through the rambling question which the Hon. Member just laid out in the House. However, if I may comment on the gist of it, I will say that nothing that is happening in the Province of Ontario will deter or delay anything that we may be doing in terms of economic policy with this Government. I know that the Liberal Party is quite concerned about the expectations of an election in the Province of Ontario, but it will have nothing to do with the timing of a budget.

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM—UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. If Canada and the United States have entered into such a new era of co-operation and understanding, why did U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, Whitehouse spokesman Larry Speakes, and President Reagan, all make statements clearly showing that they do not understand that Canada wants to update the North Warning System but wants no part of ballistic or Cruise missile defences? Why is there this confusion from Washington which we heard last week and even on the weekend?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no confusion except the confusion that exists in the minds of the Hon. Member and his colleagues in that Party, and in the—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I heard them say that on television.

Mr. Nielsen: I can read as well as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Broadbent: All of the reporters and 90 per cent of the people.

Mr. Nielsen: I can read as readily as the hon. gentleman. They are not going to get away with this attempt at confusing the issue by trying repeatedly to establish the linkages that they have failed to establish, that have been repeatedly denied by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, by the Prime Minister, by myself, and by the official statement of the Secretary of Defense.

Allow me to read that statement for the record, in order to give some balance to what the hon. Member is saying. In the transcript of his remarks, Secretary Weinberger said: "Well, we would want to do the most effective things we could and we do. We would not do anything that in any way interfered with the sovereignty of Canada as a nation. Canada obviously, as a sovereign nation, would make its own decision."

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It sounded to most Canadians that those gentlemen from Washington who made those statements first and then corrected them, were asked to correct them. By whom, we don't know yet.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Over the weekend the Minister of National Defence signed the agreement along with the Prime Minister. Did they put back into that agreement the clause that was taken out with respect to not participating in an active way in ballistic missile defence, which the Liberals allowed to be taken out of the NORAD agreement of 1981? If that were included in the new agreement that was signed on the weekend that would clear it up completely. All I am asking is was it included or put back in?

• (1450)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that was cleared up long ago. I do not know where the Hon. Member has been. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has repeatedly responded to that question.

Mr. Broadbent: He just got back.

Mr. Nielsen: The Member is even confusing two agreements, the NORAD agreement and the agreement that was signed over the weekend in the city of Quebec, which I will be tabling at the appropriate time this afternoon.

With respect to the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, what he was doing was citing from page 5 of the transcript of Secretary of Defence Weinberger's remarks, and I am quoting from page 6. I see no inconsistency if the whole is read in a positive way, and if the Hon. Member has any regard for the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

CANADA POST CORPORATION

HOME DELIVERY REQUESTED FOR NEW RESIDENTIAL PROJECTS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Will the Minister re-establish the guidelines for door-to-door postal delivery service established by the last Conservative Government that, when a new subdivision or apartment building is more than 75 per cent occupied, and when the streets are paved, door-to-door postal delivery would commence, so that purchasers of new homes do not have to wait up to four years for postal delivery? Or, if necessary, will the Minister introduce a change to the Canada Post Corporation Act to mandate minimum service standards for door-to-door delivery to new developments?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want first to thank the Hon. Member, and all of my colleagues, for the representation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that the Corporation is anxious to extend service as much as is possible. Obviously the trade-off it has to make, at a time when there is a $200 million deficit in the Corporation's accounts, is between enhanced service on the one hand and increased costs on the other.

The Corporation's estimates are before a committee at the present time. I would welcome any input from Hon. Members on ways in which that trade-off could be made, and where they feel the priorities should be. Obviously the first commitment that must be made by the Government, in addition to ensuring adequate service, is ensuring that the Corporation is run on a business-like basis and that we begin to bring down this deficit.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DOMTAR—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I can assure the Prime Minister that even if he was in a party mood on the weekend, the people of Windsor who are worrying about Domtar certainly did not feel like singing. Today, Mr. Speaker, people representing the interests of the Eastern Townships are in town and in the visitors' gallery, waiting for an opportunity to meet the Prime Minister. Further to his answer on March 6 of this year when he said he would be delighted to meet intervenors from the Eastern Townships any time, I want to ask the Prime Minister why he sent the Member for Sherbrooke with a message to the people of the Eastern Townships that he would not be meeting with them today? Has he changed his mind since March 6?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that I arrived late last night from Quebec City and was away from the House due to my trip to Moscow last week, I did not realize my schedule was full for today and tomorrow, but I would be delighted to meet our friends from the Eastern Townships.

I can also inform my hon. friend that since the matter was raised in the House, we have been involved in serious talks with the Government of Quebec, with the co-operation of my Government colleagues and Members from the area, and through the Government with Domtar, and we hope to be able to find a way to resolve this problem.

As far as... Well, if you want to listen to the Acting Liberal Whip who is chatting in the back, go right ahead, but if you want a serious answer, I would be delighted to meet not only with people from the Eastern Townships but also with my hon. friend and all Members from Township ridings who are interested.

INQUIRY WHETHER PROPOSAL MADE TO DOMTAR BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to take the Prime Minister at his word. I can inform him that the people from the Eastern Townships are there, that I am available all afternoon, and that we will wait for his call.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that they were negotiating with Domtar. On Friday, no official contact had been made with Domtar. I would like to know who is telling the truth at this point. Yes or no, has the federal Government made a proposal to Domtar or is the company ignoring the federal Government's proposals? Yes or no, has the Prime Minister, through his Ministers, had any contact with Domtar with a view to making the company a serious offer? Yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Has the Liberal Member become the president and chief executive officer of Domtar? Is that what he is saying? Because I can inform the House that Domtar's principal shareholder... Yes, but if you do not mind, this is a serious and complex case, and we are dealing... And my hon. colleague from Shawinigan knows perfectly well how complex it is. We are going to work together with the Government of Quebec and Domtar to do something useful, instead of putting on a political show. I can inform them... I did not know these gentlemen were here, but I can inform them that I would be delighted to meet with them, and I hope the people from the Eastern Townships realize what we have to put up with from the Opposition every day. I would be delighted to see them right after Oral Question Period. It will be a pleasure.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will have noticed a certain stench of hypocrisy and broken promises in the House today. He promised during the election campaign that he would be introducing an all-Party committee to review government appointments, but we found out yesterday that the Prime Minister brought out the same old Liberal approach, and we now have 13 new Tory bagmen swilling at the public trough as a result of their appointments to the board of Air Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You should have been in Saskatchewan during NDP times.

Mr. Riis: I have a question for the Prime Minister. If these people were not appointed simply for their Tory affiliations and being bagmen for the Party, how could he justify someone like Fernand Roberge playing a role on the board of Air Canada, one of Canada's most important Crown corporations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to that, the people of Canada voted for a change—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: And you had a choice.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member may be certain that there will be changes. That he can be certain of. The Hon. Member asked about quality. For example, Peter Bawden, the owner of one of the most successful executive airlines in Canada, was appointed to the board; David Angus, an outstanding transportation lawyer with an international reputation; Ralph Fisher, a senior partner in Laventhal and Horwath and a very distinguished leader of the Jewish community in Canada. This is the quality of individual we are putting on boards.

With regard to the appointments, we have appointed people like Lloyd Francis, Stephen Lewis, Sylvia Gold, Bruce Phillips, Gerard Laforest to the Supreme Court, Jocelyne Pelchat-Johnson appointed to the board of Petro-Canada. We have reappointed Judge François Laporte to the court in Montreal, and there is the appointment of Hélène Baillargeon-Côté. I can tell my hon. friend that today we appointed Richard J. Doyle, a very distinguished former editor of The Globe and Mail, to the Senate of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, so much for Senate reform and all that phoney blarney about being anxious to change ways. So much for Senate reform, Mr. Speaker. It is the kind of hypocrisy which the people of Canada got sick of. They thought they had made a change, but in fact they have not made a change.

AIR CANADA—APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN AS DIRECTOR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): I want to ask the Prime Minister a precise question, Mr. Speaker. He indicated the qualifications of some of the appointments made to the board of Air Canada. Last night one of the appointments to the board, Gayle Christie, said that she guessed she was appointed because she knew how to drive a car.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: At a time when there are 1.5 million out of work and when the people of Canada are wanting some kind of strong leadership, and not this pork-barrelling patronage hypocrisy, will the Prime Minister explain to us what kind of a signal that gives to the people of Canada when he makes that appointment, and the best qualification with which Gayle Christie can come up is that she knows how to drive a bloody car?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not only is that inaccurate, but it is a slur against one of the most outstanding women in Canada.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Members: She said it.

Mr. Mulroney: Gayle Christie was elected Mayor of the Borough of York in Toronto. She is a very accomplished woman.

This Government has appointed more women to more senior positions than its predecessor at any time, and we are proud of that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I can say that within six months as Prime Minister I have made more non-partisan appointments than any of my predecessors, than any of them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: If you care to examine it objectively, you will see that no Prime Minister has appointed non-Party members to such high decision-making functions in such number. I am proud of the fact that we have proceeded with such non-partisan nominations, and we are going to make more of the quality of Mr. Doyle, Gayle Christie, and others.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TERRORISM

STATEMENT ON SECURITY AT TURKISH EMBASSY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when on March 15 I rose on a point of order. I indicated that I would initiate an investigation into possible approaches to the Government made since February 13 by officials of the Turkish Embassy in Ottawa regarding the security of their embassy. This investigation has established that the Government was indeed approached more recently than mid-February. Nevertheless, the investigation has also established that the RCMP acted immediately to increase their vigilance. In short, although Ministers were not directly involved with these contacts, the RCMP were, and the RCMP took action immediately.

There were two further contacts between Turkish and Canadian officials after mid-February. On February 22 there was a conversation between a representative of the Turkish Embassy and the Office of Protocol of my Department. That conservation dealt primarily with a separate issue concerning international terrorism, but the Turkish representative took the occasion to reiterate concern about the threat perceived to security of the embassy. That conversation was reported directly to the RCMP.

The second conversation occurred on March 5, when the RCMP visited the Turkish Embassy at their own initiative to discuss with embassy staff internal security provisions. At that meeting a representative of the Turkish Embassy discussed with the RCMP the level of threat to the embassy.

Before I made the statement in the House on March 14, I asked for detailed information on all contacts between Turkish officials and our Department. I was not told of the conversations that had taken place on February 22 and on March 5. As soon as I learned of them on March 15, I came back to the House to make my statement on a point of order.

Neither conversation conveyed a warning of a specific attack and neither provided new information going beyond what the Turkish authorities had given us in mid-February.

As I said last Friday, I respect this House and, once again, I apologize for inadvertently having conveyed incomplete information to the House. But I can assure the House that the missing information did not materially affect the assessment of threat to the security of the Turkish mission, and that in both cases the communications from the Turks were taken fully into account.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my brief reply by thanking the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for making a copy of his statement available to me during Question Period.

What emerges from a reading of this document is a picture of worried Turkish diplomats in this capital trying in one way and another to obtain increased security, seeking to meet with members of the RCMP to convey their concerns and seeking to meet with the Office of Protocol of the Minister's Department, again trying to receive increased security. If I can quote from a Minister in the Turkish Assembly again giving special warning to Canada, he asked that specific threats be responded to by increased levels of security.

The Minister has not succeeded in bailing out the Government on this one by the statement he has made. A few days ago in the House, on March 13, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) indicated, as reported on page 2969 of Hansard, that increased security was provided at the Turkish Embassy. What the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said today is slightly different from what was in the written statement I received. What he said was that the RCMP took action immediately in the sense of increasing security, as the Deputy Prime Minister has said.

This allegation by the Government that increased security is contradicted by the facts. It is contradicted by people of Pinkerton's who indicated that no change at all occurred as a result of the review of security which took place 30 days before the incident.

I think the Government owes it to the House to come clean with us and, if it claims that the RCMP took action and that increased security was provided, it should indicate what was done. Their assertions and their attempts to bail themselves out are contradicted by others who I think ought to be believed. I want to ask whether the House is being misled by the statements which have been made on this occasion, in addition to what increased security was provided to these worried Turkish diplomats who were attempting to obtain it.

The RCMP provided a report to the Government which I commissioned but did not receive. It was given to the new Government. That report for increased security sat with the Government for six months without being taken to Cabinet, according to the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay).

I also feel entitled to ask whether there were measures recommended by the RCMP which were not put into effect by the Government, which were not responded to positively by the Government.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I have to advise the Hon. Member that he may have a moment later to put questions, but the time for his statement under the traditions of the House has expired, without unanimous consent of the House to continue. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Kaplan: I have one final question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member indicates that he has one short matter. I am sure the House is agreeable.

Mr. Kaplan: Between the attempts by Turkish diplomats to bring their concerns to the attention of an apparently indifferent Government, did any Turkish diplomats ask to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Solicitor General?

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in his statement the Minister apologizes "for inadvertently having conveyed incomplete information to the House". The Minister did not convey incomplete information. What was told to the House was wrong; it was not a matter of being incomplete. The Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) categorically denied that there had been, subsequent to the meetings which they affirmed did take place between Government representatives and the Turkish Embassy, any other meetings of any kind to discuss security at the Turkish Embassy. Therefore, it was not a matter of incomplete information, I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark); it was a question of wrong information.

Frankly, I am angry at the tone of the statement, that the Minister would suggest that some kind of appropriate action was taken after the Turkish Embassy made it known (a) to Ministry officials and (b) to the RCMP that they had reason to believe that there was an increased threat to their embassy. For the Minister to suggest that some kind of appropriate action was taken is again wrong. There was no action taken of any substance.

There was one guard at the embassy in advance and there was one guard after the information was conveyed to the Minister or the Ministry and the RCMP. That guard was not adequately trained. That guard was not given additional back-up. That guard was not provided with additional support in order that he could do the job that he was being inadequately paid to do.

It is with a sense of frustration that I listened to and read the Minister's statement. I would have accepted it if the Secretary of State for External Affairs had simply said that he had been given wrong information, that he apologized and that the information that he had subsequently been given was in fact consistent with what Opposition Members had been suggesting took place. However, to try to colour it in such a way as to make it appear that there was some kind of deliberate action taken either by the RCMP or by the Ministry in response to a plea for help from the Turkish Embassy is to deny the truth in the instance.

I also want to say to the Minister that given the level of protection that was afforded, given that there was a clear state of high alert as a result of the Orly airport trials and the pending trials here, given that that had been conveyed around the world by the Turkish Government, given that that had been on the agenda of the world security services of Interpol and therefore on the agenda of our security service, what was done was wrong and what is being said in the statement is unacceptable.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I am told on fairly good authority that after the demonstrations which occur on, I think, April 24, an Armenian day of celebration, there is frequently a high alert and demonstrations. I understand that either last year or the year before after such a demonstration, the Turkish ambassador came to the then Secretary of State for External Affairs with the actual rock that had gone through the window of his embassy and landed on his writing desk. He took it to the previous Liberal Government and indicated "I need more protection, especially around this period of April 24". I want to know if the Secretary of State for External Affairs can confirm that, whether he has seen that in his report. Can he indicate what the Ministry will do in the future around April 24 at the time of those kinds of demonstrations to protect the Turkish Embassy, so that those kinds of things will not happen again?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that it would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters that might have happened regarding former Ministers and former administrations. I can say that I know nothing of that situation. I cannot report more fully on it.

With regard to the situation of the Turkish Embassy here and elsewhere, the House knows of the extreme sensitivity of that question. We have taken actions at the Turkish Embassy which in the middle of February last year the Turkish Embassy deemed to be satisfactory. Naturally we are going to look at the matter again. The Hon. Member would not want me or anyone else in this House to discuss details of security arrangements in ways that might increase the danger for individual embassies or individual representatives of other countries in Canada or elsewhere.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the suggestion that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, pursuant to its mandate to deal with terrorism and suspected terrorism in Canada, may not have alerted the RCMP, responsible for the enforcement of the law, to the heightened sense of danger which was posed in the circumstances surrounding this particular incident. I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) specifically whether CSIS did inform the RCMP and of the fact that they viewed this as a very serious matter. If CSIS did inform the RCMP of that, what specific steps did the RCMP take to respond to that heightened degree of concern on the part of CSIS?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, for reasons the House will understand, I do not propose to discuss publicly specific steps that have been taken or might be taken, because that kind of discussion could very seriously jeopardize the security of the people we are trying to protect. Indeed, it could have the consequence, which no one here would intend or want, of putting them into greater danger. I indicated in my statement, and I repeat it now, that when information came to the attention of the Government, while to my great regret Ministers were not informed, the RCMP was informed and acted.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want at this time to repeat briefly questions that I asked during my statement because they have not, understandably, been addressed yet by the Minister. When the Minister says that the RCMP took action immediately, does he mean by that that the level of security at the Turkish Embassy was increased?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I mean that the RCMP took action immediately. I am sure that the former Solicitor General, as a former Minister of the Crown responsible for security activities, would not want me to get into detail on the floor of the House of Commons as to exactly what action was taken. He should know better than others that action that might have been taken in the case of an urgent situation there might also be taken in others. To reply to that kind of question would indicate patterns of response by the Government of Canada that would have the effect of putting in danger the very people we are trying to protect.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I might ask—

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for one question.

Turkish Embassy Security

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am assuming in my question that there is a new level of security right now and that the matter I am asking about is a matter of historical and political interest, but not relevant to the level of security in the Turkish Embassy right now. I would hope that after the terrorism the Government would have learned its lesson and that the security will be different.

I want to ask the Minister as well, as I did in my earlier remarks, whether any Turkish diplomats tried to see Members of this Government during the last month, this period when the worried Turkish diplomats were trying frantically to get this Government to do something to increase their security.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, my Parliamentary Secretary had a meeting with the Turkish ambassador on February 27, a 45-minute meeting in which this matter was not raised. I had a meeting with the Turkish ambassador, among other ambassadors who were present at a meeting called for another purpose which I convened, at which this matter was not raised.

This is a question, of course, on which all Members of the House should both keep their tempers and remember their responsibilities. I simply repeat to the Hon. Member opposite that I think it would serve no one's interest, certainly not the interest of those diplomats we are trying to protect, for us to publicize on the floor of the House of Commons the patterns of protection or the patterns of security that are put in place in this country.

Mr. Speaker: I will take the last two questions, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, whatever pattern of security was put into place, it is obvious that it failed and failed miserably, to have one Pinkerton guard guarding the embassy. I would like the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to explain what appears to be a very obvious inconsistency. The RCMP inspector in charge of VIP protection in Ottawa stated that there was no stepped-up security prior to the incident because there was no intelligence information indicating that it might be needed. That is from the The Globe and Mail of March 13, 1985. Here we have the Secretary of State for External Affairs saying that there was stepped-up security. We have the RCMP inspector saying that there was no stepped-up security because there was no intelligence available.

Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs clarify the obvious inconsistency? Could he also indicate whether the RCMP, when it was given this advance warning, advised the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) of the advance warning and whether the Security Intelligence Service was involved and was advised of this advance warning?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that it does not advance the interests of the people we are trying to protect for the Hon. Member or others to engage in fishing expeditions on the floor of the House of Commons that might result in the publication of information that would jeopardize the security of the people whom we are trying to protect.

I say to the Hon. Member, who is new here, that there are certain standards in this House of Commons and one of those standards, as I am sure he will observe, is that when there appears to be a discrepancy involving the word of an Hon. Member, the word of the Hon. Member is accepted. I have given my word by answering the question that was raised by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have one final question to put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). The RCMP were aware of the Turkish Embassy's concerns, and as I understand it, there was also additional information available to them with regard to the level of threat which was in existence not only in Canada but in other parts of the world at the time the Turkish Embassy brought to the attention of the RCMP its concerns about its own security. Does the Secretary of State believe that the actions taken by the RCMP in response to those threats, given the professional nature of that force and the responsibility it has not only to enforce law and order but to protect diplomats in Canada, were adequate?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, as I have said before and as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has said, no one would pretend that response was adequate when security arrangements were breached. We all know that. We deeply regret that.

I suppose that the response that is in question, the response that troubles me, has to do with the response of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the response of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), who were genuinely invited by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to co-operate with us in this most sensitive matter, a matter which has traditionally been the subject of co-operation between Governments and Opposition Parties. They refused to take part in that kind of common action to try to deal with a major security problem. Instead of helping us solve the problem, the Opposition Parties have been trying to find ways to raise questions in the House of Commons which would not help the diplomats but which could have the effect of helping the terrorists.

Mr. Deans: That's nonsense. That is insulting.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Sit down.

Mr. Deans: Sit down. You're a disgrace. That's insulting to say a thing like that. You know damned well we are trying to protect the people involved. Don't you dare say things like that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, why don't you co-operate?

Mr. Deans: We were never given an invitation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course you were. You refused.

Mr. Deans: I did not refuse. I asked for an invitation in writing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Have the House Leaders finished holding a discussion on the floor of the House of Commons? Would the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs like to finish his answer?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, that response was one that I found troubling. It may have been a response that occurred in the heat of debate in the House of Commons. Those things occur. Certainly on behalf of the Government, I say that I hope that the Leaders of the Opposition Parties will reconsider their responsibility in this matter and help Canada offer adequate protection to diplomats who are representatives here.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated before that I would take no further questions. I am afraid that at this point I must by our traditions cut off the question period.

Mr. Waddell: Point of privilege.

Mr. Nunziata: Point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated already that that would be the end of the question period. On a question of privilege, I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rose during this question period to try to ask what I thought was a reasonable question, one that might help the Minister. I wonder if the Minister might backtrack a bit on his remarks which accused the opposition of aiding the terrorists. There is room for—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is putting me in difficulty. He has what is clearly in his mind a legitimate question. I have already indicated, however, that in my judgment the time for questions has expired. I believe he is trying to use a point of order to introduce another question for what in his mind is good reason. Clearly, he has not raised a point of privilege, if that is the point he is making. He is really trying to continue debate through another vehicle.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if, before you cut off question period in the future, you could at least give some indication that you wish to know if anyone else in the House wishes to raise a question. Some of us on this side of the House, even though we do not continually pop up like jack-in-the-boxes, do have valid questions to ask. It is rather unfair, if I may suggest, Sir, that you cut everyone off if there are only two Members on the Opposition side who wish to ask questions.

Mr. Speaker: I accept the suggestion of the Hon. Member. I also suggest that Hon. Members who wish to ask questions might rise in their places to seek the floor. The only way the Speaker knows who wishes to ask a question is by seeing Members rise.

Turkish Embassy Security

Perhaps I could take 30 seconds to explain the procedure to the Hon. Member. At the end of Statements by Ministers, the Speaker normally allows some questions but with very strict time limits. The only way the Speaker can know whether to allocate supplementary questions or not is by knowing how many Hon. Members wish to rise.

With due respect to the Hon. Member, my practice has been, as I have indicated before, that I look for all Hon. Members who wish to rise as soon as possible so I can make a list and try to get everyone in the time that is available. If Hon. Members would prefer in future that I indicate that I am coming to the end of the question period and would now make a final list, that will still not change the fact that the time allowed will be over very shortly. I would be happy to consider the suggestion made by the Hon. Member and I take it in the spirit in which it is offered.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if you could give us some guidance by allowing the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) the opportunity to backtrack from his accusation that the Opposition was aiding the terrorists. I am sure he would welcome that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: He is a Minister of the Crown and knows his opportunities under the rules. He is also a Member of the House of Commons and will rise if he chooses in debate to say something else. I suggest that the Hon. Member has not raised a point of order and I think he knows it.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has accused the Opposition of aiding the terrorists. That is totally inaccurate and wrong. By so doing, he is affecting each and every Member of the Opposition. It seems to me that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should be asked to retract those erroneous statements.

Ms. Copps: Libellous.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question of privilege; I think the Hon. Member knows that. I am sure the Hon. Member is fully aware, given his experience in the House, that that is not a question of privilege. If the Hon. Member is attempting to make a point of order with regard to what he believes to be unparliamentary language, that would be a different issue.

The Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has said what I take it he believes in his view to be a fact, and therefore it is a matter of debate as to whether or not actions or words are interpreted in certain ways. That can therefore not be a question of privilege.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the exchanges across the floor, I realized that it is clear that an interpretation is being put on my words that I did not intend. What I intended to say was two things: first, the public discussion of the details of security does not protect diplomats but does aid terrorists. We do not want to encourage that, nor I believe does anyone in the House want to encourage that.

Second, these matters are of extreme sensitivity and in past parliamentary practice have been a subject of discussion involving Opposition Parties to work out ways in which the country could respond. I repeat the observation that I made earlier that we would welcome that kind of co-operation from the Opposition Parties in helping protect ambassadors in this country.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has long been clear that it is not proper to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case. While the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has just risen to make some remarks which may suggest that he is withdrawing the aspersions he has cast on the motives of Hon. Members who raised questions about the Government's mishandling of the Turkish Embassy affair, I repectfully suggest that he has not done so sufficiently to fall within the rules of order.

I respectfully ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule that he should follow the rules in this regard, because what he is attempting to do is not only contrary to the rules but he is attempting to say that Hon. Members of this House have less right to discuss an important matter than the people of this country through the press, and that is wrong.

Mr. Speaker: I will be more than happy to read the "blues" and to determine whether in fact a disorder has occurred. I can tell the Hon. Member what I heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs say, and I am prepared to admit that I have been known to be wrong at least once in my life. What I thought I heard the Minister say was a statement to the effect that actions or statements appeared to have an effect—if that is the one which was described—but I heard no claims, at least at first blush, of imputing motives as a result of that. Now I am prepared to check the "blues". I can assure Hon. Members that had I heard such aspersions or imputations of motives, I would have been on my feet requiring the words to be withdrawn. If I have missed it, I will be happy to look for it in the "blues".

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the House, but my recollection about what I said—and my "blues" will reflect the same as yours—was that I intended to cast no aspersion on the motives of Hon. Members. This is a matter of great seriousness. We treat it that way and I trust and expect all Hon. Members of the House will do the same.

CONTADORA NEGOTIATION PROCESS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have two very brief petitions to table in the House today which have arisen out of a human rights conference which was held in Smithers over the weekend. The first petition is signed by a large number of residents of British Columbia and other parts of the country calling on the Government to endorse the Contadora negotiation process which is crucial in terms of what is going on in Central America today.

CALL FOR RELEASE OF CANADIAN CITIZEN IN BRAZIL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): The second petition, Mr. Speaker, arose at the same human rights conference at Smithers and is signed by a number of Canadians calling on the Government to expand its attempts to obtain the release of a Canadian citizen named Roberto Starita who has received the endorsation of the new President of Brazil to be released but the federal police have not yet released him. Canadians are urgently seeking the co-operation of the Government in obtaining his release.

PROTOCOL TO CONTADORA PEACE TREATY

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition from citizens of Edmonton, parishioners of St. Charles Catholic Church, St. Patrick Catholic Church and Sacred Heart Parish Church, in which the petitioners submit to this House their concerns about the slow progress toward peace in Central America, and in which they call upon the Government to sign the protocol to the 1984 Contadora Peace Treaty.

SPOUSES ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition on behalf of the people of my riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic. I am referring to the Centre Claude Robillard Senior Citizens' Club. They are concerned and worried about the position taken by the Government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on Bill C-26.

They ask the Government to review its position and to provide the spouse's allowance program for single Canadians between 60 and 64, without discrimination on the basis of marital status.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House condemns the Government's failure in bilateral relations with the United States with particular reference to:

1. the failure to obtain an agreement from the United States to make a commitment to early action on its share of environmental damage due to acid rain; and

2. the failure to make specific, that Canada would not participate in any way in the star wars project of the United States.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "rain" and by adding the following:

", and by allowing a one-year moratorium before any concrete action is taken by the United States despite the express wish of millions of Canadians and Americans; and

(b) the failure to make specific that Canada would not participate in any way in the star wars project of the United States and, especially, the failure to obtain ironclad guarantees that no nuclear arms will be stationed or deployed in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: At the time the House adjourned we would normally have been in a question and comment period. If there are no questions and comments, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Oshawa and seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) which is critical of the Government for a number of reasons pertaining to the recent summit meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan. I would like to concentrate on that aspect of the motion which has to do with acid rain.

I would like to begin by saying that I implied in Question Period, Mr. Speaker, that is, by coming out of the summit meeting in the way the Prime Minister did with an agreement to the appointment of high level envoys from each country who would be responsible for a mutual study of the problem of acid rain, the Prime Minister in effect conceded to the American view of the acid rain problem. It is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker. The American view, well known and not hidden, is that more research needs to be done on acid rain and that no action should be taken until there is more conclusive evidence that acid rain is actually as harmful as many people say it is. That is the American position. Perhaps I should say that that is the position of the present American administration and of President Reagan because, clearly, there are different views of the acid rain problem within the United States itself and it is somewhat inaccurate to talk continually about the American position as if it was totally homogeneous.

The position as expressed by President Reagan has been that more research is needed and that action at this time is not appropriate. The position of the Canadian Government, to its credit, is to act to reduce acid rain. I say "to its credit" because it has become a kind of knee-jerk response on the part of the Government to accuse us of always being negative. I was not negative some weeks ago when the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) made the announcement with respect to the action the Government was going to take with respect to acid rain. I hope people will keep that in mind and that my criticisms at this point will be more credible for that having happened.

The fact is that the Canadian position is to act to reduce sulpher dioxide emissions by making federal money available in concert with provincial and industry money, and we hope that the Government will see through that commitment and negotiate the kinds of agreements which need to be negotiated in the very near future. We will then see an actual empirical reduction in the tonnage of acid rain which is falling here in Canada from Canadian sources.

The Prime Minister said he wanted to go to the bargaining table with clean hands—or at least with cleaner hands because it is an imperfect world—and he did that. He acted on the nitric oxide emissions from automobiles. He went to the bargaining table with a few cards to play. Even though some persons maintain that he threw them all away, I would say he had a few cards to play and it was going to be interesting to see what he came up with, not only on the basis of what action the federal Government had taken itself with respect to acid rain but also in terms of the new relationship with the United States promised by the Prime Minister. What happened? The Canadian position was that action was needed. The American position was that more study was needed. And we came away with a study. To me that means that we accepted the American position.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, and in the view of the New Democratic Party, it would have been far better and more in keeping with the kind of mature relationship, about which the Prime Minister likes to speak when he is speaking about Canada-U.S. relations, for the Prime Minister to have come out of the meeting and told us that they couldn't agree on acid rain, that the President still feels that it is not the kind of problem which demands action, but that we do and we are going to continue to act on a national basis to clean up our sources of acid rain, and that we hope in the long run our continuing action in this respect will finally be persuasive to the Americans. That would have been a much more honest and responsible course of action when talking about Canada-U.S. relations. Instead we have come away with what is obvious to everyone but the Government itself: a cosmetic process designed to save the Prime Minister from having to face up to the fact that he could not get anywhere with the President. Better to have said so. It would not have been such a horrendous failure. It would have been horrendous in the environmental sense but not potitically. In my view, that would have been much more acceptable.

The problem is that the Prime Minister has himself in a little bit of a box, given the rhetoric he has been employing on acid rain for the last little while. As is the wont of all political Parties, we tend to blame our political opponents for everything. The Prime Minister has got himself into the position, either through not being totally familiar with the history of the problem or for partisan political reasons, or a combination thereof, of trying to pretend that the deadlock in acid rain negotiations between Canada and the U.S. is completely the fault of the former Liberal Government. With all due respect to the fact that many things can be blamed on the Liberal Party of Canada, the fact is that the blame for acid rain ought to be distributed a bit more evenly.

I refer Members of the House to the last report of the Subcommittee on Acid Rain which was brought back into existence near the end of the last Parliament. It produced a report called Time Lost: A Demand for Action on Acid Rain. This is a unanimous report of an all-Party committee, and I quote from the section on Canada-U.S. relations:

> Unfortunately, the political will needed to tackle the problem is lacking in the United States.

Mr. Gurbin: It was.

Mr. Blaikie: It goes on:

> A solution to the acid rain problem must be based on a continental pollution control strategy.

They say:

> —we now felt that the only useful approach to make to our American neighbours would have to be political, inasmuch as the diplomatic initiative had foundered on the intransigence of the Reagan Administration.

In summarizing the events it also points out that there were agreements in place and processes which had begun prior to the election of President Reagan in 1980.

When the Prime Minister said that this expression of concern about acid rain that he obtained in Quebec City from the President was an entirely new thing, well, it is not entirely new from the point of view of successive American administrations. That concern was expressed prior to the election of President Reagan. If anything is new at all, it is that the Prime Minister got those few sentences out of President Reagan. But I maintain that, in view of the fact no real action was agreed to, nothing new has happened and the President felt, out of politeness and in response to the fantastically acquiescent way in which the Prime Minister treated him, that at least he owed the Prime Minister a few utterances with respect to acid rain.

What the Prime Minister has been unable to say, at the Quebec summit or elsewhere, is that there is American culpability here. That has been documented time and time again by members of the various committees set up in this House to study the problem. All we want is a little honest talk about the disagreements which exist between the President and Canadians about acid rain.

In speaking about that, I would just like to say a word about what I think friendship with the United States means and what real friendship is all about. I want to begin by saying that the U.S.A. is one of Canada's greatest friends and neighbours. No one is arguing about that. What is at issue is the nature of the friendship. It seems to me that real friends can disagree with each other and still maintain respect for each other. Real friends have a responsibility which sometimes other nations do not have, and it seems to me this is the view of our Party about friendship with the U.S. Sometimes it is only your best friend who can tell you that you acted like a bully at that party the other night or you have been treating someone unkindly, or you really ought to think about the way you are behaving. These are the kinds of things that real friends are for. That is the kind of influence friends can have on each other.

I think this Government misunderstands that nature of friendship and loyalty. As the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) said earlier, loyalty and friendship have a lot to do with being willing to be openly and honestly critical, and that is all we ask of the Prime Minister with respect to acid rain. That is what we ask of him with respect to other areas where Canada should be playing a leading role in being constructively critical of American foreign policy, whether it be in Central America, on the arms race or whatever.

I want to express my own concern about the repeated accusation of anti-Americanism which we hear from the Government benches every time we do not agree with the Government's position concerning Canada-U.S. relations. There are millions and millions of American who do not agree with President Reagan's position on acid rain, or his position on star wars or Central America. Are they anti-American? If we live in a community of democracies where we are free not only to criticize our own Government but the Governments of our neighbours and friends, surely we should be able to speak our mind about what is going on in the United States without being accused of anti-Americanism by this Government. For God's sake, the United States itself abolished the Committee on Un-American Activities; let us not turn the Canadian House of Commons into a committee on un-American activities so that whenever members of the Opposition rise to say they do not agree with the position taken by the Government they are accused of being anti-American. Surely we can have a higher level of debate than that. That is the kind of debate we should be pursuing.

Many of the questions pertaining to Canada-U.S. relations are questions of immense international importance, whether they have to do with the global environment we all share or with the future of the planet itself in terms of the arms race. We ought to be able to have a decent, open and honest debate about these issues without being charged with anti-Americanism.

There are many very serious environmental questions outstanding between Canada and the U.S. The one that comes most quickly to mind is Great Lakes water quality and the fact that seven to eight million Canadians could well be on the verge of having their water supply seriously damaged by the leakage of toxins into the Niagara River system from dumps situated on the American side of the border. Action needs to be taken on that front. We need to be firm. We are standing on firm ground on these issues. We do not have anything to apologize for. Surely we ought not to be apologetic for the fact that we are concerned about the drinking water supply of seven to eight million Canadians.

I have been to the U.S. many times and I know a good many Americans, and I think they respect people who stand up for themselves. They respect people who are open, frank and who say just what is going on and what they want people to do. They are not going to be impressed by a lot of back-slapping and head-patting and all the other sorts of things that went on in Quebec City. When it comes to questions of the environment in particular, we are on very firm ground indeed and we should be as frank and honest with the Americans as is necessary in order to get them to see that we are deadly serious about their taking action to reduce acid rain emissions that are crossing our border from their country. We must show them that we are deadly serious about cleaning up the Great Lakes. Of course, we could have better created the impression that we were deadly serious about the quality of Great Lakes water if we had not had the cancellation of the herring gull egg program. Nevertheless, these issues must transcend the day-to-day mistakes of the Government, and we therefore still have a very strong moral case for speaking to the Americans about that.

I would like to say a final world about the greatest environmental issue of them all. I know that others will be speaking about this. Hopefully, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) will be able to speak later this afternoon on questions pertaining to security and disarmament. In the final analysis the greatest environmental question of them all is that of nuclear war. It is the prediction of many experts now that any significant nuclear exchange would result in what is called nuclear winter. It would result in environmental damage which would make our concerns about acid rain and toxins in the Great Lakes pale in comparison.

I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), the former Secretary of State for External Affairs in the Liberal Government. He said that if we create the environment that he believes the present Government is creating by signing these agreements with the Americans with respect to defence, when we get the call saying they want to deploy nuclear weapons on our soil we will not be in a position to say no and that we are kidding ourselves if we think otherwise. Mr. Speaker, we have that environment in Canada.-U.S. relations now. It was created by years and years of Liberal Government. We have been put in a position whereby we are not able to have an independent foreign policy because we are so vulnerable to American action and response, whether economic or otherwise. The Americans play hardball when they want to get their own way with respect to the National Energy Program or whatever it happens to be. They have a history of being very tough with regard to their own national self-interest.

Over the years we have not developed an economy or a stance with regard to foreign policy which enables us to act independently on short notice. We can thank the actions of successive Liberal Governments for that. The response of the Conservative Government to the environment created by the Liberals is to accept it. They simply say that that is the way the world is and instead of struggling against that reality they accept that environment and do their best within it.

We see this attitude not only with respect to foreign policy but also with respect to foreign investment, and a number of other fronts.

The Conservative policy is not to struggle against the dependence which has been created over the years by successive Liberal administrations, but to accept it as the way the world is and to try to do their very best within it for Canadians. That is a legitimate policy option, but we do not agree with it. We say that in the long term we must struggle against that dominance of our economy and the disability that we have acquired over the years to act independently on the world stage. We invite Canadians to do that by supporting our policy. The Government is quite right in saying that at this point in time it has the mandate. However, we also have a mandate to put forward the alternative view. We must keep reminding Canadians that there is a different way to do things and that we do not have to accept these international realities as if they were the weather which we cannot do anything about.

The world is in part created by human beings. Our social and economic realities are the result of human choices. The world can be changed, but only when and if Canadians join with us and others who are concerned to change the world in that way. That is what we are up to. We are not up to any anti-Americanism or low level carping on a day-to-day political basis. We are trying to make the point that there is an alternative way to exist in the world as Canadians and as a country. We are going to continue to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, for some time today I have been getting a lesson on the nature of friendship. The lesson includes comments like, "real friends cannot disagree", that we on this side misundertand the nature of friendship, and that we on this side are accusing those on the other side of anti-Americanism.

I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and other Members in the House about the nature of friendship. Members opposite have said today that when you sit down to negotiate with the Americans you must remember that they play hardball and that you have to watch them. They say that you have to be tough with the Americans or they will take advantage of you. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said this morning that Mr. Davis was the wrong person to choose to fight with the Americans on acid rain. Mr. Speaker, those on the other side have a lot to learn about the nature of friendship if they start out with the assumption that they have to fight with the other side in order to accomplish objectives which they share. You cannot start out by assuming that your friends are wrong and that you are going to fight with them, if you ever hope to accomplish anything.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) has said confirms the fact that there are two different views of what the relationship between Canada and the United States ought to be. I assume the Hon. Member for St. Boniface would admit that there are people in this House who are friends but are on opposite sides of an issue, and who, when they are dealing with an issue, can be very tough, firm and critical, but do not feel that their friendship is endangered. I am making the same argument about relationships between countries and between politicians on either side of the border. In the final analysis, it is a question of maturity.

The Hon. Member puts a very pejorative interpretation on words like "tough" and "firm" and on observation that the Americans play hardball. They do. They have a history of being known for the tenacity with which they stick up for their own self-interests. I must say that sometimes I have been envious of that. I can at least say of Americans that they do stick up for their own interests. Sometimes I am critical of those interests, but the fact of the matter is that they do stick up for their own self-interests. They have not been the international patsy that Canada has sometimes been with regard to its own self-interest.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member, whom I consider to be a friend. Although we may agree to disagree, we can still ask questions of one another. Perhaps he could outline for the House the views of his Party with regard to the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made much of the fact that he has appointed a former First Minister from Ontario as the special envoy to carry Canada's case with regard to acid rain.

I have some concerns, as do my constituents, about his track record as it relates to acid rain. The steps he took as a provincial first Minister perhaps do not provide confidence and assurance that Canada will be sufficiently represented so that we will get a very meaningful agreement with the United States about curbing acid rain.

We heard some musings from the Hon. Member for Saint-Boniface (Mr. Duguay). Does the Hon. Member or his Party know what assurances the Prime Minister sought from the President of the United States with regard to acid rain? It seems that many people in the country, including those in the news media, are not aware of what the Prime Minister actually sought in terms of consummating the agreement with the United States. Perhaps the Hon. Member could comment on those two points.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we do not know what the Prime Minister asked of President Reagan with respect to acid rain. If the Prime Minister received what he asked for, I suppose that might be called a success. However, we hope that he at least asked for more than what is in the agreement.

The Prime Minister told me in the House before the summit that he would not tip off any New Democrats about what he would ask from President Reagan. So far he has not tipped off anyone and the summit is already over. I presume he did not even tip off the President because he is unable to tell us what commitments he requested but did not get. We do not know what the Prime Minister actually asked the President.

With respect to the appointment of the former Premier of Ontario, I tried to point out earlier in Question Period that he was responsible for cancelling an initiative which would have seen the first use of scrubbers in Canada. That initiative was regarded with a great deal of political enthusiasm in the United States but was then cancelled by Ontario Hydro when William Davis was Premier of Ontario.

Under Premier Davis, we saw an accumulation of concern about acid rain throughout the 1970s. At the same time we saw an accumulation of acid rain with no action taken on that front by the Ontario Government. There was much talk and many initiatives that were eventually cancelled and never came to fruition.

Although former Premier Davis is a distinguished Canadian in many other respects, he has hardly made a name for himself with respect to environmental issues. It is an indication of how seriously the Prime Minister regards this issue.

Remember that when he was asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) why he did not take part in this debate, the Prime Minister said that he only comes in when it is a serious motion. I suggest that that shows a great deal of contempt for Parliament and a great deal of contempt for the whole issue of acid rain. Today's motion follows a major summit between Canada and the United States. It is a motion by one of the Parties in this House and is worthy of his comment. That contempt, combined with the appointment of Premier Davis for a dollar a year to work on acid rain for the Government, shows that he does not take acid rain problems seriously.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) produced a publication from the Subcommittee on Acid Rain entitled Time Lost. For the record, I think it is clear that no one from the Government has indicated anything other than concurrence with that report. In fact, that report formed the basis for much of the action that has been taken by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and the Government. Within the short period of six months, it has produced an action plan that I suggest is unequalled in the world with respect to the issue of emissions and the acid rain control problem.

This publication is also a testimony to the action of the previous Government. In 1977, the then Minister of the Environment, Roméo LeBlanc, indicated that this was a time bomb that was ticking. From that time until the publication of that book, approximately seven years, there has been little or no constructive action. Within six months of our taking office, owing particularly to the ability to co-operate and consult in a friendly manner rather than in the inflammatory way of the previous Minister of the Environment, we have been able to establish an action plan. We have been able to establish a relationship which includes the appointment of ambassadors who will be able to carry on with that important and constructive work.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not being exactly true to the record as it exists in Time Lost. What this document does so well is to distribute the blame. It does not try to blame all of the problems on the Liberals or on President Reagan. It states that there was some action taken in 1977 and 1979 that led to certain memorandums, intentions and understandings which then fell through after the election in 1980.

The Government makes the claim that strategy employed by the previous administration did not result in any change in the American position. While that is true, the fact is that the position of the American administration was one of "intransigence" and that also has to be taken into account.

Therefore, I would not agree with the Hon. Member that the Government has concurred in the recommendations and the views of this report totally. The one thing that the Government is not able to say and the Prime Minister was not able to say in Quebec was that intransigence on the part of the American administration was part of the problem. If the Prime Minister had the ability to say that, we would know that he is the mature friend and Prime Minister of a sovereign nation that he would have us believe he is.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to outline what the present Government has been able to do about the environment in just six months. I cannot respond to every point raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), because the Hon. Member talked about so many different things that his speech was no longer about acid rain but a kind of mish-mash of herring gull eggs, Canada-U.S. relations, the defence system, quotes from what was said by the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), and U.S. domination of the Canadian economy. That is more or less the kind of dialogue we have going back and forth across this House, and we have reached the point where in trying to make its position known, the Government is caught up in a completely illogical debate in which the meanings of words are twisted and situations misrepresented, all of which is thoroughly confusing to Canadians who are not getting the access to information they should normally have through Hansard.

I want to make it perfectly clear that I am not going to discuss the philosophical aspects of friendship. I am not going to discuss herring gull eggs, something we have been talking about for the last six months. I am not going to talk about the defence system, since that is not my field. I am not going to quote the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice because I do not think he should be quoted, since he is not an expert on the subject. And I am not going to talk about the domination of our economy, because I think our economy is alive and well. According to the latest polls, Canada's gross national product is performing far better than in other countries, unemployment is going down, and the situation should make us optimistic about the months to come, and that is what Canadians have been telling us in these polls. They are very satisfied with their Government, despite protests to the contrary by our New Democratic Party colleagues who are green with envy.

Mr. Speaker, on February 5 of this year, using an approach that has now become identified with this Government and that sets us apart from the previous Government of 15 years of confrontation, an approach characterized by conciliation and negociation, thanks to this entirely new style of government, we were able, within just a few months, to achieve with the provinces who are not our enemies but our partners, and we said so quite clearly after the election on September 4, and they believed us and they agreed to work with us, so that with the provinces, we agreed to proceed to a reduction in sulphur emissions, and each province agreed to set quotas to reduce sulphur emissions in Canada.

When the agreement was made public, the Liberal critic for the environment and the NDP critic said, substantially, that there was nothing to it. We thought there was a great deal to it, and our colleagues... The Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party was obviously supporting the motion presented by the Liberal environmental critic. In any case, I fail to see any clear distinction between the two parties, because they are nearly always saying the same thing, acting as a team and asking questions or supporting each other motions. It was very good timing, Mr. Speaker, because the motion condemning the Government for its failure to take action with respect to the environment came the day before, exactly the day before the public announcement of the Canadian environmental clean-up program, a plan that does not have its equal in any country. So I very much appreciated the timing of my hon. colleague, the Liberal environmental critic. I thought it was most appropriate and almost miraculous, and I said to myself that as long as we have an Opposition that is following the Government's business that closely, we will not have to worry.

That is what we have done. An agreement was signed with seven Canadian provinces, while the Western provinces which are less affected by sulphur emissions offered us their active support, so that this was a Canadian consensus. Immediately after the February 5 agreement, we continued to develop at the federal level, the federal plan to clean up acid rain pollution. That enabled us on March 6 to unveil this program under which $300 million are set aside to solve the acid emission problems. It required—a very easy task since we always proceed as a team—the cooperation of twelve federal departments or agencies. On March 6, when we made this program public, the media were practically unanimous in their praise, saying that no other country had come up with such a program to fight acid rains.

So what did they say about it? They did not say: There is nothing there, we had already said so. They told us that the program was already on file and that the Liberal Party would have made it public had it not lost the election. I began to wonder why the Liberal Party and its critic, the former Minister of Environment, who had this program ready on file during their 15 years in office, did not see fit to offer it to Canadians, but chose instead to wait until their September 4 defeat to say: Well, we had that program ready. In any event, Canadians do not pay much attention to such highfaluting statements, and we were widely commended for having come to grips with the acid rain issue. As it happened, we did manage to put the acid rain issue at the top of the agenda of a historic summit. Mr. Speaker, it was the first time since 1943 that a President of the United States and a Canadian Prime Minister got together in Quebec City, the first time, 42 years later, that acid rain was one of their priorities. So what do we hear in the House today? That the Canadian Government could not care less about acid rain, that it is indifferent, that the matter is not important, and so on. This is the kind of debate the Opposition wants to have in the House.

The President of the United States and our Prime Minister meet in a historic summit, and the first working session of the two men deals with acid rain. I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the matter of acid rain had been in limbo for at least four years. The Conservative Government can certainly not bear the blame for inaction on the part of the United States in the past four years. We get things going in six months and, through the dynamism of our Prime Minister, we succeed in calling a historic summit meeting. President Reagan agrees to put the acid rain question on the agenda. The first statement at the first working session shows that Canada and the United States see eye to eye with respect to this very complex matter which has been lying on the shelf for four years. The two men then announce the appointment of two envoys whose prestige and visibility no one can question, not even our colleagues of the Opposition.

Here are some of the remarks made by newspaper editorialists whom I consider as being very deserving and very wise people. Here is what editorialists like Jean-Louis Roy, Michel Roy or Le Droit's Alain Dexter have to say: Those two men are outstanding lobbyists. The two men, President Reagan and Prime Minister Mulroney, have just given a powerful lobby to environmentalists. They have given them two prestigious and highly-regarded men who will look exclusively into this issue, who will combine their efforts to seek a way out of the acid rain deadlock between the United States and Canada. Indeed, it must be acknowledged that the deadlook is due in part to the behaviour of the former Government which approached every problem as if it were a conflict. It was a never-ending guerilla.

They would go to the United States and insult everybody within hearing distance. They were interviewed on television only to voice further insults, and then they were wondering why joint decisions could not be reached.

Now, these two men are well thought of in both countries. It is recognized, in editorials that they surely will hasten the debate on pollution control.

This is what Mr. Roy has to say: We welcome the appointment of two great artists. Why does he refer to them as artists? Because the acid rain issue is no longer something that should be discussed by representatives of the scientific community. Quite simply because scientists have told us all there is to know about acid rain, and there is not much dispute at that level. This is why these two men, experienced as they are in the ramifications and complexity of politics, are asked to debug the issue over the coming year and entrusted with an extremely interesting responsibility. Mr. Davis and Mr. Lewis will be expected to consult on the statutes and regulations pertaining to pollutants.

Canada will be consulted on its own statutes and regulations that govern pollutants, and will be in a position to give its version, its assessment of the regulations. They have been entrusted with the responsibility of enhancing co-operation in research endeavours and here I want to refer to a research report submitted by the Royal Society of Canada to the Environment critic of the Liberal Party when he was Minister of the Environment, in which it was emphasized that research on acid rain was in a terrible mess. This was not said by me, but by the Royal Society of Canada. Clearly, the Environment critic has not said much about that, nor did he try to clear up the mess research on acid rain was in at the federal government level when he was a minister of the Crown and a member of Cabinet.

Therefore, the two appointees will have to discuss at length the question of research, to secure in their respective countries co-ordination of research endeavours and the interrelationship of research activities in both countries. They will also have to look for means to widen the exchange of scientific information in order to avoid duplication, I assume, and make a survey of all of the initiatives taken to improve the Canadian and American environment.

These two men of distinction would not have accepted the responsibility of dealing with that issue simply to sweep it under the carpet. They are men of action. They have accepted the job because they know how important it is for the environment in their respective countries, because they are convinced that they will be able to break the deadlock to which we had come because of the previous government, and to propose concrete initiatives during the upcoming year. They will be facing powerful lobbies, especially from South of the border. They will also be facing powerful unions.

The acid rain problem is tremendously complex, first because it involves huge amounts of money, and secondly because it could affect thousands of jobs. Those are aspects that are not to be taken lightly. And a whole year to try and find ways to arrive at solutions that will safeguard jobs and ensure depollution, after having had a government that did nothing for 15 years, is something that is quite acceptable in my view.

These two men are therefore both exceptional people and the former Ontario Premier, Mr. Bill Davis, is not the type to accept, to use the words of the editorial writer:

—simply to go through the motions in this regard.

The same editorial writer also said: What it was logical to except from the Quebec meeting on the issue of acid rain was that its basically political character would be recognized. For the first time, the American President, without saying so, but by his actions, has put an end to the research process, has recognized the problem of acid rain, recognized that it exists and that it is a problem common to the United States and Canada, and has agreed to appoint a prestigious envoy, who is also a personal friend of his to try to make some progress on this issue.

Therefore there will be a powerful lobby to support the efforts of environmentalist groups, which would of course have preferred us to go further. I recognize that if the problem of acid rain could have been solved in a day or two, it would have made me very happy. However, since the former Government took no action in this regard during 15 years although it made many statements on the subject, it seems to me that we have made enormous progress in achieving all we have in a period of a little over six months since our taking over.

Mr. Speaker, the climate of the negotiations is most important, because if there is a favourable climate and agreement between the negotiators, as well as mutual respect, then it is certain that progress will be made in any deadlock and those who, like myself, have been involved in negotiating labour contracts and in labour relations know that the climate of any negotiations should never be underestimated. This is true where countries are concerned, as the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) obviously knows and is always displaying, and it is also true as far as relations between the provinces and the Federal Government are concerned. This is why, in recognizing this principle through our actions, we were able to achieve quite incredible results in a very short time.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Minister for her grade three public school essay. She attempted to rewrite Canadian history according to the latest Progressive Conservative theology. I will ask her a few questions, and she can choose which ones she wants to answer. Of course, we on this side of the House are very flexible and leave the choice to her.

What are the views of the Hon. Minister with respect to the fact that environmental groups across the country, for the first time since the election, are not supportive of the Progressive Conservative Government decision on acid rain? Why is that? Does she really consider it progress, if she compares the statement of President Reagan in Quebec City on Sunday who said just about the same things on acid rain as he did in 1981 when he visited Ottawa? Why, in her view, did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan sidestep the issue, decide not to give leadership on acid rain and allow, in a way, the National Coal Association to win? The Executive Vice-President of that Association, Danny Ellerman, was quoted as saying that acid rain "is a subterfuge". The President of that Association, Carl Bagge, was quoted a month ago in The New York Times as congratulating the Prime Minister for his stand on acid rain. Is that not a strange source of praise? Perhaps the Minister could explain why the Prime Minister failed to give leaderhip on this matter by giving away Canada's bargaining position two months ago?

Did he draw the President's attention to Canada's record on a 25 per cent reduction in emissions between 1980 and 1990? Did he draw the attention of President Reagan to our commitment on March 6, 1984, to which the provinces and the federal Government unanimously agreed, to cut it by a further 25 per cent? Did he make use of the memorandum of intent which was signed by Canada and the United States on August 5, 1980? Did he draw the President's attention to the fact that on research Canada spends, on a per capita basis, twice as much as the U.S.? Did he draw the attention of President Reagan to the fact that SO_2 emissions or smoke-stack emissions in the U.S. are over five times those in Canada and that nitrogen car emissions in the U.S. are over ten times those in Canada?

Finally, what does the Minister have to say about the fact that the Prime Minister, having gone to Quebec City on his environmental knees and instead of putting the acid rain question squarely on the table with President Reagan, chickened out on Sunday and yielded to U.S. pressures? He admitted that research was still needed, taking a position with which no Canadian would agree. Not even the prestigious U.S. National Academy of Sciences would agree with that position. He agreed with further research, which is the last thing he should have done. Were Mr. Davis and Mr. Lewis given a task under the agreement? This bears upon what the Minister just said on the question of research. Why were they given in the mandate, among other things, the assignment to improve co-operation between the two nations in research efforts and to pursue ways to increase exchanges of relevant scientific information? The Minister has the choice to answer.

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I have just discovered a new approach in my hon. colleague. Now that he can no longer attack the Government since we have done much more than he did when he was a Minister, he is asking questions. I shall try to reply to all of them.

As far as the first question is concerned, unlike the Liberal environment critic, I do not try to take credit for initiatives which are not my own. It would never cross my mind to say that a Canadian program as significant as the one which was announced was part of my plans when I was in the Government if I had not implemented this program myself, because I would be admitting that I was doing nothing as Minister of the Environment. I think that this is exactly what the environment critic was doing. When he was Minister of the Environment he did make statements but nothing else. If the action plan was one of his projects, it is unfortunate for him and it shows that he was not very effective as a Minister. As for me, after putting together the Canadian action plan, I succeeded in having it approved by all my Cabinet colleagues, and six months later, it was made public. There it is.

This morning or yesterday, the environment critic quoted the President of the United States and suggested that the President had said nothing more than on his visit to Canada on March 11, 1981. Therefore I went back to Hansard and read what the President of the United States said at that time to see whether progress had been made or not. Having been a research professor, I love doing research. In Hansard for March 11, 1981, we can see that Mr. Reagan said exactly the following about acid rain, and I shall quote him in English:

[English]

We have continued our efforts begun with the Great Lakes Water Quality agreement of 1972 to protect our joint heritage in the Great Lakes. We want to continue to work co-operatively to understand and control the air and water pollution that respects no borders.

The Environment critic infers from that quotation that Canada made no progress at the summit in Quebec City. I will say quite frankly that if we never made any other progress than that made in Quebec City, I would still be quite pleased with our record compared to that of the former government. I think that the U.S. President has taken a great step forward since his 1981 statement.

As for environmental groups which disagree with our approach, some are old friends of the former minister. Once again, I will quote an editor but I do not want to blame anyone. This commentator declared: We were quite surprised at the reaction of some environmental groups and I will skip the names when the name of both envoys was announced. I quote: "Those organizations seem to have reacted too quickly when they sharply criticized the decision of Prime Minister Mulroney and President Reagan to ask two exceptional politicians to take part in the debate on acid rain". Without blaming environmental groups, I find that criticisms were made rather too quickly. Let us give to these distinguished envoys the chance to meet, which they will do so within ten days, and to develop an action plan. Then we may criticize them.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and then a question. The Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) said that after 15 years she did not know how one more year would make much of a difference. There are two things with respect to that. When we are talking about just one year, we are obviously talking about more than one year. Even if some highly significant agreement came out of the discussions between Bill Davis and Mr. Lewis of the United States, that would be an agreement to do something later than a year from now. We are not just talking about one year; we are talking about a number of years.

Something else the Minister should keep in mind when we are talking about this problem is that acid rain is the kind of environmental problem which is cumulative. The year at the end of 15 years is much more significant than the year at the beginning of the 15-year period. The Minister should try not to think in purely numerical terms about the kind of time-frame that we may be working in with respect to acid rain and a number of other environmental problems. I invite her to reflect on the nature of time as it pertains to environmental questions like this.

I have a question for her. How can she maintain that the appointment of these individuals to study acid rain was a consensus position? She used the word consensus. Presumably a consensus position is one that you arrive at after you have had two different positions. You arrive at a position that is not the same as either of the two original positions. I want to know how she can call it a consensus if the Canadian Government had the view that acid rain was something that had to be acted on and the Americans had the view that it was something that should be studied, and we agreed to study it. That is what the Minister calls a consensus. That is what I and many other people call a concession, not a consensus.

[Translation]

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member should buy himself a pocket dictionary to carry around constantly with him. Where did he get the notion that it would be impossible for countries to use negotiations to reach a compromise? A compromise is a common position arrived at by people holding different views initially. And how could this paralyze the action of a good government? I feel that the government should be commended for breaking a deadlock which had existed for nearly four years.

I suggest that a compromise is reached for pragmatic considerations. We had recognized that because of the complexity of the issue and the interests involved, it was necessary to focus on it for a while and entrust it to two senior officials with direct access, one to the President of the United States, and the other to the Prime Minister of Canada.

I think nobody can rightfully claim that this was not a way to recognize the seriousness of the matter; moreover, I know that the word "compromise" simply does not exist in the NDP dictionary.

[English]

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, returning to the first part of the New Democratic Party motion today expressing our concern about possible future linkage between the development of star wars and the uses to which our new Early Warning System may be put and the related matter of the stationing of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, let me first say a word or two and try to make as clear as I possibly can what our concerns are regarding the moedernization of the DEW Line, now called the North Warning System.

If it were indeed today and for all time a radar system purely used for detection and the communication of information, I do not think any of us would have any great concern. However, when in fact the modernization of the DEW Line is seen by the authorities in the Pentagon as having what they describe as collateral benefits for the development of the President's Strategic Defence Initiative, as star wars is formally called, we are very concerned indeed.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said this morning that we were sowing fear in the country because of our concern. Quite frankly, The Canadian public is already concerned about the possibility of the escalation of the nuclear arms race and indeed the militarization of outer space. We have not created the concern. The concern has been generated over several years now, and particularly since the President first announced two years ago the possibility of the militarization of space and the extension of the arms race into space. I think it is important to reiterate that. This lies at the root of the concern of the public. It is bad enough having an arms race on land, at sea and in the air, but when it is extended into space, with all the uncontrollable and destabilizing elements that would then be involved, surely the public is quite justified in being concerned.

As I have said, we are not dreaming up the idea that there is a relationship between the modernization of the DEW line and future collateral benefits, to use the words of the Pentagon, for star wars. We have read about these things. In a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) to which he did not respond, I asked whether or not he had actually read the minutes of the hearings of the committee on armed services of the United States Senate which occurred last spring and again last fall.

It was from reading the minutes of the hearings held before the U.S. Senate committee on armed services that I first realized fully how the Strategic Defence Initiative of the President was to be aided and abetted by certain other developments down the line. I am not saying that this will happen tomorrow. It will happen down the line. After all, star wars is at the research stage now. We have never said that anything would happen tomorrow.

The testimony recorded in those minutes to which I refer explicitly states that both the space shuttle and the modernization of the DEW line would provide collateral benefits to the Strategic Defence Initiative as it becomes developed and deployed. As Hon. Ministers would discover if they were to read the reports of the Senate committee, there is no question in the minds of the committee members of the United States Senate committee on armed services that the President's Strategic Defence Initiative will go through to deployment. In fact, they conclude their remarks by saying that the committee wants to contribute to making the president's vision a reality.

When the United States Secretary of Defense said on television the other day that missile launchers might in fact be located in Canada, he was only referring to what will happen down the line when Canada gets further and further involved in the Strategic Defence Initiative. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), quite rightly, went on to point out that Secretary Weinberger had said that these missile launchers would not be placed in Canada without Canadian consent. This question of consent only confuses the issue even more.

Before I say a few words on that matter, which very much affects the arguments the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence have been making, let me put on the record the words of Sir Geoffrey Howe regarding the entire star wars concept.

It is clear that this Government has accepted research into star wars and has accepted what the President deems to be the frontier of a ballistic missile defence. I have not heard anyone from the government side, let alone the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), deny their support for the concept of a ballistic missile defence. Indeed, this morning the Minister came quite close to saying that if such a defence is contrary to the ABM treaty, there would have to be negotiations presumably to work our way out of that treaty.

Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Minister of Foreign Affairs for the United Kingdom, has very grave reservations indeed about the development of star wars. As reported in the Ottawa Citizen of March 16, he said the following at a meeting last week:

"the enormous technological expertise and potential of the United States" is very great.

He paid tribute to that technology. I am only reading the parts of the article which are in quotes because I have not yet read the full speech. He then went on to say:

"there would be no advantage in creating a new Maginot Line of the 21st century, liable to be outflanked by relatively simpler and demonstrably cheaper countermeasures."

He went on:

"We must make sure we are not developing what might prove to be only a limited defence against weapons of devastating, destructive force," . . .

"We must be especially on our guard against raising hopes that it may be impossible to fulfill."

He then went on to discuss the holes in the dike or the holes in the Maginot Line of the Strategic Defence Initiative of President Reagan. He asks:

"Would these holes in the dike," . . . "produce and even encourage a nuclear flood?"

We all feel that we in this House have not had a sufficient discussion of the implications of star wars on the strategic balance and indeed we have not had sufficient discussion of its technical feasibility let alone its strategic desirability. I gather from the BBC news that Sir Geoffrey Howe's remarks are the top story in the United Kingdom today joined with the story of very similar remarks made yesterday by the West German Foreign Minister, Hans Dietrich Genscher, who was again questioning both the technical feasibility and the strategic desirability of star wars.

Again our Ministers will say to us that they have only approved the Reagan initiative so far as research is concerned. The Minister from the United Kingdom and West Germany are questioning the research. That is the point I wish to get through to our Ministers. We and the NDP are not the only ones questioning the research. Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom and West Germany are questioning it because they do see it as being destabilizing. They do see it as changing the entire strategic balance. They do see it as being an escalation of the arms race into space.

The Minister said that he came before the committee to discuss this matter. He came before the committee for 64 minutes. He said that he was asked no more questions after that time. Unfortunately I was ill on that day and could not be present. I read the minutes very carefully. I will take this matter up with him again when he comes before the committee. However, at page 42 of the minutes of February 14, he did say:

The question has been raised whether or not more questions should be asked. I am in the hands of the committee on that question and will look forward to hearing from the chairman.

The Chairman tells me that he did ask the Minister to come before the committee, that he phoned the Minister's office many times to ask him to come to the committee prior to the signing of the North Warning System agreement, and that the Minister declined to come before the committee as did the Minister of National Defence. It is a little excessive on the part of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for him to say that he gave the committee all the time it needed and wanted. We desperately wanted more time with the Minister, but he did not oblige us by coming on any one of the three days last week on which I am told by the Chairman he was asked to come.

On the related matter of the North Warning System, which is also embodied in the Liberal amendment of our motion, the matter of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, again I want to make it absolutely clear to the Minister that we are trying to address this as carefully and as clearly as we can. I know he is as well. Indeed, I took down his words exactly this morning. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said this morning that in the agreement there is "a guarantee that any Canadian Government would have the right to refuse the stationing of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil". I have two points: first, that is not what we are asking. What we are asking, which is quite different, is a commitment from the Government now that nuclear weapons will never be stationed on Canadian soil. The Minister must know that by the time a crisis exists, or an advanced alert comes about, there is no time to be consulted. A country has no option at that stage. I am not talking about a state of war. I am talking of a state of crisis.

Does one imagine that the B-52 bombers, loaded with Cruise missiles, which are supposed to scramble from their base in California to Cold Lake, Alberta, at the moment an alert is signalled are going to be held up until the Canadian Government agrees? If that is the case, then I want the Minister to tell us that the United States has agreed to hold up any stationing or sending of nuclear missiles to Canadian soil on the B-52 bomber or in whatever other way until we have said OK. The Minister has not told us that that is what will be done because, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that is not what would be done.

Hon. Members will remember what happened when Mr. Nixon called the state of alert in 1974. There was no consultation, nor would there be, nor can there be, at that late stage. The Minister said there would be consultation before there would be any deployment of nuclear depth bombs at Comox and Greenwood. But one has to make some preparations, as the chief of our own general staff said, for the acceptance of those nuclear depth bombs. One has to make some preparation at the bases, as he himself quite rightly pointed out when he was interviewed on this.

So the Minister in a sense is deceiving us when he says that the Canadian Government would have the right to refuse the stationing of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. That right is not an option which in practice we would have should a time of crisis arise. So what I am asking the Minister, if he does not agree with what I have just said, is to tell me exactly how we would be consulted in the instances I have just given. If he cannot do that, then would he give some assurance to us now that nuclear weapons will never be stationed on Canadian soil?

The Minister asked today why he should have brought the North Warning System agreement to the House of Commons. Other agreements in the past had not been brought to the House of Commons, so why should there be, therefore, any public discussion through the Parliament of Canada? I found that a very alarming statement. In the first place, it is inaccurate. After all, the NORAD agreement was brought before the House. Mr. Diefenbaker did not want to do that. If one goes back to the 1958 debates one will see that Mr. Diefenbaker did not want the NORAD agreement brought before the House of Commons. But he finally agreed and it was brought before the House, chiefly because his Secretary of State for External Affairs of that day argued him into bringing it before the House, which is more than I can say for the present Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The NORAD agreement was brought before the House, it was debated and it was voted upon, so there is a precedent. Furthermore, when the Conservatives were in opposition they argued, at least my hon. friend from Victoria, whom I see here today, argued, that one of the most significant developments which should have come before the House of Commons when the Liberals were in power was the framework agreement which enabled the testing of Cruise missiles. The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and I were quite energetic about it, and other Hon. Members of the Conservative Party, I am sure, were equally concerned that that agreement did not come before Parliament. Yet today and yesterday both Ministers refused any further meetings with the committee. Sixty-four minutes was enough. They have refused to hold hearings where Canadians and other experts in the field could be heard on the long-term implications of the modernization of the DEW Line for the Strategic Defence Initiative, as well as the possibility or otherwise of Canada really having a choice in refusing nuclear weapons on its soil. Instead of doing that, instead of bringing it before committee and allowing experts to talk and explain, they passed it as quickly as possible through Cabinet in order to sign it with President Reagan this past weekend.

President Reagan was, of course, delighted. In fact, as I considered the whole weekend, I could not help thinking that our Prime Minister was like the young man who is taking the boss home for dinner. That is the way he behaved during that whole weekend. He did not at any point give me the confidence or the feeling that he was even asking the right questions.

An Hon. Member: You would rather he had insulted him, I suppose.

Ms. Jewett: No, I would not want the Prime Minister to insult him. I don't believe in insulting people myself and I don't believe he needed to insult him. But I think all Canadians should be pretty concerned that he did not ask the kinds of questions I am asking today and for which we have never had answers from either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of National Defence. I would like to hear from both, their comments on what Sir Geoffrey Howe is saying as well as what Hans Deitrich Genscher is saying.

The Canadian Government and the Prime Minister did not challenge the President of the United States, as far as I can discover, on any American positions, even that on Central America, about which I would have thought this Government had at least a somewhat different view from President Reagan. I have now decided that it does not. It cannot have. President Reagan made that incredible lunch-time speech yesterday, blasting away at Nicaragua once again—which he has been doing for the last weeks—supporting the Contras, and we just sat meekly by. We, who have provided expertise for the Contadora peace plan, knowing full well that the President of the United States is doing his very best to scuttle that plan, do not say a word to President Reagan.

In the midst of the arms negotiations in Geneva between the United States and the U.S.S.R., President Reagan made the most vehement, almost blasphemous, references to the position of the U.S.S.R. which I ever heard. I thought, by the way, Mr. Speaker, it was an insult to come to Canada and make those kinds of remarks about the Government of Nicaragua, the support for the Contras, and the Soviet approach toward arms control. He made those remarks, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, only because, as in the case of star wars, he knew that he had our Prime Minister in his pocket.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out what the Canadian people are really concerned about. The Hon. Member for New Westminster (Ms. Jewett) might want to trust the communists, but I am afraid that there is enough evidence at hand to know that we cannot trust the communists. We can see that from their actions in Afghanistan where they burned children in front of their parents. They dropped booby-trapped toys which blew off the hands and fingers of children. So we have serious doubts about taking their word—

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member to comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Mr. McKenzie: The speech dealt with star wars, and what we and the Canadian people are concerned about is the star wars equipment on both sides, not just that of the United States. We want both sides to abandon their star wars equipment, not just the United States. The reason the U.S. has to develop the star wars equipment is to keep up with the U.S.S.R. We hope that at the top they will both agree to disband everything and get rid of all nuclear weapons as well as chemical weapons.

Russia has a number of types of star wars equipment. They have RORSAT, a radar ocean-reconnaissance satellite. This is an advanced piece of weaponry. It can probably detect destroyer and aircraft carrier-size ships in good weather. The Russians also have ERORSAT, which is another electronic intelligence ocean-reconnaissance satellite and which is used with RORSAT for detecting and tracking of naval vessels in open or coastal waters. If we are to sit back and do nothing and allow them to develop this kind of equipment, we will have nothing with which to protect ourselves. We would be absolutely vulnerable. The ERORSAT is the Soviet-based space system which is possibly most capable of sea target detection, so you can see they are way ahead of us. They also have ELINT III. This is the third generation electronic intelligence satellite. They operate in a record playback mode and can locate pulsed emitters to a best accuracy of about 10 kilometres. They can detect radars on operating air fields if they use pulsed emitters and possibly provide an after-the-fact assessment of the location of airborne warning and control systems. The Russians also have the advanced ELINT, and experts anticipate deployment of that system by the end of 1985.

I do not understand the NDP and its position that it is just the United States that we have to concern ourselves about. We have to concern ourselves about the Warsaw Pact countries with nuclear and chemical weapons, as well as star wars equipment, and we have to be sure we can defend ourselves against their advanced development. So we in the Conservative Party want to see disarmament on both sides, not unilateral disarmament. Criticism should be levelled also at the Warsaw Pact countries. They are the ones who are ahead of us. I have never spoken to any Canadian who wants just us on this side to disarm. We know that that would be absolute suicide. That would be the end of us for all time.

There is no such a thing as not having to co-operate with the United States. The majority of Canadians now understand why we have to test the Cruise missile and they understand why we have to do research into star wars. It is because of the Warsaw Pact build-up. So it is a two way street. If we did not have to develop star wars we would have all the money in the world to wipe out acid rain. We want to wish the negotiators the best of luck on this question, but we want both sides to disarm.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs is going to Russia in a couple of weeks and I am sure he will be discussing our concerns with the Russians. We want them to eliminate their star wars equipment and chemical warfare weapons and all the rest. We want disarmament on both sides, not just this side.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear the Hon. Member say that. I am more than delighted because, as he probably does not know, the U.S.S.R. is not advanced at all in star wars technology compared with the U.S. Indeed, most American experts in the field will concede that. The Hon. Member has said they both should stop their star wars development. Boy, am I ever in favour of that. We are all in favour of that, so I am glad to see he is on side.

Mr. McKenzie: You finally said it.

Ms. Jewett: That is exactly what we want to see. He probably does not realize that the U.S. would not dream of stopping, but I am glad to see that he wants them to stop, as well as the Soviet Union.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) and I would like to comment on comments she made about the speech that was given by Geoffrey Howe, which she seemed to support in its entirety. I am curious as to whether she has read the London Times which blasted Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe and said that his speech was "mealy-mouthed, muddled in conception, negative, and, in effect if not intentions, a wrecking amendment to the whole plan". The newspaper said, "he had handed Mr. Gorbachev all the best lines with which to oppose SDI and drive a wedge between Europe and the United States". It went on:

> With the Geneva talks beginning and Mr. Gorbachev poised to exploit the historic Soviet aim of decoupling Europe from America, it is indeed astonishing that the British government chooses this moment to be so negative about what ministers know is the core of the Reagan administration's strategic philosophy.

We have not yet got late enough news to know whether the Government of Britain supports Mr. Howe in his speech.

The other news that is breaking is that Belgium, after a very great deal of soul searching, has decided to deploy the Cruise missiles, which is another thing bitterly opposed by the Hon.

Member. I am curious as to why she seems always to be on the same side of these difficult decisions, that is in favour of the position taken by the U.S.S.R. and opposed to the one taken by NATO.

Ms. Jewett: I do not think the Hon. Member means to suggest that Sir Geoffrey Howe is a closet communist. That is about the way he sounds. As the Hon. Member knows, the fact is that a major speech of that kind would require the prior approval of the Prime Minister of the country. Unless there has been a slip-up, I would assume that the speech he made had the Prime Minister's approval.

As to the Belgian question, there is no doubt in my mind that it was a very difficult decision for the Belgian Government to make. One can see this from what I think was 100,000 people who marched in protest on Sunday. I would not say, given the outcry from the populace over the decision, that it is a decision that they will be able to keep. They may have to change that decision or there may even have to be a change in government.

I am sure the Hon. Member, because we have talked about these matters many times, would agree with me that there is always and must be in our society an interaction between what governments do and what the strong feelings of people are. At the same time, there is an attempt to have an intellectual discourse and, quite frankly, I do believe that is what Geoffrey Howe was doing. He was asking if we want a Maginot Line in space. Surely the Hon. Member is not suggesting that we should not ask those questions and try to find answers. Surely not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Caccia: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I apologize to the Minister but I just want to raise with you the question of whether or not it might not be more in keeping with parliamentary practice, this being a day devoted to the Opposition, to allow the Official Opposition to have three speakers, as has the NDP. If we move over to the government side, and looking at the clock, they would then have more speakers than the Official Opposition by the time this debate ends. I am pointing out to you, Your Honour, the desirability of recognizing a speaker on our side.

• (1710)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I realize this is an Opposition Day, with the main motion being that of the NDP. So far we have had five speakers from the combined opposition Parties and only two from the Government. That is why I recognized the Deputy Prime Minister. However, there will most likely be some time left. At that time the debate will be closed with a speaker from the Official Opposition. I recognize for debate the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to address the North Warning System element of this debate. I want to do it in the political context in which the discussion is taking place this afternoon. Contrary to the belief of the Hon. Member who has just resumed her seat, I will be appearing before the Standing Committee on Thursday at or about 3.30 in the afternoon. I sincerely hope that she will not be ill at that time so that she will be able to be present and put forth whatever questions she did not have the opportunity to put forth because of her absence when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) appeared before that committee.

I would like to open my remarks today, Mr. Speaker, with the following quote:

> Canada is a veteran of the two world wars and of Korea. We have acquired our national sovereignty honourably, in important measure through the enormous sacrifice of generations of Canadians who with genuine courage—and in many cases, with their very lives—spoke for our unshakeable commitment to freedom, our unquenchable belief in democracy. Having thus acquired our independence, we shall surrender no part of it any time in any circumstance.

That was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speaking at Quebec City over the weekend. That is the stance of the Government with respect to the several questions which members of the Opposition, and others outside of this place, have been raising in order to sow fear and doubt in the minds of Canadians with respect to the real purpose of NWS.

The Member who just resumed her seat said herself that she would not be alarmed, as most Canadians would not be alarmed, if the purpose of NWS was radar surveillance. I see her nodding in affirmation from where she is standing behind the curtains. However, she will not accept that NWS is exactly that. In upgrading and modernizing NWS we are precisely replacing the system that is in place. The assistance which that system gives to civil aviation is a dimension which has not been addressed. If the Hon. Member had flown as many hours as I have in the north using that system, she would have a different view. That is all that NWS is intended to do and will do.

What the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) has called the most radical change in Canada-U.S. relations in this century, in reference to the Quebec summit, is simply a return to the civility and readiness to live up to responsibilities that are implicit in treaties that this country has been a party to for many years. As co-signers of NORAD we undertook certain defence obligations embracing the defence of this continent and of the free world. We are living up to those commitments. The only radical change is that our Government is acting as though we intended to live up to those arrangements and to be active and participating partners in our own defence.

I need only refer you to history, Sir, to indicate the very short shrift of those nations which have left the responsibility of their defence to others. That is precisely what the NDP is advocating. If we have learned one thing from history, it is that countries which lose interest in their defence come to lose their liberty, freedom and independence. That is what they are advocating over there. They are advocating the hands-off approach. They believe that we can put off the fact that we are now living in a nuclear age. The NDP appears to believe that Canada can sit on its hands and leave its defence and, I presume, the defence of the free world, to the United States. It believes that we can have a free ride. That is not what we believe. I do not think that attitude will commend itself to the majority of Canadians. The Government intends to meet its obligations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I almost saw the halo of the hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) slipping down around his eyes as he was breast-beating in his haste to dissociate himself and his Party with any thought that they would have any anti-Americanism seeds in their bosoms. However, with them that is a fact. It is a course of irreponsibility, in my view, and it is difficult to discern any difference between the defence posture of the NDP and that which I heard outlined in TASS according to news reports of yesterday.

I think it is equally regrettable that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), whose Party has paid lip service to NATO and whose Government approved each and every defence arrangement leading up to the summit, should now adopt an irresponsible attitude of partisanship. That is precisely what they were doing today as came forward in the speech of the Leader of the Official Opposition. No matter how hard they try, they cannot wipe out the past participation of that Party in the arrangements that he was criticizing today. His position can be summarized very simply. It is not a strong principle sustained by strong men.

At least the position of the Leader of the NDP is clear. He distrusts the Americans and everything they stand for. That, at least, is consistent. It has always been the policy of his Party, no matter how much the Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill hastens to scurry away from that position at this late date.

I can only describe the position of the Leader of the Official Opposition as an enigma wrapped in obscurity. He approves our objectives. He whole-heartedly supports closer relations. He wants to live up to our responsibilities. He is just put out because we were the ones to do these things. He and his Party had 10 years in which to do them but they did little or nothing. When the Liberal Party left office, relations with the United States were at their lowest ebb since 1812. His attitude of trying to ride in both directions at the same time is certainly not conducive to creative relations. What is really eating their hearts out, Mr. Speaker, is that the summit in Quebec was a success, that there was real progress made. That is what is eating them.

As an aside, I would indicate that the summit has done more than any other single event in my recollection to sow the seeds of national unity in this country. He again trotted out the Trudeau dictum of even-handed justice to both superpowers. This demonstrates once again the Liberal party's inability to draw the line between our friends and those who have not demonstrated the kind of friendship and understanding of western democracy that we expect from friends. In the very next breath, he said, "Of course the Americans are our friends". We agree with that. However, where we seem to part company is that we intend to give our friends the benefit of the doubt.

As I have already mentioned, there is some excuse for the NDP, given its traditional distrust of the Americans, but there is no excuse for the carping, critical, uninformed and petty attitude of members of the Official Opposition. I would ask them, in all sincerity, to look around the world and gain a perception of present realities and future opportunities.

Canadians are entitled to a real and honest appreciation of the real problems of our time. What we got from the Leader of the Official Opposition was warmed over Trudeauism. Tom Axworthy may be gone but his spirit lived on this morning in the sorry, sad diatribe of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

The Prime Minister of Canada and President Reagan confirmed in Quebec honest and positive policies and progress between our two countries. They confirmed that friends and allies must work together. They confirmed that friends and allies must be honest with each other. They confirmed that friends and allies must make real efforts to keep lines of communication open. That was a historic restoration of a relationship which has been allowed to wither and die under 16 years of Liberal office.

At Quebec, the Prime Minister addressed himself to the realities of which Canadians are all aware each day of our lives and took steps to restore a relationship of civility and honest endeavour between Canada and the United States.

The benefits of that epochal action will flow into every phase of our economic and commercial life in this country in the months ahead. No amount of carping and criticism from the NDP and no amount of nostalgic posturing—for it can only be called that—by the Leader of the Opposition will alter the fact that a powerful blow for Canadian sovereignty was struck at Quebec over the weekend. Our Government has taken a step forward in history while the Grits are dragging their feet and the NDP is at least dragging its prejudices, if not something worse.

The majority of Canadians will understand and approve what took place because they have more confidence in Canada and more confidence in friends and allies than either of the two discredited Parties on the opposite side of the House. It cannot be emphasized too often that the Strategic Defence Initiative is, first, a research project and, second, strictly an American initiative which will go on whether Canada or any other country approves. To attempt to tie in, as they have done in their very motion, SDI with an updated radar warning system in the North, is about as logical as to say—and I am certainly not advocating this—that issuing Canadian troops with Enfield rifles constitutes a back-up for SDI.

Obviously the Opposition strategy now is that any defence development, whether it is in aircraft, in tanks, in ships or in guns, will immediately be described by them as a back-up to SDI. I think they should get their minds out of Hollywood movies and deal with these important matters as they really are. This applies again to the Official Opposition above all and particularly to former Ministers sitting over there now who were present and who actively contributed when the system and agreements were put together.

It would be, on reflection, very useful to see what they are really saying in the Official Opposition as well as in the NDP. On the one hand they say that if it is only a radar system, they have no cause for alarm. But then they proceed methodically and for their own motives to provide the linkage in order to create the fear—

Ms. Jewett: It is right here.

Mr. Nielsen: No matter how many documents—

Ms. Jewett: From the U.S. Senate.

Mr. Nielsen: —the Hon. Member holds up, no matter how often she says it, she will have to appreciate that sooner or later she must accept the word of myself, the word of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the word of the Prime Minister that there is no linkage between the two systems.

Ms. Jewett: Why don't you read this?

Mr. Nielsen: I don't care how many times you say it—for the Liberals to be advancing that nonsense, it is—

Ms. Jewett: It is unbelievable.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, it is unbelievable that that kind of political posturing should be done by the Hon. Member with no justification whatsoever. She is telling us not to proceed with NWS and not to proceed with updating our radar surveillance in this country because there may be a linkage with SDI. She is really saying that there should be no updating of that radar system. Her Party is saying that Canadians should not be operating that system and should not be maintaining that system. She is saying, "So what, 11,500 jobs? What the heck". That is what it will mean in jobs for Canadians.

Ms. Jewett: Now we are on jobs.

Mr. Nielsen: She is saying, "So what for industrial and commercial spinoffs that will result from this project." All it is doing is bringing a woefully inadequate, costly to maintain, radar system up to date. Sooner or later she will digest that.

Ms. Jewett: Why don't you talk about missile launchers?

Mr. Nielsen: Right now, I can tell her that, given the present system, and knowing the system, there are gaps in it which would permit intrusion of our air space without any knowledge on the part of Canadians.

What she is saying as a result of her Party adopting the position that they are advocating is that we should not under any circumstances ensure that Canadians know who is coming into our air space. She does not realize that it has nothing to do with space.

I believe that Members should not delude themselves into believing that such systems are not operating in other countries. One only has to recall the Korean airliner to know very well that they do operate in other countries. It is not a quantum leap to arrive at that conclusion.

The simple fact is that whether we do it with the Americans or not, the North Warning System must be updated. That decision was reached and that work was done, going back nine years, long before SDI was even thought of.

Hon. Members must realize that they must at least start to accept responsibility, to discuss these matters in an intelligent and coherent way without trying to diffuse and confuse an issue such as NWS by linking it with SDI.

I wish I had the time because I would like to demonstrate to the Hon. Member and others, who probably have limited experience in Arctic flying and Arctic navigation, the value that radar has in flying over 1.3 million square miles of Arctic where compass unreliability is at its highest. I think that if the Hon. Members were exposed to that kind of experience, certainly as crew members they would have some appreciation of the civil aviation dimension that is inherent in an efficient, well operated radar surveillance system, which is what NWS is.

● (1730)

I close, Sir, as I began by reminding Hon. Members of the words of the Prime Minister in Quebec calling our attention to the fact that we are a veteran of two world wars and Korea, that we have acquired our national sovereignty honourably and, in important measure, owing to the enormous sacrifice of generations of Canadians who, with genuine courage and in many cases with their very lives, ensured that we would be able to function in this mode discussing matters such as this. Once again, let me caution Members that countries that do not pay attention to history and its lessons, that neglect the defence of their country, that lose interest in the defence of their country, are very soon the victims of the loss of their liberties, loss of their freedoms, loss of their independence and, indeed, loss of their country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have one very short question which requires a very short answer. Would the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) tell us whether he supports the use of AECL funds for the development of nuclear power for the North Warning System? Would he support the powering of the North Warning System sites with nuclear power in both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, I think that the Hon. Member is alluding to the so-called nuclear battery, which is very much in the experimental stage. At the moment the power source for the system itself has not yet been determined.

AECL quite independently is working on research into the nuclear battery. What that will lead to we do not know. We are in the world of hypothesis. I am not going to venture a yes or a no answer to a question about a nuclear battery that may not ever come about or a radar system that will function on power generated from quite a different source. At the moment I would expect that the conventional sources of supplying power are those contemplated, but that could change.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, in the most recent Congressional Budget there is a suggestion that two of the sites in Canada will be powered in 1986-87 with the nuclear generation system that is being developed in Los Alamos. Following completion of testing in Los Alamos, if it is suggested for implementation at those two or more sites, would the Minister of National Defence support that kind of powering for sites north of 60?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think I have enough problems looking after our own budgetary problems and have very little spare time to be studying the budgets of other countries. I can tell the Hon. Member that, regardless of what might be displayed in the budgets of other countries, we will make the decisions on behalf of Canadians in Canada for Canada.

Mr. Gurbin: Could the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen), insofar as is possible in this forum, describe the limitations that are present in the current system? I understand the gaps, but could he explain more fully what other limitations the system might have that we now have in place?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the big limitation is in the millions of dollars per year maintenance because the system is outmoded and inefficient.

There are, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs described, holes in the atmospheric roof that have to be plugged. Those are mainly in central and eastern Canada and in the High Arctic adjacent to those areas. But given the modernized NWS that is contemplated, there will be a tight and total surveillance capacity over the entire air space of Canada. It is meant and intended to be for the defence of Canada in asserting our sovereignty over that air space so we know what aircraft are intruding into that air space and so we can make decisions with respect to that intrusion. But gaps there are and those gaps will have to be plugged and will be plugged by the modernization of the system.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, there is quite a contrast between the glowing terms with which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) describes the Quebec meeting last weekend and the comments by a conservatively inclined newspaper of Toronto, The Toronto Sun. The column written by Claire Hoy, from which I will quote briefly, just to put things back into a different perspective at least, reads:

> Like a small child tugging at his mother's skirts for attention, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney yesterday took our natural intercontinental friendship with the U.S. into the uncomfortable realm of mindless obedience to a powerful parent.
> The so-called Shamrock summit—is supposed to demonstrate how two relatively equal sovereign states can resolve their common differences.
> Instead, it has all the appearance of an American master being greeted by a panting Canadian lapdog, wagging his tail furiously hoping to have a few bones tossed in his direction.
> The first and most important bone was an agreement by the two leaders to name former Ontario Premier Bill Davis and former U.S. Transportation Secretary Andrew Lewis as special envoys to resolve the joint issue of acid rain.
> The appointment is instructive because it demonstrates how stage-managed this event is, and underscores the fact that if you want to defuse the volatile political issue, nobody could bury it better than Davis.

This, of course, is by way of background commentary. I would not want to elaborate further in that direction. What I would like to do briefly is to bring to your attention the fact, as a result of the announcement on acid rain over the weekend, for the first time this Progressive Conservative Government is facing an environmental community of non-governmental groups which, for the first time since election, are not supportive of the Conservative Government decision on acid rain.

Why is that coming about for the first time? Evidently there is profound disappointment and not only just within the ranks of non-governmental groups.

President Reagan, if you look at the record, said in Quebec City just about the same on acid rain as he did in 1981 when he came to Ottawa. Can that be called progress? I suppose in Progressive Conservative terms that can be called progress, but the Conservatives will be alone with that kind of assessment.

In Quebec City the Prime Minister and President Reagan failed to give leadership on this important question. They side-stepped the issue and really the winner on that day was the National Coal Association. The Executive Vice-President, Danny Ellerman, speaking on acid rain said, "Acid rain is a subterfuge". This is the same Coal Association whose President, Carl Bagge, wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) some weeks ago complimenting him on his stand on acid rain. Isn't that a strange source for praise, Mr. Speaker?

The question is, why did the Prime Minister fail to give leadership? Why did he give away Canada's bargaining position two months ago? Why did he not draw to the attention of the President that smoke-stack emissions in Canada are 4.6 million tonnes compared with 26 million tonnes in the United States, theirs being over five times ours and we being downwind of theirs? Why did he not bring to their attention that in terms of research in Canada we spend on a per capita basis twice as much as the U.S.? Why did he not bring to their attention that in terms of car emissions, tonnage per year, U.S. emissions are ten times ours? Did he make any use of the memorandum of understanding which was signed in August 1980? Why did he feel he had to go to Quebec City on his environmental knees instead of putting the issue squarely to President Reagan for solution because it can only be dealt with at the political level?

Scientific communities in Canada and in the United States have agreed that there is enough scientific knowledge to move with a decision. This statement was made back in 1983 by the United States National Academy of Sciences. In essence, the Prime Minister agreed to further research.

It is quite clear from the interventions this afternoon that the Progressive Conservative Government is desperately trying to rewrite history and to convince the Canadian public that the acid rain story began on September 4, 1984. It might be worthwhile to put on the record the fact that on August 5, 1980 the memorandum of intent on acid rain between Canada and the United States was signed. It raised a lot of hope, and quite rightly so. We thought we could continue in the fine tradition of settling trans-boundary environmental issues jointly, as we did with Lake Erie and on many other occasions. Efforts followed, but when it became evident that not even William Ruckelshaus, in charge of the Environmental Protection Agency in Washington, could convince his own Government to proceed with a control program in the winter of 1983-84, we had to make a decision on our own. On March 6, 1984, provincial and federal Ministers of the Environment jointly decided to go for a cut of 50 per cent by 1984. On March 20 of the same year, here in Ottawa, nine friendly and similarly inclined nations joined us in a declaration whereby we would commit ourselves to a minimum cut of 30 per cent by 1993. In May of that year, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, through its Minister, produced a paper for the modernization of non-ferrous smelters, indicating how a reduction in emissions could be achieved. In June of that year, the political commitment was renewed again in Ottawa. Also we had the satisfaction in Munich of seeing the number go up from 10 to 20 nations committed to join in the 30 per cent cut by 1993.

The focus is now shifting away from Ottawa and Washington. Apparently it is in the hands of Messrs. Davis and Lewis. We should ask ourselves what will bring Americans to the negotiating table to cut down SO_2 emissions. There are only two considerations which one has to keep in mind. Either the U.S. Government will be motivated by domestic economic considerations—and evidently those considerations have not yet emerged in their political mind—or by international pressures by the international community urging the United States administration to join this minimum group of nations willing to cut down the emissions by 30 per cent by 1993.

We have an opportunity between now and next July in Helsinki when EEC member nations will be meeting to sign the protocol. I urge the Government to pay attention to this opportunity. It is through that group that we might be able to bring the United States Government to the table to join with us in the cuts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply now before the House in accordance with Standing Order 62(9). Accordingly, the question is the following one. Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Deans, moves:

That this House condemns the Government's failure in bilateral relations with the United States with particular reference to:

1. the failure to obtain an agreement from the United States to make a commitment to early action on its share of environmental damage due to acid rain; and

2. the failure to make specific, that Canada would not participate in any way in the star wars project of the United States.

In amendment thereto, Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Chrétien, moves:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "rain" and by adding the following:

", and by allowing a one-year moratorium before any concrete action is taken by the United States despite the express wish of millions of Canadians and Americans; and

"(b) the failure to make specific that Canada would not participate in any way in the star wars project of the United States and, especially, the failure to obtain ironclad guarantees that no nuclear arms will be stationed or deployed in Canada."

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)), which was negatived on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

CULTURE

NECESSITY TO PROMOTE CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, history and contemporaries may judge governments by how they promote cultural development and growth and how they encourage artistic endeavour. Governments come and go, but the artistic achievements, the works of art produced during their mandate remain as witnesses of history.

Although the present Government has not been in power long enough to leave any tangible proof of its support for the arts, it is certainly not on the right track. If the recent cut-backs in federal expenditures on culture are any indication of the Government's intentions, I am convinced that this Government is prepared to preside over a massive erosion of this country's impressive cultural achievements.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps this Government could not care less how it is judged today or in the future on its contribution to the cultural life of this country, but as a Member of this House and as a Canadian citizen, I have no wish to live in a culturally arid climate nor to leave a worthless legacy to future generations. I therefore urge the Government to do everything in its power to enrich our cultural life now and for future generations.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

PROTECTION OF LONG-TERM DEPOSITS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Government, as I brought to the attention of the former Government about a year ago, the fact that there is a very serious omission in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, which was amended and passed into law on April 27, 1983.

We are all aware that the amendments, among other things, raised the amount from $20,000 to $60,000 that one could have on deposit in an account that would be insured against the possibility of a bank, trust company, or other institution in which the funds are deposited, going bankrupt. The Act, as it now reads, applies to funds in savings accounts, and also to fixed deposits for five years or less. However, funds on deposit that are locked in for a period of more than five years are not included and are not protected by the Canada Deposit Insurance Act.

I believe the vast majority of Canadians are unaware of this and believe that their funds are perfectly safe and protected if the term of fixed deposit is more than five years. Therefore, I call upon the Government to make this information readily available to Canadians, and to change the Canada Deposit Insurance Act so that it applies to all deposits, regardless of the number of years during which deposits are in place.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

DELAY IN SIGNING ERDA AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, according to the Vancouver Sun, Premier Bennett said that the 19 Conservative MPs from British Columbia "must fight for British Columbia in a caucus of over 200. They have to fight their colleagues for very limited federal dollars". He implied that they do not seem to have much influence with their own Government, and asked New Democrats to join in the fight. Although Premier Bennett has not communicated directly with us, I want to assure him that we will continue to fight, as we have in the past, for a fair share of federal dollars.

In spite of the demonstrated need in areas such as forestry and tourism, British Columbia is now the only province not to have an economic and regional development agreement with the federal Government. Earlier, Quebec signed a five-year $1.8 billion agreement. On a proportional basis, British Columbia should get $650 million. Why the long delay? Is it because the federal Government is not willing to put up the dollars for British Columbia despite our 15 per cent unemployment rate? Or is it because the provincial Socreds want to siphon money from reforestation to support election gimmicks such as the deficit on Expo '86? Or are both Governments simply playing games? The economic crisis is destroying individuals, families, and communities in British Columbia. Any help the federal and provincial Governments can give must be given now.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Member his time has expired. The Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin).

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

HANDBOOK FOR PARENTS

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, it is with great feeling that I tell the House today of two constituents of mine, Terry and Tannis Jarvis, who, by their strength and determination, learned to cope with a situation that most of us cannot begin to imagine.

Three and one-half years ago, when their son Taylor was diagnosed as having a handicap, Terry and Tannis, like so many Canadian parents, were faced with the realities of raising a handicapped child. In their efforts to help parents like themselves to learn to cope with their initial confusion, frustration, and fear, they worked long hours to produce a free handbook entitled You Are Not Alone. This is a parent-to-parent handbook that gives their experiences, useful information, and valuable advice. It is unique because it was written by the parents themselves, not by psychologists, sociologists, or other specialists in the field.

This handbook was published by a provincial Government. I commend it to the House and express the hope that the Government of Canada will see fit to translate it and distribute it free, so all parents of handicapped children, regardless of the province in which they live, can benefit from it.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the arts and cultural industries speak to and of the heart and soul of our great country. They are vitally important to our national spirit, our sense of identity and belonging, and this I see as their primary purpose. Apart from this important contribution to our society, they are also important in material terms. The Government may or may not understand and appreciate the non material contribution of the arts to our society, but I do expect it to comprehend the economic and employment benefits which the arts and the cultural industries offer to our economy.

This is a vital and growing sector of our economy, Mr. Speaker, and the recent cuts to the cultural sector are therefore short-sighted, not only in purely cultural terms but in economic terms as well.

• (1410)

If the Government does not understand our hearts and minds, it does profess to understand the bottom line. If for no other reason than sound economics, I urge the Government to increase, not decrease, its investment in this rewarding sector of our society and our economy.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—ACTION PLAN ANNOUNCED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say few words about the major environmental protection program that will be aimed at reducing acid rain by 50 per cent between now and 1994 and at eliminating more than 45 per cent of hydrocarbon emissions between now and the year 2000.

The action plan announced by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) is the most ambitious program Canada has ever known. It has no equivalent anywhere in the world.

During the next decade, the offensive against acid rain in Canada will cost the Government more than $300 million. The previous Administration lacked the moral energy and political will to go ahead with such a plan.

In accordance with the strategy that has been announced, the Progressive Conservative Government is going beyond the conventional ecological rhetoric to take concrete action. Incidentally, this decision is part of an on-going process of co-operation with the provinces and especially with industry.

In view of the extent of the damage caused by acid rain, our Government has acknowledged its responsibility for the future of this country and has decided to take action to protect the health, well-being and economic heritage of present and future generations of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Canada, a medium-sized nation, by giving concrete proof of its desire to take action in this area, was able to convince the President of the United States, who has acknowledged that acid rain is a joint problem for which joint solutions are necessary.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

LOBBY AGAINST FUNDING CUT-BACKS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the artists of Canada have chosen the first day of spring for their march on Parliament Hill. Artists have lobbied before, notably when the Liberal Government a few years ago made important cuts in arts funding. But this marks an important step forward in size, representation, and vigour of the protest.

These artists and arts groups are not only fighting against arts cut-backs, but for better, adequate, above poverty level funding for the arts.

The arts community have convinced Canadian public opinion not only of the justice of their cause but of its practicality. Expenditure in the arts means jobs for Canadians and business opportunities for small businesses, especially in tourism. It is healthy for the Canadian economy, as well as being absolutely vital for the Canadian soul.

Yet what has been the Government's response to this resurgence of artistic organizing? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) refused to meet with them. He will use artists, and indeed even be an artist, as in the gala performance in Quebec earlier this week, but when artists come to Ottawa to discuss the very serious matter of adequate support for an independent Canadian culture, he is too busy.

Spring is the season of rebirth. Let us hope that this spring the artists of Canada will convince the Government of the need for reformulation of its policies on culture.

Uppity artists, on behalf of the NDP caucus I say: "Welcome to Ottawa".

THE ECONOMY

BANK OF CANADA ANNUAL REPORT—CONTROL OF PUBLIC EXPENDITURES

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the long run effect of deficits can be a major obstacle to economic and financial stability. That verdict, given yesterday by Gerald Bouey in his annual report as Governor of the Bank of Canada, may seem like plumbing the depths of the obvious. But it does not seem a bit obvious to the political parties, organizations, and corporations, two of which we have heard from today, that continue to barrage the Government with demands for grants and subsidies. They are still convinced that the Government of Canada has the best credit card in the world, because they think it never has to be paid.

That is why there is a cancer growing in our economic body. It is the cancer of uncontrolled public debt. Only deep therapy can give us the cure, and that is why the House should support government policies that are designed to control expenditure and reduce debt. If Canada does not do that, we will be like passengers on the Titanic, speeding toward the iceberg.

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the heart of our cultural and artistic community is being threatened by this insensitive and anti-Canadian Conservative Government. On November 8 last the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced reductions in federal spending, the details of which were provided by his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). The reductions in cultural programs were a major blow to the arts and cultural industries, yet if one examines them closely they have no real impact on the level of over-all spending or on the deficit. In other words, little was made in the way of savings, but a great cost to our cultural life was exacted.

• (1415)

The arts and the cultural industries are important to Canadian society in terms of their primary role and purpose. They are also important to our economy. To make such small savings at such a great cultural and economic cost is, in my view, false economy of the first order.

The Government must understand that federal support to the arts and the cultural industries is a sound investment, and must begin enhancing that investment now. The arts and the cultural industries are important contributors to Canadian society and the Canadian economy, and merit recognition as such on the part of the Government. I strongly urge the Government to reconsider the reductions and reinstate meaningful levels of support to cultural activity. To do otherwise is to pierce the very heart of our nation.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF AGENCIES AND COUNCILS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Prime Minister is not here today. I was going to wish him a happy birthday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Since I cannot be in the House tomorrow, I would like to take this occasion to wish my colleague, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, a happy birthday today, and to say that he has my good wishes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It just goes to show that I am the only guy around this House getting younger.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. During the election campaign the Conservative Party told the Canadian Conference of the Arts, and I quote the words of the declaration from the Conservative Party, "we are committed to maintaining federal funding for the agencies and councils in line with inflation". In effect, the Conservative Party promised during the election that even if the Tories cut the deficit they would not cut support to the arts and the cultural community.

Despite that firm commitment given to the Canadian cultural community, why have the funds been slashed by the Minister of Finance? In the case of the CBC, despite a commitment to integrity and independence, why has there been a breach of that integrity and independence, and why is that slashing being co-ordinated by three political commissars under the régime of the Minister of Communications?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, without the poor administration of the previous Government it would have been easier to deal with this matter. This Government was elected, first of all, to clean up Canada's public finances, something the previous Government was not able to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masse: As soon as the new Government took up its duties, the Minister of Finance was obliged to make important and basic decisions in accordance with the mandate we were given. All government departments were therefore asked to review a number of programs in order to help the Minister of Finance do his job.

Considering the importance to this government of the cultural sector of this country, we found that, although it seemed necessary to make a number of cuts within my own portfolio, it was nevertheless very important to ensure that the cultural institutions of this country receive the help they need from the Government. That is why the average budgetary cutbacks in the Communications portfolio have been lower, on average, than in government departments as a whole.

BUDGETARY CUTBACKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to his colleague, the Minister of Finance. This question is directed to the latter.

It is a fact that the arts in this country have exceptional job-creating potential. Considering the poor performance of the Minister of Finance in creating jobs, why did he make such drastic cut-backs in the arts in Canada, when he is all too well aware of the importance of Government support in terms of job creation?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the significant link between job creation and arts and culture. In recent years, employment in Canada's cultural industry has shown a stronger rate of increase than the national average, and bearing this in mind, Mr. Speaker, in co-operation with those responsible for other Government departments, including my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, we are taking steps to ensure that—and this will be a first—the cultural sector will be able to take advantage of job creation programs in this country, thus receiving assistance that was long overdue and which the previous Government had never thought to offer them.

EQUITABLE TREATMENT FOR DIFFERENT REGIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister insists, I will ask him a question. Why is the Minister making the Western and Atlantic Regions bear the brunt of these budgetary cut-backs? The Minister took a $19,000 trip in a private plane to British Columbia, to inform the cultural community in Vancouver that the Government considers it does not have the means to waste that money on the arts. I am using his words. So, finally, Mr. Speaker, when does the Minister intend to treat Canada's regions more equitably?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when we took over from the previous Government, we inherited a number of major problems, including the fact that for years, the previous Administration had refused to conduct a necessary and essential dialogue with the provinces on an area of particularly shared jurisdiction, namely the cultural sector. In September we had to get this dialogue started again. Unlike the previous Administration, I visited each provincial capital, to ensure that when a meeting was held with the provincial ministers and the Federal Government this year, all the provinces would be present, and, not like previous years, only a few provinces, and as a result, in Vancouver—since you referred to my trip—for the first time since 1980, all the provinces were present around the table, something you had never been able to do for years. That is the difference, Mr. Speaker.

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM—CONSTRUCTION OF AIRSTRIPS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday, when I asked him questions on the North Warning System, in his reply he said that those airstrips in the North were there to service radar aircraft. In the memorandum of understanding on air defence I have read that steps will be taken to allow fighter interceptors and AWACS operations, and to have alert hangars, POL storage, missile and ammunition storage, and other necessary airfield upgrades.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Has the Minister read the agreement before coming into the House? If so, when will he rise in the House and admit that the agreement, signed with the Americans this week, will create a sophisticated series of military air bases in the Canadian North, without informing Canadians in advance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that interpretation by the Hon. Member is incorrect. His question yesterday had to do with "a series of airstrips built everywhere in the North", to quote his question as reported in Hansard. There are in fact two types of airstrips being affected by the developments.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am not sure whether the Member from Toronto, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, who has become the spokesman on standards and morality for the Liberal Party, wants to give me the opportunity to answer or wants to continue to heckle.

• (1425)

There are two types of airstrips that are being affected in the North in the area described yesterday in the question of the Hon. Member. The first has to do with modifications which will allow aircraft carrying radar to be stationed. The second has to do with the possibility of upgrading airstrips in the far North to allow interceptor aircraft—NORAD aircraft, aircraft not armed with nuclear weapons, aircraft carrying only conventional weapons—to go into the North in the event of an alert so that if we detect something flying over our territory we can send up aircraft to find out exactly what it is. Surely the Hon. Member would believe that that was prudent.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, when you carefully read the agreement you find that there is much more that has been written there. There are possibilities of making some changes at any time in this agreement between Canada and the U.S.A. Where it states in the program that there will be alert hangars, for example, that means in military terms that there will be airplanes there on an alert basis 24 hours a day with pilots in their cockpits.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Will the Minister not admit that he is giving this House of Commons some double standard answers, and tell us the truth? If they want to give the Canadian territory to the American Government for operational purposes, he should admit that. We will discuss that, but we cannot accept that they are trying to hide the truth from the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Hon. Member was going to have us operating our radar defence with Twin Otter aircraft exclusively in the North. Today he is living in some fantasy land where we are going to have fighters where there are pilots sitting in the cockpits 24 hours a day. He is living in some kind of fantasy land. The fantasy that he is describing has nothing to do with the agreement that was signed. It has nothing to do with the facts. The facts have been spelled out clearly. I wish the Hon. Member would stop abusing his position in this House of Commons in a way that creates fear in the country.

RECOGNITION OF CANADIAN ARTISTS' CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Over the weekend the Prime Minister used the talents of Canadian artists for the gala performance in honour of President Reagan. Unfortunately, he has decided that he did not have time to meet with the same artists today and discuss their problems. My question is this: Would the Minister finally acknowledge the contribution of Canada's artistic community and reconsider the budget cutbacks?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): For the first time in our country's cultural and economic history, Mr. Speaker, the cultural community will be invited to participate fully in this weekend's Canadian economic conference. The Prime Minister is now busy preparing that meeting.

Secondly, I had a meeting this morning—and another one is slated for this afternoon—with the representatives of the Canadian cultural community. I fully share their concerns and sentiments with respect to their place within Canadian society.

In addition, I discuss with them some of the programs being prepared by my Department in cooperation with colleagues in other Departments. I can assure you that the Prime Minister is giving due consideration to cultural circles and that he has challenging ideas for them.

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FUNDING CUTBACKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister had to take three minutes to say no!

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance whose responsibility it was ultimately for proposing these cut-backs. It was 50 years ago this year when we had a Conservative Government which recognized the need to take government action to protect and enhance Canadian culture by creating the CBC, an action which we applaud. Does a modern Conservative Government not recognize that in a country swamped by a nation to the South, with 10 times as many people and much more wealth, we need to have a significant increase in contribution to the arts? If he does recognize that, will he take steps to restore those mindless cuts affecting the cultural community?

● (1430)

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): In answer to the question concerning the CBC, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the Government follows in the footsteps of its own Party. The CBC was created by a Progressive Conservative Government, it was supported by a Progressive Conservative Government in Mr. Diefenbaker's time, and it will continue to get the assistance of this Progressive Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker.

That being so, we do want to maintain the mandate of the CBC, with the participation of Canadians. In our estimation, Government assistance to the CBC cannot be channelled through negative or positive budget operations. The problem as the Government sees it is that it is necessary to review the system—

Mr. Speaker: I regret—

REGIONAL CBC PROGRAMMING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this is a last effort to get a positive response from one of the people responsible for over-all government policy, either the Minister of Finance or the Deputy Prime Minister, to a question concerning the arts. By the way, I would say to the Minister that it was a traditional Conservative Government that created the CBC, and a modern Conservative Government that will destroy it. That is the difference.

The problems for the artistic community are even greater in the regions, and therefore there is a need for financial assistance to be channelled to the regions by the central Government. In particular, a major regional outlet for CBC programming in Labrador City has been cut completely, and also the toll-free line—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Broadbent: I will come right to the last part of my question. The toll-free line has been removed affecting artists in B.C. and Atlantic Canada as well. Will the Government restore that toll-free line, and restore the local programming in Labrador City?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when it comes to drafting policies consistent with regional interests, I agree that the previous Government never gave much thought to that aspect of Canada's cultural issue. With that in mind, and to depart from the established trend, when we announced a review of Telefilm Canada policy last week in Toronto we did take into consideration the legitimate and sensible concerns of Canadians. For the first time, Telefilm Canada will keep such matters in mind.

As for administrative decisions made by such autonomous agencies as the CBC and the Canada Council, I will make note of the Hon. Member's suggestions and convey them to management.

BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—POSITION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Before last year's election, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government made original and unmistakable commitments to increase funding in real dollars for federal cultural programs and expand the federal Government's over-all investments in that sector. The Minister told us that all provinces were represented in Vancouver. Is the Minister trying to tell us that all provinces endorsed the budgetary cutbacks imposed on the artistic community that had expressed its confidence on September 4?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the question of my colleague is twofold. First, the Progressive Conservative Party has been elected for a four-year mandate and I am convinced that, with the help of my colleagues, we will be able to honour our election commitments.

Second, during the conference where all provinces were represented, relations between the federal Government and the provinces were the major topic of discussion. Since such gatherings were not all that frequent when the previous Government was in office, they could not be aware that such relations between the provinces and the federal Government can be productive. We made sure that we would get together to consider the problems which budgetary cutbacks might create in some regions. After that meeting, I had the opportunity to meet the CBC president, among others, to explain some of our difficulties, and he will do his best to correct the situation.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Minister, but his answer is too long. Supplementary question?

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): You will note, Mr. Speaker, that my questions are short and direct.

An Hon. Member: And so they are!

Mr. Prud'homme: The Minister is ever pleased to tell us that he is an honourable son of the Progressive Conservative Party and that he has no intention of killing the CBC. We happen to know as well that he is a genuine product of the Union nationale.

Can the Minister tell us—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Prud'homme: The question is simple. Will the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: If you will kindly shut up, I will put my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now might be a good time for me to ask everyone in the House to listen to all the questions and all the answers, so that all the questions and all the answers can be heard. Would the Hon. Member finish his question?

Mr. Prud'homme: Very simply, will the Hon. Minister stand up and fight for the artists, the arts communities, and the art industries? Will he become the champion and stand up to the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board? That is his duty as Minister of Communications.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, having done the first thing I was asked to do—to stand up—I can reassure my colleague in the House and tell him that since September we have been cooperating with Cabinet Ministers, the members of the Progressive Conservative caucus and the provinces as well, something with which the Liberal Party is quite unfamiliar. However, the cultural field particularly is still shared jurisdiction in Canada, and the provinces have a leading role to play in cooperation with the people and the community involved. It is in that sense that I have never said anything negative whatsoever concerning the meetings held by artists throughout Canada. Those meetings were important to us.

GOVERNMENT NON-INVOLVEMENT IN AFFAIRS OF CULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Minister promised he would support the principle of Government non-involvement in cultural agencies. However, he has cut the budgets of independent agencies like the CBC and the Canada Council, and increased funding for his own department. Does the Minister see any contradiction between his so-called support for Government non-involvement and the fact that he is attacking independent agencies?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the logic of the Hon. Member's question. There are a number of agencies that have had no budgetary cutbacks: the National Library, the Public Archives, the Canada Museums Construction Corporation Inc. and the National Museums of Canada. These are only some of the agencies which for various administrative reasons have had no budgetary cut-backs of any kind. Just because some agencies have had cut-backs does not mean that a department does not have the right to proceed with sectoral increases for departmental personnel. I fail to see the logic in the Hon. Member's question.

● (1440)

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, indeed, the Minister has said something very revealing. He does not understand.

He seems to take the arm's length relationship to mean that because he does not tell the Canada Council to accept one artist's grant and deny another artist's grant that he is respecting it. But he is taking money away from the independent agencies and putting it into his cookie jar. Does he understand that the arts community regards that as a betrayal of Conservative promises? He promised there would be increases in arts funding. He also promised to consult and to maintain—that is, his Party did on his behalf—the arm's length relationship.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, from the outset the Government made it clear that it favoured an arm's length relationship with the cultural agencies. The Government has taken steps to consult with the members of this sector in a way that has never been done before. The Government has taken steps to maintain normal and positive relations with the provinces. The Government, through its other departments, has made it possible for members of the cultural sector to apply for certain programs. The Government has taken steps to maintain close liaison, as was shown today by my colleagues, many of whom met members from the cultural sector. The Government has made a commitment to keep its promises, and the steps we have taken to date are part of that commitment.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I posed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asking if this country had any intention of becoming involved in the research and development program which is related to the American star wars efforts. At that time he refused to give Parliament an answer.

In reading the memorandum of understanding, both Clauses 1(c) and 20(a) give a clear answer: the two countries will join efforts in relation to the research and development of technology, including space-based technology.

An Hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Axworthy: We finally have one Conservative Member who is prepared to address the truth. The same memorandum states that the two countries will be engaging in joint research on advanced defence systems.

Contrary to every statement which was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister prior to the signing of the agreement, why is the Government now preparing to enter into agreements and negotiations with the United States to involve this country in the star wars research and development program?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are not.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, If that is the case will the Hon. Minister please explain—and perhaps his colleague will also confirm—why they have increased the allocation to the Defence Industrial Productivity Fund by over one-third this year? Will he give assurances—and perhaps the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion will provide the answer—that any grant which is applied for under that program will be carefully screened to ensure that no product, research, or prototype will in any way be involved in the American star wars program?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, for at least the second day in a row, has been asking a question as to whether the Government of Canada has been invited and has accepted an invitation to take part in space research under the Strategic Defence Initiative. The answer to that question is there has been no invitation and, consequently, there has not been a response.

Mr. Axworthy: Will you?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are now getting another question from the Member's seat. It is a question from the source of his thoughts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The answer to the question is that the Government of Canada in the future, as the Government of Canada did in the past, will be engaged in space research. It was, when the Hon. Member was a Minister of the Crown, and it will be in the future. Our involvement in space research will always be consistent with the principles of the ABM Treaty.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

DOMTAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion concerning the Domtar workers and the future of that Quebec community where Domtar investments are located. Yesterday, in answer to a question concerning the Domtar issue, the Prime Minister indicated that he hoped to be able to find a way to solve this problem. Is the Government now prepared to help the Domtar project, which will affect the future of 5,000 jobs in that area? And when will the Government announce its decision?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, we have nothing further to announce today with respect to the Domtar situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Will the Minister ever have anything to announce concerning that important project in the Province of Quebec which concerns 5,000 jobs? Or will tomorrow's answer be the same as today's, and that of the day after tomorrow the same as today's? This means that you will be saying no forever.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in due course the Hon. Member will have everything revealed to him.

PORNOGRAPHY

IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister will know that very recently the courts have struck down a Section of the Customs Tariff Act which has been used for 117 years to control the importation of pornography to Canada. Can the Minister tell us now what action, either in the short term or in the long term, the Justice Department proposes to take to prevent the flooding of pornography into our country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice is now considering whether an appeal should be launched in connection with that court decision.

Mr. Penner: Get on with it.

Mr. Crosbie: Don't rush me now; I am a bit slow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You are the rudest group I have ever seen in opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, we are considering a further alternative, in the form of an amendment, which would be proposed to the House. In any event, a decision as to which course we will follow, or whether we will follow both courses, will be made in the next day or so. We will likely be inviting the co-operation of Members opposite in our battle against pornography. We know we have the assistance of the NDP, but we do not know about the Liberals.

TERRORISM

PROTECTION OF TURKISH EMBASSY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday he, and the Deputy Prime Minister in the past, claimed that protection was increased in early March at the Turkish Embassy. They have been contradicted by Inspector Paradis, who is the RCMP officer in charge of VIP security in Ottawa, by Pinkerton's, and by the Turkish Government, who all say that nothing changed. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has told us that we have to accept his word against theirs and that no details can be given because of national security. I ask him how would national security be affected by giving details of security arrangements in the recent past, when those security arrangements have been changed and when the present arrangements are very different and much upgraded?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is in anyone's interests to discuss hypothetical questions on the floor of the House of Commons, or to respond to an invitation—

Ms. Copps: Was it a hypothetical death?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East asked if it was a hypothetical death. I hope that she has a sufficient sense of standard to get up in her place at the end of this Question Period and apologize for that uncalled for remark.

• (1450)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, we deeply regret that death. We are trying to prevent other incidents of that kind. I hope we can have the co-operation of the House of Commons.

SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Minister wants our co-operation in providing adequate security, he will have it. But I do not see how he can call my previous question hypothetical. I think the family of the Canadian victim and the Turkish Government are entitled to know what security arrangements were changed and what the changes were. That is not hypothetical, and answering that question would enhance the national security of Canada, not detract from it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is why Trudeau calls you politically naive.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Turkish officials know. I do not think it is helpful to have everyone else in the country know what provisions might be put in place to protect the Turkish or other embassies in this country.

INCOME TAX ACT

INVESTMENT TAX CREDITS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns Section 127 of the Income Tax Act. Potential tax revenue lost to the federal Treasury resulting from recent court decisions which permit investment tax credits to be taken on third party cash rebates is in the tens of millions of dollars. Will the Minister, in his upcoming Budget, take steps to close this very serious loophole?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the court case and its implications. It is something that I am looking into right now. I cannot say at this point whether that will be addressed in the forthcoming Budget, but we are looking very closely at the implications to make sure that loophole is closed.

INSPECTION SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, who, along with the Minister of Finance, has imposed some $23 million in cuts on the agricultural inspection service. They intend to impose an additional $35 million in direct charges to farmers and processors instead. Since his own departmental briefing papers show that farm output will be reduced as a result of this action, why did he pursue the cost recovery program for horticulture and pedigreed seed growers, in the clear knowledge that both agricultural production and jobs would suffer?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is perhaps premature in reaching this conclusion. We indicated that indeed there was a proposal and that we are in the process of consulting with people in the industry. We are negotiating with them, and in fact I am meeting the national groups, particularly those more sensitive than others and those which are in a lesser position to make a contribution toward the cost recovery proposal. I have indicated from day one that we are going to meet and work out a satisfactory conclusion. When we have done that I am sure the Hon. Member will be quite surprised.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister then explain why those same briefing notes suggest that the amount of money involved should not be given out, that there should only be discussions so that the steam from the affected groups will be dissipated?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not make my final decisions based on the information contained in my briefing notes. They are for my information. I have always taken the approach of sitting down at the table with the various groups, discussing with them on a one-to-one basis, and arriving at a mutually agreeable decision, rather than being instructed by my briefing notes.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, I hope, will not interpret my statements as being anti-American. They are, on the contrary, pro-Canadian, unlike the Minister of Communications.

Last night on The Journal the Minister of Communications said: "Arts and culture are part of a renewal in this country and we must work with other countries towards that renewal." Bearing in mind that we are already competing with a tidal wave of American culture, and Canadian artists are in difficult financial straits at the moment, will the Minister live up to his pre-election commitments and provide federal funding, in fact increased federal funding, for the cultural agencies in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had fully answered that question. It stands to reason that the cultural groups have expressed their views and their concerns. I can assure the Hon. Member that this Government is very sensitive to those aspects, and as our programs and policies develop we will take those concerns into account, after consultation, and bring forth adequate solutions.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask my question of the Minister of Finance, but since the Minister responsible for the Gong Show has responded I want to say to him that during good times the arts and cultural communities are left out. During bad times they are the first ones to be cut. Does the Minister think it fair that 250,000 Canadian men and women, who are depending upon federal wage and other subsidies, have their funding cut so devastatingly, when spending in the Prime Minister's Office is increased by 54 per cent and spending in the offices of Cabinet Ministers is increased substantially? Is that fair to the arts and cultural community?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, let me first answer the first part of the Hon. Member's question. Had he been more heedful of such questions when he was in government, perhaps the Liberal Party policies might have been more to the point.

Concerning the second part of the question, 50 per cent of which at least is based on rumors or falsehoods, let me tell him just the same that in these difficult times mostly caused by his government when in power, the Progressive Conservative Government will do its utmost to make sure that the cultural groups will contribute in a more positive way to Canada's economic revival.

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who will recall the rather pathetic attempt by the Prime Minister yesterday to justify the pork-barrel appointments—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We thought Stephen Lewis was a good appointment.

Mr. Riis: —of 12 new directors of Air Canada. No wonder our Crown corporations lose money when they are run by a bunch of political hacks as opposed to people with experience and dedication.

The Minister will know full well that on or about April 1, April Fool's Day, the Government will be making new appointments to the board of Canadian National Railways. Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure this House and the people of Canada that this new set of appointments will be made on the basis of competence, experience and expertise, as opposed to simply carrying a Conservative Party card?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in all cases all things are taken into consideration, and certainly competence is at the very top of the scale.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That automatically excludes the Tories.

PHONE CALL INQUIRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that there are few Conservatives left in the country who have not received a patronage appointment, will the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to accept phone calls from those individuals who have not yet obtained a political appointment?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton on a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is Members' time. If they want to ask questions, they can ask questions, but first they have to be quiet.

The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton on a question.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REOPENING OF POSTAL MUSEUM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Mr. Minister, could you tell us—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tupper: —what action the Canada Post Corporation is taking to reopen the Postal Museum, and could you advise us, as the Minister responsible, whether you would be willing to arrange a meeting between postal officials and interested Members of this House?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, both the Hon. Member who posed the question and the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton have very strenuously argued in support of maintaining the Canadian Postal Museum. The Corporation is very strongly committed to maintaining the Museum if at all possible. As the Hon. Member is aware, the need for new parliamentary accommodation has put strains on the present facilities. René Marin, President of Canada Post Corporation, has indicated to me that he would be pleased to meet with the Hon. Member and other colleagues who have concerns in this respect, and also to convey their concerns to the Board.

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF RICHARD J. DOYLE, ESQ.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is with regard to the appointment yesterday of one Richard Doyle to the Senate. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that Mr. Doyle is the only living person in the country to have been found in contempt of Parliament by a unanimous resolution of the House of Commons passed on December 22, 1976? If so, could he tell the House how the candidacy of such an individual will enhance the upper House of our Parliament?

Mr. Chrétien: That's a tough one.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): It is not tough at all. It is surprising that it should be raised by the Hon. Member at all because it is certainly not in keeping with the practices, customs, or procedures of this place to cast any reflection on Members of the other.

POINT OF ORDER

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF RIGHT HON. JOE CLARK

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) indicated he wished to raise a point of order at this time.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order. It pertains to certain words used during Question Period by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). These words were used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in reply to questions put to him by Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien). In replying to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, he said that the Member was abusing his position in the House.

I want to refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Citation 320 of Beauchesne. It reads as follows:

It has been ruled unparliamentary to refer to a Member as—
(b) abusing his position in the House.

I call upon you, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to apply this ruling of long standing and ask the Minister to withdraw these words because, rather than abusing his position in the House, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice was carrying out his duty of calling to account the Minister and the Government for their failures and contradictions. He thereby was upholding the highest standards of the House, and therefore deserves commendation rather than being the victim of unparliamentary language from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West raises a reference to Beauchesne which is quoted and cited accurately. I must, therefore, ask the Right Hon. Secretary of State to withdraw the offending words.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hereby do.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDATION OF L'AGENCE DE COOPÉRATION CULTURELLE ET TECHNIQUE À NIAMEY

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not mention an anniversary which is especially important for all French-speaking Canadians. Indeed, l'Agence de Coopération culturelle et technique is celebrating today the 15th anniversary of its foundation in Niamey, Niger. Canada is one of the charter members of this francophone Agency which includes 37 countries, Quebec also being considered as a participating government since 1970 and New Brunswick since 1977. Truly the Agency is a privileged means of federal-provincial cooperation on an international level.

I would like to take this opportunity to emphasize Canada's attachment to the great francophone family of which it has the chance to be a part, just as it is a part of the Commonwealth. We sincerely wish that the Agence de Coopération culturelle et technique, as well as the many non-governmental and professional organizations of the French-speaking world will continue to promote a dialogue between various cultures and greater cooperation among French-speaking countries, which will lead to a better mutual understanding.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, I am happy to underline the 15th anniversary of the foundation of l'Agence culturelle et technique in Niger. A Liberal Government was in office when the Agency was created and we are very proud of this. It would now be a good thing if this cooperation could be extended throughout the country.

In her comments, I noted that the Minister underlined the participation of Quebec and New Brunswick. I have a question to ask her in this regard. Could she tell the House whether she is now negotiating the participation of other provinces, such as Ontario and Manitoba, which have a large French-speaking population?

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, it gives me pleasure today to note the 15th anniversary of the foundation of l'Agence de coopération culturelle et technique. We hope that this major Agency will continue its important work in the future.

Let us also hope that this cooperation will help us to find answers to the problems common to all French-speaking countries, such as poverty, unemployment and the threat of nuclear world war. Let us hope that, working together through l'Agence de coopération culturelle et technique, we shall be able to solve these problems as quickly as possible.

Once more, on behalf of all my colleagues of the New Democratic Party, congratulations to the Agency and good luck for the future!

Mr. Speaker: With respect, I take it that the statement from the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens)— —was a question and at this point I can treat it as a question if the Minister will answer questions, because a brief question period is now allowed.

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that Quebec and New Brunswick are participating countries, and I am following developments very closely in that area because this comes under my responsibility. And I will be open to any potential participation from provinces representing other parts of the Francophonie.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) for a supplementary.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister ready to initiate the necessary negotiations with the Provinces of Ontario and Manitoba?

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, I would really have to look into the matter as it now stands and if negotiations are in order, I will be pleased to initiate them.

Mr. Speaker: Other questions? No.

PETITIONS

ELIGIBILITY FOR SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition on behalf of concerned Prince Edward Island citizens who ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the House to take steps to remedy the discrimination and social injustice that will be suffered by single, separated, or divorced Canadians who are not eligible for spouse's allowance. They ask that an amendment be made to Bill C-26 to extend eligibility to all Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 who have needs identical to those already eligible for spouse's allowance.

PORNOGRAPHIC EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the St. Charles Garnier Catholic Women's League in Kelowna who are concerned about the easy availability of pornographic magazines, books, videos and movies, as these materials are degrading not only to women but to all human beings.

The Catholic Women's League of St. Charles Garnier in Kelowna wish to protest against the exploitation of children by this industry and ask the Government to work for a more clearly defined wording of the Criminal Code concerning pornography.

CALL FOR DELAY IN PASSAGE OF BILL C-24

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of petitioners who say that the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program provided Canadians with financial incentives needed in order to promote energy conservation. They feel that these programs have had considerable success in reducing Canada's dependence on oil and natural gas. They say that energy conservation is the cheapest form of energy supply, the most environmentally sound and the most labour intensive.

They pray and call upon Parliament to delay second reading of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, for six months in order that those Canadians who wish to take advantage of the oil substitution program have fair and ample time in which to do so.

SEVERANCE PAY DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a petition of some 680 residents of the Ear Falls area who, in availing themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to allow laid off employees to keep their severance pay and receive unemployment insurance benefits without deductions made for severance pay.

CALL FOR DELAY IN PASSAGE OF BILL C-24

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Burnaby who are most concerned about the elimination of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program.

The petitioners call upon the Government to at least delay the axing of this important program for six months in order that they might have an opportunity to take advantage of this very important energy conservation measure.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of several Ontario residents calling on the Government to extend for six months imposition of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act. Such an extension for six months would allow those residents of Ontario to take advantage of what has been a very beneficial conservation program.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from several residents of the Province of Ontario who are petitioning Parliament to postpone the passage of Bill

C-24 for six months so that more citizens can take advantage of this important Oil Substitution and Conservation Program. Therefore, to the House of Commons and Parliament assembled, the petitioners of the undersigned residents of the Province of Ontario now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present such a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

MISSING CHILDREN SEARCH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-230, an Act to require assistance in the search for missing children.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, in moving the introduction of this Bill requiring assistance in the search for missing children, let me briefly explain that the real purpose and intent of the Bill is to focus parliamentary attention on the plight of Canadian parents and families who search, often in vain, for missing children.

The Bill would ensure the assistance of police officers and searchers and encourage the participation of other agencies and the public. The Bill is not a solution but demonstrates that legislative action is possible.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 79, 209 and 246.

[Text]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 79—Mr. Young:

Did the Canada Pension Appeals Board decide that the splitting of Canada Pension Plan credits on divorce was not enforceable before the courts and, if so, is it the intention of the Department of Health and Welfare to recommend legislation to provide that the splitting of such credits be made mandatory?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Pension Appeals Board has ruled that, where there is a separation agreement or consent judgment between the parties in which they waive further claims against each other, these waivers may constitute a relinquishment of Canada Pension Plan pension credits, and that the Minister may be precluded from dividing pension credits on the application of one of the parties in such cases.

The implications of this Pension Appeals Board decision and the various options for possible changes to the Canada Pension Plan will be considered by the Government in the context of pension reform. The option suggested by the question is one being given serious consideration.

SOCIAL BENEFITS

Question No. 209—Mr. Guilbault (Drummond):

1. Does the Government intend to protect the social security of Canadians and enshrine the principle of helping the neediest?

2. Is it government policy that Canadians' savings will not be used to cut the deficit, that they will continue to receive their pension cheques and that universality as defined will be maintained?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. As outlined in the Child and Elderly Benefits Consultation Paper, tabled in the House of Commons on January 28, 1985, the Government will be guided by the following principles in its review of social benefits:

(i) The concept of universality is a keystone of our social safety net. Its integrity must not and will not be called into question.

(ii) The concept of a means test to determine eligibility for selective benefit programs is not appropriate. Eligibility for these programs, such as the Child Tax Credit and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, will continue to be determined on the basis of income.

(iii) Any savings which may result from program changes will not be applied to a reduction of the deficit.

BORROWINGS FROM CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 246—Miss Nicholson:

1. As of January 1, 1985, what was the aggregate amount of outstanding borrowings from the Canada Pension Plan by the Province of Ontario?

2. Since 1965 to date, by year, what amount was borrowed?

3. Has any capital been repaid and, if so, how much and on what date?

4. Since 1965, by year, what was the total amount of interest paid?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-32 ON SECOND READING

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned to you that there have been negotiations between representatives of the Parties with respect to the passage at second reading and reference to committee of Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act.

It is my understanding that an agreement has been reached to send the Bill to committee without a recorded division this afternoon. In order to accomplish this, it is understood that the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) will be given 15 minutes in which to conclude his remarks on second reading of the Bill. The Hon. Member will seek and be given consent of the House to withdraw the amendment to the motion for second reading of the Bill.

As well, it is my understanding that consent of the House will be given to permit the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) three or four minutes in order to sum up his Party's position with respect to second reading of the Bill.

Finally, consent will also be given to permit the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Gass) to regain the floor and speak for approximately two to three minutes in conclusion of second reading debate.

If the House agrees to this proposition, it is my intention to call Bill C-32 as the first order of business at this point in time. At the conclusion of debate on this Bill, we will revert to the sequence we had before us previously.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. House Leader has quite accurately and extremely lucidly indicated the agreement that we did in fact work out in order to accommodate the Government's desire to have the Bill go to committee early. If you were to ask for unanimous consent, I think there is no doubt that my colleagues would give it.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my one proviso is that if the Member for Egmont needs more than three or four minutes to make his point, I take it that the House would be patient. The same would apply to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. We are ready to allow him more than four or five minutes because we know the importance of this Bill.

Mr. Speaker: In fact, the Chair wondered what it should do when it heard times like two, three or four minutes. However, I take it there is unanimous consent for the matter being proposed as a House order?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fraser that Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

M. Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement arrived at moments ago, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the important and interesting Bill we are debating today would confer on the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) the absolute and unfettered right to allocate fish without guidelines or restrictions. The Minister thought he always had that right until the court cases last year indicated that the law was deficient and he could not in fact allocate fish. The court went even further and indicated that the Constitution may determine that a law to amend the Fisheries Act to give him the right to allocate fish may be deemed ultra vires.

At present, allocation and the determination of who gets access to the resource is at the heart of the management of the fisheries. During debate on this Bill the Minister has argued in the House and in committee that since he always had that right, the House should automatically give him that right again. I suggest that no legislature should give any Minister this kind of almost absolute or unfettered power to allocate between groups without some guidelines.

I think the key thing is that even the Party in power in the past has put up many complaints against unregulated or unfettered opportunities of Ministers and the Government to determine the lives of people so drastically. We should clarify that this kind of power to determine who has the access to the money that that resource develops, who will be pushed out of that industry, or whose shares will be diminished or capability impaired, should not be given to the Minister or to the Government without some guidelines. What we would like to establish in this House and what user groups would like to establish is that the Minister should put on the record in writing what those guidelines would be.

There is a second interesting aspect to this Bill. The reason this Bill is being given second reading today is that when we hit an impasse in four days of debate, the Government and the Opposition realized it was not in the continuing interests of the people of Canada to hold up the business of the House of Commons. There were some serious questions and contentious issues to be dealt with. The Minister offered to adjourn debate and move this issue into committee for a period of time so we could examine the contentious issues. They were examined in detail.

The Minister has in his possession a summary of the important issues that would form the guidelines. It is my understanding that he has made a commitment to put something in writing on the guidelines that would form part of the records to determine the process of allocation. That is extremely important. It should not be construed by anyone that this Bill is proceeding for any other reason than that of the Government having acted with reasonably good faith and in a constructive and positive way.

The Government adjourned the debate. It did not use closure. It moved the Bill to committee to discuss the contentious issues. It resolved some of the issues but left the most important ones yet to come. This arrangement would not form a commitment to deal expeditiously with this Bill in committee, or a commitment to deal expeditiously at report stage or at third reading, without having something substantial from the Minister. This should be a very clear message from the Opposition, one that will be reinforced by the other Opposition Party here, namely that second reading is given on the basis that we recognize a constructive move was made.

There are four points that must be resolved, and the user groups essentially agree. First, a guideline must state that user groups currently into the industry must have a place in that industry. This allocation gives no indication of that. They must have an opportunity to earn a living from that resource. This Minister must place on the record that his unfettered right to allocate will not impair their position or remove those user groups from the resource.

Second, there must be a board, an agency, made up of user groups. That board should be representative of user groups accountable to the user groups and would be involved in an advisory and co-management process with the Minister. This move formed part of the election campaign promises of the Conservative Party. It makes absolute sense in the fishing industry. The Minister must make some statement in his guidelines on this particular agency and how he will move toward it.

The third consideration in the guidelines must include the communities, especially on the west coast of Canada in British Columbia, that depend on the fisheries. I keep coming back to the example of Alert Bay but certainly I include Bella Bella, Klemtu, Bella Coola, Port Hardy, and Campbell River. These places are all seriously dependent upon the fishing industry.

There must be a representative agency by which those communities have input into such things as the fishing plan, the over-all policies of the Department and have some effect and influence on the Government as the federal Government impinges on the economies of the communities. That must happen, and I think it is clearly understood by the Minister. We will be waiting for a response to recognize that and put such an agency in play.

Fourth, native participation must be defined. Native participation at traditional levels in the commercial industry, the question of aboriginal rights and the question of land claims must be looked at. We are not asking for a definitive answer. What we are looking for is what the Minister's game plan is in terms of the participation of the native people in a resource extremely important to them and to the economies of their communities.

I think the goodwill with which we approached second reading is something that can be worked on again. Some in this House were reluctant to see that precedent, but we worked in committee through some of the most contentious issues while this House went on conducting the business of the people of Canada. I think this is much healthier than what happened in the last Parliament when adjournments, petitions and ringing of bells tied up this House for months. This move was very constructive. I think it will be worth continuing.

We are extremely apprehensive about working on this level with the Government. In this regard I point out to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) the rank patronage appointments that have taken place. They are being watched. The people of Canada are being given that information. We will continue to pound on it. It is extremely negative for the Government and it is extremely negative for the Opposition to become involved. We are not interested in such boards made up of patronage.

Let me mention also the Canada-U.S. treaty in which documents were provided to the House after the treaty was signed and it was full, as far as we are concerned, of serious errors and short-comings. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admitted that prior to going to Quebec City.

There is one other thing I want to mention. This Bill was slapped on us just before the herring season began. There was almost an attempt to blackmail this House into passing it quickly, otherwise the fishery would collapse. It did not. The under groups were able to bring the fishery together and have executed it very well without giving the Minister the kind of absolute or unfettered authority that he is asking for in this Bill.

There is no commitment to move quickly through committee. There is no commitment to move rapidly on third reading nor on report stage. There is a recognition by the Opposition that the Government has made a very positive move and as a result the Government has this Bill in committee and further progress will be made on the basis of good will from the Minister responding to the four questions here, and certainly questions the other Opposition Party will raise. I think on that basis, should the Minister agree to put some of those things on the record, that will give people some confidence as to where they are going. Then we can look forward to some solid progress on the remaining stages of this Bill.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. My understanding was that the previous speaker was going to lift the six-month hoist amendment that was moved earlier.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I understand that was part of the unanimous consent given to the entire package of matters which dealt with the six-month hoist and the fact that we would be allowing this Bill to go to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is also the understanding of the Chair, pursuant to what had been said at the beginning, that the amendment had been withdrawn with unanimous consent. We shall now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) mentioned, this is sort of an historic situation inasmuch as we did have a motion that would hoist the Bill for six months, then a commitment by the Minister that he would attend the committee, meet with the committee, adjourn the debate on Bill C-32 in order to go to committee, and then come back to the House to complete second reading. In this way we were not taking up the time of the House for other business.

There certainly has been co-operation on the part of the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary in this particular case. They have done a very good job of negotiating in the dilemma with which we were faced for a short period of time. Of course, that encourages good will on the part of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. This is why we are here today with this particular Bill.

The previous speaker mentioned the four areas about which we have some concern. One of them is the global allocation of fish stock, certainly on the West Coast, in the Pacific fishery. Other areas of concern are a mechanism for consultation, some recognition of the input from fishing communities on both coasts, and native participation.

We recognize that it is very difficult for the Minister to be specific about some of those questions. We in the Official Opposition are not asking for specific allocations. We are asking for the Minister's view of how the allocation of resources will be managed. Also there are a couple of legal questions; there may be many more when we get to committee. I hope the Minister will appear when the Bill is in committee, together with his legal advisers.

There have been different interpretations of the Bill. While it will clearly give the Minister the necessary authority to allocate and regulate the fisheries in tidal waters, it may not allow him to allocate stocks, for instance, in the inland waters of British Columbia, namely the water between Vancouver Island and mainland B.C. In the Johnstone Strait, the Strait of Georgia and Juan de Fuca Strait, there is a tremendous amount of fishing and often very conflicting quota requests among different user groups.

In May of last year, the case of The Attorney General of Canada v The Attorney General of British Columbia was before the Supreme Court of Canada. That court ruled that that body of water was owned by the province, because when British Columbia entered Confederation, the western boundary of the province was the eastern edge of Vancouver Island. If this is correct, the Minister can only regulate the fishery in that water on conservation and protection grounds. Only the province can allocate the resources. Certainly there should be clarification in that regard. Perhaps there will have to be another amendment to cover the situation.

I have talked with a number of user groups in British Columbia and have heard that Bill C-32 is worded in such a way that, once passed, the Minister would have unlimited power with no defined restrictions whatsoever. Perhaps the Bill should include the provision of some principal body—and this is what my colleague talked about—to oversee regulations passed by the Minister and with the power to veto any regulation deemed unfit or not in the best interests of the fishing industry. One of my main concerns in speaking on legislation, especially Bills with the powers of this one, has been about how regulations flow from legislation passed in the House. It is only fair to give it good scrutiny in committee if the legislation is to meet the objectives of the Minister and provide him with the powers within the meaning of the Act. We may have to take a look at it in that regard.

I am pleased, as are members of the New Democratic Party, to see this Bill move into committee. I hope the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will continue to show the co-operation and good will we have seen over the last few days in committee. It is only with co-operation and good will that the Bill will progress and we will achieve the objective we are trying to achieve—to have legislation which first of all provides benefits to those most adversely affected; that is, user groups, fishermen, processors and workers.

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated by the two previous speakers, a sort of unorthodox situation has occurred both inside and outside the House within the last few days. A great deal of good will has been demonstrated in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry as we have dealt with this particular Bill. We on this side of the House are very pleased that the Bill has received approval in principle from all Parties. The fact that all Parties accept the main principle underlying the Bill indicates that the Government needed to clarify the powers to undertake the social and economic management of the fishery. This is a reflection of the excellent session of the committee when the Minister appeared last Thursday. In point of fact, the Minister appeared before the committee for three and a half hours. He did an excellent job of trying to answer in a very straightforward manner the questions posed by committee members.

What has emerged over the course of the full debate is a recognition by all Parties that confirmation of the management powers outlined in the Bill, including the power to allocate among user groups and gear types, is absolutely essential to the successful management of a complex, modern fishery.

It is urgent that any uncertainty concerning the statutory basis for the Government's allocation decisions be removed, especially in light of the imminent opening of the West Coast salmon fishery. The Minister and the committee will work very hard to give the Bill the necessary review and return it to the House with the least possible delay.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I concur in the remarks of the chairman of the standing committee and of the Parliamentary Secretary. Members of the committee have done an excellent job in trying to find ways to co-operate and get things done. In principle we agree with what has been said by the Parliamentary Secretary; however, I should like to add two points.

There was some serious question about Section 2.1(d) which governs the problem of inland waters. It is my understanding the Minister indicated that he would be prepared to drop that particular subsection. Also there were some questions about the corresponding French and English wording in the Bill. It is my understanding that some response will come about and if an amendment was required it would happen.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, there were discussions between myself and the Hon. Member yesterday on those two items, Section 2.1(d) and the discrepancies which may exist between the French and English printing of the Bill, as well as the interpretation of the English and French versions of it. Departmental officials are looking at those two items and the Minister is considering the implications of subsection (d).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the indication of urgency, as was mentioned, during the herring season obviously did not come to pass. In terms of the urgency in the salmon season, I would suggest that we probably have a couple of months before this starts to become a problem for the Minister. Could the Parliamentary Secretary acknowledge that we are not pressed, that user groups and the Department are working on fishing plans, and that undoubtedly it will unfold in much the same way as the herring season? Would he acknowledge that it is likely the Minister will have it in time?

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I hear what the Hon. Member is saying. I agree that the concern for the herring fishery did not materialize, but I do not agree specifically with the idea that we have a lot of time and that there is no urgency in dealing with the Bill. I believe, as does the Minister, that there is some real urgency in getting the Bill through and having this settled.

There is a potential for serious problems in the fishing ground with the salmon fishery. A group plans to fish as early as the middle of April. Therefore, we believe there is urgency attached to this Bill. We will try to find every reasonable way of accommodating the concerns of the Opposition in trying to get this Bill through as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is as follows: Mr. Fraser, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, March 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-234, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works; and the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 3072).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, you will recall, I am sure, that the other day when I started to speak in the House I had about a minute of my 10 minutes, so I will assume that I have eight or nine minutes left.

In looking at the impact of what the Government is proposing to do, there are three reasons, in my judgment, why the measures that are being taken are inappropriate. The first reason is that the program has indeed been of some considerable benefit. The program has given home owners an opportunity to upgrade their residences. It has benefited the general desire on the part of everyone for conservation.

There is no evidence that I can see that the program has been abused. The moneys made available, at least under certain parts of the Bill—my colleague from Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) looks at me. If there were abuses, they were on the part of those who provided the service, not on the part of those who received it. I believe the home owners themselves took advantage of the program to the extent that it was available.

The moneys that were made available were taxable. Therefore, not even the full cost must be borne by the treasury of the country. For that reason, initially, I would say that the program makes sense. There are large numbers of people in the country who would take advantage of the program were it to be extended. We as a whole would benefit in the long run from the conservation of depletable energy resources that would naturally flow from their taking advantage of the program.

The second point is that it did create employment. It created employment in a number of small businesses that otherwise would have found themselves in serious difficulty. There is no question in my mind that in some aspects of the program there certainly were abuses by those who provided the service. In the insulation area the work frequently was not up to standards that we would have expected. In some instances not only was the Government short-changed, but the individual citizens were short-changed as a result of plain, ordinary, bad workmanship, not a reluctance to live up to the obligations.

Nevertheless, the program did provide employment for a large number of people. It provided employment at a time when employment was desperately needed. I do not think we have got past that stage today. There is still the need for employment opportunities for large numbers of people who could continue to be involved in the provision of services that are compensated for under this program. Keep in mind that we still have close to 1.5 million unemployed.

Taking into account that the normal employers in the country are not employing as many people as they did in the past, it would make more sense, in my judgment, to continue to fund this program from the employment point of view rather than to have those people on unemployment insurance, which could well be the case. If you take into account that many of the people who will not be employed as a result of terminating the program may well end up unable to find alternative employment, and if that is true, they will end up on unemployment insurance temporarily and perhaps ultimately on some other form of social program. There is very little benefit derived by society as a whole from forcing that kind of end result.

My judgment would be that from the point of view of maintaining opportunities for employment, this program ought to be at least extended, if not kept in place permanently. I would be prepared to concede that it might not be necessary to keep it in place permanently. There would come a time in the not too distant future where the number of citizens or families who would like to take advantage of it would be small. As more people use it, the need would become less and less. Ultimately the program would come to an end in itself. It comes to an end simply by virtue of the way in which it is structured. I would say to the Minister that from that point of view, in addition to the first, it would make some sense to extend it.

We have asked for a six-month hoist. We ask for it for what I think are legitimate reasons. The main reason, I suppose, is that, come the end of this month, one part of the program will terminate. Quite clearly, it will be awfully difficult in the normal course of events for the work to be undertaken in the winter.

If I were going to terminate a program such as this, I would suggest that the termination should be set off until the fall. That would allow for all of the summer period, which is a period of relatively high unemployment. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that I have just about used up my time. I will be very brief on closing.

If we were to allow it to extend over the summer, much of the work could be done in that period of the year when heating plants are not in use. It is possible then to open up buildings for the purpose of insulation and renovations. From that point of view, in addition to the other two, the program should be extended. I would urge the Government not to terminate it this week or next week, but rather set a date such as October 1—

I'm picking a date off the top of my head. That would allow the spring and summer months for the work to be done and then to effectively terminate it as at a time when people will have had an adequate lead time and the opportunity will have been there for the work to have been done.

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before the House today would postpone consideration of this Bill for six months. I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on this amendment, and I believe my constituents in Bourassa will understand the consequences of this motion. Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that CHIP, the Canadian Home Insulation Program and COSP, the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, were introduced between 1973 and 1977. Perhaps we should recall what the situation was in 1973 to fully understand the gravity of the economic problems that heating costs were creating for Canadians at that time.

The price of oil was increasing quite rapidly, and at the time, most Canadian homes had oil heating, so that heating bills were becoming a problem.

Mr. Speaker, being a truly responsible Government, we thought it would be a good thing to persuade Canadians to upgrade the insulation in their homes and to substitute for oil other forms of energy such as gas, electric power and wood, which have become very popular for home heating. CHIP, the program referred to in Bill C-24, was used to give grants to home owners who were taking steps to conserve energy.

[English]

The decision of the Government to abolish this program is not very easy to take. It may be right to say that Canadians must now take up their responsibilities and should insulate or change from oil to other sources of energy themselves if they so wish. I feel that a part of our obligation as parliamentarians is to tell Canadians how we see problems and issues and how better to deal with them.

There are two good programs in place which benefit ordinary Canadians, particularly those of low and middle income. Of the nearly five million residences that were targeted to use the insulation program, only about 2.5 million have done so. Other home owners have indicated an interest in proceeding with these programs after having heard from neighbours how well they work. These programs are primarily aimed at saving oil and thereby heating costs.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has now decided to do away with these two programs. It has the right to do so, since it is in power, but that does not mean I agree with its decision, and I think many Canadians do not agree either, because eliminating these two programs will cause problems for a number of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to elaborate too much on this point, but it would be a good thing if the Government could extend these programs at least until September 30, 1985, so that many contractors and consumers who have already applied for a grant under the program to convert their heating systems can take advantage of the program, and this would also help Canadians to save money. We have had a long, hard winter. Many Canadians have not had a chance to carry out this conversion. We suggest that the Government give these people a chance to take care of this during the spring and summer months.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I simply wish to say that we in the Official Opposition strongly urge the Government to reflect on the advantages of extending these two programs, which I think would be worthwhile for many Canadians.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has moved a six-month hoist on Bill C-24 because Bill C-24 is very unfair. I will give you an example, Mr. Speaker, of what I mean by its being very unfair.

When these programs were instituted, they were to continue until 1990. I would like to read into the record a letter indicating that arresting the COSP program now is very unfair. I received a letter from one of the communities in my riding. Its contents are indicative of what is happening right across the country. In fact, there are many areas of the country in which small communities have not yet been serviced by gas lines. The letter to which I refer came from the Clerk-Treasurer of the Township of Hagar and is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). The letter reads as follows:

Dear Madam:

The following resolution was passed by the Council of the Corporation of the Township of Hagar at their regular February 19, 1985 meeting.

"Moved by Councillor T. Beamish, seconded by Councillor R. Chartrand that since Northern and Central Gas hs proposed to serve the Villages of Markstay and Hagar with natural gas in the fall of 1985, and the COSP is scheduled to terminate on March 31st, 1985. Therefore the Township of Hagar request the Honourable Patricia Carney to extend the COSP to enable our residents to avail themselves of the grant and that copies of this resolution be sent to our local MPs."

We trust that you share our concern and urge you to give this matter your kind consideration.

That is only one example of the unfairness that will be perpetrated on the public by the premature arresting of the COSP program. There are communities right across the country that have not yet been serviced by gas lines but will be—

Mr. McDermid: But never will.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member says they never will. I just put one such case on the record. An unfairness to one is an unfairness to all. Perhaps the Hon. Member does not understand that principle. Perhaps his community received the grants and his people took advantage of the grants. However, there are many people in small communities who, because of the programming of the gas companies, do not enjoy that service.

When the Bill was first presented in the House, it went through second reading and committee stage and was approved within a couple of hours. I would like to put on the record the words of the then Conservative energy critic, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), spoken at the time this program was instituted. I am reading from page 11099 of Hansard for June 30, 1981. At that time, the Hon. Member said:

I do not think there is any question that the House in general understands and supports the purpose of the oil substitution program—

It is a good philosophy to get as many people in the low technology systems as possible to move away from the consumption of oil. It is particularly good, if the alternative is cheaper not only than the present price of oil but the future price as well.

The Hon. Member concluded his remarks by saying:

I want to conclude by congratulating the minister again for bringing this legislation forward and allowing us to ask him some questions. I hope he will consider the suggestion that I have made to improve the legislation and make it available to all Canadians.

The Government is now moving to take that program away from a great many Canadians. He went on:

If so, we could achieve this conversion from oil to other energies more rapidly than this bill by itself.

Those were the words of the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain who, to my knowledge, is always concerned about conservatioan and always looking for alternative energy sources.

COSP has served Canadians very well and it could continue to serve them very well. In my riding office I receive a great many phone calls from people who wish to convert and have placed orders for gas furnaces. Because of the acceleration of orders due to the premature announcement which was made by the Government to cut the program, manufacturers cannot supply the demand. Therefore, the people are not able to instal because the $800 grant is paid after the installation and inspection.

If we look at the history of the program, it has proven to be very efficient in the conservation of oil, which is a finite resource. It was not so long ago, in the early and mid-1970s, that we were wringing our hands and saying that we had to conserve energy because oil was running out. Canadians became very conscious of that. This program was a response to that concern. It attempted to get Canadians to use natural gas. We are told that there is a large surplus of natural gas. It is interesting to note that the provinces which took advantage of COSP were Ontario, Quebec and the provinces in Atlantic Canada. Those areas primarily depend on imported oil, which is priced higher than domestic oil. Canadians in those areas have taken advantage of COSP and converted to natural gas, which has helped to conserve the finite petroleum resources of Canada.

The evaluations of COSP and CHIP have shown that the programs have been helpful, not only in the conservation of energy but also in the whole area of job creation. The Government ran its election campaign on jobs. These programs have created thousands and thousands of person-years of employment, yet the Government is cutting the programs. One must ask, why? Why is the Government at this time cutting programs which have shown their usefulness in the evaluations which have been done by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources? I have the suspicion that the Government is cutting COSP so that Canadians will once again consume oil. In fact, it may be in the interests of some to convince the Government that Canadians must once again consume oil. It may be that the louder voices, and the influencing factors on the Conservative Government, are its friends in the oil patch.

Mr. McDermid: Not true.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Member opposite says that is not true. He protests too much. Why would the Government eliminate a program which, obviously, has been beneficial to Canadians? Surely, if it looked at the net benefit of keeping people working, paying taxes and buying goods and services—and the Government will get its money back because the COSP grants are taxable—it would not cut the program. I have the suspicion that it is a Machiavellian move by the Conservative Government once again to have Canadians consume oil. It is wasting a finite resource. I think the Government should be ashamed of itself. It should consider the reasonableness of the motion to hoist the Bill for six months.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on a motion presented by our friends next door, to postpone consideration of this Bill for six months.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 will have a disastrous impact on many regions in this country. You know as well as I do that in the Eastern Townships, for instance, where natural gas became available only a few months ago . . . Everybody knows people are by nature reluctant to change—except perhaps at election time—and when the natural gas pipeline was extended, the dependence of a region, and especially a province like Quebec, on a single source of energy was significantly reduced. However, I think that people were all counting on the oil substitution program to convert to natural gas, and since they were sure the program would be in place until December 31, 1990, no one bothered to have this done in the middle of winter.

If we consider the Government's decision, Mr. Speaker, it was motivated far more by fiscal year-end considerations than by any consideration for the interests of taxpayers and especially Canadian home owners. Deciding in November to axe a program in March, when the program involves home renovation, does not make sense. Everybody knows that not many Canadians are going to do any major changes in their homes in the middle of winter, especially if those changes involve converting the heating system. I am sure that in my hon. friend's riding, people do not change their heating systems in the middle of a February snow storm. That is why the March 31 date, selected only to do for the benefit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), makes no sense at all.

This program was quite successful and could have done a lot more good, but unfortunately we now find out that it will be terminated. We noticed today that not one of our colleagues on Government benches was honest enough to tell the Government or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) that the date she chose does not make any sense at all. I am pleased to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) who is a construction expert and who will certainly agree with me that it is impossible to change heating systems in the middle of winter. By arbitrarily picking March 31 as the deadline, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has shown that the requirements of the Minister of Finance mean more to her than the interests of Canadian consumers. We are therefore confronted with an impossible situation—consumers cannot get all the materials they need even if they are anxious to take full advantage of the program before the deadline.

As my colleague said earlier, I did get some letters. Many companies, municipalities and individuals are quite upset about this arbitrary deadline. They are really upset about this unilateral Government measure. We have heard the concerns expressed by Ontario or Ottawa electrical contractors' associations, not to mention those of many consumers, but what is even more upsetting, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, supposedly most concerned over energy conservation, said in a speech delivered in Vancouver last March 8 that those energy conservation programs are no longer a priority for the eighties.

Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do that energy conservation . . . We are witnessing laxity in Canada and within the Government, and there is nothing certain about the future in the energy sector. We are deluding ourselves if we think that because things are going relatively well right now, and I underscore the word relatively, we cannot take decreasing oil prices for granted, nor can we see anything meaningful in the fact electricity costs will continue to rise, like 2.5 per cent in Quebec this year. I think that Canadians would be well advised indeed to conserve as much energy as possible. It is in that sense that the arbitrary decision of the Government seriously undermines the oil substitution program and gives short shrift to the notion of Canadian self-sufficiency with respect to a sole source of energy.

The program was set up in the first place to ensure that Canadian consumers would no longer be dependent on only one resource. Canadians have become used to the idea that they ought to diversify their energy requirements, but all of a sudden somebody pulls the plug. That is why I support the amendment introduced to put off for six months the measure advocated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If the amendment is adopted, the deadline will be pushed back to October 1, so that the work can be done this spring and summer. When the date was announced in November, it was easy to say that people had lots of time.

An Hon. Member: How much would it cost?

Mr. Lapierre: How much would it cost? The whole country would save as well. My colleague opposite asks how much it would cost, but I would like to know whether he is trying to tell me that we ought to drop the CHIP program as well. He can suggest that because most houses in his riding have been insulated.

An Hon. Member: That is not what I said, I asked how much it would cost.

Mr. Lapierre: In my opinion. Mr. Speaker, when it comes to energy conservation, when it comes to helping Canadian consumers—

An Hon. Member: A $200 billion deficit!

Mr. Lapierre: My colleague from Bellechasse, I believe, or somewhere around there, is saying that we do not know what saving is all about. Before blaming Opposition Members, he should look at his own colleagues and tell them that they can set an example and start saving in their own offices. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is here and I am sure he would be able to tell you to what extent he thinks that his Cabinet colleagues are asking for too much with their inflated budgets.

Mr. Speaker, it looks as if our friends on the other side have a selective memory. Restraint is the last of their concerns when the armed forces are concerned, restraint is the last of their concerns when they want to boost our NATO contingent, restraint is the last thing on their minds when the PMO is involved, restraint is a foreign word, particularly when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) is let loose, but when ordinary Canadians are concerned, well that is where savings will come from. Restraint is the least of their concern when they consider granting tax breaks to such corporations as CP and Algoma Steel. As recently as two weeks ago, they granted a $200 million subsidy, and now some of our hon. friends opposite have the gall to claim that they cannot afford to help a Quebec firm. We have had just about enough of this kind of selective memory, Mr. Speaker. Either they are serious about the economy—

Mr. McDermid: What about Domtar or Dominion Tire.

Mr. Lapierre: My hon. friend wishes to attack Domtar. I know that some members of the Conservative caucus are against Domtar. I know also that these members do not understand anything about the Quebec situation or the Eastern Townships economy, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that you will do your utmost to instruct and enlighten them.

An Hon. Member: It is going to be difficult.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a problem, since the Hon. Member has been in the House for many years.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the subject of today's debate, I would urge our friends opposite who know about saving energy and who are acquainted with the construction industry, to vote in favour of this amendment, which is strictly an appeal to common sense. I think we can rise above partisanship on an issue like this. Why eliminate this home insulation program half way through? The objective was five million homes, and 2.5 million have been insulated. Now they want to cut the program! Mr. Speaker, we are only half way there. If the program were allowed to continue as planned by the previous Government, we would be able to congratulate each other as soon as the program's goal was achieved, and, I repeat, without partisanship, because the people who truly stand to benefit would be our fellow Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I think it has been amply demonstrated here in the House that this Bill was improvised, that the Government did not consider the constraints of the construction industry and did not consider the needs of Canadians, and I know that our friends opposite will want to reconsider, in the light of the information we have given them today in the course of this debate.

I know, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member's time already expired a minute ago.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, because I think that although these two particular measures have not received a great deal of attention, they tell us a lot about the direction in which the Government wants to take us in terms of our energy future.

As you may know, Bill C-24 seeks to implement two measures planned in the November 8, 1984 economic statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson): the early elimination of these two energy conservation programs. We are opposed to this Bill and that is why we have been putting up speakers and have moved the six-month hoist. It is also why we are giving the Government trouble when it comes to trying to get this Bill through the House in a hurry. We think more attention should be paid to just what the Government is up to when it comes to our energy future and where its priorities lie.

I note, for instance, that we see the cancellation of conservation programs and the cancellation of research into alternative energy sources, yet we see no indication whatsoever of any willingness on the part of the Government to be critical of another energy option imposed upon us by successive Liberal Governments. That is, Mr. Speaker, the whole nuclear energy option.

I recall that when the Conservatives were elected in May of 1979, one of the first things they were going to do was begin a parliamentary inquiry into the whole nuclear fuel cycle, the economics of nuclear energy and its environmental aspects—the whole works. I recall at that time being very positive about the willingness of the Progressive Conservative Party to initiate this inquiry into what, in my view, and I think their view also at the time, was a Liberal boondoggle involving hundreds of millions of dollars being spent on the nuclear option in this country with little or no public accountability and even less public debate.

In 1979 we had an indication that there was going to be an inquiry into the nuclear industry, but what have we got from the Progressive Conservatives after their election in 1984? We have no indication that that critical attitude towards the nuclear fuel cycle has survived the years between 1979 and 1984 at all. The one time I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) whether or not she would be taking up the commitment made by the Progressive Conservative Party in 1979 and initiating such an inquiry, and this was before Christmas, she said she would have to talk to AECL first. Mr. Speaker, it is not out of the question to talk to AECL about it, but it is certainly somewhat suspect that the Minister made no commitment to talk to anyone else about the advisability of having an inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle.

Mr. McDermid: Are you for or against it?

Mr. Blaikie: Why did she not indicate that she would talk to the Canadian coalition on nuclear responsibility or the host of other groups concerned about the industry? The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) asks me whether I am for or against it. I do not think it is any secret that I am opposed to the nuclear future which was imposed on us without public debate by the Liberal Government. I thought the Conservatives were too and that is why they wanted to initiate a parliamentary inquiry. That is why I am referring to comments and commitments they made in 1979.

• (1620)

I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether she was going to pick up where the Conservative Government of 1979 left off. She indicated to me that she would talk to AECL about it. She has had nothing to say since then about what AECL had to say. I am almost positive that AECL did not tell her to go ahead with a full-scale inquiry into the nuclear industry. She said that the problem may only be one of marketing. This again reveals an unwillingness on the part of the Progressive Conservative Government, like that of Liberal Governments before, to ask a more fundamental question about whether we should be investing the hundreds of millions of dollars that we are investing into this while neglecting other energy alternatives. The Government has made a specialty of that by almost wiping out research into other energy alternatives, particularly the research which was taking place under the umbrella of the National Research Council.

I am concerned about the direction that this Bill, taken with other statements of the Government, indicates the Government is moving in. I refer to statements made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to radioactive waste disposal and the connection between that and choosing a nuclear future over the conservation and alternative energy future which we could have chosen. Instead, they are introducing Bills such as this which terminate conservation programs.

In a letter to the town council of Gimli, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred to the possible commercial benefits of Canada becoming a repository for the radioactive garbage of countries all around the world. This was in response to a concern expressed by the municipality of Gimli and other municipalities across Manitoba about the possibility of the site at Lac du Bonnet, where the underground research laboratory is presently situated, eventually becoming a radioactive garbage dump.

Instead of posing critical questions about the future of nuclear energy, the problems which it poses and the fact that we do not have to be pursuing this particular option, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can only talk about the commercial benefits of radioactive waste disposal. She says that the problem may only be marketing, without asking the more fundamental question of whether we should be marketing this stuff in the first place.

I just wanted to register my concern and that of a great many Canadians that this Bill indicates that the Government is clearly moving in the wrong direction with regard to our energy future. It is clearly not taking into account all of the things we have learned over the last 10 or 15 years. We have learned that we can have an energy future that is responsible in terms of the environment and in terms of consumption, therefore conserving resources for future generations. The Government should act responsibly toward the public by having a genuine debate about what kind of energy future Canadians want. This is not the kind of policy that the Government is now exercising. One can only regret this. That is why we continue to oppose this Bill.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I too want to join in this debate and to ask the Government to change its decision to terminate what I believe are many valuable conservation measures that the previous administration introduced. I noted with considerable interest the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid). I think it is worthwhile to review very briefly some of those comments. I am sure that if I am not absolutely correct in reading what I believe to be a quote from the Hon. Member, he would certainly rise to the occasion and correct any inconsistencies. I certainly would not want intentionally to mislead the House about what the Parliamentary Secretary has said on previous occasions.

Suffice it to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program have given Canadians the opportunity to conserve energy. In many parts of the country this is of paramount importance, particularly in Atlantic Canada, parts of western Canada and in parts of Quebec.

In my own Province of Nova Scotia for a considerable period of time we imported a great deal of oil to use for the generation of electricity. This was done primarily because of geography and the cheap price of oil at one point in time. Unfortunately, the OPEC crisis in 1974 and a host of other events made it virtually impossible for Nova Scotians to rely as heavily as they had on imported oil. Consequently, the provincial and federal Governments of the day consummated various agreements with regard to energy conservation. I am happy to say that a number of those projects worked very well for Nova Scotians with regard to reducing their energy costs.

I believe that these two programs, which were initiated by the former Government, have aided very well the residents of Nova Scotia as well as all residents of Atlantic Canada. They were given the opportunity to take advantage of the government assistance which was necessary in order to convert from the highly-priced imported oil to coal, which is found in abundance in eastern Nova Scotia, or to wood or gas.

I was a bit concerned when the Parliamentary Secretary said that they in the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources have received a number of representations proposing that three or four or five extra months be allowed to complete conversions in respect of commitments signed by applicants before March 31 of this year. It ought to be noted that through correspondence, which no doubt the Parliamentary Secretary has reviewed with great interest, the Electrical Contractors Association of Ottawa made a submission in March of this year to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources asking that the COSP program be extended to September 30, 1985. I believe their rationale to be legitimate, Mr. Speaker. I have no information or desire to question the integrity or intentions of this particular association. They indicated that the parts which they needed to complete those conversions were not readily available. Surely the Parliamentary Secretary would not want to tell those applicants, who have gone through the formalities to convert, that the national Government is not going to be sympathetic or sensitive to their needs to have the conversions completed.

Mr. McDermid: Why didn't you extend the first time home owners grant? It's the same principle.

Mr. Dingwall: The Parliamentary Secretary is an eager man. He is eager to gravitate to the front benches, and I would think that some day he perhaps might. Perhaps he would be kind and courteous enough to listen to a Member of Parliament who has a different ideology and philosophy than he has.

The fact of the matter is that the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have absolutely no regard, no compassion, and no sensitivity whatsoever for those individuals who believe it necessary to convert from oil to other sources of energy.

• (1630)

It is very clear that the Government is not concerned about the ordinary people who wish to make that conversion in order to reduce their energy costs. That is not a concern of the Conservative Party and that is particularly not a concern of the Parliamentary Secretary. It is not a concern of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). They do not care at all about Canadians who need a break in terms of their energy costs.

It is the Conservatives who preach compassion for the less fortunate. If the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) were the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I suggest that we would see a different approach to this issue. However, the current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has no concern for those Canadians. She is telling Canadians in Atlantic Canada who are faced with the highest energy costs in Canada that there is no way the great national Tory Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will assist them in this regard. That is the effect of the actions of the Minister of Energy when it comes to the Canadian Oil Substitution Program.

Atlantic Canadians are not being heard by the Government. Government Members are not speaking out on behalf of their constituents. They are not speaking out on behalf of our region. Members on that side of the House are derelict in their duties. When it comes to the Canadian Home Insulation Program, it has provided jobs in my region of the country as well as in Ontario and Quebec. But what does the Conservative Government and the Minister do? They cut, cut, cut. So much for jobs, jobs, jobs.

The Government's actions, as enunciated in the November 8 statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), have clearly shown to the residents of Atlantic Canada that the Government is not concerned about their economic plight. Of course, the Government's actions today as they are being supported by the Parliamentary Secretary, certainly show no concern about the cost that we must incur with regard to energy. The Home Insulation Program, which was administered by Canada Mortgage and Housing, was a very good program that provided new home owners and others with a subsidy toward energy conservation.

I am proud of my region. It is an area where energy costs are soaring rather than being reduced in any substantive way. Subsidies under the Home Insulation Program, therefore, are extremely important to that region. It provides those Canadians in Atlantic Canada with an opportunity for obtaining financial assistance so that they can be warm during the winter months.

Although clearly there is a sufficient number of applicants to take advantage of this program, rather than letting it continue for another two years, the Government unilaterally selected a date—March of this year—to terminate this program. In so doing, it is terminating thousands of jobs upon which small business people across the country depended.

The Parliamentary Secretary, who echoes the sentiments of his Leader and the Minister of Finance, would not want to suggest to the House that he and his Party are not supportive of small business, but by their actions they are terminating a program which has been beneficial not only to the consumer but to numerous small business persons across the country.

I find it somewhat contradictory that the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) should travel throughout the country to consult with small business individuals and say that he is concerned about enhancing and promoting their businesses while the Conservative Government does not take such action. It is doing the exact opposite.

I say to government Members that what they are doing is wrong. The Government should reinstitute the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program because they benefit Canadians who are in absolute need of that financial assistance. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will use his persuasive abilities to change the attitude of Cabinet Members.

I know that the Minister of Transport would agree to that, if the Cabinet were asked to change that decision.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today illustrates an interesting characteristic of the present Government. The Government, with its overwhelming majority, is one that believes in restraint.

While I believe everyone agrees with restraint, there are different ways to implement restraint. There is sensible restraint, which has several interesting aspects. A Government that would implement sensible restraint would decide on the relevance and efficiency of a program. If it did not meet those requirements, it would be phased out and the resources allocated to that program could be saved and possibly allocated to other programs. That is an example of sensible restraint that has been practised by NDP Government in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Another aspect to carrying out sensible restraint would be to make a small investment in order to rearrange an expensive program. This would ultimately save much more money. For example, investing a relatively small amount in trying to prevent a disease rather than spending much more in finding its cure would ultimately save money. In the past, Governments have invested in a program in order to reap larger benefits later on. The Canadian Oil Substitution Program is one such example. Due to the fact that oil was becomimg too expensive and was having negative effects on the economy, the Government made a small investment so that Canadians would ultimately benefit from a restraint program, but it required that initial investment by the Government.

The same situation applies to the Canadian Home Insulation Program. That small investment by the Government reduces the need for energy consumption, which means that this reasonable and relatively small investment ultimately gives a large return.

Restraint also mean the necessity to balance programs and resources with the needs of people. For example, investment in the creation of small business activity would increase employment and therefore reduce unemployment insurance spending and generally improve the vitality of the Canadian economy. That fits into restraint and it is very worth-while and sensible restraint.

● (1640)

Let us take a look at the converse. The converse is what I call Tory-Socred restraint, which says that there is something evil and negative about the Public Service. It says our goal in life, as the Conservatives say, is to chop the public sector.

Mr. Malone: Who said that?

Mr. Skelly: Let us take a look at this Government's colleagues in British Columbia. The Tory-Socred restraint pattern, the Mulroney-Bennett axis, has created a situation in British Columbia where we now have a decimation of the public sector. Those fools removed a sexual abuse team that protected children and attempted to prevent children from being exploited in an extremely savage manner. Some of my colleagues next door giggle at that. That is stupid restraint and I know those individuals would never approve of that type of restraint as the protection of children is probably the primary responsibility of any society. That is stupid restraint, Mr. Speaker. That has been done across the board with health care, education, and in the delivery of many social services and probably it has reduced in British Columbia the quality of education to the lowest level of anywhere in Canada, I would say. There are situations with health care now which are absolutely unbelievable. Emergency health care cannot be effectively delivered in many areas of the province, you cannot obtain surgery. It is interesting that some minor spending in the areas of prevention and home care would bring relief in that day-to-day use of high priced acute care beds would not be required to such a large degree. That is the kind of restraint, the Tory-Socred model. Let us move a little closer to Ottawa to see how it is being applied by the present Government.

Mr. Malone: Are you going to make this up too?

Mr. Skelly: What we have is a situation in Canada where we could encourage the population to reduce the consumption of petroleum and high priced energy products. I am speaking of the simple insulation of a home, retrofitting a home, making sure there is adequate insulation which reduces the consumption of fuel. It does not seem to make sense that a small single act of retrofitting a house can save an enormous amount of money. The home owner saves. In some areas of Canada, in remote areas, and in rural areas, which many of the Members here right now represent, the Government is saying, "No, we are not going to help you, although we realize that your prices for obtaining insulation and for obtaining proper heating fuel in the country is much more expensive than in central Canada". They are drawing a line and, saying that those people who live south of a certain line in major metropolitan areas in Canada will have the benefit of lower prices and reduced costs of transportation, no problem. What you get on the other side of the line is that you have to pay full inflated high prices for your heating. You are told, "Do not retrofit your home, and continue to depend on oil".

If this Tory-Socred restraint were repealed, it would be an act of fairness to those who live in rural and remote areas of Canada. Many Members represent those areas.

This Tory-Socred restraint program is really an attack on employment. It is a labour intensive activity. It is a small amount of money that encourages small entrepreneurs to organize businesses to retrofit homes. It is a fairly substantial business in many areas. I know members of the Conservative Party and of the Government have small contractors in their ridings. By terminating this program they will kill that employment provided by the small businesses and they will decrease the level of economic activity. Unfortunately, this is the kind of thing to which we are pointing. This is a Tory-SoCred type restraint. In many respects it is blind and destructive.

Mr. Stewart: There are no Socreds in Ontario.

Mr. Skelly: We had a comment from across the floor, naive and uninformed, about the political nature of this country.

Mr. McDermid: Quit fighting your brothers' battles.

Mr. Skelly: Unfortunately a Socreds is a Conservative. The restraint mentality is exactly the same.

We have to move forward. We must ask Members in this House this: if they remove the grant will they not in fact cause small businesses in their areas to be harmed? Will they in fact not create unemployment? Will they in fact not create and increase the dependence on high priced petroleum? Will the Government not be required to pay more money for the sake of simply saving a lousy few dollars by cutting an extremely important program, a program that stimulates the economy and saves on scarce and valuable resources? In the long term it puts money in the pockets of Canadians, in the pockets of working people, in the pockets of small businesses, and in the pockets of Government. This Tory-Socred exchange is stupid. It would be my hope that the Government of Canada would reconsider and repeal it.

I know this side of the House will fight seriously on this issue. If some of the more naive Members on the other side have had a problem understanding the situation, I would be more than pleased to answer any questions they might have.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this debate to oppose the adoption of this Bill or at the very least to speak in support of the motion before the House to give the Bill a six-month hoist. I believe this Bill shows the lack of commitment of the current Conservative Government to oil conservation. In fact, it is a blow against the cause of oil conservation and energy conservation generally. This Bill shows also a lack of support by the current Conservative Government for small business. It also shows a very unfortunate lack of support by this Government to the cause of job creation. In addition, it is an example, just one of many I could give, showing simply bad management by this Conservative Government of the country's affairs.

The Conservatives in this debate have readily admitted the value of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program when it comes to energy conservation. I understand that earlier in the debate on this Bill the Parliamentary Secretary said that since 1980 "almost one million units in Canada have been converted under the program, representing oil displacement of some 32,000 barrels a day, which is a very significant amount". The Parliamentary Secretary went on to say that "CHIP has provided assistance toward conservation measures in more than 2,500,000 homes. Significant energy savings averaging some 17 per cent have been achieved in the homes that use CHIP". Finally, he said that "between CHIP and COSP we are talking about some 60,000 barrels of oil". It is very clear, Mr. Speaker, as the Parliamentary Secretary said, that "the over-all impact of COSP", and I might add of CHIP as well, "has been beneficial and has obviously helped to bring Canada closer to oil self-sufficiency".

It is typical Tory logic to want to end prematurely a program that has already achieved so much good when it comes to conservation of oil in Canada and which can achieve even more benefit for Canadians if allowed to continue at least for some further period beyond that proposed in this Bill.

I said that the measure before the House shows a lack of support by the current Government for small business despite continued lip-service by the Government being given to the interests and cause of small business, because when we are talking about the kinds of companies that carry out the work of insulation of homes and of converting heating systems from oil to gas or electricity, we are talking about thousands of small businesses across the country. These are the kinds of companies which do this work. These are the kinds of companies which have been benefiting from this legislation. These are the kinds of companies which will be harmed by the termination of the program in the way proposed by the Government in Bill C-24.

The Government has talked over and over again about how it wants to support the private sector, private sector initiative and small business. When it had a definite opportunity to do so, by allowing COSP and CHIP to continue, instead of using that opportunity it did just the opposite and brought in this Bill to choke off prematurely support for the thousands of small businesses involved in the home insulation and energy conservation. Simply put, this is quite wrong but it is also typical of the way the Government says one thing and does something quite different.

I also said that Bill C-24 shows a lack of willingness on the part of the Government to support the cause of job creation. The Conservatives stand condemned out of the mouths of their own Members on this particular important point.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) said that when it comes to COSP "we find that for every $1 million spent on COSP, we have 30.5 person-years of employment created". Also he indicated that "between 1981 and 1985, some 16,570 person-years of employment were created and that if you add the home owner contribution, the total employment creation reaches 50,250 person-years". Yet the Conservative Government wants to end that type of useful, constructive and needed job creation.

We are talking about the creation of jobs in a sector where unemployment is and continues to be, unfortunately, all too high. I am talking about the whole area of construction, particularly home renovation and the like. In ending these programs by means of this legislation, the Government will not, in my view, save the money it hopes to save. Instead, it will simply spend the same, and likely larger amounts of money, through the unemployment insurance system. Would it not be better to have people continue doing useful work in home insulation and in changing home heating systems from oil to gas or electricity or even to wood in some parts of the country? Would it not be better to have them spend the money for that purpose than to have people sit in what will likely turn out to be idleness, despite their efforts to find work, and put them into the unemployment insurance system? That will be the result of the adoption of this Bill. It proves what I have been saying about how this measure flies in the face of what the current Government claims is its commitment to the creation of jobs. This Bill will have just the opposite effect. It will have a harmful effect on not only the creation of jobs but on the preservation of jobs in the construction sector, an area which does not need to be slowed down, an area which needs further support and assistance because of the already too high levels of unemployment in it.

I also said that this Bill is unfortunately another example of bad management of the country's affairs by the current Government. I am told that Consumers' Gas, for fiscal year October 1, 1983 to February 28, 1984, received 4,814 applications for conversion to natural gas. From October 1, 1984 to February 26, 1985, the same company received 17,912 applications of which 8,889 were in January and February. Faced with this kind of demand, the industry will not be able to install systems by the March 31 deadline. All this means is that on March 31, there will be many very disappointed people who expected better from the Conservative Government. When it comes to support for home insulation and energy conservation, this Bill shows that they will be getting a great, big zero.

Because of weather conditions in much of Ontario, it has been impossible for digging to be done to open the ground and install gas lines. Also, because of the lack of advance notice of the Government's intention, it has been impossible for companies making furnaces and related equipment, including insulation supplies, to keep up with the demand. Companies like Consumers' Gas and organizations like the Canadian Gas Association say that it will simply be impossible to get the work done by the March 31 deadline or even to cope with the applications they have on hand. Yet the Bill says that if the work is not completed by the March 31 deadline, it will not be eligible for support under the Canadian Oil Substitution Program.

This is proof of what I said when I made the statement that the way this Government proceeded with this Bill was simply another example of the bad management by the Government of the country's affairs. If the Government is serious about listening to the private sector and about co-operating with business, surely it will listen to the representations of organizations such as the Canadian Gas Association and companies such as Consumers' Gas and, at the very least, grant a further six-month extension before there is an expiry of COSP.

I am sure the same situation prevails in my part of the country, in western Ontario, which is served by Union Gas. If we check with that company, I am sure we will find that it has far more applications than it could possibly handle by March 31.

I am speaking on behalf of tens of thousands of individual Canadians and their families, on behalf of thousands of small businesses, and on behalf of thousands of workers in the sectors involved, when I call upon the House either to reject the Bill or, at the very least, to put it off for six months, so that hopefully some reason will prevail on the part of the Government and it will approach the whole area of oil substitution and home insulation in a more rational and sensible manner and better serve the interests of Canadians than it is doing with this ill-thought out Bill that does not deserve the support of the House or of the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate—

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. de Jong: Don't mess with your Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I have seen the Hon. Member rise. We are now in a period of ten-minute speeches, so I will ask the House if it wishes to resume debate. If the Hon. Member has a question of order, of course that is another matter. Resuming debate—

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: What's going on here?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Does the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) have a point of order?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) wanted to speak but has been pulled down by his colleagues.

Mr. de Jong: That is shameful.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is contrary to the theory of freedom of speech in the House for members of the Conservative Party to shout down their own Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to ask the Hon. Member what happens in his riding if there is a gas leak or a water leak in the middle of winter? Do they repair the line or do they not?

Mr. Deans: That was a short intervention.

An Hon. Member: That was a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member rose to speak on debate and asked a question. Everyone knows very well that questions are not permitted.

Mr. Rossi: And he knows it, too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Having asked the question, there will not be an answer on behalf of the Hon. Member, and we will now resume debate.

Mr. Skelly: I have a short point, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Does the Hon. Member have a point of order?

Mr. Skelly: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Then please say so. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River on a point of order.

• (1700)

Mr. Skelly: There is an element of serious concern, Mr. Speaker, and I think the Chair should be in a position to make some recommendations. A Member got up and wanted to speak, but his colleagues pulled him down. Then he wanted to ask a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. We will now resume debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) got up to ask a question. We are prepared to give him unanimous consent to ask his question, even though it is not part of the rules in this particular section of the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Tories said no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Members of the House know the rules sufficiently well not to get into this kind of situation. We will now resume debate on the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question? The question is as follows: Miss Carney, seconded by Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot), moved that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Cassidy, seconded by Mr. Manly, moved in amendment thereto:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Cassidy) which was negatived on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to briefly speak on Bill C-24. We have had an excellent debate on this Bill and a large number of Members have spoken on the main motion and on the amendment.

I would like to see this Bill now go to committee. Therefore I move, seconded by the Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The problem is that the Member for Brampton-Georgetown has already spoken to this Bill and therefore cannot second the motion. I suggest that the Hon. Member find another Member to second it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, are you going to give other Members the floor?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. First, the Hon. Member for London West had been recognized by the Chair. It is his decision who to choose as a seconder. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is the seconder.

Therefore the question is as follows: Mr. Hockin, seconded by Mrs. Mailly, moves:

That the question be now put.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, sometimes it takes a few minutes to understand what is going on in the House, when the Government uses these blockbuster techniques, when it will not give the Opposition a chance to speak to a Bill as important as this one, and when we have a Government that is in such a hurry to do the wrong thing, to eliminate two very necessary and important programs—programs that are very worthwhile for Canadians—and I am referring to the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program.

[English]

Bill C-24 provides for the termination of two very important programs. One is the Canadian Oil Substitution Program which will end on March 31, 1985, which is approximately a week from now. The other is the CHIP program, a very good program that assisted Canadians to better insulate their homes and therefore save energy.

Mr. Caccia: A good Liberal program.

Mr. Gauthier: A good Liberal program, as the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) says. It is a program that was well received and very useful.

The termination date in the existing legislation for the COSP program was December 31, 1990, and for the CHIP program, the end of 1987. The Government has decided to compress the time so that the COSP program will end on March 31 and the CHIP program at the end of 1986.

Government Members, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid), who is not here now, have spoken about the use of these programs since their inception. Both have been spectacularly successful. But most people have had an opportunity to take advantage of them. Those are the words the Tories use. These programs are now limited and questionable in their value. Therefore, the Government said it would stop them.

The premise of these arguments, that yes, the program has been successful, most people have used it and the value of it is now questionable, is questionable. This morning I wanted to put a motion before this House before we were frozen, zapped by the Government, into its question be now put motion. I wanted to put to this insensitive Government a proposal that this entire subject matter be referred to a committee for further consideration and understanding.

There are regions of this country in my Province of Ontario, in particular the northern part, where COSP and CHIP have not had full utilization because the people up north have not had the gas distribution system, the gas lines, that we have had here in southern Ontario. As a result they have not had the opportunity to substitute oil for other energy, such as gas.

I said in my speech last week that gas and electrical contractors are experiencing difficulties in being able to complete the work they have started on conversion programs assisting Canadians who want to change oil furnaces to electrical or gas furnaces before the termination of this program.

We have had some problems with frost this winter, Mr. Speaker. It is a fact of Canadian life that the ground freezes over in wintertime. Gas companies have had trouble getting their pipes to the homes and into the streets in our cities. But this Government does not care. What the hell does it care. Frost, that is just too bad. That is the attitude. We could not cut off the heat in January when it was 20 below zero. We could not cut off the heat in our homes and take away furnaces in order to change over to gas or to other energy forms. That is why COSP should have been prolonged. Let me say welcome back to the Hon. Member. That is why COSP should be extended and fully available to all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Liberal Party Whip referred to the absence or presence of a specific Member of this House. He knows better than that.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the spokespersons for the Government have also made much of the fact that the intention to end these programs was clearly indicated in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8. The intention was there. We all heard him. We all heard him say that the Government was going to cut $4 billion from the federal programs. That was clear. It is the method the Government is using that we do not accept. The Government is doing everything without notice. The Government told Canadians on November 8 in a very abrupt manner that it was going to cut the programs. The Government was saying: "Too bad, Canadians, you did not take advantage of it. Too bad, you are out. If you do not have your contract signed and delivered by March 31, you are out of luck".

What kind of a decision is that, Mr. Speaker. That, to me, is a reflection of the lack of understanding of the Government for Canadian housing problems and for Canadians having difficulties heating their homes. Canadians had zero lead time concerning this program. There was absolutely no lead time given. On November 8 we heard the cut-off was March 31. Bang, that is it. That is how we were told. The Government says it is going to consult. There was no consultation on that. There was no consultation with industry. The Government consulted no one.

An Hon. Member: Wrong.

Mr. Gauthier: CHIP is not as bad as COSP when it comes to lead time. At least the lead time for CHIP is a year or so. The Government gave us time to insulate our homes better. I say thank you very much to the Government. It is very nice of the Government. But how about the oil conversion which saved Canadians 60,000 barrels of oil a day? Figure that out at $35 a barrel, Mr. Speaker. It comes to over a million dollars. That is a lot of money which Canadians actually saved as a result of the oil conversion program and the home insulation program. I think that is good. But because the oil conversion program is good, the Government cuts it off.

• (1115)

When speaking to the Bill on February 28, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), pointed out to the House and to the Government, if it had ears to hear, that Consumers' Gas in Ontario, which is my province, between October 1, 1984 and February 26, 1985 received 17,912 applications for conversions from oil to natural gas under COSP. You are out of luck, Canadians! The Electrical Contractors Association reports that in the same period 6,348 applications were processed for conversions from oil to electric heating, of which 2,956 were in the Ottawa region. What will happen to those? Nix, nothing. The Government says that the program has been used by most Canadians, that its value has expired. That is nonsense. The Association also reports that there were 2,000 applications in the month of February alone.

I am not inventing these figures; they come from Ontario Hydro, which is a pretty good authority in matters of conversion. That company knows what it is talking about. That was the number of applications in the month of February under COSP, for Canadians to transfer from oil to electricity. It is a good indication that the program has been working and has been accepted by Canadians. It would seem to me that most people have not taken advantage of the program.

At any rate, the figures which I just quoted indicate that we should be sensitive and allow for an extension of the limits on these programs. We have also been told by the Electrical Contractors Association that it is not possible, due to manufacturing shortages, for them to deal with the applications received and that many of these will be and are ineligible for COSP grants. If we have a difficulty with manufacturing because of the demand, then God knows the program has been successful and should be prolonged. I blame the Government for its lack of sensitivity. I say to the Government that it is to be damned for this.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in my speech I will make it very obvious that I am speaking about the concerns of people in northern Canada. On March 7, 1985 I wrote to the Minister, pointing out that electrical contractors in my riding know Canadians want to take advantage of the existing program which the Conservative Government is now cutting off. Unfortunately I do not have the time to list the names, since the Government has now cut off debate in the House. Since they are located in communities in northern Manitoba, they will not be able to get the equipment into the communities on time. Contractors have pointed out that they have to bring their equipment from Toronto and from Montreal. Yet because of the increased demand at the present time, they cannot get these supplies, and people in those communities will not be able to benefit from the program.

I raised this issue in the House a couple of days ago in support of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). At that point I heard someone on the Tory side respond: "If they had applied before November 8, they would be okay". Before November 8, those people did not know that the Government would cut those programs. Aside from that, it is obvious to most Members of the House that most Canadians do not want their houses ripped apart in the winter-time. Most people cannot afford to have the temperature in their house go to minus 20 celsius, or in my riding to minus 40 or minus 50 in the winter. Telling people on November 8 that they had to have everything done by the end of March excluded a large number of Canadians from benefiting from this program.

In defence of the Conservative position, some of their speakers have said that a million people have already used this program and that is enough. The fact that a million Canadians have seen these programs as beneficial points out that there is a demand in this country for the off-oil program, that there is a demand for a strong CHIP program to provide home insulation. This Government is limiting those options. CHIP is reduced and the off-oil program is cut off completely.

The point has to be that these are programs which were instituted for the purpose of saving our limited oil resources and to help people reduce their energy costs. Energy costs in Canada for heating are extremely high. This Government, which is willing to continue grants to the large oil companies and tax write-offs for so many corporations in this country as well as allowing the banks to pay criminally low rates of income tax, will not allow the ordinary Canadian home owner to benefit from a program which has been used by so many in the past.

I regret very much that the Government has moved to cut off debate on this matter. This is something that is now getting the public ire. In the last couple of days there have finally been some newspaper articles regarding consumers and corporations involved in the electrical and gas fields coming forward and saying that this program is a benefit to them and that they would like the opportunity to participate in it. Cutting off debate in this House excludes these people from being able to make their point.

The information that I received from the Flin Flon Electric Shop, which I mentioned earlier, is information which I conveyed to the Minister in March of this year. That was when I received their inquiry. Consumers Gas is listed in the Ottawa Citizen for today, March 21. Obviously, they are still making their point to the public. In the name of public participation, consultation, co-operation and all the things that this Government made its trademark during the election, why is it cutting off debate?

Why would it not accept the motion that was made by our Party to have a six-month hoist of this Bill to allow people who want the programs that exist at the present time to continue? Why not allow them to take advantage of the Canadian summer to switch from oil to natural gas, hydroelectricity or, in my riding, to switch to woodburning furnaces? Why not allow them that opportunity? This is a program of which the public approves. That is obvious from the use it has had in the past.

Let me speak on the other side of the ledger. Let us talk about the jobs that would be created if this program were kept in existence. If the Government were to change its mind and leave this program in place over the summer, allowing as we suggested six months or another year for the program to be in existence, it would create many, many jobs in small businesses right across this country. There would be a need for electrical parts and, as was pointed out, some communities would require pipelines. There would be a need for gas lines in some cities. A number of small contractors in each and every riding of this country would be employed throughout the summer.

This is a job-creating program which is working at the present time. If the Government is going to make jobs, jobs, jobs, its number one priority, which was another election promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), why is it cutting a program which not only provides a consumer service, but provides jobs for so many small businessmen, contractors and construction workers at a time when they need work the most?

Unemployment figures are still high. It is obvious that there will not be that much work this summer for a great many of those people. By passing this legislation now, the Conservative Government is guaranteeing that people in my riding, people in Quebec, people in Ontario, people in every province of the country, will be laid off. The Government must take the responsibility for that.

I see that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) is present in the House today. I am glad to see him here. He of all people should recognize that many reserves do not have gas lines at the present time. Many reserves do not have adequate hydroelectric programs to provide for electric heat at the present time. These people will not be able to change their heating systems by March 31 of this year. By giving people time to take advantage of this program, we will be providing services to those communities. We will be providing jobs this summer. I think we will be providing some leadership in terms of a fair program which, to use our election slogan, can be taken advantage of by ordinary Canadians.

I see I have only one minute left so I will have to wind up my remarks. It is obvious that in the general program of the Government, the real rip-offs in taxes which benefit large corporations and the reductions in personal income taxes introduced by the Liberal Government for those people at the top of the earnings scale will continue. It is amazing that this one program of which so many ordinary Canadians without large incomes can take advantage is the program the Government has made its number one target in terms of legislation.

There are many reforms that are needed. There are many areas in which we must have responsible government accounting. Why pick on the little guy? Why pick on the widow? Why pick on the person who needs government assistance the most?

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the amendment to Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, because I think this is one of the few programs that has been used to help thousands of Canadians who showed an earnest desire to change their living habits.

Under the Canadian Oil Substitution Program introduced in 1980 by a Liberal Government, taxable grants of up to $800 were available as partial payment for the cost of converting from oil to heating systems operating on natural gas, electric power, propane, wood or other forms of renewable energy. According to the present legislation, the program expires on December 31, 1990. The proposed Bill provides that the deadline will be moved up to March 31 of this year, which is in about a week. We believe that by asking to have the bill withdrawn and referred to the appropriate parliamentary committee, we can make the transition period easier for Canadian consumers.

I must emphasize that Bill C-24 represents a threat for direct action programs. These programs are designed for consumers. They also directly concern families and homeowners. Thus, by their very nature, they have a very special character. Eliminating these programs means that we are going to deprive Canadian families of funds earmarked for them by the Federal Government.

It is important to realize the impact these cuts will have. The Canadian Home Insulation Program is designed for homeowners who want to conserve energy. They can obtain up to $500 to help pay for costs incurred.

As for the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, homeowners have taken advantage of this program to convert from oil to another kind of heating system. The $800 grant was very well received and has been an incentive for Canadians to do the requisite conversion.

The benefits of both programs now extend well beyond the dollar value of the grants. These programs are meant for consumers who are worried about the price of oil for home heating. The people who wanted to take advantage of the programs were counting on an expiry date on December 31, 1990, according to the information given by the federal Government. The problem is, however, that many Canadians who felt that a program set up by the Liberal Government would be maintained by the new Progressive Conservative Government, are now seeing another series of cuts, which of course, translate as lay-offs in the construction industry.

The Government claims that everything will be all right, and that people will still convert their heating system. The Government claims that Canadians are well aware of the options they have as far as energy is concerned. Many are. And they can afford to be because they have been able to take advantage of these programs. However, there are Canadians who will not be able to take advantage of these programs because they were waiting for the weather to get better before starting work on these projects.

The Government must revise its position and postpone consideration of the Bill if it wants to maintain its credibility before the Canadian public. This would give people a chance to have their systems installed, and it would also be more convenient for installers and suppliers of natural gas and heating equipment to install the systems at a time of the year when conditions are more favourable.

The Government, by ignoring requests for extending the program, gives the impression it does not care about the average Canadian. I think Canadians are going to find it very hard to accept the fact that these programs have been scuttled. I do not think the Government has given the needs of the average Canadian enough thought. I do not think the Government opposite realizes that Canadians had great confidence in this program and not just because of the grants. And once again, the people who are going to suffer will be Canadians on set or low incomes and the unemployed.

As Members of the Liberal Party of Canada, we ask this Government to have the courage to accept the amendment we are proposing today, which will allow Canadians who want to take advantage of the program to do so. The program should be maintained so that people will not have to suffer the inconvenience of installing equipment in the winter.

The Government maintains that Canadians will be able to save energy without these programs as well. However, it will soon realize that removing the programs will create a number of problems. It is too bad that the Government insists on making cuts that will affect those Canadians who are most in need.

Why should the Canadian consumer always be made to bear the brunt of such cuts, especially when a number of Ministers have run up interior decorating bills for their offices that are entirely unreasonable.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Government should inflict these program cuts on Canadians without giving them prior notice, and I fail to see what the Progressive Conservative Government has to lose by taking a conciliatory stance with the people who elected them on September 4 last year.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this legislation a second time. I am interested in debating it again because I feel it is important legislation and, if we can make our position sufficiently clear, the Government might reconsider the legislation. It is somewhat discouraging that a motion to terminate debate was moved this morning to bring the legislation to an immediate vote. That indicates that the Government is not listening to what is being said on this side of the House.

It is important for the Government to listen to the arguments of Opposition Members, because we represent our constituents and the views of Canadians. The Government promised to be sensitive to public opinion and the needs of people. The Government could demonstrate its capacity to be sensitive by listening and responding to this debate. But rather than doing that, it has chosen once again to limit debate. It is sad. The Conservative Party for many years has indicated its commitment to parliamentary democracy. One would think that a Party which is committed to parliamentary democracy would be interested in having open debate in this Chamber and using that debate to improve legislation rather than viewing debate as an obstacle to the objectives which it has unilaterally set. But, rather than having respect for the House of Commons and for serious debate, we are getting arrogance and an unbending attitude toward decisions which the Government has already taken, instead of thoughtful reconsideration of the positions which it has already established.

The Government may be encouraging inadvertently the kind of action which the Senate recently took with its second sober thought on legislation which the House had passed. I would not want to see that repeated. I am afraid that if the Government, by virtue of its deafness in regard to reasonable argument, proceeds with this legislation and does not listen to reason, we might be giving more ammunition to members in the other place. They could say that the House of Commons is not really doing its job, that the House has not considered all of the aspects of this legislation, and that they will be forced to take a second sober look at it. That would not be good for Parliament. It is not good government, and it is not good for the people of Canada.

The legislation which is before us today limits the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program. Both of those programs are valuable and have demonstrated their effectiveness. With COSP, targets were set for the conversion of heating systems in homes from oil to gas, solar or electricity. Those targets were being met. COSP uses the public dollar to encourage conservation and change in home heating systems. That program was working. One has to wonder why the Government chose to eliminate a program which was achieving its objectives. Those objectives were legitimate and served a worth-while public purpose.

Why would the Government cut that program and at the same time substantially increase funding for the Prime Minister's Office? Why does the Government want to spend more on bureaucrats in the PMO than on a program which is serving a worth-while public need? This program helped people to meet the ever-rising cost of heating their homes.

This is a Government, Mr. Speaker, which is moving to deregulate oil pricing in this country. It is seeking to take the ceiling off any future rises in oil costs, which means that Canadians will be subject to the whims of the international market when it comes to the cost of heating their own homes. It is not simply being subject to a free market which responds to the pressures of competition; it is being the victim of a market which is dominated by large mutinational corporations, by a cartel. It is hard to understand why this Government is moving, on the one hand, to remove regulations which seek to protect Canadians from the vagaries of the international oil prices and exposing us to the whims of international measures and, on the other hand, is removing the program which would help us to adjust to increasing oil prices. These are government actions which put the ordinary Canadian in a vice which squeezes him from both sides. This is a Government which allows oil prices to rise at the same time that it takes away the incentives for moving away from reliance upon oil.

When this Government was running for office, it projected an image as a humanitarian party, a party which was concerned about Canadians and which was going to help people. I would challenge Hon. Members on the Government side to rise and explain to Hon. Members on this side how cutting off these conservation programs helps ordinary Canadians. How does removing financial assistance to convert from oil to gas, solar or electricity help people? In what way does that make sense? The move on the part of the Government to cut the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program is part of an over-all strategy to cut public spending and, by cutting public spending, we will reduce the deficit and somehow, magically, the economy will be revived and everyone will be affluent. There are good reasons to question the cost-cutting strategy of the Government. I see I have one minute, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nickerson: No more than a minute.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague says I don't have any more than a minute so I ask him to take up the cause which I have raised in the House today, which is to assist ordinary Canadians who are seeking to cope with the ever-rising cost of oil and home heating. I would ask my Conservative colleague to rise in his place and explain how cutting off the conservation program by this legislation will help people to cope better with these ever-rising home heating costs. One thing that I find disturbing in this debate is the silence from the Government benches.

Mr. Nickerson: We have spoken. It's all down there.

Mr. Keeper: It is not bad enough, Mr. Speaker, that the Government slaps Canadians in the face, but it is silent with regard to explaining why it is doing so.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, several years ago a very important, very famous article was written by a British scientist named Amory Lovins. He put forward a very striking thesis, which was that industrial nations really have two choices in the development of energy resources. First there is the conventional way called the "hard path", which is the big megaprojects, the large-scale industrial energy projects and the massive capital expenditures into huge developments. He countered that by saying a far more effective use would be what is called the "soft path", which is to begin developing energy conservation techniques which could be localized, decentralized, could be applied with a flexibility to the local community and could be used to create jobs, major savings and to conserve against the undue reduction of our renewable resources.

That was a message and a thought which was well taken at the time. In this country, to our credit, we began some of the most extensive developments of alternate energy programs of any industrialized country in the world. We invested in the National Research Council. We established a new Crown Corporation, Canertech. We invested a lot of money in programs like the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the conversion program.

We recognized that we should not put all of our eggs into one basket, that we should not only try to substantially increase the conventional oil and gas reserves but we should also provide for a much broader, more flexible and diverse system for continuing Canada's self-sufficiency in the energy area. That approach proved to be accurate, Mr. Speaker, and from 1977 through to 1984 we found that across Canada in places like Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, the northern interior of British Columbia and western Canada, with respect to programs which are under debate today, small communities began developing their own individualized energy sources. New firms were started, small businesses emerged to provide for the application of these programs. People went to work.

Not only did these things happen in a conventional manner, but all kinds of innovative ways of converting energy were developed. We really started a new industry in this country. There was an opportunity for new entrepreneurship to emerge, not only in the big cities but in many small towns and communities in more remote regions.

This project was not just energy conservation. It also became the stimulus for the development of a new category of small businesses in Canada. In my own Province of Manitoba, for example, over 100,000 residential units were able to make use of these programs. Several hundred new businesses were started. People were trained in this area. But now the Government, again praying at the sacred font of its so-called cut-back philosophy, is going to wipe that out. It is going to do away with it.

There is no reason or rationale for that. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) do not give any reason for doing away with these programs. They just say that everyone has to share the pain equally. We all have to pay for the reduction in the deficit. But why cut this program? Why not cut some other area where we don't have small businesses being created, we don't have the very clear opportunity to provide for alternate energy production, we don't have development of new entrepreneurs across Canada in the small business area and where we don't have, in particular, the remote regions and the small towns being the major beneficiaries?

This is something we see time and time again, Mr. Speaker. This is a Government which is not interested in the average citizen of this country. It is not interested in the small community or in small businesses. Nor is the Government interested, really, in thinking in any kind of innovative way. I don't know who the Government listens to these days. We are told it is consulting but I think it is starting to chase its own tail. I think it is simply drinking its own bath water. Government is not listening to Canadians; if it was, it would not be doing away with this program. It would not be doing away with a program which saves our very precious energy resources.

Canada is using up its energy sources faster than any other country in the world. We have what you would call a mature energy-producing area in western Canada, but not many new fields are being discovered. We have exploratory fields in Hibernia and the Beaufort, but that is expensive energy and hard to get. So why would we be cutting back on programs which eliminate reliance on hard to get and expensive energy resources? Why would we be penalizing the Canadian consumer over the next few decades.

The only reason, and we keep coming back to it, is this curious, almost religious doctrinaire approach of cutting back government expenditures because the Government says that will be the cause of something miraculous. Yet we see this same Government spending $60 million or $70 million on new military uniforms. How can we justify that additional cost when it is compared with the possibility of developing alternate energy sources? One finds it hard to explain because there is no rationale. I am sure that the members of our Defence forces could have gotten along for a few more years with the same uniforms if it meant that Canadian consumers could have converted to a less expensive fuel and continued to reinsulate their homes and commercial buildings. It really defies logical and rational explanation.

This attitude is reflected in other areas as well, Mr. Speaker. What is perhaps most tragic is that the Government, through its cuts in funding for the NRC and other research organizations, has in one fell swoop destroyed Canada's leadership in developing alternate energy. This leadership would have provided us with the potential for new exports as well as the potential for developing new knowledge-intensive industries which would be unique in our country. The Government has taken us from a position of leadership in that field to the position of being a backwater.

It is hard to treat seriously in any way the comments of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) or the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), or other Members of the front benches who say they want Canada to be competitive. They say we will increase sales and have economic renewal at the same time that the very basis and foundation for development in those areas has been wiped away. We had already established that leadership. Other countries came to Canada to look at the progress we were making, but now this Government has wiped that leadership out. It makes no sense for our future energy potential or our ability to create industrial and technological activity which would give us a distinctive place in world markets. It simply begs logical and rational explanation, and we cannot find anyone on the Government benches who has been able to justify this move. There was development going on in the area of conservation in companies in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and now in Ontario and Quebec. They were trying to develop that field and all of a sudden we have wiped them out and do not provide any explanation.

That is the problem, Mr. Speaker. This Government has no explanation because, frankly, it has no policies in these areas. It is blindly slashing away at vital ingredients of the industrial and energy make-up of this country in the hope that somehow the Government can justify this move under the blanket theology of the Minister of Finance and in the hope that Canadians will accept it without question. Well, we are here to question it.

What is perhaps most disturbing is that this Government does not even want Canadians to question it, so it brings in a closure motion to stop debate. That is the "big change" that was voted for on September 4. No debate, no discussion, no questioning; take us on faith. The Government does not want us to recognize that the stupidity of cutting a program like this should be examined by Canadians, and it certainly does not want us to examine other programs. The Government hopes we will simply go down a blind alley in blind hope; but we will ultimately stumble into the dark pit we are headed for. The only people who will pay the price will be Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys . . . Cape Breton-East Richmond, excuse me.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, you have to get the Richmond part of my riding correct. There are nine polls in Richmond county and they all went for me.

Mr. Nickerson: They won't next time.

Mr. Dingwall: Perhaps you would like to put a little wager on that and come down and campaign.

In any event, I rise to speak first to the motion and then to the substance of Bill C-24. In reading the motion, I find it to be a bit peculiar that the Conservative Party, who, when they were in Opposition, said repeatedly in this House that they ought not to be the guillotine, has put closure on debate in the House of Commons. What we have is just that, in effect. The guillotine has been used by the Conservative Party of Canada regarding debate on a subject matter which is important to all Canadians and of particular importance to those in Atlantic Canada.

I find it kind of distressing that Members opposite would allow themselves to be sucked in to a motion which has been, I say, conceived and put forward by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). We have known for quite some time that this Minister's sensitivity, compassion and concern for other regions of the country has not been demonstrated to be meaningful. Members of the NDP have spoken in great numbers in this debate, and I might add with great quality, as have Members of this Party. However, I am a little bit annoyed and disappointed that the back-benchers of the Conservative Party have sat on their hands. Well, perhaps it is inevitable that they would do that. After all, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is issuing the orders. Therefore, there shall be no debate; there shall particularly be no debate which exceeds a reasonable period of time. But we have not even had a reasonable period of time to debate the substance of this motion.

Mr. McDermid: Oh!

Mr. Dingwall: I know the Parliamentary Secretary does not like to hear that because the truth hurts. He can recall with great clarity the numerous occasions when he was in opposition and the Conservatives said you cannot put time limitation on the debating of matters which come before this House of Commons. The Government has transcended the time limitation and in effect put closure on the House of Commons with regard to Bill C-24.

• (1200)

I say to the Conservative Members of Parliament that they ought to be ashamed. Again, it is a clear example of breaching their election promises in terms of parliamentary reform. The Government has not kept any of its promises. It said one thing before the election and is now doing the complete opposite. So much for parliamentary reform.

With respect to Bill C-24, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) explained how a number of small businesses were established as a result of the imposition of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and Canadian Home Insulation Program. In my constituency where unemployment reached 55 per cent, small businesses began as a result of these programs. These businesses did not hire 1,500 or 2,500 people but they did employ between two and ten individuals who, as a result of this legislation, will be without work.

Moreover, we will be without that type of service. It bears repeating that these two programs assisted in lessening the energy costs of Canadians in Atlantic Canada, a region which has the highest energy costs in all of Canada. These programs benefited small business and stimulated research and development. Their termination will signal to those individuals who are creative and have attempted to be innovative within this sector of our economy that they are no longer wanted. That is what the Government is saying to that sector of the Canadian economy.

This Bill does not appear to Canadians to be fair. I emphasize the word "fair" in view of the fact that the Government is spending up to $50 million for new uniforms for the Canadian Armed Forces. Where is the logic of the Government? It has no logic. The Government does not know what it is doing. It is operating without an agenda and blindly takes action on whatever program turns up on the wheel, without studying the effects of its actions.

If the Government had a concrete plan with regard to energy and its development, it would recognize the value of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program as a means for our nation to reduce its dependence on imported oil. I certainly would not want those regions of the country who are blessed with large surpluses of energy to be prevented from flourishing in that sector of our economy. However, it is equally important that those of us from regions of the country that are dependent on imported oil, through no fault of our own, demonstrate to the Government that we should not be singled out by not having these programs made readily available to us.

The Government says that it is terminating these programs under the auspices of restraint. Yet it has failed to produce the documents that our Party and the New Democratic Party have requested to show the effects of the November, 1984 economic statement on the various regions of this country. My analysis and that of my Party shows that the effect of that mini-budget is devastating to the poor regions of Canada. The gutting of these two programs will add to the misery of those Canadians who reside in the poorer regions of Canada.

In conclusion, I remind the Conservative Party of Canada that it is not sufficient to be led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) whose only concern is to make Canada a branch plant of the American economy. Members in the back-benches of the Conservative Party must stand up for the regions of this country and voice their concerns rather than sit on their hands and allow an insensitive and incompetent Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources gut and devastate programs that are of particular benefit to those of us who live in the poorer regions of Canada.

I say shame on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and shame on the Conservative Party of Canada for once again breaching another election promise, both in regard to energy and parliamentary reform.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate because the programs which are being axed by the Government have been of tremendous importance and have helped thousands of home owners in Winnipeg improve their homes and use less energy. Furthermore, these programs have provided hundreds of jobs for people who otherwise would have been unemployed.

I am glad that the Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) is here because he can confirm the fact that in my constituency, the constituency of the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) and the constituency of St. Boniface there are many homes that were built between 50 and 75 years ago that are very energy inefficient. They use great amounts of fuel, whether it is gas, oil or electricity, due to the insufficient amount of insulation that was installed in those homes.

Despite the proven record of these successful programs, the Government is proposing their elimination. In recent years we have seen the cost of energy double and quadruple. This has had a drastic effect on jobs and the lifestyle of ordinary citizens. When these programs encourage energy conservation, surely any sensible government would encourage and even promote such programs.

The provisions of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program made financial assistance available in order to convert heating systems from oil to a non-oil-fired system. Since we are rapidly coming to the end of the supply of relatively cheap oil that was discovered before 1970, we will have to import oil, begin to produce oil which will be found off the Atlantic coast, in the Arctic or which will be produced by the tar sands. Surely every member of the Conservative Party must realize that when we have to start using that oil we are going to increase greatly the cost of heating our homes, as well as increase the cost of energy use in our plants and factories. Every Member of Parliament should be interested in promoting conservation.

These programs have been very successful. Why has the Government brought in legislation to end these programs? We have not had a single sensible explanation. The only explanation is that the Government wants to save money in the short run. What we will get is short-term gain for long-term pain.

It has been estimated that under these programs we should effect two million conversions of heating systems by 1990. This would mean a tremendous reduction in the use of oil for heating, especially in many of the older homes in our cities and rural areas. They are usually inhabited by people in the low and middle-income levels, people who can least afford the increased cost of heating which they have experienced in recent years and which they will experience again in the next few years, particularly if they cannot convert from oil to gas.

Almost one million units have already been converted. The program is only half completed yet the Government proposes to axe it. As a result of the program that was implemented, we have been saving over 50 million barrels of oil a year. That is oil which cannot be replaced except at tremendous cost to the country and to our people. New oil, which we will probably bring on stream from the tar sands, the Atlantic and the Arctic, will cost the Canadian consumer and Canadian industry users very much more than what it has cost up to now. It has been estimated that each home converted from oil saves the home owner or the renter about $600 a year in heating costs. Why stop a program which has been so successful?

It is interesting to look at the debate and how the Parties reacted to the proposal when the Bill was brought forward in 1981. There was virtually no debate. It lasted not much more than an hour or two and it received the unanimous support of all Parties.

Let me quote a few sentences from a speech made, I presume, on behalf of the then Official Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party, by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), a former Cabinet Minister in the Diefenbaker Government and one of the longest serving Members in this House. I quote from a speech the Hon. Member made on June 30, 1981, in discussing the Bill which this Government now proposes to end:

> It is a good philosophy to get as many people in the low technology systems as possible to move away from the consumption of oil. It is particularly good if the alternative is cheaper not only than the present price of oil but the future price as well.

I could not have put it any better than the Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. It should be obvious to all Canadians that the program which this Government is now proposing to end was and is a common-sense program under which no one can lose, neither consumers nor governments. The only ones to gain are the oil companies which will be able to make bigger profits with much more expensive oil for which we will be paying in the very near future.

I see I have very little time left, but let me deal with one other aspect of the adverse effects that we will get when this program is ended. In converting, jobs were provided for hundreds and thousands of people who are not highly skilled, not expensively trained, people in the main who are unemployed. In converting homes and in insulating homes, hundreds of thousands of people in my city, in other cities and in many rural areas were able to find work and were employed rather than unemployed and drawing unemployment insurance. This program, when it is terminated, will end the jobs of at least hundreds and thousands of people who have been able to find work as a result of these programs.

Mr. Gauthier: Closure.

Mr. Orlikow: We oppose ending the programs and we oppose closure, Mr. Speaker. We know that the program has brought benefits in employment and in the saving of millions of dollars to the people of Canada. We want these programs to continue rather than to end.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what is being proposed by the Government is a measure that is upsetting a lot of Canadians; and what must also be put on the table is that this proposal is also offensive to the environment. It is a measure that is neither progressive nor conservative. It is a silly measure and it is not helping in terms of conservation nor in terms of protection of the environment. For those Members who are moaning and groaning, I will have to devote a minute or two to explain why that is so.

The measure is in sharp contrast with statements and promises made by the Conservatives on the environment. It is also one that is not in the national interest. I will come to that in a moment. When you are encouraging a program whereby you increase the number of people who will use gas instead of oil, you are reducing nitrogen oxide emissions. This is why I suppose in 1981 the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) supported it, because he understands these things very well. We are decreasing, therefore, nitrogen oxide emissions into the atmosphere which in the Canadian situation is as important, as damaging, as the emissions by cars and light vehicles into the environment for which we have now set a control measure for 1987. This measure, parallel to that, is very important. It has a profound environmental message.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the program was introduced in 1980 and was to expire by December 31, 1990. Up until now, I am told, we have some one million units that have been converted to gas. That is roughly a saving in imported oil of some 32,000 barrels per day up to today.

● (1220)

Mr. McDermid: Not only to gas.

Mr. Caccia: It may not only be gas, but it was a considerable step forward. It was to continue as a program for another five years. Suddenly we see the boom being lowered and a number of Canadians being upset. The measure before us is an anti-environmental one and is really offensive.

The off-oil program is a central part or component of the program which will amount to a 25 per cent reduction in emissions between 1980 and 1990. Canada put that program into place as part of its commitment to reach a 50 per cent cut by 1994. In doing that, the Government is somehow weakening our commitment to that particular policy.

We should be rightfully proud of that policy because, as was indicated by the Hon. Member who spoke before me, it received the whole-hearted support of the House in 1981 for two reasons. First, it was good for individual homes; and second, it was good for the environment. The environmental aspect of this should not be underestimated.

When this measure is put into place, we will have a very unbalanced approach. We will continue with the Petroleum Incentives Program to explore further in the north for fossil fuels. We will continue with the Petroleum Import Compensation Program, which is meant to encourage the utilization and exploitation of fossil fuels that are harmful to the environment, as I hope we all know.

I see the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) holding his head. I suppose this is heavy stuff for him. He might as well absorb it in his own interest. We will lose a counterbalancing component by virtue of this decision. It is a regressive decision and an anti-conservative measure by a Party which calls itself "Progressive" and "Conservative". This does not make sense.

The November 8 cuts were deplored by everyone on this side of the House. It would be repetitive to deal with that theme once again, but I am deeply disturbed by the pattern which is emerging here in anti-environmental decisions, of which this is one. It follows the events in Quebec City over the weekend. Evidently, and unfortunately, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) chickened out of his grandiose commitment of last summer to reduce acid rain. He preferred to hide behind Messrs. Davis and Lewis and to let them pull the chestnuts out of the fire, so to speak, for him.

I do not know where this accumulation of measures will lead. We are receiving—and I am sure it is the same for Hon. Members opposite—letters from Canadians who are concerned about the effect of the cancellation of COSP. Colleagues have already spoken about the difficulties of completing the necessary work in order to carry out the switch. Evidently certain things cannot be done in the midst of winter.

I hate to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, who is in charge of steering the Bill through the House, from his profound reading.

Mr. McDermid: I am listening.

Mr. Caccia: We are asking him to reconsider this measure and to see the senselessness and insanity of it, because it is an important component of the over-all strategy. It is an important component of a policy which is in the long-term interests of Canadians.

We know we want to reduce our dependence on imported oil. We know we want to reduce our damage to the environment. As they say in court, "Here rests my case". There is not much one can add to this plea. However, I can see that I have not made a profound impression on the Parliamentary Secretary who continues to read his papers. Evidently he is not interested in the Canadian environment or in providing Canadians with an opportunity to switch. That is what it boils down to; otherwise he would pay attention to this plea.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is improper to refer to what Hon. Members are doing or are not doing in the House. In any event, I assure the Hon. Member that with the volume of his voice, everyone can hear him, no matter what they are doing. We are listening to him most attentively.

Mr. Caccia: I am very assured by the intervention of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McDermid: If you said something useful, maybe we would listen.

Mr. Caccia: I am always accused of speaking too softly and of being too gentle in my approach. He finds me to be too forceful.

Mr. McDermid: Just noisy.

Mr. Caccia: I find that very strange. I was trying to put across some ideas. Perhaps they have disturbed his sleep, I do not know. Somehow the basic ideas seem to escape him; otherwise he would have dealt with them in his speeches. He and members of his Party, so-called "Progressive" and so-called "Conservative", are ignoring elements of the off-oil program which are both conservative and progressive—it will reduce damage to the environment and it will permit Canadians to conserve and reduce their dependence upon imported fossil fuels. I submit that that is in our national interest.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to speak against this closure motion, this time allocation motion. The motion intends, by whatever means, to cut off debate. It is quite unnecessary. The Government should be listening not just to the words but to the points which have been made on this side of the House. It should be showing a willingness to reconsider the mistake it made in introducing this Bill. The Government shows no interest in considering the points which have been made. It simply wants to use its majority to hammer this matter through within the time limits imposed in this motion.

Basically this is part of the mistake which the Government has been following for six months, the mistake of cutting back on money available to the large majority of Canadians with ordinary incomes, including those on low incomes, while increasing directly and indirectly the money available to large corporations, such as the oil companies in this case, and to large investors.

This is simply one element of the program followed by the Government which it claims will bring recovery. So far it has completely failed to show any serious result for ordinary Canadians. Unemployment is where it was, and there is no prospect of any serious improvement. The Government is failing to provide the basic necessary market for goods and services which Canadians could produce if economic institutions permitted them to do so.

With this Bill, the Government is cutting back money available for switching from oil to other forms of heating and cutting back the amount of money available for insulation, which would save oil. It is not proposing to cut back the money for exploration to discover new oil. It is proposing to cut back, through this legislation, the money that would be saved and the oil that would be saved by conservation. While they call themselves Conservatives, they are acting against the principle of conservation.

Many people in my riding have used this program and many more would like to use it. Both the off oil and CHIP programs have had good success so far. Many people have seen the value of them. They have seen what their neighbours have saved and they are interested in taking them up.

Not all these people could do that right away. There are some very low-income home owners in my riding who cannot always take advantage of a program instantly. This winter, with shortages of equipment, it has not been possible for everyone to take advantage. It is a great mistake for this Government to cut off this program. It is a mistake from the point of view of the majority of ordinary Canadians. It may not be a mistake from the point of view of the oil companies, but they do not act in the interest of this country. When the wealthiest sector of industry in this country, except for the banks, asks for bigger and bigger hand-outs, it is not serving the interest of this country. Instead, it is trying to hold this country to ransom.

When in opposition, Members opposite claimed to support the fact that a barrel of oil saved by the actions of small business people, those who do the conversion of the furnaces and the insulation of the homes, is worth more than a barrel of oil to be found in the Beaufort Sea. It costs less to save a barrel of oil through conservation than it costs to take it out of the Beaufort Sea or out of the tar sands. Furthermore, it provides jobs where they are needed. Very few of Canada's two million unemployed are in the Beaufort or even in northern Alberta. The vast majority are in Canadian cities. That is where the conservation work is to be done, in the cities of Canada. That is where the jobs should be created. That is where there are hundreds of thousands of people willing and able to do this conservation work and save the oil reserves of this country.

It seems that this Government is afraid that there might be some oil left in the ground when it leaves office in a few years. It wants to dig it all, or as much as possible, out now. Some of us think a little farther ahead. Quite apart from who will be the Government, some of us have children and grandchildren. Others expect to have children and grandchildren.

I see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) smiling. He agrees with me. I do not know the details, but I am sure he is looking forward to an increase in his descendants. It would be good if we could have some oil for his descendants, for mine, for those of all others here and those whom we represent.

We do not have to be in such a mad rush to take all the oil and burn it. There are excellent conservation programs which, as I say, cost less than digging the oil. It would leave some of the oil in the ground. Perhaps in future it could be developed more cheaply. If it is not needed, let us leave it there. Let us not squander the oil. Then it would be too late to pay people to conserve it.

It has been argued that the Government should not be intervening in this way, that it should let the private home owners do it. For some private home owners, that is all right, they can pay. However, for many it is a borderline question. Without this assistance, they are not likely to do it.

There have been other cuts in the incomes of home owners. The $500 total of tax and other imposts was laid on the people this fall by this Government. That reduced the money available for a project like this. There have been wage cuts; that is, cuts compared to cost of living. A number of people have become unemployed since that time, especially poor home owners. It is those people who should have the continued benefit of this program of changing from oil to other forms of energy and insulating their houses in order to save oil.

What we are asking is simply that the Government withdraw the Bill or make some serious proposal for amendments to it before it leaves this House. We would like some assurance that the Government has listened, not only to the speakers on this side of the House, but to the letters that have come in from both home owners and small business people who believe that this is a good program. It is not only in the interest of the small businesses, their workers and the home owners, but in the interest of all the people of Canada to save that oil. It is also in the interest of all the people of Canada to save the oil used in eastern Canada which has to be imported at a higher cost.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his colleagues weep daily over the deficit. They use the deficit as an excuse for all kinds of things they do which hurt the people of Canada, such as the budget cuts last fall. Here is a way to reduce the deficit without hurting the people of Canada. The Government can reduce the amount of money that has to be spent on offshore oil, but it does not want to do that.

Clearly anything that reduces the money that goes to the oil companies is not what the Prime Minister and his colleagues want. They want to fatten the oil companies and perhaps the banks as well. They do not care what it costs the people of Canada. They do not care whether we squander our oil so that our children and grandchildren will not have any. They will have to import it at a much higher price than that.

The motion to terminate the debate was a great mistake, but not a surprising one. It is completely in line with what this Government has been doing by way of spreading paper around the country, pretending consultation. However, when people actually have a point to make to the Government, it refuses to listen. It says: "Shut up, we will do whatever we want without regard to anything that you have said." That is the tone that we are getting from this Government. It is already a matter of great regret to people in Canada. This Government is going to feel that regret.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to share whole-heartedly the views that have just been expressed by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

An Hon. Member: All of them?

Mr. Penner: Yes, I want to share the views expressed by the Hon. Member without being selective. It is very wrong on the part of the Government to try to wind down this debate and prevent Parliament from making a decision which would be in the best interest of the Canadian people and the consumers of Canada.

What the Government is in danger of doing very early in its mandate, and I think Government supporters on the backbench will want to be cognizant of this, is abusing its majority. If the Government starts abusing its majority, as the Hon. Member for Spadina quite rightfully said, it will not be that long before it will regret it and regret it very deeply. The simple fact is that during the course of this debate it has become clear from the speeches given not only by members of the Opposition Parties but Government supporters as well that more time is needed. It has become clear that the Oil Substitution Program is being discontinued prematurely. It should be allowed to go on for another period of time and we can debate that issue. I would argue that it should run its full course to 1990. However, there are very good reasons for this Act to go on for at least another six or eight months. I will return to that subject in a moment.

If anyone were to take the time to look at the debates regarding Bill C-24, they would notice that almost without exception there has been nothing but praise for these two federal Government programs. Members have indicated how successful the programs have been. The oil substitution program has displaced some 32,000 barrels of oil or more. The home insulation program has also been successful in saving over 28,000 barrels of oil. The grand total of the two is a saving of about 60,000 barrels of oil per day.

Not only have these two programs saved a tremendous amount of oil but people for the first time have taken seriously the possibility of using alternate energy sources. We are finally moving out of the preaching stage when it comes to using alternate energy. These two programs have encouraged people to actually do it.

In the constituency which I represent there are a tremendous amount of wood products available, and people have converted from oil to woodburning furnaces. They have taken a local energy source that would otherwise be wasted and utilized it to save money. That is why this program has been very important to the average working family in Canada. It has been important to people who do not have high incomes and who are living in a region like northern Ontario where the winters are long and cold. Saving money on home heating is a very big issue there. It has been people with average incomes who have used the home insulation program and have conserved energy in their own homes. In addition to that, they have gone off oil, an expensive form of energy, to something like wood. Other people have been experimental and are using solar energy. In some places they have even been utilizing wind energy. However, the most important conversion program has been that of oil to natural gas.

The federal Government has had a program allowing natural gas companies to extend their systems with the use of a federal Government subsidy. That program is not being discontinued. The natural gas network system is still being expanded. In the area I represent, that program will be reactivated again this spring or early summer as soon as the frost is out of the ground. However, my constituents have said to me: "We cannot take advantage of that program any longer. The gas network system is being expanded but we are out in the cold just because we did not apply before last November. How did we know? We inquired of you about the program and you said that we could take advantage of it when we were able to afford it because we had until 1990". Now, following the election, these people have discovered that it is not 1990, it is next year. They are not going to have the opportunity.

That is why it is very wrong of the Government to throttle debate. Why can the House of Commons not also engage in what we sometimes call a little sober second thought that goes on in the other place? There has been some sober second thought going on right here in the House of Commons. Many people argue that we do not need another chamber for sober second thought. However, if we do not have sober second thought here, perhaps we are undercutting our arguments. If we feel we should limit time for debate in the other place and if we limit time for debate here, how are we going to get people to look at these programs again and to perhaps change their minds?

My colleagues from northern Ontario whose constituents will not be able to have access to the natural gas system are all concerned. There are three Members from northern Ontario who sit on the Government side. There is the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais), the Minister from Sault Ste. Marie and the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). They are receiving the same messages as I and northern Ontario Members who belong to the New Democratic Party are receiving. We are all receiving the message that we cannot cut this program off on March 31 and that the people who did not apply by the end of November will not get that little extension to the end of June.

The Parliamentary Secretary himself has admitted that the representations that have been made to him for an extension made good sense. I know the Parliamentary Secretary is a very influential Member. I have worked with him. Can he not use his influence and debating skills with the Minister and the Government? Can he not tell the Minister that it does not make good sense to cut this program off on March 31 or to give a handful of people an extension to the end of June? He should at least be fair and reasonable.

I know the Government wants to save money, but I think this is a silly place, however, in which to save money. The Hon. Member for Spadina pointed out very well that we help cut the deficit by keeping these programs going. The underlying rationale for cutting off the program does not even exist.

I would plead with the Parliamentary Secretary to use his persuasive powers. He should use the abilities that I know he has to tell the Government that it does not make good sense to end this program on March 31. The program should run at least to the end of the year in order to give those people one last chance and a little bit of pre-warning. I would be prepared to compromise that far, but I would like to see the program continue to the end of 1990 as it is such an excellent and outstanding program. However, we are in the Opposition and we cannot have everything.

Surely, with the big majority the Government has, it could yield a little. It should not cut off debate. If the Bill must go to committee, Government Members should rise and tell us that they are going to let it be amended in committee in a way that will extend it for another six or eight months.

My constituents right across northern Ontario are absolutely irritated. Is the Government not listening to its own northern Ontario Members? It did not have a seat in the north before but now it has three seats from the north. For goodness sake, the Government should listen to its northern Ontario Members. I am sure they are speaking very eloquently. They must be pleading with the Government not to cut this program on March 31. The Government should listen to them and yield a little bit. It should not abuse its majority. That is not the atmosphere it created during the election campaign.

The Government did not tell Canada that there would be no opportunity at all for citizens to have some input. I never heard the Government say at any time that it was not going to listen to Members who were in the Opposition. I had the idea that we were going to have a new kind of Parliament. I heard all of those wonderful speeches that were made when the Government was in opposition indicating that Parliament had to be more of a decision-making body and that everything would not be done by the executive branch. Here is the Government's chance to compromise.

Surely Parliament can have a little bit of influence on the Government when it tells it that we should not cut this program off from those people who have been planning on using it and who have been saving their money. Now, before these people have had an opportunity to make final arrangements, they read in their newspapers and they see on the television that they have no chance at all of using it. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to take another look at this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, coming from a riding in northern Ontario, I can appreciate the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). I want to pick up where he left off.

I recall the time when the Conservative Party was in opposition. I remember it well when that Party accused the Trudeau Government of arrogance, of trampling on the rights of Parliament, and of not being concerned about what the Opposition had to say. In other words, the Conservatives said that the Trudeau Government was not interested in consultation. After the dust cleared on September 4, 1984, this Government told us that a new era was upon us. In the Throne Speech the Government trumpeted consultation and consensus. Where was the consultation on this particular measure to eliminate COSP and CHIP?

Some Hon. Members: None.

Mr. Rodriguez: As Members say, there was absolutely none.

Opposition Members are attempting to consult with the Government. We are telling the Government that the situation is unfair to many communities, particularly those in the rural areas. I have put on the record, and I will do it again, a copy of a letter that was sent to me, which enunciated a motion which was passed by the Township of Hagar, which is a small community in the Nickel Belt riding. The motion was sent to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). It reads as follows:

Dear Madam:

The following resolution was passed by the Council of the Corporation of the Township of Hagar at their regular February 19, 1985 meeting:

"Moved by Councillor T. Beamish, seconded by Councillor R. Chartrand that since Northern and Central Gas has proposed to serve the Villages of Markstay and Hagar with natural gas in the fall of 1985, and the COSP is scheduled to terminate on March 31st, 1985. Therefore the Township of Hagar request the Honourable Patricia Carney to extend the COSP to enable our residents to avail themselves of the grant and that copies of this resolution be sent to our local MPs."

That is not a partisan or political appeal to the Government. They are ordinary Canadians, many of whom voted for the Government's candidate in the riding of Nickel Belt. By God, he came second and the Liberals came third!

Ordinary Canadians are saying that it is not fair. The rules were set for 1990. Plans were established for the extension of gas lines. It is the height of unfairness for the Government in the middle of the game to say that the ball game is over and that it is changing the rules. The Government did the same thing with the unemployment insurance program. It changed the rules. Government Members have the absolute effrontery to stand in this House and say that the Government cannot afford it and that is why these programs are being cut. Yet the Government is preparing to put the Armed Forces into new uniforms at a cost of over $30 million. Where is that money coming from? Are there not other priorities in this country? Is the priority of conservation and job creation not greater than parading our Armed Forces in uniforms which will be indistinguishable from our southern neighbours? Maybe that is the whole point, to integrate our Armed Forces.

It is a crying shame that this kind of unfairness can be brought to the House of Commons. The Government has even cut off the consultative period by introducing a motion which called for the question. It is a guillotine motion. The Government is not interested in listening to and consulting with Members on this side of the House. It should at least give us the credit for representing the views of ordinary Canadians.

Is there always going to be a blot on the escutcheon that there are Members on the Conservative side of the House who represent small communities and who receive the same message? In fact, there is a conspiracy of silence on that side of the House. Government Members are sitting as silently as a tomb. There is not even a whisper of participation in this debate.

Mr. Kilgour: We are speaking up in committee.

Mr. Rodriguez: Speaking up in Committee! I was in committee and I heard them speaking up. The silence was deafening! The House is where we participate in debate. One would hope that Government Members could persuade their Ministers to change their minds.

There is another unfairness in the legislation. There are not many wealthy people in my riding. Many of them work in the mines and have an average income of $25,000 a year—

Mr. Orlikow: When they work.

Mr. Rodriguez: When they work. Many of them decided to take advantage of the program and order the equipment which was necessary. However, if they did not order the furnace and sign a contract before November 8, they were out of luck. There was no pre-warning. Second, those who ordered the furnace before November 8 are having trouble getting the equipment from the companies which manufacture the furnaces. Those companies are out of parts.

Mr. McDermid: They have an extension.

Mr. Rodriguez: They have an extension! It is an unfair proposition. It is absolutely unfair to cut people off without giving them the opportunity to take advantage of a program which has been beneficial in conserving energy in Canada. All of the evaluation reports from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources indicate, in terms of conserving oil, which is a finite resources, and in terms of the person-years of work which the program has provided, that the program has been a positive element in the over-all energy program of Canada.

Why is the Government doing this? In the 1970s Canadians became very conservation conscious. Four years ago the Conservative Party of Ontario ran a campaign on "Preserve it, conserve it". In the Ontario Hydro announcements and the rest of the advertisements we saw the words "Preserve it, conserve it". Canadians were convinced that we should conserve our energy resources.

Indeed, when the Conservatives were in opposition in 1981 there were less than three hours of debate before this program was approved. The Hon. Members for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), a man who is well-versed in energy conservation programs— "the biomass man"—recognized the importance of this program and the Conservatives agreed with him.

I have a suspicion that the Government is cutting this program because of its buddies in the oil patch who want Canadians once again to consume oil because it will bring profits to the oil companies. I think that is the thrust. Aye, there's the rub! Now we've got them. That is what the Government is doing. It is making Canadians contribute to the profits of the oil companies in Canada. It is sleazy and it is sneaky. If the Government had any courage it would cancel Bill C-24—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do not leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

INSPECTION AND VACCINATION FEES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on November 8, 1984, the Conservative Government announced a new way to tax our agricultural producers. Using misguided logic, it has decided to tackle the deficit by collecting $32.3 million in service fees from farmers, feed mill operators, seed growers, slaughterhouse operators, and others. A small slaughterhouse operator must now pay a minimum call-out fee of $125 to have a few carcasses graded. It is not hard to imagine that this cost will amount to several thousands of dollars over the period of a year.

The potato farmer in Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick with an average farm will pay $13,000 to $20,000 each year for grading services. With potato farmers receiving less than the cost of production this year for their crop, this is a most unfair charge.

Seed growers are very concerned that the quality of Canada's seed stock will be compromised as more growers are forced outside the regulatory system due to increased input costs for pedigree control.

If a farmer is worried about rabies, he should not stop worrying. New fees for rabies vaccination will no doubt reduce the over-all protection available to farm livestock and those who must pay for that service.

In every one of these cases our agricultural producers will suffer. Consumers, who are the main beneficiaires of grading and quality inspection services, will be hurt as well.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PETRO-CANADA

ATTEMPT TO ACQUIRE CO-OP OUTLETS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, March 18, I advised this House of protests I received from boards of several Saskatchewan co-operatives against attempts by Petro-Canada, a federal Crown Corporation, to acquire or take over co-op petroleum outlets. I wanted to know why a Crown corporation is attempting to acquire the outlets of co-ops which represent a completely Canadian-owned segment of the industry.

The Federated Co-Operative Association at its annual meeting on March 7 unanimously condemned Petro-Canada's attempt to acquire co-op outlets. The Liberal Government's national energy policy in 1980 stated:

> The Government of Canada believes that the oil and gas sector is a unique case and that special measures are needed to ensure Canadian control.

I pose the following questions. Was it the intent of the previous administration for this Crown corporation to acquire a completely Canadian-owned segment of the industry? Has Petro-Canada lost sight of its original mandate? While our very capable Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) works in co-operation with the provinces to solve the injustices of the Liberal's destructive energy policy, it is evident that it will take time for our Government to get Crown corporations under control. I agree that Petro-Canada must learn to stand on its own feet, but not at the expense of the Canadian-owned co-operatives.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—SHARPEVILLE MASSACRE COMMEMORATION—DEMONSTRATORS KILLED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, police in South Africa today killed 14 people when they attempted to demonstrate in remembrance of the Sharpeville massacre of 25 years ago. On March 21, 1960, police opened fire on a crowd which was peacefully demonstrating against the pass laws. There were 69 people killed, including eight women and ten children, and 180 people wounded, including 31 women and 19 children. According to medical evidence, the police continued firing after the people began to flee, because while 30 shots had entered the wounded or dead from the front of their bodies, no less than 155 bullets had entered through their backs.

I ask all Hon. Members to reflect on the meaning of the Sharpeville massacre, the further slaughter of 14 people today, and the hundreds of people killed in the intervening 25 years. The same Government is in power and, in spite of minor changes, the same inhuman system of apartheid denies basic human rights to the black people of South Africa.

I urge the Government, in conducting our foreign policy review, to remember that it was the Government of South Africa which initiated violence. I ask the Government to remember Sharpeville, to remember Nelson Mandela and others who were imprisoned for their people. I ask it to remember the 14 people who were gunned down by the police today.

Surely the time has come to take a strong stand and push for an international policy of disinvestment—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): In a few hours, Mr. Speaker, Canadian men and women will be watching the proceedings of the National Economic Conference to be held here in Ottawa.

One hundred and thirty-six participants—economic leaders from all Canadian circles—will review the economy, our heavy deficit burden and the employment situation. This economic summit is a ray of hope for the many Canadians now without jobs, without work. Time has come not to search for causes but rather to find alternate solutions and express a national consensus. Mr. Speaker, that is what Canadians expect. They want jobs, they want work, they want to live in dignity without having to ask for hand-outs from society. Such is the ultimate challenge of this weekend's conference.

There is not only one solution to all our woes, and the day-to-day reality calls for the implementation of a whole series of solutions. Canada's predicament will test our economic partners' willingness to co-operate. We must set our petty differences aside and approach the National Economic Conference with our attention riveted on the underprivileged in our society, on men, women and youths who are counting on us to find the jobs which will raise their hopes for the future.

Mr. Speaker, the 136 leaders who will get together this weekend deserve our full support in their quest for solutions.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

ARTISTS' PROTEST AGAINST BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, as you will remember, yesterday an important and large delegation of personalities who work in the field of arts and culture were here on the Hill to voice their grievances with regard to the drastic cuts which were imposed on them by the Government. Unfortunately, these well known artists had to head back home dissatisfied with the type of meeting they had here.

The Government, which is allegedly bent on consultation with all groups in the country, certainly acted in an odd fashion. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) snubbed the artists, refusing to meet with them, busy as he was celebrating his forty-sixth birthday. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), when asked a question in this House by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), refused the challenge to act as the champion of these people in the arts and cultural community. Further, when asked to increase his financial support for arts and culture, the Minister stated that he was not going to grant artists welfare. The artists of Canada are not asking for welfare, Mr. Speaker. All they are trying to achieve is to earn a living.

MANDATE OF PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, an historic National Economic Conference is to be launched this evening. It is historic in that 136 participants were named on the recommendation of a private sector committee. It is historic in that the participants will come from every province and region. They will come from all walks of life and represent ordinary citizens, artistic groups, business, labour, the church, and volunteer organizations. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, these participants have an onerous job, but in the final analysis their mandate is to create jobs. They will do this by recommending policies which will create a climate of sustained economic renewal.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have shown great courage and faith in initiating such a conference, knowing that many wide-ranging, differing views would be expressed. Many Canadians will be watching this historic conference with the hope and prayer that it will help build a better Canada. Every Hon. Member of the House will know that a tremendous amount of consultation, conciliation, and co-operation will be required. I am sure that every Hon. Member looks forward to positive results from the conference.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SPACE STATION PROJECT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, while the New Democratic Party welcomes Canadian participation in the advancement of space technology, we ask that Parliament consider the wide-ranging implications of the Government's decision to contribute $8.8 million to Phase B of the space station project. A number of weeks ago the Congressional Centre of Technology Assessment described the Reagan administration's objectives regarding the space station as "diffuse and imprecise". Other members of the scientific community say that the space station is not necessarily the most cost efficient method of obtaining new scientific information in space. Most important, there has been no firm guarantee yet offered by the Reagan administration that the space station will not merely become an extension of star wars. The U.S. military has been quoted as saying that it may be willing to board the platform at a later date.

Continued participation in the space station by Canada has long-term implications for the Government's commitment to budgetary restraints. We do not yet know whether money for other forms of research and development will suffer as a result of Canada committing itself so completely to space research. Canadians should be concerned about the desire of the Reagan administration to promote the "commercialization of space", especially since no direct benefits are to include the rest of the international community.

Canada should consider setting conditions for our involvement in the space station project. Parliament should review this matter, and the Government should bring it before this House—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

PLIGHT OF MANITOBA FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, as a result of numerous hearings on farm tax issues in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, it has become very clear that any credit assistance program for farmers should be targeted primarily toward producers in financial distress. Some 15 per cent to 20 per cent of farmers in my home province of Manitoba, that is more than 600, are in serious financial circumstances. Therefore I strongly urge the Government to introduce a debt set-aside program in order to relieve targeted farmers of their oppressive debt load long enough for them to get back on their feet.

The Farm Credit Corporation estimates that a debt set-aside program could move more than 14,000 financially distressed Canadian farmers into a position, after five years, of having a reasonable chance of success.

I also wish to point out that more and more farmers are turning over their land to the FCC, then leasing it back in order to stay in business. Therefore I recommend the following: first, that these farmers be allowed to sign leases of more than one year in duration, perhaps three to five years; second, that these farmers retain the option of buying back their own land.

Canadian farmers do not want hand-outs. What they want and deserve is a little help over a very rough period.

HOUSING

SOCIAL, CO-OP, AND NATIVE HOUSING PROGRAMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the housing situation for many people in Canada is becoming desperate. But what has been the response of the federal Minister responsible for housing? A cut-back of federal money where it is needed most. Five thousand units of social housing have been cut; 4,000 co-op units, and 1,000 from the rural and native housing program. There are waiting lists of people needing affordable and decent housing in every major city in Canada.

First, we had a meeting of housing Ministers last November which produced no result. After a long, cold winter we get a consultation report. Now Erik Nielsen is working on a housing report. Nobody is in charge of housing for the Government, and nobody in the Conservative Government cares about the working poor, single parents, the homeless, or our senior citizens, who wait and wait on lists, while the Minister dithers and the Government delays. In the City of Ottawa there are 2,000 families waiting for social housing and the list grows by 200 per month. In Toronto there are over 11,000 families waiting.

The Ontario Government has shown, by its ill-conceived housing policies, that it does not want or deserve responsibility for social housing. We need leadership from the federal Government, not delay. We want action and financing now.

CONCENTRATION OF WEALTH

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, at least nine families in Canada have found a way to cope with the cost of living. They control $9 billion worth of corporate assets, or 46 per cent of the TSE 300. According to the Canadian Bankers' Association, this poses serious dangers for our financial markets. I would like to identify just a few of those dangers. It means a concentration of wealth which works against competition, and therefore against the consuming public. It means diverting human and financial resources away from the creativity and innovation our economy needs. It means at least a potential for excessive economic power as well as excessive political power. The most serious feature of all is its exponential growth.

Most of this concentration has occurred in the past 15 years. If the trend continues, Canada may find itself under a new form of the old Family Compact. Its dangerous potential has been signalled by the Canadian Bankers' Association. It is time for Parliament to alert itself. This is not a matter of right or left, of mediocrity seeking revenge against success. It is a concern about preserving competition and keeping free enterprise free.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, tonight marks the beginning of the national economic summit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: They should wait until it is over to see what are the results.

[Translation]

Mr. Johnston: The sheep are still alive, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Obviously the Government would not have embarked upon this costly undertaking if it did not have a clear idea of what it wished to accomplish through this extraordinary costly enterprise of a national economic summit, drawing, as an Hon. Member said earlier, from all parts of the country.

In the absence of the Prime Minister who, I understand, is preparing for this evening's events, would the Minister of Finance please tell the House the three most important accomplishments he hopes to see emerge from the session which begins this evening?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might say to the Hon. Member, when he talks about this very costly conference, that I understand the budget for this very costly conference in today's dollars is the same as it was for the conference he had a few years back in 1982 dollars. So we are being very thrifty in the way we are putting on a major economic event.

In response to the specific question the Hon. Member posed, we are looking for ways of creating jobs. We are looking for specific ideas and proposals on how we can get greater employment. Specifically, those elements of our society who have great difficulty in getting employment, being women's groups, native organizations, and youth, are represented at our conference and we expect we will get some very good ideas from them. As well, on Saturday afternoon there will be a major discussion on trade initiatives and the direction the country should be going regarding trade. So I think the Hon. Member will be very pleased with the results of this conference.

BUDGET PRESENTATION INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I hope I am pleased but I find it remarkable, after consultation with all these groups, that this kind of conference is needed to bring forth the ideas which are already in the possession of the Minister. That aside, I think what he is telling us, for those who did not catch it, is that this is the last in a series of political extravaganzas hosted by the grateful taxpayers, extravaganzas which are costing us millions of dollars.

That being said, let me ask the Minister of Finance this.

Mr. Oberle: What did Donald Macdonald cost us?

Mr. Johnston: Yesterday he advised the press that some of the ideas would probably be incorporated into his Budget. More important, he is alleged to have hinted that on Saturday afternoon he might announce the date of the Budget, not here in the House where it is supposed to be announced, Mr. Speaker, but at an economic conference held in Ottawa. Will the Minister please assure everyone in this House that he will respect the privileges of Members and, if he knows the date, tell us the date now. Then he can announce it on Saturday afternoon?

● (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should know by now that we believe we were elected on September 4 to consult with Canadians and discuss proposals with Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The conference this weekend will not be the last, but will be one of many examples of full consultation with Canadians. That has and will be the hallmark of the Mulroney Government.

With respect to the Member's question about the timing of the Budget, I said to the media yesterday that I expected that I would be announcing the timing of the Budget shortly.

Mr. Johnston: It was my understanding that she had hinted he would announce the budget date on Saturday afternoon. I hope that his statement todays mean that that will not take place.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO OFFICIALS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that some ideas from the conference would be incorporated into the Budget. Only yesterday the Prime Minister referred to it as an April Budget. The Minister's own officials have admitted that nothing coming out of this conference will be timely enough to be incorporated in the budgetary process.

What does the Minister say about the hyprocisy of the whole exercise of bringing these people at time and expense to Ottawa? Will he tell them that it is a sham, and stop trying to pull the wool over their eyes? Will he treat this conference for what it is, another exercise in public relations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear. I decide what is going to be in the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I said that the good ideas that I expect to come from this conference this weekend that I am able to incorporate into a Budget will be incorporated into a Budget. I would expect that the Hon. Member would be listening very carefully for those good ideas. I hope he will raise them in the House next week.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF BUDGETARY CUTBACKS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Finance. Like most of my other colleagues on both sides of the House, I sincerely hope that this summit will be an unqualified success. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance indicated that new cuts were to be announced. In order to provide for more informed discussion at the summit, could the Minister of Finance inform this House as well as the summit participants about the extent of the cuts he has in mind and in which sector they will be felt most, so that summit participants can then make appropriate suggestions with some understanding of the Minister's game plan?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Hon. Member for his kind words about the success of this conference. I am sure that it will be a success.

I believe that the Hon. Member, in his question, is really asking what will be in the Budget. Obviously that is something I cannot say now and, as a former Minister of Finance in the Province of Quebec, he should understand that.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTBACKS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. If the Minister of Finance did not want to be asked this kind of question, he should have remained silent yesterday and refrained from giving any hints about the contents of his budget. My question is as follows:

Since there will be cutbacks—the Minister having said so—will these new cuts remove any hope Quebec and Manitoba may have had of seeing the present guarantee formula for establishing the equalization base maintained, the loss of which would mean that Manitoba would lose about $70 million and Quebec more than $250 million?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the press conference I was asked whether there would be further action on controlling or reducing the size of the deficit. I said yes, that we had set out the course in the November 8 statement, that we will manage the deficit to a much greater extent than had been the case with the previous Government, and that that will involve a further amount of spending cuts and other means of saving on government spending.

I have answered the Hon. Member's question about equalization on a number of occasions. There will be a decision on that before the end of this month. People in the Province of Quebec and the Province of Manitoba will understand that as soon as I can come up with that decision.

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He has just acknowledged what he and the Prime Minister have said outside the House, that there will be additional cuts in the forthcoming Budget.

One of the policy papers by Professor McCallum that was released for the upcoming conference states, with reference to such cuts: "This option leads to large increases in unemployment lasting for several years. There is a danger too that the policy would have long-run negative effects on economic growth."

The Government has already announced over $4 billion in cuts before Christmas and is now planning to make more cuts in the coming Budget. When all the evidence, whether it is Great Britain, British Columbia, or this paper for the conference itself, suggests that such cuts produce fewer jobs and not more, why is the Government doing this?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member is out of touch with the people of Canada. There are many Canadians who feel that this Government can be run with less money and be more effective if we manage the process more effectively. It is in that context that we propose to continue the process that we set out in November to get a greater degree of control over the finances of the country. As a result, his children, our children, and the children of all Canadians will not have this enormous burden of debt that is continually growing faster than the economy. They will not face a future where the flexibility of the Government is totally impaired by the size of the interest on the government debt. Today that interest uses up $1 out of every $3 in taxes that are paid.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister did not answer the question at all. He made reference to our children. I say to him that that is exactly what Bill Bennett said three years ago. As a result, all kinds of children are looking for jobs in British Columbia because he has already done what the Minister of Finance wants to do to Canada.

ECONOMIC CONFERENCE DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the consultative process. The Minister is saying that this conference is something more than a public relations exercise. Considering that he already announced that there will be more cuts, no matter what happens at the conference and what people may say about the question of cuts, is the Minister not being totally cynical? Might he not just as well tell these people to stay at home because they are wasting their breath since the Government has already made up its mind?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Hon. Member could have read the agenda for the economic conference, because the extent of that agenda is far broader than what will or should be done about the question of the deficit. We will be talking about the problems of unemployment among different groups, as I indicated in a previous answer. We will be talking about the trade issue, and the whole question of competitiveness in a very tough competitive world today.

Let me return to the specific question the Hon. Member posed about whether we are closing out alternatives. We are not closing out alternatives. I am very interested in hearing the comments of people who are at the conference on how we should address the problem of the deficit, including how to get it under greater control, how fast we should move, and what areas we should address in getting control of the deficit.

A number of different proposals have been put forward in that respect, as has been indicated in other papers besides the one referred to by the Hon. Member.

TAX EXPENDITURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has asked for proposals, I will give him one. It concerns a subject that is not covered in any of the background papers. It is a subject that the Auditor General has referred to the Government and its predecessor a number of times. It is the $30 billion to $50 billion that go out each year in tax expenditures, mostly to corporations that have no accountability. Why is there not a paper discussing the tax expenditures, discussing the loopholes and the benefits that go to corporations without guaranteeing that we get jobs?

• (1430)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Have it all ways, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: Why isn't the Government having a hard look at this loss of revenue instead of cutting back on social programs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the Hon. Member that I do propose to address that. I will be addressing that as part of the budget process this year. I would remind the Hon. Member—he puts the emphasis on these loopholes, as he calls them—that there are many so-called tax expenditures which are received by individuals with a wide range of income. I caution him to be very careful on how he addresses his question. Some of the people I am sure he would not want to attack are benefiting by some of these tax expenditures.

Mr. Braodbent: Bring in a minimum tax.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We in this Party will be very very careful when we decide any changes in tax policy.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TALKS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

[English]

As unbelievable as it sounds, three days after President Reagan appointed Mr. William Brock to be his personal representative in Canada-U.S. trade talks, the President yesterday promoted Mr. Brock to the post of Labour Secretary, putting these important trade talks on hold. I would like to know whether the Government was informed of this planned change in Quebec City, or was the announcement of these high level trade talks just another act in the public relations production?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member that I was advised of the change prior to the public announcement being made.

INQUIRY WHETHER UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE WILL BE APPOINTED

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I know the Minister is supposed to be part of a team, but now it seems there is only one person on that team. Since the Minister is getting advance notice from the U.S. Government, I would like to know whether he is going to have a partner appointed to his negotiating team and when, in order to pursue these allegedly important negotiations he wants to conduct with the Americans.

[English]

The Minister does not know the answer.

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am quite satisfied that in due course my counterpart will be appointed by the American Government, and I am quite satisfied that he will be an excellent member of the new negotiating team.

Ms. Copps: How do you know it will be a he?

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS LAYOFFS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour on the eve of the economic summit which, among other things, according to the rhetoric, is supposed to yield a new era of co-operation and cousultation. Does the Minister of Labour approve of Canadian National Railways laying off 400 people during a time when the unions and the company are in conciliation about a no-layoff clause? Does he regard that as part of the new era of labour management relations promised by the Prime Minister, namely, the laying off of 400 people when they are in conciliation about no layoffs?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not expect me to comment upon actions taken, during conciliation, as he has just conceded.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I was not asking him to comment on actions taken during negotiations; I was asking him to comment on actions taken by a Crown corporation that affect 400 families across the country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, over 400 people were laid off with two weeks' notice, violating the spirit of the Canada Labour Code. This is the Minister of Labour. I want to know from him what he is going to do about that. Is the Government just giving us a lot of blarney about a new era of labour-management relations?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will not have to raise my voice because the credibility of my argument will stand by itself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member will understand that the Canada Labour Code provides protection for those workers, Mr. Speaker. If there has been a violation of the Labour Code, this Minister and this Government will operate under the statute.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

CHILD TAX CREDIT—NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT PRACTICE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister current practice by the Newfoundland Government which is anti-women and anti-child, and, if not illegal, then certainly immoral. The Newfoundland Government has instituted a system whereby unemployed workers who need extra help with winter heating bills must sign a declaration to turn over all or part of their child tax credit to the Government before any financial aid is provided. Will the Minister ask the Premier today to cease and desist this practice immediately?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing this matter to my attention. This was not known to me. I will check into the matter right after the Question Period.

LOSS OF ELECTRICITY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister give some positive answers today, and I hope he will be able to, to Shirley Parsons, a 34-year-old single parent of two, whose earnings from her part-time K-Mart job and unemployment insurance total less than $500 a month, whose monthly heating bill from the Newfoundland Light and Power Company averages $250, who will today have her electricity cut off because she will not sign, and whose pleas have been ignored by the Premier of Newfoundland himself?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that I cannot comment on a specific case. I have given her the assurance that I will check into the matter, and that assurance stands.

TRADE

UNITED STATES SUGAR QUOTAS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of International Trade. Has the President of the United States taken steps since last weekend to revoke the global sugar quotas as they affect Canadian companies that would normally be importing or exporting, if you want, into the United States?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member that discussions are continuing between the two countries, and particularly so in light of the President's pledge to give and render whatever help he can to Canada with respect to exemption from the worst effects of the legislation.

EFFECT OF QUOTAS ON CANADIAN WORKERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that there are literally hundreds of workers in Canada who have been affected detrimentally by the unfair imposition of those quotas? Is the Minister prepared today to approach the President of the U.S. one more time in an effort to get the Americans to live up to the obligation which they themselves claim they represent, that being not to restrict access unfairly to their markets?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have advised the Hon. Member that we are well aware of the plight of the workers who are being laid off by this legislation. As I previously advised him, we are having discussions with the Americans to see what can be done to alleviate the situation.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO PROPOSE NEW MORTGAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

The economic situation has been a series of ups and downs in recent years, and a good many farmers are trying to cope with inflation and long-term loans. Can the Minister tell the House whether his Department, through the Farm Credit Corporation, intends to introduce a new farm mortgage program, something along the lines of the Small Businesses Loans Act, with a view to ensuring stability and protection for our essential agricultural industry?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that this Government has introduced a number of measures to assist those in the agricultural industry. He will also know that this Government has introduced a number of specific measures directed to assist those farmers in financial difficulty.

The latest measure was the introduction of the shared risk mortgage plan which will go into effect on April 1. If interest rates increase by 5 per cent that will mean under the new plan the increase to the farmer would be shared on a 50-50 basis, to a maximum of 2.5 per cent. If it goes beyond that, then the federal Government assumes the additional cost.

PROPOSED EEC TARIFF ON BLUEBERRIES

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, and I gave him notice of it. As he is aware, the Canadian Government imposed a quota on beef imported from the European Economic Community. In retaliation, the EEC is intending to place, on April 15, 1985, a 25 per cent tariff on blueberries. Would the Minister indicate to the House what he and his Government intend to do in order to protect this very important industry in Nova Scotia?

● (1440)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very serious question. Indeed I share his concern. Of course action has been taken as a result of the Government making a very responsible decision and invoking a meat import law. At the moment negotiations are continuing between Canadian negotiators and those on behalf of the EEC. I am hopeful that we will reach a decision which will leave us in a position where we would still assist the Canadian beef industry, but not at the expense of other producers.

EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will not play one region off against another, or one industry off against another. I remind him that there are 800 full-time jobs in Nova Scotia.

Would the minister indicate to the House who are our negotiators in Brussels? What is the Cabinet directive which he has given them to complete the negotiations? Will he assure the House that the blueberry industry in Nova Scotia will not receive any economic sanctions as a result of allowing this 25 per cent tariff to take place, if in fact it does take place?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member to respect the fact that indeed negotiations are under way. They will continue, and we hope to reach a satisfactory decision. The Hon. Member can be assured that we will not play one region against another, because the Government of the country changed on September 4 last.

FISHERIES

FISHING VESSEL INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, the chief chopper of the Conservative Party. He will be aware that his committee has recommended the destruction of the Canadian Fishing Vessel Insurance Program. This program affects fishermen on both coasts. There are now 10 days remaining for fishermen to make a decision on whether to find private insurance or to learn whether they will have public insurance through the Government of Canada program. Many fishermen face the possibility of losing their vessels and 100 per cent increases. What will the Government do for those people who will lose their vessels or pay extremely high rates for private insurance, if the Government does not continue the program?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the preamble to the Hon. Member's question is a dishonest portrayal of the actual facts. Where he gets the basis for citing a recommendation, I know not. I can tell him that the first report of the Task Force on Program Review is now in the Cabinet process and is being considered.

PROGRAM REVIEW

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that 1,500 Newfoundland fishermen and other fishermen in the country have been told by the Government of Canada that that public program is going down the drain. However, it will not confirm it, and we are now within 10 days of April 1. How can the Minister sit there and deny that the restraint program, which his committee is forcing upon other government Departments, includes the dropping of this program when there has already been a Government of Canada announcement that that is the intention?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the exercise which the Task Force on Program Review has under way is not a restraint program. It was decribed in the press release of September 18. If the Hon. Member would refer to that wording, he might bring himself up to date. It has been described by me in the House of Commons as an exercise to improve delivery of programs, over 1,000 of them, to client groups; to eliminate overlap; to eliminate duplication; to foster better relations with the provinces; and to improve efficiency. Now, much to their despair, it might result in some savings. However, if those savings result, all the better for the Government, it seems to me. What we are doing, in a word, is injecting management and order into the affairs of the Government of Canada.

PLIGHT OF PENSIONERS

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I am sure he will recall, in the dying days of the last Parliament, that strong assurances were given by the Standing Committee on Transport to Canadian National pensioners that their problems, and indeed what they feel are injustices, would be dealt with quickly by Parliament. When might the reference be made to the standing committee to deal with this problem?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raises this question. It is true that it is a matter which preoccupies the Government, that is, the issue of CN pensions. For some time now the terms of reference for a referral to the standing committee have been in the hands of both opposition Parties. I understand the NDP has agreed. However, the Liberal Party seems to be stonewalling the issue. I wish it would make up its mind. At the present time its lack of concurrence is holding up the referral of this very important matter to the Standing Committee on Transport.

RAILWAYS

CN LAY-OFFS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Before asking the question, I want to assure the House that the remarks he just made do not reflect the reality, if this issue can be resolved in parliamentary committee, and the Liberals are anxious to find a solution to the CN staff pension problem. My question has to do with CN workers laid off by this Government, not with retired CN employees. I would ask the Minister to explain why 474 CN workers have just been laid off, considering that in answer to a question I asked him on February 26, the Minister assured me and the House that negotiations between the company and the employees were ongoing and that CN workers did not have any reason to be concerned over job security. How come they have now been laid off?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in response to the first part of the question, I hope I can take the Hon. Member's assurance as giving approval to the reference to the standing committee. It would be a signal which would allow the work of the standing committee to begin examining CN pensions. I hope he has the support of his colleagues, particularly that of his House Leader.

With respect to the second part of his question, it is not the Government which has laid off 474 workers; it is the management of CN. The reason the layoffs took place is simply because there has been a tremendous fall off in traffic—a 30 per cent decline in grain traffic, a 12 per cent decline in coal, and the prospects are not very promising. I do not think anyone is happy or pleased about the layoffs. I have asked the President of CN to ensure that all matters relating to labour adjustment, early retirement, and all such things will be taken into consideration so that the impact is not severe.

TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR CN EMPLOYEES TRANSFERABLE TO VIA RAIL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister said in his answer that he had given guidelines to the CN. I am not sure if that is what he said but, in any case, the Crown corporation legislation provides that if the Minister issues guidelines he must table them in the House. I would therefore ask the Minister to explain how it is that, in the Montreal region alone, some 10,000 jobs in transport and aeronautics may be lost as a result of cutbacks announced by the Government.

With that in mind, is the Minister prepared to issue guidelines to Crown corporations, particularly the CN, so that there will be no lay-offs until the matter of transfer of responsibilities of CN employees who might go to VIA Rail has been settled? Second, is the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I heard one question.

Mr. Ouellet: Second, is the Minister prepared to—

Mr. Speaker: No, no! That is enough!

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is really confused. I think it would take a Houdini to sort out his convoluted question. The fact of the matter is that he is mixing up the VIA Rail issue which, quite frankly, has nothing to do with the layoffs ordered by CN management relating to the fall off in traffic. I should remind the House that VIA will be hiring more people than the 225 laid off in the original instance, thanks to the restoration of rail passenger service.

● (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Member talked about directives from the Minister to the management of CNR. Naturally the CNR advised me about their intention regarding the layoffs. I asked for assurance that they will take every necessary precaution to ensure that the impact will be minimal and that early retirement and all other avenues related to labour adjustment will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect to the Minister, fair is fair.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF LAWYERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the matter of patronage. Earlier in Question Period today the Minister of Finance said that he believed that the Government could cut costs. Can the Minister of Agriculture explain how, by changing, name after name, lawyers working for the Farm Credit Corporation, and the fact that officials have said that this is disruptive to the process and that it is necessary to train these lawyers, will cut government costs?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to put the Hon. Member's mind at ease. He will find that indeed some of the changes that have taken place and will take place will result in extremely competent lawyers in the FCC. The lawyers that will be appointed or recommended will not require any training process whatsoever.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Unlike the NDP, they will have their degrees.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my following question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, although I hear the quips of the Government House Leader. It is interesting to note that Hnatyshyn and Company is one of the new firms getting business.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Great lawyers.

Mr. Murphy: Changing firm after firm of lawyers, whether it be CMHC or FCC, is costing Canadian taxpayers money. It is creating delays and creating loss. How can the Government keep doing that? When is the gravy train going to stop?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can do no better than to reiterate the response that was given by my colleague, and to assure the House that only the highest level of professional ability and skills will be retained to discharge the responsibilities in that regard which, I am sure, they will do far more efficiently and at much less cost.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—HIRING OF PART-TIME WORKERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. With respect to the negotiations between Air Canada and the Canadian Airline Employees Association, Air Canada demands layoff of full-time passenger agents before part-time workers and unlimited hiring of part-time workers at a salary cut of 20 per cent and for a 12-hour week, leaving part-time workers ineligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits. Is this how the Minister plans to honour the Government's commitment to affirmative action?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, there are negotiations that are currently under way on that issue. The point that has been made by the Hon. Member is somewhat inaccurate. I have asked Air Canada about this because it arose in an earlier question. They have assured me that such is not the case.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given that Crown corporations are part of the Government's employment equity proposals and that whatever Air Canada proposes, which is much closer to what I said, is a backward step affecting 2,700 workers, 66 per cent of whom are women, does the Minister accept this kind of a backward step? If not, can she give some idea how the Minister and her staff can stop this regressive step with regard to women and affirmative action?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member was in the House when we discussed this issue with regard to employment equity the other day. She knows that Crown corporations are being asked to have implementation plans ready by September of this year and that they will be required to do their first reporting within a year following that. I know that Crown corporations are going to take that mandate very responsibly and they are going to see that work that was not done, and what was not enforced by the previous régime, will now be carried out.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

STUDY OF INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We were told that income tax returns are being processed earlier than ever. Almost a half million low-income Canadians get their income tax refunds cashed by the tax discounters. Given that this is being done so quickly, the 15 per cent rule will really give the discounters an interest rate of 200 per cent. They will earn about $90 million this year. Has the Minister yet completed the study that he promised, and when we will get some action to stop this kind of rip-off?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have previously indicated that we are now in the process of completing these consultations, that part of these involved the provinces, in view of the fact that it is at their request that the legislation had been introduced in the first place, and that as soon as these consultations are over, we would gladly introduce legislation to that effect.

[English]

PROTECTION OF LOW-INCOME MOTHERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that those consultations will not help these people this year. Since federal legislation already prohibits the transference to third parties of family allowance, old age pension, and Canada Pension Plan cheques, so eliminating the tax discounters from profiting from any part of those benefits, will the Minister consider extending the same regulation at least to protect those low-income mothers whose entire tax refund comes from the child tax credit?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend that we will be pleased to consider each and every possible way to improve this legislation.

FORESTRY

BUDWORM INFESTATION IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. Millions of acres of northern Ontario forests are threatened by jack pine and spruce budworm infestation, involving hundreds of millions of forest products and tens of thousands of jobs. Is the Department now recommending that a control program be put in place?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I certainly share the concern of the Hon. Member about the kind of devastation that follows an onslaught by spruce budworm or the pine budworm. We have been working with the Department of Natural Resources on that issue. A great deal of research has been done on it. We tried to help in the process of getting chemicals and BT re-registered. The decision, however, will rest with the provincial Government on whether to have a spray program. Naturally we have been working with that Government.

USE OF BIOLOGICAL INSECTICIDE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): The Department of Agriculture has already approved the BT biological insecticide and consultations have taken place throughout northern Ontario. Still the Ontario Government procrastinates on making a decision on whether to implement a program. Will the Minister contact the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources and urge on him an immediate decision to go ahead with the control program, in view of the millions of acres of forests which are at stake and the hundreds of thousands of jobs involved in the whole matter?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can rest assured that we have been negotiating and discussing this matter with the Minister of Natural Resources. I again wish to reiterate that the decision will rest with that level of Government. Public hearings have been held on the use of that. Certainly we encourage that, if that is the wish of that Government.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

NEGOTIATION OF ERDA AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Word is out the negotiations are not going too well with British Columbia. In fact the Minister is no longer going to sign the ERDA agreement for $650 million. The ball is rolling back the other way. Can the Minister give the House an update? Are we at $500 million, or $400 million? Where does ERDA now stand with British Columbia?

Business of the House

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be pleased to know that negotiations have proceeded extremely well as far as the ERDA agreement with British Columbia is concerned. I believe that an announcement will be made very shortly.

● (1500)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short supplementary question to ask the Minister of State for Forestry. I wonder if he could rise and tell the House whether or not British Columbia has now agreed to sign a five-year $300 million Canada-B.C. reforestation agreement. While he is on his feet—

Some Hon. Members: Short.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, could he confirm that?

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, I do not believe the Minister will get to his feet at all because that is not a supplementary question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader to tell us what business he intends to call for the coming week. I would also like to have the Government House Leader confirm that neither he nor the Minister of Transport need the prior consent of the Liberal Party in order to present a motion to the House to refer to a committee the question of the CN pensioners. I would ask him when he will do that and take on his responsibilities.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition will know, I take my responsibilities with great seriousness. I try to consult with him in particular with respect to expeditious dealings regarding House business time. Indeed, he will know that I did give him a draft resolution with respect to the reference to committee of the CN pensioners motion for his approval in consultation with the very distinguished Party critic. As the Hon. Member will recall, the purpose of that was to make sure that we could have the matter referred to the committee forthwith and not necessarily utilize the time of the House for debate on a motion which may not be to the satisfaction of the Official Opposition. It was purely from the point of view of trying to conduct affairs on a co-operative or consultative basis that I presented the draft to the Hon. House Leader some time ago.

I understood that I was to receive a response regarding the suitability of that motion. To this point in time I have not yet received a response. I believe the Party critic indicated today during Question Period that he is satisfied with having the matter go ahead by unanimous consent without debate when presented. I will try to make arrangements for a mutually satisfactory time to have the matter brought to the House.

With respect to the House business for the forthcoming week, I would like to take this opportunity to announce that Monday, March 25, will be the seventh and final allotted day in the current period of supply. There will therefore be votes on supply at the end of Monday.

With respect to the business for tomorrow and the rest of next week until the next House business statement is made, we will conlcude the consideration of the second reading stage of Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act. Following Bill C-24, the House will begin debate at second reading on Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Following Bill C-27, I will call Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada.

It is anticipated that the Small Businesses Loans Act, Bill C-23, will be reported back from committee in a few minutes' time. There continue to be discussions between the Parties with respect to the disposition of this Bill, and depending upon the outcome of those discussions, I may make a further announcement later this day with respect to the business for tomorrow. I believe the Official Opposition is satisfied with the arrangement that was discussed by the critics and we are waiting to see if the New Democratic Party agrees to the disposition of that Bill tomorrow.

As always, we will monitor the progress made with respect to the business that I just outlined, and if any changes are to be made, further announcements will be forthcoming.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the matter raised by the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition, the question of pensions, I would suggest that it would be to everyone's advantage, including the pensioners, for the Official Opposition to indicate its position now. If so, we could have the motion brought forward. We agreed some weeks ago to proceed with this matter and we anticipated that it would be proceeded with expeditiously, knowing that there are many pensioners who hope to benefit as a result of the changes that we hope will take place.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to clarify some of the things mentioned by the Hon. Government House Leader. With respect to the Government's intention to present a motion to refer the CN pension situation to committee, we would like to see that done. If a motion is presented, we will have it dealt with expeditiously. We believe there should be a limited period of time for debate, perhaps one or two speeches per Party, and I think that would be a way of having it move very quickly to committee. However, there are some points that we think should be put on the record of the House of Commons regarding this important matter.

Second, I would say to the Government House Leader with respect to Bill C-23, the Small Businesses Loans Act, that while our critic has told me that he has received suggestions from the Minister responsible, he has not yet recommended an agreement. We are continuing to consult and I will be in touch with my hon. friend in that regard in the course of the day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take any more time of the House except to say that I appreciate having the information with respect to the response of the House Leader of the Official Opposition regarding the CN pensioners' matter. I certainly will give the matter some consideration. I had thought that there would be ample opportunity in a very high-profile committee setting for Members of the Official Opposition to make their position known abundantly. That was the very purpose of trying to facilitate the passage of that motion through the House without using time which could be utilized on other issues. That is why I made the suggestion that we do it without debate. I will discuss the matter with my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), and with the House Leader for the New Democratic Party immediately. We will try to get some action on this on behalf of those many, many Canadians who are affected by this important study.

ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

18TH ANNIVERSARY OF INTERNATIONAL DAY

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise in the House this afternoon to make a statement regarding International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. As most Members know, today is the 18th anniversary of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination which the United Nations called upon its member states to observe annually as of March 21, 1967. Canada is also supporting the second decade of action to combat racism and racial discrimination adopted by the United Nations last year.

Comparatively, Canadian society is fundamentally tolerant and accommodating of the cultural and racial diversity that has become an increasing part of our social landscape and has enriched our lives as Canadians. We should not, however, be lulled into complacency. Racial discrimination is still present in our society, as numerous studies, such as Equality Now and the Abella report on Equality in Employment, have testified. There is, therefore, a need to be ever vigilant.

Canadians are determined to eliminate this phenomenon from their midst. The coming into force of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms on equality rights on April 17, and Section 27 on the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians, are major steps that will afford better protection to minorities, including cultural and racial minorities.

The Government is committed to creating a climate of mutual tolerance among Canadians so that all of us, irrespective of our racial or ethnic origins, can contribute to and participate fully and equally in the life of our country for the benefit of all of our society. This commitment is clearly demonstrated by the number of major initiatives which we have undertaken in response to both the Abella and Equality Now reports.

The Government's positive response to the Abella report is a major step toward eliminating racial discrimination in federally-regulated employment. For example, visible minorities will for the first time be a target group for employment equity in the federal sector. That is a major breakthrough, since employment is such a critical part of life in our society.

The current deliberations of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission in the report entitled A Proposal for an Ethnic Broadcasting Policy for Canada will certainly reinforce the multicultural fabric of our nation.

The Government will also work co-operatively with other jurisdictions to eliminate discrimination. The Government is sponsoring the first Federal-Provincial-Territorial Conference on Multiculturalism, which will he held this May. That conference will explore how this co-operation can best be achieved. We are also discussing with the Federation of Canadian Municipalities what new initiatives can be undertaken to address the issue of racial discrimination at the municipal level.

Last October, Multiculturalism Canada and the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs co-sponsored a successful national symposium on policing in multicultural-multiracial urban communities. As a result, the association is making this the theme of its next annual conference, which will be held later this year, as part of its follow-up commitment.

In addition, we will continue to develop further new initiatives in a number of social areas that will make Canadians and their institutions open and equitable for all citizens, irrespective of their racial, ethnic or cultural backgrounds.

Canadians are realizing that Canada has become a culturally and racially diverse nation, populated by talented and capable people from all parts of the world. The people of a nation are its most important resource. The richness of our diversity is certainly our greatest asset which, allowed to flourish to its fullest potential, can benefit us all.

Canada as a nation has an enviable reputation in the world of which we can all be proud. Let us all work together to make it better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking the Minister for giving us an advance copy of his statement. He will know that a week ago I was critical of one of his colleagues because I did not receive that statement in advance. I want to give credit where credit is due. As the Minister knows, providing advance copies permits members of the Opposition to comment more constructively and with more meaning on these statements.

I would also like to thank the Minister for making this statement in the House. By doing that, he gives the House of Commons an opportunity to make pronouncements on very important matters and to state before the Canadian people that this House is against all kinds of discrimination, especially racial discrimination.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: It is very important for all of us to show leadership in this respect. As the Minister pointed out in his statement, although much progress has been made in this country, problems still exist. Last year in the City of Montreal there was a serious problem with respect to our black taxi drivers, and a commission was set up by the provincial Government to deal with that problem. I also raised in this House the problem of a young black man who was refused entrance to a café in the City of Montreal. Problems still exist, and we must be ever-vigilant in dealing with those problems.

There have been countries in which great progress has been made. However, during times of unemployment and other crises there is always the tendency for this ugly side of humanity to express itself, and consequently we must forever work on these matters.

Today the Minister has principally dealt with racial discrimination. However, there are many other kinds of discrimination which are just as odious—religious, ethnic, linguistic, sexual and the discrimination against the handicapped. Recently in Canada we saw the terrible experiences of the Zundel trial and the Keegstra case in the west in which discrimination was expressed against our Jewish brothers. Together we must bring in amendments to the Criminal Code with respect to hate literature. Also, during the last election campaign I noticed a backlash against some of our immigrant groups in Canada, especially the Asian and black people. I am afraid that there are still issues of linguistic discrimination for minorities in the Province of Quebec, and francophone minorities in other parts of the country.

Those of us who have been at the hearings of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development over the last couple of weeks when it has been discussing Bill C-31 will know of the many sad stories which were put before that committee. It gives us a real education regarding the discrimination which exists against Indian and native people in the country. If there is one area where there is a major problem, it is in the discrimination which is practised against many of our Indian and native people. When we visit our large cities and see the ghettos in which Indian people live and the problems that they have with employment and many other matters, it is obvious that that is one of the principal areas in which we must take action, whether it be in housing, education or other areas.

The Equality Now report to which the Minister referred was a major report of the last Parliament. It was a unanimous report of all Parties of the House. It was tabled a year ago with 80 recommendations. I am pleased to see that we are now beginning to move ahead to implement those recommendations.

It is interesting to note that in the last Parliament there were several committees and commissions which dealt with discrimination. The Obstacles report dealt with problems of the handicapped and the Equality Now report dealt with problems of visible minorities. The Special Committee which I chaired on Employment Opportunities for the '80s dealt with the problems of minority groups. Chapter 11 of the report dealt with employment problems.

When the Government announced its response to the Abella report last week, I indicated that we were pleased with certain of the proposals which were definitely moves in the right direction. However, we were concerned by the lack of an enforcement agency and sanctions. We were also concerned that the contract compliance provisions would only apply to 100 out of approximately 30,000 businesses which deal with the Government. We were also concerned that the proposals would only apply to 800 out of approximately 4,500 federally-regulated firms. Nevertheless, these are moves in the right direction and we will watch closely to see what happens with respect to the measures which have been announced by the Government.

Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms comes into effect on April 17. That will be a landmark—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I am afraid that his time has expired, unless the House will grant its unanimous consent for him to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say that Section 15 has great significance because it will apply to all federal and provincial legislation. It will override any provincial or federal law which contains discrimination with respect to the target groups, including the visible minorities, women, senior citizens and so on. In his statement the Minister said that he would take action to get the provinces to comply in these matters. That is very important, because the federal Government only covers a small area of the total field.

I want to assure the Minister that we in this Party will give our full support in moving ahead in the fight against racial discrimination. The Minister will find that we will be behind any legislation which he introduces in this regard.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in recognizing the statement which was made today. Although this statement deals only with discrimination as it exists in Canada, I think we must recognize that we in Canada have a responsibility regarding discrimination in other parts of the world. We have to be ever vigilant against the tendency among those who would discriminate to force their will on what are frequently the minorities in other countries. It is unfortunate that we continually have to raise the problem of discrimination. That discrimination is not dead either here in Canada or in other countries around the world. It continues to rear its ugly head. It is only by virtue of these problems being constantly raised and by virtue of discussions we have inside and outside of this Parliament about discrimination which is practised not only in Canada but in other parts of the world, that we are able to cause those who would discriminate to jactitation.

It is important that we make those who would discriminate very nervous about their tendency and proclivity to cause harm to others who are perhaps unable to speak for themselves. Just today, for example, my colleague raised the situation in South Africa where 14 people were shot to death on the anniversary not only of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination but on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre. These 14 people were shot to death because they stood up against discrimination.

I want to say that this Parliament has an obligation to make known to the Governments of those countries with which we do business and which rely on us in many ways for the continuance of their economic well-being, that we will not sit idly by and watch while they undertake the kinds of measures which caused those 14 deaths. That applies not only to South Africa but to many other parts of the world. It applies, as Hon. Members will know, to the Soviet Union where we frequently find there is a measure of discrimination taken against individuals, particularly because of their religious beliefs, but not always.

As we recognize the day, we must also recognize not only the marginal successes—and there have been some—but the terrible failures. Although we stand up and say that this is an important day, the real importance of it will be measured only when we can look inside and outside our country and see that the ugly head of discrimination has finally vanished from the international scene.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in his comments the Minister reminded the House that racial discrimination still exists in Canada, and that we must try, with the co-operation of various agencies, to remove and extirpate this cancer from our society. I would like to ask the Minister the following question. Since the previous Government had a program to help people who felt their rights had been infringed upon, a legal aid program that provided financial assistance to people who wanted to take legal action to defend their rights before the courts, could the Minister inform the House whether, when he says that we are determined to wipe out this phenomenon, and considering the fact that Section 15 of the Constitution comes into effect on April 17, and that this section is directly concerned with the subject, he is prepared to recommend to Cabinet that the legal aid program be expanded to cover racial discrimination?

[English]

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. It is certainly something which has been contemplated in the minds of many people in this country. I would think—and once again, I am not a lawyer—that given what most people expect to be an increased work load which will very likely be undertaken, some form of compensation or help will have to be looked at and considered by Parliament at some point in time.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, not only are there problems of discrimination and racism which we attempt to deal with in Canada, but there are problems beyond the borders of Canada. In fact, the way we act often times carries a much more impressive message than the way we talk. I wonder if the Minister is prepared to look at some of our relationships with particular countries which practise, as part of their Constitution, racism and discrimination? I am referring to South Africa. Is the Minister prepared to use his influence within the Cabinet to make sure, for example, that South African Krugerrand gold coins are not imported into Canada and sold through Canadian banks to Canadian entrepreneurs?

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, that question, I suppose, stretches the jurisdiction in terms of our discussion this afternoon. Certainly, the Cabinet itself, the Government and the House of Commons will want to do everything in their power to make sure that we are not only viewed properly outside of our country—which means, of course, cleaning up our own act; people are watching us from that point of view—but that we also show the world that we mean business in our outside dealings. I feel certain that Canada is well regarded in this area. The Hon. Member's comments will be taken into consideration. It is something with which certainly the Government itself would have to deal. At the present time, however, there is no indication that that will take place.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, this past week there was a story in the press about a hotel in Prince George where one of the people working in that hotel indicated there was a policy of refusing entrance to all of the Indian people from a certain Indian band in northern British Columbia. I understant that there has since been an official retraction but I suspect that this is really just the tip of the iceberg. This is a situation which pops up every now and again and we become aware of the kind of systemic discrimination which often takes place against Indian people in many communities across Canada.

Would the Minister undertake an investigation into the situation at Prince George in order to make sure that Indian people are not discriminated against when they try to get accommodation in that city?

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the matter raised by the Hon. Member is an important one. It also, I suspect, falls somewhat within the provincial jurisdiction. Nevertheless, we are concerned that there is discrimination in any part of Canada and anything we as a Government can do to help the minorities in this country who are discriminated against—and certainly Indian people fall right within that category—we will endeavour to do.

Our whole thrust in acting as quickly as we have on the Abella Commission report, which deals primarily with native groups, women's groups, the handicapped and visible minorities, is to ensure that when we go out to support a group of people which have suffered discrimination, we will have something there to talk about; that we as a Government in effect have cleaned up our act. Only then, in my opinion, can we go out and point the finger at various groups of people. We are very sensitive and concerned about the issue and I will endeavour to get as much information on it as I can.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I also want to join my colleagues in congratulating the Minister on his statement. I think his declaration in principle . . . We are all for virtue and motherhood, but on page 2 of his statement, he again refers to the coming into effect on April 17 of Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I would like to elaborate on what my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said about legal recourse.

The House is aware that the coming into effect of this section of our new Constitution is very significant for the enforcement of certain kinds of legislation. We know that, usually, victims of discrimination belong to minorities that, unfortunately, have too little clout. And now that the coming into effect of Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is imminent, could the Minister give the House the assurance that when Section 15 becomes effective, we will know whether he is prepared to put his money where his mouth is and ensure that, as he said earlier, the rights and freedoms of individuals are truly protected and that the legislation is not just a piece of paper but a living reality for those Canadians who need this kind of protection?

To get back to the question put by my hon. colleague, we do not want to know whether there will be a program in a month of Sundays. What we want to know is whether, when the Bill receives royal assent, the Minister is going to put his money where his mouth is and ensure that a properly financed legal aid program will put some teeth into Section 15 of the Charter.

[English]

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, that question would have been better directed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) because he is going to be the man dealing with this particular area. As the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of Justice has set up a select committee to study the charter and its implications. Of course, that will be something this committee will be dealing with.

To get directly to the Hon. Member's question, it is not practical, shall we say. We can all imagine the work load, because of the coming into effect of the charter, through a buildup of many different types of cases. None of us can envisage that without some assistance at some point in time, and certainly the Government will be looking at that, as I hope the Opposition and the committee itself will do, and the recommendations we receive will be dealt with.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in 1979 the UN Assembly designated the week beginning March 21 as the week of solidarity with people struggling against racism and racial discrimination. Indeed, today is the day that the City of Ottawa declared as the international day for the elimination of racial discrimination. So my question to the Minister is very specific and once again deals with our performance and something which gives us credibility not only in Canada but also outside Canada, that being the code of behaviour for Canadian companies operating in South Africa.

These companies are supposed to file an accountability report on their compliance with that code of behaviour. As far as I know, Alcan is the only company which has filed that annual report since it was instituted. Can the Minister promise this House that he will at least go back to Cabinet and demand that Canadian companies like Bata Shoe and Falconbridge comply with that minimum standard of behaviour for which we ask?

Mr. Deans: Which is required.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, it is required.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, my Cabinet colleagues involved in this particular matter, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), for example, and others are aware of this. We are in the process of monitoring the companies based on the work they do and how they deal with the conditions within South Africa.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are not monitoring very well.

Mr. Murta: As the Member knows, this is a very difficult situation.

Mr. Rodriguez: How?

Mr. Murta: Canadian companies—it is a difficult situation within South Africa.

Mr. Rodriguez: For them to file?

Mr. Murta: We are watching the situation and monitoring it.

Mr. Rodriguez: People are watching you.

Mr. Murta: I am sure that the Hon. Member will be satisfied with the outcome of the process which is taking place.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: I must say I felt considerable concern when the Minister mentioned that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) had a committee that was dealing with the legal aid program. Since his Ministry comes under the Department of the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister ought to know that at least in the past, the Secretary of State has always been responsible for the legal aid program, and there was no screening by the Department of Justice with respect to this program. Did the Minister mean to say that authority over the legal aid program has been transferred from the Secretary of State, who is supposed to represent minorities in Cabinet, and relegated by the Minister, now that he has lost his authority over the program, to officials at the Department of Justice—is that what he is telling me?

[English]

Mr. Murta: No, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I misinterpreted the hon. gentleman's earlier question. The heart and soul, as he says, of the protection of minorities in this country is now, always has been and always will be in the Secretary of State's Department. I can only tell the hon. gentleman that certainly if financial assistance is necessary—and we all expect it will be although only time will tell—the Government will deal with it in the most appropriate way possible in view of the fact that we are dealing with a very sensitive matter which involves minority rights and minorities across this country.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works; and the motion of Mr. Hockin (p. 3227).

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise again in this debate. Yesterday I had an opportunity to urge the House to consider the possibility of allowing a six-month delay before Bill C-24 becomes law. Unfortunately, the way things are this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, parliamentarians have a sword of Damocles hanging over their heads, and once again we must conclude that tyranny by the majority prevents us from properly debating this measure.

In view of their overwhelming majority, Mr. Speaker, our colleagues opposite have decided once again to gag us, to impose closure on a Bill which is of vital importance to many Canadian families. Not only did they choose to drop a program which is very important in many localities in Canada—in mid-November to boot—but they also sprang this announcement on us without notice. They are now intent on preventing the House of Commons from giving due consideration to this Bill which concerns many families in all ridings.

Sure enough, the Government did not pay much attention to our speeches so far, and no amendment is forthcoming to make sure that the Canadian Oil Substitution Program will be extended until some time in September or October instead of ending on March 31. Mr. Speaker, when the Government is primarily concerned about the fact that March 31 marks the end of the fiscal year, we seriously wonder just why it announced in the middle of November that March 31 will be the end of a program which directly involves the construction industry as well as electrical and home heating contractors.

Mr. Speaker, you will certainly agree that if you were planning to replace your furnace, you would not do it in the middle of February. If you were planning to convert to natural gas, it is not at this time, when the ground is still frozen, that gas lines would be installed.

The people who are supposed to have all the answers therefore did not realize that, by cancelling a program in the middle of winter, they would prevent Canadian men and women who wished to use the oil conversion program to do so and would take away for all practical purposes, their opportunity to use the program.

During the debate, I heard many Members say that people have known of this deadline since November. I am pleased to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) among us since he is supposed to care about what happens to the poor in Canada. Since the grant did not cover 100 per cent of conversion costs, the Minister should realize that many families could not, in such a short time, put aside the money needed to undertake such a project. Many families could not afford to undertake immediately a project which could cost thousands of dollars. The word discrimination was mentioned a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-24 indeed discriminates against all those who were unable to save enough money between November and today to undertake conversion work in their homes, and it is also discriminatory to provide so little time until the deadline, especially since the public was convinced that the program would be maintained until December 31, 1990. Because of this, I know of many people who had planned major renovations in their homes for next summer, but who were waiting until then to convert their heating system and stop being dependent on oil.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the situation is about the same in the Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins), and I am convinced that the situation is about the same in the Témiscamingue constituency. I can see the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins), and I am convinced that there are families with the same problems in his riding. It is quite cold in that region, and I am certain that very few people converted their heating system in February or March of this year. All these people will therefore be unable to apply under the oil substitution program.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter for concern since natural gas has just become available in certain regions. And we know how people are unwilling to accept changes. Those people who have just become users of natural gas—and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) who is in this House, will confirm that many areas of Canada and especially Quebec have just been connected with the natural gas system and that her department's interest in helping to finance the laying of natural gas branch lines was of course to have industrial conversions. But her department was certainly expecting several residential conversions. Instead of slashing the program, the Minister should realize that such conversions could not be carried out during the winter. She should know of course that the ground is frozen hard in most parts of Canada, except perhaps in Vancouver, Mr. Speaker. But in all other regions, and certainly the Minister knows the situation in the Eastern Townships, for instance, because she herself has provided money for the installation of natural gas branch lines, she should realize that there was not enough time for people to make the conversion, that her announcement implied in the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) came too late, and that the entire construction industry, the electricians and the natural gas people, are asking that the program's termination date be changed.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons for requesting such an extension. By creating as she did an emergency situation, the Minister has actually caused what is called a shortage of equipment in many remote areas of Canada, where equipment can only be shipped by boat.

Miss Carney: It is a money shortage.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I hear the Minister say it is a money shortage. She is a Member of Cabinet and she lets her colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) spend $56 million on army uniforms. The Minister should be ashamed of referring to a shortage of money. When she lets the Minister of National Defence buy planes, at $10 million a piece, for her to travel around she should be ashamed! And if she has no power in Cabinet, if she does not have enough clout to save her department's money, she should not come in this House and try to insult Opposition Members who have concern for Canadians, Mr. Speaker.

I am happy to see the Minister here, because we are going to tell her what the people in our constituencies think. Our constituents are saying that the Minister knows nothing about construction, that she does not know that a heating system is not to be converted during the winter, that she does not know that we have just been provided with natural gas. But this is what we want her to hear today. And I am pleased, because Hon. Members in her own party do not look as though they were going to tell her. Since I have been listening to this debate, Mr. Speaker, very few Conservative Members have participated. They will not have me believe that the situation in their constituencies is any different from what it is in ours. They will not convince me for instance that the CHIP Program in their constituencies is having less success than elsewhere.

She is also talking about terminating the Canadian Home Insulation Program next year. A program that has met with an interesting success, for which her department had set a goal of 5 million homes. Now this program is halfway through, with 2.5 million homes that have been insulated. Does she intend to convince me that all of the other 2.5 million homes will be insulated in the coming year? I would like to believe that, Mr. Speaker, but I feel she is deluding herself. To that extent, it is amazing how far the Government will go in the way of cheese-paring. That program allowed thousands of Canadian home owners to conserve energy. Is there anything wrong with Canadian men and women conserving energy? It has helped us reduce our oil dependency. And it is an illusion to think that because there has been a slight decrease in the price of oil, this will last forever. I believe Canada cannot afford to depend too much on any form of energy. And the diversification effected by the program was precisely intended to reduce Canadian dependency on any one form, or a number of forms of energy. And in that sense . . . I see that my friend from Champlain (Mr. Champagne) is arriving. I am sure that he will tell you, Mr. Speaker, about the negative effects his riding will get because this program is cut off. I am sure that he will refer to the electrical contractors, the plumbers and the people installing heating systems who tell him that it is senseless to cut it off in the middle of March because it is in the spring and in summer that construction is carried on in the constituency of Champlain. It is only in the constituency of the Minister that the work can be carried throughout the year, Mr. Speaker. This is the reason why she may not understand the ill effects of those cuts. Now the government has decided to muzzle the Members—

Mr. Speaker, you are telling me that the time allotted to me is unfortunately expired. I could have told you about the negative effects of the unilateral decision taken by the Minister but unfortunately due to the callousness of that government and because of closure, I am unable to continue my remarks on such an important issue.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak briefly on Bill C-24. At the beginning of my remarks I would like to express a certain degree of frustration with the way in which things are going. On the one hand, there seems to be a great deal of publicity and media attention given to the Prime Minister's meeting with President Reagan which accomplished very little for the Canadian people. On the other hand, we are here debating cut-backs that are of basic importance to thousands of Canadians across the country and it seems that it is being done almost in a vacuum.

This Government seems very successful in one respect in that it is accomplishing media events. It does not seem to be directing its energy toward tackling the fundamental problems of our economy. When it does address the economy, it usually does so in a backward move.

We have to ask why the Government is taking such a penny-wise, pound-foolish approach to the economy. The Government ostensibly gives the reason that it wants to cut back on the deficit and that is why the Government is cutting programs like this one which, as Members opposite acknowledge, have performed a useful function over the last few years. The Tories acknowledge they have been good programs and have helped Canadians. Yet the Tories cut these programs because they say they are concerned about the deficit. If they are so concerned about the deficit, Mr. Speaker, I wish they were a little more careful about the way they use government executive jets. It was reported in the news paper last week that some Cabinet Minister had to fly to Vancouver on a jet at a cost of $19,000. We have, on the one hand, this kind of extravagance and waste and, on the other hand, we are cutting back on programs that will affect the well-being of the ordinary people.

We can look at the issue that was brought up by one of my colleagues, the question of changing lawyers for the Farm Credit Corporation. In spite of the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) today, there will be a training period required, and this will be a further expense.

We see the Government cutting programs of demonstrated value. In addition to the two we are talking about today, I can cite such programs as the fishermen's insurance, which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) brought up today, or the cuts in the residential rehabilitation assistance program.

The programs we are talking about today covered by Bill C-24, involve oil substitution and the Canadian Home Insulation Program. These programs have been fundamentally beneficial to Canadians and have helped the economy. I would like to suggest at least three ways in which these programs have been helpful.

First, they have reduced our consumption of oil. As we all should know, oil is a finite resource. The National Energy Board has estimated that by the year 2005 our production of conventional crude will be about 28 per cent of what it is today.

Second, these programs have provided jobs all across Canada. They have provided jobs for people involved in insulation and retrofitting.

Third, these programs have benefited the economy because they has enabled home owners to save on their heating bills.

It is important to stress that when the home owner is able to save a little bit of money and when money is tight in most households, that money will go into other sections of the economy. The money will keep circulating rather than going to the oil companies.

These programs are popular. The Canadian Oil Substitution Program is now halfway through its projected mandate. It was supposed to run to 1990. It is more or less on target in terms of its projection, but instead it will be terminated at the end of March. It is interesting that the gas contracting firms are complaining now about the haste with which COSP has been terminated and the waste this creates because a lot of people have been trying to get in under the deadline in order to take advantage of the program. People have made applications and the gas companies have been trying to put in lines in the middle of the winter, a most costly and wasteful approach. At the very least the Government could have given a little more notice. That was the substance of the motion we moved last week when we asked the Government to give the Bill an extra six-month consideration.

On Vancouver Island people suffer a double penalty. This has been pointed out before. People on Vancouver Island were not able to take advantage of the program until 1983 because there was a lot of thought that a natural gas pipeline would be built to the Island. When the program first came into effect, it was put on hold after a few weeks, and it was not until 1983 that people were able to take advantage of COSP when they went of oil to electricity or to wood stoves, or whatever.

It has been reported that by helping people to move off oil COSP has saved 15.3 million a barrels of oil a year, enough oil to heat 650,000 homes. Between 1981 and 1985 COSP provided 16,750 jobs. Now when we have 1.5 million people unemployed, perhaps the Government thinks that over 16,000 jobs is not very much and it can just forget about them. Every job is important.

The same is true for CHIP. Between 1977 and 1982 some 44,000 person-years of work were created by the program. The Oil Substitution Program was able to provide some 30.5 person-years for every $1 million invested. CHIP provided 53 person-years for every $1 million invested. The cost of a barrel of oil saved under this program amounted to something like $3 to $5. To bring in new energy sources it will be between $30 and $70 a barrel or its equivalent.

The Government is going ahead with these cuts, and we have to ask why. Before the election we never heard anything about this. The Government did not campaign on the platform that if it were elected it would cut the Oil Substitution Program and CHIP. The Tories promised jobs. Since the Government has been elected, we have not heard jobs, jobs, jobs, but cut-back, cut-back, cut-back. This last week we have heard just one word and that one word is "uncle", Mr. Speaker. This Government seems to be operating by public relations rather than on the basis of what is really needed for Canadians. I urge it to take a second look.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I trust the House realizes that the Official Opposition's decision to oppose Bill C-24 was not made because we enjoy this kind of debate. We have very serious reasons for opposing the Bill, because we believe that the Government's approach to this matter is entirely unreasonable. I would like to elaborate, for your benefit and for the benefit of Government Members present, on our three reasons for opposing the Bill. First of all, we think the Bill is absolutely unfair because it means changing the rules of the game while the players are still on the ice, to draw a parallel with the sports world. It is exactly that.

Second, there are large regions that have not been able to take advantage of the oil substitution and insulation programs. I am thinking, for instance, of the area around Quebec City and the towns of Charlesbourg and Beauport. I will get back to this later on.

Finally, my third reason for rising in the House today is the fact that this Government, for the second time in its short existence, a Government with a majority of 211 Members against 80, even less than 80 on the Opposition side, is using closure, is gagging debate.

[English]

Since the November announcement of the demise of COSP, many consumers have been scrambling to take advantage of it before the March 31, 1985 deadline. Using the example of Consumers Gas of Ontario, I will try to illustrate the fact that gas companies are faced with enormous problems because of increased demand and the short time between the time when they received notice and the deadline. For fiscal year October 1, 1983 to February 28, 1984, Consumers Gas received close to 5,000 applications for conversions to natural gas. In the period from October 1, 1984 to February 26, 1985, it received close to 18,000 applications, of which 9,000 were made in January and February. Faced with this amount of demand, the industry cannot possibly install these systems by the March 31 deadline. This means that on April Fool's Day, a tremendous number of consumers will be left holding the bag.

There are many reasons the industry is having problems serving home owners. One reason is weather. It is extremely difficult to install gas pipelines when trying to dig through snow-covered ground. The problem in northern Ontario is even worse. Northern and Central Gas Corporation Ltd. stopped taking applications in December because it could not break through the frost-covered ground. The Canadian Gas Association approached the Government asking for an extension, as has Consumers Gas and other interested parties, and was turned down. Many solutions were proposed. It volunteered to cut off program applications at the end of January, as long as the Government gave companies and the home owners time to install all systems, but that was also turned down.

The bottom line is that the Government wants to cut off the money, no matter how many people want to convert to gas. The industry does not really mind, and perhaps some people in Canada would accept the cut-off of this program, but they would like it to be done in a more normal way. A phase-out is absolutely essential.

Mr. Speaker, there are certainly problems in Northern Ontario and elsewhere in Canada, but nowhere are they felt as acutely as in the province of Quebec. And I refer to the situation which exists in Quebec City and within the Greater Quebec City area, since not a single hon. member from the Progressive Conservative Party seems to be concerned about it.

Last November, this government announced two decisions which have greatly affected in a negative way the Greater Quebec City area. First it announced that it had cancelled all plans for the then forthcoming construction of branch lines to the natural gas pipe-line, affecting negatively the cities of Charlesbourg and Beauport, and also the Lauzon area and especially the Lauzon Point which could eventually be used for the development of an industrial complex. But to return to this program, not only were the Beauport and Charlesbourg area deprived of investments which would have enabled the industrial park and the residents of these densely populated cities to have access to natural gas, but also the plans for the industrial development which the construction of these branch lines would have made possible were aborted.

I have met personally the spokesmen for the Metro-Quebec Chamber of Commerce and this is one of the problems that were brought to our attention, that have been under consideration and the disposition of which was overdue. I am referring for instance to the establishment of a separate board of directors for the airport and to the upgrading of the Quebec-Montreal railway lines.

But coming back to the matter now under consideration, these areas of Charlesbourg and Beauport and eventually Lauzon are being denied the opportunity to benefit from the program. This legislation is suddenly cutting out homeowners not only in the areas already served, but also in areas which could not make use of the program because natural gas had not been available, and they are denied a program that has been used by a number of Canadians. In my view, that decision is seriously affecting citizens in the Metro-Quebec area, not to mention of course, as I said earlier, that the guillotine will fall on March 31. This means that many people, many families will not have an opportunity to avail themselves of the positive benefits of the program, the value of which has been recognized by all Hon. Members in this House.

The third reason why I am taking part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, is the guillotine being imposed upon this House. It is beyond me that this Government, which has been boasting ever since September 4 that it wanted to consult and listen to everybody before taking decisions, is refusing to do it here in this House. And when the Opposition becomes insistant, there is a short period of patience and immediately the guillotine falls. Even though I was sitting in this House before, I often listened to the debates and watched them on television. An I remember how the Government Members of today used to behave when the previous Government used that procedure or talked of using it to end debate, at a time when the House of Commons was more evenly balanced between Government and Opposition parties. Today, using guillotine when there is a mere handful of Opposition members, when that same Government talks about wanting to consult, when it says it is ready to spend huge sums of money on economic summits—Hurray for economic summits! So much the better if they want to listen to people from across the border! But why will they not listen to Members in this House who are trying to have the Minister understand why it makes no sense to suddenly, without notice, without a warning period, terminate such a program, and on top of that to use the guillotine to deny the benefits of a program whose value for the people and for better use of energy in Canada has been recognized by everyone?

Mr. Speaker, I wish and I hope that after hearing the same arguments, even repeatedly, at some point somebody on the Government side will see the light and accept to bring in amendments to the legislation now before us.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OIL SUBSTITUTION AND CONSERVATION ACT CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-234, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Work; and the motion of Mr. Hockin (p. 3227).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear why I am rising to speak in this debate. I am rising to speak, recognizing that I had an opportunity and in fact took part in the debate yesterday. Under normal circumstances, I probably would have considered that participation to be sufficient. I confess, unashamedly, that we are attempting to stall the Bill. I say quite bluntly and openly that we are attempting to stall the Bill because we consider what we are asking for to be reasonable and in keeping with what the public of Canada would desire to see happen at this point.

We are not asking for an unlimited extension. We are not asking that the law be extended ad infinitum. We are suggesting that because of the timing of the Government's move to limit access to this program, it has made it impossible for a significantly large number of Canadians, who otherwise would have taken advantage of the opportunity to be assisted in the financing of what most believe is worth-while work, both from the point of view of employment and from the point of view of energy savings, to access this program.

Miss Carney: We would have to borrow the money.

Mr. Deans: The Minister says to me quietly across the floor that the Government would have to borrow the money. I can well appreciate that that would be a view that the Cabinet would put forward. This shows that, as a priority matter, this falls considerably far down the list of priorities of the Government. This is a statement that I find, although understandably coming from the Conservative administration, unacceptable from the point of view of what will be best in the over-all for the country as a whole.

Let me suggest to the Minister that many of those people who will not now be able to access this program have had their tax dollars used to allow others to take advantage of it. Because of the way this has been terminated and the time of the year—and I am trying truthfully to look at it—the termination date makes it virtually impossible for a large number of Canadians to be able to take advantage of what was intended to be available to all.

I suggest to the Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that one need not be a genius—I do not pretend to be and, I am sure, neither does the Minister—to see that it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for work to be done in some areas of the country over the winter. During the months from November through until the end of March, which was the period for winding down or winding up, depending on your choice, the program that we are now debating, it was absolutely impossible, with all of the best intentions in the world, for many people to get into the program and take advantage of it. There is clear evidence to show that there are a large number of people who would still like to use it.

I have to say that at first I was somewhat puzzled by the Government's attitude. This is a Government that, as I said the other day, has elevated simony to an art form. It has redefined it in the political context. Again today we were able to see further examples of how this Government can find jobs for its friends, regardless of where those friends are, all of those jobs to be paid for out of the public purse, and yet the Government cannot seem to find the will to reapportion some resources to allow citizens of Canada access to a program that not only benefits them personally, but benefits many who are unemployed in the country. It will benefit the country in the longer run in terms of our judicious use of our energy resources.

What we are saying, quite bluntly, is that from our point of view, it would be better if the Government were to be less generous in a partisan hack way with the resources of the country and somewhat more understanding of the benefits that could be derived from the continuation of this program for a short period of time. As I said yesterday, that period of time could be until the middle of the fall. That would allow for proper planning. It would allow people to make arrangements for whatever additional funding they require. It would enable the companies involved to plan for employment during a period when there will be a number of people unemployed due to the termination of the program. It would give time for the Government's new economic program which it is going to unveil some time between now and June to take effect. It would afford many an opportunity to access the new employment program that the Government continues to tell us it is prepared to make available.

In the over-all, the request that we make is a reasonable and fair request. We are not asking that the program be extended forever. We are asking that the program be extended into the summer months in order to allow those who would want to take advantage of it to be able to complete what they believe they would be able to complete if it were not for the weather.

Let us not base our judgment solely on what can be done in southern Ontario. I come from southern Ontario, but southern Ontario is not all of Canada. There are many parts of Canada where the work we are talking about could not have been undertaken between the months of November and April.

I do not think it is unreasonable to suggest something like that. Those people have been asked to contribute out of their tax dollars to provide the benefits and the savings to others in the country. We should ensure that they too are given a chance to take advantage of that program, given the chance to do so with an understanding that the program will in fact come to an end, but it will come to an end at such a time as to guarantee that they could, if they wished, access the program for their own benefit and for the benefit of others who might work in the program.

It is no wonder, as I look across the floor of the House, that I feel a sort of sense of twitchiness on the government backbenches and the evidence of jactitation on the government benches. Quite clearly, the government Members recognize the merit of the position that we are putting forward. I can see evidence among the few that are here that they would like to see the Government undertake to provide the extension that we are asking for.

Mr. McKnight: They have been around long enough.

Mr. Deans: The Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) sits smiling as he does in that beguilding way and says that they have been around long enough. That might well be the view of a number of people in the country four years from now.

• (1620)

The one thing the Government has demonstrated in the last six months is its ability to be unfair. It has been unfair in the way in which it made cuts in its November economic statement, cuts which detrimentally affected so many people and were made without consultation. It has been unfair in the way in which it went about setting up an economic conference after it made decisions about what would be contained in the Budget. It has been unfair about its presentation of the unfortunate incidents that occurred in Ottawa just one week ago. Some day the Government must recognize that, in a representative system, it is imperative that the Government show complete fairness.

Fairness is not simply exemplified by appointing friends to high offices at high costs. Fairness is exemplified by treating Canadians in such a way that they feel they are being considered. They are not being considered by the termination of this program. I would simply suggest that we give it another six months or even five months. We should give it a little more time in order to give people a chance to do what they would otherwise do to help the economic stability for which we are all looking.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise as other members who have preceded me, to speak on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act.

However, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of what we have heard so far, from both sides of the House, it would seem that the two programs I mentioned earlier and which are dealt with in Bill C-24, are viewed as satisfactory by almost everyone. And rightly so, Mr. Speaker! The reason for this is quite simple. If we look at a map, we can see that Canada is a country located in the Northern part of America. Our country is quite cold, and as people often say, there are two seasons in Canada, the month of July and winter. Naturally, to make our houses and work places comfortable, it is essential to have adequate heating.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that Canada has suffered a lot, especially since the energy world crisis of the 70's which caused great economic upheaval in industrialized countries because of the rapid increase in the price of oil, but the worst is now over.

Our problems have many causes. First of all, in the past, Canadian houses were built with two by fours or two by sixes with sawdust between the walls as insulation. This did not make the houses very warm. There was much more humidity and cold than anything else. In addition, it was very costly. However, since oil then cost between 11 and 15 cents a gallon, people still had no reason to complain or to find the cost excessive. But after the crisis of the 70's, we had to review our position. We had to develop programs so that Canadians would have comfortable well-heated houses because, as I said earlier, we have two seasons, winter and the month of July. Programs were therefore developed to conserve as much energy as possible so that Canadians would be warm and able to work and live comfortably and decently in spite of our northern climate.

I heard the Minister say in a recent speech that energy conservation was like a new energy source. She was right. I agree wholeheartedly with her because this is an inexhaustible source of energy. Thanks to the programs which have been implemented over the last few years, it is estimated that we have been able to save 82,000 barrels of oil a day. It is also estimated that about 2.5 million housing units have been insulated through CHIPS. Of course, this program must disappear eventually, but in my opinion, the Government acted somewhat irresponsibly when it announced last November 8 that all work would have to be completed by March 31. I do not want to repeat once more that it is rather difficult to change or convert a heating system—

[English]

Mr. McDermid: CHIP goes another year.

Mr. Isabelle: Yes, but the other one does not.

Mr. McDermid: You are talking about CHIP.

Mr. Isabelle: No, I was referring to CHIP, but then I changed to the other one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Isabelle: What I mean to say is that this energy conservation is a renewable resource. I think that she was right, and if there was as much as 17 per cent in energy conservation, it will result in major dollar savings for Canadians.

Of course, we will have eventually to put an end to these subsidies, but we should consider extending this program for six more months, and even six months would not be enough. We might implement a new program, although some say it may cost as much as $35 million . . . If we extended it until June, so that those who are first time home purchasers, not new houses because most new houses now have the necessary equipment to prevent heat losses, but an older house . . . those who are getting married for the first time, who are first time purchasers of older houses not fitted with proper insulation and the necessary equipment for proper heating, I feel that we should make it possible for them to benefit from this program. Eventually, when all the tests have been completed for projects such as the R-2,000 model house built by Mortgage and Housing Canada, I think then perhaps these programs could be reduced.

As long as there are home owners who have not availed themselves of these programs, Mr. Speaker, we should maintain them, for they play a major role in conserving energy. I know there are other means but it is one of those which will help achieve energy self-sufficiency for Canada. Because Canadians live in a part of the North American continent where winters can be very cold and with a nearly Arctic climate, the Government should make cuts where they are not likely to jeopardize the health and comfort of Canadians.

Cuts have to be made, Mr. Speaker, but not necessarily where savings . . . at least not in the building industry, for the jobs of many electricians and heating technicians are at stake. Because such an action would create much unemployment, I do not think this is the way the government should go about it. I know that because we have this new government, people have changed. We should do things differently. I think it would be responsible also to make cuts where they are likely to improve the government's lot.

I am surprised that, practically overnight, the Government announced the abolition of those programs which all Canadians found very useful. More signficant still, they went a long way towards making Canada self-sufficient by giving us means to conserve energy and find new sources, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) so aptly put it.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. I wish the program could be extended much later than March 31, much later than in the fall, really. However, if it has to be done this way, let us find ways to exempt or retain the program for those who need it most, low-income families that cannot at this time take advantage of benefits offered to other Canadians. All Canadians should be able to enjoy the same comfort and benefit from the energy conservation measures which our country adopted a few years ago.

● (1630)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-24, which is an effort by the Government to save money. I would like to spend some time talking about the choices which have been made and the direction in which this Government seems to be going.

In an effort to save tax dollars, the Government has chosen to cut COSP, which was to have existed for ten years, until 1990. The program was designed to encourage Canadians to save on their expenditures for energy. That cost-saving measure is now being abandoned. The program also had larger energy conservation connotations, which I believe are extremely important.

In particular, COSP was designed to shift Canadian home owners from oil to other modes of energy, and in particular natural gas. It has been determined by the National Energy Board that there is a surplus of natural gas, but there is not a surplus of oil, particularly the kind of oil which is used in making diesel and fuel oil. The lighter kinds of crude are expected to produce only about 28 per cent of the current levels by the year 2005. In only 20 years we will be producing just over one-quarter of the amount of oil which we produce now. It is extremely important for us to eliminate that dependency, not only for cost reasons, but because oil is a finite resource. We must ensure that it will be there for our grandchildren's and children's use.

Three or four years ago this program was agreed to by all Parties. It was unanimously agreed that the program was a good means by which to encourage people to switch from oil to natural gas, wood or another means of heat. The program has run quite well. At its half-way point it has converted half of the targeted homes from their reliance on oil. The program has met its targets and has not been terribly expensive, considering the savings which have been realized.

The program is now saving approximately 42,000 barrels of oil per day, or 15.3 million barrels of oil per year as a result of COSP. Since we consume approximately 1.45 million barrels of oil per day for all energy uses—homes, industry and transportation—it means a net energy saving of about 2.8 per cent. That saving is directly attributable to this program. In fact, the oil which is saved through COSP is enough to heat about 650,000 Canadian homes per year. On average, the homes which have converted have saved about 13.8 barrels of oil per year, which amounts to a saving of $634.80 annually. Therefore, a home owner who converts to oil can expect a return on his investment within three years. However, there are certain circumstances in which that will take longer and it will become more expensive.

Canadians in large numbers were switching from oil to other forms of energy. However, suddenly the new Government made a rapid decision to discontinue the program. What has that done to the spirit of optimism and the expectation of better things to come for small business people in the business of installing gas lines, furnaces and other forms of heat-producing devices? It has left them in a real quandry. They have been scrambling around since November 8—and they only have until the end of the month—to meet the enormous number of calls for business.

Some of those businesses may have been enticed into hiring more people, but as the program will end on March 31, most of the installers know that hiring more people to meet the rush in an attempt to meet the deadline will not be sustained because it will require them to buy extra service vehicles and tools. Therefore, most of those businesses have not panicked and expanded.

Not only has the termination of this program been disruptive to small business, it has been unfair to home owners. Some home owners prepare their budgets over several years, and many decided to convert toward the end of the program—in the late 1980s—because their furnaces were still working well or they did not immediately have the money to make the switch. Therefore, they decided to delay taking advantage of the program. Those home owners will now have to pay an extra $800 to convert.

In addition, there is a tremendous number of individuals in smaller communities who have not, to this point in time, had gas available to them. They know that the lines have been proposed and are projected, and that in a year or two gas will be in their communities or it will run past their house. But for the moment they do not have the option of switching to gas because they are no gas lines. Those people who were awaiting the gas line to be installed in their communities are now faced with the prospect of not only having to wait longer than most Canadians to switch to the cheaper form of heat, but they are now ineligible for the subsidy of $800 and will have to pay the full cost. That is unfair, Mr. Speaker, particularly when that is a program which was doing so much to shift people away from a depleting resource, namely, light oil. In spite of spending billions an billions of dollars, we have not been able to find replacements for it. Many billions of dollars have been spent in government funds to subsidize and assist with write-off and tax deferrals. We have assisted sometimes to the point of paying in excess of 90 per cent of all the drilling costs for the search for oil in the Arctic. We have not been terribly successful. We have not come up with answers to the hard fact that we will only be producing 28 per cent of our current output of those kinds of oils in a mere 20 years.

Our only prudent choice would be to find ways of using the limited energy we have—which is becoming more limited as time goes on—in a better way. We should be doing more in the way of insulating our homes. The CHIP program, which will be in effect for a few more months, has assisted in that way.

I will conclude by saying that I believe it is very unfortunate that the Government has chosen to attempt to save a few dollars in the short term by totally closing its eyes to the problems which face us in the production and pricing of energy. This is a very sloppy way of going about producing economy.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I spoke on a motion earlier with respect to this matter and I had hoped at the end that Hon. Members would agree to extend my time so that I could continue to make a few additional remarks. I am happy now to have the opportunity in effect to conclude the thoughts I wanted to put to Hon. Members in an attempt to get the Government to reconsider its decision to cancel these two very important programs.

I would like to agree with the Hon. Member who spoke earlier. He made the point that we are, frankly, wanting to ensure that this Bill takes enough time to get through the House so that the Canadian people can find out what it is that this Government is trying to do to them. What is interesting is that this is a Government which appears to be dedicated to cutting the deficit, and I would like to come back to that theme in a moment. It is a Government as well which is very responsive to angry voters. Two of the "hits" which it has tried to make on existing programs have resulted in very effective reactions which I hope will lead the Government to reconsider. The first is its plan to cut back medical research by something like 20 per cent a year. The medical research community responded by effectively and intelligently demonstrating to the Government and to the Canadian people that the changes which the Government had in mind would lead to researchers moving to the United States because of the effective reduction and eventual elimination of cancer research in our country. This is especially so because the Conservative Government of Ontario is also withdrawing its support for medical research, and the Conservative Government of Alberta, which had been a big sponsor of cancer research, announced that it was going to cut its support for cancer research.

Important scientific breakthroughs have been made in cancer research in our country. There is no doubt that the work which was going on was valid and should be continued. Apart from the research aspect, as these skilled researchers begin to leave our country, we are going to find—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Acting Whip (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I am beginning to wonder about the relevance of the Hon. Member's remarks.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want to try to illustrate the budget-cutting philosophy of this Government in order to make an argument that this measure should not be discontinued. The reason I was referring to medical research was that there we have an example of a cut where the group affected can effectively stand up and defend themselves and, more important, can bring to the attention of all Canadians the importance of that measure. I would like to give a second example of a government cut and make a point from there. Then I want to come back to this cut and show how all three are related.

The second cut which this Government tried to make—although I believe it is going to reconsider—is in its support for the arts. As soon as it announced that cut, the arts community mobilized and were ready to stand up not only on behalf of themselves as people who would no longer be receiving support for the work which was their livelihood and which was an important cornerstone of our country, but on behalf of all Canadians who would benefit from having government support for culture. People in the field of the arts used to say 15 years ago that if one wanted to get anywhere in the arts, one had to go to the United States. Over the last 15 years, the arts have not become the best paid profession in Canada—far from it. I believe it is the second lowest paid profession in Canada—but there was a general recognition by artists—and I mean all kinds of artists—that one could make it in Canada. This Government killed that hope when it announced its substantial cuts in the field of the arts and when an insensitive Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced yesterday, "You ain't seen nothing yet. There's going to be more cuts".

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I insist, and I am still waiting to hear the relevance of the Hon. Member's remarks. I appreciate that he is trying to make a point, but he is wandering far and wide.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has explained the relevance of his remarks and the fact that he will be coming to the point. May I suggest to him that he come to the point more rapidly.

Mr. Kaplan: I certainly will.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. That is the point of order I want to raise. I hope the time allotted to the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) will not be shortened by the amount of time used up by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: I hope this does not come out of my time.

Cuts to the arts and medical research by this Government affected specific groups which were able to stand up on their own behalf and on behalf of all Canadians and let it be known that medical research will deteriorate, support for the arts will deteriorate and artists will have to look to the United States and to other countries if they want to have a successful career, all because of what this Government has done.

Unfortunately, in the case of these two programs, COSP and CHIP, there is no particular group in our society which is in the first line of fire in the round of ammunition being shot by this Government. The group which is affected here are consumers. The applications of half the people who are eligible for the benefits of these programs are still in the works. Their applications are under consideration. The other half are not getting the word that they are about to lose a very important program of significant national interest.

That is why we must extend this debate as long as we can. We have to try to mobilize the same kind of attention to the damage which this Government is doing in its deficit-cutting rhetoric which was attracted to the other two cuts which I used in my example.

What about cutting the deficit? I want to make a prediction that when the Budget is brought forward, we are going to find that this Government is not so committed to deficit-cutting after all. Its philosophy is to take the patient, cut off both of his arms, then when it gives him one arm back, he is going to say thank you.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In your case, the people were dying.

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member ways that in our case the patient was dying. The economic statistics which came out about the year 1984, after we were out of office, showed that the Budget governing 1984 was not such a bad one. There were increases in jobs and economic growth.

● (1650)

So the Government is going to give back to medical research one of its arms, and maybe it will give the arts back one of its arms, but what I am afraid of is that if the Government can get away with slipping this Bill through before the Budget comes down, it will not go back to the Canadian people and invite them to insulate their homes and go off oil. By then the Bill will be through and the damage will be done.

I think the Opposition has the very important role of keeping these programs alive as long as we can until the Government abandons its deficit-cutting rhetoric. The signs are already there that the Conservatives do not believe in cutting the deficit. For example, in the first round they cut over $200 million of programs for student summer employment. And what do you know, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced with great joy that students were getting one of their arms back for this summer and the Government was re-instating nearly all of the programs planned by the former Liberal Government, which had been cut by this Government. The Conservatives will have the same good news for the doctors and researchers; they will not have to go to the United States because they are going to be getting one of their arms back.

Perhaps I am beginning to have some effect on the Government. I am starting to make them realize that there is an important job to be done here by the Opposition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order!

Mr. Kaplan: —in making sure—let me give an example, and I would like to hear their reaction, about so-called deficit cutting. I would like to hear Members opposite deny that the Prime Minister increased his office budget by over 50 per cent. I would like to hear them deny that Ministers have increased their office staff budgets by over 50 per cent, by almost 100 per cent, as a matter of fact. They are quiet now and the reason they are quiet is because I came up with an example that even they cannot deny is a straw in the wind of so-called deficit cutting. I think they are pussy cats when it comes to the tough job of cutting the deficit.

Mr. McKnight: What about the Minister of Transport in the Liberal Government?

Mr. Kaplan: We must make sure that we in this House, in this debate, can make the Canadian people aware that these programs will be spared if they can only be kept on the road until the Budget. This is why we introduced a six-month hoist motion, why we should introduce a three-month hoist motion, and why, as my final point because I see you are getting a bit restless, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, just tired.

Mr. Kaplan: My final point regards their unbelievable gesture yesterday in depriving the Opposition of the opportunity of bringing forward any further amendments which might have the effect of hoisting this Bill for another three, six or 12 months, or until the Government brings forward its Budget so that Canadians will have an opportunity to argue and fight, as they did for medical research, as the students did for their summer programs, and as the arts communities did for theirs, to get this Government to recognize the importance of energy conservation and off-oil programs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

Mr. Kaplan: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I forgot to seek at least unanimous consent—

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Kaplan: —to continue my remarks.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Save your breath.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not know why the House would not allow the Hon. Member to continue his speech; he was just getting warmed up.

Mr. Kilgour: Where were you?

Mr. MacLellan: He was doing extremely well. It seems to be the order of the day for the Government to be cutting off not only Bills but speakers.

Mr. Rossi: They do not want to hear the truth.

Mr. MacLellan: The Parliamentary Secretary, in one of his cameo appearances in the House, said there had been 80 speeches so far on this Bill. I think we can be very proud that there are that many people of Parliament on the opposition side who are concerned—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You don't have 80 guys there, Russ.

Mr. MacLellan: —who were concerned enough about doing away with this valuable program to stand in the House and speak against doing away with COSP at the end of this month.

Mr. McKnight: It is nothing you said, I just have to leave.

Mr. MacLellan: The Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) just cannot stand to hear about the problems of ordinary Canadians and is leaving at the present time. I think that is unfortunate. There are too many Ministers in that Government who are squeamish about hearing about unemployment and the needs of Canadians. I think that is going to be a very serious problem for the Government in years to come.

It is very unfortunate that COSP is not being extended for six months. There are so many Canadians who want to use this program. They did not apply before November 8 because they had every reason to believe this program was going to continue, as was the intention in the legislation. But on November 8 the Government terminated the program as of March 31 this year. With the number of people who have applied after November 8, it will not be possible for them to be off oil by the end of March. That is very unfortunate.

Both I and others have talked about the fact that this is just not the best time of year to be converting to electricity or gas because of the weather and because the manufacturers are producing not furnaces but air conditioners for the summer. But there is another very real point which the Government has missed. You are dealing with those Canadians who are unemployed or on fixed incomes—

Mr. McKnight: The Minister of Labour is leaving again.

Mr. MacLellan: —who do not have the money to cover the amount required in excess of $800 to convert off oil, and the winter is the most difficult time to try to find money to do this. I am pleased to see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) here for the finale this afternoon. I just hope that she will reconsider. I say that in a non-partisan way because I think it is very important. No one is saying that this program has to go on forever. Oh, she is leaving again.

Mr. Dingwall: She doesn't care.

Mr. MacLellan: No program has to go on forever. But you have to be able to look at the needs of Canadians and anticipate how much good this program will do.

From October 1, 1983, to the end of February 1984, there were only between 4,000 and 5,000 people who had applied for conversion from oil to natural gas. In the period between October 1, 1984 to the end of February, 1985 there were almost 18,000 people on that list. So there is still a need there. Conservation and conversion of oil is the best value for the energy dollar. The Government is forgetting that very important fact. Canadians anticipated they would be allowed to convert off oil, but they are not.

• (1700)

It is not accurate to say, as some Members on the government side have said, that people have had plenty of time to convert. They have not had plenty of time to convert.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent to proceed to Item No. 87?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CESSATION OF MONETARY TRANSACTIONS WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should disallow further Canadian investment in South Africa, outlaw the importation of South African Krugerrand gold coins into Canada and outlaw Canadian bank loans to South Africa.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that the motion is before the House this afternoon because today the Mayor of Ottawa, Marian Dewar, has declared Thursday, March 21, 1985, International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

It is also important to realize that the General Assembly of the United Nations, in 1979, designated the week beginning March 21 as the week of solidarity with people struggling racism and racial discrimination. That was resolution 3424 of November 15, 1979.

It is important to realize that the Minister responsible for multiculturalism got up in his place in the House today and made a statement proclaiming today International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

It is also significant to note that today is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre where white police in South Africa opened fire on a crowd of black people who were peacefully demonstrating against the pass law of South Africa. Sixty-nine people were killed, including eight women and ten children. There were 186 wounded, including 31 women and 19 children.

It is also significant to note that the CBC news announced just this morning from South Africa that 14 people were killed today by South African white police because those people were demonstrating to commemorate the Sharpeville massacre.

Therefore, it is appropriate that we keep that in mind as a background when discussing this particular motion. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) and all Canadians can say many nice things. However, not only do our fellow citizens judge this Parliament and the Government by its actions, the international community also judges Canada by the kind of tough, principled positions that we are prepared to take.

Just last week, for the first time, the United Nations Security Council unanimously passed a resolution condemning South Africa for the deaths of scores of black demonstrators and the arrest of black opposition leaders on treason charges. It was the first time during the Reagan administration that the United States has voted in favour of a resolution in the Security Council condemning the white South African minority Government for its domestic policies. All 15 Security Council members voted in favour of the resolution that strongly condemned the killing of defenceless protesters and the arrest of 16 leaders of the United Democratic Front and other organizations opposed to South Africa's policy of apartheid, which is basically racial discrimination at its worst.

The Security Council also called on South Africa to withdraw the charges of high treason against the leaders of the Front. The very word "apartheid" conveys its meaning—apart. In fact, it is a word that means strict racial segregation. It was imposed in 1958 by the white minority in South Africa.

In 1960 the Bantustans or homelands, as they are now called, were set up. The black people would be relegated to reserves, or homelands and would be allowed to work in the white urban community and be given pass cards. When they were not working they would then return to their homelands. It was in opposition to that in 1960 when we saw the demonstration that resulted in the Sharpeville massacre.

Today there are some 10 of these Bantustans or homelands. They were set up by South Africa, and no other country in the world recognizes them as independent states except South Africa. Five of them are recognized by South Africa as independent. In fact, the black man then, as now, is held as an indentured slave in his own land, to work in domestic corporations for white South African ownership or indentured to work for foreign-owned corporations. Some of those foreign-owned corporations are Canadian, which I will speak about later on. Indeed, the South African black works in the mines that produce the gold which makes the krugerrands which the following banks sell here in Canada: the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Commerce and the Toronto Dominion Bank. They sell this kruggerrand valued at $507 Canadian or $337 U.S.

That we should be a market for coins which are made at the expense of the freedom and dignity of people should not be allowed. We do have a replacement coin which we should be promoting. We have the Maple Leaf gold coin which can be used as a substitute for those who want to invest as entrepreneurs in gold coins. Therefore, we really do not need to allow the sale of krugerrands in this country.

It seems to me that by forbidding the sale of krugerrands in Canada we would send a clear message that we are not prepared to be a silent participator in the oppression of black people in South Africa. In fact, the South African Government has enshrined apartheid in its constitution. It clearly says in its constitution that a black man and a white man are not equal. It says a white man is superior to a black man. Of course, the South African Government uses all sorts of biblical quotations to back up that position. It went on from there to establish all sorts of laws that affect relationships between the races in South Africa and it was used to deny the black man the right to vote.

In our society it seems that we have come a long way. There was a time when we did not allow women to vote. We have gone beyond that, and we in this country recognize that in a democratic free society it has to be one man, one vote.

South Africa refuses to recognize that men are all created equal in the eyes of God. It seems to me just on the one question of allowing the krugerrands to be imported that we are winking, closing and turning a blind eye to our brothers and sisters in South Africa who have been enslaved.

The question of the South African Parliament is rather interesting. To try and give an impression of change, the white South African Government created three changes. It has a white chamber, a chamber for coloureds, and a chamber for Indians or Asians. Again, the black man is denied the right to vote and the right to participate in his own country. When we consider the blacks in South Africa comprise approximately 16 million of the population and the whites 4.5 million, the coloureds 3 million, and the Asians about 1 million, what we have in South Africa is really the oppression of the minority. Every single penny which we repatriate to South Africa as a result of selling krugerrands continues, allows, the white South African Government to entrench itself and to buy the latest and most powerful forms of weaponry, not only to enslave its own black population but to act as a policeman in the southern part of the African continent, to create a climate of disturbance among its black neighbours in southern Africa.

The other area I wanted to turn to was the area of trade. It is significant to note that Canada's second most important trading partner in Africa is South Africa, Algeria is first, South Africa is second. In 1984 Canada imported $201 million worth of goods from South Africa. We exported to South Africa $201 million. They call that balanced trade.

What did we export to South Africa? We exported sulphur, wood pulp, railway rolling stock, machines and motor vehicles. What did we import from South Africa? Iron, steel, sugar, metal ores, concentrates, scrap and manufactured goods. There is nothing among those items that we do not produce in Canada. We do not need to import iron and steel from South Africa. We have iron mines closing in Canada because we do not have steel mill capacity to accept it. We are closing iron ore mines in northwestern Ontario and in Newfoundland, while at the same time we import iron ore from South Africa. Even on a question of domestic economic activity, we are shooting ourselves in the foot.

There are 28 Canadian companies in South Africa. Canada decided that we should have some code of behaviour for Canadian companies operating in South Africa, but it was never legislated. It is just a recommendation that these companies must file on an annual basis a code of conduct. That has been in effect since 1978. Only one of the 28 companies has lived up to filing a code of behaviour, filing an accountability for behaviour. That company is Alcan. Only one, Mr. Speaker, out of 28.

It seems to me that there are very few, comparatively speaking, black South Africans who work in Canadian companies operating in South Africa. In fact, to sever trade with South Africa would not in any way create any economic hardship. Indeed, in my conversations with the African National Congress it was indicated to me that this was the route it would like Canada to go. The African National Congress would approve of Canada severing trade relationship with South Africa. As long as we continue to trade with the racist white South African Government, we are participating in the oppression of the black man in South Africa. We fought a war over that to prove that all men are equal in the eyes of God. We fought over that, yet here we are slipping along with the flow.

Our predecessors in this House have given us a start. They have given us an example. It was two former Prime Ministers who took positions which at that time were quite tough. I have the Hansard reference here for April 27, 1960, in this House when the Hon. Lester B. Pearson, at the time Leader of the Opposition, moved an emergency resolution. This was prior to the Prime Minister, the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, going to the Commonwealth Conference that year. Mr. Pearson moved a resolution to let the Prime Minister know how Members of Parliament felt about South Africa and its participation in the British Commonwealth. In the debate, the Hon. Mr. Chevrier said, talking about apartheid policy:

> It is a policy that must cease if normal relations are to be restored in that country of the British commonwealth of nations. Peace, order, and security cannot exist without due respect for the individual.

Peace, order, and security cannot exist, I repeat, without any respect for the individual.

I think it is well that we cast back to what former Leaders and Members in this House said. Mr. Diefenbaker replied:

● (1720)

> Mr. Speaker, that is the purpose of this discussion today, to reinforce me as the representative of this nation, having held these views throughout the years, with the conscience, thought and deliberation of the Canadian House of Commons in order to air the views which have been expressed on matters which are of particular moment at this time.

As a matter of fact, it was at that Commonwealth Conference that South Africa was put out of the Commonwealth.

I think we have to carry the torch, the torch which was handed us by former Leaders in this House. The path on which Mr. Pearson and Mr. Diefenbaker put us back in 1960 must be continued. The three particular actions which I am recommending are very important because they will send a message to the rest of the international community, the community of nations, that in fact Canada is prepared to stand up and be counted.

Thank God we have a living example of the kind of courage which cries out to us. It is the courage of Nelson Mandela, the founder of the African National Congress. In 1960, he was arrested and sentenced to life imprisonment on Robin Island for treason. He is still there, 25 years later. The white racist Government of South Africa recently offered him an amnesty provided he revoked his advocacy of violent revolution in South Africa. He refused to do so. His courage in the face of being confined for 25 years, perhaps seeing his wife and family from time to time, cries out to us, white brothers, that we cannot let him down. In fact, we have to bring this thing to a head. We cannot have a minority oppressing a large majority. We cannot have a nation founded on a principle that the white man is superior to the black man. We cannot want for ourselves what we do not want for others.

The heritage of freedom which we enjoy as Canadians, we should want for all peoples of the world. We should be prepared to put our action where our mouth is. I call upon the House to let this motion come to a vote. Let the Government know. It can program in—and it does not have to be done tomorrow—all three specific actions which I have recommended in my motion. I hope it will begin the dawn of a new day, with Canada leading the way.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to begin by thanking the Hon. Member. I listened very attentively to his comments, and I commend him on them. Throughout my experience—and it is a rather recent one—he has always been concerned about the rights of ethnics, not only abroad but at home. He has made valuable contributions to the House.

When he speaks about the 25 years since Pearson and Diefenbaker, the 25 years Mr. Mandela has been in prison, it has has also been 25 years when another Government has been in place, another Government which had many opportunities to look at these things. Since September we have continued the policy but promised a review.

Recently I had the pleasure of meeting a delegation of the Quebec task force on immigrant women. It is a group with which I have considerable contact and its social justice committee in Montreal. We discussed many of the same concerns. The response to many of these issues which the group indicated in its bulletin appears positive. Of course the task force will be continuing to help me in my work as a part of the Government.

One issue which I brought to a head on February 5 appears under the heading "South Africa" and reads as follows: "Mr. Weiner indicated that South Africa was an area that would be re-examined by the Government". With a green paper about to be deposited and a task force constituted for a review of our foreign policy, we are very hopeful that they will be examining our relationship with South Africa and certainly its over-all effect on the despicable apartheid situation.

It is coincidental, but symbolic, that today's debate is taking place on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre in which 69 people died at the hands of the South African police. March 21 has been fittingly designated by the United Nations as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Canadian representatives at United Nations headquarters in New York and Vienna are attending commemoration ceremonies while other Canadians have demonstrated outside the South African Embassy in Ottawa to show their opposition to apartheid. I understand that there has been a tragic incident even today in South Africa in which a number of people have died. Before debating the motion at hand, it would be appropriate for the House to remember those who, over the years, have suffered and in some cases given their lives in the struggle for justice in their own country.

Sharpeville represented a turning point in South Africa's history. Following the unrest, the African National Congress was banned and subsequently turned to violent methods. Some observers believe that South Africa's Government is again facing choices which will have profound consequences for their country's history. It is the responsibility of the Canadian Government to encourage those men, whom Canada's Ambassador to the UN has called a "beleaguered oligarchy", to listen to the voices of moderated among their own population. Further delay in implementing basic reforms will only reduce the chances of peaceful change.

The Canadian Government also faces difficult choices. The concern of the Canadian Government is first and foremost the fate of those we are trying to help, the victims of the apartheid system. It is in light of this criterion, which I am sure Hon. Members on the other side shares, that we must examine seriously the measures proposed by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Among other elements, this motion calls on the Government of Canada to disallow further Canadian investment in South Africa. Such a proposal reflects the view that investment by multinational enterprises based in Western countries is necessarily supportive of apartheid and does not hasten its dissolution. This hypothesis is open to question and certainly requires careful study. Many opponents of apartheid hold the contrary view. It is important for us to weigh the consequences of our actions. Let us examine the facts.

Multinational corporations have played an important role in South Africa's economic development. According to UN sources, at the end of 1981 there were over $15 billion U.S. of foreign direct investment in South Africa, much of it concentrated in manufacturing and mining and more advanced sectors such as computers and chemicals. In 1982, the U.K. and the U.S.A. were the two largest investors in South Africa with about $2.5 billion. Germany was third with some 799 million Deutschmarks. It is estimated that some 400 U.S. companies have subsidiaries in South Africa and some 600 firms based in the U.K. have operations in South Africa.

According to the latest figures available, which are for 1982, Canadian companies have about $200 million invested, a small percentage of total foreign investment in South Africa. The rate of increase of investments by all foreign companies has slowed in South Africa; the stock of Canadian investment has hardly increased for a number of years. Not only is Canadian investment in South Africa not increasing, some disinvestment is now occurring. There are about 30 Canadian companies with operations in South Africa. Over half of these have minority positions with little or no management control. This suggests that unilateral action by Canada might, in any event, be a hollow gesture without practical effect.

In the Canadian case, the Government's approach to investment in South Africa is based on a number of elements. First and foremost, our opposition to the practice of apartheid has led to an end to the official promotion of commercial and investment relations with the Republic of South Africa.

In the case of trade, restrictive measures date back to 1963. At that time, Canada voluntarily imposed an embargo on sales of arms and military equipment to South Africa. That was extended, in 1970, to include spare parts. In 1977, Canada, then a member of the Security Council, supported the application of a mandatory arms embargo on South Africa.

In addition, in 1977, the Canadian Government decided to end the active promotion of trade and investment in South Africa. The Canadian trade commissioners previously assigned to South Africa were withdrawn and the Consulate-General in Johannesberg was closed. The use of the Export Development Corporation's government account for financing and insuring trade with South Africa was suspended and the facilities which had been available for the insurance of Canadian investments in South Africa were also withdrawn. These measures were further extended when the use of the EDC's corporate account for South Africa was also suspended.

The Canada-South Africa trade agreement, which accorded South African exports preferential tariff access to the Canadian market, has been terminated. Private Canadian companies remain free to trade in peaceful goods with South Africa and to invest there, according to their own judgment.

Second, while it does not encourage trade and investment activity, the Government of Canada is opposed to mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa, including those relating to investment. Such measures would not promote the peaceful and positive change in South Africa which we support; they might, rather, foster violence. They would also seriously harm the disadvantaged black majority in South Africa and the neighbouring states. Those in South Africa are already denied basic political and civil rights: they would surely suffer further economic privation.

The operations of the foreign companies in South Africa have, in many instances, had a positive effect in creating greater wealth among non-whites and in encouraging social change. These companies employ a relatively small percentage of the South African labour force, but when they adopt progressive practices, they set an example to be followed by local investors or establish a benchmark for worker demands throughout the labour force.

Canada has taken some steps to see that this is the case for Canadian companies operating in South Africa. Recognizing that the laws and policies of the South African Government specifically disadvantage non-white workers, Canada's present Code of Conduct makes detailed recommendations with respect to general working conditions, collective bargaining, wages, fringe benefits, training and promotion and race relations. Under the Code of Conduct, companies are invited to make annual public reports in sufficient detail to permit assessment of their progress in realizing the objectives of the code. The code appears to have had some positive effects, but the range of reporting has been limited and could be improved. Consideration is being given to new initiatives designed to make the code a more useful instrument.

In that direction, we may want to have a look at the Proxmire Bill that is now before Congress. Obviously when only one company out of 30 has complied with the voluntary reporting to Parliament, we have to make sure that we look at other options.

There are clear legal limits to the influence that the Canadian Government, and other home Governments, may claim with respect to the activities in South Africa of companies with head offices in their jurisdictions. These companies are subject to the jurisdiction of South Africa with respect to their operations in that country. Canada rejects the extraterritorial assertion of the laws of other countries that inter alia seek to direct the activities of foreign companies operating in Canada in a way that displaces Canadian law and policy. Such practice would be contrary to international law and an infringement on Canadian sovereignty. Canada as a home country, therefore, cannot purport to extend its own law to South African activities of South African companies controlled by Canadian nationals or residents in a way that directly displaces South African law and policy, no matter how objectionable the latter may be. Therefore, we could not enforce any ban on new investments in South Africa based on retained earnings or local borrowing by South African affiliates of Canadian companies. Neither can we, as a country, compel Canadian-controlled companies operating in South Africa to break South African law.

For the same reason, we would be constrained from applying any investment ban to jurisdictions outside Canada where subsidiaries of Canadian companies are operating in order to contain any circumvention by these companies through subsidiaries in countries without such a ban. This could make any ban on Canadian investment in South Africa difficult to enforce and cause concern in friendly countries with a different policy approach about the extraterritorial application of Canadian laws.

On balance, therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Government is not convinced that the banning of new investment to South Africa by Canadian companies is the proper way to register our objection to apartheid. We do, however, feel that Canadian companies that choose to operate in South Africa should do all they can to counter the destructive and dehumanizing effects of apartheid. They can, by this means, contribute to the process of peaceful change in South Africa—to the removal of institutionalized racial discrimination, and the full realization of human rights.

We also have reservations about proposals to ban the sale of kruggerand gold coins in Canada. This issue must be considered in the context of Canadian policy on trade with South Africa and our more general international trade obligations. While the Canadian Government does not as a matter of policy promote trade with South Africa, it does not prevent or restrict trade in peaceful goods and services. The only exceptions are where such activities would contravene sanctions imposed by the Security Council, for example, the mandatory arms embargo adopted in 1977.

In the absence of any international agreement among South Africa's trading partners, such unilateral action might also be considered to be contrary to Canada's obligation under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This would open the way for legal claims for compensation or retaliating action. As far as can be determined, no Western country has adopted such legislation. For these reasons we do not believe that the institution of a measure restricting peaceful trade would be a constructive or legitimate step to take at this time.

The final measure proposed would outlaw Canadian bank loans to South Africa. I would remind the House that the Canadian Government itself does not lend funds to South Africa. The government account facilities of the Export Development Corporation have been withheld from public sector and private sector buyers in South Africa since December 1977. In 1981, corporate account facilities available to South African buyers were also withdrawn.

A number of Canadian banks have evidently decided on their own—in the context of a dialogue with their shareholders—to suspend loans to the South African Government or coporate borrowers. That is their right, and their risk as private lending institutions in an open economy such as ours. Such action is a prime example of the operation of free and responsible action by independent Canadians exercising their own judgment. That is the kind of open debate which is a credit to the Canadian people and which this Government wishes to encourage. Free public debate and decisions taken by autonomous institutions are obviously preferable to coercive legislation.

I would also note that the rules of international law limit the authority of a state to control or direct conduct in the territory of another state. They make it illegitimate to attempt to prohibit lending to South African borrowers in South Africa. The difficulties in enforcing such action are obvious.

I believe it is clear that Canada has already done a good deal to encourage reform in South Africa. In addition to the measures already cited, I would mention the boycott on contacts between nationally representative sporting teams and athletes. This action, taken in conjunction with our Commonwealth partners, has brought home to the ordinary white South African the depth of Canadian and international opposition to apartheid.

One more thing that the Government and Canadians in general can do is to provide support to various groups working with the black community of South Africa. These include some major Canadian churches and non-governmental organizations, the Canadian Labour Congress, and the World University Service of Canada. Self-help projects in rural communities, leadership training and providing scholarships are concrete ways in which we as Canadians can play a constructive part. Our role must be to support those groups inside South Africa which are working to promote peaceful change. We must avoid empty moral gestures or actions which are inconsistent with our international obligations.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would stress that though much has already been done, we mean to continue and to do more. To borrow a phrase from Canada's Ambassador to the United Nations, what is required is unrelenting pressure. That is our policy. This Government has already consulted such prominent South Africans as Bishop Desmond Tutu and Chief Gatsha Buthelezi. We shall continue to look at these questions and to consult with interested parties including Canadians. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced to the House on February 15, the Government is reviewing its relations with South Africa. We shall, in that context, take account of the views expressed in this House today.

The Government has promised in the Throne Speech a thorough review of Canada's international relations and that this would involve public consultations. We want to hear Canadians' views on future direction for our foreign policy, including the best approach to the problem of human rights in South Africa. This process will shortly be engaged by a special parliamentary group. Adoption of the current proposals would tend to prejudge the outcome of the review and close off avenues of public debate. That is hardly the right way to proceed.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to stress that the Government's opposition to apartheid is second to none. I would recall that it was a Progressive Conservative Government that sided with the African states in the Commonwealth in preventing South Africa's continued membership in 1961. In 1979 it was a Progressive Conservative Prime Minister who joined other Commonwealth leaders in adopting the Lusaka Declaration on Racism and Racial Discrimination. That was the strongest and clearest affirmation ever adopted by the Commonwealth on this issue.

Our policy is based on the moral issues involved, and on our desire to take effective steps. Apartheid has been described as a stench in the nostrils of the world by one Afrikaner writer. Our sense of the injustices is as keen as that of the Members of the Opposition. I accept no lessons in morality from them in this regard. We all, I trust, seek peaceful change and not destructive violence. Apartheid, however, will not be weakened by empty gestures that make us feel self-satisfied. We want to look at the issues in a realistic manner and will do so as we review the options. Although we do not support the proposed motion, we share the Hon. Member's repugnance of apartheid and his desire to see quicker progress to peaceful change. That, too, is our objective.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members will recall, the resolution reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should disallow further Canadian investment in South Africa, outlaw the importation of South African Krugerrand gold coins into Canada and outlaw Canadian bank loans to South Africa.

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on a sincere and obviously deeply felt speech. I think he believed each and every word that he said. I wish it could be said that all of us believed all of the things we say in this House all of the time. I believe he was completely sincere in what he said and I salute him for the passion and conviction with which he offered his speech.

Second, Sir, I would make reference to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Weiner). I would remind the House that it is well known that as Mayor of Dollard, the Hon. Member was particularly active in a Montreal area committee which was trying to ensure that visible minorities have a better chance to be hired by the Montreal and District Police Force. It is well known that one of the reasons he was elected to the House against a majority of something in the order of 35,000 was that he was recognized as being a person who stands for the rights of all Canadians, whatever their colour, race, background or creed, to have equal rights with every other Canadian. He is a person who, like the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, believes in action more than in talk in this sphere as in many others.

One of the best reasons apartheid is despicable is that it equates inferiority with an irremovable natural quality, pigmentation, and persists in the goal of white supremacy even in circumstances which make the attainment of that goal impossible without evil means such as torture. As well, apartheid is a stench in the nostrils of humanity, as mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary. That is why it is despicable. Each and every Member of the House, I would think, despises it as much as the Hon. Member fo Nickel Belt, the Hon. Member for Dollard, and I.

I recently spent time in three African countries, Gabon, Zaire and Ethiopia, and I have spent a great deal of time lately reading about Africa in an attempt to know it better than I did before. South Africa is anathema to southern Africa for the very reasons that have been mentioned by both previous speakers. Any self-respecting person of any colour despises a system which gives preference to one race and discriminates against another race.

As the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt knows, one of the problems the West has with South Africa is that by being perceived to be in favour of an abhorrent régime in South Africa, we are seen as being on the wrong side of an issue vitally important to about 600 million people who live in the continent of Africa. That is a very major obstacle, quite aside from its implications in terms of the people who are jailed like Joseph Mandela or many other South Africans who have suffered as well.

I do not think it was mentioned that this Party has a long and honourable tradition on this issue. I would remind the Hon. Member that it was the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker who saw to it that South Africa was driven out of the Commonwealth in 1961. With very few exceptions, we have made it clear from the beginning where we stand on this issue and it is very close to the position of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

When Archbishop Trevor Huddleston was here a few months ago, and later on his godson, Bishop Tutu, it was an honour and a privilege for me to spend several hours with both of them and to learn more clearly of their insights into this problem. Bishop Tutu tells us that South Africans, when they finally overcome this cancer, will look to see who sided with them and who sided against them and they will know who their friends are and who their friends are not. That sort of a remark touches the hearts of all of us.

I would remind the Hon. Member that even Bishop Tutu has said that he will give the Government 18 months in which to do something. The Hon. Member may say that that is because he will go to jail if he says otherwise, but Bishop Tutu has said that if nothing is done in 18 months, he will call for disinvestment from South Africa. If he is prepared to give South Africa a little more time, although the Hon. Member may ask how much time is enough, perhaps that is something that Canadians should consider as well.

Mr. Rodriguez: They had 25 years.

Mr. Kilgour: I know. You're absolutely right.

The Hon. Member is speaking about outlawing bank loans to South Africa. I am told that Canadian Schedule A banks have $180 billion in outstanding loans in all countries around the world. While I do not have a specific figure for South Africa, it is less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of that total amount. It is a drop in the bucket.

Mr. Rodriguez: Still too much.

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member says that it is still too much. Can we outlaw a loan to, for example, XYZ company, a company in South Africa that employs black people? Would that help the cause of black men, women and children in South Africa? How does that help the people at the bottom of the economic heap? Obtaining a loan from Canada might make the difference between the business continuing or not. How does it help to tell the company it can no longer obtain loans from Canada?

Mr. Rodriguez: Are you kidding me? The United States forbade American banks to lend money to Cuba.

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member already had a chance to speak. I do not mind the occasional heckling, but I would ask him not to do it every four seconds. If he does, I will be doing nothing but answering his questions.

Mr. Rodriguez: You're running out my time anyway so what does it matter?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

• (1750)

Mr. Kilgour: If we cut off bank loans, would that do anything for the people whom we are trying to help, which is the people at the bottom?

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes.

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member said "yes". I guess this Government says no.

Mr. Rodriguez: We know whose friend you are.

Mr. Kilgour: I would remind the Hon. Member that Ambassador Stephen Lewis and I spent a week together in law school, back when he was smart enough to get out of law school. On November 20, Ambassador Lewis, said in the United Nations, on behalf of the Government, that the Canadian Government rejects the concept that total isolation of South Africa would somehow promote fundamental reform in that country. It would not happen. Racist mentalities feeds on isolation. Isolation breeds the kind of defiance which further fans the flames of oppression and hatred. If the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt accepts that reasoning—and I hope he does as I believe that most Members of the House accept that reasoning—then how can we help the cause by cutting off all connections with South Africa?

Mr. Rodriguez: Right.

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member said "right", but do we do the same thing with Cuba? What about Nicaragua?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Americans did.

Mr. Kilgour: That is the point. The Americans did. But, I always thought that it was the policy of all Members of the House that wherever possible we wanted to keep our contacts with Governments with which we profoundly disagree.

Do we say to the Government of Haiti—where, as he knows, human rights are probably breached more than anywhere else—that we will no longer have anything to do with it?

Mr. Rodriguez: Next on the list.

Mr. Kilgour: By that, we will help the Haitians—

Mr. Rodriguez: I think we would send a message to the Government of Haiti and it would be an effective message.

An Hon. Member: That is not realistic.

Mr. Kilgour: One Member said that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is unrealistic. I think it is the Canadian tradition, which is shared by all Parties, that we try wherever possible to keep our contacts and to keep the flow of communications open with as many countries as we can. I repeat, racist mentalities feed on isolation. Isolation breeds the kind of defiance which further fans the flames of oppression and hatred.

The second part of the resolution asks us to outlaw the importation of South African krugerrand gold coins to Canada. My understanding—and perhaps the Hon. Member can correct me—is that the gold coins are 100 p. cent gold. If that is the case, there is nothing easier on the face of the earth than to melt the coins down and simply bring in the gold in its natural metal form. I do not know how the second part of his resolution will—

Mr. Rodriguez: Ban the importation of it.

Mr. Kilgour: We cannot ban the importation of gold.

Mr. Rodriguez: From South Africa.

Mr. Kilgour: If the Hon. Member believes that gold coming from South Africa should be banned—and I believe that South Africa produces something like 20 per cent of the world's gold supply—then we can simply say that no Canadian will buy gold if it had its origin in South Africa.

Mr. Rodriguez: We have gold mines in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Kilgour: The third question is to disallow further Canadian investment in South Africa. I have indicated as clearly as I can that with investment in South Africa, as the Parliamentary Secretary indicated, if the companies are required to provide equal access to facilities for white and black people, then that is helping the people about whom we are concerned.

I do not want to be accused of talking this motion out. I agree with what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs said and I agree with large chunks of what the the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt said.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid it is I who will be forced to talk this motion out this afternoon. I do not think that it is something that the Government of Canada can accept, for the reasons which were expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary.

In particular, on this side of the House, we have to give deep consideration to the various ramifications that a policy such as that proposed by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would have. When I read his motion, it occurred to me that it was some kind of a knee-jerk reaction to something which he does not like any more than does the vast majority of Canadians. But I fail to see how in doing this we would have any influence whatsoever on the policies of a foreign and sovereign Government.

It would seem that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has perceived the problem and wants to turn his back on it. If he does not see it any more, and if there are no relations between Canada and South Africa, then he thinks it will go away. But I do not think that will happen.

If Canada and other Western countries decided to turn their backs completely on South Africa, things would continue very much the same as they are now. There would not be a general improvement in the situation, which has happened to some extent. By all accounts, there is a general improvement which has happened from time to time. Sure, there is a long way to go—

Mr. Rodriguez: Tell us about the improvements.

Mr. Nickerson: The Hon. Member asked me to tell him about the improvements. I would ask him to contrast the fate of some of the people for which he is so concerned in South Africa to those in other countries. We know what is going on in Ethiopia and Uganda. I believe that a lot of people in Ethiopia would much prefer to live in South Africa, despite the fact that political rights would not be available to them. At least they could eat, get a fairly good job and have a roof over their heads.

Mr. Rodriguez: Are you serious?

Mr. Nickerson: Of course I am serious. I would suggest that the Hon. Member, too, should be serious. Perhaps he is not concerned with the plight of people in Ethiopia. Perhaps he is not concerned with what happened in Uganda. We do not want a revolution, bloodshed and that type of thing. We do not want to force that on people. We want an improvement in the situation.

I would like to take a look at some of the proposals which have been made. We do not want any more Canadian investment in South Africa. We do not want people to go there and develop factories or anything of that nature. But if we really looked at what has been happening, we would see that it is in the foreign-owned factories and the foreign-owned industrial establishments that most of the improvements have been made.

Mr. Rodriguez: Like the Bata Shoe Company?

Mr. Nickerson: For example, we could look at some of the oil refinery companies in South Africa. A number of those operations have conducted their affairs in a way which shows that there can be racial harmony in South Africa. If one plant can do that, then the people in the next plant will not be frightened and will adopt the same way of operating. Gradually, over a period of time, more plants will adopt that kind of operation.

Some of the industrialists in South Africa have been at the forefront of the movement against apartheid. Particularly in the mining industry, people such as Harry Oppenheimer were against it. I know the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt would not approve of a capitalist-industrialist who invests money and creates jobs to allow things to flourish and provide employment for all people of all colours and all races.

Mr. Rodriguez: Exploiting the black man.

Mr. Nickerson: That is the very area from which the maximum opposition to apartheid within South Africa has come. It has come from the industrial sector rather than the agricultural sector.

The Hon. Member wants to outlaw the importation of South African gold coins to Canada. The previous speaker gave objections to that proposal and explained how it would be ineffective. He wants to outlaw Canadian bank loans to South Africa. I cannot see any sense to that idea whatsoever. I would imagine the most use we would get out of that—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been made.

AGRICULTURE—MARITIME FARMERS COUNCIL'S REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY FUNDING. (B) TIMING OF DECISION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I make my comments as a result of a question I posed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on March 14 regarding the Maritime Farmers Council. I wish to point out to the House that I have raised this matter on previous occasions, as has my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson).

I raised the matter on February 14 expressing concern that the Maritime Farmers Council is in need of emergency funding which has not been forthcoming by the Government. I also posed a question to the Minister responsible for the Treasury Board on March 8, 1985, and again an answer was not forthcoming. Consequently, I rise with respect to my most recent question on March 14 when I asked the Minister of Agriculture for emergency funding for the Maritime Farmers Council.

By way of background, Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members of both the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party met here in Ottawa in February with representatives of the Maritime Farmers Council which made its presentation regarding the situation in which it presently finds itself. I believe there was a consensus reached by Hon. Members of both the Liberal and the Conservative Parties who were in attendance that we would all attempt to work for the betterment of the maritime farmers. To date there have been no positive answers forthcoming to those questions. I alluded to the fact that the indefinite delay by the Minister of Agriculture is the equivalent of a "no" in terms of an answer.

For the benefit of Hon. Members of the House who are here, what is the crisis? The crisis is that at least half of our maritime pork industry will disappear before the end of 1986 unless preventive measures are taken immediately. In Nova Scotia, for instance, at least 25 per cent of our pork producers are already technically bankrupt. The total of their loans and mortgages is greater than the current market value of their assets. A similar situation prevails in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

A 50 per cent reduction in our pork production will seriously threaten the continued viability of one or more of our three major meat packing plants as well as the proposed new plant on Prince Edward Island. Allowing the situation to continue will threaten an industry which currently provides 6500 on-farm jobs with an annual farm gate value of $375 million. If one applies a multiplier effect of three, our maritime livestock industry generates more than $1 billion in annual economic activity within the region. A large portion of this activity is under imminent danger of extinction.

What is the cause of this crisis, Mr. Speaker? I believe there are two causes. In the case of pork, part of the cause is the extended current low market price for pork throughout the North American market. Second, there is a great disparity in feed costs between the Maritimes and the rest of Canada, particularly Ontario. I wish to give a few examples.

On February 1, 1985, according to information provided by the Livestock Feed Board of Canada, the average cost of hog grower ration in Ontario was $207 per tonne, compared with $254 in the Maritimes. That is a difference of $47 per tonne. In the case of dairy cattle, the spread in the cost of dairy ration between the Maritimes and Ontario as of February 1, 1985, was $58 per tonne. This translates to an average increase of 2.9 cents per litre in the production cost of milk in the Maritimes as compared with Ontario. For milk sold for manufacturing purposes, producers in both areas receive essentially the same price. In the fresh fluid market higher prices simply discourage consumption.

What about the case of broilers? The price spread there is the cost of feed. The difference between the Maritimes and Ontario is $53 per tonne, causing a production cost difference of six cents per kilogram.

What about eggs? The price disparity in the cost of laying mash between the Maritimes and Ontario is now $31 per tonne. This means an increased cost of production equivalent to six cents per dozen in the Maritimes over Ontario. The market price for eggs in the Maritimes is less than five cents higher than the Ontario price.

The way to resolve this dilemma, and I believe this is the long-term solution, is to grow all of our feed grains and concentrates. This process has already started. Between 1976 and 1984 our grain acreage has increased from 280,562 to 295,500. Our acreage of protein crops has increased over the same period from practically nothing to approximately 5,000. If we can return to our 1941 acreage of more than 500,000, producing above average yields of barley, wheat, grain corn and soya beans, we could be almost self-sufficient.

However, in order to ensure the survival of our livestock and poultry industries until we do reach self-sufficiency we require an immediate emergency program consisting of the following two items. We have to restore feed grain assistance to the 1975-76 level of funding to cover over 60 per cent of the cost of transportation of feed grains and protein concentrates imported into the Maritimes from central and western Canada. Secondly, we have to extend the same level of assistance to the feed grains and proteins grown within the Maritime region in order to stimulate local production.

In conclusion, Canadians in the Atlantic provinces are not resentful of the huge payouts made to western farmers, whether under the western grain stabilization legislation or others. What we are resentful of is that it is taking so long for the Minister of Agriculture to give an affirmative answer to the request agreed to by both the Conservative and Liberal Parties when we met with the Maritime Farmers' Council. They need an additional $13.5 million of emergency funding. I believe it is high time the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary give an affirmative response to this request in the best interests of the Maritime farmers. I plead for the assistance to be forthcoming now. It this continues to drag on it will amount to saying no to a request which is in the best interests of our region. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to give an affirmative reply forthwith.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am always amazed to see the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) so eager to applaud his colleague from Cape Breton-Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall). He seemed less inclined to do so when the previous Government adopted all the measures that plunged this country into an accumulated deficit of $200 billion, and an annual deficit of $35 billion we are trying very hard to reduce. He was not applauding last year. Spending was easy at the time. Spending is always easy. Acting responsibly before the Canadian people is something else.

The federal Government did not turn down the request made by the Maritime Farmers' Council. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had a meeting with the Ministers of Agriculture from the Maritimes, and he met with them again this week to discuss various problems confronting the agricultural industry, both in the Maritimes and in Western Canada. The Minister has designated an official departmental representative who will work together with the Maritime Provinces and the Maritime Farmers' Council on formulating proposals for dealing with their problems.

When we talk about consensus and discussion and reaching a settlement . . . of course, our Opposition friends do not even know the meaning of the word "consensus". The word was forgotten for 20 years. Provinces, farmers, everyone was forgotten. This Government has now reopened discussions with the farmers and the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot settle everything in a matter of weeks, because of our tremendous financial problems, as I mentioned before.

The Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has started a review of the Government's feed grains policy. All organizations concerned have been contacted, and each one has been asked to state its position on our policy. The Minister has also offered to meet with as many organizations as possible before undertaking any policy review. That is how this Government operates, not by governing and making decisions and checking afterwards whether people agree. We have said goodbye and good riddance to that approach. This Government has started consulting with people and working together with Canadians. Of course it takes people by surprise. They are not used to it. There are people alive today who never have seen the like of it since their childhood. It just did not exist before. But it is going to exist. People are starting to realize that in Canada we can discuss problems and talk things over. And despite our tremendous problems and our limited financial resources, we have already taken a number of measures that will benefit farm producers in the Maritimes and across Canada.

Federal Government expenditures on agriculture in the Maritimes were estimated at $90 million in 1982 and 1983, out of a total of $1.9 billion. Expenditures for the Maritimes alone, Mr. Speaker, represented 14 per cent of the Government's gross revenue, while it was 9 per cent for Quebec and 4 per cent for Ontario. When the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall) says that we are not doing anything for the Maritimes, that is a lot of nonsense. It is just not true. We are going to work for the Maritimes just as we are going to work for the entire country, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS ABOUT CLOSURE OF AIR SAFETY OFFICE IN MONTREAL. (B) EFFECTS OF BUDGETARY CUTS ON MONTREAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise at this time to debate the closure of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board office, because our colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Blais), who just answered a question from my colleague from the Maritimes, tried to hide behind the smokescreen of consultation to reply to my colleague and explain the Government's inaction. The issue I want to raise has to do, first, with a decision made by the Conservative Government without any consultation, second, with a broken election promise.

As it happens, the Member for Bellechasse just said that there will be consultation in future. Well, I am saying that when the Conservative Government closed the Canadian Aviation Safety Board office in Montreal, it did not keep its promise to consult the parties involved. For the record, here is the telegram sent to the Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Bouchard) on November 6, 1984:

We have just learned that you have decided to move the Montreal head office of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

We would like to know the reasons for such a decision which you made without any consultation with the interested people in the region.

Your Government promised that it would promote dialogue and consultation concerning any decision likely to affect our region.

We are wondering why the consultation process has not been respected as promised.

The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) was referring only a few seconds ago to the consultation process so dear to the Tory Government. Well, in this case there has been no consultation.

And that letter is signed by the Mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, the Chairman of the Montreal Urban Community, Mr. Pierre DesMarais II, the President of the Montreal Commerce Bureau, Mr. Stephen Cheasley, the President of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Philip O'Brien, and the Minister in the Quebec Provincial Government, Mr. Guy Tardif, Minister of Housing and Consumer Protection and Senior Minister from the Greater Montreal area that is affected by this unilateral action taken by the Tory Government, with a loss of some 110 jobs in Metro-Montreal.

In my view, that decision was made for the sole purpose of gratifying a few employees, a few civil servants, a few employees in the Department of Transport, the Transport Commission and the Pilots Association. It is a bad decision and it should never have been made by this Government. It hurts Montreal, and not only does it fly in the face of that consultation commitment but also it goes against the promise made by the Tory Leader when he was in Place Ville-Marie in August telling Montrealers that he would give back to Montreal its status as a metropolis. Well, since he made that commitment to give back to Montreal its status as a metropolis, decision after decision after decision has been made by those ministers to discourage and jeopardize employment in Metro-Montreal.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in the present context, some 10,000 jobs in the transport and aeronautic areas are in jeopardy as a result of those ruthless decisions taken by the Progressive Conservative government, those budget cuts imposed on departments and Crown corporations with headquarters in Montreal.

I urge the member from Quebec who will answer my question to have enough courage to uphold the interests of Quebec and to say to the Progressive Conservative ministers who, one after the other, take administrative decisions having adverse effects on employment in Montreal that this has been going on long enough and that things must change. If it goes on like this, jobs will be lost at Via Rail, at the CN, at Air Canada, at Canadair, at Teleglobe and in the port of Montreal as a result of budgetary reductions made by the Conservative government. This cannot go on. May I remind the House that the headquarters of the International Civil Aviation Organization are in Montreal and that the ICAO has acquired a worldwide reputation in the aeronautic as well as in the aerospace areas during the past years. This fact greatly contributes to make Montreal an important city and that is why the previous Liberal government chose that city for the Canadian Air Safety Office. Now I am asking the government to reconsider its decision and to move back to Montreal that important Air Safety Office to make it independent of the Department of Transport and federal officials. It is not only by accident that we have decided to set up that office far from the Canadian capital because there must be a so-called arm's length relation between such an organization and the Department of Transport. I think that the government has underestimated the importance of protecting the independence of that office from the Department of Transport and the Canadian Transport Commission. Consequently, I hope that the government will reconsider its decision and will try to create jobs rather than unemployment as it is now doing in Montreal.

• (1815)

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have heard once again the Official Opposition trying to alarm Canadian people by saying that 10,000 jobs are being threatened. In fact, it is the 20 million, or rather 25 million Canadians who were being threatened until September 4 by disastrous economic policies which resulted in an incredible deficit, but the Members opposite do not like us to talk about it. They always say that we are trying to rewrite history, when we mention it.

Mr. Speaker, to paraphrase my colleague from Frontenac, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), I replied to the first question of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) by rising. As for courage, it indeed takes some courage to take over the economic situation and the country in the state where you left it, but we have that courage and we shall have it for a long time. You can be sure of that.

First, let us put certain things in context, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board was created following the recommendations of the Dubin Report on air safety. This is not an economic, industrial or commercial organization, but a board with near judiciary powers. As concerns the investigation of accidents and incidents involving civil airplanes in Canada, the staff of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board were formerly part of Transport Canada. By its nature, the Board must include a technical section supported by its own laboratory, as well as ground testing and checking facilities.

I am convinced that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is aware of this. He was a member of the Government long enough to know it. It is impossible that he should not be aware of it. The laboratory and facilities are already located in Ottawa. There was never any question about moving them to Montreal. They are already located in Ottawa. We see no operational advantage in moving these facilities to Montreal.

In relation to the International Civil Aviation Organization, I can say that the Board already has computer access to its data bank, and in any case, there would be very few contacts between the two agencies. As for establishing the independence and the credibility of the Board, we believe that its performance and not its location will be the determining factor. What is important is not the location, but the effectiveness of the Board. This is obvious. The majority of those with whom the Board has dealings are located in the Ottawa-Hull region. These are the Air Transport Association, the Air Traffic Controllers' Association, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Owners' and Pilots' Association, the Aerospace Industries Association of Canada, the Canadian Transport Commission, Transport Canada and the Department of National Defence. All these agencies are located in the Ottawa-Hull region. Why scare people by saying that another monster has taken away a business from Montreal? A figure of 10,000 jobs was mentioned. The Members opposite are making mountains out of molehills.

Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) spoke about having G.I. Joes sitting in cockpits 24 hours a day on Baffin Island. The Members opposite always try to make mountains out of molehills. That is what is wrong. The new Government must go slowly and take things in stride instead of scaring people over nothing, Mr. Speaker.

TERRORISM—PROTECTION OF TURKISH EMBASSY. (B) SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I take part in the late show because yesterday Hon. Members of the House and I were given totally unacceptable answers to questions relating to the Turkish Embassy incident, the tragedy which occurred last week when a Canadian security guard was killed. The Government claimed through two of its Ministers that security had been increased about a month before, either in late February or early March, in response to some requests by the Turkish Government, and that the Turkish Government was satisfied with the increase in security. For example, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Neilsen) said, as reported at page 2969 of Hansard, that increased security was provided as recently as last month. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) gave similar assurances to the House.

It is important whether or not they were increased because the Government is obliged under treaty to provide adequate protection to the Turkish Embassy, and because someone died; the family of the victim is entitled to know that the Government did what it could to try to protect that embassy. The Government has claimed that it did. It is important that those claims be validated.

What do we have on the other side? The claims that there was increased security are contradicted by Inspector Paradis of the RCMP, the inspector in charge of VIP security in the whole Ottawa region. The claims of these two Ministers are contradicted by Pinkerton's, and then are contradicted by the Turkish Government which continued to agitate and even sought a meeting with the Minister, but were fobbed off, I believe, on to his Parliamentary Secretary for a discussion. We have these contradictions of the two assertions by the Ministers.

I put it to the Ministers, that their credibility requires that they give some details of the increase in security, what was actually done. We are prepared to believe what was done, but tell us what was done. What did the Minister say? He could not tell me because, first, to do so would compromise national security. If I were asking what the current security arrangements are and the Minister gave that information that would compromise national security. Any interested potential terrorist would know what he is confronted with, but I am not asking about current security arrangements. I am asking about past security arrangements.

I would like to know how giving the details of past security arrangements, not what increases were provided by this Government, would do anything but enhance national security and bring a great deal of relief to the family of the victims, who would then know that something had been done to try to improve the security at the Turkish Embassy. It would also provide a basis for defending our honour as a country with Turkey, the country whose embassy was violated by the terrorist act of last week.

The Minister said that when there appears to be a discrepancy involving the word of an Hon. Member, the word of the Hon. Member is accepted. In other words, the RCMP are liars, the Pinkerton's people are liars and the Turkish Government are liars because they differ with me, says the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and his word has to be accepted. I suppose if the Secretary of State for External Affairs came into the House and said that today was Sunday, we would have to take his word for that. In these circumstances, the Minister and the Government have no alternative and no reason for not standing up and telling us what increase in security they claim to have provided at the Turkish Embassy.

I want to refer them to a statement the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) made to Canadian Press on March 13, that after many years of almost uninterrupted power they, meaning the Liberals, left us a pretty sorry legacy in security matters. I do not agree with that. However, if that is what the Government thought in September when they took over, why did they not do something about it? If they thought they had been left a sorry legacy in security matters, why did they sit on an RCMP report requesting additional money for increased security, and not take it to Cabinet?

As recently as last week the Solicitor General said that that report, which I commissioned, had not been taken to Cabinet yet for approval. It flies in the face of reason that this Government can be taking security seriously, as it says it is.

The Parliamentary Secretary is here today. He knows the story. He had a meeting with the Turkish ambassador. I wonder if he might tell us whether he had that meeting because the Minister was too busy or was unwilling to see the Turkish ambassador and what in effect this Government did to to increase the security at the Turkish Embassy, as the Deputy Prime Minister said they did in late February or early March.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by commenting specifically on the statement of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) on my meeting with the ambassador. I take my duties and role as Parliamentary Secretary very seriously. The jobs and initiatives that I have been assigned and taken on I do with the utmost of diligence, not because they are flogged on me or because the Minister happens to be busy.

I happen to play a role of liaison to the diplomatic community. This means that each and every ambassador and high commissioner when coming to this country is afforded the opportunity of being able to meet with me to begin a line of communication, which we will continue, and the opportunity of discussing our bilateral relations and our areas of concern. We do this through the forum of meetings in my office, or we may have lunches that are planned with groups of ambassadors or high commissioners, or through any such opportunities I may have to speak to groups.

The meeting held on February 27 between Ambassador Kerdja and myself was very much in keeping with that policy. I had already met a dozen ambassadors of foreign missions. I made it very clear to the Minister, because I gave him a copy of the minutes of that meeting, that there was no discussion of the security or the lack of security at that embassy. We discussed our bilateral relations. We discussed the relationship between the two countries as it relates to trade potential, the need for increasing trade and our relationship with Turkey as a NATO ally.

I would like to confirm for my hon. friend that when I am involved in these meetings I take them very seriously, as I did my meeting today with the U.N. ambassador from the central African republic. I will continue to play that role as long as the Government and the Secretary of State provide me with that opportunity. That is one of many roles which I have been afforded.

To return to the Hon. Member's question, the investigation ordered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on March 15 about possible approaches to the Government since February 13 by officials of the Turkish Embassy regarding the security of their mission was rapidly carried out and the Secretary of State for External Affairs reported its findings to the House on March 20. As the Minister told the House in his statement on Tuesday, there were two further contacts between Turkish and Canadian officials after mid-February. Although Ministers were not involved with these contracts, the RCMP were. In both cases, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police acted immediately to increase their vigilance, although no new information had been added by the Turkish Embassy to that made available in mid-February.

Although naturally we understand the Hon. Member's concern about this tragic situation, I do not see the relevance of the Hon. Member's reiterated questioning on this aspect. As for getting into the details of security arrangements, past, present and future, I must ask Hon. Members to understand that neither this House nor any public forum is an appropriate place for such discussions. The effectiveness of security measures is not served by allowing to become known information as to what is involved in routine or standard security arrangements, or as to what modifications are made to them when there is cause for increased vigilance. If we were to make that information available, we would run the risk of jeopardizing the safety of those we seek to protect.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

BEEF IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in December last the Government invoked the meat import law and limited beef imports this year to 146.5 million pounds. This was in response to the EEC countries shipping 51 million pounds of beef into Canada subsidized by up to 48 cents a pound. When the United States complained about its quota of 21 million pounds, the Government capitulated and has agreed to increase that to 65 million pounds. It got nothing in return, selling out the farmers in Canada. Now the EEC is demanding that its quota be raised to 33 million pounds or the EEC will impose a countervailing duty of $50 million on farm commodities being sold to Europe.

When the Government capitulates to the EEC, the new quotas for beef will rise to 216 million pounds, the largest ever, and we will have seen the most cowardly retreat by the Government of Canada in history. It is time the Government of Canada summoned its courage, marched into the GATT tribunal in Geneva, and started fighting for Canadian farmers.

IMMIGRATION

COMPLAINT LODGED BY AIRPORT OFFICERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, over the years Canadians have, from time to time, complained about harassment of their visitors arriving at Pearson International Airport. During the past year these complaints have increased. They have been regularly denied by the administration, even in answer to MP's letters.

Now officers are complaining that they are being harassed, that their performance is being measured by the number of visitors they send for inquiry or send to detention under bond.

Two months ago a complaint was sent to the Minister. Six weeks ago an internal report was made to the Minister. No action was taken until after a Globe and Mail story. The Minister has now promised an independent inquiry. I call upon the Minister to make sure that it is genuinely independent, that it has an impartial chairperson, and a representative of the union, the CEIV, who represents the employees at the airport, and that witnesses, especially officers of immigration, are invited to testify under oath and under protection of the Canada Evidence Act, and without fear of reprisals. The scope of the inquiry should include all the allegations made by those officers about the treatment to which they are being subjected by their supervisors, and the inquiry should reach up to whatever level is necessary to determine who was responsible for the policy of telling long-term employees that they may not be promoted—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

WAR CRIMINALS

ADMISSION TO CANADA AFTER WORLD WAR II

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, history is the measure of a civilization. Our history is the criterion which the nations and peoples of the world use to formulate their opinions and pass judgment on the character and social fabric of Canada. I have become disheartened and disillusioned as the media make daily revelations that Canada gave refuge to Nazi war criminals after the war.

The Toronto Star has uncovered evidence in the archives that former Liberal Prime Minister Mackenzie King's Cabinet approved a special order in 1948 allowing war criminals to remain in Canada despite earlier deportation orders. This revelation tends to confirm past suspicions that previous Liberal Governments provided sanctuary for Nazi war criminals and collaborators after World War II. What tragedy and hypocrisy when, during the same period, Jewish survivors of Nazi concentration camps were denied entry!

I urge the Government, for humanity, for the western world, to face up to the challenge, deal with it, and remove this dark cloud over Canada. We must bring these criminals to justice in Canada or overseas so that our brave men did not die in vain. I am certain that the Deschenes Commission will rectify this injustice.

RETIRED PUBLIC EMPLOYEES—RESTORATION OF PENSION INDEXING BASE ADVOCATED

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, two years ago the previous Government unilaterally cut the indexing of retired public employees' pensions as part of the six and five restraint program. My Party fought that measure in committee and in this House, and considered it a flagrant disregard for an agreement between employer and employees. Thankfully this program of cut-backs and austerity has ended, but the damage done to retired federal employees' pensions will remain in perpetuity.

The base rate of a federal retired employee's pension has been permanently reduced by the difference between six and five and the inflation rate at that time. As a result, some 200,000 former federal employees are losing substantial portions of their pension benefits. While Canadians are glad to see that the rate of inflation has fallen, Mr. Speaker, indications are that this has occurred due to long-term economic trends and external factors, such as international interest rates. I therefore strongly urge the Government to look at the viability of restoring the indexing base of pensions for retired federal employees.

I also welcome the willingness of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to review the pension system. In addition, on behalf of Canada's excellent and dedicated Public Service, I sincerely hope that no Government will again introduce such a regressive measure.

NATIONAL PARKS

ENTRANCE FEE INCREASES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the House of the reaction of the Kent Tourist Association and Alma Village in New Brunswick to the 300 per cent increase of the admission fee to our national parks which the new government announced last November.

In its letter to me, the Association referred to the devastating effects which this increase will have on the tourist industry. It emphasized four major effects, and I quote:

[English]

Tourists bitter over high rates in New Brunswick;

Business needing less staff to handle diminished traffic;

Decreased attendance at swimming pool and golf course will eventually result in their loss as they are not part of Parks Canada mandate and have only been held by high attendance;

All our county will directly feel the effect as it is dependent upon Fundy Park as the main attraction.

In summary, we will no longer be able competitively to draw people to the area.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a mistake on the part of the party opposite. It should come to realize that creating new obstacles is not likely to help the tourist industry. Through consultations with the tourist industry, the government would realize that it is making a serious mistake and that its decision must be reconsidered. Nothing short of a change in policy would demonstrate its goodwill to the tourist industry.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

IMPORTANCE OF FORUM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the main concern of Canadians is still unemployment and jobs. Last November's economic statement and other government initiatives such as Investment Canada have begun to create a new climate for medium and long-term growth. However, Canadians want short-term solutions as well.

The up-coming Budget cannot deal with unemployment in isolation. It must also take into account our unprecedented peacetime deficit and national debt, abnormally high interest rates, the value of the Canadian dollar, and the possibility of renewed inflationary pressure.

In order to solve these problems we must have a plan of action upon which most Canadians can agree. This is why the National Economic Conference, now taking place here in Ottawa, is so important for all of us. It provides a forum for business, labour, consumers, native people, church leaders, ethnic groups, social service agencies, the unemployed, and voluntary organizations, to discuss their solutions not just with the Government but with each other. Hopefully a consensus will emerge and the up-coming Budget will provide a formula which will get Canada moving again.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PINE TREE LINE—ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF DANA, SASK., STATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, ever since Canadian Forces Station Dana, Saskatchewan, was established in 1962, it has played a very important role in the local economy of the village of Dana and the surrounding district. I have been notified by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) that on March 13, 1985, the Conservative Government decided to close the stations which comprise the Pine Tree network. The actual date for Dana will be announced within the next three years.

This closure represents a very serious setback to Dana and area. The jobs of the 120 military personnel are not threatened; of course they will be reassigned within the Department of National Defence. However, approximately 65 direct jobs and five indirect civilian jobs are affected, and it will be extremely difficult for those 70 individuals to find new work and for the area to maintain its level of services to people, with such a large loss in revenue. Also, a centre for community activity will no longer be available and the village of Dana and surrounding area will suffer greatly. No job offers have been made to the civilian staff. A six-month notice is all that will be offered prior to the actual closure.

I appeal to the Government, on behalf of all those individuals and families who will be hurt as a result of this closure, to provide real assistance in locating alternate employment. I urge the Government to take a hard look at the economic and social costs of these closures across the country, and to provide real economic assistance, instead of merely stating its intention to close down the stations.

WIDELY REPRESENTATIVE PARTICIPATION

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the Government is living up to its main commitment to listen to Canadians before acting. Since September 4 we have been charting a new course for Canada, characterized by consultation and co-operation. This new direction points to economic renewal and national reconciliation.

In less than seven months consultation papers have been prepared by Ministers seeking public input on a number of significant issues. Our Government has held important summit meetings with the provincial First Ministers, and with the President of the United States, our greatest friend and ally.

Today the process continues with the National Economic Conference. The Government has brought together, for the first time in Canadian history, 136 participants from all walks of life and from all parts of Canada. The voices which will be heard include those of business, labour, consumers, women, native people, church leaders, ethnic groups, social agencies, and the unemployed.

If economic renewal and social justice are to be achieved, it is essential that we work together rather than against each other. That is what the National Economic Conference is all about. It is an integral part of the Government's commitment to change the way decisions are made in our country.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

USE OF MINISTER'S PHOTOGRAPH

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the March 20 edition of The Toronto Sun shows just how desperate some junior Tory Ministers are and how far they will go to get their pictures in the newspapers. Yes, like some peeping Tom, the face of the junior Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) peers from a government advertisement, appealing to Canadians to write in and tell him just what it is he is supposed to be doing as Minister.

Does the House remember how some Tories, after the last election, railed against what they perceived to be an evil Liberal practice of having the names of Ministers responsible appearing in small print on signs regarding projects undertaken by the federal Government? The Tories were to end such a practice.

• (1115)

Do you recall how the Tory Opposition worked itself into a frenzy of indignation over government advertising? What was the result of all that sanctimonious nonsense? The result is plain to see, peeping Tom, the Minister for Tourism, using taxpayers dollars to put his own shot in the newspaper. The aim of the ad is to sell the Minister. With his own photo and a reproduction of his signature, which takes up more space in the ad than even the word "tourism", the product message is unmistakable.

Whom is he trying to reach? Perhaps he is trying to remind the boss that he still exists. "Please, Mr. Prime Minister, notice me and give me a place to stand. The junior Minister for Tourism—yours to discover." The Tory Government would serve Canadian tourism better—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. This morning the Government showed unparalleled contempt for the elected representatives of the Canadian people when the Minister of Finance, outside this House, said the Budget would be presented the week of May 20. I want specifically to ask the Acting Prime Minister why the Minister of Finance did not show the traditional respect for Parliament in this regard and give this very same information to the House yesterday when asked the specific question? Will he repair this damage and give the exact date of the Budget right now to the elected representatives of the Canadian people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that it is traditional for the Minister of Finance himself to deal with any announcements with respect to the timing of the Budget. He will, I am sure, give the date of the Budget at the first opportunity available to him in the House of Commons.

ONTARIO PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance had many opportunities to give the information to the House that he gave outside it this morning. I want to ask another question of the Acting Prime Minister. In doing so, I say that the real reason for presenting the Budget the week of May 20 is because Premier Miller of Ontario does not want to carry this Government's Budget around his neck like an albatross when he campaigns for re-election in that province a few weeks hence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister why the political interests of the Ontario Conservatives are more important than the real needs of 1.5 million Canadians who will be waiting 250 days, some eight months, for concrete action in a Budget on jobs, action they obviously are not going to get when they need it.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, all things are relevant, I suppose. In terms of carrying things around one's neck like an albatross, I am sure that there could have been no more weighty an albatross to hang around the Liberal neck than the Budget of Mr. MacEachen. It did more to erode the economy of this country than most.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: There is now under way here a National Economic Conference that has been convened to obtain the views of the broadest cross-section of our society, in the hope that some of the problems that the Hon. Member mentions can be addressed with that kind of broad input, so that the Budget of the Minister of Finance will reflect the real needs of the country to restore some kind of economic renewal in Canada.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question to ask of the Acting Prime Minister. It is typical of the move of the Tory Government to a presidential system that it is not going to recognize that the 285 Members of this Parliament, elected by the Canadian people, in fact provide the broadest possible cross-section of the views of the Canadian people. Why did the Prime Minister as recently as last Wednesday, two days ago, speak of an April Budget? He knew at that time that there would be an economic summit this week. Why has the Prime Minister not kept his word so that there could be an April Budget? Why is the Prime Minister, through the Minister of Finance, unnecessarily delaying the Budget by a month, unnecessarily delaying the required concrete action on jobs for more than a month, and at the same time showing contempt for the elected representatives of the Canadian people?

• (1120)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, all things are relative. I see no departure from the word of the Prime Minister with respect to the date of delivery of the Budget. I do not see the connection that the Hon. Member has been inferring with respect to the plans of any provincial Governments. The Hon. Member speaks of 285 Members of the House of Commons. The last time I looked, there were 282 Members, 211 of whom are on this side, and those numbers were decided last September.

The Opposition has every right to expect a full discussion of economic affairs and has certainly been taking advantage of such opportunities since the House commenced sitting. Its members have certainly taken advantage of such opportunities in debating the economic statement delivered last November 8. All of the opportunities have been there, and if this Government is being marked for one thing, it is the restoration of the meaningfulness of individual participation by Members of this place in all of our national affairs.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UNITED STATES SDI RESEARCH PROGRAM

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and Deputy Prime Minister.

Two days ago, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said before the House, in answer to a question by my colleague the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, that there was absolutely no danger that Canada would be taking part in the United States SDI Research Program. Yesterday, the Minister said before the committee that he was considering the possibility of participating in the star wars research program. This morning, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said before the committee: We have not yet received a formal invitation from the U.S. Government to take part in star wars. I would like to know whether we might be able to get the truth from the Minister of National Defence. If he has not received a formal invitation to date, has he received an informal invitation?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member's recollection of what was said, both here and in committee, is quite inaccurate. I do not ever recall using terminology of danger, and I cannot recall hearing the Secretary of State for External Affairs refer to the danger of participation. In the House of Commons, and I believe in committee, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has left doors open. We would be less than responsible if we did not leave those doors open regarding any decision that the Government of Canada might wish to make on behalf of Canadians.

With respect to the discussions to which the Hon. Member refers, there are no discussions going on. I told him that in committee yesterday.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I never used the word "danger". I would like to have a clear commitment from the Government. The House decided not to participate a year ago when we were debating this subject after President Reagan made the suggestion that we should move to escalate the armament race to a new level with SDI.

We would like to extract a commitment from the Government. However, I see that that will not be easy because the Government cannot make up its mind about anything and is postponing everything. Can we have the Government's assurance that the Canadian people and the Canadian Parliament will not be associated with the star wars project of President Reagan? That is what we want from the Government.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I said in committee, star wars is the term that is being used by the Hon. Member and his colleagues. Star wars is the term that is being used by Members of the NDP in this House. Unfortunately, star wars is being used by those outside of the House as well as in the House in their efforts to link a radar system with the highly imaginative term "star wars", when there is no such connection. I have explained that, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has explained that, and it has been explained in committee. The Hon. Member refuses to accept that, but that is probably because he does not know the difference between radar and space technology. In any event—

• (1125)

Mr. Chrétien: Will you be part of star wars?

Mr. Nielsen: We have no intention of becoming associated with wars, and we have no intention of embracing the stars.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF U.S.S.R.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, The New York Times also uses the term "star wars", a well as many commentators who speak on this matter. It is only President Reagan who wants to get rid of the phrase because he would like to legitimate star wars by calling it SDI.

I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, since I believe, as I am sure he does, that External Affairs should be the senior partner in all major policy matters which relate to defence. Since many of his colleagues have said that the Russians are also developing star wars research and technology, does he think that the Soviet Union should agree to no longer do any research, testing, development, and that it should have no involvement in the militarization of outer space with a star wars type of program? Would the Prime Minister then say that there is no need for the United States to develop any research, testing, and so on, of star wars technology?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no way one can anticipate the response to events which have not only not occurred, but are quire unlikely to occur. The point I have made in the House of Commons is that because the Soviet Union is involved in research of a strategic defence initiative kind, it is entirely prudent for the West to be involved in research of that kind.

POSSIBILITY OF U.S.-U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, since the Soviet Union is obviously very concerned with the great thrust of American research—and I take it that it is far superior to the Soviet's—my question is quite explicit. If, at Geneva or elsewhere, the Soviet Union said that it would not have anything to do with any Strategic Defence Initiative, or star wars, would the Minister then not agree, since we are all very worried about the militarization of outer space, that there should be a mutual agreement between the Soviet Union and the United States not to get into the militarization of outer space?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question is explicit, and the question is hypothetical. There is no practical way in which that hypothetical question can be answered before the facts are known. The Hon. Member, who is a serious student of these questions, knows that agreements which might be reached between the Soviet Union and the United States are almost certain to be hedged in caveats and conditions. It would be most imprudent for Canada or, indeed, any other country, to take firm positions now on decisions which are, by definition, not firm and unknown.

RESEARCH INQUIRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I only wanted the Minister to assure the House that the Government would, in fact, like to see the elimination of the whole star wars development on both sides. He has not given that assurance. Could he not at least give that assurance? Is the Government in favour of the elimination of star wars?

Does the Government support what I now understand to have been a statement by the Chancellor of West Germany, Helmut Kohl, to the effect that, if there is any progress at all in Geneva, there will be no need for either side to pursue the so-called Strategic Defence Initiative?

• (1130)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot, nor in honesty can any Hon. Member of this House, prejudge research now under way on the Strategic Defence Initiative. Nor can I prejudge the possibility of the United States of America following up on, and the Soviet Union accepting, the idea that those two superpowers should work together on their research.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LEVEL OF EXPENDITURE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister has picked up an option from the previous Liberal Government to send additional military personnel to Europe.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: He has announced the North Warning System; most of the work had been done by the previous Government. He has cut his Estimates this year by $150 million. He has allowed real growth in the defence spending to drop from over 4 per cent last year to barely 3 per cent this year. When is the Minister, and this Government, going to take their election promise seriously, which was to "honour the commitment" to spend more money on defence, instead of just trying to give the impression that they are doing something original when they are not doing anything original at all?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if we are not doing anything original, then I don't know why the carping criticism from the other side with respect to what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to commitments of a budgetary nature, that question has been answered several times since the House began sitting. When we got there, the cupboard was bare—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Your head is bare.

Mr. Nielsen: —so that the pace at which we achieve the restoration of our Armed Forces, the pace at which we achieve the honouring of our commitments to our allies, is entirely governed by the economic circumstances of the country, which were left in quite a sorry mess. We hope to achieve those objectives, given the economic renewal due to the initiatives which we are taking as a Government, at the earliest possible moment. Yesterday I stressed to the Hon. Member, as I have before, that those objectives are being looked at in terms of our mandate over the course of four or five years and certainly not within the six months we have been sitting here.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I understand why the Minister has to pile it high. It is because he has a very narrow wagon.

COST OF ADDITIONAL TROOPS IN EUROPE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): A few days ago I asked the Minister whether the $50 million this year, and the $100 million next year, which are required to send the additional 1,200 troops to Europe, would be new money in his Estimates or whether it would be from the existing budget. He could not answer that. Would the Minister of National Defence now tell Canadians whether it will be new money or existing money? If it is money already in his budget, what item or items is he chopping—being the chopping man in the Department—in order to find that money, instead of increasing the growth of defence expenditures as promised by his Party in the last election campaign?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at least I've got a wagon. I'm not dragging my axles.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I have answered that question before in the House of Commons. It was answered for the Hon. Member when I made the statement in the House the other day with respect to where the money was coming from to meet the commitment of $50 million in the first year and the remainder of that commitment, roughly $150 million a year, by saying that we were examining the existing resources of the Department to see what portion of those resources could be allotted to pay for the initiative of this Government, not of those tired old remains of the last Government who sit over there. But whatever slack has to be made up, it will be made up without any erosion of our existing commitments, and without any erosion of the real 3 per cent to which we are committed now.

Mr. Hopkins: You are loading your wagon again.

FINANCE

DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Over the last several months the Government has teased us with a tantalizing dance of the Budget. First the Budget was to come down in early April; then it was mid-April; then it was late April; then it was early May, and now we are being told it is going to be the week of May 20.

Some Hon. Members: It's Miller time.

Mr. Rodriguez: Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the Government has resorted to the reprehensible practice of the previous Government in making these kinds of important announcements outside the House of Commons, thus indicating its disrespect for the people of Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question which was asked by the House Leader for the Official Opposition.

Ms. Jewett: Let's have an answer, then.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt heard my response. The Minister of Finance will take us all into his confidence with respect to the date of the Budget at the first opportunity. He may wish to take advantage of it in the House of Commons.

ONTARIO PROVINCIAL ELECTION DATE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Government has dilly-dallied and shilly-shallied over the announcement of the date of the Budget, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if it is not a fact that the Government is trying to avoid embarrassment of the Frank Miller Government seeking re-election? That's why it doesn't want to bring this Budget down now.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Chrétien: It's Miller time.

Mr. Rodriguez: In fact it is the date of the Ontario election which is in effect determining the date of the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I really don't know what the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt finds so upsetting. Perhaps it is the fear of an election in Ontario. I am certainly not privy to any insider information with respect to that.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are playing politics with the lives of the people.

Mr. Althouse: You are showing fear of an election in Ontario.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure that the Minister of Finance, in his usual fashion, being the man of integrity he is, will not have any other considerations than those of the national interest when he selects and brings down his Budget?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We had a statement by the Minister himself yesterday, and now by his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the Cabinet is actively considering ways in which the country might become involved in the research and development activities related to the "SDI" program, to use the proper phrase and vocabulary. Does the Minister not believe that it really is the height of hyprocrisy for this Government, which has made statements at the United Nations, and when this House has made statements by way of resolution, against any activity which would contribute to the militarization of outer space, to be preparing to become involved in that kind of research and development?

Does the Minister not consider it far more advantageous to Canadians to start looking at the ways in which we can have peaceful uses and applications of our scientists and technologists rather than becoming involved in research leading to a new defensive or war-related system?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as is customary, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry totally distorts what has been actually said by myself and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Neither he, nor I, have said that the Government is, to use his terminology, "actively considering" involvement. That has not been said anywhere.

Mr. Chrétien: Looking at options.

Mr. Nielsen: Why the Hon. Member continues to try to distort this matter, I can only attribute to questionable motivation on the part of himself and his colleagues. The fact is that all of our options are open, and that is exactly what I said yesterday. It would be irresponsible for that not to be said.

• (1140)

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, let us try to learn from the Minister exactly what the Government is engaged in. He says that it is considering options. Does that mean that there is review, study, or examination by the Government of ways in which Canadian industry or scientists might become involved in the research and development activities presently being sponsored by the United States? Or is he prepared to say that there is no involvement, no examination, and no consideration whatsoever of that option or that consideration? Which is it? Is the Government getting involved, or is it not?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Again the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry distorts the facts. When he says that I, or anyone else on this side, has said that we are considering the option of involvement, he is totally inaccurate. I said that our options are open. When we make any decision with respect to those options, all of which are open, he can be sure that it will be made by the Government of Canada, which was sent here on September 4, on behalf of and in the best interests of all Canadians.

HUMAN RIGHTS

WAGE PARITY FOR WOMEN WORKERS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yet another study has confirmed the wage gap between men and women. Unfortunately, the new Treasury Board committee will be limited only to discussions on the public sector, on this question. What steps will the Minister take, as Minister of Justice, to enforce actively the six-year old provisions of the Human Rights Act so that women workers can finally achieve equal pay for work of equal value in all sectors, private and public?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly assisting the Human Rights Commission in enforcing the Human Rights Act. We intend to continue to do that. We will give it every assistance when we are called upon to do so. My colleague, the Secretary of State, is doing the same. I can assure the hon. lady that by the time we are finished women will be in a position of far greater equality and equal rights than they ever were before.

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION STAFF BE ENLARGED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. man that the Human Rights Commission needs more staff. They have only five staff members. Since he says he is going to give every assistance, will he guarantee today that he will increase the staff of the Human Rights Commission considerably to enable it to combat wage discrimination actively and work for systemic changes?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few points of clarification in response to that question. The question surprises me somewhat since the Hon. Member opposite, who is asking the question, attended the announcement of the measures we are taking in the public sector, as well as in the private sector, to deal with the issue.

A committee has been set up with a broad mandate. In that same announcement there was a firm commitment by the Government to give adequate resources for this program to go forth.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INCLUSION OF SEVERANCE PAY IN INCOME CALCULATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but in her absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government has announced that it will count severance pay as income under the Unemployment Insurance Act, which will delay unemployment insurance benefits to laid-off workers. This is to start on April 1, which is only about a week away.

Government Members and opposition Members have all received protests from all across the country, from unions, workers, and members of the Armed Forces, saying that this is a harsh and unfair measure and that there was no prior consultation. Will the Deputy Prime Minister, in consultation with his colleagues, agree to postpone this measure until there is proper consultation and until all the implications are fully understood?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, take the question as notice, and advise my colleague accordingly so as to provide the Hon. Member with a reply as soon as possible.

[English]

EFFECT ON LAID-OFF WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out, this measure is to come into force very soon. Many laid-off workers were going to use this severance pay to re-establish themselves in employment, to relocate to other parts of the country, and even to roll it over with an RRSP into their pension provisions. They will now be forced to spend the severance pay on the basic necessities of life rather than using their unemployment insurance.

Does the Minister not agree that this is a very harsh measure which has implications not foreseen? I would ask her and any of the Ministers, including the Deputy Prime Minister, to consult quickly on this so that it can be postponed and so as to enable full consultation to take place before it moves ahead.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat what I just said, and I have duly noted the Hon. Member's question as well as his comments and words of protest.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—KILLING OF BLACK DEMONSTRATORS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday South African police in an armoured truck, using semi-automatic rifles, shotguns, and machine guns, killed at least 18, and perhaps as many as 43, blacks who were demonstrating in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre. Some 200 blacks have been killed since last August as the white minority Government attempts to suppress all dissent. Will the Canadian Government now get off the fence and lead an international movement for disinvestment in South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that tragic incident of yesterday has demonstrated one more time that the injustice and violence of the apartheid system can only engender further violence. The Government of Canada, and I am sure the people of Canada, deplore this act. We believe the only long-term solution is to move to a non-discriminatory society in South Africa. We are now in the process of reviewing fully the appropriateness of Canadian policy with regard to South Africa. Events of the tragic kind of yesterday add impetus to that review.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. It is not enough simply to deplore and wait for some kind of long-term solution.

Mr. Crosbie: We will invade them, will we?

Mr. Manly: Does the Minister not recognize that the actions of the South African Government must make it a pariah, an outcast among all decent nations in the world? What concrete steps is the Government of Canada prepared to take to put pressure on the Government of South Africa to end this tragic situation, instead of just waiting for a long-term solution?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada, under the leadership of different Parties, has given leadership to the world on this question, going back as far as the action of the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker with regard to the expulsion of South Africa from the Commonwealth. We are very conscious, not only of that tradition of governments, but of that concern on the part of Canadians.

We also think it is essential that the actions which Canada might take, or might be involved in, are actions which in fact improve the quality and prospect of life of the majority in South Africa. I have said that we are undertaking a review. We intend to complete that review as quickly as possible. We intend to take action which is consistent with the tradition of leadership of Canada with regard to South Africa, and in opposition to the apartheid regime.

PORNOGRAPHY

FRASER COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I understand that the Minister has received the Fraser Royal Commission Report on Pornography. Could he advise the House when he will be tabling that report in the House and when he will be introducing legislation to restrict pornography in Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that there are some Members opposite who wish information rather than just making cheap gibes and silly attacks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The answer is that we have not actually received the Fraser report yet. It is in the Department in bits and pieces getting translated. One consecutive volume has not yet been presented to me so I have not received it yet. I think it should be received by the first week of April. Hopefully we should be able to make it public early in April. We will then have to undertake the matter of reviewing the law in the light of the recommendations and in the light of the Badgley report.

An Hon. Member: How long?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentlemen opposite are not interested in the reform of the law in this area, apparently.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—MODERNIZATION OF INDUSTRIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the statements in an interview with the press some weeks ago on acid rain, and the evolution of arrangements with the provinces. There were some surprised statements, notably on the part of the Minister of Environment for Ontario, in reaction to the fact that for the first time the provinces seem to be expected to participate financially in the modernization of the non ferrous metal industry. Would the Minister inform the House whether the provincial Ministers of the Environment were consulted and informed about her intention to have them participate financially in the modernization of the industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, not only were my provincial counterparts informed, they were consulted beforehand, and they were a party to the decision at our meeting on February 5 in Montreal. If the press misreported certain comments, as I think they did, I am afraid I cannot help that, and neither can my provincial counterpart in Ontario.

[English]

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO ONTARIO MINISTER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): How does the Minister explain the statement of surprise expressed by the Minister of the Environment for Ontario at the requested participation by him in the modernization of the non ferrous metals industry, as reported in the press?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would rather not depend on media reports to find out what my hon. colleague, the Minister of the Environment of Ontario is thinking. All I can say is that yesterday, I received a letter in which he congratulated me on the agreement concluded with the United States in Quebec City.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED NORTHERN FISHERY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have yet another question for the fiscal butcher of the Conservative Party. The Deputy Prime Minister admitted yesterday that he has led a committee of packers and choppers on a search and destroy mission—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will ask the Member not to repeat that phrase and simply to put his question.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why the Government chopped $2 million for the creation of the Northern Fishery Development Corporation in Newfoundland? Does the Minister understand that it was in fact an agreement between Canada and Newfoundland? Does he understand that it will help thousands of fishermen in Labrador and Newfoundland? Does he understand that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question is completely wrongly conceived. The question of what will be done to assist the fishermen of northern Newfoundland and Labrador is currently under review by the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and a decision will be made on that shortly.

Meetings are being held in Newfoundland on that issue. The matter is well in hand, so the Member need have no fear. Furthermore, of course, his own district is about 3,000 miles away from the area so that one wonders why he has this sudden interest in this problem.

Ms. Mitchell: Are you not concerned about B.C.?

Mr. Crosbie: Where was he when the fishermen of that area were suffering over the last 10 or 12 years, when the election wasn't on?

Mr. Skelly: There is certainly no justice in that statement.

FUNDING OF CORPORATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In fact the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans announced that the Department cut $2 million, and that the funding was not there.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister give us the assurance that the $2 million will be put back on the table, that the commitment to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador will be honoured and the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation will be set up?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Hon. Member may as well learn that now. When the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is not here, I am the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am not used to this adulation, Mr. Speaker.

The answer to the question is that $2 million is not enough. We are not going to restrict the fishermen of northern Newfoundland and Labrador with the meazly $2 million that the hon. gentleman suggests. Much more than that will be necessary to implement these recommendations. Negotiations must first be concluded with the Government of Newfoundland.

MINES

CONSTRUCTION OF CARTOGRAPHIC INSTITUTE AT SHERBROOKE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State (Mines), but first I want to tell the House that, regretfully, we have learned today that the Government is apparently about to give in under pressure by some senior officials and some Members from the Ottawa area, and to reconsider the proposed construction of the cartographic institute in Sherbrooke. All Eastern Townships residents are deeply concerned, wondering what will happen to this project, all the more so since the Prime Minister did make a solemn promise during the election campaign to the effect that the project would be carried out.

Can the Minister allay the fears of Eastern Townships residents and tell us whether construction will go ahead? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the project to develop the cartographic institute in Sherbrooke, there is presently a training program for the new employees who will be required by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

This project, as is the case with many initiatives of the Government, has been reserved for a financial decision as a result of the task force whose report will be deposited shortly.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would be hard pressed to say that the answer is crystal clear. Perhaps I should attempt to elicit a clearer response from the President of the Treasury Board.

What with inaction in the Domtar file, and now in the matter of the cartographic institute, everybody in the Eastern Townships is worried. Would the Minister enlighten us about the economic development policy of the Government of Canada—if there is one—with respect to the Province of Quebec? Is the Government taking concerted action to promote economic development in Quebec?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer yes to the question, our Government is taking concerted action to promote economic development in Quebec. Indeed it might very well explain why unemployment in Quebec declined by 54,000 in the past year, more than in any other Canadian province.

TOURISM

McDONNELL DOUGLAS PROMOTION VENTURE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as part of the already more than $5 billion CF-18 interceptor purchase, McDonnell Douglas was to undertake a tourism promotion campaign for Canada. Can the Minister of Tourism inform the House what specific initiatives McDonnell Douglas has taken?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. To my knowledge, the company has not approached me directly, nor has it approached my Ministry. I will look into the subject for him and would be prepared to discuss it when the information is gathered.

USE OF MINISTER'S PHOTOGRAPH

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that the Minister will indeed undertake that step to which he has just committed himself. I look forward to learn what he discovers.

Perhaps he can assure us that McDonnell Douglas' advertising is of higher quality than the recent advertisements of his Department, which are not promoting tourism in Canada but simply the Minister's handsome, smiling face, and a rather insubstantial consultation paper.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his compliment. The fact is that tourism is an $18 billion a year business. Under the previous Government Canada lost one-half of the country's share of world business receipts.

We believe that we can turn that situation around but we do not believe that the Government has all the answers. Some of the answers reside in the tourism industry itself. That is why we are consulting with the industry, to seek their views through the consultative process, and that is why we published the advertisement in connection with it.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST LEGAL ACTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

The Minister is aware of the importance and value of the Government's legal aid program which has helped a number of organizations and individuals to defend their rights before the courts, and I am referring to our rights under Section 133, 93 and 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Since this program is to expire on March 31, which is in a few days from now, what kind of programs does the Minister intend to have on April 1 that will help individuals and organizations, and I have been thinking especially of minority groups, to defend their rights before the courts?

• (1200)

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in committee to the Hon. Member, the matter is of importance. As has been the tradition in the past, there is a mechanism to see that rights concerning language were fully explored and that minority views were supported. At the moment there is an on-going discussion between the Department of the Secretary of State and the Minister of Justice. Shortly the Government will announce the future program for Charter challenges.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, when Section 15 of the Constitution becomes effective on April 17 of this year, Canadians will be trying to defend their rights under this section, which covers essential and basic rights. Could the Minister inform the House whether the Government is also looking at the feasibility of expanding its legal aid program to cover not only Sections 133, 93 and 16 to 23, but also Section 15 of the Constitution?

[English]

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member rightly notes, with the widened context of Section 15, there are a number of groups that are very anxious to pursue rights and to see that these are clarified. In the review that is on-going, the wider context is also being reviewed in terms of support that may be offered.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that the petition presented by the Hon. Member on Thursday, March 21, 1985, does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It concerns petitions. In yesterday's Hansard at page 3251 you, Sir, are reported to have said that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form. In Votes and Proceedings there is a similar reference.

I have not in this session of Parliament presented any petitions either to the Clerk of the House or verbally. It would appear that some mistake has been made. I rather suspect that reference was to a petition that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk), who represents the Eastern Arctic, attempted to file with the Clerk of the House. Perhaps some correction could be made.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his point of order. The matter will be looked into. It is difficult to have a petition ruled out of order if one was not presented. I will have the matter checked.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—THE ECONOMY

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before putting the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and since today is the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedure to consider and dispose of the Supply Bills. In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the Supply Bills be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time on a point of order to seek the unanimous consent of the House with respect to a statement to be made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) which relates to the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

There have been discussions with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), with the Leader of the New Democratic Party and in turn with the financial critics and ultimately with the House Leader of each Party. The Government feels that this is a very sensitive issue in terms of the situation as it relates to the Canadian Commercial Bank. We would like to have a parliamentary opportunity at the earliest possible moment, without in any way impinging upon or negatively affecting the rights of the Opposition on an Opposition Day, to make a statement.

I have put forward a proposition to Opposition House Leaders by which a statement could be made with respect to this financial institution. I have indicated that we would be prepared to sit into the lunch hour in order to ensure that no time is lost on the Opposition Day. I will not go any further, except to say that I think it is a sensitive issue respecting a financial institution. There should be an opportunity for the Minister to address the House of Commons by way of statement and for questions, an opportunity which would not be available in Question Period. This is why we suggest this particular course of action. I am quite prepared to proceed at this time with the Minister of State for Finance or, indeed, to proceed at one o'clock this afternoon so that it will not in any way negatively affect the Opposition Day discussion of the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

I put that proposition to the House and would like to see whether we could obtain its agreement with respect to a very important statement to be made this morning.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the request of my hon. friend with respect to the desire of the Government to make a statement about the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank. Notice of the desire of the Government to make a statement about this matter at eleven o'clock this morning reached me only about 40 minutes ago. We have been reflecting on that request. Bearing in mind the sensitivity of the situation and what the Government House Leader said about the importance of being able to put questions on the matter in a parliamentary way, it is our preference that the statement be made at the usual time at three o'clock. This would give our spokespersons a chance to review the statement in advance—we have not seen it—and to reflect upon our questions.

I point out to the House that early this morning a rather detailed press release on this was issued by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). That press release has also been the subject of news reports as early as nine o'clock this morning. I am not complaining about that; I am just saying that it is not necessary to have a statement in the House at eleven o'clock to inform either the public or the House of the situation. Therefore, under the circumstances outlined by my hon. friend with respect to the sensitivity of this situation, I think it would be most helpful to the House, in terms of the kind of response we could give to the Government statement and the kinds of questions we could ask, if we had time to reflect upon the matter until the usual time for making statements on motions at three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the matter has been resolved in any event. I can well understand the position put by the House Leader of the Official Opposition. However, in the circumstances, if unanimous consent could have been sought, we certainly would not have withheld it.

Mr. Speaker: I am in difficulty. The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) sought the floor to seek leave on a matter of unanimous consent which technically has not been granted. I find it difficult to accept any more statements on the point of order, given that the request arose under a request for unanimous consent.

Supply

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

That this House regrets that the Government has further postponed a budget thereby assuring that it will have gone more than eight months in office without taking any concrete action to create jobs and to establish the kind of economic confidence necessary for the realization of the hopes and aspirations of all Canadians, in particular, women, young people, farmers, fishermen, the elderly, natives and, above all, the almost one-and-one-half million unemployed.

● (1110)

He said: Mr. Speaker, we believe it is our duty to draw the attention of this House and of all Canadians to the incredible way the Government has been putting off the formulation of budgetary proposals in a budget speech, to inform Canadians of the direction it intends to give the economy of this country.

The Government's refusal to act has created a climate of uncertainty that is having a disastrous impact on job creation. The Conservative Government's reluctance to bring down its first budget is causing the business community to put off decisions it would otherwise have made, until it knows what the new Government's fiscal policy will be. Because of the Government's hesitation in choosing between job creation and fighting the deficit, many investment decisions have been postponed.

Mr. Speaker, this motion of censure is entirely justified. Imagine, the leader of a political party who had solutions to all the problems of this country during the election campaign not so long ago, and who had decided to wait up to eight months before bringing down his first budget! Imagine, the leader of a government who only a few months ago, last summer, was promising Canadians important fiscal measures including a complete change in oil and gas taxation what is referred to as the PGRT; removal of the tax on capital gains made by a farmer upon selling his operation; increased funding for the forestry industry, especially for reforestation... The same leader who proposed new taxation procedures for petro-chemicals, and, Mr. Speaker, you are aware of the impact of such a change, namely, abolishing the 9 per cent sales tax on gas and diesel fuel used in all primary industries; improving tax benefits for forestry workers, especially those using advanced technology; and providing tax benefits to stimulate investment in the mining industry.

Mr. Speaker, these were only a few of the 330 election promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the election campaign. One may well ask why the Government is unable to take four or five of these promises—and I have read a few—implement them and bring down a budget so that the business community, labour and all social partners will know what this Government's economy policy is. This kind of delay inevitably raises a certain number of questions.

The most important question of all is whether the present Government formed by the Progressive Conservative Party is still confident about the promises it made during the election campaign. The second question is, whether the delay in bringing down the Budget is due to the fact that the Government is divided and has been unable to make a choice among the contradictory promises made during the election campaign. The sincerity of their campaign promises, internal divisions all this leaves the impression that the Conservatives spent all their energy on election strategy, and, after they won, did not know what to do with their power.

This point was made very clearly by editorial writer Jeffrey Simpson in a very well researched article published in the latest issue of Saturday Night, and I shall, if I may, quote part of this text. This is what Mr. Simpson said:

[English]

What distinguished these Tories from their predecessors was their careful planning for winning an election and taking power. What they would do once in office, however, remained as much a mystery to them as to anyone else. How would they use their mandate? To what strategic ends, apart from re-election? How would they tackle the deficit, combat unemployment, improve trade relations with the United States, pursue arms reduction, raise the defence budget, entice Quebec into the Constitutional Accord, rejig social programs, reduce regional disparity and advance the status of women?

The Conservative answers to these and to many other questions were swathed in the comforting rhetoric of an election campaign whose organizational efficiency and astonishing result masked the persistent and awkward divisions in the Party.

It is not a Liberal who wrote those lines but a very senior observer of the House of Commons Press Gallery.

It is unbelievable that it will have taken eight months for a Budget to be tabled. This in itself would not be so damaging to the Canadian economy if it were not for the fact that this is a new Government. This new Government has made so many contradictory promises during the election campaign that no one knows exactly the direction it will take. Will it fight the deficit on all fronts and meet the demands of big business or will the new Government take the contrary route along with labour and social groups and fulfil the numerous promises made during the campaign? A choice must be made and this is why a new Government must present its budget in the shortest period of time possible. The new Budget becomes the framework, the orientation and the new direction.

For a Government that has promised changes, it becomes even more important that it table its first Budget as soon as possible. In the meantime, businessmen, the labour movement and social groups are in a wait and see situation. This is particularly true of those in the business community who have investment projects and want to see what the new fiscal framework will be. Is the Government going to increase taxes? If so, those new taxes may affect the profitability of business investments. Is the Government going to cut funding to the arts even more? The film producers and the artistic world told us last week about all of their problems. Will they be able to invest before knowing if other cuts will affect their particular businesses?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, putting off the first Budget until late May has serious economic implications, and we on this side of the House fail to understand why the new Government is dragging its feet and does not unveil its economic and tax policy, what with the million and a half unemployed who are waiting for the jobs promised by the Government.

The Government gives two reasons to justify the delay: its desire to consult and the legacy of the previous administration.

The Official Opposition has nothing against consultation. The Liberal Government had also set up a consultation conference, admittedly not as elaborate as the last one. So much so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tried last Thursday to explain the costs of his weekend conference by comparing them with those of the consultation conference convened by the former Liberal Government.

Although we are not against consultation, it must be said that the widest ranging consultation possible was held last September 4 when Quebecers as a whole voted for this Government and gave it an overwhelming majority. They voted for a Government, for a political party, for a political program. So why, after consulting the people of Canada, consult another 136 Canadians even before drafting a budget? As I said earlier, would it be that the Government does not really believe in the policies it proposed to the people of Canada? If only the Government had seen the weekend economic summit as a golden opportunity to table three or four policy papers to explain the various components of the problem confronting the nation and to propose hypothetical solutions, three or four policy guidelines, and then sought the advice of those leaders to know which policy would most likely produce a genuine solution to the problem! No, the Government chose to remain uncommitted.

As expected, there was something for everybody. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) found himself in agreement with those who advocate higher budget expenditures and others who strongly support a lower deficit. The only participant who nearly got rapped on the knuckles was one who dared voice mildly critical remarks against our Prime Minister's pal, President Reagan of the United States.

In fact, the only real issue on which consensus was reached—and I think the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) will agree with me—was the petition signed by 87 people urging the withdrawal of the unemployment insurance program amendments because they affect too many Canadians. I say without reservation that the summit conference was first and foremost an exercise in public relations. Most observers on Parliament Hill in Ottawa agree that the Mulroney Government operates on the basis of opinion polls.

[English]

Yet the Mulroney Government is a Government which is prepared to take action only according to the polls. For the Prime Minister, that is what really counts.

Allan Gregg, President of Decima Research, the pollster of the Progressive Conservative Party, is more important than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or any other member of the Cabinet. What does Allan Gregg say about consultation? I would like to quote Mr. Gregg as he was reported in the Saturday Night magazine. He said:

> We interviewed groups until they were coming out of our ears . . . but there is no consensus on what should be done. We are at point "A" and people sense we should get to point "C" but there is no agreement on point "B". The people have bought the Conservative agenda but not the Conservative philosophy.

That is what the pollster for the Progressive Conservative Party said. Sure, Mr. Gregg is more important than the Minister of Finance and many other members of the Cabinet! What does Mr. Gregg say about the consultation process? In the same article he went on to say:

> —the consultative process would allow the Government to share the blame if results did not match expectations.

He continued:

> "The Government certainly hopes it can bring people around through public education", said Gregg, "and Mulroney praises himself of being able to get people to do things his way. But if he fails, the Government will be able to share responsibility".

What Mr. Gregg has said is that it is more important to follow the polls than to follow the advice of the Minister of Finance. For those who do not want to hear, there is nothing we can do. But for those who want to understand, and for those who want to read the facts and accept that two plus two equals four, the whole exercise of the Ottawa summit was to use the Canadian television network so that the Prime Minister of Canada could share the blame of his failure if the Budget does not work, and keep all the praise for himself if it succeeds.

I would say that the whole process of the Ottawa summit conference during the weekend was a public relations exercise for the Conservative Party and the Prime Minister. The summit was designed as a tool to make other people share the blame for the failures of the Government. The summit and the consultation process were invented by the pollster of the Conservative Party, using Canadian taxpayers' money, to fulfil a partisan objective. All those who participated in good faith at the summit will realize sooner rather than later that they were used for partisan purposes.

As I previously stated, there was only one example of consensus at the summit. That was the petition which was signed by 87 participants asking that the changes presented by the Mulroney Government to the unemployment insurance program be revised, because as designed it would affect too many beneficiaries.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the second reason which was given to explain the delay in bringing down a budget is the financial mess handed down by the Liberal Government. Let us see what does this legacy involve. I shall try to provide a few indications from a paper tabled by the Minister of Finance, and I imagine that these figures will not be questioned as they are those of the Conservative Government itself.

Let us look first at the general economic growth. In 1984, the Domestic National Product increased at a rate of 4.7 per cent. Mr. Speaker, this was the best performance of the Canadian economy since 1976. Still referring to the same document, if we compare the growth of the Canadian economy to that of the member countries of the Summit, in other words, the major industrialized countries, we find that our rate of growth was third in the world in 1984 and second in 1983, right after that of the United States. Mr. Speaker, that kind of financial situation is not really that bad!

In the field of employment, always according to the figures contained in this paper, we find that the number of jobs increased by 2.5 per cent in 1984. If we compare Canada's performance to that of the major industrialized countries, according to the figures of the Department of Finance, we were second in the world, immediately after the United States, and in 1983, we were third.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives can complain all they want, but being in second and third place among all industrialized countries with regard to job creation is not that bad in my humble opinion.

• (1125)

If we look at what happened in the employment sector during the period immediately preceding the election of this Government, we find that, in 1984, the Canadian economy produced 108,000 new jobs during the second quarter, 67,000 in the third quarter and 88,000 in the last quarter. Once more, as the Canadian economy had just been through one of the worst economic crises in the history of the Western world after the crisis of the thirties, it seems to me that a quarterly average of 87,000 new jobs created just before the coming to power of this Government is not that bad a legacy either.

If we look at the level of inflation, we see that, thanks to the 6 and 5 policy, Canada had a remarkable performance which compares quite well with that of other industrialized countries. In addition, when this Government took over, the rate of inflation was about 3.4 per cent, one of its lowest levels ever. Once more, Mr. Speaker, this is not such a bad legacy.

There is also the trade balance and the record surpluses in the trade balance of over $20 billion in 1983 and 1984. I could refer to other economic sectors, such as foreign investment, to show that the performance of the former Liberal Government did not represent such a terrible legacy. On the other hand, I understand that it can be useful in the short term to distort the facts to try to gain a few points in the polls, but while this can be useful in the short term, in the long term, it creates a false image of our country and this discourages Canadian and foreign investments.

Mr. Speaker, we do have a major problem that should be solved, and that is the deficit. However, before they blame the former Government, I would like the Conservative Members and the Minister of Finance to tell us what they would have done in 1982 when we were going through one of the worst economic crises ever without increasing the deficit. Would the Minister of Finance have withdrawn from under the unemployed our social security net which took years to develop? Would the Minister of Finance have refused to implement job creation programs simply to avoid a deficit, he who has just approved budgets when we are in a period of economic recovery? I suggest that the deficit theory preached by the Minister of Finance is generally valid, but it becomes unappropriate in a larger context and over a longer period. In addition, when these people try to prove that the deficit we have in 1985 is due only to external factors, they forget that we had an economic crisis in 1982.

Those people who are now criticizing and saying that it is because of the financial situation they inherited that they cannot introduce a budget, where were they last summer? Why did they go around the country making promises which, according to certain Members of the present Cabinet, would cost $20 billion? Mr. Speaker, there are certain facts which should be underlined. Since this Government had answers and proposed a change only a few months ago during the election campaign, this is the question I ask now: why wait eight months. This is unheard of because in the meantime life goes on. And looking back at the week-end conference we see that the business community was in favour of lowering the deficit while social groups and labour said this was no top priority. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, depending on the direction that will be taken now, what is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) liable to choose, employment or the deficit? This will have an impact on taxation. This will affect consumer purchasing power, and it is my view, Mr. Speaker, that such a delay in bringing down a Budget will be bad for the over-all Canadian economy. We, of the Official Opposition, want to have that major failure brought to the attention of the public.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, by analyzing the figures for the month of January, the Hon. Member will appreciate that for every dollar this country spent it had to borrow 36 cents. In other words, it took in only 64 cents in taxes for each dollar spent. Even if we had full employment, everyone in the country working flat out, we would still have a massive deficit.

That clearly points out the need for a tremendous amount of consultation among all groups in the country so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can come up with new and different methods of handling the problems. Although the consultation will have taken some eight months by May, surely that is not a great length of time, particularly when we did have on November 8 a rather comprehensive financial statement. A Budget means change and surely before changes are made there should be consultation with all of the players in the economy, particularly in view of the massive amount of fiscal problems the country faces.

Is there something wrong with consultation? Is there something wrong with trying to get some sort of consensus as to how we should proceed with the problems? This is a problem for everyone.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I said in my speech that there is nothing wrong with consultation. But I also said that we in this country had the largest consultation process that anyone can have, and that was the election. We had that consultation and you, ladies and gentlemen, have been elected on promises you made. We now need action. That is the point of view expressed in this motion. After the largest consultation anyone can have through the election, more consultation now is not a substitute for action. What we need is action now.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague for his most interesting and substantive speech. I have a few questions that I want to ask. In view of the delay by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in bringing down a Budget, in view of those nine months of dilly-dallying, in view of the commitment to create jobs, jobs and more jobs, could the Hon. Member tell me if, in researching the subject, he has compared budget tablings over the previous years to see whether there had been such lengthy delays in Canada before? And second, could he comment on the Government boasting that they have created 100,000 jobs since they came to power on September 4? Could he tell me how they compare with the previous administration, let us say in recent years?

Mr. Garneau: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I did not introduce this motion without having done some research, because if recent history had shown that most new governments after coming to power had waited eight or nine months, there would be a tradition which certainly would not justify a motion such as this one. Indeed I researched that, and I found out that when a Liberal government—I did not go as far back as the early days of Confederation but to the early 60's—

Even if we except Mr. John Diefenbaker's election on June 10, 1957, which was almost immediately followed by another general election in which Mr. Diefenbaker obtained a large Conservative majority, there was a two month delay between the election and the tabling of the budget. When the Liberal Party was elected in 1963, the budget came two months and five days after the election of a new government.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Withdrawn right after!

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: When on June 25, 1968, a new government was elected, the budget followed four months after the election of that new Prime Minister. On May 22, 1979, I think there was a government that was elected under Mr. Joe Clark, and the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) only waited six months before tabling his budget. Maybe the Minister's comment might be more appropriate in this instance. In 1980, after the Liberals came back to power, a budget followed two months later. But now eight months have gone by, or close to nine. The election took place on September 4, and if a budget is brought down on May 21st, eight months and 12 days will have elapsed.

Now, with respect to jobs, which was the second part of the question, the Government is bragging about having created 100,000 jobs during the first six months of its administration. Now, I am not sure how the month of September could be accounted for since the transfer of powers occurred half way through that month. So taking September on each side to be fair to everyone during the six months previous to the transfer of powers to the Conservative Government, 175,000 jobs were created, and during the first six months of the Tory administration, the number declined by 75,000.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), could he explain to me why the Canadian people voted in droves against the previous government, if not because of its poor economic performance?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) ask this question. We have indicated on several occasions that you have been elected, gentlemen, because the Canadian people believed you when you assured them that you could reduce the deficit while fulfilling some $20 billion worth of election promises.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): A little while ago, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) dealt at length with the late introduction of the budget and quoted a few figures. It has clearly been established that the budget is a little late in coming; during the election campaign, however, the Canadian people heard a great many PC candidates speak about the new approach and direction which were to give investors renewed confidence; yet, as the recovery seems rather slow, in spite of a new government which claimed it could foster confidence and start the economy moving again, I wonder what could be the effects—perhaps the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides who has a financial background could tell us—of a long delay in introducing the budget on investors' decision to go ahead and invest to create new jobs.

Mr. Garneau: It is clear that there are two alternatives under these circumstances. But since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has decided, as he indicated last Friday in his remarks to the Economic Summit, to reduce the deficit, and the expression he used was not to cut the deficit—

[English]

Then he asked in English: "How, how much and how fast?" He also added that it would not be enough and other tough measures would have to be taken.

[Translation]

In reply to the question put by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), I would say that these other measures will certainly include tax increases or changes in tax expenditures, and that in both cases, either real tax increases or the suppression of a number of tax breaks, it will affect tax rates as well as investments.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the figures tabled by the Minister of Finance show that they had made up their mind even before the summit was held, since it was indicated that the employment growth in 1985 would be limited to 1.9 per cent. Considering that our labour force is 11 million people strong, this means that hardly 200,000 new jobs will be created in 1985. This is the effect of the budget cuts which the Minister of Finance announced some time ago and which he is about to implement.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I take the hon. gentlemen with me wherever I go. Some places I go I need them, I can tell you! I always wonder just what one is supposed to do while waiting for the overwhelming applause to die down. I have never quite made up my mind what it is. However, I do thank them both very much.

On a more serious note, which I am sure you would have expected me to arrive at quickly in any event, I would like to say that this is certainly an omnibus resolution. It does cover the waterfront and sets out in some detail the concerns that a large number of people across Canada feel about the inaction of the present Conservative Government. As I read it, it reminds me a lot of the resolution which I introduced in 1982 when the Liberal Government was in office. I recall that at that point we were concerned about the Government's inaction with regard to jobs. We were concerned about the Government's inability to come to grips with the problems of the farming community and its inability to come forward with policies which would adequately deal with the fishermen of Canada. I am sure you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on that very day we were discussing the plight of the elderly and the problem of natives in Canada. In fact, this resolution could well have been addressed to the previous Government with the same degree of validity. It would have been very valid.

As I read the resolution I was thinking of the events leading up to last September 4. As the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) travelled across Canada he berated the Liberals, and justifiably so, for the way they handled the high office of government. I can remember watching with interest as the present Prime Minister laid out the problems of Canada and led people to believe that he had some solutions at hand which could be introduced to attempt to resolve those problems. I admit that he was vague. As I look back now I can well understand why. I admit that he did not put forward concrete suggestions. Looking back now I can well understand why.

I remember his saying that one of the problems of the Government was that it had lost the confidence of Canadians. He said that the actions of the Government in terms of dealing with the unemployed, dealing with the imbalances between the various regions in Canada and with regard to setting up a new arrangement for supporters by way of patronage were unsatisfactory, unacceptable, and must be changed.

I am sure it will go down in history when the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), embarrassed as he was over the legacy that had been left to him by way of political patronage appointments, was attempting to explain that he had had no option in that regard. He said that he had been informed that if he did not make the appointments he would not have a sufficient number of Members to carry on in government and he therefore simply had to do as the previous Prime Minister indicated he must and make the appointments in the way that he did. In what was perhaps his finest moment, the former Leader of the Opposition leaned forward, reached out as he does, and said to the now Leader of the Official Opposition: "Sir, you had an option. You could have said no."

It is amazing what a short passage of time will do for a person's sensibilities in that regard. It is amazing how the Prime Minister seems to have forgotten what it was that caused the deterioration of the Liberal Government in office. The cause was that they were unable, or maybe unwilling, to deal with the real problems of Canada.

When the Government of today sought office it left the impression that it had an over-all plan for dealing with the serious problem of unemployment. I recall the same Prime Minister saying that after he was elected the first priority would be jobs, jobs, jobs. He said it in the House of Commons and out of the House of Commons. He indicated that it would be his priority and he left the impression that he had some views as to how that particular difficult situation could be resolved.

We have waited. Six and one-half months have now passed and there has still not been a single, solitary, concrete proposal on how to deal with the problems of the 1.5 million plus people who are still unemployed. There are 1.5 million people registered for employment, but in actual fact we all know that there are another 100,000, 200,000, or maybe even more, who have long since given up. They have decided that it does not make sense any more and they will therefore go about the rest of their lives without seeking gainful employment. They did not come by that decision easily. They came by that decision because they were forced to it. Circumstances quite clearly acted against their being able to find employment.

The Government misled them in September and October by leaving the impression that somehow it would be able to bring forward programs which would improve the opportunities for employment across Canada. The Government has had ample time to do it. There can be no excuse for a Government which cannot come forward within seven months with legislation to put in place the programs that it used as the basis for an electoral platform. There is an obligation on those who seek office, not only to tell the public of Canada what they stand for, but also, if they are successful, to follow through with the things which they themselves advanced as being the reasons why they should be elected.

The Government cannot substitute consultation for action. I watch with interest as the Prime Minister, in carefully staged performances, appears before the media and sets out how he is trying to get the advice of everyone, how he will take those positions, which are poles apart, and find a way to meld them together into something called a national policy for economic recovery.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: One of the Conservative back-benchers says "hear, hear". I put it to the Hon. Member that it is impossible to take the views of the groups in society that are polarized and find a compromise. What we must do is choose a direction for the country and then produce the legislative proposals that will bring that direction into reality. This Government has failed to do that.

• (1150)

I walked down the streets of Stratford on the weekend. I was asked how the local Member for Stratford was doing. I said that no doubt he was doing fine. I spoke to people from a variety of walks of life and areas in the immediately surrounding Stratford community. Their reaction was quite simple. I asked them what they thought of the new Government. They said: "Well, the Government is certainly taking its time." I asked whether things were better now than they were before. Their reaction was that things had not changed, that there had been no improvement. Those who were unemployed prior to September last year remain unemployed. Those who had difficulty maintaining their family farms were still having difficulty maintaining their family farms. As they talked about the planting season they found that they were having difficulty even now getting the necessary capital to purchase seed, to purchase the necessary fertilizers in order to get on with the job. That was exactly the situation in which they found themselves at this same time in 1984, they told me. I asked small business people whether they were finding it any easier than a year ago. I asked them whether things were improving any. Without exception they told me that this will probably be one of the worst years they have had in the last five.

The policy of the Government is a non-policy at the moment. The sense the Government has tried to leave is that somehow or other there would be an immediate improvement because somehow Conservatives exude confidence, that out of that confidence comes action and out of that action comes benefit, and that that had not yet taken hold. In Stratford I came to the conclusion that if things were bad in 1984, as they were, things were equally as bad in 1985.

I then spoke to people in my own home community. I talked to them about how things were going there. What did I discover, Mr. Speaker? I discovered that there are now fewer people working in the area than there were a year ago, that the over-all economic conditions had not improved, that the opportunities available a year ago are not as plentiful as they were then, and that we have 2,500 people who were previously employed in the Steel Company of Canada and who remain unemployed. We still have upwards of 50 per cent of the construction industry unemployed. We have plants that have announced in the last few months that they will be closing and moving away. The most recent one, as my colleague says to me, John Inglis, a matter which I raised in the House of Commons, is a plant that was given $2 million or $3 million by the previous administration for the purpose of purchasing Admiral Corporation. Having purchased it, having sold the assets, and having had the most profitable year in history, it then turned around and is closing down the plant that was the basic manufacturing plant for its entire chain in Canada. That will be closed down and five or six hundred people and their families will not be able to find employment.

I say to the Government, why not make it a condition of providing public funds that companies must at least maintain employment levels? But the Government cannot do that, that is interfering with the private sector.

Later today we will be dealing with a problem that has arisen over the course of the last few weeks when a bank, mismanaged perhaps, will go under unless we give it assistance. The Government will, as it normally does in those circumstances, dash forward and offer aid. It shows the difference in the attitude of the Government but what happens when a person owes a mortgage to a bank, or perhaps a farmer owes a mortgage to a bank? What happens when we say to the Government: "Don't you think in the long-term best interests of the community that that person should be sustained?" The Government's answer is that it can do nothing about it. That is the private system. If a person is unfortunate enough to manage his or her affairs in such a way that that person cannot sustain himself, then it is just too bad. But when a bank manages its affairs in such a way as to place itself in jeopardy, the first thing that happens is that we are inundated with requests to save the bank from itself.

That is a double standard and we have to look at that very seriously. We will debate that later; I do not want to get into the details of it at the moment. There is a serious double standard in this country when it comes to the larger corporate entities. The Government seems willing, maybe even a little reluctant, to proceed with bail-outs of all different kinds, but when it comes to the private individual affected by the same kind of decision-making, there does not seem to be any assistance for them.

This leads me to a group in society who have been hardest hit, in my opinion, by the most recent economic conditions. This is a group which desperately cries out for assistance, a group that has to be treated differently from all others inasmuch as this group's circumstances are different from everyone else's. I am talking about people who fall between their early 50s and into their 60s. These are people who have worked all their lives and on whose backs and with whose sweat this country was built. Generally speaking they have rarely ever drawn a day of unemployment insurance in their lives. They have worked with industries, many of them at lower paying jobs without substantial benefits available to them. I have been pleading on behalf of those people for years with the previous administration and with this administration. I look at the Minister of Finance and I say to him that there is an absolutely desperate need for policy directed at those individuals in our society. It is unfair that those people, after having worked for all of their working lives, many of them starting in their early teens, should end up at age 55, 56, or 57 faced with the prospect of not being able to find employment, faced with the prospect of not being able to contribute to pension plans and faced with the prospect of not being part of the Canada Pension Plan and contributing during their normal last 10 years of work. Those people will lose not only in the short run because of the disastrous consequences of non-governmental action on the economic front, but they will lose in the long run because they will not be able to secure for themselves and their families the kind of economic and financial security that they had reasonably expected would be afforded to them.

I say to the Government that it did not require an economic conference across the street to come to the conclusion that there was that group in society who simply have to have action and have it now. Neither did it require a conference across the street to discover that small-business people are unable to afford to pay the exorbitant interest rates that Rowland Frazee and others like him charge on behalf of the banks. I could not help but feel ill when I watched Mr. Frazee on television saying that the big problem in our society is the size of the deficit.

Let me tell Hon. Members something. Where was Mr. Frazee when interest rates were rising, rising and rising, and continuing to contribute significantly to the over-all deficit requirements of Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: Don't be demagogic.

Mr. Deans: Where was Mr. Frazee?

Mr. Crosbie: Where were you?

Mr. Deans: Why was the minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) not asking Mr. Frazee that question when he used to mouth off on this side of the House when he was the critic for finance? Where is the Government telling the banks it is time the banks lived up to their responsibilities?

• (1200)

Mr. Crosbie: You are going to get an Oscar—

Mr. Deans: I may indeed.

Mr. Crosbie: —for purported indignation.

Mr. Deans: The only difference between the Hon. Minister of Justice and myself is that I mean what I say.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You will never be in power; that is the difference.

Mr. Deans: The problem with the Conservative Government is that when its members were in opposition they said all the right things. Now all we get is silence. The Minister of Justice used to stand and rail against the banks and high interest rates. Now that he is in government, he has been immediately silenced. We never hear a word from him. In fact, I think he has been muzzled. The only time he ever speaks is when he is sitting in his place. He is not allowed to rise to make a speech or a statement, for fear he will embarrass the Government. Many of us who are here remember how the Tories in opposition talked about the need for assistance for farmers and small business people and for relief from high interest rates. Where are the programs?

Mr. Crosbie: You just open your big gap of a mouth, that is all.

Mr. Deans: We all know that the Minister of Justice, voluminous though he is in his—

Mr. Crosbie: You never did a thing for them.

Mr. Deans: Keep going.

Mr. Crosbie: If you irritate me, I will make a speech and demolish you.

Mr. Deans: All I can say, since my time is up, is that I would be willing to yield to the Hon. Minister of Justice. On every occasion which we have appeared publicly, I have yet to be demolished. I would be happy to have him rise.

In closing, we support the intent of the motion. It is quite clear that the Government was elected without having developed policy to meet the needs of Canadians. The process through which it is going now is one of dividing the community rather than finding an honest consensus. The Government is creating division rather than working toward bringing forward programs to meet needs. This Government in fact is a fraud.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am always interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), because he indicates that he knows what he means, that what he says is true, and so on. Does he really believe that it is not good for Canada to have Bob White in the same room with Rowland Frazee? Does he really think that we should not have consultation with organized labour, the big banks and big industries? Does he really think that consumer groups and others should not be talking together? Is that the kind of government that he would have us run, the kind of government we had before? Does he want a confrontational government, or does he want a government which attempts to obtain ideas and input from all sides of the community? Is there anything wrong with getting input from other people?

Mr. Deans: No, no.

Mr. Gormley: Why are you against it, then?

Mr. Deans: I was going to tell you, if you would listen.

Mr. Gormley: We are listening.

Mr. Deans: Are you really?

Mr. Gormley: Intently.

Mr. Deans: Wonderful.

Mr. Gormley: I am hanging on to every word.

Mr. Deans: Good. Let me say to the Hon. Member who asked the question that there is nothing wrong with consultation, but consultation is not a substitute for action. When the Government of today was elected in 1984, its members had left the impression with the public of Canada that not only had they identified the problems, but that they had solutions. They asked for support on the basis of being able to put forward a new agenda for Canada, an agenda which would include solutions to the problems which they had identified when they were in opposition.

It does not require ongoing consultation in advance of the introduction of preliminary solutions. The Government's obligation is to bring forward its proposals so that they can be debated by those people who attended the conference and by the House of Commons. Then it should proceed with whatever consensus develops as a result of the debate. If it goes out and seeks consensus for the next four years, we will be in the same position as the one in which we are today, come the next election.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member not think that the arrangements with the United States to lessen trade problems are progress? I am referring, for example, to those arrangements in the steel industry, about which he is talking all the time; those in the softwood industry; those on the east and west coasts in terms of a salmon treaty; and those with respect to acid rain. Are not those kinds of things real progress? Is that not real decision-making? Why does he not stand in his place and congratulate the Government for getting down to business and doing things which have not been done for years and years?

Mr. Deans: I would be willing to congratulate the Government for doing things which have not been done for years, but unfortunately I have difficulty identifying with those things. What worries me about the examples used by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is that in fact the tendency of the Government to try to work out arrangements with the President of the United States does not in itself result in a change in U.S. policy. In part the problems rest with the White House, but the decision on whether or not—

Mr. Blenkarn: Do you not think they are progress?

Mr. Deans: Let me finish. The decision on whether or not there will be an easing of trade relations with the U.S. rests in the Congress and in the Senate. At the very time the President of the United States was speaking with our Prime Minister in Quebec City, Senators and Congressmen were moving forward with restrictive legislation to keep Canadian-made products out of the United States. There was ongoing nonsense dialogue with the President wherein somehow or other he said: "Brian, we will do our best. We will see what we can do. We will keep it in mind. I will have a committee study it. I will refer it to someone else". The President does not have the power to change the problem areas which have been irritants over the last few years. It would only be because of our ability to reach the Senate and the Congress that we would be able to change most of the irritants.

The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that we asked the Prime Minister to raise with the President the whole question of sugar quotas, the quotas on sugar-based products, and the difficulties they were causing for Canadian companies and therefore Canadian workers. What did the President do in that regard? Prior to coming to Canada he imposed global quotas which effectively cut off the sale of products manufactured in Canada which contained a particular percentage of sugar or sugar substitute. We said that was unfair. Why was it unfair? First, because it was done without consultation.

Mr. Dick: Consultation first!

Mr. Deans: It was done without any consultation with Canada and, second, without any reference to the International Trade Commission. We suggested that that was the appropriate way to follow. That was the agreement we had with the United States. The President did not even follow the agreement. Then when we asked whether something could be done about it, what did the Prime Minister do? He said that he would go back and talk with him about it. In the meantime, unless action is taken now many of those companies will not only be locked out of the U.S. market for now but will be locked out forever. If they do not get their products on the shelves before October this year, the chance of them being able to build up consumer and customer acceptance is severely restricted. The end result will be that we will lose that market entirely and lose those jobs. The entire discussion between Canada and the United States is a sham at the moment. We are trying to find ways to improve the relationship, and the Congress and the Senate of the United States are doing everything in their power to provide further protection.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I saw an interview with Prime Minister Hawke this morning. He is the head of the Labour Party in Australia. The Hon. Member might know that, as he is pretty self-centered and thinks that the world begins and ends on the NDP benches here in the House of Commons. He may realize that Prime Minister Hawke, as head of the Australian Labour Party, has been fairly successful in having a conference in Australia similar to the one which was held here last weekend. Does the Hon. Member think that Prime Minister Hawke is a fool, a knave, a ditherer and someone who has failed to act? He accorded these appellations to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) because he held a conference. Does he feel that they apply equally to Prime Minister Hawke and that he is a dismal flop in his own country with respect to these matters? Or might he feel that the attempt to obtain a consensus was worth while, as nearly everyone who attended and was interviewed felt, including those in the labour movement?

• (1210)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand the question. Did the Minister suggest that his own Prime Minister was a fool, a knave and a ditherer?

Mr. Crosbie: No, you did.

Mr. Deans: Those are not my kind of words. I use simple words. I can only assume that those are the words of the Minister of Justice. I am not surprised he says that. The Minister says that privately about the Prime Minister. I did not realize he would say it publicly.

Prime Minister Hawke carried out a much different exercise with the people of Australia. He put forward proposals for that conference to discuss. He did not just walk in there and say: "Say whatever you want to say and somehow or other I will try by magic to find a compromise".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. We will resume debate.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), who is not here anymore. It gives me an excellent opportunity to discuss some of the accomplishments of this Government over the period of time that we have been in office, to address the financial and economic problems that we were presented with as a new Government.

I am delighted that the Hon. Member's Party is finally waking up to the needs of the people who are set out in this motion, the young people, women, farmers, fishermen, the elderly and the natives. For a number of years in power they ignored the needs of those people. That is why we have been left with the disastrous economic situation that was presented to us on September 4. It is about time the Members opposite started to think about the people in this country and not solely about their existence as a political Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about Canadians, and the various people in our society who have been seriously affected by the economic problems. We have presented a most comprehensive economic strategy. The framework that was set out on November 8 for our economic and financial policies was, I think, regarded by most people as one of the most comprehensive policy statements that has ever been set out by a particular Government. This was an agenda for change, the change that Canadians asked for by their votes on September 4.

It is a comprehensive and very realistic exercise. It responded very clearly to the needs of the country and the needs of Canadians. It is a very sensible approach to government. It is a new approach though, a new approach that calls for consultation and co-operation among the different elements of society and the different regions of the country. We intend during the course of this exercise to protect the citizens who have been affected and to build economic growth, build job creation so we can address clearly the problems with which we have been faced.

Are we delaying unduly? According to many Members opposite, the November 8 statement was referred to as a Budget. They said: "It's a Budget, why can't we have a Budget debate?" Now they are saying they have not had a Budget. The reason they said it was a Budget last November was that it was so comprehensive and far-reaching in its impact on Canadians. I realize that it has the importance of a Budget because of the extensive nature of that statement. However, Hon. Members cannot have it both ways.

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides said that we have been delaying too long with our Budget. Let me remind him that in 1980, after only nine months out of power, Mr. MacEachen, the then Minister of Finance, took about the same amount of time to present a new Budget, a Budget that was a disaster. The second Budget was also a disaster which left him out of office very, very quickly.

We will wait to see how well the Canadian people are going to respond to the Budget that I will be putting forward during the week of May 20. Hon. Members should recognize that we are approaching this Budget in a way that will get it right and get it right the first time, not fumble away like previous Ministers of Finance and Liberal Governments have done with Budget after Budget which did not address the problems. In fact, they compounded the problems they were faced with at that time.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said that consultation is no substitute for action. He is right. I say that because we have acted in a number of ways and I would like to set them out. We said we would deal with the deficit and we did by cutting expenditures by $4.2 billion in the November 8 statement. We reduced the projected level of spending for this year and are committed to continue to do so throughout the life of this Parliament. We have also acted in putting an additional $1 billion into job-creation programs, linked with training so that those job-creation programs will be career development jobs, not short-term, dead-end jobs, as was the policy of the previous Government. We have moved in the area of social assistance, increasing the spouse's allowance to 85,000 low-income Canadians, mainly women. We announced and implemented a fuel tax rebate of three cents per litre on motor fuels used off highway by farmers, fishermen and other primary producers.

Other actions that we have introduced during this period of time have addressed clearly the greatest need of the greatest number of Canadians. I want to refer to some of these as well. However, let me say that Opposition Members and other Members have focused only on the deficit itself. They have ignored the far-reaching nature of other elements of our economic policy as set out in the November 8 statement. We said that the private sector must be given the opportunity to grow. How have we done that? We said that there are government-created obstacles to growth and there is a need for a greater degree of incentive in areas such as research and development, trade, investment and the training of our people.

Let me get back to government intervention. Over the years we have seen Governments develop an intricate web of regulations, subsidies and other forms of intervention which have slowed down the private sector. This we are committed to remove and we have set out a clear game plan as to how we are going to remove it.

Let us look at some of the actions we have taken along those lines. Investment Canada—removing the greatest obstacle that has been in place to foreign investment. With regard to the National Energy Program, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), is very close to an agreement which will remove the taxation and regulatory impediments to a very, very powerful industry in this country.

The Atlantic Accord on energy development was a great step forward in freeing up the resources of the private sector and in developing the energy reserves off the coast of Newfoundland. The Regional Development Agreement with Quebec was the first since 1974 that any Government has signed with the Province of Quebec, along with the subagreements in the areas of communication, tourism and industrial development.

There is simply no truth that this Government has not been acting. Last weekend there was the National Economic Conference. A few weeks back the First Ministers met. Those are clear steps forward in drawing together the Canadian family to develop the ideas that are necessary, to address the economic problems that we all face. We are all in this together. We saw 135 people last weekend sitting around that conference table trying to understand the position of the other side and putting forward ideas as to how we can address the problems. Canadians can adapt and are willing to adapt, but they have to know what the problems of the other persons are because that is their nature. That is how we can get economic renewal.

It was a sign of desperation on the part of Members opposite when they were reduced to the ritual game-playing over the timing of a Budget. It was a childish response on Friday afternoon because Members opposite wanted to have the afternoon off to go home. They tried to deflect the attention of Canadians. The Hon. Member opposite has had to work because she was at the Economic Conference. I think she learned something. All of her game-playing colleagues went home for the weekend. They took the afternoon off.

Members opposite are trying to deflect attention away from the National Economic Conference by saying that it is a sham and that it did not produce anything. Hon. Members opposite are out of touch with Canadians. They are out of touch with the people who were at that conference. They should say to the people who were at that conference that it was only a public relations exercise and was not worth their time. I think Members opposite would find that there would be a great deal of disagreement with that from the labour people, the management people, the people from the arts community, the people from the women's groups and the people from the disabled groups. All the people to whom I spoke felt it was a very worth-while exercise which did accomplish an awful lot of things. We on this side of the House as well as many Canadians feel that we welcome opportunities to discuss these views together in order to understand the views of other Canadians, because that will help in our decision making.

I would like to deal with the part of the motion which deals particularly with confidence in the economy. I think that the Hon. Member is trying to cast a pall over the things that are happening in the market-place, in the economy and in the real world because Members opposite do not like what they see out there. They are worried about what is happening. Canadians are ignoring the Opposition for this reason. Canadians see the Opposition as being irrelevant. The polls, the National Economic Conference and the economic statistics are saying that self-confidence and confidence in the Government is growing.

I would like to quote from an article in today's La Presse.

[Translation]

In an editorial in La Presse I read the following, and I quote:

> Which means that Mr. Mulroney's team, after six months in power, has managed to win the confidence of all regions and all groups, thereby raising almost unreasonable expectations. There is a caveat there for Budget Day.

[English]

Confidence is a vital ingredient but let us look at what is happening. I would like to talk about some economic statistics that underline the fact that confidence is returning to the country. Recently there has been a real scramble among economists to upgrade their figures. This has happened since we came into power. Many economists have upgraded their figures by one-half of 1 per cent in real growth for this year. A survey done by the Purchasing Management Association of Canada shows that production in the manufacturing sector is growing strongly and that shipments in new orders are increasing at double-digit rates at the current time. The survey also showed that employment and new orders are on the increase. Statistics Canada has said that investment in the manufacturing sector is expected to increase by 26 per cent for this year and that the oil and gas drilling industry is up by 20 per cent. This is a very important statistic which affects not only western Canada but all parts of Canada because of the many suppliers to that industry. We have made a good start by indicating to the industry that we understand its problems and it is responding with its investment dollars and creating jobs as it does so.

There are other statistics as well. Manpower Temporary Services say that there is an encouraging improvement in the outlook for job openings in the second quarter and that that optimism is shared by employers right across the country.

Canadians made a very important change on September 4. They made a change that brought a fundamental improvement to the national outlook. A recent survey showed that Canadians expressed confidence in the handling of unemployment now relative to what they were saying a year earlier. The unemployment rate has gone down from 11.6 per cent to 11 per cent. That is progress. In fact, 84,000 jobs have been created since September. We can do better than that, we should do better than that, but it is a good start.

We have made a good start as well at controlling inflation. We are doing better than the United States in that area. We are moving in a positive direction. There have been no miracles but there has been solid evidence of growth and an improvement in confidence. We need more but we have made satisfactory progress. Canadians are too realistic to expect miracles or to expect a quick fix to happen overnight. However, they know that the fundamental problems are being addressed and that we are dealing with those problems we inherited.

Let us look at the real world. Economists have noted that consumer borrowing has been increasing strongly in recent months. That shows confidence in the future. Canadians are talking with their actions. What consumers are actually doing is indicated by how much money they are borrowing and where it is being spent. Retail sales were 12 per cent higher in January than they were a year earlier. That is a very respectable increase even after the effects of inflation are taken into account.

There is no doom and gloom out there, Mr. Speaker. The doom and gloom is right here with Members opposite. They are walking around with a little cloud over their heads. They do not want to come out from under that cloud. They do not want to face the real world.

I would like to touch on some of the criticisms that have been made by some Hon. Members regarding the consensus-building process. I do not understand it. I simply do not understand why Members opposite say that this is a waste of time. Hon. Members should have listened to Prime Minister Hawke, the head of the Australian Labour Party, because he shares some of the political viewpoints of the two opposition Parties. Surely his words demonstrate the importance of consensus. His message to us was that consultation leads to better understanding, better understanding leads to more co-operation and more co-operation clearly leads to economic growth. That is an excellent example from another country, a country not dissimilar to Canada, demonstrating that we are on the right track in moving toward a great degree of consensus.

I do not understand why Members opposite are so negative. I say they are out of touch with the Canadian people. Only last week some Members from across the floor were suggesting that the Government tell delegates to the National Economic Conference to go home. They mocked the Government and said that the Government had already made up its mind. I indicated very clearly by saying that the Budget would be like that we have not made up our minds but are listening and are open to the good suggestions that are coming forward.

I would like to touch on the consensus that was reached at the National Economic Conference last weekend. Consensus was reached on the importance of the problems of unemployment, interest rates and the deficit but consensus was also reached that we must be very sensitive to the regional considerations and to the impact of our actions on the handicapped, youth, native people and workers. We must be careful that we do not affect workers unduly by the decisions that we might make when dealing with the deficit. There was not a full consensus on this point, but a number of people from the labour side as well from other communities said to us that the deficit is a problem with which we must deal because it is too high. They said that they might have some different priorities but that it is a problem with which we must deal.

Training and retraining should receive top consideration by the Government in order to deal with the effects of technological change. We talked about some of the ways in which we could do this. Business representatives agreed that business should be prepared to pull back from the public trough. That was stated very clearly by business representatives. Government, labour and management all agreed that we must co-ordinate our efforts in dealing with technological changes and their effect on people and people's ability to adapt to technological change. Only through consultation will we be able to address that problem in a satisfactory way. There was full agreement that we must look carefully at access to capital by small business, the visible minorities and women. We must be willing to discuss incentives within this context.

I am sure that it is difficult for Hon. Members to appreciate that the Government is not trying to fool anyone. We have placed our agenda on the table. It is there for all to see. That is why we are getting such a good response on this consultative effort. People know what we want to address and they are coming to us with a great many very useful ideas. The National Economic Conference was the most comprehensive assembly of Canadians ever to discuss with a national Government the problems which we all face. Very positive attitudes and contributions came forward from all participants.

• (1230)

Canadians are not confused by what the Government is doing. They are insisting that they want to be a part of the process. Not only are they telling the Government that they want that, but they are showing it by their actions and the clear confidence which they are expressing in this Government. This Party has the confidence of Canadians. Canadians have understood the message that the Prime Minister sent to them. Canadians have said that we must work together to find ways. This Government has pledged to listen, discuss and plan with Canadians. It has also said that it will act. It has acted and it will continue to act. The next major milestone in this process wil be the Budget in May.

If Hon. Members in the Opposition Parties want to join in this process in a constructive way, we welcome that. However, if they do not choose to listen, pay attention or participate, then so be it, but Canadians have joined with us in this process. Canadians are leaving Members opposite behind. I am sure their constituents will encourage them to get aboard, but if they do not, then the rest of us—all Canadians—will work to solve the economic problems with which we all are faced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, for questions and comments.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said in his speech, in referring to job creation, that 84,000 new jobs since September was not a bad start. How can he say that, when he knows perfectly well that during the six months preceding the advent of this Government, 175,000 jobs had been created? How can he say it is a good thing, when in fact it is a step backwards?

I have another question about the Minister's speech, which concerns his referring to additional confidence. If this confidence really exists, why does his department expect only a 1.9 per cent increase in employment in 1985?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did not catch the last question.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister said in his speech that the new Government has created 84,000 jobs since September. He also said that it was just a start. How can he say that when the statistics from Statistics Canada show that before the Conservatives came into power—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, the second part of the question.

Mr. Garneau: The second part of the question dealt with the fact that the Minister said business has renewed confidence in the economic future. If that is true, why is his own Department projecting an increase of only 1.9 per cent in employment for 1985?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out very simply that the 84,000 figure is better than the performance for the same period 12 months ago. That is why I believe the Hon. Member should be congratulating this Government on its performance in job creation over the past six months.

The second part of his question dealt with renewed confidence. I would tell him that there has been renewed confidence. In my November statement I indicated that real growth would probably be about 2.4 per cent. However, increased confidence has been demonstrated by business and consumers. People are demonstrating that confidence by borrowing money to purchase goods from stores. Retail sales have increased by 12 per cent. Canadians are saying that there is better hope, and for that reason real growth has been increased from 2.4 per cent to 2.75 per cent. Other economists have said that they are expecting real growth in excess of 3 per cent for the current year. That is in response to the improved level of confidence which both business and consumers have demonstrated since September 4. It has been during that period of time that confidence has been improving and economists have been increasing their expectations of real growth.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not it is a question of language, but I am not sure the Minister answered my question. If the business sector and consumers are so confident with the new Government, why has the Department of Finance, in the paper which was tabled on Saturday morning, projected an increase of only 1.9 per cent in employment for 1985, after the increase of 2.5 per cent in 1984? If the confidence is there, why does the Minister's own Department expect that the increase will be only 1.9 per cent? That will mean the creation of approximately 200,000 jobs, which can be compared to the 255,000 or 260,000 jobs which were created during 1984.

The Minister said that consultation is a good thing. I agree. However, if the consultation during the weekend was serious, why did the Minister say on Friday morning:

> we . . . will continue the thrust of deficit control in the upcoming budget. To do it, I need your help. The key questions that I hope you will address at this conference are how, how much and how fast.

The Minister clearly stated that cutting the deficit was his main objective and not necessarily job creation. The Minister asked: "How, how much and how fast?" The consultation during the weekend was supposed to have been on those things, but the Minister must have already made up his mind, otherwise he would not have said that.

The Minister compared the consultation during the weekend with that which was held in Australia. The Minister will recall that I asked him last Thursday if the Government was going to table a position paper. That is what happened in Australia. The new Government in Australia tabled a position paper and sought consensus on a government proposal. However, during the weekend there was no proposal from this Government, except the speech of the Minister of Finance, in which he clearly stated that the objective was the deficit and nothing else.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has squeezed in a number of questions and I will try to address each one.

Mr. Gauthier: They are good ones.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says they are good ones. I am not so sure, but I will do my best to make them sound better than they sounded when they came across the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would like to address the question of employment in 1985. The Hon. Member, as an astute observer of the economic process, will understand the nature of business cycles. When times are good, there is high employment creation. But the normal forces of the economy will cause that business cycle to turn down at any given period of time. We are now in the late stages of a business cycle, so there is a natural process of downturn. We are attempting to adjust upward that downturn through the policies which we have introduced.

As I indicated on November 8, we were looking at some slowdown during the course of the business cycle. I made it quite clear at that time that there would probably be some slowdown in the economic process in 1985. However, since November, people—not me, but business people and economists—have said that they have higher expectations of growth in the economy because of the things that the Government is doing. Therefore, we are looking for better economic growth in 1985 than was expected at the end of 1984. That is progress. It is not as much progress as I would like but we are moving in the right direction.

The Hon. Member said that by my statement on Friday morning at the National Economic Conference I was foreclosing on the consultative process. I am not doing so. If he had read my speech he would not have made that comment. Yes, I did say we are committed to a reduction in the deficit. I am surprised that that Hon. Member, of all Hon. Members in the Opposition Parties, should be attacking me for trying to get a greater degree of control over the deficit, because he himself has stated on many occasions that the deficit, at $35 billion, is far too high. What we are saying is we are open to consultation on how much and how fast, and I received good ideas on that. I think that was a very helpful part of the process last weekend.

Let me also ask the Hon. Member to broaden his horizons a little, to not just look at the deficit but at the range of issues I discussed in my speech. Other areas were discussed, such as trade, technology, training, and all of these things about which I set the stage in my opening remarks to encourage discussion by participants at the conference so that we could benefit from the views of the Canadians who were represented there.

The Hon. Member asked why we did not set out position papers for the Economic Conference. I ask him to think back—although it is a long time ago—to November 8. We did set out in the economic statement in November a very clear statement of the range of options which were open to us. It was a very extensive position paper, if you will, which covered a number of items which we felt should be discussed. That was the framework of reference for most of the topics which were discussed in the Economic Conference.

Let me outline some of those topics. Research and development; technology; training; investment, particularly for small business; trade; policy and trade promotion; unemployment insurance reform; and how to deal with the problems of access to capital by small business, women and minority groups. These were all signalled in the statement of November 8.

That was the framework for discussion at the Economic Conference this past weekend. It was also the framework for discussion in the consultative process which was carried out by many of my colleagues in the Government and it has been responded to in a very healthy and positive way by Canadians right across the country.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose quite a serious question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We as a Party have a commitment to consultation equal to his own. In fact, we have just finished a consultation process across the country with well over 400 groups in 27 communities in which people have expressed to us their concern and urgency about the employment issue. They have stressed as well the point which I believe the Minister has made, that is, that they want to be consulted. They want some sense of involvement in policy.

As an observer at the National Economic Conference, I was struck by two or three things; first, by the sense that within that conference the Government did not, unlike Robert Hawke in Australia, have a sense of direction, a sense of strategy, that it was trying to bring people together. Second, I certainly came away myself with a sense of confrontation rather than of consensus with respect to free trade, the deficit, and how the Government handled changes in the unemployment insurance system, to mention just three.

From my point of view, believing in consensus and in efforts to involve people in economic policy making, that conference will stand out as a case of disappointed expectations. I suspect if the Minister of Finance is honest he would admit to us that there were a great many things about that way of organizing national consultation which did not work very effectively. So I would ask the Minister of Finance what he would do differently in terms of a national economic conference next year or in two years? What would he do to get people to work together without quite as much grandstanding and emphasis on prepared positions? What kinds of changes in the structure of that consultation process would the Minister like to see put into effect?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to answer?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Don't take an hour.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can run it through to one o'clock, if anyone is hungry. In response to the serious question posed by the Hon. Member, I can tell him that it is a question which we are going to address. The private sector advisory committee has said that it is going to be meeting shortly to discuss that very question. So I am not going to foreclose on options which might come forward from that meeting. I can say, however, in the most non-partisan way—because there are Hon. Members from all political Parties represented on that advisory committee—that it worked very effectively and provided the backdrop for what I thought was a very good conference. So I do not want to foreclose on any of the suggestions with which they might come forward.

Let me just comment briefly in response to the Hon. Member's question. In his preamble to the question he said that there was no strategy put forward in the Economic Conference. I will just repeat in one sentence what I said to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. There was a very specific strategy in a number of areas set out in the economic statement of November 8 which provided the framework for discussion in those particular topic areas. That has been followed up by discussion papers on a number of those areas which have been released by individual Ministers.

The Hon. Member has said that consensus is difficult in deficit and trade. We recognize that fact but we did not shy away from putting those topics on the agenda. We knew we were not going to get consensus, but what we were trying to achieve was a better understanding of both sides of those very difficult questions among the proponents of the particular topic areas. That was an important achievement. I spoke to people on both sides of those issues after the conference who said: "I understand better what X said and what X meant". That, I believe, is a very important achievement.

Going back to what Mr. Hawke said, understanding is a very important step to co-operation and better economic development as we work together in facing the problems.

Let me say that I share the view suggested by the Hon. Member in his preamble that there probably could have been a greater degree of dialogue instead of the presentation of prepared positions. I feel that the workshops themselves, the concurrent sessions on Friday night and Saturday morning, achieved that dialogue to a better extent than was the case in the plenary sessions. Perhaps there should be more of a bias towards the workshop sessions as opposed to the plenary sessions, in order to draw people out in a more informal atmosphere rather than in front of the TV cameras in the plenary sessions.

I prefer not to say more at this point without having the views of the private sector advisory committee which represents quite a broad spectrum of Canadian thinking on this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, over seven months ago, on September 4, the Canadian people gave to this Government one of the largest majorities in Canadian history. That majority was based on an understanding that the Conservative Government would create employment. To use the words of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his election campaign, "tens of thousands of jobs" would be created as soon as the Conservative Government took office.

Canada had emerged from a severe world recession with an economy that was showing some signs of strength in that inflation and interest rates were down and jobs were being created, although not at a level fast enough to accommodate our very rapidly growing labour force. Canada's record of job creation has been unusually good for many years but we have also had a faster growing labour force than most OECD countries. By the beginning of 1984 some three million more people were employed than had been employed in 1968, but we still had Canadians who wanted work and could not get it. Even the Department of Finance paper which was made available at the weekend conference says that the severe recession in 1981 to 1982 led to a sharp decline in employment, but by the end of 1984 "the level of employment had rebounded above its pre-recession peak. The resulting decline in the unemployment rate was relatively moderate, however, due to large gains in the labour force".

Nevertheless, the Conservative Government came in with assurances that it had the answers to deal with this situation. Here we are, seven and a half months later, with very little new legislation, no Budget, and we now learn there will be no Budget until the end of May. But at least as distressing as the absence of a Budget is the absence of any thoughtful discussion on the state of our economy. There is room for serious discussion. There is room for honest differences of opinion on the best way to proceed at this time in order to ensure that the recovery is durable and that government policies facilitate economic growth and a return to prosperity with full employment.

It is regrettable that the Government has not been willing to have a very full debate on economic policies in the House so that ideas could be examined carefully and thoughtfully. We had an economic statement in the middle of the Throne Speech debate which certainly put severe limits on the possibilities for discussion, and increasingly questions asked in the House on economic matters are being turned back with partisan shots or are the subject of jokes and one-liners. The Government has made no attempt to take Parliament into its confidence, to explain, persuade, advance and develop argument in favour of whatever plans it has for the future. After seven months we are left to guess and draw conclusions from ministerial statements and positions which are often contradictory.

The economic statement on November 8 cut many Government programs, including the National Research Council. Yet the Government is talking about wanting to encourage research and development and innovation. The economic statement emphasized restraint, yet when the Government's Estimates were introduced for the year 1985-86, they were the highest in History and included large additions to the Prime Minister's personal staff and the personal staff of Ministers. The Government talks about creating confidence. Surely a necessary condition for confidence is order and predictability. Yet decisions are made very rapidly or are not made at all. For a full two months we had tremendous uncertainty created all over the country by conflicting and confusing statements on the social programs, particularly family allowance and old age programs, before the Government finally came up with its consultation paper. No one can regard that as a confidence-building exercise.

On November 8 the economic statement included some discussion of a proposal to make some changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which would require that people use up their severance pay and pension benefits before being eligible for unemployment insurance. At the conference on the weekend some 87 of 136 people there signed a petition against that particular amendment being introduced. So those delegates were certainly not foreseeing a rapid end to unemployment or a situation where people would not need to make use of unemployment insurance. An unemployed delegate who was there said nothing has changed for anyone in need of a job. Things may even have gotten worse, Mr. Speaker, in recent months. The Department of Finance paper shows some interesting figures which make it clear that this Government inherited a situation which was as good as it could be considering that we were emerging from a very severe world recession. The figures for 1984 show real GNE as 4.7 per cent, but the Department's projection for 1985 is 2.4 per cent.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is 2.75 per cent, Aideen.

Miss Nicholson: I am reading from a paper which was made available at the conference and 2.4 per cent is the figure under 1985. We see a very small change in the unemployment rate. We also see a reduction in the projected figures for new employment. These figures were produced by the Department of Finance and indicate a slight drop in unemployment as being projected in 1985, but also a substantial drop in the number of new jobs to be created. I hope we may have an explanation of that later.

The Government has steadily refused to give information about the economic costs of the cuts announced in the November statement, although the Prime Minister in his book published some time ago says that "inasmuch as we are paying for information, it does not seem unreasonable that we should have access to it. Freedom of information should apply to the Department of Finance".

In the time left to me, I want to turn briefly to the question of Canada-U.S. trade. Almost 80 per cent of our trade is with the United States. The U.S. is our major ally, we have the longest undefended border in the world, and of course it is very important that relations with them go smoothly. Indeed, if the Government has some plans in hand to enhance trade, we would certainly want to encourage that.

But our American friends are also shrewd bargainers and very adroit at defending their interests. We would welcome some assurances from the other side, which we have not had yet, that in negotiations on trade with the United States there will be a full awareness of all that is involved in terms of technological transfers and adjustment assistance for some of our industries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I wish to advise her that she has 10 minutes left in her speech this afternoon.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) rises on a point of order.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek unanimous consent to make a statement to the House. As outlined by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) this morning, I believe we now have unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that there were consultations in the course of the morning and we are ready to give unanimous consent so that the House can sit after one o'clock, over the luncheon period, for a sufficient time for the Minister to make a statement on motions, for the Opposition Parties to reply, and for the usual period for questions on the statement to take place.

• (1300)

It has to be clearly understood, however, that our agreement to this does not mean that we would agree not to ask any questions we think necessary in the public interest during the Question Period today or in any subsequent Question Period.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we too would consent to the statement along the lines of what was said by the House Leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather there is unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

STATEMENT ON INFUSION OF ADDITIONAL CAPITAL

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that an agreement was reached this morning to provide the Canadian Commercial Bank with an infusion of capital which will ensure the long-term viability of this Edmonton-based bank. The agreement is a co-operative effort which brings together three Governments, six banks, and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to provide a support package which will enable this bank to remain viable, thereby protecting the interests of small and medium-sized business in western Canada.

The bank recently experienced a sharp deterioration in its U.S. loan portfolio, particularly as a result of lower oil prices. This situation significantly depressed the value of the Canadian Commercial Bank's loan portfolio. The management of the bank realized that they could not continue to operate a viable banking operation given the magnitude of the problem loans. While many of these loans had been considered manageable, it became evident in recent weeks, given the severity of the situation in the U.S., that a high proportion of them should be written off or significantly reduced on the books of the bank.

The management of the bank advised the office of the Inspector General of Banks of the seriousness of the situation on March 14, 1985. Following an analysis by the Inspector General, including on-site re-evaluation of the loan portfolio, it was determined that an important infusion of additional funds was needed to support the continued operation of the bank. It was established that a support package totalling $255 million would be required.

The Government of Alberta was approached by the bank and expressed, at an early stage, its willingness to participate in a support group. The federal Government indicated its willingness to examine ways of providing the necessary assistance. As a result of the negotiations an agreement was reached among members of the support group to provide the $255 million infusion of capital required.

The support package is structured in the following way, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will provide $75 million. The remaining $180 million will be shared equally by the Province of Alberta, the chartered bank group, and the Government of Canada. The package includes a repayment program which requires the Canadian Commercial Bank to pay 50 per cent of its future pre-tax profits to the participating institutions until the capital is repaid in full. The remaining 50 per cent of the profits will be retained by the bank. No common or preferred share dividends will be paid until the repayment program is complete.

The package also calls for warrants to be issued which, if exercised, would result in substantial dilution of equity held by existing shareholders. In addition, payment of principal and interest on the bank's subordinated debt will be postponed until such time as the members of the support group have been repaid in full.

In a separate arrangement the Governments of Alberta, British Columbia and Canada will be purchasing up to $39 million of the subordinated debt of the bank. The three Governments will share equally in this package. It is a vote of confidence by the members of the support group in the long-term viability of this western-based bank and the economic potential of western Canada, Mr. Speaker.

I know that the House shares our confidence in this regard and stands ready to demonstrate its approval of this positive action. I have been assured by Governor Gerald Bouey that, as usual, the Bank of Canada stands ready to provide liquidity for the Canadian Commercial Bank, if requested, as well as for any other Canadian bank.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister inform the House whether the Inspector General of Banks was aware of the situation before March 14?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are still on statements. The question period will come a little bit later. Does the Member have a statement to make?

Miss Nicholson: No.

Canadian Commercial Bank

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that under the circumstances we can understand why the Government is taking prompt action on this matter. However, having said that, I do not have a number of questions that have to be answered at some point which concern us about this particular action.

First, there is evidence that the bank has been in trouble for some time. What has occurred in the last 48 hours or so, or began officially some two weeks ago on March 14, is what might be described as a request for pressing action that is now being met in an affirmative way by the Government. However, I repeat that there is evidence that the bank had been in some difficulty for some time leading up to March 14. Therefore, why was action not taken prior to today to deal with that situation?

For example, where was the monitoring that ought to have taken place by the Inspector General of Banks on a regular basis? If that monitoring had taken place as a matter of course, it might have led to changes in decisions that would have avoided the current situation which now has to be dealt with by Parliament, the Government of the Province of Alberta and the chartered banks. Why were the warning signals which were out there not adhered to? I am thinking particularly of the collapse of the real estate market in Alberta and of the difficulties in the energy sector, both in Canada and the United States. The bank had a lot of investments in this sector. Serious questions must be asked and answered about the failure to recognize the serious downturn in real estate in the Province of Alberta and the real difficulties in energy.

Third, Mr. Speaker, more than 20 years ago we had the Porter Royal Commission on banks which called for changes in the monitoring procedures that affect our banks and trust companies in particular. The changes that were recommended more than 20 years ago have not been acted upon. If corrective action had been taken in the past two decades, the kind of situation with which the country is now faced—and I am choosing my words with care—might have been avoided.

We have some concerns about the details of this particular bail-out. I appreciate the frankness and helpfulness of both the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) leading up to these statements. They were quite candid in terms of what the Government is involved in here. My understanding of what the Government is involved in is that the people of Canada, via the Government of Canada, are providing an interest-free loan to the bank. If it is not a interest-free loan, we would like to know what the terms are. Through the federal Government the taxpayers of Canada are putting up $60 million and through the Government of Alberta the taxpayers of Alberta are putting up another $60 million. The only guarantee that we will get that money back at all is if this bank turns out to be profitable in the future. We are now in a high-risk situation in terms of returns to the taxpayers for their money.

Canadian Commercial Bank

● (1310)

The question obviously that ought to be dealt with by the Government at some point is why steps were not taken even at this late date in the past couple of weeks to bring about a merger within the banking sector itself. Why did the Government have to get involved? This is a private banking system, a profitable banking system. The banking system of Canada, specifically the chartered banks, have the highest profits of any banking system in the world. Why were steps not taken to bring about a merger within the banking system itself to deal with the situation, instead of resorting to the use of taxpayers' money, in the one instance by the federal Government involving all taxpayers of Canada, and in the other instance by the taxpayers of the Province of Alberta?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) placed his questions by prefacing them with the statement. "We would like to know". May I now say that I would like to know a number of things. For instance, was the Inspector General of Banks made aware or was he aware of the difficult situation prior to March 14? The Department of the Inspector General of Banks has been increased and has had its staff increased quite considerably this year. In a function in the Estimates we read:

> During periods when the economy is going through a period of adjustments—there can be a serious erosion of the financial positions of governments, corporations, and individuals which may result in the reduced credit worthiness of certain classes of borrowers. The Inspector General will in times such as these most strongly encourage banks to diversify their lending activity to avoid concentrations of loans to a small number of large borrowers or to a few specific sectors of the economy.

What action, if any, did the Inspector General of Banks take in this case prior to March 14, particularly since the bank's difficulties arose from a drastic deterioration in the U.S. loan portfolio? Had the Inspector General of Banks addressed this particular situation? Was he aware of the size of the bank's U.S. portfolio? Was there a discussion of this prior to March 14?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer both series of questions. In terms of difficulties showing up prior to March 14, the Inspector General monitors all financial institutions on a regular basis and there was no indication before March 14 that there were serious problems within this bank. As Hon. Members, I am sure, are aware, a sudden turn in the financial situation can make the difference between a bank that is dealing appropriately with a difficult situation and something that bears with it the threat of insolvency. This particular problem was triggered by something that happened within the bank's loan portfolio in California which then, of course, created problems within the organization as a whole.

I am aware, if I may say so, of the problems in dealing with financial institutions which the Hon. Member raised around rules which have not been changed for a long time. That is the reason I have indicated before in this House that we intend to produce a paper on financial institutions, how they can better serve this country and how the regulatory supervision can meet the standards of today in a way that we may not have been able to deal with before.

Let me just deal with the guarantees of repayment. In consultation with the support group, we are satisfied that this bank is now a viable bank, that it will be profitable in the future, and that we will be repaid, as will other members of the support group, out of the future profits of the bank.

There was a question regarding what steps were taken regarding a potential merger. All avenues were explored within the context of the interested parties, and this was the most appropriate way to deal with the problems of the bank. It indicates, I think, the faith of the Province of Alberta, its confidence and our confidence in the ability of the bank in the future, and there is a very significant private sector involvement in this arrangement.

I think the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) raised the same question concerning the role of the Inspector General regarding difficulties. I think I have dealt with that question.

In terms of diversification, the bank had made business decisions to expand into other regions. It expanded into Ontario and into California in an effort to diversify its assets and deposit base. Those were decisions of which the Inspector General was aware. They were appropriate business decisions at the time they were taken. It was in a responsible way, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the bank was acting in the interests of its depositors by diversifying into other areas.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell us what the amount of the outstanding indebtedness is in the United States that is being written off by the bank?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the difficulties in the United States account for about $90 million worth of the difficulties which the bank has faced. In order to provide the bank with a viable base, the figure arrived at through consultation with the Inspector General will ensure that the bank is operating in a viable way in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I know this is a delicate matter, but I would like to ask the Minister whether the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is still a shareholder and to what extent. I also have a query about an indication on page 3 of the Minister's statement where it says that—

[English]

I will quote from the package. It also called for warrants to be issued which, if exercised, would result in a substantial dilution of equity held by existing shareholders.

I understand that other banks have taken part in the operation and the Minister knows that the bank cannot own shares of other banks. Would it mean that the bank could not exercise the warrants? If so, does the Minister want to table a piece of legislation to make that possible?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, the warrants which are a part of this package recognize that an equity infusion of capital will be an appropriate route for this bank down the road. The warrants may or may not be exercised by members of the support group. Warrants, as the Hon. Member knows, can be traded to other people for exercise. We have provided a vehicle whereby there can be an equity infusion into the company at a future time.

• (1320)

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my first question about the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Is CDIC still a shareholder of the CCB? Also I should like to ask a supplementary question arising from the answer she has just given. I understand that the warrant can be traded on the market. However, is it legally possible for the bank to own a title to which is attached a warrant that it cannot legally have in its portfolio?

Mrs. McDougall: As I understand it, CDIC is not a shareholder in the bank. It has provided a participation within the support group; it is not a shareholder in the bank. Since the warrants are not an entitlement to voting equity, until exercised, I understand from our advisers that the warrants are an appropriate vehicle.

Mr. Garneau: Could the Hon. Minister answer my first question? Is CDIC still a shareholder of CCB?

Mrs. McDougall: I thought I had indicated that Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is not a shareholder in the CCB. It is participating in the support package, which does not involve an equity investment.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, were discussions held with the Government of the Province of Ontario as a result of the ownership of a substantial number of shares by three trust companies—Crown Trust, Greymac and Seaway Mortgage Corporation—in the Canadian Commercial Bank, given that the Province of Ontario seized all the assets of those three trust companies in the not too distant past and that at that time those assets accounted for about 27 per cent of the total share value of the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Mrs. McDougall: As I understand it, we did not discuss this relationship with the Government of Ontario at the stage when we were preparing a support package. Also as I understand it, the assets of those companies are in the hands of liquidators, not in the hands of the Government of the Province of Ontario.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister. For many Canadians, banking is a mysterious world they have trouble understanding. Could the Minister explain why the Government reacted so quickly in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank and why it took so long to react in the matter of Pioneer Trust?

[English]

Why is there this urgency with the Canadian Commercial Bank but not with the Pioneer Trust situation? Is there a difference that we should understand?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a difference between the two situations. Pioneer Trust had been searching for an infusion of capital for some time. It had been unable to find capital within the private sector without the assistance of the Government of Saskatchewan, which came to the conclusion that it could not participate in an infusion of equity into Pioneer, and the management of Pioneer voluntarily closed its doors. In this case, when help was sought from various levels of government, the provinces, and from the private sector, in their opinion it was a viable operation and, therefore, they were prepared to assist in ensuring its future on behalf of depositors and borrowers from the bank.

Mr. Broadbent: My question for the Minister relates to the $60 million the federal Government is putting up, as well as the equivalent sum by the Province of Alberta. My understanding is that that will be repaid when and if the bank once again becomes profitable. At what interest rate will that money be repaid? Is it an interest-free loan or will the bank be paying interest and, if so, in what amount?

Mrs. McDougall: There will not be interest paid on this infusion of capital. This is a vote of confidence in the economy of western Canada. We believe that with the bank operating in a viable way, this participation will be repaid. It is in the interests of Canadians, particulary those in western Canada, that this bank continue to operate. It has played a key role in the west in the past, and it will continue to do so in the future.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Could the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) tell us now what were the sudden events in southern California which caused certain loans to go bad? What were the amounts of those loans and to whom were they made? There has been mention that $90 million of the bank's loan portfolio is being written off. What percentage of the total loan portfolio does that $90 million comprise?

Mrs. McDougall: I believe the bank's total portfolio—I do not have the figures in front of me—is roughly in the area of $2.8 million. That is its total assets. The problem in California reduced its equity base, so there was virtually no support to the rest of the asset base. The bank did not face solvency problems until this situation happened. It related to a situation in California whereby the drilling industry saw a sudden and sharp deterioration. Realistically and responsibly, the bank felt that it would have to write off those loans. Therefore it placed its other loans in jeopardy, whereas they had not been before.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I could recognize four more Members, and that will be all.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister did not answer part of my question. With respect to the loans which suddenly went sour, to whom were they made and in what amounts?

Mrs. McDougall: I do not have the list of the particular people and the particular loans, but they were within the energy sector in California which, at the time the loans were made, appeared to have a bright future, but due to the deterioration of oil prices its future was placed in jeopardy.

I should like to return to the question concerning CDIC as a shareholder, and I apologize to the Hon. Member. Through Greymac and Seaway, CDIC is a shareholder in CCB. It has been removed. It is not in that liquidation phase.

Mr. Deans: I have one final question for the Minister. I am sure that is all you will allow, Mr. Speaker, anyway. For the year 1983, the February 6, 1984 audit result showed a net income decline of 24 per cent from the results of the previous year on a 7 per cent decline in net interest income. For the year 1984, the February 12, 1985 audit result showed a further net income decline of 88 per cent from the previous year on a 10 per cent decrease in net interest income. Given these facts, why did the Inspector General of Banks not come forward to the Government with a report which would have resulted in a closer scrutiny of the activities of the bank during the last 12-month period?

Mrs. McDougall: The Inspector General assures me that he has monitored the bank in the appropriate way. A decline in earnings does not necessarily lead to a solvency problem under all circumstances.

Mr. Deans: A decline in income.

Mrs. McDougall: Neither does a decline in income necessarily lead to a solvency problem. It can have that outcome. It does not necessarily have that outcome. In the last year the bank was doing well in two quarters and did not do well in the other two quarters. Therefore, the Inspector General was aware of the progress of the bank. The bank was profitable for the first four or five years of its existence. It was after the national energy policy that it became more difficult and was making very real efforts to act responsibly with regard to its depositors and its borrowers.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for making the correction concerning the fact that—

[English]

—the fact that Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was a shareholder in the CCB. The reason I asked that question was because this insurance deposit corporation was a member of the shareholders of this bank. It gave to the depositor the impression that it was a good and solid bank. This is why I thank the Minister for correcting the first answer.

• (1330)

My question at this time deals with the third paragraph on page 3 of the Minister's statement where she said: "In a separate arrangement the Governments of Alberta, British Columbia and Canada will be purchasing up to $39 million of the subordinated debt of the bank". Is it going to be new subordinated debt or the existing subordinated debt that is going to be bought by those three levels of government?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, it is the existing subordinated debt of the bank. It was part of the arrangements which brought us to a successful conclusion in keeping this bank in a viable position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on the last question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Minister said there were indications that this bank was having income difficulties and that these types of difficulties do not necessarily lead to solvency problems. While there were indications of problems that did not necessarily lead to a solvency problem in the end, did these early indications not call for an earlier report to the Government or perhaps an initiative on behalf of the Government to the Inspector General of Banks asking for his recommendations? Could earlier action have meant that the action today could have cost the Government much less in the public treasury?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I have been assured by the Inspector General that the variations in income of this bank—and I think if you look at other banks you will find similar variations—do not bring into question solvency and do not require an initiative on the part of the Government, except to the extent that the Inspector General is assured that management is taking appropriate and responsible action.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.33 o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.33 p.m. the House took recess.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ONTARIO ELECTION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the self-styled Ronald Reagan of the North, the very Conservative Premier of Ontario, Frank Miller, has finally mustered up enough courage to go to the polls after being reassured by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that his cut-throat budget will only be presented after the next provincial election. The Ontario Conservative Party took an active part in the last federal election claiming that it was time for a change, and that having one Party in power for 12 years was too long. That is the same Party that has been in power in Ontario for 42 years.

It will be interesting to watch the Premier make election promises to the people of Ontario. His federal counterpart made 338 promises during his last election campaign and has yet to deliver on almost any of them. The people of Ontario will not be taken twice by the same Conservative Party. They realize that the Government deliberately stalled the presentation of what will be the most treacherous Budget the people of the country will ever see coming from a Government that preaches restraint but turns around and goes on spending for its own benefit.

Eight months of federal Tories is long enough. Forty-three years is way too long.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SELF-GOVERNMENT CLAIMS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Indian, Inuit and Métis people have all called for the constitutional recognition and entrenchment of their right to self-government. Before the arrival of early colonists, aboriginal peoples obviously governed themselves, and they have never surrendered the right to do so. In spite of this basic right, federal and provincial Governments imposed laws and regulations on their communities, while industrial and commercial developments eroded their land base and destroyed their traditional economy.

The tragic conditions in most aboriginal communities can only be changed when Canada recognizes the aboriginal peoples' right to self-government and provides resources to make that government effective. However, the working draft from the Federal-Provincial Relations Office only speaks of the right to institutions of self-government where those rights are defined through negotiated agreement. This proposal leaves aboriginal peoples without any bargaining power as they negotiate with provinces. Only if they are lucky enough to reach an agreement can some part of aboriginal self-government be recognized in the Constitution.

The federal Government cannot meet the needs of aboriginal peoples by pursuing the lowest common denominator with the provinces. The right to self-government flows from aboriginal rights. Next week at the constitutional conference the federal Government must give leadership to the provinces and push for full recognition of that right in our Constitution.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

OPPOSITION TO CNCP TELEPHONE SYSTEM APPLICATION

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, we in Saskachewan enjoy a good telephone service at reasonable rates. The Province of Saskatchewan built its own telephone system through community participation joining together to create the system as we know it today. It is efficient and economical.

CNCP Telecommunications has made an application to the CRTC for a nation-wide long-distance telephone system that it claims will be cheaper and more efficient. Let us look at the efficiency records of railways.

When I worked on the railway after the Second World War, a parcel could be shipped from Winnipeg, Manitoba, and received in Nipawin, Saskatchewan, within 48 hours. Today it takes so long you may have forgotten what it was you ordered, Mr. Speaker. Telegrams were delivered within hours of the time they were sent. Today, if you have a phone and are available, Mr. Speaker, you may get a telegram the same day, but if not, a telegram takes as long as the mail, and we know what that is like.

Let us not forget previous promises and agreements that were to be in perpetuity but were not kept by the railways. Let us not be lulled into thinking that cheap rates charged by CNCP will continue once our efficient systems are destroyed. The promises of cheap rates will be for the short term. We do not want to have to buy our own telephones and switch boxes as we bought our own boxcars, nor do we want to build new satellites as we did rail lines. The burden on the taxpayer to keep the CNCP conglomerates living high off the hog has reached its limits.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PORNOGRAPHY

IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, a recent decision by the Federal Court of Appeal to repeal a section of the Customs Tariff that controls the importing of pornographic material into Canada has mobilized the anger of women's groups about the ineffectiveness of this legislation. The present situation is unacceptable, if we realize that for years, women's groups have been making statements, preparing briefs and publicly demonstrating their demands for inclusion in the legislation of a more elaborate and specific definition of the terms "pornography" and "obscenity". Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that in some countries, producers of pornographic material do not hesitate to torture and even kill the actors and actresses who play in these productions, and who are mostly women and children.

Weak legislation that turns a blind eye will only encourage the production of such material. That is why we are asking for amendments to be made to the legislation as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the women in the riding of Argenteuil-Papineau and women's groups across Canada cannot tolerate a situation where Canadian legislation is encouraging pornography.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, after the election the unreality of the Conservative promises became apparent. For the first six months the Government busied itself in the politics of style, photo opportunities, and information control. Now the hour of having to make decisions is fast approaching. We have already seen, in the universality debate and in the delays in releasing the unemployment insurance paper, that the shift from the politics of style to the politics of substance will prove to be internally divisive. What will the mighty Prime Minister's Office do to control all the loose cannons on its deck?

The Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) expensive office perceives the media to be a threat. The Prime Minister perceives Parliament to be a threat. The Conservatives learned from the election campaign that the Prime Minister must be isolated to the greatest extent possible, and the Tories have been implementing their own rose garden media strategy.

We remind the Prime Minister that he is not the president of our little state of America yet, and that he is obliged to meet his parliamentary responsibilities, including the attending of Question Period for a change.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Government has proposed drastic and discriminatory changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. On April 1 the Government plans to punish laid-off workers by counting their severance pay for U.I. purposes. I urge the Government to follow the advice given to it by countless labour and business groups and drop this discriminatory provision. If the Government is to follow its own rhetoric in terms of consultation, then it has no option but to abandon this cruel and heartless proposal.

FINANCE

GROWTH IN DEMAND FOR GOVERNMENT GRANTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago if people in a small town wanted a new arena, they would clump their money together, volunteer their labour, and build it. Today the first thing that happens is the formation of a committee to solicit government funds. This is the legacy of years of Liberal practice when Canadians were bribed with their own money. High taxation meant that people had no excess funds for communal purposes, and the Government enticed people to become dependent on it for handouts.

The attitude exists today that whatever people want to do, whether it be in the field of sports, cultural activities, communal services or, indeed, even private business, they go cap in hand to Government for handouts. The proud spirit of independence that historically characterized Canadians and which has been destroyed by years of Liberal vote buying, must be returned. Grants, giveaways, and handouts must be discontinued so that Canadians can again become, both personally and individually, masters of their own fate.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT'S APPROACH TO REAL NATIONAL CONSENSUS

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said nearly two years ago in his book Where I Stand, and I quote:

> Our priority must be to restore civilized dialogue and discourse to the partnership of government and to the relationship between the public and private sectors of the country.

Mr. Speaker, after the Throne Speech, after the economic statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), after the First Ministers' Conference in Regina, and after the Quebec Summit, we had the National Economic Conference on employment in Ottawa. This was an occasion without precedent in Canada's history, attracting 136 participants from all walks of life and all regions of this country. There were representatives of the business community, labour, consumers, native peoples, churches, ethnic groups, welfare agencies, the unemployed and the volunteer sector. They all addressed their views to the Prime Minister, and that, Mr. Speaker, is a realistic approach for achieving a truly national consensus.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT OF ELDERLY SINGLE PEOPLE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Last February 7, Mr. Speaker, I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to explain the situation of three women in my riding. All three are the same age, 62, all three pay the same monthly rent, $250, and all three get the same monthly welfare allowance, $427.

The only difference between those three women is that the first has been a widow for five years, the second has been separated for five years, and the third is single. I asked on the basis of what social justice the Prime Minister decided that the woman separated for five years and the single woman did not have similar needs and did not deserve assistance under Bill C-26.

Mr. Speaker, if that is the approach of the Prime Minister, I can understand why he did not reply, for he is behaving like a master of ceremonies everywhere in Canada and he has forgotten his responsibilities. I urge all Hon. Members to bring pressure to bear on the Prime Minister to convince him to change Bill C-26 and set $250 million aside for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) rather than waste $610 million on armament.

STEVEN FONYO

COURAGE OF ONE-LEGGED RUNNER

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to your attention, and to the attention of Members of this House, the exploits of Steven Fonyo of Vernon, British Columbia.

This committed and dedicated young man, who lost a leg to cancer, has undertaken to run across this great country on his "Journey for Lives", in order to raise funds for cancer research.

Starting in St. John's, Newfoundland, he has steadily worked his way across the country in an awesome effort which has few equals. He has continued to run in the coldest and most difficult weather, even against the advice of his doctors and supporters.

Steven Fonyo has already succeeded in raising a great deal of money. But he has done much more. Through his determination and courage he has provided a great example to millions of Canadians, particularly young Canadians.

We live in difficult times. Young people, and even middle-aged people, are finding it difficult to find employment and to acquire a place in our society. The example of Steve's personal commitment and courage in the face of insurmountable odds has become an inspiration for all of Canada.

As Steve Fonyo leaves Saskatchewan and runs into Alberta to attain his goal on the Pacific coast, I am certain the Members of this House will wish him Godspeed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TWO-WEEK LAYOFF NOTICES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, perhaps one of the reasons the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) finds that consensus on economic problems is so elusive is because the things which the Government continues to allow to happen belie the rhetoric which is in vogue these days about co-operation, consultation, and the new era of labour-management relations.

The House will recall that last week I raised the matter of the layoffs at CN and the fact that hundreds of people were being laid off while the company and the unions were in conciliation on a no layoff contract. At that time I also mentioned that those workers were given a two-week notice. The CNR is hiding behind a regulation in the Canada Labour Code which allows it to waive the normal period of notice if workers are receiving supplementary benefits of any kind. The fact of the matter is that most of the people who are to be laid off have not worked for the company for the required two-year period and, therefore, will receive no supplementary unemployment benefits.

In my view, and in the view of anyone who takes a good look at it, the CNR is being allowed to violate the spirit and the letter of the Canada Labour Code, insofar as there will be workers who will only receive two weeks' notice about their layoff but who will not receive supplementary benefits. Those workers should have had the notice which is required under the Canada Labour Code.

If the Government is serious about its rhetoric it will tell the CNR to smarten up and give those people the notice that they should have received, or, for that matter, it should cancel the layoffs altogether.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, after the economic summit which ended on Saturday afternoon, Mr. André Marcoux, representing unemployed youth, said the following, and I am quoting from the Gazette of March 25:

[English]

I did not come here expecting miracles, but I expected more than this.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, once again, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, whether the results of this economic conference would not have been more positive for young unemployed Canadians like Mr. Marcoux and many others, if this had followed the example of the Australian Government and submitted specific proposals to conference participants which would then have been used to establish a consensus.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that there was a good deal of positive response in the various statements which were made by a number of the participants at the conference following its completion on Saturday afternoon. I can tell the House, and particularly the Hon. Member, that a number of the people spoke personally to me and indicated that they were very pleased with the results of the conference.

With respect to the specific question of the Hon. Member, we did have a document which formed the basis of the discussion at the economic conference. It was the economic statement of November 8. That has been the basis of the consultation process in all the areas which were covered. A very large number of areas were covered in the economic statement, and that statement has been the basis for consultation during the period since November 8 last.

[Translation]

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUTBACKS ON EMPLOYMENT GROWTH

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if the November 8 document was among the papers to be discussed at the conference, why was it not on any of the tables where papers prepared by academics were being distributed? Mr. Speaker, as far as job creation is concerned, during the conference the Minister of Finance tabled statistics indicating that in 1985, employment growth will be only 1.9 per cent, compared with 2.5 per cent in 1984. Has the Minister already allowed for the budget cuts that are to be announced later on in predicting this very low figure for 1985?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when we came into office on September 4 last, it was very clear that we were facing a slower economy in 1985. I indicated that in the economic statement which I made on November 8. I should point out that since then, we, as well as many other economic commentators, have indicated that the projections which they made, and the projections which the Government made in November, should be increased because of the improved confidence in the economy and, specifically, the improved economic results in retail sales, manufacturing, investment intentions, and the production and sales of manufacturing companies. There is a large number of specific economic indicators which show that things have picked up since September 4, and I would suggest to the Hon. Member that it is related to the economic statement which we presented on November 8.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION ON CREATION OF DIMINISHING NUMBER OF JOBS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if the situation has improved so much since September 4, could the Minister explain why during the last six months of the Liberal administration, 175,000 jobs were created and why during the first six months his Government has been in power, only 84,000 have been created?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked that question before lunch, and I will give him the same answer. If we compare the 84,000 or 86,000 jobs which have been created since September with the identical period in the previous year, we find that the 86,000 figure is a good deal higher than the figure in the previous year. I think that is a good performance. I do not know why he is walking around under a little black cloud pointing out all the bad things, when there are a lot of very good things about which people are very pleased.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

STYRENE PRODUCTS NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In late February the European Economic Community filed formal complaints against Canada with GATT, protesting the continuation of import quotas. The EEC notified GATT concerning its retaliatory measures against selected imports, including styrene monomer, which would be effective as of April 1. Polysar, a company based in my riding of Sarnia-Lambton, has a world-scale styrene facility and is the only exporter, with exports valued at $30 million per year.

Would the Minister of Finance respond to these concerns and tell the House if we are proceeding in negotiations to alleviate the possibility of higher duties? And are we trying to obtain complete removal of styrene from the list of products included in the retaliatory act?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is very concerned about this matter, as are we in the Government. There are negotiations under way with the European Community authorities on this question.

As the Hon. Member knows, the threats by the European Community are in response to the actions taken by the Government to try to slow down the very happy exports from the European Community of veal and beef. We are in the course of trying to reach some satisfactory resolution of the matter. I am very much aware of the concerns of the Hon. Member, and I will keep him posted as these negotiations proceed.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Earlier today the Secretary of State for Finance announced that the Government was involved in a massive bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank. This involves $60 million in direct funding from the people of Canada through the federal Government in the form of an interest free pay-out, and another $60 million to come from the people of Alberta through their Government. The Minister of State said that there was no evidence that the bank in question was in difficulty until March 14 of this year. Would the Minister of Finance confirm that an official from the Inspector General of Banks informed him last September that this bank was in difficulty?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would confirm to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that, yes, in September I received notification from the Inspector General of Banks to the effect that he was aware of the difficulty which the Canadian Commercial Bank was having with its earnings and was monitoring the situation closely, as is the normal course when banks do experience this type of weakness in their earnings.

There was no suggestion at that time that there was any question of a risk of insolvency. That risk did come to the attention of the Inspector General of Banks on March 14, as my colleague indicated earlier today in the House. We have taken very speedy action in response to the notification by the Canadian Commercial Bank to the Inspector General of Banks, who immediately brought both the Minister of State and myself into the picture.

ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister is now saying certainly departs from the implication which was left by the Minister of State at one o'clock today when she said that the Government had no sign before March 14 that the bank was in difficulty. What the Minister of Finance is now saying is that he was warned last September that the bank was in some difficulty, or that it was drawn to his attention.

Since the Government is now proposing that the taxpayers, through the federal Government and through the Government of Alberta, put up $120 million in interest-free loans to bail out this bank, why did the Government not use the time since last September to get the chartered banks of Canada—which are the most profitable in the world—to assume their responsibility in the private sector to move in and take corrective action and rationalize this bank without involving a bail-out from the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that what I am saying to the Hon. Member now is not inconsistent in any way with what the Minister of State said before lunch. What she said at that time, and what I said a minute ago, is that when the Inspector General of Banks became aware of this, he increased his surveillance of the bank in the normal way, as he would do in any situation where there is some deterioration in the normal operations of a chartered bank. During this period of time there had been a continued surveillance, but there had been no question of the solvency of the bank until it received the shock of the write-down which it was required to take on some of its operations in California. When that shock did occur, it pointed up the need for further action by the Government of Canada, and we responded very quickly to that need.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the kind of follow-up action taken by the Government consisted simply of the officials of the Inspector General of Banks making two or three additional visits to the Canadian Commercial Bank since it was said to be in trouble last September. I would say that this is hardly excessive monitoring of the system. Therefore, since the taxpayers of Canada have a lot of money at stake in this operation, will the Government do two things? Will it immediately establish a special committee of the House to look into the details of the proposed action of the Government? Second, will it mandate this committee to study the regulations pertaining to banks and trust companies over a two-month period only, and come back to the House with very specific recommendations so that we can avoid this situation in the future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me point out that this situation, as the Hon. Member refers to it, is a very unusual circumstance. It happens very, very rarely in Canadian banking practice. I believe this is one of the reasons why the Canadian banking system is regarded around the world as one of the strongest banking systems in any country involved in the international community.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me remind the Hon. Member of what my colleague said before lunch. She is in the course of preparing, and will be releasing shortly, a paper on financial institutions which will cover the very important question of bank regulations and the whole monitoring process. I would think that at that time there will be many opportunities for Hon. Members to become more involved in making recommendations and commenting on current practices of the Inspector General of Banks and the Government of Canada in monitoring our chartered banks.

Mr. Broadbent: More discussions.

PETITION AGAINST CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. At the weekend conference perhaps the one clear agreement which appeared was when 87 of the 136 participants signed a petition requesting that the changes in the unemployment insurance which are due to come into force next week, and which have the effect of making people who receive severance pay or pension benefits when laid off lose several weeks on unemployment insurance benefits, not go ahead. Would the Minister say whether she is prepared to respond to that request?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, these measures were announced in the economic statement of last November. I had the opportunity then of discussions over a number of weeks with representatives of business and labour in order to determine the fairest way in which these changes could be implemented. As a result of that, we announced a phased-in method which would come into effect at the end of this month. We think that is the fairest way to go about it, and those changes will be implemented accordingly.

I would say to the Hon. Member that what was apparent at that conference was that the unemployment insurance program is not meeting the challenges of our changing society. Therefore, the consensus which was expressed by everyone—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Minister's answer is verging on a speech.

DISCUSSION PAPER INQUIRY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, following on the question the Minister raised about a broader look at unemployment insurance, may I know if we are going to have a discussion paper on that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that has yet to be determined. However, as I was saying, one of the consequences of the discussion in the workshop on unemployment insurance was a very real consensus that the Act needs to be reviewed. One aspect I would think would be included is the question of labour economic adjustment and how the unemployment insurance program can be better tailored to those needs.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Earlier today the Minister of State for Finance, in presenting a statement to the House about the Canadian Commercial Bank bail-out operation, said that the federal Government will be providing some $73 million, consisting of $60 million as an interest-free infusion of funds and $13 million as its share of a purchase of subordinated debt. Will these millions of dollars from the federal Government come from an addition to the deficit or from the cutting of programs? If the latter, which programs are going to be cut?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will understand that this particular support operation for the CCB was put together on very short notice. I can tell him that the final agreement was not reached until shortly before seven o'clock this morning, so we have not had any opportunity to consider the questions that the Hon. Member has put forward.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I must say that is rather surprising. When one has to deal with amounts in the tens of millions of dollars, in this case $73 million, I would think one would give some consideration to where they are going to come from. That is not a very good example of sound financial management.

REASON FOR SUPPORT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Minister of State for Finance said that some $90 million in loans are going to be written off by the Canadian Commercial Bank. If this is the case I would like the Minister of Finance to explain why there is a rescue operation totalling some $394 million, of which some $73 million comes from the federal Government alone?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I am not sure I understand the import of the question. We are participating in this support operation with the Province of Alberta, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation which is funded by premiums paid by the member deposit taking institutions, as well as the chartered banks themselves, which as a group are participating to the extent of $60 million. So I think that is a very broad support program for the bank indicating the confidence that not just the Government of Canada but the Province of Alberta, as well as the Canadian chartered banks, have in the future viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the important role it can play in the economy of western Canada.

DECLINE IN BANK'S NET INCOME

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance regarding the actions taken today on the banking question. The third quarter net income for this particular bank was down 61 per cent in 1983 over 1982. It was also down in its year end income, 1983 over 1982, by 24 per cent. In 1984 it was down 88 per cent over 1983. Given that, why did the Government not move in September when it was told that this bank had some serious difficulties? Why did the Government not try to find a private sector solution then, in keeping with the avowed intention of the Government not to inflict upon the taxpayers of Canada the cost of bailing out private operations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my answer to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, we were aware through the operations of the Inspector General back in September of the prevailing situation with the bank and the fact it was suffering some decline in earnings. But as my colleague, the Minister of State, said before lunch, that does not indicate in itself that the bank is in a position of insolvency. It was not in a position of insolvency, so there was no need at that time to respond in the way that the Hon. Member has suggested.

We are hopeful that, as a result of the actions taken over the weekend in putting together this support package for the bank, a private sector-public sector joint package, which I think is a very important point to make—

Mr. Deans: Mostly public.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, it is about 50/50. Both the private sector and the public sector have ongoing confidence in the bank and the position it can play in strengthening the economy of western Canada.

NOTIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister not move when he was told that this bank was in serious difficulty in September, given two factors: one, that there was a serious net income deterioration over a period of two and a half years; and, two, that there was a close relationship between the board of directors of this bank and the owners and directors of three privately owned trust companies in Ontario which had to be closed by the Ontario Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered the first question of the Hon. Member, but let me answer directly and specifically the second question he asked. This was during the Liberal term of office so I can only quote what has been told to me by the Inspector General of Banks. When the Inspector General of Banks and the board of directors of the Canadian Commercial Bank became aware of the relationships between the promoters of Greymac and Seaway and the owners of Crown Trust, and the then chief executive officer of the bank, the board of directors acted very quickly. They fired Mr. Eaton and caused Mr. Rosenberg to remove himself from the board of directors. There was one loan at that time with the Canadian Commercial Bank which was related to Mr. Rosenberg's operations. That is the only active business relationship which prevailed at that time. So there is no connection really between the problems in the Province of Ontario and this bank. There is a continuing shareholding, but that is all.

MINES

CONSTRUCTION OF CARTOGRAPHIC INSTITUTE AT SHERBROOKE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It was learned on Friday that Quebec is about to lose another $70 million, because the Minister of Public Works has ordered that all work on Sherbrooke's cartographic institute be suspended. The decision is not easy to understand since we also know that the Minister of State (Mines) stated last September 4 that he had the support of the Prime Minister, that he had been guaranteed the necessary funds, and that the construction would not be delayed. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether pressure from the three Conservative Members from the federal capital region finally forced him to cancel or delay a $70 million project in Quebec, he who used to defend the interests of the province in the past.

[English]

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to answer the question raised by the Hon. Member regarding the proposed move of the mapping centre to Sherbrooke. As I reported to the House on Friday, this project, along with many others, is under a moratorium brought on by the Government's insistence that we review over 1,000 projects and programs undertaken by previous Governments. We have requested that the study of on-going programs be continued and their review will be deposited soon. It will be available to the Member. In so far as the training program which is ongoing, Mr. Speaker, is concerned, I would simply advise that we have already placed five people from the Department to set up the training program. Twenty-four people will start training on April 1. As far as construction is concerned—

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: The Minister may want to make a statement under Motions. A supplementary question?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to have the decency to acknowledge that this project will create 400 jobs, and saying that they are training 25 . . . What worries me, Mr. Speaker, is that his senior Minister, Miss Carney, was reported as saying on December 10, 1983, that these were useless expenditures. I would ask the Minister how he can reconcile his statement today and the remarks of his leader last July 27: Decentralization is an objective to which we are committed. This is not just an ordinary election promise. The project will be carried out. Which one should we believe, him or his leader?

[English]

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, this project will be reviewed along with all other projects. There will be a decision taken.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is with regard to a statement that was made this morning by the Minister of State for Finance. She suggested that this bank, quite clearly, after this bail-out, will be financially viable and profitable. In view of the fact that it will be profitable, can the Minister of Finance tell us why he feels it is justified that $60 million of Canadian taxpayers' money be given tax free in this bail-out operation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, fortunately we do not have many of these operations, but any time there is a support package like this put together it is important to get together a broad degree of support. In this case we have support from the private sector as well as two levels of government. This indicates to Canadians that good confidence is being expressed in the future viability of the bank.

The Hon. Member asks why certain elements were chosen in this particular package. We believe that the deal which was put together represents the best interests of the Canadian taxpayers under the circumstances because of the type of arrangement that was put together.

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS—SIZE OF STAFF

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, frankly our concern is the Canadian depositors who are involved here. Why is it that the Inspector General of Banks, who has such a crucial role, has only eight field inspectors working with these banks when we now have 73 banks in our country? A great many of them are facing the kinds of problems which the Canadian Commercial Bank has experienced.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would caution the Hon. Member about stating his question in the way that he has. I can assure the Hon. Member that there are no other banks facing the problems that the Canadian Commercial Bank has gone through. The viability of other banks is not in question. As was indicated by one of the Hon. Members of the Official Opposition before, there are steps which have been taken in the past year to increase the resources of the Inspector General of Banks to take into account the broader range of banking activities that has developed in recent years because of the addition of the Schedule B banks.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CHILD TAX CREDIT—NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT PRACTICE

Hon. Douglas A. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last Thursday my colleague, the Member for Hamilton West, brought to his attention the case of the woman in Newfoundland who was being threatened with having her electrical power withdrawn unless she co-signed her child tax credit to that agency.

We now have government agencies in competition with legal loan sharks, called tax discounters, for the child tax credit. I would like an indication from the Minister of when he or his colleagues will bring forward legislation in the House to halt that horrific abuse of the child tax credit system.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in bringing the case forward from his colleague the Hon. Member should not use the one case as an indication that it is occurring either across a province or across the country. I have checked into it. I obviously cannot give the Hon. Member the details today, but I have written a letter to his colleague outlining the specifics of the case she raised in her supplementary question.

The Province of Newfoundland has examined the case. As I understand it, it is not policy, and they have no intention of using deductions from the child tax credit in the manner that was described in the House last week.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS

Hon. Douglas A. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Under Section 305 of the Criminal Code we protect Canadians from loan sharks by prohibiting interest rates from being above 60 per cent. Yet, in that same Act, we exempted tax discounters who are allowed to charge up to 90 per cent. When can we expect legislation to be tabled in the House of Commons that will prevent the abuse of Canadians by tax discounters?

Mr. Speaker: It is a serious question, but it is not supplemental to the first question.

Mr. Frith: Sure it is.

Mr. Speaker: No, it's not. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PETITION AGAINST PROPOSED CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is with regard to the announced changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act whereby severance pay and pension will be considered income for UI purposes.

The only consensus reached on the weekend at the federal economic conference was a petition handed to the Prime Minister and signed by 81 our of the 136 registered delegates. That petition called for the abandonment of the proposal. Without any bamboozling, flimflammery, or jiggery-pokery, is the Minister prepared to abandon the proposal and agree with the consensus reached at the conference?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member could not have been at the National Economic Conference, as some of his colleagues were, so that he could have heard the many positive proposals that were put forward in the area of unemployment insurance. As I mentioned earlier, there was a consensus that the unemployment insurance program of today is not meeting some needs, particularly in the field of labour adjustment. It is for that reason that the Government intends to go forward with a review of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

REQUEST THAT IMPLEMENTATION BE POSTPONED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has refused to deal with the substantive issue that the one consensus reached was that she abandon this scheme to treat severance pay and pension income as earned income for UI purposes. Is she now at least prepared to postpone the implementation of this program on April 1 to enable us to have the proper consultation with those involved across the country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member was not listening when I answered that question earlier today in the House of Commons. It may not have been as sharply put, but it was asked before today and I answered it.

What he is missing, which he might have gained had he been at the conference, is that those measures must be seen in the context of an over-all look at labour economic adjustment. Those are the things we will be dealing with in the whole review of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PRICE OF WINTER WHEAT

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. The seeded acreage of winter wheat has increased significantly in the Province of Saskatchewan. Many farmers quite rightly believe that winter wheat should be priced independently, in a different pricing pool, from spring wheat. Will the Minister assure producers that he will examine the possibility, before the harvest of winter wheat, of placing winter wheat in its own pricing pool?

• (1450)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): The Hon. Member raises an interesting question, Mr. Speaker. He is quite right. There has been a substantial increase in the acreage seeded to winter wheat. It looks like the crop will come through the winter in good shape. No doubt there will be more bushels of winter wheat harvested this year than in the past. That matter has been raised with me by many producers. I am in the process of taking it up with the Wheat Board to see if we can have a separate pool for winter wheat to reflect its economic value properly on the world market. I thank the Hon. Member for his representation.

Oral Questions

BEEF IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Minister. Last December the Government invoked the meat import law in response to the EEC dumping subsidized beef into Canada. Since then the Government has been retreating on these quotas which it has imposed. The Government has increased the United States quota from 21 million pounds to 65 million pounds. The Government is in the process of negotiating an increase of the EEC quota from 5.9 million pounds to 33 million pounds. Why is the Government backing down under pressure from the EEC and the United States, and not protecting the interests of the Canadian livestock industry?

Mr. Gauthier: Where's the beef?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): I thank the Hon. Member for his question, Mr. Speaker. To bring the Hon. Member for Algoma up to date on what is happening, Canada invoked, for the first time, provisions under the Meat Import Act, which the previous Government should have done in the previous fall.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: We have told our trading partners that we are prepared to negotiate with them to try to arrive at an agreement satisfactory to everybody. If we cannot arrive at a negotiated settlement, we are prepared to invoke the Act. In the meantime the European Economic Community has threatened retaliation. The Minister for International Trade is working with the EEC to work out a satisfactory arrangement that at the same time protects the meat industry while being fair to the other commodities against which the EEC has threatened to retaliate.

We have not increased the quota to anybody as yet. If the Hon. Member has information that I do not have, I would very much like to know where he got it.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge in the trade. The Ministers should be reading their briefing notes better.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: I just want to point out that this is one of the most cowardly retreats the Government has ever undertaken. The Government is totally abandoning the beef producers.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why did you not invoke the law?

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister not prepared to march into the GATT tribunal, and stand up and fight for the farmers and the beef producers of this country, instead of taking the cowardly action that has been taken?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, if we wanted to talk about cowards we would certainly have to talk about the behaviour of the Government from 1974 to 1975 to 1976 when it did absolutely nothing for the beef producers country when that Government could very well have done so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Right on.

Mr. Mayer: Let me also tell the Hon. Member that it was not an act of cowardice when this Government invoked the Meat Import Act which this Party and the New Democratic Party supported when it was passed by the previous Government. We are not being cowards. We are living up to our responsibilities on behalf of the total agricultural industry to see that we have a chance to trade, and to trade fairly, internationally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Prime Minister, but in his absence I will put it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why did the Government commit itself to the development of space based system technologies in the North Warning System agreement when the development of space based systems is forbidden by the ABM Treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Would the Hon. member quote specifically from the portion of the agreement to which he is referring, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I would have thought the Secretary of State would have had that at his fingertips.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It is forbidden by the treaty.

Mr. Deans: It is bad enough when you have to tell the Minister what is in his agreements.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I was under the impression that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was aware of what was in the treaty.

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Secretary of State has promoted SDI's effects on job creation. Will he also table in the House all the studies done by his Government into the effects of SDI on arms control agreements?

Mr. McKnight: Order Paper.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what is abundantly clear is that I am aware of what is in the agreement and the Hon. member is not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He demonstrated that by refusing to quote his sources.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

SALE OF CANDU REACTORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the context of recent developments, we recall that a year ago the party to which he belongs was firmly against the star war. A month ago they were quite prepared to let President Reagan forge ahead with his program, but today they are interested only in the number of jobs which this program might create in Canada. I would like to ask the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether this Government, primarily concerned with jobs creation rather than debates on international policy, intends to change our Canadian policy and authorize the sale of CANDU reactors to any country, even if it is not signatory to the non-proliferation treaty, so that there will be more jobs—indeed we did lose jobs because we had international safeguards which made Canadians proud?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of accepting the suggestion of the Hon. Member that we should remove the safeguards that have normally affected the sale of CANDUs. I am surprised that the Hon. Member would make that suggestion here on the floor of the House of Commons.

Let me also take the opportunity to remind the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, as he well knows, that both I and the Prime Minister speaking on Friday made it abundantly clear that any activities with which Canada might become involved with regard to the SDI project will be entirely consistent with the principles of the ABM treaty which this Government supports.

Mr. Chrétien: I did not suggest that the Government should do that, Mr. Speaker.

AIRPLANE SALES INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, the way the Government is acting today, with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is that the only criterion the Government is employing to try to sell star wars or SDI to Canadians is the creation of jobs. If it is the only preoccupation, we should be consistent in Canada and give the highest priority and start to sell, for example, Buffalo airplanes that we have refused to sell to some countries because we did not want those planes to be involved in war.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the bow and arrow were being researched today, that Hon. Member and his Party would try to pretend they are part of the Stragegic Defence Initiative.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The serious question that is at issue here is whether or not Canada is going to carry on its tradition of being involved in peaceful uses of space. We have done that with regard to the Radar Sat project which helps to forecast droughts. We have done that with regard to the Canadarm project which helped repair satellites. Does the Hon. Member and his Luddite Party want us to back away from all these activities too?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Are you for it? You sold your soul.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—INTEREST-FREE LOAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns the bail-out of the bank this morning. When the farmers are in trouble, the banks and the Government are always saying "too bad". When home owners are in trouble, the banks and the Government are always saying "too bad". When small businesses are in trouble the banks and the Government are always saying "too bad". In light of that, on behalf of ordinary Canadians, why does the Government step in with an interest-free loan to bail out a bank when the Banking sector is the most profitable sector of the Canadian economy today?

Point of Order—Mr. Blackburn (Brant)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looked behind the circumstances of this particular support action he would see that the reason for us trying to work together with the private sector as well as with the Province of Alberta is that it is very important that we do not see any further deterioration of the Canadian Commercial Bank's operations because of the impact it would have on the economy of western Canada and the small business people there who are borrowing money from the bank and who might have their loans called prematurely and not be able to get alternate sources of financing. It is for that reason we felt it important to do everything we can to ensure the on-going viability of the bank. We believe the support operation that was put together over the weekend will achieve that.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the chartered banks have made millions of dollars off the people of western Canada.

ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS AND FISHERMEN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Will he use this as a precedent and provide interest-free loans to farmers, fishermen, and small business, because they are the organizations and groups which create real, long-term jobs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that small businessmen, farmers, and fishermen are very important participants in the Canadian economy. This is why we took action in the November 8 statement to provide, in the case of farmers, fishermen, and other primary producers, relief from the farm fuel sales tax. We have the interests of these parts of the economy very much in mind in the policies of the Government.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

CALL FOR RETENTION OF CANAGREX

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on Friday, March 22, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST TO TABLE DOCUMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), in a very flippant way, asked me a question. He knows the rules of the House, that when I am putting a supplementary question, I cannot answer a question at the same time. However, I do have the source in the ABM treaty, if the Minister should like me to read it now. May I have that right?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that is not a point of order. I appreciate the Hon. Member's difficulty but it is not a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): With all due respect, he also refused to answer my second question as a result of that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I presume the Hon. Member knows full well that he should give notice to the Table of a late show intent and use that provision which is available to him.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as you well know, by unanimous agreement of the House we can do anything at a given time. It has been indicated by the Official Opposition that it would be in agreement with the Hon. Member tabling or reading out the section which was requested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I am sure the Government, having asked the question, would now give unanimous agreement for the Hon. Member to make the statement requested by the Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He wants to table a newspaper clipping.

Mr. Chrétien: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: My goodness, we did well during Question Period; I am not quite sure what has happened.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have a bunch of Henny Youngmans on the other side.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) seeking unanimous consent for something?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, yes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, particularly to my right.

Mr. Gauthier: Expel them.

Mr. Speaker: Do I take it the Hon. Member is seeking to have a Private Member, not a member of Cabinet, table a document through unanimous consent?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member also knows that traditions and standing rules in Beauchesne's and elsewhere prevent any Private Member, other than a member of the Cabinet, attempting to table a document through unanimous consent. I am therefore not—

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Therefore I cannot accept the request for unanimous consent for the tabling of the document.

David MacDonald, Emergency Co-Ordinator, African Famine. I believe as a result of consultations that there would be unanimous consent to have the report referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 83, 111 and 251.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

REPLACEMENT OF SIGNS

Question No. 83—Mr. Angus:

1. In the past year, how many construction and permanent signs within the jurisdiction of the Government were replaced, modified or repainted in order to display the name of the new Minister of each relevant Department and what was the total cost?

2. Are more signs scheduled to be changed to accommodate the names of the Minister of the new Government and, if so, how many?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. Ministers' names are applied only to project site signs and to signs for Ministers' offices. Names are normally replaced on project side signs by means of vinyl overlays, which are made available by Supply and Services Canada; 43,240 overlays have been provided during the past year in response to departmental requests, which would permit modification of 21,620 project site signs. In addition, 38 signs were refurbished to replace Ministers' names. The total cost of all the changes is $12,575. This does not include the time spent by departmental staff in applying the overlays.

2. Changes to the names of Ministers on signs are not subject to a schedule. However, few additional changes are anticipated.

Question No. 111—Mr. Boudria:

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Since September 4, 120 contracts and three amendments have been awarded.

0 — 499	44	$12,241
500 — 999	15	$10,645

CSIS—ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 251—Mr. Nunziata:

In what cities will the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service be establishing offices, and where offices are established, will CSIS be sharing accommodation with the RCMP?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Although at the present time CSIS is sharing accommodation with the RCMP at some locations, this will be temporary, and eventually all CSIS offices will be in accommodation separate from the RCMP. Also, there are no plans to establish CSIS offices in cities other than those in which they are presently located, and they are as follows:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—THE ECONOMY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Garneau:

That this House regrets that the Government has further postponed a budget thereby assuring that it will have gone more than eight months in office without taking any concrete action to create jobs and to establish the kind of economic confidence necessary for the realization of the hopes and aspirations of all Canadians, in particular, women, young people, farmers, fishermen, the elderly, natives and, above all, the almost one-and-one-half million unemployed.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking earlier, I had begun to talk about trade arrangements between Canada and the United States. I had been pointing out that while our relationship with out greatest ally and chief trading partner is extremely important to us, it is also important that we negotiate well in all these matters because the United States has certainly shown itself very adroit in protecting its own interests in the past.

The United States complained long and hard about our Foreign Investment Review Agency, but that country itself prohibits or restricts foreign investment in many sectors of its economy—in coastal and freshwater shipping, aviation, nuclear and hydro generating, communications, financial industries, real estate, fishing, some mineral leases, dredging and salvaging operations, and the defence industries. As the House knows, the net of defence industries is cast very wide.

A comparison of relative investment is quite interesting. For instance, mining is approximately 40 per cent foreign controlled in Canada and approximately 5 per cent in the United States; oil and gas, something between 50 per cent and 60 per cent foreign controlled in Canada as against 18 per cent in the U.S.; and manufacturing, something around 48 per cent foreign controlled in Canada compared with 3 per cent in the United States. The whole basis on which to consider investment policy in the two countries is different.

The U.S. economy, which is so greatly admired by the Government opposite, is not without problems. Some of those problems may impact upon us unless we plan carefully to protect ourselves. The United States has an enormous trade deficit. If at some point it becomes concerned about it and decides to act on it, we will certainly be open to injury. For instance, Ontario alone exports more into the United States than does Japan. The United States also has an enormous deficit which, of course, is fuelled by enormous defence spending. This is a situation which may change. International banking institutions may very well become concerned about the fact that the United States is so greatly over-extended by some standards. If there are major changes in the way the international community looks at this, we might be very vulnerable if indeed we have put all our eggs into that basket without proper negotiation and safeguards.

Approximately 80 per cent of our trade is now with the United States. Does the Government plan to leave that more or less as it is and to continue, as did the Liberal Government, to encourage exporters to find other markets, particularly Pacific Rim countries, or is the intention to lock us in more closely with the United States? These are things to which we should know the answers.

In talking about trade arrangements, particularly a trade treaty with the United States, it is impossible to do that unless one also looks at the whole question of emerging technologies, emerging competition from the less developed countries, the effect of this on our own industries and the need to protect our people, be it with retraining grants or labour adjustment programs. This whole package needs to be considered very carefully.

It may very well be that the Government is considering all this, but we do not know because less and less is being debated in this House. More and more is being dealt with by way of press release and statements outside the House. There are very few things that are more important to us than the present state of the economy. All of us were elected by people who have had an enormously difficult time living through the recession. They are hurting and are looking for some help.

When we began this session, the position of the Official Opposition was, and still is, that any measures that are put forward by the Government that are constructive we will support. That is still our position, but it gets increasingly difficult because we are not seeing measures introduced in the House. Our questions are not answered. They are responded to by one-liners. The Government seems to be still fighting the last election.

May I end by making a plea that this Government proceed to take its responsibilities, give leadership and take us into its confidence. Try and deal in a civilized and responsible fashion with the Members of the Opposition, and you will find very ready co-operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the motion before the House today introduced by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) on behalf of the Liberal Party. The motion condemns the Government for not bringing in a Budget by this time. It talks about the importance of jobs in this country and mentions many groups in our society, such as young people, farmers, fishermen, the elderly and native people.

I want to say at the outset that I cannot recall in all my years in the House a newly elected Goverment taking so long to bring in a Budget. Last November, of course, we had an economic statement by the Government. In that statement we saw some indication of the way this Government wants to go. We saw them being Liberals once again. They brought in the 1 per cent increase in the sales tax which the Liberal Minister of Finance, "old ironclad", introduced in this House about a year or so ago. They announced that they would increase the price of fuel in this country up to the world level. That showed some indication of where this Government wants to go.

We saw in the economic statement the program of restraint being practised by the Government whereby it cut several billion dollars off government spending. I assume by doing this, instead of creating jobs in this country the Government is creating more unemployment. It was slowing down the national economy, putting less money into the hands of ordinary Canadians. Therefore, ordinary Canadians had less money to spend.

That is the opposite direction that we as a nation should be going at this time. I remember very well the election campaign of last summer. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then Leader of the Opposition, said time and time again across this country that there were really three issues in the campaign: jobs, jobs, jobs. At that time I expected that if the Conservatives won the election, we would have an early Budget and the emphasis would be on job creation. I was very surprised to see that Budget put off by several months and to see it further delayed now until the latter part of the month of May. He has broken a campaign promise. He has a very important mandate to deliver jobs for ordinary Canadians.

On September 4 there were about 1.5 million Canadians unemployed. As I stand here today at the end of March, there are still about 1.5 million Canadians unemployed. Where is the difference? What changes have there been in terms of what the Prime Minister has done?

I remember the beginning of July when the Prime Minister held a caucus with some of his western candidates in the City of Prince Albert. He said: "Elect me as Prime Minister and overnight there will be the creation of thousands of jobs". I know wise Members like the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) would not have made that kind of statement. He knows there is nothing magical about this. It is no wonder the Government failed. It could not create those jobs overnight.

Let us look at the most recent unemployment stats that came out a few weeks ago for the month of February. I find that unemployment in Canada in the last year has gone up in seven of our ten provinces. We find that in almost all parts of Canada. The unemployment rate is getting worse instead of better. That is why the priority of this House has to be the creation of jobs. That has to be the priority.

I was very disappointed at the reaction of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) at the National Economic Conference held in Ottawa a few days ago. There seemed to be a big split. The bankers and big business on one side were saying that the priority of this country had to be the deficit; to cut back on the deficit was the way to go, in the direction of Billy Bennett of British Columbia. That seemed to be what the bankers and big business were saying.

On the other side we had community groups, labour and other groups representing ordinary Canadians which said that the most important priority has to be the creation of jobs. One of the consequences of the creation of jobs in this country is that in the long run it would bring down the deficit in Canada. We would once again become a nation of producers, a nation of doers, producing goods and commodities for Canadians, producing those things that we can use in this country. If we bring down the unemployment rate, we would also be reducing the pay-out from the federal Government of unemployment insurance funds and reducing the pay-out from provincial Governments of welfare cheques.

For the life of me, I do not know why the Government goes through a consultation process if it is not going to listen to what it hears and if it is not going to act on what Canadians are saying. It is very clear that they are saying that the deficit is not the priority. They are saying the Government should spend money to create jobs, help small business, the farmers, fishermen and loggers. They say it should help the base industries in this country and from there there will be a ripple-up effect and the creation of jobs in this country. Instead of that ripple-up, this Minister is following some of the old Liberal policies of a trickle-down theory: government welfare for the rich, government welfare for the banks and the big companies, government welfare for those that have while the ordinary citizen has to pay a bigger and bigger tax bill.

I am sure some of the Tory back-benchers are embarrassed by their Government's continuation of old Liberal policies. I ask those back-benchers to rise and say what they think and to make sure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) keeps his promise that the most important priority in the country is jobs. As it was during the campaign, the most important priority in Parliament must be jobs. That is the reason we were all elected. That is our mandate. Yet we see no significant improvement whatsoever in job creation in the country.

During the last two months, I along with the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and other members of this caucus had an opportunity to go across the country to speak to ordinary Canadians about jobs and about the future of our land. Two or three things I heard struck me as being very significant. First, the people say unanimously that the priority of this Parliament must be jobs and that politicians should stop fighting and bickering and come up with some national vision indicating how we might create those jobs.

Second, and I was surprised when I heard this in places like Newfoundland, the Canadian people are hopeful that something can be done. They are optimistic. There is hope in the face of adversity. There is hope that we as a country can get our act together and create jobs for Canadians from coast to coast.

The third thing that struck me was that there is a national consensus among Canadians from one part of Canada to the other that there are no magical solutions and no experts in national economic policy. Instead, they feel we should be putting a lot more say and a lot more money into the hands of ordinary Canadians from coast to coast so that ordinary Canadians in each community may control the economy of their own particular community.

Canadians are saying that we need more programs directed toward self-reliance in the various communities across the country. They say we need more programs to promote small business and worker co-ops and that there should be more programs to promote local municipalities so that they can have a say over the direction their community is headed.

I found that if there was a major theme in terms of critiques of what has happened in the past and up until now, it has been that we have had too many programs that have been centrally imposed on communities from coast to coast, that we have had insensitive bureaucracy and insensitive, centralized government that does not understand the needs of ordinary folk from one part of Canada to the other. I will never forget that in Newfoundland we heard criticism of over-centralization not just in Ottawa but also in St. John's. We heard that the provincial capitals are not giving enough assistance to the people to enable them to make their own local decisions. I am speaking of more economic and industrial democracy so that farmers will have more say over farm policies and fishermen will have more say over fisheries policies. There should be more assistance to small businesses and local co-op groups in order to allow them to do things on their own.

The projects to which I have referred may not be large projects. There has been a great deal of criticism of megaprojects, those grandiose schemes that over a few years would create tens and tens of thousands of jobs. Ordinary folk are talking about creating five or six jobs here and 10 or 20 jobs there. In British Columbia the same can be said of the logging industry. We could begin to process and manufacture more of our wood products in our own country. On the Prairies there are all kinds of ideas about building on our bases of grain and oil. We could give more federal Government assistance and aid to local and community initiatives thought up by ordinary people.

Time and time again it was pointed out to me that ordinary people had a much better idea about what would be viable in their own communities than some bureaucrat in Ottawa or some bureaucrats in the provincial capitals. This is the direction ordinary Canadians tell us they wish to take. They want a Government that will respond to that wish. They want more funding for local initiatives and worker co-ops. They want more technical assistance in the setting up and establishing of worker co-ops. The Government should take a look at the experiences of France and Spain with regard to worker co-ops. The people want more aid and assistance to small business.

There was a lot of criticism of government policy. We were told that too much is given to big business. Approximately 70 per cent to 80 per cent of funding to business goes to big businesses like the oil companies and very little goes to small business, the sector in which most of the jobs are created in the first place. That is the direction ordinary Canadians wish to take.

In addition, we heard that we should have a made-in-Canada interest rate policy. If we were to have a made-in-Canada interest rate policy and we brought down the real interest rate by 3 or 4 per cent, we would kick-start the economy. We could provide low-interest loans to home owners, farmers, fishermen and small business people so they could expand their businesses, build houses and put up structures across the nation. This would put Canadians back to work. Many countries have done that. However, it seems to me that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is afraid to take a step that is out of sync with the steps taken by Mr. Reagan in the United States.

It seems to me, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) would agree with me, that there is a two-pronged economic policy in Canada. The Government relies on private sector big businesses and on the United States and Mr. Reagan. Those are the two things upon which the Government relies for economic recovery in Canada. We say that that will not work. That will not put Canadians back to work. We must start doing things on our own. Interest rate policy is very important and I think that is something to which the Government must address itself.

The Conservative Premier of Alberta spoke about a real interest rate in Canada of approximately 4 per cent. With the rate of inflation at 3.5 per cent or 4 per cent, he is talking about a 7 per cent interest rate rather than the 11 per cent interest rate we now have which is set by the Bank of Canada.

I ask a very sincere question, Mr. Speaker. Sitting in the chair, I know you must ask this question of yourself very often, Mr. Speaker. What is the difference between the previous Liberal Government and the Government that sits across the way?

[Translation]

We still have the same Public Service, the same President of the Bank of Canada and the same Deputy Minister to the Minister of Finance in this country. We have the same monetary policy. There is someone down there who agrees with me. He said he agreed. He happens to be a Conservative backbencher.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the present Government's monetary policy is exactly what we had under the Trudeau Government two or three years ago. Mr. Bouey is taking the Government's decisions, not the Minister of Finance, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will agree, because I remember distinctly that when he was on this side of the House two or three years ago, he often asked why we did not have an independent monetary policy in this country. He often spoke about about the need for helping small- and medium-sized businesses, farmers and fishermen and for helping average Canadians with their mortgages. I ask you, Mr. Speaker: What is the difference?

Mr. Rodriguez: There is no difference!

Mr. Nystrom: There is no difference. Mr. Mulroney is a reincarnation of Mr. Trudeau. Everything is exactly the same. There may be a slight difference . . . I think Mr. Mulroney is fonder of Mr. Reagan than Mr. Trudeau, but I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that is the only difference.

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau has just risen on a point of order, probably to remind us that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) should, in referring to the Prime Minister, refer to him as such and not by name.

Mrs. Mailly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly on the details of the motion. The motion was introduced by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and reads as follows:

> That this House regrets that the Government has further postponed a budget thereby assuring that it will have gone more than eight months in office without taking any concrete action to create jobs and to establish the kind of economic confidence necessary for the realization of the hopes and aspirations of all Canadians, in particular, women, young people, farmers, fishermen, the elderly, natives and, above all, the almost one-and-one half million unemployed.

I would like to move an amendment as follows: I move seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

> That the motion be amended by inserting immediately after the word "natives" the following words:
> "the disabled population, visible minorities".

I do that because the Liberals have listed a whole series of people, including native people, farmers and fishermen, but two very important groups in our society have been forgotten—the disabled and the visible minorities.

The Abella report was tabled in the House in November. That report talked about affirmative action and employment equity for four groups in Canada. It studied women and three minorities—natives, disabled people and visible minorities. I think it was an oversight on behalf of the Liberal Party to single out a couple of the groups which were studied and forget about the disabled and the visible minorities.

In our action group on jobs, we found that Canadians tend to forget about the disabled. However, between 8 per cent and 10 per cent of Canadians are disabled. In terms of jobs, most of those people are discriminated against. Over the years, the federal Government has been very lax in providing adequate assistance in the Canada Employment Centres in terms of finding jobs for disabled citizens and in terms of training programs for disabled Canadians. Three or four years ago, Parliament established the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. Our spokesman on the committee was the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). He has made speech after speech in the House about the necessity for positive programs for disabled Canadians. The national organizations which represent disabled Canadians are disappointed that the Government has not taken enough positive action on their behalf. Therefore, if we are to discuss this motion today, we must as well do something for disabled Canadians.

Of course, the other group is that of the visible minorities. We all know that visible minorities have problems in terms of discrimination on the job and in job searches. In Toronto, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and I spoke with a representative of the National Black Coalition, as well as people from other organizations which deal with racism. We were told about different studies which had been carried out in Toronto, and that it was evident from those studies that black people and visible minorities were discriminated against by employers. In one particular study, a black actor and a white actor went to various employers in the City of Toronto to apply for the same job. They had the same qualifications, the same general education and they were the same age. They also used the same approach. They found that time and time again the jobs would disappear when the black actor applied, but often an offer would be made to the white actor who applied either a few minutes before or a few minutes after the black actor.

It is time that we started to think more about and do more for visible minorities. In the City of Halifax we met with church groups which spoke about the problems of the black population. It is wrong for the vast majority of black young people in the City of Halifax to be unemployed. It is wrong and it is unfair in a city and a country which has so much to offer. We must take a strong stand in this House on behalf of visible minorities and handicapped people, as well as those who are mentioned in the Liberal motion.

I appeal to the House to support our amendment. Also, in closing, I appeal to the House to fulfil the mandate which we have as parliamentarians—that the first priority is to create jobs. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should stop listening to the bankers and big business in Canada and start listening to ordinary Canadians, small business, farmers, workers and fishermen from one end of Canada to the other. They will tell him a different story.

In the election campaign last summer, the politician who spoke the most about the deficit was the Leader of the Liberal Party. We saw what happened to him on September 4. I believe that Canadians delivered a message on that particular issue. The Government should not forget that message as it sets national economic priorities and prepares the Budget which will be brought down in the next couple of months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposed amendment. We will now proceed to questions and comments. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I believe that anyone who has been associated with it will agree that employment is the key issue to the disabled community in Canada. Without access to adequate and decent employment, the disabled population is denied access to every other opportunity which every able-bodied Canadian expects to have as a matter of right. Without adequate employment opportunities, people are denied access to decent housing, transportation and education. Many Members are not aware that there are thousands of kids in Canada who are disabled—either developmentally handicapped or otherwise—and who are completely denied access to education across Canada. If we hope to provide disabled Canadians with equal access to transportation, education, recreation and communication, the key element is the access to employment opportunities.

Could the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) tell us if any witnesses came before the task force on jobs, to which he referred, to give evidence on the lack of employment opportunities adequate training and government assistance, which, if adequate, would provide those employment opportunities?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we heard from organizations which represented disabled Canadians. Their main concern was jobs and how they felt discriminated against. Indeed, they felt that municipal, provincial and federal parliamentarians had forgotten about them in the planning and organization of our society. I remember speaking with a gentleman who I believe was the president of an organization for disabled people in Halifax. He told us that the federal Government, in the Department of Employment and Immigration, had only one co-ordinator to deal with disabled people in the Atlantic provinces. He also said—and I have not had a chance to check this—that the Department had one co-ordinator in Quebec, one in Ontario and one or two in the West. He pointed out that too little priority had been given to the needs and aspirations of disabled Canadians. He put forward several recommendations as to what should be done to improve the situation. The other point which he mentioned was that the recommendations which were made by Judge Abella concerning disabled Canadians should be implemented. His concern was that all the good sentiments in the world and all the voluntary guidelines probably would not work. He said that if these affirmative action and employment equity programs were going to work there would have to be mandatory regulations and guidelines with specific targets, goals and objectives. However, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has not provided that. We heard the fear expressed that without those specific targets and goals—as has been proven elsewhere—it would not work in Canada.

Once again, I would refer to the task force which was agreed to by all Parties in the House during the last Parliament. In the report of that task force many other recommendations were made for which disabled people in Canada are pushing very hard.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), in the course of his speech—as other New Democratic Members have done for some months and, indeed, years—has embarked on a sematical word which I believe is dangerous and misleading. They say that they are the defenders of the ordinary Canadian. Obviously, that view has a great deal of attractiveness in the hearts of Canadians. It naturally would, because all Canadians believe they are ordinary. I believe Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party should be called to task for using the word "ordinary" repeatedly as they do. Do they have an operative definition of who is ordinary? Why is it that those Hon. Members, as a Party, cannot support people who are imaginative, unique or extraordinary? Why do they create a caste system which sets certain groups of people aside and then say, "We will defend those people"? Would the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) stand in his place and give us an operative definition of an ordinary Canadian? Who belongs to that limited group which those Hon. Members, if they were ever in Government, would pretend to support? Who are that narrow bunch of Canadians?

● (1540)

Mr. Rodriguez: You are, Arnold.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think a good example is the question I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) today about assistance to one of the banks and the fact that the taxpayers are giving an interest-free loan of several millions of dollars to this particular bank. I do not consider banks to be representatives of ordinary Canadians. I asked the Minister whether or not this bill will be a precedent for interest-free loans. In other words, would farmers receive the same kind of consideration? A lot of farmers are going bankrupt across this country.

Mrs. McDougall: Who do you think borrows from the banks?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): When was the last time you got an interest-free loan from the bank?

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) asks me who I think borrows from the banks. I have a lot of farmers in my riding who borrow from the banks and those banks are charging these farmers usurious interest rates right now.

Mr. Mitges: Right on.

Mr. Nystrom: I know the Minister does not agree with that, but her seat-mate does. I know he agrees because he knows a fair amount about the ordinary citizens in his own riding. I can point out all kinds of farmers in my riding who are in difficulty and I am asked time and time again: if there are going to be interest-free loans for the banks or bail-outs of big companies, why can't we give the same consideration to ordinary farmers, fishermen or small business people? What is good for the goose should be good for the gander, I say to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). Why that difference? Is that what "Progressive Conservative" means? I know it is a continuation of the policies of the old Liberal Government. I do not like it. I do not find Canadians like it either. But that is what we mean by "ordinary Canadians".

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly want to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville that when we protect a bank from going bankrupt, we not only protect the bank but we protect all of the investors and the people who use that bank. The Hon. Member knows that if we should let the banks go into default, there would be literally thousands of Canadians—who the Hon. Member has just bracketed as "ordinary" Canadians—who would end up being very badly crushed. When the Hon. Member gives his thesis that he is for small business, he really is saying he is for small business until the small business becomes successful. As soon as it becomes successful, he is no longer with it. Those Hon. Members only want to be for the little fellow.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville to know that the creation of jobs throughout the country is dependent upon the imaginations and ingenuity of Canadians everywhere. Certainly, to present some kind of euphoric notion that there is a group of people across Canada who are unordinary, who do not belong to this caste system the New Democratic Party supports, is not at all in keeping with the nature of this country. Any Government which comes to power ought to be a Government which stands for all Canadians, for all productivity. It should not try to create a caste system, as the NDP are doing, by picking out a group of people here and there and saying, "Those are the ones we support, the rest be darned". That Party seems to take the view that it is for the little businessman. What happens to the little businessman when he becomes successful? The NDP casts him aside. He is no longer ordinary.

The Hon. Member did not give an operative definition of an "ordinary" Canadian. he cannot think of one.

Mr. Rodriguez: You weren't listening.

Mr. Malone: He may not have time to respond now but he can write me a letter. I challenge him to give me a definition of an "ordinary" Canadian, because every Canadian is an ordinary Canadian.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Give him a chance.

Mr. Rodriguez: Sit down and give him a chance.

Mr. Malone: Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party who shout "sit down", thus showing disrespect for this Parliament, should know very well that they cannot continue to get away with appealing with semantic words which tug at the heart-strings of Canadians without ever being called to account. The words they use over and over again in fact are meaningless. Those Hon. Members have no operative definition. They should start dealing only in facts and not in pure rhetoric.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, as I listen to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, I think he must have listened carefully over the years to Ernest Manning. The Hon. member certainly follows Ernest Manning's tradition in the way he speaks in this House.

If the Hon. Member wants a precedent, Mr. Speaker, where a Government did not bail out a bank, I can tell him that the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan did not bail out Pioneer Life. That is a precedent. I suppose this Government would like to bail them out. I am not exactly sure where it stands. What I am saying is that if the Hon. Member for Crowfoot wants to find some ordinary Canadians, he should come to my riding and I will introduce him to the farmers in my riding who are very ordinary Canadians and who would like the same kinds of breaks from the federal Government as it is giving to the banks. If the Hon. Member wants to continue standing up for rich Canadians, that is fine with me, but there will be an election in this country in three or four years and the population will respond. If the Conservatives are as insensitive as the Liberals were a few years ago, they will go the same way as the Liberal Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, it is always refreshing to hear the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) with respect to bail-outs. It was only last week that the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) was complaining to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) that she would not come to the assistance of the Pioneer Trust Company. This morning, the Hon. Member's own confrère from Hamilton was making the same complaint. Now we hear the Hon. Member complaining about the fact that the Minister of State for Finance was able to organize largely a private sector agreement to come to the assistance of the Canadian Commercial Bank so that all sorts of small depositors, small business people in the Edmonton area, would not lose their shirts completely.

The Hon. Member knows, and ought to know, that the economy of western Canada is, to a large extent, in tatters, mainly because of the national energy policy. He knows that if that bank had gone bankrupt—and it would have had there not been assistance from Canadian banks, from the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, from the Province of Alberta, and from the federal Government—all sorts of small business people would have lost everything. The damage would have been immeasurable in the Edmonton area. But we have managed to solve that problem on a temporary basis so that we can get things going again. There is no question about it, that bank will be able to be prosperous. I remind the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville that the people participating in the arrangement will be able to participate further in the profitability of the bank as they take up share warrants in connection with the arrangements.

This motion is perhaps the most ridiculous motion which has ever come before this House. I am indeed surprised that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) would ever bring a motion of this nature to this House of Commons. The Hon. Member complains that a budget has not come out as if a budget was the only thing a government does. Those Hon. Members have some idea that governments are here to make budgets. Surely governments are here to run the country. And this country is being turned around, and has been turned around from September 4 until now. A budget will be produced in due course. There is a lot which has to be done which does not and did not require budgetary help.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, for example, said that when he went around the country he found that Canadians were tired of being oppressed by the central Government in Ottawa. He said there was no sense of co-operation and we cannot pass rules in Ottawa which are enforced in towns across the country such as Vancouver and Saint John. That is right. We understand that. That is why we have been able, for the first time in some 15 or 16 years, finally to get the provinces and the federal Government together. This way we can have a consensus on how we should proceed with medicare, education, retraining.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) made a deal with the provincial Ministers of Labour and Employment to get summer work for students in a new job-creation program, a program which is working darn fine in my riding. People are offering jobs to students for the first time because they now feel the Government of Canada understands their requirements. They want to co-operate, get aboard and be part of building Canada. They want to give the youth of Canada an opportunity. We have a Government that understands business, the provinces, labour and all those elements in the economy who want to work together. This motion says that nothing has been done about job creation, but that is just not so.

The motion goes on to refer to the economic confidence necessary for the realization of the hopes and aspirations of Canadians. Let us talk about economic co-operation. First of all, we have the provinces getting together. Bit by bit we are breaking down the trade barriers which exist between provinces. More important, the problems we have had with international trade, particularly with the United States, are being solved. That conference a week ago in Quebec City was the culmination of a whole series of negotiations which have been going on. Member after Member has criticized the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) with respect to the salmon fishing treaty on the West Coast. We know that he has been around the outports of the West Coast bit by bit, getting advice with respect to the salmon treaty, and we now have an agreement which the previous Government had not been able to reach for years and years.

Mr. Manly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), would not want to have attributed to her the responsibility for making the salmon treaty which was imposed on the people of British Columbia. It was the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am very pleased that we now have recognition that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) has been doing a first-class job. We have the recognition that we have a treaty that they could not organize in a decade. Why not? Because there was no sense of co-operation between Canada and its largest trading partner, the United States of America. We were concerned, and British Columbia was particularly concerned, with respect to the question of softwood lumber. We have already taken virtually one third of the American market for softwood lumber and we were very much in danger of having our lumber exports subjected to countervailing duty. That fear has gone. We were in danger of having our potato exports subject to countervailing duty, and that fear has gone. We were very much in danger of having our steel industry virtually banned from competition in the U.S., and to a large extent that fear has gone.

Members opposite talk about economic confidence. The business community has economic confidence when it sees a Government prepared to get tough and act and to be sensible with respect to trade matters. It is a Government which is prepared to consult. It understands how we must finance export trade. Papers have been produced for discussion with the business community concerning export financing through the banks and other financial institutions. They, too, can then participate the way they should in financing those exports. We will shortly be producing new methods by which the Government will use the financial institutions of this country to develop trade. To say that economic confidence does not exist because somehow a budget has not been produced is just utter drivel. The opposition says that this is not a long time to wait for a budget. Do you realize there was a Government elected on February 18, 1980, and it was not until way on into October of the same year that it finally produced its Budget? Oh, yes, there was an economic statement in April, but we produced an economic statement in November. It is the same type of situation.

We have a situation, Mr. Speaker, where for every dollar we spent in the first 10 months of this fiscal year we took in only 64 cents in taxes. The other 36 cents had to be borrowed. They may well say we are to blame for the management from September 4 until January. But they cannot do that because we have not had a chance to take it over and really get at it. The situation is that the spending is built into programs that were developed five years ago, ten years ago, two years ago and continue to require further funds. They continue to grind away.

Let us look at housing as an example. Under CMHC, and this is but one example, in order to finance new construction of social housing we made loans and guaranteed the interest at 2 per cent. When an apartment building is built and the mortgage is 15 per cent, the subsidy is 13 per cent. But it is not just the subsidy in the year the building is built, it applies the following year, the year after that and the year after that. Virtually all the money set aside in the Estimates for CMHC today are to pay subsidies on buildings built two years ago, five years ago, eight years ago and so on. That will be the situation not next year and the year after but for the next 25 or 30 years. These costs are built in liabilities of the Government of Canada.

So we called together last week the leaders of business, labour, consumer groups, social groups and educational groups from across the country to find out what they thought we might be able to do. To some extent those groups are both the solution and the problem, because many of those people have been involved all the way along in the decision making which has led us to the position we are in. We are criticized for that, but how can you criticize a Government which has enough ability to get Bob White, Dennis McDermott and Louis Laberge in the same room with Rowland Frazee? I say to you, Sir, that that demonstrates our ability to get Canadians working together again.

If we are ever going to solve the economic problems of this country it will be because we get Canadians working together again. The unfortunate situation over the last 15 years is that we have had a Government of confrontation. We have had a Government which has pitted labour against management, management against management, provinces and Territories against provinces, native people against farming groups, farming groups against city dwellers and so on. We have to end that confrontation. We can never build this nation by fighting each other. Heaven knows, we have enough problems as it is in this cold half of North America building a nation in the first place. But to build a nation when you are already deeply in debt, fighting against each other will not help. When Canadians elected us on September 4, they elected us to build together. They did not elect us to do nothing. However, they did not elect us to destroy a fragile recovery through ill-conceived and ill-thought-out actions. With regard to farm financing, it would have been very easy to fulfil immediately the promises that we made under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act with respect to capital gains on farm-land and agri-bonds. We could have done that by fiat. However, even farm groups are not in favour of some of those matters. Why would we do them without consulting and without public hearings? Members will know that we have had public hearings. The Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs will be reporting on these matters prior to its mandated requirement of April 1.

• (1600)

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will take that report into account in preparing his Budget. Obviously he cannot prepare the Budget without the report. Obviously he cannot do things that will damage our fragile recovery without input from all sectors in the economy and without the understanding of how what is proposed in one sector of the economy affects another sector of the economy.

To say that it is somehow a terrible delay to wait until the week of May 20 is to be a bit naive and a bit ridiculous. We could go ahead and do everything we said we were going to do without consulting, but then it would be complained that we did not consult. We have consulted and we will continue to consult. There are 1.5 million Canadians out of work. There are fewer Canadians out of work today than there were at the time of the election. There will be a lot fewer Canadians out of work as time goes on. It takes a while for business confidence and a new attitude to develop to enable new employment and new job creation to take place. It does not happen overnight.

We have proposed a lessening of controls on foreign investment, but that does not mean that people from abroad will pour their money into our resources. It does not mean that all of a sudden new jobs and opportunities will develop as a result of the change in the statute. However, the change in the statute is a worth-while effort to encourage people to come to Canada and invest in the country.

They say that we have not done anything for small business. We proceeded with the Small Business Loans Act to make it more sensible and to make the banks more responsible for it. That move will enable more funding to be available for small business.

Rome was not built in a day, Mr. Speaker. Our problems of a $35 billion deficit and a $190 billion national accounts debit did not build up overnight. It did not happen just by itself and it is not going to change just because we will it to change. Over the terms of past Governments we have built up a habit of liking a whole lot of government service. However, we do not have the ability to pay for that government service. In our own constituencies we have built up a bad habit of asking the Government for hand-outs.

The other day Domtar came to the country and asked for a hand-out of $100 million. Member after member of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties stood up and demanded that the Government hand over $100 million to Domtar. That is how a great, big national debt is developed. You can only have the tailor make you a suit with the amount of cloth he has. We have been trying to get too much out of what we have. As responsible Members of Parliament we must realize that. As responsible Members of Parliament we must tell our constituents that rather than looking to government for everything they must do a lot on their own. They must build the country. Co-operatively we can do that.

The Member for Laval-des-Rapides ought to be ashamed of this motion. I appreciate that it is a non-confidence vote. I suppose it would have been easier for the Official Opposition to have merely said, "That this House regrets it has no confidence in the Government" and left it at that. However, he went on to say why he should have confidence in the Government. That being the case, it seems to me that members of the Opposition ought to decry this motion and vote against it, because the motion is a summary of why the House should have confidence in the Government.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I respect him and what he says in the House. I know him quite well and have known him for quite a while. Before his Party was elected he used to talk about how interest rates are too high in the country. He is shaking his head. I can hear him.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You can hear him shake his head?

Mr. Nystrom: I can hear him all the way over here. I don't hear very much, only an echo.

He used to make speeches time and again from this part of the House. I simply want to know whether he agrees with the Government's monetary policy. Does he agree with the interest rate policy? I know he is very blunt. If he does not agree, he will tell me, if he does agree, he will also tell me. I know he knows the situation very well. Interest rates are much too high in this country and ordinary Canadians—I guess that is all Canadians except for Jack Horner, in answer to the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone)—farmers, fishermen, small businessmen and home owners need a made-in-Canada interest rate policy. It must be much lower than it is now. Does the Hon. Member agree that Gerald Bouey should call the shots? Does he agree with the Government's interest rate policy?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I think I should instruct my secretary to make a collection of the speeches I have made in the House on interest rates and to send them to the Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). If he would like, I will discuss them with him so that he will understand how the determination of what interest rates is made. He ought to know that interest rates are a function of the supply and demand for money reflected, to some extent, by the risk a lender takes. On that basis we in this country are paying nearly 2 per cent more than the American Government is paying for its money. That is largely because the public views us as a greater risk. If we did not carry the horrible national debt that we do and if we were running our affairs more sensibly, we would borrow our money considerably cheaper.

If the Governments of Canada and the United States were not sucking up the money from the private savings of their citizens in deficits, money would be considerably cheaper. As the Member for Crowfoot says, there is no such thing as ordinary Canadians. It happens to be a fact that all taxpayers of Canada are paying the interest rates we are paying. The Government of Canada is the largest borrower. The taxpayers of Canada are the largest payers. From looking at the Estimates the Hon. Member will realize that the estimated cost of the national debt this year is in excess of $25 billion. That was calculated on the basis of a supposed interest rate averaging 10.6 per cent. He will know that at the present calculation that figure is wrong and that we will probably have to spend considerably more than $25 billion to carry the outrageous borrowings that we have.

The Hon. Member will also know that interest rates dropped half a point last week. However, that is not good enough. He will know that that is not good enough. I know that is not good enough. The farmers, businessmen, and home owners know that is not good enough. If we had some sensibility in the economy of this country rather than the yapping of the New Democratic Party demanding more, more, more, then we would have lower interest rates.

• (1610)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think it takes a yapper to recognize one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member is talking about all these people who have savings and so on. I do not know if he recognizes that according to a report in The Globe and Mail recently nine families have half their stocks and bonds in the Toronto Stock Exchange. Since so much wealth is controlled by so few, why would the Hon. Member not agree to bring down interest rates in Canada and, if need be, use foreign exchange controls or an interest equalization tax or something like that for investments of over $50,000 or $60,000 which would affect people who are not ordinary Canadians? There are nine families who control about half the assets on the Toronto Stock Exchange. Why does the Hon. Member stand up for those rich friends of his when we could be doing something for ordinary Canadians?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Never has so much been owned by so many to so few.

Mr. Blenkarn: I think what the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville would like us to do is to have foreign exchange controls like those in Brazil, Mexico, or Argentina, and then we could also have interest rates like those in Brazil, Mexico, or Argentina. Under that kind of régime which the Hon. Member has in mind, we would be assuring poverty for my children and for my children's children's children, and I suppose they would then become ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) say that the threat against Canadian softwood entering the United States has been removed. If that is the case, could he explain to the House why the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) has gone to Washington today reportedly to deal with that very problem?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the imposition of controls on the importation of softwood lumber has to pass the office of the President of the United States. Obviously, in a way these controls have to go through the House of Representatives and so on. It is important that our Ministers deal directly with legislators and people in the United States having an interest to make sure that as far as possible we ameliorate the problems of the threat of controls.

I say to the Hon. Member that the effect of the Quebec conference was essentially to give us access to the American market, subject to the tariffs but not subject to any unrealistic interference with our trade.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, let me raise a question with the Hon. Member. He suggested that there is a problem with exchange controls. Is it not the case that the country his Party now looks to as the exemplary model with respect to economic policy, that is the United States, put into effect an interest equalization tax under a Republican President in the early 1970s which certainly did not destroy confidence in the future of the United States? It had instead the effect of protecting U.S. currency at a time when it was under some pressure.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that that tax was immediately abolished because it was not accomplishing anything. He will know that that type of interference in the market-place will not work. More important, the Hon. Member will know that, with the long border we have, with the percentage of our Gross National Product directly involved with foreign trade, particularly foreign trade with the United States, to attempt to isolate and control every foreign exchange transaction that takes place between Canada and the United States would immediately create a disaster in our markets. It would probably immediately put hundreds of thousands of Canadians out of work. If there were an attempt to enforce foreign exchange transactions, it would require an army of policemen to the extent that we would get rid of our unemployment program by putting everybody in uniform.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, did this happen in the United States? Were there problems of enforcement or was there not quite a straightforward and simple system whereby the financial institutions reported to the Government? Did it not turn out in the United States to be quite easy to put an interest equalization tax into effect? Would it not be similarly easy here, given that we have a banking system that is quite highly concentrated and on which we could quite easily rely to do the policing involved?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, if one thought that one could somehow control the movements of foreign exchange and steer away from the market, I would think that was not the effect of the American equalization tax. It may have intended to be the effect, but there were not any demonstrable differences that took place in what would otherwise be the market condition. If you take a look at a market condition where there is an advocacy for some control over foreign exchange to separate our interest rates from interest rates in the United States or world interest rates, the Hon. Member must know as an economist that with the number of transactions going back and forth across the border, and with the number of Canadians who hold large accounts in the United States and of Americans who hold large accounts in Canada, we would soon run into a massive problem.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to start by immediately indicating our support for the NDP amendment tabled a few moments ago to add visible minorities and the disabled to the list of those who have been hurt by the lack of action of the present Conservative Government.

Last Thursday we had the eighteenth anniversary of the United Nations Day against Discrimination. On that occasion, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) made a statement. We responded. We made many of the same points that were made a few minutes ago with respect to visible minorities and the handicapped who have suffered a great deal of discrimination not only in employment but in many other areas of this country as well. We support that amendment very strongly.

To return to the motion before us today, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate my full support and point out that once again by delaying the budget we have also seen a delay of specific action to deal with the unemployed. In addition, the delay has caused a great deal of economic uncertainty among those who would invest in new jobs and those who would wish to make their plans with respect to new plant, equipment, and so on. There is no comparison between the election in 1980 and the election last fall in 1984. The election in 1980 simply returned a Government that had been in power a year previously. It was the same Government. It had already produced budgets before 1980 and it was continuing in the same way. Here we have a new Government that has been almost eight months in office. We have not had a budget. We have had certain policy announcements here and there but the announcements have not been produced in a global way to give us an over-all picture of the Government's economic policy.

These delays are seriously affecting the unemployed, and measures that might be taken by the Government to put the unemployed back to work are affected. I should point out that there has been no delay with respect to cuts. Cuts came rather quickly after the election of September 4. Last November, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced, together with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) a whole series of cuts, which not only affected certain government programs but also put a large number of people out of work.

● (1620)

Just last week we had representatives of the cultural community in Ottawa. They were lobbying for the many jobs which were lost and will be lost in the various areas of Canadian culture—symphonies, orchestras, museums, theatre groups, ballet companies and so on. The Government did not wait to introduce these cuts. They acted right away, before they had anything to take their place in many instances. They cut out programs before they really knew what they would put in their place.

Whenever we ask Ministers or other government Members when they will bring in the programs they promised, over and over again they state that they have to wait because they are consulting. "Consulting" has become their favourite word. Of course we agree with consultations. It is a good thing, but it cannot be a replacement or a substitute for action. Many Members on the government side of the House make statements as if consultation was invented on September 4, that there never was any consultation before. I can forgive them because many of them are new Members and were not here before September 4. However, one would think they would read Hansard or be in touch with what happened.

I have a list in my possession which indicates some 12 consultative processes with respect to employment and employment-related matters in the last Parliament alone. One of them I had a lot to to with because I was Chairman of the task force on employment opportunities for the '80s. Several Members on the other side worked on that task force as well. We spent two years consulting across the country. We heard from nearly 400 groups and individuals on employment opportunities for the '80s. We published a report which was almost unanimous, except for two or three recommendations on which the Conservatives dissented.

We also had task forces on skills development leave and on major Canadian projects. There was In the Chips, which dealt with the effects of microelectronics on employment. We had the task force on labour market development, the Dodge Commission, the task force on part-time work in Canada, and the Ironside advisory panel. We had the House of Commons Committee on profit sharing in the labour market, the Economic Council report on "In Short Supply", and the Williams task force, on Outreach policy.

It is important to put this list on the record because I am becoming fed up with new Members repeatedly rising and saying that there has never been any consultation. There has been all kinds of consultation. However, there is something important which must follow consultation. This was done in the past, but it has not yet been done by the present Government.

Also, as a result of consultation there was the Economic Council report On the Mend and the Macdonald Commission which went across the country and heard evidence from many groups from all facets of Canadian life. It has not yet reported. These examples are just in the area of employment.

Also there were task forces on the handicapped, on North-South relations, on a national trading corporation, on alternative energy, on regulatory reform and on pension reform. We had the Technology for Tomorrow Conference, which was much more broadly based than the conference last weekend. We had three major policy forums in 1983 with respect to international affairs, economic policy and employment. I could go on and on, but it should be placed on the record that consultation was not invented on September 4. There was a great deal of consultation during the last Parliament and under the previous Government. However, once consultation takes place, hard decisions have to be made. Sometimes those people with whom one consults will not be pleased because one cannot please everyone. I know the Government is trying to please everyone, but sooner or later when hard decisions are made, some will be alienated and will accuse the Government of not consulting with them.

I am a member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I have a lot of respect for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). When he says he consulted, I believe him, but many witnesses have appeared before the committee and have said that he did not consult with them in that the Bill he introduced did not reflect the advice they gave during the consultative process. Whenever a Government brings in highly controversial measures, of course those who are opposed will complain about lack of consultation. However, as I said, the Government is consulting on some things but not at all on others.

I should like to refer to changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act with respect to severance pay which will take place on April 1. The Government did not consult at all. It announced them in the House on November 4 or whatever was the date when the cuts were announced. Now we are receiving petitions and protests from people from all walks of life, including the Armed Forces, labour unions, workers' associations, professional associations and so on. They are asking the Government to delay the implementation of that measure until consultation takes place. They have pointed out some of the implications of that measure which could not have been foreseen when the announcement was made. For example, some people wanted to use severance pay to re-establish themselves in employment or to relocate from one area of the country to another. Some wanted to roll over the money by means of an RSP. Now they will not be able to do these things because the Government has decided that severance pay must be counted as income and that their unemployment insurance will be delayed. The money which they could have used to re-establish themselves in employment or for retirement purposes will have to be used for the necessities of life and consequently will not have the purposes which even the Government had in mind. It would be reasonable for the Government to consult on that one, if it really believes in consultation. It may be possible to modify it in such a way that it will not harm the people I have mentioned.

Consultation is good, as I said, but it has to be followed up with action. Let us hope that we will have action soon. It is unfortunate that the Budget has to be delayed until the week of May 20, as was announced not in the House but at the conference last weekend. We will be continuing to push for some very specific action because the problems will not go away or diminish with wishful thinking.

We try to be as objective and as non-partisan as we can because jobs are important for all Canadians. In all constituencies there are people who voted Conservative, Liberal and NDP. They are not interested in bickering among themselves in the House. They are really interested in something being done to help them find work. However, one has the impression that many of the consultative processes are really media-type politics. The Government is not sure what it wants to do. It tries to bring people together so that it can jump in afterwards, pick up the consensus and lead. Instead of presenting ideas to these groups to discuss, white papers, green papers or whatever, the Government is trying to develop a consensus in the first place. I do not know whether that will work.

We have asked several times for the discussion paper on unemployment insurance, but we have not received it as yet. During the election campaign, as we on this side of the House have mentioned quite often, members of the Government pretended they had the answers. Again I refer to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on July 5 in Prince Albert wherein he said that we would see tens upon tens of thousands of jobs being created just as quickly as the new Government could be sworn in.

Mr. Garneau: He said that?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, he did. He made similar statements on several occasions. One would have thought, in listening to that statement during the election campaign, that the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party had done their consultation during the many years they were in opposition and when they had the time to consult with many groups. They gave the impression, wrongly, that they had plans for action with which they were ready to proceed immediately after the election, and of course they did not.

● (1630)

I do not fault them for admitting now that these problems, the problems of economic growth, or interest rates are complex matters because they are complex. We always stated that they were complex matters, despite the fact we were trying to act and produce jobs. We were not always as successful as we wished. Nevertheless, when we tried to explain the difficulties we were up against, they denigrated our answers. They ridiculed the answers and deceived the Canadian people into believing that they in fact had pat solutions, that they had the answers. It is for that that I criticize them, that deceit they practised during the election, not for the seriousness of many of their Ministers looking now for solutions. For those honestly looking for solutions, I congratulate them, but for that deceit that they perpetrated on the Canadian people during the election campaign I find them greatly at fault. They will have to answer for that.

What have they done with respect to employment since the election? In addition to making a lot of severe cuts in the Department of Employment and other Departments, which led to a loss of jobs, they cancelled the First Choice program which would have put 100,000 young Canadians into jobs, giving them some experience at employment. They replaced it with a much smaller program called the Youth Training Option, a much smaller sort of trial project.

Let us look at the number of jobs created. When my party was in Government, I was often critical of them because they did not do more. The record shows that in 1978, 334,000 jobs were created; in 1979, 410,000 new jobs were created; in 1980, there were 314,000. In 1981, going into the recession, there were 297,000 new jobs. In the recovery year, 1983, more than 400,000 new jobs were created at a time when there was a great growth in our labour force. In that year, our labour force grew 58 per cent faster than the labour force in the United States. Despite the fact that 400,000 new jobs were created, the rate of unemployment remained pretty much the same because of this increase in the labour force.

In 1984, a year that was shared by both Parties in government, there were 250,000 jobs created in Canada up to the last count. In the second quarter, there were 108,000 jobs, in the third quarter, 67,000 jobs and in the fourth quarter 88,000 jobs created. There has been no dramatic increase in employment as a result of the Conservatives taking power, contrary to what they would have us believe before the election. In addition, they have not put before the Canadian people a plan that would lead to the creation of such jobs.

In answer to some of our questions about their cutting out programs, their answer has been that they do not believe you can solve the problem of unemployment by throwing money at problems, that you do not solve the problem by the Government continually intervening. Some of them believe that if the Government withdraws in certain key areas, the private sector will have confidence and create those jobs. So far, there has been no real indication that that is taking place. This is due to the fact that there has been no budget until now.

The private sector is not really certain in which direction it is going to go. It is quite plain that we have two parties within the Conservative Party. We have the Conservative ideologues, those who believe in the philosophy I just expressed, that if the Government withdraws, the private sector will produce. I do not support that. There are some people who believe very strongly in that, including some economists. A good number of people in the Conservative caucus and in Government believe in that.

On the other hand, there are the pragmatists who are attempting to run the Government by means of polls: whatever pleases they will do. We saw examples of that in the first six months that they were in power. First we had announcements with respect to the cuts in social programs or the changes in social programs that would lead to a lack of universality. After a great deal of debate in this House and in the country, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) announced that there would not be such cuts in old age pensions and in family allowances and that they would approach it in a different way. That kind of "first we are this way" and "then we are that way" is not producing the confidence that is expected.

I repeat, it is essential for this Parliament and for the people of the country to know the over-all global approach of that new Government to the economy so that all of us can then debate it in a proper way. Those of us who agree with it can support it. Those who wish to oppose it will oppose it. The private sector of the country and the voluntary sector, the trade unions and so on, can make their plans accordingly. They have 211 people supporting them. I suppose if they want to do something, they are going to do it, no matter what we do in this House. We will try to influence public opinion in this debate, but we know that we are not going to win too many votes.

The record can be checked. There has been no significant change so far. Canadians are still waiting. What can be done and what should be done with respect to employment? Again I am going to repeat what I heard in nearly two years of hearings across this country. I see, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that my time is almost up. I guess I had better sum it up.

When a Government or Parliament decides that it is going to do something, that it is going to make that its highest priority, it can do it if it has the political will. The previous Government did it with six and five. I did not agree with every way with which we approached six and five, but we were at 12 to 13 per cent inflation. The Government made up its mind that it would make that its highest priority and bring inflation down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent over a three-year period. It happened. Of course it happened. There were other influences that were in there. The Government made it its highest priority. It made six and five the rallying cry in this country. It worked. Inflation came down, and it is still down.

My final word is, let us do the same with employment. Let us have a six and five for employment. Let us put our political will behind it. It will have the support of a lot of Members of this House. Let us bring down the unemployment rate to six and five and let us do it soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments?

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), for questions or comments.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he believes the weekend economic conference—and I know the Hon. Member has had some experience as a member of Cabinet in the past—would have been more successful if the Government had tabled draft solutions or a white paper or departmental papers which would have served as points of discussion for conference participants and on which an attempt could have been made to reach a consensus. The Hon. Member may recall that this was tried in Australia—in fact, the Prime Minister of Australia was in Ottawa—when the Australian Government tabled documents at a consultation conference, indicating the direction it wanted to give this country from the economic and social point of view, and this did bring results. This time, however, we had no such government paper. Does the Hon. Member believe the results would have been better if the Government had given some direction?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe it would have helped and would have led to more significant results because it would have focused the convention on the proposal of the Government rather than leaving it as wide open as it did. I know the Government asked the delegates to the convention to discuss the problems of unemployment and economic growth, investment and so on. However, it would have focused it still more and led to more concrete results if it had put its own working paper, whether it was a white paper or whatever you call it, before that conference.

In doing that you run a risk because you are taking a stand. I can recall the previous Government saying that it was putting some proposals before the country for consultation and they are still identified with them to a certain extent. As far as I am concerned, the nature of politics is the taking of tough and difficult stands. I know the Government will be howled at, picketed and voted against from time to time. However, I think that would have led to a more productive conference.

• (1640)

The one thing of which the delegates were aware was the November statement of the Minister of Finance and his promise that there would be more of the same in the next Budget. They had an inkling as to what line the Government would take. It appears as though, despite the fact that there was a division of opinion as to whether the highest priority should be cutting back the deficit or solving the unemployment problem, if the newspaper reports are correct, the Minister of Finance still intends to proceed in the same way as he was intending to proceed when he entered the conference. He said that there may be some minor changes considered in the Budget, but basically his over-all approach will be more or less what he was thinking of previously. We do not know exactly what that is yet because we do not know what the Budget will contain. If it is a follow-up on the November economic statement and if it is to be as harsh as the Prime Minister warned it would be when he said that there would be some tough medicine to swallow, that is not the right way to proceed.

Getting together with labour, management and the voluntary groups is always a good thing. However, it could have been done in a better way and it could have been done in a way that would have led to action faster than a Budget in May.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was on this side of the House for some 14 or 15 years, part of which time he was a Minister of the Crown. Can he tell me when the Government led by the former Prime Minister was able to get the labour leaders, the bankers, the social leaders and the leaders of the private sector together in one conference to discuss issues over one weekend? Can he remember that kind of consultation taking place? Does he not think that that is a pretty fair way to begin building together as Canadians to make this country grow again?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I referred to the conference that was called on October 18, 1982, by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who was then, I believe, President of the Treasury Board. The conference was called Technology for Tomorrow. It dealt with a more concentrated subject, the very serious impact of new technology on employment, and it was similar in nature to the national economic conference. It was a summit conference held on a weekend and included representatives from all sectors. I cannot recall if there were more representatives at that conference than at this one.

As well, there were three major policy forums held in northern Quebec by the Government in the summer of 1983. Those forums went on for two or three days and included spokesmen from business, labour and international backgrounds. The wheel vis-à-vis consultation was not invented on September 4.

As I mentioned in my remarks, following these consultations, the Government took action. In some cases, the public agreed with its action and in some cases it did not agree. I suppose that is the nature of politics and the nature of making hard decisions. We run a risk when doing certain things but at least, if we believe in them and believe that that is the way things should be done, we should proceed.

On occasion, I have been critical of the present Government and have thought that there should be even more consultation. I am still critical of the Government. I mentioned the example of the Government proceeding with cuts to the unemployment insurance regarding severance pay without consulting. I wish that there had been consultation on that matter. However, it does not have to be drawn out forever and a day.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member agrees that we should have consultation. Presumably he agrees that the consultation papers on trade, on assistance concerning universal payments for senior citizens and families, on small business and on capital gains on farm lands are the kinds of consultation papers Governments should undertake. Would he agree that before a Government goes ahead and madly bangs out a budget, it ought to give the public an opportunity to respond to those consultation papers?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I said that I agree with consultation but I think it can be carried on for too long. I cannot refer specifically to the Hon. Member because I did not meet him during the election campaign, but if we refer to the rhetoric of some of the members of his Party during the election campaign, we would see that they gave the impression that they had all the answers then and there and as soon as they were elected, things would be done immediately. I quoted the Prime Minister and I have other such quotes that I could read into the record as well. It is that kind of deceit that I am criticizing because obviously they did not have the answers.

The Hon. Member is now saying that government Members should consult. When he spoke earlier, he said that we should not proceed with programs ill-conceived and not well thought-out. Does that mean that some of the promises made during the election campaign were ill-conceived and not well-thought-out? I thought that that was the case and he now seems to be agreeing with me. He is saying that since they were not well-thought-out, we need to consult very broadly.

The point is that the Hon. Member's Party was in opposition for many years. Conservative Members said that they were in consultation with groups far and wide and they should have been ready to proceed when they won the election. They should have been ready to proceed on certain key matters and particularly on employment since they said that that was their highest priority. They were not ready to proceed and they have consulted in a manner beyond that which is reasonable. The Government will be into its 10th or 11th month before we see any action. I think that that is too long. Yes, I agree with consultation but not forever and ever.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I trust that the fact that Hon. Members opposite who proposed this motion took off early for the weekend is not an indication of how seriously they regard these important issues. They raised these issues in the amendment which we take very seriously indeed.

I would like to point out that the motion claiming that the timing proposed for the Budget means that the Government has taken no concrete action to create jobs and establish economic confidence among Canadians including the groups mentioned in the amendment today is among the most absolutely absurd allegations I have heard since I entered this Chamber. It flies in the face of the record of action taken by the Government.

I would like to review some of the highlights of our accomplishments, but first I want to remind Hon. Members across the way that this Government is governing our great country differently. Canadians from across the country are saying amen to that. They realize, as we do, that the well trodden paths from years before lead nowhere. It is our job, as they know and we know, to blaze new trails of governing in this country.

For the first time in Canadian history, Canadians from all walks of life, including the disabled, women's groups, natives' groups, labour, business and community volunteers met together with each other and with the Government at the same time. This Government, unlike the former Government, is not afraid to meet Canadians face to face. It is not afraid to meet Canadians with disparate interests but with a common objective, the objective of building a better future for this great country.

Consensus has not been reached in everything. We do not expect unanimity. What the Government desires is a more comprehensive understanding among the very groups to which we have referred. The national economic conference led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was more than a meeting of minds; it was exciting and it was historic. It was a concrete example of our respect for the opinions of Canadians across the country and of our desire to involve Canadians in the policies which affect them. I want to remind, particularly Hon. Members opposite, of something in which this Government believes very strongly—that democracy is based on the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people.

● (1650)

I would like to review what the Government has accomplished and what Members opposite have chosen to ignore. Within three days of the opening of the new Parliament, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented to the House an extensive economic and fiscal statement on November 8. That agenda for economic renewal charted the most comprehensive overhaul of economic policies ever undertaken by a national Government. We have taken on an enormous challenge which will require the full concentration and co-operation of the people of Canada in every sector, people of good will as well as those in Government. By definition, it is a job which will take years, not just months. It is a job which is already well started.

I would like to illustrate the wide range a concrete actions which have already been taken. The November statement announced a total of $4.2 billion in expenditure reductions and revenue recovery measures to be implemented in fiscal year 1985-86. It declared the longer-range goal of reducing the projected level of annual expenditure by 1990 by between $10 billion and $15 billion. It was a long-awaited start to reducing the federal deficit. It was a start on putting the Government's fiscal house in order. The statement was a recognition that the mounting federal debt had become a powerful obstacle to growth and to private sector job creation. Whatever consensus may not have been reached, there is consensus on that. The start on deficit reduction was an essential step toward rebuilding confidence.

The Minister took action on social policy, within the limits of the Government's difficult financial position, to improve support for Canadians who need and deserve assistance. The spousal allowance program was extended to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. That measure will benefit some 85,000 low-income Canadians, mostly women, starting in the fall of this year.

The statement also announced improvements in veterans' pensions to ensure more generous and equitable treatment to veterans with disabilities. Those veterans were ignored by the former Government.

On the employment front, the Minister of Finance, in the November statement, committed an additional $1 billion in the coming fiscal year to help Canadians acquire new skills and find jobs in the private and public sectors. It will provide more effective delivery of employment and training programs. Among those benefiting are the disabled. The best thing we can do for the disabled is to turn them into taxpayers so that they share in the prosperity along with the rest of us.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced detailed measures to implement that policy through the Challenge '85 summer employment program and the over-all training and employment strategy.

The statement also announced that the Foreign Investment Review Agency would be replaced by Investment Canada, with a new mandate to promote economic development in Canada. It signalled major changes to the so-called Crown interests, or back-in provisions, of the National Energy Program.

To resolve taxpayer uncertainty, the Minister of Finance took action to clear up a number of outstanding tax issues dating as far back as 1982. He carried out this Party's undertaking that, in a dispute between a taxpayer and Revenue Canada, the taxpayer will be considered innocent until a judge has ruled otherwise, despite the ruthless policies of the former Government in this area.

The November statement announced assistance to the resource industries—to farmers, fishermen, loggers and mine operators. Two modifications were made to the changes in the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax which were proposed by the former Government. A one-year extension was provided for the lower rate of PGRT applying to integrated oil sands projects. That is a benefit to the West which was beleaguered by the former Government's policies. As well, it increased the threshold levels of the small producers' credit under the PGRT to $500,000.

Another step which was taken was the appointment of the task force under the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) to review federal programs and regulations, consolidate, simplify, end duplication and improve service to the public in an area which had atrophied for years and years under the former Government.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced a reduction in interest rates on Farm Credit Corporation loans. He introduced legislation to establish a price stabilization program for red meat producers, and to allow the establishment of a supply-management program for tobacco growers.

The railway passenger service received a vote of confidence by the decision of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to reinstate three VIA Rail services in the Maritimes, Ontario and western Canada. Those services were eliminated by the former Government, despite the protests of the people who were affected.

Economic regional development agreements were signed with Quebec, British Columbia, and Ontario. ERDA subagreements were signed on a whole range of sectoral development plans, including pulp and paper, tourism, fisheries, industrial development, communications, development planning, and science and technology, right across the country.

A major provincial agreement, resolving years of controversy, which will open up new hope for economic growth in Newfoundland was the agreement signed on offshore resource development with that province by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). Believe me, we on this side of the House are very proud of our colleague and the Atlantic Accord.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Perhaps, the most fundamental change, and one which is welcomed across the country, is the new approach to consultation and co-operation with Canadians in all walks of life in planning the federal policies which I mentioned at the outset of my remarks. The Agenda Paper was a statement of national purpose and the focus for subsequent consultations with all sectors of the Canadian community. It signalled the Government's intention to clear away obstacles to growth and to release the creative energies of Canadians to build a better future. The paper recognized the important economic responsibilities of the provincial Governments. The consultation of the Prime Minister with the Premiers of the ten provinces in Regina set a new standard in effective co-operation in the national interests. Again, that positive approach was repeated in the highly successful national economic conference which ended on Saturday. Those of us who were there, and those who watched it across the country, sensed the excitement of that conference.

In our relationship with our neighbours, two meetings have been held between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States. Those meetings resulted in vital agreements on trade relations, acid, rain, northern defence and Pacific salmon.

The last four months have seen a series of consultation papers focusing on particular areas of our economic life. They have dealt with access to export markets, which is the lifeblood of Canada; export financing, which is required to support that trade; small business development; mining; benefits for children and the elderly; housing; job training; and tax issues in agriculture. Some of the papers focus on practical ways in which business and Government can plan and work together to build a stronger economy and create jobs. Others examine ways of ensuring that our social support system is sensitive to those who most need help. All of the papers recognize not only the vital need for action, but the need for a full opportunity for Canadians to contribute to major policy decisions.

There is more I could say, but the point is that this Government has acted, and it has acted quickly, in a great many concrete ways. The Government has initiated a concentrated national effort to involve Canadians so that they can sense how the Government is trying to build the future in order that they can help it with that. Our actions, and the process of discussion and debate which we have initiated, are contributing directly to the restoration of confidence in the future of the country. The quickness of Members opposite to belittle the actions of this Government is one thing—wearisome, but predictable—but the cavalier disregard which is shown in this motion and the amendment for the contributions which Canadians can make to the forthcoming Budget is the real indicator of the cynical and worn-out approach that characterizes the group across the way. They are out of touch, Mr. Speaker, and out of sync with the people of this country. No wonder Canadians overwhelmingly rejected them last September 4, and they do not yet realize that some pretty important changes were made on that day. Not only did the Government change but the way in which the Government works changed. It changed for the better. We now have a truly national Government which wants to work with and listen to Canadians in every part of the public and private sector and in every part of Canada. This takes time and is crucial to the sense of responsibility which Canadians expect from us, the Government they elected. The sooner this new reality sinks in over on the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker, the sooner Hon. Members opposite can begin to contribute in a constructive way in meeting Canada's economic challenges.

Let those Hon. Members also recognize that the economy is showing real signs of encouragement now and for the future, for the unemployed, in particular. Jobs are being created, growth has been higher than expected, the trade balance continues at record levels, inflation is under good control, our competition position is strengthening, and confidence is on the upswing.

We have the momentum going in this country and that was communicated to us by the people who attended our conference this weekend. We intend to build on that momentum in the forthcoming Budget. We are going to keep on building in the months and years after that. There is a big job to be done, Mr. Speaker, and it will be done best with the co-operation and support of all Hon. Members of this House. But it will be done regardless, and done well with the help of people from every part of this country.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the Minister's speech. She said that her Government is acting quickly. If it acted any more slowly, it would be going in reverse. The Government was elected on September 4, and what this whole day is all about, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that it has taken so long to bring down a Budget, at least a budget date, or, I should say, at least an approximate budget date, because we don't know exactly when it is going to be brought down. Supposedly it will be in the week of May 20.

The Minister mentions the PGRT and two of the changes in the PGRT. The first is an extension of time of the program, a policy of the former Liberal Government, and the second is an increase over the amount set by the former Liberal Government. Yet it does not go anywhere near what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in July, three days before the election was called, when he said he was going to do away with it. There is no action on that. That was completely backed away from.

The Minister mentioned the Atlantic Accord. Yet the Minister did not mention the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has already said that the grandson of the Petroleum Incentives Program is going to be done way with. There is no fiscal regime put in place, and I guess we will have to wait until the Budget on May 20 to find out what that fiscal regime is going to be. I am very pleased that the Atlantic Accord was signed. I think it is important for Newfoundland. However, I do not think one can say to the people of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia that the grandson of the Petroleum Incentives Program is going to be taken away in March and not let them know what it is going to be replaced with until late in May. I ask the Minister to consider this very important question and bring forward some of this information. A Budget on May 20 is better than no Budget at all, but it still goes way past what most Canadian feel should be a budget date.

There was a mandate for change, Mr. Speaker. Yet that Budget will not be forthcoming until May 20. I think that is a breach of that mandate. I would like the Minister to comment on that.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to comment. I used to live in western Canada and I lived there at a time of hope and opportunity, when the energy industry was an exciting industry which was working on behalf of all Canadians. It was an industry which was changing the face of western Canada. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is working night and day to undo the policies which brought that prosperity to an end.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am always struck by how magnificently this Minister speaks to us. She puts up a grand and spirited defence of the indefensible.

I have three specific questions which I would like to raise with the Minister coming out of this weekend. I was an observer at the national economic conference. First, if there was a sense in Government that eight weeks was needed between the national economic conference and the Budget, why was the Budget originally scheduled for the end of April? The Government itself set up the original schedule with the sense that a month would be sufficient to take into account the points raised this past weekend.

Second, I have to raise specifically with the Minister what to me, and I think to a great many of the people who were there, was the most dramatic event of the weekend. That was the fact that 81 people out of 136 signed a petition to ask for a specific change on a specific damaging and mean-spirited piece of government initiative, that is to include severance pay in calculations of unemployment insurance benefits. That is something, incidentally, which the President of Alcan—who is not exactly as wild a radical as my friend from Nickel Belt—stressed should not only not be considered as part of unemployment insurance calculations but should not even be taxed so that severance pay could be put into small businesses. Why is the Government, to show its good faith, not prepared to accept that very simple suggestion in responding to that conference and back down on severance pay?

Third, would the Minister not agree that there have been incredibly mixed signals with respect to whether deficit cutting or job expansion is to be stressed, whether free trade is the policy, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) seems to suggest, or whether it is the view of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), who seems to talk in terms of increased protectionism, that is the policy? The mixed signals seem to me to be very extensive. Surely the Minister would agree, from her own background in financial circles, that such mixed signals to the financial community are in fact creating uncertainty which must be resolved before the business community in this country can start to undertake the investments which I think all of us would like to see move ahead?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I think that the consultations which are leading up to the Budget have been enormously significant and successful. We expected them to be successful. They have been more successful than we expected. Canadians do have something to say to us concerning what we are doing. I want to say something else about the date of the Budget, and that is that unlike the former Government, when we bring down our Budget we intend to bring it in at a time when we can do it right.

• (1710)

In connection with the severance pay issue, my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, was at the conference. I know the solutions that she will come up with will be fair and reasonable after taking consultation into account. However, I might point out that the highlight, the most exciting part of the conference, was not the signing of the petition, it was watching people dialogue together. It was hearing the head of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women say that she had never realized before the complexities the Government faces in trying to bring various interests together. That was the most exciting part of the conference.

In answer to the third question, there are no mixed signals. There was a discussion on the deficit and job creation. There is a greater realization in this country than ever before that the two are related, and we are moving on both fronts as rapidly as we can. But the difficulty in balancing those two was something that people who were at that conference realized more than ever after the weekend.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, in her speech the Minister referred to the signing of the general agreement with the Government of Quebec as one of this Government's achievements. I would like to know why the Government signed this agreement on the basis of 50 per cent paid by the federal Government and 50 per cent by the provincial Government, while all other general agreements signed previously had been agreed to on the basis of 60 per cent being paid by the federal Government and 40 per cent by the Government of Quebec.

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, we do not conduct the Government on the basis of formulae which are frozen in time. This agreement was worked out between the provincial Government and the federal Government on a basis satisfactory to both, given our fiscal responsibility, which seems to have been understood by the Province of Quebec if not by the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), for a supplementary.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I detect an aggressive note in what the Minister is saying, and perhaps we could go on like that . . . However, the fact remains that this Government has deprived Quebec of considerable sums of money, since all other general agreements were signed on a 60/40 basis. I put the same question to the Quebec Minister, and the impression I got was that it was "take it or leave it". If that is the kind of consultation the Minister has been referring to in her speech, I think it is a peculiar way to conduct consultations.

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, the negotiations and consultations were carried out in good faith. The agreement was signed. It is a valuable agreement for Quebec. The Province of Quebec has said that it is a valuable agreement for Quebec, and I do not understand what the argument is if both Parties are satisfied.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no further questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) this afternoon when she was telling us about the Government reducing the Farm Credit Corporation's interest rate to 12.75 per cent. What she did not mention was that last week the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) increased the rate to 13.5 per cent. I wonder if the notes the Minister was speaking from this afternoon were prepared before the Minister of Agriculture increased those rates. This increase was totally uncalled for. If you look at the agricultural community today and the tremendous trials and tribulations they are facing in many parts of the country, that the Government should have increased interest rates for farm loans at this time is totally indefensible. I just wondered whether the Minister of Agriculture bothered to tell the Minister of State for Finance that he was increasing those rates. I thought those matters had to be cleared with the Department of Finance and I am surprised she was not aware of that.

I was also interested in her comment regarding what this Government is doing for science and technology. I wondered whether she had really taken time to read carefully what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did on November 8 when he cut some $5 million or $6 million from the toxicology centre at the University of Guelph. That surely had to be one of the most serious blows to that particular part of the scientific field. I know the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) is in the Chamber this afternoon. I know he would not have agreed with such a decision because he is a former President of the University of Guelph and he knows what a model project that was. That is not because it was a federal project, because it was not just a federal project. The federal Government put some $16 million into the program over a period of four or five years with an equivalent amount coming from the Province of Ontario. There was another $8 million from the private sector. It would have established a world class centre, not only for studying and developing techniques to deal with the difficult problem of toxic elements in our environment, but also for training scientists to deal with these problems. We would have had a world class institution at a very reasonable cost. The institution would have been jointly sponsored by the University of Toronto and the University of Guelph, two world class universities. One has a great deal of expertise in agriculture and veterinary medicine, and the other a great deal of expertise, knowledge and knowhow in the field of human medicine. When the Minister talks about what is being done by this Government, I hope she will think about that decision, which surely had to be one of the worst decisions this Government has taken. We have read about the Love Canal. We read stories about toxins in our environment. We read about the chemicals and pesticides being used in our forest and farms. Everyone is concerned about the question of whether the substances are the cause of cancer or other diseases both in livestock and in people. So I think the Government should not be very proud of its record in science and technology.

I am also amazed that the Minister should have raised the question of extending the spousal allowance to all widows and widowers whether or not they had ever been married to a person receiving the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement. The hue and cry in my part of the country is, how can the Government be so unfair? How can it not provide this to people who have never been married and to people who have been divorced or separated? The Government talks about fairness. It gets caught up in this rhetoric of fairness, but it does not recognize the unfairness of that provision. I receive petitions and letters asking why the Government does not provide that spousal allowance to all people between 60 and 65 years of age irrespective of whether they are widows or widowers. We commend the Government for extending it that far, but why does it not extend it as well to people who have never been married or have been separated or divorced?

• (1720)

We are really concerned with the delay of the Budget by some eight months. When asked during the election campaign what he would do, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said he would bring in a Budget, immediately to change the economic course of the country. Some five or six months have passed and we still have no firm date for the Budget.

This document contains 338 campaign promises of the Tory Government. People ask me why the Government is not implementing those promises.

Mr. Mayer: We are.

Mrs. Mailly: We are.

Mr. Foster: I tell the people that I do not know. The Government puts out white papers on social security problems. It puts out policies on tourism and all kinds of things. Government Members run around the country asking what they should do about old age pension and other issues. However, they do not get down to the systematic work of implementing all the promises they made.

The Minister spent quite a bit of time talking about implementing the last tax Bill of Mr. Lalonde. I thought that was very interesting. She told the House that they were going to simplify the tax system for small business. These are all good Liberal policies and I was glad she mentioned that. She talked about the benefits provided for RRSP roll-overs, which was also in Mr. Lalonde's Budget. That was very interesting. I was amazed that she mentioned the white paper issued by the Minister of Finance on the farm taxation issues. The Hon. Minister is from the City of Toronto and therefore probably does not hear a lot of the flak that we in rural areas hear about tax issues in agriculture. This is certainly becoming one of the best sellers in rural Canada because, with the name of the Minister of Finance on it, it is clearly the policy of the Government of Canada.

If one reads this document it is clear that the Minsiter of Finance thinks that farmers earn twice as much as the average Canadian, pay a quarter as much taxes, and are worth eight times as much as the average Canadian. This document, published by the Minister of Finance in January of this year, is very much opposed to the 338 promises made by the Government. This paper is opposed to providing low interest long-term financing through agri-bonds. This white paper is clearly opposed to making changes in Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. It is clearly opposed to providing tax free capital gains for farmers. Yet that is what the Government said it was going to do. I am at a loss to know why the Minister of State for Finance would mention this paper which is clearly opposed to all of the things that the agricultural community of the country wants.

Headlines and reports in farm papers have shown that the Minister of Finance is very much opposed to helping farmers at this time. In The Globe and Mail Report on Business of March 7 a headline reads, "Wilson Backtracks of Farm Aid". On page 1 and 2 of The Globe and Mail of February 23, 1985, the headline reads, "Study Shows Farmers Earn Twice as Much as the Average Canadian". The article goes on to say that the average farmer only pays one-quarter as much in taxes. These are statements by the Minister of Finance in his farm review paper. Another headline in the Ottawa Citizen of Tuesday, February 26, reads, "Western Farmers Enraged by Federal Study on Income". A heading in the Montreal Gazette in January reads, "Farm Paper Ignores Tory Promises". It goes on to outline how the paper talks down why the Government should keep its campaign commitments. Another article in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of February 28, reads, "Oxford Farm Group Demand Apology From The Finance Chief". There is no mention in this paper about the Tory campaign promises.

The amazing part of this document issued by the Minister of Finance is not only that it demonstrates his ignorance about the difficulties that agriculture is facing today, but that the Minister of Finance has completely ignored the fact that the farm debt crisis in certain sectors of the industry is the worst it has been since the 1930s. A report issued by the Farm Credit Corporation on October 30, 1984 on the farming situation across the country indicated that 17 per cent of Canadian farmers are experiencing severe financial difficulty and another 7 per cent are in moderate financial distress. This report indicates that 12 per cent of farmers in Atlantic Canada and 20 per cent in British Columbia are facing severe financial distress. All in all, Mr. Speaker, it is pretty serious situation. Some 39,000 farmers are experiencing serious financial distress. That does not mean that they cannot afford to buy a new pick-up truck.

The Farm Credit Corporation used three criteria. The first was that the equity of an individual on his farm was less than 15 per cent. Anyone with less equity than that is in serious financial difficulty. The second criterion was that the borrowings are 110 per cent above the investment. In other words, the person is living on borrowed money. The third criterion is that more than 40 per cent of the farm sales are being used to service intermediate and long-term debt.

When the Minister of Finance reports that the average farmer is so much better off, he is comparing a farmer with an investment of $400,000 or $500,000 with the average home owner and the return on investment. That is pretty silly. Most people would not even think of that kind of comparison. One is a business person with a capital investment averaging about $500,000 of which the equity is about $400,000 and the debt about $100,000 across the entire country. To compare that with the average home owner with a $47,000 home is like comparing two things that are not in the same ballpark. If you compare small business investment and net worth with the farmer, then you have comparable groups, although even there you would have a wider variation. Clearly this is a very unfair paper. It does not do justice nor is it fair to the farmers of Canada. That is why the resolution today regrets that the Government is putting off a Budget until sometime in late May and regrets that the Government does not provide economic confidence for the realization of the hopes of our farmers.

It seems to me that nobody can question a long-term delay of the Budget, and not knowing exactly what the Government is going to do is causing a great deal of concern. Consultation is fine, but the Government has certain financial commitments. It has certain promises that it made in the election campaign. I think Canadians want to know which ones will be honoured. We know pretty well from the economic statement last fall which ones will not be honoured. We know all kinds of things that were not mentioned in the election campaign which the Tories are not going to do. We know what the Government is opposed to. We know the Tories are opposed to the toxicology centre at the University of Guelph. We know the Tories are opposed to the Canadian Wildlife Service and to the control of the monitoring of the environment in the Great Lakes. We have a whole list of issues such as that of renewable energy and all of those issues that we know the Tories are opposed to. What we do not know is what the Government is in favour of. We could find that out if the Government were to bring forth a Budget. We think the Government should be doing that and that it should not be putting off bringing down a Budget for another two months.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, it is very sad to hear the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) say that we do not know what we are for with respect to the agricultural industry. In the seven months that we have been in Government, 57 initiatives have been taken by us that are beneficial to the agricultural community. I dare him to lay on my desk in 24 hours 57 initiatives that were taken by the former Minister of Agriculture in the ten years that the Hon. Gene Whelan held that portfolio. I doubt very much that the Hon. Member could begin to demonstrate the kind of positive action that has been taken in the agricultural community by us. It was the Liberal Government that set forward a grain transportation policy that had the rates going up and up and up, and then a review committee came along to analyse whether the rates should go up. We came into power and we froze the rates. I would like to know why the Member thinks that the Liberals should be applauded for such action.

Once the quotas were met on Irish beef, the Liberals continued to leave the gate open and allowed a flood. Why is the Member standing in his place today pretending such a policy which the Liberals imposed on the agricultural community in Canada was satisfactory? The Hon. Member should know that the present Government has reduced gas tax to farmers, that there have been changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, that there has been a pay-out and another pay-out is coming this spring, that interest rates with the FCC have been decreased by approximately 2 per cent, that the tobacco growers have had an opportunity for a new system for marketing which they asked for, and that there is a Bill of Rights for taxpayers that has important implications for farmers. The list goes on until we reach No. 57.

I challenge and I dare the Hon. Member to give me a list of 57 initiatives by the Liberals over the last 10 years.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I did not have a chance to finish my speech. This extra 10 minutes will be just about enough.

The Hon. Member has really set out a beautiful agenda of things that the Tories have not done and do not appear to be doing. We have heard a great deal about all of the things they are going to do like freezing transportation rates. In the election campaign, the Tories said they would freeze the rates at the level at which they were before they were increased in early August. The Tories did not do that.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Foster: He just wants to debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): May I be the judge of that? The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) on a point of order.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) does not wish to mislead the House. He ought not to imply that I said the 57 initiatives were those we wished to undertake. Those are the ones we have already taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to advise the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) that that is debate.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it was obvious the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, who is a long-time Member here, is very tender about the fact that the Tories did not freeze transportation rates at the level at which they were before the increase in early August. It was very very clear in the election campaign that the Tories were going to freeze the rates at the level before the increase. The Tories did not do that. In fact, the Tories froze the rates at the new high.

It is interesting that the Hon. Member should bring up the whole question of freight rate increases. It certainly appears now, because of the way the western transportation Act was established, that there would be an increase this coming August. They will be out on the hustings soon hammering away at how they held the rates down, which is just a bunch of malarkey. The rates will not increase because of the volumes and the rate of inflation.

We have not heard the Tories say very much about the farm-debt crisis. They have not done anything about it. The Minister of Agriculture in his more unguarded moments has said that the Tories are not going to do anything about it. That is another reason we would like to see a Budget to confirm to the 39,000 farmers looking for some relief and some assistance that the Government will not do anything to provide relief.

I was interested to note that the Hon. Member raised the Irish beef question. After Ireland dumped some 51 million pounds during the latter half of 1984, the Government finally, after four months in office, invoked the meat import law and restricted—I hear the Hon. Member across the way. Let me say to him it is because we never had the volumes over the minimum rate. If he knew what was going on with the whole Irish beef question, he would not be raising it. Even though the Government invoked a quota of 5.9 million pounds on Ireland, that quota had already been more than filled. The quota is over by one million pounds. Does that sound like a Government that has any guts, a Government that will protect the beef producers here, Mr. Speaker? It sure does not, because the Tories are in Brussels today negotiating to increase the amount. The EEC is demanding an increase from 6 million pounds to 33 million pounds. There is every likelihood that the Tories will knuckle under. The Hon. Member asks why. Because the Tories have already knuckled under in response to American pressure. The Government has increased the quota to the Americans from 21 million pounds to some 65 million pounds. It does not sound to me as if the Government were very committed to livestock and beef producers of the country or to protecting their interests. If it had any courage, it would go to GATT to argue and fight for Canadian agricultural producers rather than knuckle under and increase quotas, as it will probably do within the next week or so.

● (1740)

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few remarks at the end of this debate. In listening to the debate today, it seemed to me that far too much attention was focused on the conference which took place last weekend in Ottawa. In the long run I suspect that that conference will not have that much impact upon the unemployed logger, miner, factory worker or the young person coming out of college and looking for a job in a market where there are no jobs.

The motion before us is an important one. We are faced with a situation where there are two conflicting tendencies which are on a collision course. On the one hand, new technologies mean that fewer people are needed to perform the work required, so people become redundant. For example, in British Columbia the forest industry can have record production with 20 per cent fewer workers. On the other hand, we see a great many cut-backs in the kinds of services available to people. This means that jobs become more important than ever. They are the only ticket for people who want to get into the banquet which society provides. If people do not have jobs, they are locked out.

We see this in the increased use of user fees and increased premiums for medicare. Many people in Canada are simply not making adequate use of medical facilities because they cannot afford the premiums or user fees. Jobs become more important than ever in this context.

I should like to make a few comments about the situation facing our aboriginal people. We have often heard the statistic that up to 90 per cent of people in some Indian communities are unemployed. This statistic is becoming more relevant all the time. A few years ago many of these communities had local economies and the people were able to sustain themselves from the land. These economies are being destroyed by massive development. Just a few weeks ago I visited the Lubicon people in northern Alberta. Until five years ago only 10 per cent of those people were on welfare. Today, 90 per cent of them are on welfare because the oil industry criss-crossed their traditional hunting and trapping grounds, destroying their traditional economy. Now these people find they have no recourse but to go on welfare, which is unable to sustain them as a people. It might put a little bread on their table, but it does not enable them to live as a community. For this reason the World Council of Churches referred to the Lubicon and said that the practices there were in fact genocidal.

It is of the utmost importance that the federal Government take the lead in recognizing the need for the entrenchment of the right of aboriginal people to self-government and to provide adequate resources so that they can govern themselves and have control over their own economy and society.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) referred to the NDP action task force on jobs. I want to focus on one comment which he made. He said there was a greater need for putting resources at the local level so that people had local control. This is what we have been saying with regard to Indian people, but it is also true in hundreds of communities across Canada. It makes good economic sense. If local people have control of the resources, they will make better use of them.

Finally, if the Government has any plans to alleviate the situation for unemployed Canadians, why does it not bring them in now? Why does it have to wait until the end of May? The Government has been in power since September 4. Let it take action now and do what it can to provide some real help for women, young people, natives, fishermen, loggers, and other people of Canada who desperately need that help.

Mr. Speaker: It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(10), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of Supplementary Estimates (C) and Interim Supply, and of all stages of the Bills based thereon.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the first item of business for today is Bill C-23. There have been consultations between the Parties and House Leaders. We have agreed that this matter be called first today and that it be concluded through report stage and third reading stage today.

In addition, I understand that the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) has some motions at the report stage. As I understand it, they will be moved, certainly with our agreement and consent, by the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) on his behalf today. I think you will find the understanding and agreement is that the matter will be dealt with in all stages today through third reading.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I have some preliminary matters that I have to indicate in a statement. We have to do a couple of matters by unanimous consent.

Is there unanimous consent for a House order to deal with the matter through third reading today?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House and to the Government House Leader, but I am not aware of any agreement at this stage. I will inquire. Our House Leader had to leave the House. He will be back within a few minutes. I will consult with him.

Mr. Speaker: That matter will perhaps come back before the House. I now seek the unanimous consent of the House for the replacement. I observe that the Hon. Member is now here. Am I still being asked to seek the consent that motions be moved on his behalf?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have to indicate to the House that there are six motions standing on the Notice Paper at report stage of Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), seeks to return to the provisions of the original Act whereby the Minister is liable to pay to a bank the amount of any loss sustained by it as a result of a business improvement loan after the 18th day of January, 1961.

The Chair has some concern that such an amendment, if carried, would eliminate the March 31, 1985 deadline for these motions and thus would call for a continuation of the existing law. I would refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773, paragraph 7, which relates to the Royal Recommendation and which states:

> An amendment is out of order . . . if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications as expressed in the Royal Recommendation.

I would also refer Hon. Members to May, Twentieth Edition, page 818. In the opinion of the Chair, it would relax a condition of the Royal Recommendation, namely eliminate the March 31, 1985 deadline for liability losses on loans. If the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou wishes to put forward a procedural argument in support of Motion No. 1, I am prepared to hear him at the conclusion of this statement and defer a final ruling until any representations he wishes to make.

If I may proceed, Motion No. 2, also standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou, is acceptable and should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 3, 5 and 6 are acceptable and should be debated together. Motion No. 3 will be voted on separately. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 5 will dispose of Motion No. 6. A negative vote on Motion No. 5 will create the requirement for a vote on No. 6. Motion No. 4 in the name of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is acceptable and should be debated and voted on separately.

I am now prepared to hear procedural argument advanced, if so wished, by the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou. He indicates that he understands the case that I am making. I therefore now indicate to the House that I must find Motion No. 1 to be unacceptable to the Chair. Proceeding to debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had occasion to consult with my House Leader. It is agreeable to us that this Bill proceed through all stages today.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we also would agree to have the Bill proceeded with through all stages today.

Mr. Speaker: For the record, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to the understanding that, there being unanimous consent, the matter shall be dealt with in that way.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 4 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"not more than fifteen years;"

[Translation]

He said: The rationale for this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is that small businesses are often faced with rather stiff loan repayments, especially in the first years, and if the term were extended from 10 to 15 years their payments would be considerably lower, their cash flow would be more manageable, and it would be easier for them to keep operating, particularly in the first years.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, the average repayment period is now 54 months or four and a half years. Since the term proposed under this Bill is 10 years, I fail to see the need to extend it to 15 years when the average repayment period is less than half that. I would therefore suggest, Mr. Speaker, that 15 years would be too long and that 10 years as proposed are quite sufficient.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division. Motion (Mr. Gagliano) negatived.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-23, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 8 to 10 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"amount of the loan."

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-23, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 7 to 13 at page 5.

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-23, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 12 at page 5.

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, those amendments are necessary because, according to the Bill as it is now worded, the Minister might change the clause at any time and substitute 2 or 5 per cent for 1 per cent, or else, say under Clause 5, he would be empowered to make changes without parliamentary approval.

If we believe in a strong Parliament properly vested with decision-making powers, I would suggest that the Minister enjoys enough discretion to administer the Act as it is. In our opinion, those amendments would deny the Minister the additional powers he seems to be seeking.

Mr. Bissonnette: First of all, Mr. Speaker, every year the committee will have an opportunity to examine our annual report. I must table a financial statement in the House and it is automatically referred to the committee. I do not see the relevance of the Hon. Member's question. Besides, the subclause is essential if I am to provide information to borrowers. In any event, this is not a new clause since it is already in the legislation, and I would ask that it be considered under Motion No. 5. I suggest that it remain unchanged, and the same thing applies to Motion No. 6. These clauses are required if the act is to be properly administered.

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment put by my colleague. I think it makes a lot of sense to ensure that Parliament continues its role as final decision-maker.

I listened with interest to the Minister's comments about the report coming before the committee each year. There can be a lot of reports, but that does not necessarily change the way that the Government of the day operates. Therefore, on behalf of my caucus I would indicate my support for the amendment.

• (1115)

[Translation]

Mr. Bissonnette: As you know, Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation is for small businesses, and small businesses are subject to very swift fluctuations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Minister, but he may not take the floor at this stage since he has already spoken.

[English]

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Gagliano) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Gagliano) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Gagliano) negatived.

Hon. André Bissonnette (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 13 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"1985.

(6) Where a bank advances less than half of the amount of a loan to a borrower, the Minister may, on application by the bank made within one year after the first instalment of the loan was advanced, refund to the bank that portion of the fee paid pursuant to paragraph (4)(b) that is attributable to the unadvanced portion of the loan." "

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Bissonnette) agreed to.

Mr. Bissonnette (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement reached earlier this day, the Bill shall now be read a third time.

Mr. Bissonnette (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be now read the third time and passed.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of short comments before we pass this Bill. I believe it is clear that this Government is really no different in terms of how it receives its instructions from the bank either directly or indirectly. Through the debates in the House and in committee over the last period of time, concerns have been expressed from all sides. I know the Minister himself was concerned initially about the potential of undue influence from the banking community. We realized in committee that the banks were saying—and the small business sector is, I believe, rightfully worried about this—that if the Bill was not changed to go along with the idiosyncrasies of the banks, small business would not get the benefit of this Act. It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that in this day and age we still have to kowtow to the banks which seem to have as much power over the Government as do the railways.

● (1120)

Having said that, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we in this caucus will be happy to support the Bill in its new form in order to allow the Minister to get things rolling out there in the small business community.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the proposed 85-15 risk sharing amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act, a motion deemed unacceptable by the Speaker, is an irresponsible proposal. The amendment would make it possible for financial institutions to refuse to lend to small businesses unable to put up the requisite collateral for the 15 per cent being guaranteed by the banks.

The Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) thinks he made a good deal by amending his own Bill.

All Members of this House agree that the Small Businesses Loans Act is a popular piece of legislation that makes it possible for thousands of Canadian entrepreneurs to renew their equipment and facilities by borrowing at reasonable rates, since this kind of loan puts less pressure on their available margin of credit than an ordinary loan would, as the present legislation guarantees 100 per cent of the loan amount.

Thousands of young Canadians have taken advantage of this legislation to start their own businesses. Without the Small Businesses Loans Act, they might have swelled the ranks of our one million and a half unemployed or added their names to a long list of welfare recipients. Thousands of women starting their own business for the first time would never have had this opportunity without the Small Businesses Loans Act. Thousands of Canadians who lost their jobs during the recession have gained enough confidence to create employment for themselves and for many members of their communities, thanks to the Small Businesses Loans Act.

A number of important witnesses appeared before the Standing Committee on Regional Development when it was considering Bill C-23. Mr. Al. Droppo, Director of Public Affairs for the Canadian Bankers' Association, said the following before the Committee on March 19 of this year, when explaining the implications of the 90-10 risk sharing measure, and I quote:

[English]

Regarding the 90-10 risk sharing feature, it is, of course, self-evident that this change will inevitably result in a marked increase in cost to the lenders because of additional loss write-off.

It continues:

—it should be recognized that transferring additional risk to the lenders will result in some reduction in the volume of loans approved.

[Translation]

It is therefore obvious that the 85-15 risk sharing now being proposed by the Minister will reduce the volume of loans approved even further. Mr. Speaker, it is clear that Clause 2 as amended by the Minister goes against the intent of the Act itself, which is to help develop small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act covers 80 per cent of the purchase cost of buildings and materials. Since 20 per cent is paid by the entrepreneur, and from now on, the borrower must put up collateral for 15 per cent of the loan because of the 85-15 arrangement with the Government, this means he has to invest 35 per cent of the amount before even buying his inventory or looking at funds for salaries, and so forth. Unless this new business person is a millionaire like the Hon. Minister, he will never be able to start a business.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we are against Clause 2, which hinders instead of helps small business development.

Mr. Speaker, the same day, at the Standing Committee on Regional Development, we heard Mr. Geoffrey Hale of the Canadian Organization of Small Business say the following, and I quote:

● (1125)

[English]

These loans create approximately three jobs apiece, plus or minus 10 per cent. In the present economic climate, any significant reduction in the incremental lending under the SBLA program is unlikely to be made up by private sector financial institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, according to the information given by the Minister of State (Small Businesses) and Mr. Hale's statement, 285,954 jobs were created between 1978 and 1983, at a cost of less than $200 per job. If we consider the number of loans, 95,318 × 3 jobs, and divide that by $47,745,234 in benefits paid, we get exactly $166.97—one of the cheapest programs going, especially when the program creates jobs.

Mr. Speaker, finally, if we adopt this Bill with the 85-15 clause, we run the risk of a 15 per cent reduction in employment, something we cannot afford with an unemployment rate of around 11 per cent, and that is why I want to propose that this clause be dropped.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, this morning we have shown our good faith, and although we do not agree with the changes, we are prepared to adopt this Bill, because even if a substantial number of loans will be lost to small business, it is still better than nothing. So even if we do not agree, we are going to help ensure that the legislation will remain in effect and that, as of April 1, we will still be able to provide loans for small businesses.

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Bill C-23 will mean that less loans will be granted by the banks in certain parts of this country where banks today are very leery or hesitant about giving loans to businesses just starting up or businesses which are expanding, if the businessman does not have a lot of money himself. It is fairly easy to get money if you have money. If you are worth a lot of money, you can get money, That is the way our system operates. If you have a lot of collateral such as land, or if you have a lot of money in savings or investments, you can get all the money you want to expand an existing business or create a new one. That is the way our system works.

However, the Small Businesses Loans Act is there not for those who have lots of money; it is not for the millionaires of this country, it is for people who want to open up businesses or expand them and just do not have the collateral to do it. That is why this legislation was brought in in the first place. That is why it was adopted by the Government. There was a need to assist current and potential business people to establish or expand a business. It provided a Government guarantee on a loan. If that was accepted by the bank, then the person would get the loan.

Let us not forget that that person still had to take money out of his own pocket. He still had to put up 20 per cent, 15 per cent or 10 per cent. We are talking about someone who is trying to start a business and has saved for years and years and years until he finally got the money he needed which, together with the Government loan guarantee, would put him in business. He put all his life savings into that business. The Government guarantee would go hand in hand to enable that man to get a loan in order to start a business or expand a small business.

• (1130)

That is the way it was intended, Mr. Speaker. That is the way it is on the books today. This Bill will change the system somewhat. The bank will now hesitate in issuing the loan because there are now three players in on the act. In the past the small-businessman or potential small businessman had to put his cash on the line. Then the bank had to put its money on the line, but that was guaranteed by the federal Government. Now, under this Bill, the person will still have to put up the cash as a start. The Government will guarantee 85 per cent of what is left, and 15 per cent is held in limbo. Knowing the banks, Mr. Speaker, they will ensure that they are covered. In other words, a person will have to give a personal guarantee on everything down to the kitchen sink in order to get the loan.

If you examine the record of lending institutions in this country, you will discover that banks and lending institutions are hesitant to give loans in certain parts of the country, most of which are rural areas. In Newfoundland banks have traditionally and historically, for the past 20 years, been hesitant to give a loan to a small businessman or potential small businessman. This is the importance of the FBDB, the bank of last resort in a province like Newfoundland. It is absolutely necessary to the system. Many Members in the Chamber may say that FBDB is of no use at all in Canada. It is of use in a place like Newfoundland where banks historically are hesitant to give loans.

This new Bill will make the banks even more hesitant because of that shady gray area of 15 per cent that is now left in the middle. That is actually discouraging investments by banks in potential small businesses and existing small businesses which wish to expand in Atlantic Canada, particularly in Newfoundland. It is a step backward.

There is one thing that should be noted from all of this, which I am sure other Members have noted. The two organizations which claim to represent all small business in Canada are in agreement with this legislation. Mr. Bulloch is in agreement with the legislation. Those organizations claim to have conducted a survey in every province of this country. They say that small businesses agree with the legislation, with the differentials, with cutting back as far as the federal Government guarantee is concerned, and with imposing some sort of fee on the banks. The NDP is even in agreement with that. The NDP stated in this Chamber and publicly in committee that it wanted that fee imposed on the banks. The NDP is in agreement with the organizations representing small business in this country.

For the life of me, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the NDP or the organizations representing small business would be in agreement with placing a fee on a lender to enable that lender to take advantage of a federal Government guarantee. The lender will pass that onus onto the person getting the loan. No one can deny that. Have you ever seen banks, especially in Atlantic Canada, making an intentional give-away?

At one time a small businessman was able to go 90 days with an overdraft on his account. Then there was a cartel agreement between the banks which allowed only 60 days, and then it got down to 30 days. By their very nature banks do not want to give money away. I believe this legislation is a step backward. But then again, how can anyone disagree with all of the business organizations representing small businessmen in Canada? They are in agreement with this legislation. In order to condemn the legislation one would have to say that the organizations representing small business in the country are wrong. You would have to say that the NDP, the Government and the Minister are wrong.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that I think they are all wrong. That is the bottom line. They are all wrong because this Bill has a built-in discrimination against small business people and potential small business people in the high unemployment areas of Canada. When legislation discriminates against that particular segment of our population it should be frowned upon and should not be supported by the organizations that represent small business in this country. However, I suppose we will have to bow to the wishes of the associations which represent small business in this country and say that perhaps they know more than we do about the reaction of small business and the banks to the underdeveloped areas in the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments?

Mr. Gauthier: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to have a few minutes to make a few comments on Bill C-23.

In its original form, this legislation was aimed at amending the Small Business Loans Act, and in the Bill it was proposed that small businesses could be subjected to amendments in the loans they would negotiate. Originally, 90 per cent of the loan was to be guaranteed by banks, with the Canadian Government of course providing the funds. The amendment put forward and passed in Committee brought that figure down to 85 per cent of the loan. The Bill also has been amended to provide for a one per cent fee to be paid by the bank or rather, of course, by the borrower, as suggested by my colleague for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). The lending institution will certainly pass the cost on to the borrower. This is their normal way of doing things. But that fee, based on one per cent of the amount of the loan, certainly will increase paper work in the banks and significantly reduce their revenues. Small businesses will be the losers because there is nothing in the Bill to entice banking institutions to improve the system, to increase their loans to small- and medium-sized businesses.

• (1140)

I am concerned with the issue because in my constituency, more than half the jobs are created by small businesses. In my area, Ottawa-Vanier, 87 per cent of our firms are small businesses hiring less than 25 employees, and it is very important that they should have access to bank loans. We are somewhat disappointed with the Government's approach in that amendment. We would have thought the Government would have tried to encourage the banks to make loans at the so-called prime rate. This is not the case. Banks will charge one per cent more, and they will charge it of course to the small businesses. This means that this legislation, rather than providing for better conditions for small businesses, is only aimed at getting more money into the Government coffers once again, and if I understood correctly the comments made by the Minister before the Committee, the Government put those amendments forward in order to save money. This fails to recognize the importance of small businesses as the prime force in job creation, in the generation of employment in Canada for the benefit of Canadians. Those provisions which I view as regressive are therefore prejudicial to small businesses because they strangle the borrowers instead of helping them modernize and improve their operations.

Mr. Speaker, the ceiling on the overall principal of the loan is subject to be changed by the Government, by way of amendments to the Act or by way of the estimates. I had thought the Government would have increased the $100,000 maximum now provided for in the legislation. If we are to extend coverage and encourage modern businesses who want to meet the challenge of a computer society, a modernizing society, this $100,000 ceiling imposed upon small businesses in my opinion is too low in this day and age. I had thought that the Government, in this legislation, would have removed the $100,000 limit, perhaps thereby increasing the opportunity for small businesses to improve, to modernize and better compete in this technological age, in this period of change during which they sometimes find it rather difficult to computerize their operations.

Based on these few comments, and with much reluctance, Mr. Speaker, I must state that we are disappointed with this legislation. The Government, with its majority, certainly will push this Bill through today and regretfully, we have no other choice but to oppose the legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? Does the Minister wish to address a question to the Hon. Member? Very well, the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, I was going to answer the questions or meet the expectations of my colleagues, especially the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), who said that everyone except the Liberal Party, endorsed this Bill.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is something I must ask. Can the Liberals be right when everyone agrees except them? It makes me wonder who is wrong? If the group of John Bullock, that of Geoffrey Hale, the Members of Parliament and the NDP all agree, and the only group to disagree is the Liberal Party, we should perhaps ask ourselves who is wrong. I ask this question seriously, but I think I know the answer.

To come back to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who asked a question about the $100,000 limit set for loans, I must tell him that, last year, the average amount of loans was $28,800. The Government therefore had no need to put the limit over $100,000, but this Bill provides some flexibility, which means that, if the market calls for a higher maximum, we shall be able to act, and to do so quickly. This was the purpose of one of the clauses of this Bill.

To reply to other concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), I should point out that, in most countries who have similar legislation to help small businesses, the ratio is not 85 to 15, but 70 to 30. This shows that we are still being very generous towards small businesses. In addition, the Progressive Conservative Government had consultations about this issue, something that the Liberal Party never did once during its mandate. We consulted small businesses. We consulted the bankers. We consulted the groups which represent small business. We are not too stubborn and listen. We changed our minds on the option of having borrowers pay the 1 per cent fee because, during our negotiations and the consultations that I had throughout the country, the borrowers asked us to make the legislation more flexible and easily accessible to small businesses so that the banks would be attracted by these loans.

We therefore gave this possibility to small businesses. We gave the bankers the opportunity to pass on the 1 per cent fees to their customers, but they are under no obligation to do so. However, they can if they want to.

In return, the banks have promised to promote the small businesses loans program. They have assured us that they will provide information on the program. They have guaranteed that they will do everything to help small businesses to remain in business. We shall develop, with the Canadian bankers, a small business information system because of which there will probably be fewer bankruptcies in the future, which I believe to be extremely important.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to thank all my colleagues in this House who have given prompt and serious consideration to this Bill and I believe that Bill C-23 will be one of the best tools available to small businesses in the years to come and that they will use it a lot.

Mr. Gauthier: I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker. I wish to make two points, the first of which is that we, members of the Liberal Party, are the only ones to oppose this legislation. I want the Minister to know that we do not mind being alone in that, because this bill is regressive any way.

It is a step backward. These new provisions will not serve as incentives but as deterrents. Because we favour progress, we will not support regressive measures such as this one.

To the second question, it was stated that the average loan amounted to $28,000. Anyone who is familiar with statistical data is aware that an average loan of $28,000 means absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker. There have been many loans of a couple of thousand dollars each, some loans may have involved higher amounts and the average was $28,000. The point I want to make is that in this era of high technologies, the government should make it possible for people to borrow more than $100,000 to upgrade their operation, purchase new equipment, build new facilities or purchase additional land. The only thing I am concerned about is that they will have the power to do so not with the consent of the House and through amending provisions, but through the Estimates, for so-called reasons of expediency. I suggest that using the Estimates instead of coming to the House and amending the legislation through the normal process will not save that much time. I find the argument which you have put forward rather weak. I feel that if the government wished to amend the legislation, it should come to us. If the new provisions were likely to improve the legislation, they would receive our full support; if, on the other hand, they were regressive in nature, they certainly would not get our support.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, March 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works; and the motion of Mr. Hockin (P. 3227).

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, at the end of the debate last Thursday when this matter was before the House, I was speaking to the motion of the Government to close debate on second reading of Bill C-24. At that time I asked the Government if it would reconsider the March 31 deadline for COSP.

Government Members have received inquiries about extending the program. I have requested an extension of six months. The NDP put forward a motion to extend the program for six months. The Government has received requests indicating varying lengths of time, but for the most part the groups who contacted us request a six-month extension because they feel that period of time would be adequate to service the number of applications to go off oil and on to another form of energy.

Primarily in the Province of Ontario applications are for going off oil and on the natural gas or electricity. In Atlantic Canada, in the Province of Nova Scotia, we do not have the same latitude. We are unable to convert to natural gas because of limited infrastructure. We are unable to convert to electricity because much of our electrical generation is from oil-fired generators. For that reason, we in Atlantic Canada are somewhat more limited. However, a large number of people would like to convert from oil, if not completely, at least partially. People in Nova Scotia are only able to convert to wood and coal, yet there have been many requests by people who want to do so.

Telephone calls through the toll-free line are being received in the Halifax office from all over Nova Scotia. It is receiving approximately 150 calls per day from people who want to convert from oil or who are making inquiries as to the possibility of doing so. The need is still there.

It would be a very nice token on the part of the Government if it extended this deadline. The Parliamentary Secretary indicated in his speech that it would cost $35 million to extend the program for another three months. I realize there is a cost involved, but we on this side of the House feel that the best dollars spent in energy are for conservation purposes. We ask the Government to consider this extension. It would be very popular with Canadians throughout the country. It would allow the people doing the work to do it at a time when the weather is more conducive and the equipment is more readily available. Otherwise, a great number of people will be unable to convert from oil.

I realize the Government does not want to do this. We in my Party feel that we have to keep making this point. We are receiving so many telephone calls and inquiries on this particular point that we feel we have to mention it again and again. We ask the Government to extend the limit for COSP for another six months.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate. As a new Member of Parliament, I am surprised that the Government moved so quickly to try to cut off the right of expression not only of Members of Parliament but of their constituents. This is a very important Bill in terms of what it will do to energy conservation.

Mr. McDermid: You are the ninetieth speaker.

Mr. Angus: I may be the ninetieth speaker, but my constituents deserve to be heard on this issue. I come from northwestern Ontario where the frost will not be out of the ground for many months yet. The decision of the Government to end the program as of March 31 makes a mockery of such legislation. In fact, it makes a mockery of the Government itself. People in my area are asking what the Government is doing. They are saying: "They know we have snow up here; they know the ground is frozen". Why is the Government giving them a phoney deadline of March 31 when everyone in northern Canada was cut off last fall? Clearly these kinds of steps do not do any good for the reputation of the Conservative Government.

A number of Members who spoke before me encouraged an extension to the end of the summer or to next fall to allow people to convert from oil to natural gas. That makes a lot of sense. My constituency office has received a number of calls. People are now telling us that they cannot even convert to propane on a temporary basis because the appropriate materials or tanks are no longer available in the short term. These people are excluded from the opportunity to cash in on this program. It is a program that has been well used. I give compliment to the previous Government for putting it in place and continuing it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, could you ascertain whether there is quorum or not?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Including myself, there are 20 of us.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I was not sure what was happening there, whether you had changed the time limit for me or what.

The Hon. Member made reference to the ninetieth speaker. I am quite happy to be here, legitimately trying to delay the decision as long as we can on this side of the House. The longer we delay it, the better chance there is to allow those Canadians who have not had the opportunity to convert a chance to do so. It is extremely important that we as Opposition Members express those concerns and take whatever delaying tactics we can in order to work on behalf of our constituents. I realize I have a few more minutes, but I am going to wrap up my comments. I just want to reiterate that the Government is tarnishing its reputation with Canadians by such a short-sighted and illogical move, particularly in the north.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I believe I can speak on this motion. As I understand it, it is a motion to restrict the debate. Correct me if I am wrong, but I believe I am permitted to speak.

I have just returned from Vancouver where the oil negotiations are going on between the producing provinces, the Energy Ministers of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan and the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). The consumers are not represented in that negotiation. In those negotiations, they are splitting up a $22 billion pie. The Government has had input from the oil industry. It is now setting down how to give revenues to the provincial and federal Governments and to the oil industry. At the same time, the one little grant, the one little bone, the one little piece thrown away to the ordinary Canadian consumer is being cut off by this Government—a $500 grant to help toward cost of insulation and up to $800 toward converting a furnace off oil, which we are running out of and which is expensive, to natural gas, wood, electricity or solar heating. This Government is cutting that off. I find that ironic. At the same time that it is helping itself to a lot more money from the pocket of the consumer and helping the oil companies get a lot more money from the pocket of the consumer, it is cutting off this program.

In the energy negotiation that is now going on, when they go to world prices, as they are committed to do, when they deregulate the price of oil, that will mean that old oil, that is oil found before 1974 in Canada, will go up from $4 to $7 a barrel to the world price. We produce about 500 million barrels of oil a year. Of the oil we produce, about 55 per cent is old oil. You do not have to be a great mathematician to take 55 per cent of 500 million, which is 275 million barrels, and multiply that by a $4 windfall, taking the lower figure. That is a gross figure, before royalties, taxes and so on, so it will be lower than the figure I give. It is about a billion dollar figure. I reckon that about $200 million to $300 million will go as a windfall to the oil companies.

For that kind of money, we could extend this program easily for another six months. We could extend it for another year. There are people lined up. We have made the case. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and another Member from northern Ontario as well as Hon. Members to my right have made the point.

I am from western Canada. We are affected somewhat. However, in Ontario, Quebec and Atlantic Canada there is more dependence on oil for heating of homes. This is a continuing chance to change that pattern. I predict we will see oil prices come down a little bit and then go up in a few more years. We will then be back to the old scenario of high oil prices and people wanting to get off oil.

I have heard Government Members say that they do not want to give grants, that they are against giving grants. This Government is going to give $1.7 billion in Petroleum Incentive Program grants to oil companies this year.

An Hon. Member: That is wrong.

Mr. Waddell: I say to the Hon. Member who is heckling that the Government has committed itself to phase out that program. That is consistent. It wants to get out of grants. These grants can be called another name. They can be called tax breaks. They are still going to give a regime of tax breaks for exploration on the frontier. They have given oil companies this kind of regime. Indeed, they have to do that if the oil companies are to go to the frontiers. Therefore, there will be grants. They will not be called grants; they will be called tax breaks. In the old days they were called super-depletion allowances. They say they are going to drill for oil in the Beaufort Sea, but first they have to drill for money in Ottawa. They will get these breaks. It is a fact of life in the energy industry that you are going to get a break in order to explore. If we are going to develop the tar sands in Canada, there will be some subsidies in either tax advantages or direct grants.

It is nonsense for Members to say that while they are against grants and want to cut off this grant as well as other grants, grants will continue to be given to oil companies in the form of tax write-offs and tax subsidies. That is a grant. They do not give this grant to the consumers, this bone, this small grant, the one thing that the Canadian consumer got out of the National Energy Program other than somewhat lower prices for oil. They did get this grant. The Government says that if it cuts off this grant people will still take advantage of the program. They say that people are rational beings, that they will conserve and fix up their houses, put in the insulation, change their furnace from oil to natural gas or electricity and so on. That presumes that the cost of a barrel of oil will go up, but I submit the consumers are seeing the price of oil coming down. They are not going to rush out and continue the conversions. We are going to lose the momentum. We have had one million people convert. The program is half over. We have 900,000 left to do it.

We would like the program to continue until 1990. We think the Government is making a mistake in cutting it back. It is being penny wise and pound foolish. However, we accept that they are the Government and they can proceed as they want, but for goodness sake, extend the program for six months. The Government knows there are injustices in northern Ontario. This is a cold country. At certain times of the year you cannot put in a gas line. Evidence was adduced in the House that people in northern Manitoba had ordered heat pumps and furnaces. There is also a backlog in Montreal and Toronto, yet the Government has said March 31, that's it.

The Government can extend the oil deal. It has extended that twice. If Alberta is tough, they will extend it, thank you Premier Lougheed. If the banks are in trouble the Government will help them out. I would like the Government to bail out some of the people in my riding who are unemployed and are losing their houses. The Government can bail out the banks and extend the oil negotiations. We are bringing forward a first case where we have evidence of people who want just a little more time, people who are lined up to apply, and we are only asking that they be given six more months. But what does the Government do? It cuts off debate. It cuts us off as well as the people who have applied.

What have we tried to do? We have tried to extend this program. However, there is no one in the press gallery. One says this with some reluctance, but I would say that the press, with the exception of Mr. Caragata of Canadian Press, has not fully analysed and reported this matter. They are more interested in us if we pull our pants down in Question Period. However, they will not properly cover a debate that really means something to the average Canadian.

This Bill will create a real change for the average Canadian. This is an indication of a policy directive of the Government which will create an injustice to those people in the northern parts of the country who are not getting equal treatment. I thought that being Canadian was all about getting equal treatment. That is why I appeal to the back-benchers of the Government to put pressure on the Government, because it is in their ridings that people are converting. It is in their ridings that the people are finally getting a little bit of help. Put pressure on the Government so that the Cabinet extends this program for six more months. That is all we are asking and I think it is very reasonable.

I believe that a Government that was really concerned about consulting people and about listening would not bring down the guillotine on this debate. I believe instead that it would say that it was prepared to look at this matter and extend it for another six months because it understands the justice and economic sense of such an extension.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate again, but on the other hand, I am disappointed in the new Government's lack of enthusiasm for recommendations and claims that we feel are well founded. Mr. Speaker, I am particularly disappointed that, in addition to setting a deadline in the Bill itself, the Government should have imposed time limitation on debate. It is too bad we have to repeat the same arguments a hundred times to make ourselves understood. However, I am prepared to do so if the Government can be persuaded to review the Bill before the House today.

It is too bad the Government has not understood our message, a message that is clear and unequivocal. The Canadian Home Insulation Program, CHIP, and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program COSP, were very good, I would even say excellent, federal programs, whose ultimate purpose was to promote energy conservation.

After carefully listening to and reading speeches by Members of the various Parties, I think we all agree that these programs have been very useful. However, we in the Opposition cannot go along with the Government's decision to eliminate these programs. As my colleagues have pointed out before, the termination of these programs has taken everyone, and especially the private sector, by surprise. If this Government thinks it can cut and withdraw programs without generating controversy, it is wrong. People do not act without analyzing the consequences of what they do. They do not speak before considering what they want to say. A government cannot afford to draft legislation unthinkingly, especially a government that thinks so highly of consultation and consensus. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Government has a certain amount of pride and is thus reluctant to reverse its decisions. However, pride has no future but common sense does. And common sense dictates that we should offer entrepreneurs and consumers an extension.

Common sense dictates that the interests of Canadians should be considered above all else. The Government must act to allay the fears and quiet the feelings of panic that have held this country in their grip since November 8 last year.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians have reason to be worried. First of all, when these two programs are cut, homeowners who want to upgrade their insulation and change their heating systems to save energy and money will no longer be able to take advantage of the grants offered by the Government. Second, contractors who are carrying out these conversions cannot possibly cope with any excess demand between now and March 31. Third, what will happen once the contracts have been completed? The answer is simple: there will be a sharp drop in employment, something we cannot afford with nearly one and a half million Canadians unemployed. I fail to understand why, with the kind of unemployment we have, the Government does not at least help maintain existing jobs that were created by private enterprise, if it is reluctant to create jobs directly.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, not only the government has not yet introduced new job creation programs, not only does it hope that those jobs will be created by magic, not only does it deny small businesses the assistance they need to provide more jobs, not only is the government inactive in job creation, but it has also created unemployment by cutting programs.

Since the election, it has substantially cut the budget of several large companies, it has cut jobs, it has increased the federal tax on several items so that private companies have to raise their prices and the consumers pay more.

Mr. Speaker, I will be kind and leave it at that, but I do not need to say more to demonstrate that the Government has been going too far. We should be realistic and understand all the economic implications of the COSP and CHIP programs for the creation of jobs. We have to realize that those programs contribute to the creation of jobs. How many Canadians would have converted their heating system or would have insulated their homes if those federal programs had not been in effect? Far less, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you. This partial subsidy of the conversion costs has helped Canadians make a decision that thousands of them would not have made otherwise. This is why the implementation of programs such as CHIP and COSP was beneficial to many Canadians, allowing them to change their system so that various contractors throughout the country could have work and create other jobs, thus increasing the performance of their business.

When we refer to an improved performance of a business, we mean a wider scale of better services at more competitive prices so that in the future those businesses will have a sound basis and will continue to thrive. However, through the too early and too quick cancellation of programs, the Government has threatened the infrastructure of businesses which were not solidly established. Such an infrastructure takes a long time to set up and an unexperienced government should not be allowed to give it up.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, businesses and jobs are too important in the Canadian economy. Not only are those jobs a major component of our economy, they are also absolutely essential in the Atlantic Provinces, particularly New Brunswick. Unemployment back home has reached unprecedented levels and we simply cannot let the situation deteriorate further, far too many people are idle as it is. Now then, the programs under consideration today do provide much needed employment. I should think that a job, temporary though it may be, is better than none at all. But there again, if we give small businesses enough time to get organized, we find out that besides creating jobs those programs have created a demand which would not have existed otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by saying that the people of New Brunswick could still have used those programs. Lots of houses throughout the province are still underinsulated and most of them do not even have adequate and efficient heating systems. First, the programs are being phased out prematurely and, second, the Government ought to put off the deadline for at least six months to give the private sector enough time to get organized. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Government should not ignore that possibility nor reject that compromise.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to take part in this very important debate on Bill C-24. I think it is particularly appropriate that this debate is taking place the day after the Government announced a massive bail-out of one of Canada's major banks. What could be a more glaring contradiction in terms of the policy of this Government? On the one hand it is bailing out a major bank with taxpayers' money, and on the other hand it is cutting off an important program which benefits ordinary Canadians. I would like to take a few minutes to elaborate on that contradiction.

I might also note that yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) was huddled together with her colleagues from across the country trying to determine ways of making the oil industry more rich, prosperous and fat than it is now. One group in Canada which will lose on the deal which will come from the negotiations between the federal Minister and her provincial colleagues is the consumers of Canada. The consumers will lose on that deal the same as they have lost on Bill C-24.

The Government is prepared to grant massive incentives and give large amounts of money to the oil sector and it is prepared to bail out the banks of Canada, but at the same time it is axing a program which will conserve energy and assist in job creation. Surely, that is the last kind of program the Government should axe under the guise of restraint.

CHIP created more jobs than COSP, but both programs were very effective, particularly in assisting small contractors and small business. Not only has the Government cut off the benefits to people who will be affected by these important programs and the jobs of the contractors who are involved in these areas, but it now has the gall to cut off debate. I would like to commend the NDP critic for his energy and determination in not allowing the Government to get away with this attack on the consumers of Canada.

The elimination of these two programs is affected in a very draconian way. The axe will fall on March 31 and there will be no opportunity for those people who have been hoping and planning to convert to other heating systems. We in this Party introduced a motion to hoist the Bill for six months. That would have given the Government six months to come to its senses. It also would have provided six months for contractors to convert heating systems under the present legislation.

There is a variety of options which are being removed. As the legislation now stands, a home owner could convert to heating by natural gas, electricity, propane, wood, wind or solar energy. The buildings which were eligible for COSP were those which were constructed prior to October of 1980. In my constituency there are many older homes and this program has been particularly beneficial.

When I was in my constituency office a couple of weeks ago, many people from Burnaby asked me why the Government, in its zeal to cut the deficit at any price, was prepared to attack consumers when it was giving PIP grants to the oil industry, one of the most lucrative give-aways this country has ever seen. Is the Government attacking the oil industry? Is the Government asking that industry for equality in terms of sacrifice? No, the Government is attacking the little guy. That is not fair.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last weekend said that, yes or no, sacrifices must be made and that Canadians recognize that sacrifices must be equal. Where is the equality of sacrifice in attacking consumers and in eliminating important energy conservation programs, when at the same time the oil sector is getting fatter and fatter? With the assistance and connivance of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, she and her provincial colleagues—except for that enlightened bastion of reason, truth, light, beauty and justice in the Province of Manitoba, the Government of which is holding out for a fair deal for consumers—are prepared to hose the consumers of Canada, just as the Government is hosing the consumers of the country in the Bill on which it has brought down the guillotine. Obviously, the Ontario Conservatives are leading the charge against the consumers. That kind of regressive policy will be reflected in a significant rebuke at the polls in the upcoming provincial election.

An Hon. Member: What about the Liberals?

Mr. Robinson: The Liberals in Ontario, as elsewhere, will soon be declared an endangered species.

The changes in the legislation will effectively mean the death of COSP on March 31 of this year. The goal of the program was very laudatory. It was to reduce the use of oil in residential, commercial and industrial sectors to 10 per cent of energy use by 1990. It was recognized that the program would involve a very significant degree of conversion to other heating systems, particularly in older homes which are dependent on oil. I believe about 37 per cent of older homes were dependent on oil at the time COSP was established. To date, the program has been a success. In fact, almost one million units have been converted under the program. Why on earth would the Government see fit to eliminate one of the most successful programs, both in terms of job creation and energy conservation, which we have had in Canada for many, many years? It does not make sense.

Certainly, the program has cost money in the short term, but by conserving energy and assisting in the conversion from oil to other forms of energy, money will be saved in the long term. That is what we in the NDP believe is good planning—spend a little money now so that in the future money will be saved when the cost of oil becomes much higher.

I have already mentioned the benefits of this program in terms of energy conservation. There are also very significant benefits for people across the country and in particular for my constituents in Burnaby where there are many more older homes. There are benefits in terms of job creation. For every $1 million which was spent in this program in 1979 dollars, some 30.5 person-years of employment were created. As a result of the grants which have been made so far, there have been almost 17,000 person-years of employment created. At a time when this country is being ravaged by unemployment, it does not make sense to cut back on a program which creates jobs, and at the same time as it creates jobs, it saves energy.

It makes an awful lot more sense to put money into energy conservation than it does to put money into creating new weapons of destruction. We heard the Prime Minister suggest that star wars will create jobs so let's put billions and billions of dollars into research on star wars, working hand in glove with President Ronald Reagan. If we want to talk seriously about the creation of jobs, let's put the money into sectors of the economy from which we get a lot more bang for the buck than the military sector. I suggest that the energy conservation sector is an important sector. Instead of putting money into the military, we should be putting money into energy conservation.

The Tories, when they were in opposition, certainly did not suggest that this program was going to be eliminated. In fact, they supported the program. I do not recall the Tory candidate in Burnaby during the last federal election saying that if a Conservative Government is elected it is going to eliminate grants for energy conservation. No, there was no suggestion of that. I do not recall the Prime Minister saying on national media that if the people elect a Tory Government one of the first things it will do is cut off very important grants for energy conservation. No, that Party was silent about that hidden agenda.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill is a regressive and backward move. It hits the consumers of this country and attacks energy conservation. Certainly on that basis we intend to fight it with every ounce of energy we have.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate once more in the debate on this Bill. We have been debating this Bill in this House for some time and I think it requires further debate because, obviously, the Government has not yet seen the light. Of course, seeing the light would mean a complete retraction of its initial position. I see some Hon. Members of the Conservative Party across from me, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that their constituents are telling them, like ours are telling us, that this program needs to be kept.

Bill C-24 was introduced in this House as a result of black Thursday, November 8, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) perpetrated his vicious expenditure and program review document on the people of Canada. One of the side effects of this document, of course, is the serious cut-backs in employment and benefits to ordinary Canadians. I am sure that most of the people who would have benefited from this program in the future are the very same people who could least afford to make those conversions on their own.

I see my colleague from Nipissing is here. I am sure that all the people of Springer Township would want that program retained. They would not want it cancelled because they know the value of that program, as do the people of Ottawa West.

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) for the tremendous effort he has put forward in attacking this Bill. It was a very necessary attack because this is very regressive legislation.

I received a letter from the Electrical Contractors' Association of Ottawa. I would just like briefly to read part of it to you, Mr. Speaker, because I know the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) has also received a copy. I am sure he has read it as well, but just in case he has forgotten some of its contents I would like to refresh his memory. The letter was sent to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). It reads:

> Due to the serious shortage of electrical heating equipment, most of which will not be manufactured until late March, it appears that many home owners who have signed contracts for the conversion of their heating systems will find themselves ineligible for the COSP grant. This is not the fault of the contractor who believed there would be no problem of availability well before the March 31 deadline.
> We propose that the COSP program be extended to September 30, 1985, a more realistic date, considering the heating season in Canada does not end March 31.

I am sure that it had not occurred to the Minister of Finance that the heating season does not quite end on March 31 in the balmy part of the country he comes from, but in my part of the country we still require heating as do, I am sure, the people of Ottawa West. The letter continues:

> Our members are concerned that their customers receive the best service possible and we urge you to consider their proposals immediately. Failure to act on these proposals would be a severe blow to many contractors and most unfair to home owners.

Knowing the interest Hon. Members of the Conservative Party have in the well-being of the home owners of this country, I am sure they would not want to do anything which would unduly harm them. We have heard over the last few weeks of debate from some Conservative Hon. Members who have said: "Well, we had to cut back on this because we just cannot afford it". The Conservatives have decided to cut in certain areas. You will notice, of course, Mr. Speaker, that I said certain areas because I want to demonstrate to you that they did not exactly cut everywhere. I am reading from the CP wire service of this morning:

Roy McMurtry, the former Ontario Attorney General, appointed High Commissioner for Britain last month, will earn between $89,270 and $105,050 annually at his new job—

This, of course, is a retroactive pay increase given to this particular loser. A similar increase in salary is being given to another loser, Lawrence Hanigan. It must make the members of the Conservative Party who won in the last election almost wish they had lost. Just imagine the tremendous salary increase they would have received by losing had they been appointed like Mr. McMurtry, who failed in his bid for the leadership of the Ontario Conservative Party, and Mr. Hanigan, who was clobbered in the riding of Montreal-Laval-des-Rapides by our good colleague from the Liberal Party. I see the Hon. Member from Calgary here. I am sure she is almost wishing that she had lost as well so she could have received an increase in salary of $35,000 or $40,000. That is the reward that has been paid to some Conservative losers.

It is small wonder that we do not have the money to administer government programs when we squander funds on this type of pork-barrelling throughout the country. Since last September we have purchased $173,000 worth of additional limousines. The used car lot beside the west door, Mr. Speaker, is becoming larger by the day. It is extending almost to the next building now. The place is just littered with these automobiles which are used to take Cabinet Ministers from the Centre Block to the West Block or wherever it is they are going. The Conservatives have also spent $100,000 renovating offices. I see the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) is in the House. He is the one who spent the most money of any Minister in decorating his offices. He has paid well for that fancy wallpaper and whatever else they put in those offices with that kind of money given to outside contractors—bedrooms, blue carpet, blue wallpaper, and whatever else they have in those individual offices. If that isn't enough to make all of us depressed to see that kind of "blue" going in, I do not know what is.

The Government has also rented $31,000 worth of cars for those Ministers who happen to run out of cars on particular days when their limousines are parked somewhere. That is the kind of government waste we have been seeing since last September. Then they stand up in this House and have the unmitigated gall to tell us that they have no money for a program which benefits the poor people of my riding and of yours, Mr. Speaker.

● (1240)

I tell you, the Tories have no shame. Only you, with your unbiased opinion, looking at this from a truly objective standpoint, Mr. Speaker, would understand that it is absolutely incredible that the Conservatives would attempt to perpetrate this on the people of Canada. You know that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West, if they allowed him to speak in this House, if they took the muzzle off him for five minutes, would want to say to the people of his riding who have benefited from this program or who are in the middle of contracts which obviously will not be terminated by March 31, that he would try to get their $800 for them. But he cannot. They will not let him talk in this House, which is unfortunate because I am sure he would have a lot to say.

Mr. Daubney: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I resent the allegation of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) that those of us on this side of the House are muzzled. We are anxious to take part in a reasonable debate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I do not think that is a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: I do not think the Hon. Member has raised a valid point of order, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, our colleague will be credited for that time at the end of his remarks.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just want to support the Hon. Member who got up. I ask him if he has taken part in this debate. If not, I invite him to get up after this speaker and take part in the debate. Put your mouth where your—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order either.

Mr. Boudria: I just wanted to say that the Ontario Conservative Party is, of course, party to this whole business of profiteering in the oil business. As you know, they are very good in their investments in the stock market. A number of years ago the Premier of Ontario had a vision, a Conservative vision, mind you; he wanted to buy $650 million worth of shares in the Sun Oil Company of Pennsylvania. That would, according to him, create jobs in Ontario. Well, it did. Malcolm Rowan, a Tory bagman that they hired to run it, got a job. One job was created with $650 million. Since then the stock has dropped to about half the original price and the Ontario Conservative Party still lives today in shame over that horrible investment.

I just want to tell our New Democratic friends who were referring a while ago to the Ontario Government's purchase of Suncor that their then leader wanted to buy twice as many shares. So the NDP policy is: if it is a bad deal, you buy twice as much and that makes it better; at least, according to their economic and financial logic.

[Translation]

We in the Liberal Party want to see the Bill delayed as long as possible, in fact we do not want it to be adopted. Since the Government simply cannot understand that it should drop Bill C-24, altogether, I strongly suggest that at least it ought to be prepared to put it off for six months so that Canadian consumers can complete all heating system conversion projects now under way.

I have many other things to say, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately my time has expired. I am, sure that other Members like our colleague who took the floor a moment ago, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), have very interesting comments to make about this measure.

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is not with joy but with a realization of the importance of this matter that I rise to continue debate in opposition to the motion before us.

Mr. Malone: What is it?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): To end debate on a Bill designed to put an end to the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program. With the majority the Tories have they know they can carry the matter through without any difficulty.

In rising to speak in opposition to that motion and in order to keep the debate going, I do so very much in the awareness that this is a very important matter to our constituents who are watching at home. They are listening with a lively interest which I fear Private Members and Ministers in the Government do not have. One of the regrettable things about a Government with a large majority is that it has a sense of omnipotence. Given whatever vision it may have of the future, it can seek to achieve that vision without regard to the needs of the Canadian people.

I am very strongly opposed to this motion. The motion under debate before this motion should have carried. That was a motion for a six-month hoist of the Bill, which would have allowed the Government, together with the Canadian people, to do what is so badly needed. It has become quite clear that at the very least what is needed is some extension of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program which would allow people to make the conversion to natural gas.

I approached the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) on this quite early on, when it became clear that constituents of mine were not going to be able to make the conversion given the sudden imposition of a deadline of March 31. Other Members have indicated since then, in the debate on this Bill, the kinds of difficulties which have arisen in their ridings for the businesses concerned as well as the home owners who want to make the conversion and find that the time left is too short, particularly in the winter when it is impossible to make these installations. Propane tanks, which would allow temporary conversion to get people into the program, have been snapped up and there simply is no means available for people to take advantage of the program.

It is for that reason that some extension of time is absolutely imperative. The decision of the Government to vote down the six-month hoist motion was a denial to my constituents and those of other ridings of fundamental justice; that is, their right to get in on an important program and achieve a conversion which would be to their advantage and the advantage of the country.

Whatever the situation may be these days when we seem to have enough oil and a potential supply which has to be held back, surely we all realize that this is a temporary situation. At some point in the near future, if we continue to be profligate consumers of oil, we are going to run into the most terrific supply difficulties. Everyone knows that. I cannot imagine that Conservative Members from the oil-producing regions of the country are not aware of that reality. To cut off a program which was designed to encourage conservation of that important resource is something which should be rejected for the most fundamental ecological and economic reasons.

We are now faced with a final vote which the Government knows it will carry, and that is one of those displays of arrogance which Governments can fall heir to. In this case it is a display of arrogance based on short-sighted economic thinking and financial reasoning which I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has already begun to appreciate.

Members of the Liberal caucus have been focusing on some of the difficulties that arise here. The decision of the Government to reduce the deficit was laid out for us last November. That has been periodically reasserted in recent days. If you set out to reduce the deficit by taking action which slows down economic activity, the effect is to increase the deficit because of the nature of the programs which this country has long enjoyed and is determined to continue enjoying. The petition on unemployment insurance presented at the economic summit last week showed that the Canadian people are united on the importance of these programs. The Government knows that there are very limited possibilities of touching these. The end result of trying to deal with the deficit directly is to increase it.

Some of us have that fundamental understanding, but if it exists in Conservative circles it is muzzled these days. The muzzling of Members of the Government who know better deserves a little exploration. It is abundantly clear that investment by the Government is a good thing. No one can question the fact that investment by the Government in the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program made the country more efficient in the use of fuels.

Mr. Malone: Higher taxes.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): If it takes higher taxes or borrowed money, it is still an investment which makes the country more efficient. People who are convinced that we must continue to cut back should study the circumstances of British Columbia. Eighteen months of that strategy has been enough to demonstrate how you can drive a people close to their knees.

We do not need the wisdom of 1929 in this country. We need the wisdom of 1939 which recognized that, with a great challenge and the available resources, we could find the will. The country may have been borrowing money three or four years later, but people were employed. Taxation was applied to the working people and the enterprises employing people and prosperity was achieved for the country. That wisdom brought us triumphantly through a war and built this country to the greatest heights of industrial achievement it ever reached. It provided a basis for years and years of prosperity after the war. Unfortunately, there is not a bit of that wisdom in the Tory ranks these days.

Mr. Oberle: Who do you want to start a war with?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): I don't want to start a war, I want to deal with the great challenges in this country. I want to deal with the problems of poverty and inadequate housing. I want to deal with the situation of our native communities. To declare a war on poverty in this country would be one means of putting to productive use the unused resources in this country. Surely the Minister of Finance knows that when he does that he will be able to increase taxes. It will create a reduction of tax burdens in other areas as the unemployment insurance fund gets back to the level it should be at. Social assistance costs will drop. When investments are made in Canada's well-being the country will be back on the footing we want. People with skills in energy use and conservation will be employed again by the National Research Council. The technology centres we need will be back in operation. That is the kind of program we should have.

I regret that my time has elapsed, Mr. Speaker. One needs 20 minutes, 40 minutes or days in order to deal with the inequities that the Conservatives are laying on us. On behalf of my constituents who cannot get what they so badly need from the Government, I say how wrong this is and how glad I am to be here this afternoon to keep the debate going a little longer to postpone this most unfortunate action.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am somewhat disappointed to have to deal with Bill C-24. Unfortunately, ever since this Progressive Conservative Government assumed power, all the bills it has introduced in the House aimed not at creating new job opportunities, but unemployment.

With Bill C-24, the Government is demonstrating once again that it has no compassion whatsoever for the needs of the Canadian people. The proof of that is that no Hon. Member on the Government side has had the courage to stand up and deal with this Bill. They agree prively that we are right, but they just could not admit it publicly. That means, Mr. Speaker . . . The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) whom I am looking at was reported in the newspapers as saying that a company was refused a loan and that he had not been consulted. Now that they have been here for over six months, these guys will have to wake up.

I am now looking at the Minister of State (Mines) (Mr. Layton), the real minister. He is not listening. I wish he would at least listen . . . He said that in the matter of mapping, he was having consultations. He is waiting for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) to decide. I say he should have the courage to make a stand. He is there to protect Quebecers' interests. He should not wait for the Deputy Prime Minister to decide. He should say that he wants the mapping office to go to Quebec. If you lack the courage to do so, you should resign and let someone with guts replace you. That is what we need. It is about time people started to—

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we should allow the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to deal with the mapping issue, as his government had allowed the situation to deteriorate for the past 10 years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: Very well, it is not a point of order. The Hon. Member who just rose is a lawyer. I can appreciate he never understood anything about procedure.

An Hon. Member: He does not know anything.

Mr. Malépart: Also, I am happy I managed to get one of them to rise. I have achieved what I set out to do, but I still hope the Minister will rise and say: "I want the Mapping Branch".

Coming back to Bill C-24, Mr. Speaker, we should remember that the Minister of Finance, in co-operation with the Treasury Board slasher the Hon. Member for . . . our friend from a Quebec constituency, the so-called strong minister from Quebec, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), has announced a $84 million cut in the funding of the Canadian Home Insulation Program. That means $84 million withdrawn from the economy. That means thousands of jobs, and assistance denied to thousands of Canadian men and women who could use that to improve their homes while conserving energy.

And from the Canadian Oil Substitution Program funding, $95 million will be cut. Those two programs have provided direct help to Canadian men and women, but they do not care. They cut.

From the UFFI Program, $1.5 million have been cut. This also has helped people. Why is all that? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) needs $50 million to change the colour of our Armed Forces uniforms. No problem. They found that easily.

I think it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. To continue—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES COMMISSIONER

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the Table the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the calendar year 1984.

May I remind Hon. Members that, pursuant to Standing Order 46(4), this report is deemed permanently referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, Policy and Programs, and their Honours in the Senate will be acquainted thereof.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REFUGEE STATUS APPLICANTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, on April 4 next, the Supreme Court will render its decision on the deportation order of seven individuals of Sikh origin. The Immigration officials have denied them a personal hearing and the Sikhs feel that this is a violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

If the Supreme Court dismisses the government claim in this matter and decides in favour of the Sikhs, it will mean that each refugee status applicant will be entitled to be personally heard by Immigration officials.

It also means that those responsible for the refugee status will be completely overburdened. It has been acknowledged in parliamentary committee that it was essential that each applicant be personally heard. Several Conservative members of that committee agree with me; people should not be treated as mere numbers.

In my opinion, the government should not wait for the Supreme Court order to hear applicants for refugee status. It should be a done as a matter of course.

FILMS

CANADIAN OSCAR AWARD NOMINATIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the strength and excellence of the Canadian film industry has been demonstrated again with four film nominations for Oscars and one winner announced last night.

The Genie Awards were made last Sunday night. The National Arts Centre had to turn away people who wanted to attend, people who wanted to see Canadian films. Yet very few Canadians have a chance to see these Canadian created productions, either by the National Film Board or by independent producers, including those winning the highest awards for excellence.

Film distribution in Canada is still dominated by foreign concerns which are keener to flog their own product and make the profits therefrom than to give Canadian productions a chance. The Government should give high priority to a program of incentives to promote Canadian film production by independent companies and provide support for the National Film Board which has an international reputation and is a regular winner of Oscars. It should negotiate with the provinces to ensure that Canadians in all parts of our country have the chance to see Canadian films.

Measures simply to promote Canadian productions without concern for distribution, as tried in the past, have proven to be futile. The film industry could be a good source of new jobs for Canadians, and it is absolutely vital to our own sense of ourselves as a culture.

AGRICULTURE

FARMERS' FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the family farm is the backbone of Canadian agriculture. It can produce efficiently as the whole family works without unemployment insurance, workers' compensation, or holidays with pay. When production and prices for farm produce are good, the farmer prospers, but it is always a gamble with weather, prices, inflation, grasshoppers, and interest rates. During the last three years prices stagnated, crops were poor and interest rates high and, as a result, hundreds of farmers across Canada are enmeshed in the worst agricultural crisis since the hungry thirties.

About 25 farmers went bankrupt in 1979, but since then a quarter of a million farmers have gone belly-up, and about 50,000 farmers are currently facing serious financial difficulties. Many of these are our most productive and innovative farmers. In 1979 they borrowed to expand their farms and then got caught in the poor crops, low price and high interest rates squeeze. Many of them have paid in interest almost as much or more than they borrowed, and still owe more than they borrowed. Many banks are on the verge of foreclosing.

In the hungry thirties, federal and provincial legislation forced the financial companies to make sensible settlements, and consequently saved thousands of farms. When the amount of interest paid is close to or greater than the amount borrowed, and the principal is still greater than the amount borrowed, that shows that a farmer can't beat this interest penalty game. We need legislation now to force sensible arrangements and settlements. We must save the family farm.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPACT OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, import quotas ending March 31, 1985, have limited shipments of Japanese made cars to Canada to between 166,000 and 170,000 units, or to a maximum of 18 per cent of the new car market.

In 1984 a record 125,000 people were directly employed in the Canadian auto industry and parts manufacturing, with a great many more in related industries. Indeed, the automotive sector has increased its employment level by 25,000 to 30,000 workers in the past two years alone, thereby greatly contributing to the economic well-being of our country. In fact a large portion of our recent national economic recovery is due directly to auto assembly and parts manufacturing.

Therefore, should this quota system be revoked and no alternate secure measure adopted in its stead, the domestic auto market risks inundation by Japanese imports with little or no Canadian value added. Consequently, Canadian jobs would be lost due to production cut-backs. Canada cannot afford, nor should it be asked, to tolerate such a possibility.

A two-year survey released this month by the Wilfrid Laurier University Institute for Business and Economic Studies finds that 55 per cent of Canadians are in favour of quotas and 64 per cent favour sourcing parts in Canada.

Therefore I would urgently plead that the Government ensure that either Japanese vehicle importers invest in Canada to the appropriate level in exchange for market access or, in lieu of this recommendation, extend the import quota for another year.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY IN DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration today, the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) advised our members that his Department has set targets for women within the senior management ranks of the Department of Labour, the lead ministry in this particular area.

The Minister expressed his satisfaction that his Department intends to increase the percentage of women in senior management ranks from 14 per cent to 17 per cent by 1988. That is a disappointing one per cent increase per year. At this rate, we may see equality in the Department of Labour by the year 2021.

The Minister and the Government have made no meaningful commitment to employment equity as recommended in the Abella Commission report. The Conservative Party promised the stars to the women of Canada and has given them merely a flashlight.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has lost the battle over the Abella report. The Government refuses to accept employment equity and set an example. It does not even care. The women of Canada will not be fooled by the Government's lack of commitment and the broken promises of "blarney bulroney" and the band of yes men and silent women in his Cabinet.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the priorities of the new Conservative Government. I have just returned from my riding in Vancouver and I am absolutely shocked at the extent of unemployment in British Columbia. The Government said "jobs, jobs, jobs". Now it is talking about the "deficit, deficit, deficit". Mr. "M", one of my constituents whom I met on Saturday, had been unemployed for 16 months. He lost his house as a result of foreclosure by a bank and a finance company. On my return to Ottawa I find that the Government is bailing out a bank. Government does not bail out the ordinary Canadian but it is prepared to bail out a bank.

Another first act of the Government was to get rid of the successful off-oil program. It represented an $800 grant to ordinary Canadians, one of the few grants to consumers.

The Energy Ministers are meeting in Vancouver today. The holders of old oil will get a windfall of between $4 and $7 a barrel, or $200 to $300 million. There was no one at those meetings representing the consumers or the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

We have seen the bail-out of a bank and the favouring of oil companies. The Government is forgetting about the job promises and is cutting the energy grants. Those are the priorities of the Government. If it continues like this, the honeymoon will soon be over.

ANTI-SEMITISM

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF JEWS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry, which now comprises 237 Members of the House of Commons, I would like to inform the House that the situation for the Jewish community in the Soviet Union continues to deteriorate. Jewish emigration from the U.S.S.R. has all but ceased.

S.O. 21

Today, hundreds of students from across Canada, representing the National Jewish Students Union network, have come to the city to meet with their Members of Parliament and enlist support in their cause. At this moment they are holding a demonstration at the Soviet Embassy on Charlotte Street to indicate directly the concern of all Canadians.

We have, sitting in the House, representatives of the student organization who have come from all parts of Canada to be with us today. On behalf of the members of our parliamentary group, I welcome them.

We now stand on the threshold of a new era in the U.S.S.R. We have indicated to the Soviet Union that it must address the problem of Soviet Jews and allow those who wish to leave to do so to be reunited with their families.

• (1410)

As we talk today, those brave Jewish citizens of the Soviet Union face continued brutal harassment. Prisoners such as Anatoly Shcharansky and Iosef Begun languish in prison, their only crime that of wanting to be Jewish and openly expressing that desire.

We are all aware that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will be in Moscow next week. We trust this issue will be brought directly to the highest levels of the Soviet Government and that he will convey vigorously the concern of Canadians.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85 PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, if I rise in this House today it is to address my constituents of Drummond.

I want to encourage my constituents, the businessmen and women, the business executives, the farmers, and also, of course, the students, to take up the challenge of the employment program developed by our Government.

I refer specifically to the Challenge 85 Program, which should create 95,000 jobs for students next summer.

I hope that my constituency will amply benefit from the amounts made available under this budgetary item of $205 million and under various other programs announced by our Government.

Mr. Speaker, this program invites the business sector to offer meaningful jobs to students and to provide them with useful skills in anticipation of their joining the labour force. I remind those interested that Quebec employers have until March 29, 1985, to submit their applications to their local employment centre.

Challenge '85 has been designed to help employers meet this objective. This program is intended for Canadians in every sector of the economy, and during the International Youth Year, I invite them to create jobs for young people. In addition, this is an innovative step on the part of our Government since it is the first time that a summer employment program calls for the participation of goods and services suppliers and not only small businesses.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS—REMUNERATION LEVELS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government yesterday announced major salary increases for some of its Tory faithful who recently received patronage appointments. This weekend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rejected suggestions that money be spent to improve the lot of unemployed Canadians. He told Canadians that the deficit must be cut, while the boys in the back room were padding the pay cheques of Tory appointees.

What makes these newly appointed Tories so special that the Prime Minister, the boss of bosses, would make such an about-face within two days? In this new system, Tory losers become winners. Conservative back-benchers must now regret their victories when some of their Tory friends will be making close to twice their salaries.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister made an issue of patronage. He even called for a new morality. Where is the morality now? One of his favourite words is "honour". Where is the proof that there is honour or that it is more than a six-letter word? I invite the Prime Minister to eat his own words. If he has even a modicum of honour, I guarantee he will become as sick as he is making the people of Canada with his double-talk.

THE ECONOMY

CREATION OF NATIONAL CONSENSUS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Last week, Mr. Speaker, Ottawa was the scene of a conference attended by socio-economic participants from various regions of Canada. It is only in months and years to come that we will know whether the conference was successful.

As expected, each group raised the priorities of its own region, but it must be emphasized that it was the first time the Federal Government was able to gather as many socio-economic spokespersons.

It was a step in the right direction. Hopefully, the House will begin to acknowledge our constructive efforts in the consultation process. There are no ready-made solutions, but we are doing our best.

I do not endorse negative and destructive criticism. The creation of a national consensus calls for goodwill on the part of all Canadians.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF WESTMINSTER SELECT COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of Hon. Members to the presence in our gallery of Members of the United Kingdom House of Commons Select Committee on Defence, led by their Chairman, the Right Hon. Sir Humphrey Atkins, M.P.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

JOB CREATION FORECAST

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government has something on its mind. Certainly it is not Parliament, as there are very few of its Members here this afternoon. I do not know whether I should direct my question to the House Leader. Preferably I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister, if I may.

During the weekend at the National Economic Conference, the Minister of Finance projected that 50,000 fewer jobs would be created in Canada in 1985 than were created in 1984. With the great business confidence the Government claims to have inspired, why will fewer jobs be created this year than last year?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as a result of what happened in the National Economic Conference this weekend and of the confidence in our economy as a result of that Conference, we will see the creation of permanent jobs this year and in following years, which is more than the former Government can claim.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at least the Hon. Minister should have a smile on her face when she comes up with that answer.

[Translation]

Without allowing for seasonal adjustment, 274,000 Canadians who were working the day before the Minister of Finance presented his economic message in November are now unemployed. I therefore would like to know whether the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of State (Finance) will undertake today to persuade her colleague, the Minister of Finance, to bring down a Budget that will promote job creation.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since this Government assumed office, 85,000 more new jobs have been created and 70,000 fewer people are unemployed than there were in September. The Leader of the Opposition should recognize these figures.

Also, I commend to him an article in the paper the other day under the headline "Employment Outlook Best in Years". It was a survey of 1,500 businesses which all said that they expected to hire additional people this year.

THE ECONOMY

CONFERENCE BOARD FORECAST

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member enjoys playing with facts. She will find a little more difficulty playing with numbers. Those numbers are just not borne out in what she said.

Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister will prefer to pass this question to on to her. Since she likes to quote headlines, I want to quote today's report issued by the Conference Board of Canada, that Canada's major banks and investment firms have reached a consensus that the Canadian economy is "gearing down" to a slower rate of growth in 1985, and that 1986 will be even worse. That is not just a headline the Minister was able to find; that is a report of the Conference Board of Canada.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration next sees the Minister of Finance, will she do her best to impress upon him when he brings down his long-awaited Budget—the longest period between an election and a Budget in modern history—that it should improve the picture and add a few jobs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Leader of the Opposition that the Minister of Finance and I have very productive discussions on an ongoing basis. This is more than I can say for some of the Ministers in the previous Government. However, I assure him that the survey from which I quoted referred to small business, the increase of jobs and the outlook and potential for jobs in small business. That is where the upturn will come; that is where it is predicted. In that area the Conference Board may not be quite accurate.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—ASSETS OF PENSION FUNDS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of jobs, if this Government can match the record of the previous Liberal Government, it will go down in the annals of history as being one of the great Governments of this country.

My question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Reports are that there are major pension funds, Air Canada, CN, the Alberta Teachers' Union Retirement Fund, the Manitoba Retirement Fund, that are shareholders of the Canadian Commercial Bank. Those assets will be substantially diminished by reason of the negligence of the Government in not monitoring the circumstances of that bank back in September when it first learned of them. What is the Government going to do to ensure that the assets of those pension funds, the assets of thousands and thousands of working men and women, and retired Canadians are protected?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we took very decisive action on the weekend in co-operation with two provinces and six chartered banks to ensure that the assets in those banks and the viability of that bank to produce key growth in western Canada will continue. That is exactly the kind of action we have taken.

PENSION FUNDS' SHAREHOLDINGS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not explain the point very well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate any applause I get. The point is that these pension funds hold shares in the bank. Under the proposal, those shares would be substantially diluted. That means that millions and millions of dollars will be lost to those pension funds which looked to this Government to ensure that the bank would never find itself in such circumstances. What protection are those pension funds, as shareholders, not as depositors, going to receive from the Government?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Hon. Member is wearing his name tag today. We had a number of concerns that went into our decision in combination with other partners in dealing with this bank. Our first concern was for the small businesses that are the borrowers of this bank. The second concern was for the depositors of the bank. We are also concerned about the people who hold assets in that bank in the form of shares. We had our first concern and our priorities straight.

PROTECTION OF BANKING INTERESTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday we learned that the Government of Canada, either directly or through the Canada Development Insurance Corporation, is prepared to put up something in the order of $135 million to attempt to save the Canadian Commercial Bank. Overnight we discovered that the major Canadian banks, together with a number of foreign banks, had deposits with the Canadian Commercial Bank to the amount of $150 million. Why did the Government move to protect those banking interests by directly expending taxpayers' money, rather than by pursuing the practice that has been followed since 1920 of forcing either a rationalization or a merger among the banks, in order to protect what is in fact the single most profitable banking system in the world?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the deposits from other financial institutions, there are deposits of a number of small business people in the Province of Alberta, and ordinary Canadians. We did not move to save the bank. The Hon. Member should know that we moved to save the borrowers and the depositors of that bank.

RATIONALIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the majority of depositors in that bank would have been protected up to $60,000 under the CDIC. Why did the Government not take the steps that have up until now proved to be effective and required of the banking community which, as I said before is the most profitable in the world—do what it has done in the past and come forward with a rationalization or a merger program in order to protect both the Commercial Bank and the depositors as well as those who have pension funds in that bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand why, when you come forward with information and facts in this House, that is when the Opposition is at its most confused. I repeat, in the process of coming forward with a very responsible solution to this difficulty, we considered a number of alternatives and discussed them with the Province of Alberta and discussed them with the banks. We came forward with the most responsible solution that was available.

RATIONALE FOR GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given that the banks in Canada have shown over the last number of years, notwithstanding the recession, a capacity to make money far greater in amounts than any other banking system in the world, is the Minister now saying that, as a result of discussions with Alberta and the chartered banks, which had $150 million invested in that particular banking operation, it was easier to go to the public of Canada for the money to save them, rather than to ask them to save themselves?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers of this country, and this Government, care very deeply about the borrowers in that middle market who deal with that bank, those who have small businesses in a fragile economy and are working hard to create the jobs that these people opposite keep talking about.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REFUSAL OF GRANT TO DOMTAR

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses).

A month ago today, I asked the first question about the Domtar case, and at the time, the Government justified its refusal to provide the grant by referring to the size of the deficit. Could the Minister inform the House why the Government has no money for Domtar, when it was able to provide, in record time, $73 million for a bank in Western Canada?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, the Domtar case is in the hands of the Prime Minister and the Premier of Quebec, and I think I can say we have two eminently responsible people working on this case. If the Prime Minister has anything to announce, I think he will decide when he is ready to do so.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION CONCERNING DOMTAR

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, the Minister has no information on Domtar, but I wonder whether he realizes that any delay in the start-up of this project will have disastrous consequences for the construction schedule. Could the Minister inform the House how long it will take the Government to make a decision? I may remind the Minister that it did not take very long to provide $73 million for a banking institution in Western Canada. How much time does the Government need to settle the Domtar case?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, Domtar is not in financial difficulty. The matter is being examined by the Premier of Quebec and the Prime Minister of Canada, and when they have reached an agreement, they will announce that fact as soon as possible.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—FORTHCOMING WHITE PAPER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Finance. Along with the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank this last week, we have had in the last three years the failure of 10 trust companies. After each one there was a study into what happened. Despite that, the former Liberal Government and the present Government seem to feel that the way to deal with these is to deregulate the industry. I wish to ask the Minister whether the white paper that she has promised will be tabled shortly will be more than a whitewash. Will it be accompanied by draft legislation? Specifically, will it promote uniformity of legislation with the provinces so that badly run and corrupt companies cannot hide in the gap between federal and provincial jurisdictions?

● (1430)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, one of the first things we did when we took office was to recognize that we need to make some major revisions to our financial institutions legislation. We have been proceeding with that as rapidly as possible. I will be producing a discussion paper on that, because the system has not been looked at by the Government for years and years. We will proceed in an orderly manner, and the House will have occasion to discuss it.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY PROPOSALS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not indicate whether, along with the discussion paper, there would be legislation. Will she have the committee that is working on the matter look at some of the recommendations that were made by members of the NDP at the time we studied the bank profits question in 1982? At that time we suggested that directors of financial institutions be prohibited from steering loans to companies in which they had interests, and that foreign loans be strictly limited. Would she have the committee look at those proposals so that we can get some real action?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would never ignore the recommendations of members of the NDP.

Oral Questions

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

QUOTAS ON JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister as the senior Minister responsible for international trade. The Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association says that if Japanese auto quotas are not continued beyond March 31, imports, mostly Japanese imports, could take up to 40 per cent of our market and 20,000 Canadian jobs could be lost. Will there be an agreement in place on March 31 either to continue the quotas on imports of Japanese cars or to have in place new commitments by the Japanese to create jobs, to produce and to invest in this country on a basis equivalent to that required and carried out by the North American producers?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member, as he undoubtedly knows, discussions have been taking place on a very current basis between Canadian industry representatives, representatives of the Government of Canada, and representatives of the Japanese firms and the Japanese Government. An announcement will be made in due course.

PROTECTION OF DOMESTIC INDUSTRY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Will the Government pledge that if there is no agreement in place by March 31, it will implement standby measures to prevent a sudden flooding of the Canadian market with Japanese cars until there is an agreement either to continue quotas or to have the Japanese producers invest or create jobs here, in order to give this country a fair share of the North American investment? This would help the Canadian industry and would also help add to the thousands of jobs that already exist in the industry.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, I will take his representation as just that, an official representation from the Official Opposition.

REQUEST THAT QUOTAS BE RETAINED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. The Government seems to be willing at least to consider abandoning the quotas, and that would be an absurd policy unless it is replaced with something that would guarantee jobs. Considering that Nissan, the most internationally oriented of Japanese car producers, has already said that it has no intention of investing in Canada, and that Honda and Toyota have made a paltry investment in terms of their sales here of $100 million so far, will the Minister recognize the importance of this industry not only to communities like Windsor, St. Catharines, Oshawa and others, but to Canadian exports as a whole, and assure us that the Government will not abandon those quotas?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Oshawa, I will again take his representation as just that, a representation from the NDP. I would only add that the $100 million figure to which he refers as being the total investment of the Japanese concerns compares to the approximately $2.5 billion that they have either put in place or have committed with respect to the United States.

JAPANESE INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is absolutely right. The Japanese have made serious commitments to the American economy in the last few years and have not done so in Canada. In that context, since this industry is not only crucial to jobs but was also responsible for some $25 billion in exports last year, would the Minister assure the House that he will not abandon the quotas until he gets, at the very least, a commitment from the Japanese to invest in Canada in proportion to their sales in Canada?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Oshawa refers to abandoning quotas, I surely do not need to remind him that the quotas were not put in place directly by the Canadian Government. It was an arrangement whereby the Japanese agreed to put in place voluntary export restraint provisions. That is what we are now discussing with the Japanese. We are discussing their future intentions.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF JEWISH POPULATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State will know of the tragic plight facing many Jews living in Russia. Does he intend to have this important topic discussed with the Soviet officials when he visits Russia next week?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, naturally I do intend to raise that question with Soviet officials and have had the benefit of extensive conversations and briefings in Canada with members of the Canadian Jewish community.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CHILD TAX CREDIT—TREATMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, just so there is no confusion on the part of members of the Government, we are not wearing name tags, we are wearing badges of support for Soviet Jews. I am surprised that the Hon. Member for St. Paul's is not aware of that.

My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In response to a question put by the Hon. Member for Sudbury yesterday, the Minister said:

> The Hon. Member should not use the one case as an indication that it is occurring either across the province or across the country.

He was referring to the child tax credit issue in Newfoundland. In his letter to me the Minister said:

> It is not the policy of the Government to require that individuals sign over their child tax credit as a condition of receiving financial aid.

He further stated that the form which was used was not a form which had been authorized by the provincial Department of Social Services nor by its regional office. Does the Minister stand by these statements?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister was wrong yesterday and he is wrong today. I have here a copy of the form, and further I have the names of other Newfoundlanders who are prepared to sign sworn affidavits indicating that they were required to sign this form before they could receive any help with their electrical bills. Will the Minister promise the House today that he will introduce legislation to forbid this practice? Will he instruct the Newfoundland Government to refund child tax credits to all those Newfoundlanders who were penalized by what has been a current government practice of the Government of Newfoundland?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me if I stood by those statements. In the letter to which she referred, I indicated that that was the situation as I now understand it. If she had read the entire letter, she would also have read those conditional words.

Additionally, we have checked further into the very issue because I thought she might raise it today. If she were to take a look at the agreement between the provinces and the federal Government regarding family allowances and child tax credits, she would see that those things cannot be written over. Officials of my Department have spoken to officials of the Newfoundland Government who have stated very clearly that that is not government policy. Obviously if there are cases other than the Parsons case, they would be dealt with the same way as was the Parsons case, namely, that that is not a policy that this Government endorses nor that the Newfoundland Government will pursue.

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST COMPANY—PLIGHT OF DEPOSITORS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, and returns to the matter of banks. My question refers to a possible double standard in what the Government is doing regarding the banking industry. There has been assistance from the federal Government for the Canadian Commercial Bank, a bank which has a great many very large depositors such as chartered banks and foreign banks which have deposits amounting to $150 million. On the other hand, no government assistance has been given to Pioneer Trust in Saskatchewan which has among its depositors a great many ordinary Canadians and ordinary organizations like school boards, sports organizations, the City of Regina which has deposits amounting to $1 million, and a hospital in Estevan that is run by nuns. Why is the Government so quick to assist its wealthy friends, the large bankers, when it will not provide the same assistance to school boards, hospitals run by nuns, and ordinary Canadian people?

• (1440)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I might point out that many financial institutions, including the Canadian Commercial Bank, also have municipal depositors, hospitals, and other ordinary Canadians as depositors and borrowers, as did Pioneer Trust. I might also point out, in the case of Pioneer Trust, that management voluntarily closed the doors after spending a considerable amount of time trying to find capital which they could not find.

ASSISTANCE GIVEN TO CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, what is the difference between the Canadians to whom she referred who have deposits in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the ordinary Canadians who had their money in Pioneer Trust in Saskatchewan and Alberta? What is the difference between those Canadians and the nuns who run a hospital in Estevan, retired farmers, and school boards in the West?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the combination which was put together in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank, after consideration, made it a viable operation. Because of an isolated problem it ran into difficulties. In the case of Pioneer Trust, there was no ability on the part of the company to raise capital because the company faced serious ongoing difficulties.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I would like to pursue questions which were put to her yesterday regarding the Government's decision to count severance pay as income under the Unemployment Insurance Act, thereby delaying the payment of unemployment insurance benefits. All of us have received a lot of protests from all over the country regarding the harshness and unfairness of that provision. Some Canadians were going to use severance pay to re-establish themselves in employment, some were going to relocate to other parts of the country, and some were going to put the money into an RRSP for pension purposes. Now those people will not be able to do that because they will have to use it for the bare necessities of life.

Considering the many protests, and the petition which was signed by two-thirds of the delegates to the National Economic Conference on the weekend, and considering that there was no consultation on the measure, will the Minister agree to postpone it until she has held the proper consultations, and the full implications of that measure are widely known?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member was yesterday, nor where he has been for the last six months with respect to this issue. This measure was first introduced on November 8 of last year. There was consultation on how it could be implemented in the fairest manner. I heard representations from other Members of the House during that period. It has only been in the last week that the Hon. Member seems to have discovered the issue for the first time. I can tell him that the measure will be implemented at the end of this month, and that it will be phased in gradually over the next two years.

CONFERENCE DELEGATES' PETITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, that is an insult to all the Canadians who have been writing to us for the last few months. Would the Minister tell us what impact studies were done before the Minister of Finance announced that measure, and will she make those studies public? In addition, how can she ignore two-thirds of the delegates at a convention that her Government called? The only clear-cut decision which they made at that conference sought to delay that provision. Is this just another example of Tory media politics?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if I had known that the Hon. Member was so desirous of being at the conference I might have arranged to have him there. He could then have heard some of the very positive suggestions which were put forward, and he would know in which areas consensus was achieved. As I mentioned yesterday, one of the issues which was discussed in a workshop on unemployment insurance was that the unemployment insurance program was not meeting the needs of Canadians. Therefore, one of the very firm proposals which was put forward suggested we make changes which would better meet the labour market needs of the country. Indeed, that is something on which we hope he will put forward suggestions as well.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—DEVELOPMENT OF TECHNOLOGY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the United States Undersecretary of Defense for Policy has made it clear that Canada has been invited to participate in the development of star wars technology, could the Minister tell us whether Canada has in fact accepted that invitation? If so, how does Canada, and indeed, how does the United States justify that under the terms of the ABM Treaty, when Agreed Statement "G" of that Treaty prevents the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. from sharing with other states "technical descriptions or blueprints" relating to ABM systems?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada has not received an invitation. Mr. Ikle was wrong.

ABM TREATY PROVISIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, that is the tenth time the Conservative Government has said that someone in the United States who had made a clear statement was wrong. When is it going to accept responsibility?

The Minister did not reply to a very serious infringement of the ABM Treaty—Agreed Statement "G". The Minister may not know what is in Agreed Statement "G". I have just tried to explain it to him. Will he tell the House whether or not it is the case that the sharing of technical expertise and knowledge by the United States or the U.S.S.R. with other states is prohibited by Agreed Statement "G" of the ABM Treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that no invitation has been received by Canada. I also repeat that, in the event there is an invitation, any response by Canada will be absolutely consistent with the principles of the ABM Treaty.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister has on many occasions been made aware of the plight of the shipbuilding and ship repair industry. Positive action is urgently needed because employment in that industry has dropped from 14,000 to 7,000 in direct employment, and thousands of jobs in related industries have dwindled to a mere trickle. What steps will the Minister take to revitalize and give some positive hope to this very important and much needed Canadian industry?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has correctly pointed out an industry in Canada which is being severely impacted by world conditions. He will be encouraged to know that we have met with the labour unions which are involved with that industry, as well as with the owners. There is some optimism with respect to the offshore activities which are taking place. We have projected, through to 1992, the total government procurement that will either deal directly with shipbuilding or with associated activities. It amounts to some $4 billion. Finally, our negotiations with the United States include specific reference to improving our position with regard to their shipbuilding, including the possibility of getting more defence procurement that the U.S. Navy needs.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME—EFFECT ON ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As of the 31st of this month, retiring members of the Canadian Armed Forces will lose their UI benefits because of their severance pay, announced by the Minister of Finance as part of the changes to the UI regulations. The Minister of Employment and Immigration went along with those changes. Further changes will take effect next January which will deny many Armed Forces members the benefits of unemployment insurance by counting their pensions in mid-life as income.

Can the Minister today assure the House that she has accepted the recommendation of 83 of the participants at last weekend's economic conference, as well as the thousands of other representations that have been made the Members of Parliament, and stop these unfair changes which are affecting the Armed Forces in Canada? Where has she been the last six months that she has not been listening? Where is the consultative process? Have the Armed Forces been consulted?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member raised that issue. As I indicated earlier, there will be a review of the Unemployment Insurance Act. One of the anomalies in this situation is how it impacts on the Armed Forces. I can see that issue being dealt with at the time of the review. I would welcome any input which the Hon. Member has in that regard.

NEEDS OF RETIRING MILITARY PERSONNEL

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, during last summer's election campaign the Conservative Party promised members of the Canadian Armed Forces that it would be especially sensitive to the difficulties faced by the Armed Forces in adjusting to civilian jobs in mid-life. Does the Minister not agree that the changes announced by the Minister of Finance, obviously agreed to by herself and the chopping Minister of National Defence, do indeed show insensitivity to the special needs of retiring military personnel? You can't promise them sensitivity on the one hand and show insensitivity on the other.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to read my notes to know that we on this side have sensitivity to the Armed Forces of this country. I want to say to the Hon. Member that I have indicated that this particular aspect would and should be dealt with at the time of the unemployment insurance review so that the anomaly which has been created can be changed within the Unemployment Insurance Act. We are now looking at ways in which that could be done. I would hope the Hon. Member would also come forward with his suggestions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF INDIANS IN NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On January 24 the Minister gave assurances to a large assembly of chiefs of the Nishnawbi Aski nation in Thunder Bay that he would grant, according to the circumstances of the case, band or reserve status to a number of Indian communities in northwestern Ontario, by April 1 of this year. Could the Minister tell us if that is in process and if he intends to meet the deadline?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that indeed that commitment is clear. The process is going on now and we are hoping we can meet the deadline.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in view of his answer I wonder if the Minister would assure this House that appropriate financial arrangements will be made with those communities so that they can administer projects at the local level? Will he further assure us that discussions will commence forthwith with the Province of Ontario to ensure a land base for those communities which do not have one at present?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is probably aware, the discussions which took place in January contemplated both of those conditions. We will move on both of those conditions, first, with respect to the financing and, second, with respect to the negotiations with the Province of Ontario, as fast as we can.

AIRPORTS

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FORT McMURRAY TERMINAL BUILDING

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that the architectural firm responsible for the design and construction of the new terminal building in Fort McMurray has now been barred from architectural work in Alberta by the Architectural Society. Will the Minister assure myself and the House that there will be no delay in the construction of the terminal building which is long overdue? And have contingency plans been put in place to replace the architectural firm which is now unable to practise in Alberta?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which is currently being considered by departmental officials. I do not anticipate an undue delay in the construction of the facility.

IMMIGRATION

SYSTEM OF PROMOTION FOR IMMIGRATION OFFICERS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Last week, following media pressure, the Minister asked for an investigation on the system used to promote immigration officers, which is based on the number of illegal immigrants they can intercept at various entry points in Canada.

Can the Minister tell this House whether this quota policy exists only in Toronto or whether it is applied in all regional offices in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member knows that my Party and I are certainly opposed to any such standard as quotas. We have said that right along. Nothing has proven, from any internal investigation, that there are quotas in the immigration system. Certainly I have every confidence in the impartiality of the employees in the Department of Immigration in this regard. I do want to tell the Hon. Member, however, that there has been review undertaken of the way in which performance evaluation criteria are used, so that there could be no negligent use of these criteria or anything done in any way which would impact on people coming into this country or, indeed, on the employees themselves.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell the House why she did not put an end immediately to this unfair practice which discriminates against immigrants for the length of the investigation? In addition, can she assure us that this report will not be strictly internal, but that it will be made public as soon as possible?

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that this independent review which is taking place, is being carried out with the view in mind of eliminating any possibility of employees being pressured to do things they should not be doing. That is really what is at stake here. I want to see that that does not happen in the Department of Immigration, or in any other aspect of the Department for which I am responsible. I cannot answer for what happened previous to the time that we assumed office.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME—GUIDELINES AND REGULATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the fact that confusion reigns over the announcement of severance pay coming into effect on March 31 with respect to unemployment insurance benefits, and in view of the fact that the regional and local offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission do not have the administrative guidelines and regulations governing those provisions, is the Minister prepared to table in the House, and to provide to Hon. Members, copies of those administrative guidelines and regulations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot do so today because I don't have them with me, but I will at the first possible opportunity.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS—REMUNERATION LEVELS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he explain to this House why the Government has chosen to give Messrs. Lawrence Hanigan and Roy McMurtry salary increases ranging as high as $38,000 a year? This increase alone is as large as the income of an upper-class family of four. How can the Minister reconcile this blatant abuse of power with the campaign promise of making political appointments "a new morality" for the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will well know, in the case of Mr. Hanigan, as a result of policy changes introduced by the Minister of Transport, his relative responsibilities will be greater than those of his predecessor.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: Smile, Joe.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's a good try, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am pleased to see the enthusiastic response of Hon. Members of the Liberal Party to that decision.

With regard to the question of the Canadian High Commissioner in Great Britain, it is the view of this Government that the compensation to our High Commissioner in Great Britain should be on a par with the compensation to Canadian Ambassadors in Washington and in Paris, and not lower, as was the case with the Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AID

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister cut programs and ask Canadians to tighten their belts when he himself, as a Cabinet Member, can agree to such extravagant favours being given to supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party while every day Canadians have less money to live on?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the major change with the new Progressive Conservative Government is that from now on, salaries of public employees will be public knowledge. They are being made public. In the past, under the Liberal Government, the truth about them was always kept hidden. That is over!

DEVELOPMENT OF TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canada and the United States agreed at the summit to establish a basis for future co-operation between the two countries regarding research into and development of technology, including space-based systems. Article V of the ABM treaty says:

> Each Party undertakes not to develop, test, or deploy ABM systems or components which are sea-based, air-based—
> Or:
> —space-based—

How does he reconcile these two diverging statements?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The ABM treaty speaks of ballistic missiles; the North Warning System does not.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many residents of Calgary, Alberta, calling on the Government to make sure that changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act as they relate to severance pay and pension income be not introduced on March 31.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many people from my riding calling upon the Government to rescind its proposal to change unemployment insurance, particularly as it relates to severance pay and pensions.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Calgary calling upon the Government to withdraw its move to have severance pay deducted from unemployment insurance payments. This is a matter which is crucial to maintaining family income when people are laid off.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and privilege to present a petition signed by over 100 residents of the Ear Falls district of my riding who, in common with the majority of the participants in the Economic Conference, petition Parliament to allow laid-off employees to keep their severance pay and receive unemployment insurance without deductions being made for severance pay.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition and it reads as follows. Whereas the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced that workers laid off after March 31, 1985 will have their severance pay deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits, thus effectively eliminating the benefit to the worker of the severance package, and whereas the severance pay is essential—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member care to summarize the petition, please? I think he knows that rule.

Mr. Waddell: I thought I was allowed to present my petition.

Mr. Speaker: I am trying to say to the Hon. Member that the rules do not allow the reading of the petition. They allow a summarizing of its contents. That, I am sure, is what the Hon. Member is trying to do.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, at various times in this House, especially in the last Parliament, Members read the full extent of their petitions a number of times.

Some Hon. Members: Never!

Mr. Speaker: The fact that someone else did it does not make it within the rules. I have tried since the beginning of this Parliament to make the point to all Members and that is why I am rising gently with respect to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). All Members should know by now that the rules say please summarize your petition, and with great respect I invite the Hon. Member to summarize his petition.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I will gently summarize it. It says that the petitioners object to the fact that severance pay is now being deducted from unemployment insurance and they respectfully petition this Parliament that all laid-off employees keep their severance pay and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition which I am pleased and honoured to present to the House. It is signed by a number of Canadians living in Alberta who are aggrieved at the Government's announced intention to make certain amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the regulations at the end of this month. They ask this House to protect the Act and request the Minister to rescind this intention to make amendments as of March 31.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition to Parliament dealing with the plan of the Government to use severance pay as a basis for delaying the payment of unemployment insurance benefits as of March 31. These petitioners pray that that be cancelled and all laid-off employees be allowed to keep their severance pay and receive unemployment insurance benefits without deduction.

LEAD SMELTER IN TRAIL, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the constituents of Kootenay West dealing with a decision pending by the Government which hopefully will support an application by Cominco Limited to build a new lead smelter in Trail. The petition represents more than 10,000 signatures received by myself.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 134 and 263.

[Text]

CNR ADVERTISING BUDGET

Question No. 134—Mr. Malone:

1. In (a) 1983 (b) 1984, what was the advertising budget for Canadian National Railway?

2. What portion of the budget was directed towards (a) television (b) radio (c) print media advertising?

3. Has the CN Rail Corporation market share been retained or has it grown as a direct result of their advertising efforts and, if so, by what (a) relationship (b) percentage?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

	1983	1984
1. (a)	$9.6 million	(b) $13.2 million
2. (a)	$3.6 million	$ 4.8 million
(b)	$215,000	Nil
(c)	$5.785 million	$ 8.4 million

3. The portion spent on the individual CN companies' service advertising cannot be directly traced to market share changes as many factors contribute to the sale of services such as sales effort, unpaid media publicity, pricing and competitive activity.

Order Paper Questions

CANADIAN PATROL FRIGATES

Question No. 263—Mr. Skelly:

1. To the knowledge of the Government, did the owners of the Saint John Ship Yards remove the present management team of the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program and replace it with a management and a consultant group from the United States?

2. To the knowledge of the Government, are the majority of the members of the new management team from Bath Iron Works, Bath, Maine, and will the cost of their management services to the Program be in excess of $100 million?

3. Will the Bath Iron Works management team be the sole possessors of the management skills required to build the frigates?

4. Will Paramax, a subsidiary of the American Sperry Corporation, be providing weapons systems, sensor systems and communications systems and will other foreign companies, the majority of which are American, be manufacturing the propulsion systems?

5. Will other nations who wish to purchase this frigate be faced with the fact, that all of its systems required for its construction and delivery would be available only in foreign markets, primarily in the United States?

6. Should all systems required for the construction of the frigates be available only in foreign markets, who will build the six new frigates which the Minister of National Defence, on January 10, 1985, committed the Government to build?

7. Were the designs for the frigates completed when the contract with the Saint John Ship Yards was signed and are design changes now taking place?

8. Will the new designs for the frigate's hull require the contractor to (a) dispose of the hull steel already purchased and delivered (b) re-order steel from Algoma Steel of Sault Ste. Marie and, if so, will the new designs and new order necessitate Algoma Steel re-tooling to produce the new steel for the hull?

9. What will be the length of the delays which will result due to the new hull designs and to what extent will be the cost overruns of the program?

10. Will the Government offer to bring the parties on strike at Marine Industries Limited, (M.I.L.), at Sorel, Quebec, and the builders of three frigates, together so that this labour dispute will not delay the building of the frigates or result in further cost overruns?

11. To the knowledge of the Government, will the Saint John Ship Yard owners position on the ongoing labour contract negotiations and the subsequent formation of a Council of Unions in opposition, create a major work stoppage at the yard resulting in further delays and cost overruns to the program?

12. Will the cost of the program be in excess of $3.85 billion, as previously announced, and will delays in the start-up date result in the failure to obtain the frigates on the dates contracted for their completion?

13. Will the cost overruns be absorbed by the contractor so that the program will not cost the taxpayer any more money than originally promised?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Saint John Shipbuilding Limited has announced a reorganization of its CPF management team including the appointment of a new program manager. The rest of the management team members remain essentially the same, although there have been a number of organizational changes.

2. The new management team is essentially the same as the old, with the addition of only one new senior member. The Bath Iron Works involvement with the project is a technology transfer agreement with the shipyard. This contract has been in effect for several months and is included with the existing CPF contract price.

3. The management skills required to build the CPFs will be resident in Saint John Shipbuilding Limited and in Paramax Electronics. The majority of personnel in both organizations are Canadian and will remain so.

The significant contribution being provided by other major Canadian firms in the design and construction such as Versatile Vickers Inc., Marine Industries Limited and Versatile Vickers Systems Inc. should be noted.

4. There are two parts to this question, one concerns combat systems the other, propulsion systems.

Paramax Electronics Inc., a new Canadian based subsidiary of Sperry Corporation, was formed to perform the role of combat systems integration. Paramax, a systems integrator, is responsible for the procurement of the individual systems, some of which are offshore, but many of which are Canadian.

Saint John Shipbuilding Limited has had to go offshore for those propulsion system equipments which are not produced in Canada.

The industrial benefits requirement of this program require that offshore purchases be offset by corresponding purchases in Canada.

5. To the extent that equipment is obtained offshore, the answer to this question is yes. However, by no means are all the systems being obtained offshore. The ship design and major systems integration is Canadian and will remain Canadian.

6. See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, Citation 357(G).

7. A contract design was submitted and evaluated prior to contract signing. The CPF final design was not "completed" at contract signing and this was never intended. One of the major activities of the Implementation Contract is to complete the final detailed design. The "design changes" to the extent that they are occurring, are a normal process in the production of warship detailed design.

8. There is no new hull design. All steel ordered and delivered by Algoma Steel to date has met Saint John requirements for construction of the first Canadian Patrol Frigate.

9. The current re-examination of program status at Saint John is not as a result of any new hull designs. There is no cost overrun to the program as implied by this question. Saint John Shipbuilding met with officials of the Department involved in the CPF Project on January 29, 1985 at which time an overview of some intended management reorganization was presented. It was agreed that Saint John Shipbuilding Limited would report back to government officials in the first week of March with additional information relating to organization and program schedule.

10. Versatile Vickers Inc. (VVI) is responsible for the construction of the 3 Canadian Patrol Frigates in the Quebec shipyards. MIL is under contract to VVI to perform CPF work. It would be inappropriate for the Government to intervene in the negotiations between this supplier and its union.

11. The labour negotiations in the Saint John Shipyard are known to have been under way for a number of months and it would not be appropriate for Government to intervene with this process. It is hoped that the matter will be brought to a successful conclusion without incurring any work stoppage, delays and cost overruns.

12. The contract between the Government and Saint John Shipbuilding Limited is a ceiling price arrangement. There has been no increase to the ceiling price since the original announcement by the Government and none is contemplated under the current circumstances. The possible impact of start-up activities on the project schedule are the subject of ongoing discussions by officials with the company.

13. There is no cost overrun to the program as implied by this question. There is a ceiling price contract between the Government and Saint John Shipbuilding Limited.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works; and the amendment of Mr. Hockin (p. 3227).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying this morning, when I started speaking to the Bill before the House, ever since the present Govenment came to power, the only Bills we have had to discuss have been Bills that were bad for this country, and that is unfortunate. I think it is important to recall, for the benefit of all the Conservative Members here in the House who have probably neither read the Bill nor realize what is being cut, that the Canadian Oil Substitution Program represents $95 million that this Government has cut. This program was helping consumers to convert their heating systems to electricity, natural gas or other forms of renewable energy.

● (1510)

There is $85 million in the Canadian Home Insulation Program. This program provided for taxable grants of up to a maximum of $500 for home insulation. Now these grants are going to be cut from 60 per cent to 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, this Government cannot find the money to meet the needs of Canadians but it can find the money to send 1,000 more members of our Canadian Forces to Europe at a cost of $100 million per year. They have no trouble finding money there.

Mr. Speaker, instead of getting involved in star wars, this Government should have gotten involved in the war against unemployment. If it refuses to withdraw this Bill, it should at least extend the program for six months so that everyone who applied after the Minister's announcement that he would make cuts in his program, will still have a chance to benefit from those grants.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a letter sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by the President of the Electrical and Electronic Manufacturers Association of Canada:

Mr. Prime Minister:

Aware of your interest in Quebec problems—

He did not know what was coming when he wrote that.

—we take the liberty of making a request concerning the Canada Oil Substitution Program (COSP).

As you undoubtedly know, COSP has been very popular in Quebec. As a result of its termination slated for March 31, 1985, there has been an unprecedented increase in the number of orders from manufacturers of equipment needed to convert to electric heating. We have received so many orders that we fear they may not be filled without compromising equipment safety and quality.

We therefore urge you to extend the deadline, at least with respect to the installation of new equipment. Applications might be submitted until March 31 and the equipment installed between now and August 31, 1985. Such an extension would not require additional expenditures.

Well, Mr. Speaker, these are experts and specialists in energy conversion who are urging the Government to extend the program for at least six months so as to enable Canadians to apply and make sure that conversions meet all safety standards.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that the Government cannot find any money to help needy Canadians and has to cut their benefits. However, when a banking institution is about to go belly up, it has no trouble finding millions of dollars. When it comes to increasing the salary of its friends, its former candidates, as my colleague pointed out with respect to Mr. Hannigan, then money is the last of its concerns.

Mr. Speaker, not only did the Government drop the insulation program, it also shirked its responsibilities concerning the removal of UFFI, another cut-back of $1.5 million. Many Canadians were counting on grants of up to $5,000 to renovate and remove UFFI products from walls in their homes.

There again the Government did not bother to consult anybody before imposing cut-backs on all Canadians, as it did in the case of unemployment insurance, housing and insulation. No consultation with the people. But when it comes to showing off, our Prime Minister has proved that as a master of ceremonies, he is second to none, presiding over major conferences where spokesmen for industry, unions and consumers represent their fellow Canadian citizens.

And then, at a cost of $1 million a day, they decided to have a huge consultation, but everybody knew full well that the federal government had already made up its mind, contrary to the promise that party had made during the election and the day following its victory, and contrary to the statement the Prime Minister himself had made, as reported in today's Citizens: "You're going to see tens upon tens of jobs being created just as quickly as a new government can be sworn in." Since September 4, because of its stupid decision to try and bring down the deficit on the backs of workers and middle and low-income Canadians, what the government has created is not new jobs, but increased unemployment.

I know that most of my colleagues, that members from both the NDP and the Liberal Party are firmly against this bill. I know also that the greater majority of my colleagues of the Progressive Conservative Party are privately against this bill too, but that they lack the necessary fortitude to stand up and say so publicly. They prefer to hide, play the ostrich and bury their heads in the sand, Mr. Speaker.

You are signaling that my time is about to expire, Mr. Speaker, but I hope a number of Tory members will finally wake up, remember that they were elected to protect the interests on their respective constituents, and not to spin yarns on behalf of their leader.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by saying that I always try to take Governments and Opposition Parties at their word. So far we have had about 17 hours or five sitting days to debate this Bill at second reading. All Parties in the House agreed on the original legislation. Therefore, I do not think it was remiss on the part of Members on all sides of the House to use a few days debating a major change in the legislation which the entire House supported unanimously in 1981.

As an ordinary country boy from the Prairies, I had assumed that even the Conservatives knew that you could not lay a gas pipeline on the Prairies in February or March. They not only want to shut off the debate, they want to shut off 150 homes on Rural Route 2 northwest of Regina. I admit that I have some interest in that area. Under the present Conservative Government of Saskatchewan, the Saskatchewan Power Corporation had devised a good policy to take natural gas to more villages, hamlets and individual farms in the Province of Saskatchewan. These people and the Saskatchewan Power Corporation have been planning to instal a number of new lines based on their number of potential users. They used this Bill as the premise to make a survey of potential customers. Now that the program is to be cancelled, people are not finding the immediate cost effectiveness that there was before. Saskatchewan Power is putting in a new line on Rural Route 2 outside of Regina. It is slated for completion in June. There are 150 people along that line who have signed up for the service. I suspect that Sask Power operates similarly to power corporations in other provinces which require a sign-up of 65 per cent before they proceed to build a gas pipeline or power line. In this case there is a 100 per cent sign-up. I presume the Tories must have been in Florida all winter if they believe that a plastic or steel pipeline can be installed in February or March.

● (1520)

I realize that a six-month hoist amendment is usually a parliamentary ploy under the rules to kill a Bill. However, this is a rare instance when we moved a six-month hoist in order to delay the passage of this Bill so that the ground could thaw and people who signed up for grants could benefit. That was the simple reason for our proposal.

My hon. friends across the way should recognize that the ground is still frozen and if they want this legislation to pass now I invite them to dig the trenches and install the gas pipelines for 150 homes, mostly farm homes, northwest of my city.

Surely the Government must recognize the sense of encouraging people to convert to less costly fuel services. In 1981 the COSP legislation, which was retroactive to 1980, received second reading in one hour in the House. That means there was unanimous consent by all Parties. This legislation was to have effect until 1990. All the power corporations in every province, every municipal utility corporation and tens of thousands of Canadians based their plans on that assumption. It is not right to change the rules in the middle of the game.

If the Government wishes to change the policy under this legislation it has every right to do so, but there should be reasonable notice given before it proceeds. While our Party has recommended a six-month hoist, I believe this legislation should be delayed for at least one year to account for thousands of Canadians who wanted to convert to natural gas. Some of these Canadians have had to convert to propane temporarily until natural gas pipelines are installed. They are now faced with the problem of the lack of propane tanks.

The effect of this legislation will be the exact opposite to the Government's intention to increase the number of jobs. The COSP Program provided more jobs than will be created if it is ceased. We made a simple proposition but the Conservatives believe that a plastic or steel pipeline can be laid before the end of March, which is only a few days from now. The ground in Toronto may still be frozen even by the end of April. However, it seems that the Conservatives do not understand that logic.

We should support any program that will reduce the requirement for imported oil, that saves Canadian foreign exchange, creates more jobs and gives the Government a return on its investment. I remind Hon. Members that this program is an investment, not an expense. I hope that my hon. friend, the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), would agree that this is an investment whose returns will outnumber the cost to the taxpayers.

It is obvious that a reduction in the requirement for imported oil in Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic Provinces will provide extra jobs and increase the use of Canadian resources, particularly natural gas.

In conclusion, let me quote the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who has been a respected Member of the House from western Canada for almost 30 years. As a major spokesman for the Conservative Party in the debate in 1981, when the Conservatives joined with the Liberals and NDP in supporting this legislation that was to be effective until 1990, he said, as reported at page 11099 of Hansard for June 30, 1981:

> I do not think there is any question that the House in general understands and supports the purpose of the oil substitution program—

Is the Government trying to help Imperial Oil sell more oil or is it trying to help individual Canadians reduce their heating costs? Let me quote further from Hansard of June 30, 1981. The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said:

> It is a good philosophy to get as many people in the low technology systems as possible to move away from the consumption of oil. It is particularly good, if the alternative is cheaper not only than the present price of oil but the future price as well.

The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain concluded by congratulating the Government and the Minister, on behalf of the Conservative Party, for bringing in this legislation. He said, as reported at page 11101 of Hansard:

> I hope he will consider the suggestion that I have made to improve the legislation and make it available to all Canadians. If so, we could achieve this conversion from oil to other energies more rapidly than this bill can by itself.

I ask my hon. friends opposite to reconsider what they are doing. I ask them to maintain the commitments made in 1981. I ask them to permit this Bill to be extended and I hope they will persuade the Minister to do so, so that tens of thousands of Canadians, provincial power corporations and municipal utilities can live up to the contracts they have signed.

I cannot understand why the Government is reversing its position after those people have acted in good faith. I hope that Members of the Government will persuade the Minister to reconsider this legislation. If so, they will get full support and approbation from both Opposition Parties.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the decision of the Government to repeal the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act is another indication of its insensitivity, in that these programs helped many average and low-income Canadians. The people who will lose the benefits of these programs are out there today watching the actions of the Government and wondering what they elected on September 4. While these programs are going down the drain, what happens? The office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is given a 57 per cent increase in its budget, and its staff is increased by 30. Also the public relations budget of the Government has been increased by 10 per cent. That money will be used to advertise its conferences, seminars and other meetings rather than to do things for Canadians.

We have heard much in the House about the consultative process. I wonder how many average and low-income Canadians were consulted about the cutting of these program. They have heard much about expensive conferences, but they have not heard too much in support of their efforts to conserve energy. The Upper Ottawa Valley of eastern Ontario has some of the highest levels of unemployment since the Diefenbaker Government.

Mr. McDermid: That is a great endorsation of the Grits.

Mr. Hopkins: The highest levels of unemployment, I say to the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). The Grits brought in programs which were useful to the people of that area and in turn to their communities. Coming from a highly populated area of this province, the Hon. Member would not be as sensitive to that.

Mr. McDermid: Oh.

Mr. Hopkins: What he is doing right now clearly demonstrates the insensitive character of the Government.

The UIC regulations are another example of this insensitivity. It will now take into consideration every penny a person earns over a period of time in order to cut back in UIC payments. In many small communities where employment was scarce, people made use of COSP and CHIP. They switched from oil to another form of energy. Any benefit they received for changing from oil to another form of energy automatically increased their disposable income. In the Town of Deep River, three years ago, one home out of three was heated with electricity. I would expect that the number is even higher today as a result of COSP over the last few years. Undoubtedly more people went off oil. Canadians in small communities and in rural areas are conservation-minded. They are the ones who repair their windows.

Mr. Oberle: And their doors.

Mr. Hopkins: That is correct, they fix their doors. They repair their basements and their foundations. They improve the insulation in their homes. In some cases even the small contractors that benefited from CHIP complained that the program was inadequate. I hope the Government realizes that by cancelling these programs it is actually taking away business from small business at a time when it is bragging in the House that it is in favour of small business. Also it is taking away the jobs of Canadians who work in those industries.

In recent years there has been much research into solar energy and the use of wood to heat homes. It is part of the off-oil system.

An Hon. Member: Oh?

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member does not seem to be well informed. I am glad that I am speaking about it; perhaps he will gain some knowledge. In recent years new stoves have been designed to use wood in the heating of homes. This is related to the off-oil program. Many other new technologies have been adopted. For example, waste is being used in burners to heat sawmills which produce the waste in the first place. This provides great efficiency. That program was sponsored by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It assisted small businesses, sawmills and planing mills to change from oil to a system capable of burning waste products to heat their premises. Also attention has been paid to considerable heat loss problems.

Along with all these benefits, these programs have made people more aware of the necessity to conserve energy. The system by which farm homes are heated today has changed dramatically. If any part of the industrial society requires all the assistance it can get, certainly it is the agricultural industry. Many people do not look upon agriculture as an industry, but indeed it is an industry, one of our largest. We should do everything we can to assist it in saving money by changing over to cheaper methods of operation. That is certainly in our interest. It all comes down to the industrial plants which produce the products used in the off-oil program and those which produce the insulation and other materials used to improve home heating systems. Surely that great old slogan that we heard so much about—jobs, jobs, jobs—is the very thing that comes to mind. By the repealing of this legislation, the Government is taking away jobs from people. That is another form of insensitivity.

We have heard a lot about consensus building. What kind of consensus building was done when the decision was made to remove this program? I wonder if at the same time that this Government is planning to remove this program which benefits the average and small-income people, it is thinking of greater technology and the production of other jobs in that area. There is the projected Slowpoke III reactor that uses 5 per cent enriched uranium and produces heat very cheaply. there is a prototype of the slowpoke IV reactor being made at this very moment at Whiteshell, Manitoba, with 5 per cent enriched uranium. It produces both heat and energy. These are some of the things we will have to look at in the future.

A lot of research has been done on waste connected with the operations of nuclear energy. Canada should continue that route of putting emphasis on nuclear energy in this country, the production of heat for homes and municipalities at a cheap rate and with even greater benefit than has been produced in the hydroelectric field by the Candu reactor.

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Bill C-24. This legislation is very important for Canadians. The debate in the House today is on whether or not we are prepared to maintain these two government programs and thus create many jobs here in Canada.

[English]

For some reason the Government seems to have forgotten about ordinary Canadians. For some reason it has decided to eliminate the Canadian Home Insulation Program, to get rid of that program and the off-oil program. Both these programs would help a lot of ordinary people. They would create jobs for those who put in the insulation, convert the furnaces, dig the trenches for gas lines and other jobs of that sort.

I want to say in particular a few words with regard to Saskatchewan. I see the Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) and one or two Albertans in the House, although Bow River is in southern Alberta. The ground is frozen in Saskatchewan until at least March 31. This point was made by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). It is very difficult to put in a gas line in frozen prairie ground.

An Hon. Member: Use dynamite.

Mr. Nystrom: My Tory friend from Quebec says they should use dynamite. I would like to see him come to Kamsack, Saskatchewan to put in a gas line and convert a furnace from oil to gas. The former Prime Minister would not agree with that. That shows the insensitivity of this Government. I know that the Member who was formerly Prime Minister of this country would agree that it shows the insensitivity of the federal Government to the special problems of northern Canada and the Prairies that it would end the off-oil program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program while the ground is still frozen on the Prairies. There is no understanding of the reality of that situation in central and northern Saskatchewan. Therefore, I appeal to the Government to extend this program for another year, or certainly extend it for another three, four, five or six months so that it will be fair to all Canadians. Why are some Canadians more special than others?

The Government says that through this program it will save approximately $350 million a year. This very same Government is going to give corporate welfare to the oil companies this year to the tune of some $1.7 billion. It is a continuation of the old Liberal policy called PIP. It is good enough for the rich, but there is no money for ordinary Canadians. The former Prime Minister must be very embarrassed about this Bill in Parliament today. He is fidgeting in his seat. I know he would love to get up and speak against this Bill.

I also know that he has a lot of respect for this institution of Parliament. If he were Prime Minister, he would not bring in a Bill of closure that affects ordinary Canadians. Today we are dealing with closure. I remember speech after speech of Conservative Members in the last Parliament when going after Liberals, saying they had no respect for Parliament, that they were bringing in closure on matters that affected ordinary people. This Government is doing exactly the same thing that it whined, cried and complained about when in opposition. That is a bit of hypocrisy that I did not expect to see when we had a change of government in this country.

The other important issue is the whole question of the creation of jobs. During the campaign, we heard speech after speech by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying that the most important issue is jobs, jobs, jobs. I would like to see some Conservative back-benchers get up and tell me why it would eliminate this program, which would create thousands and thousands of jobs for people who need them because they are unemployed, and at the same time spend $1.7 billion under the PIP program to assist the big oil companies in this country. Over five years, it will cost $8.6 billion of taxpayers' money. I know the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) must be very upset and frustrated by this continuation of Liberal policy. I know that he will be supporting us in this debate. I know that he will get up and speak on behalf of ordinary Albertans. It must make him as angry as it makes me to see this program for insulating houses and saving oil being discontinued.

By the way, we would save about 75,000 barrels of oil a day, a lot of it Albertan oil, if the programs were continued. Instead, this Government is going to cut them off and spend the money helping wealthy Canadians, the big oil companies. Yesterday the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) said we would spend millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to help salvage a big bank in Canada, the Canadian Commercial Bank. We are making interest-free loans. There is all kinds of taxpayers' money being used to prop up this bank. Who are the depositors? The Canadian chartered banks and the foreign banks have $150 million on deposit. The trust companies have money on deposit. Greymac had money on deposit. This Government is spending millions of dollars of our money propping up these banks but it will not extend the home insulation and off-oil programs for another three months which will put more people to work and save oil in this country.

Mr. McDermid: CHIP goes on for another year.

Mr. Nystrom: Not the off-oil program. It expires on March 31. A Torontonian may not understand that in certain parts of the country the ground is frozen until after March 31. That is the kind of discrimination there is against parts of northern Canada.

An Hon. Member: He is from Brampton.

Mr. Nystrom: Brampton is pretty close to Toronto. I suppose it is all the same thing.

Mr. McDermid: No. That is how much you know.

Mr. Nystrom: I wish that some Members from southern Ontario would realize that this country is not a homogeneous country. There are geographical differences, and they should be sensitive to that when it comes to the off-oil program. I hope they will rise and give us a bit of support in the House.

• (1550)

The riding of the Hon. Member for Mackenzie is north of mine. I would hope that he would rise and assert his independence and speak on behalf of his constituents. I would hope that he would not be simply a puppet of the Conservative Prime Minister who happens to sit across the way.

Those are some of my concerns. I am concerned that so much of our public money is going to help the rich, the powerful and the privileged. I have mentioned the Commercial Bank of Canada with its big depositors. Yet Pioneer Trust with its ordinary depositors is not getting the same kind of help. School boards have deposits in the Pioneer Trust Company as do a hospital run by nuns in Estevan, the City of Regina, sports groups and retired farmers. A retired businessman from my riding sold his business and put all his savings in Pioneer Trust. That money has gone down the drain and there has been no assistance from the Government. Yet the Government will spend $1.7 billion this year helping the oil companies through the PIP program.

Perhaps this is what Progressive Conservative means. I do not know, but it seems to be a real contradiction that government back-benchers will sit mute when it comes to helping ordinary Canadians. They will not say a word and they will applaud like sheep when the Government helps the big banks and the big oil companies in a continuance of the Liberal policies of old.

Now the Government is bringing in closure to end this particular debate, a debate that would help people in my riding and indeed in ridings right across Canada. The Government wants to save money so it can give more to the oil companies. Let government back-benchers rise. There are a few moments left. Let them justify the spending of $8.6 billion on the PIP program over five years and the spending of over $1 billion of taxpayers' money on the PIP program this year, while cutting off a program that will help the ordinary citizens of the country.

I put that challenge to Hon. Members. I believe they should assert their independence and not be afraid to speak. Are they a bunch of blind sheep who are following the directives of the PMO? When government back-benchers sat on the opposition side, some of them expressed themselves freely. Of course, at that time they had a Leader who was more open and generous and who believed in an independent approach to Parliament. He was a guy who understood western Canada and the entire country. Now we have a different Conservative Leader and it is more of the same old insensitive Liberal approach that we have seen for so many years. I appeal to the independence of back-benchers in the Conservative Party?

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in support of what has already been said by our energy critic and by the critics of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, the Government's decision to use closure for this Bill is totally unacceptable, especially since we all know that many residents of Quebec, Ontario and other Canadian provinces have been unable to take advantage of this program, due to Canada's geography, and I am referring to frost, Mr. Speaker. To illustrate my considerations I would like to read a few telegrams, which should be of interest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid).

Oil Substitution Act

Mr. Speaker, I have here a telegram from the riding of Laval-des-Rapides in Quebec, and I assume others were sent to Progressive Conservative Members, requesting at least an extension to take care of all contracts signed before March 31, and I quote:

Reference COSP. Only ten days before the expiry date, we—

The electricians of Quebec,

—cannot meet our commitments to our customers. Equipment not available. Increased demand as a result of your measures—

That means the measures taken by this Progressive Conservative Government —has created untenable situation in which consumer will be one to suffer—

Mr. Speaker, the consumer is going to suffer as a result of a Bill. Today the Government is asking for closure, even if in some cases, because of our geography, it will be impossible to make any changes before March 31.

—demand—

That is, the electricians of Quebec,

—urgently demand review of measure to stop COSP.

They are demanding, at the very least, that March 31 be considered the deadline for signing contracts and not for finishing the work.

Mr. Speaker, any Member representing a riding in the northern regions of Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Alberta or Newfoundland can tell you that the March 31 deadline as it applies to contract completion is totally unrealistic because it is physically impossible for electrical contractors or gas companies to fill all orders before that date.

Mr. Speaker, instead of imposing a closure motion as it is doing today, the Government and Conservative Members ought to make the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) understand that Canadians should at least have the right to apply for conversion until March 31. That is why we in the Liberal Party are against this Bill, for we know very well that all Canadians have had nothing but praise for COSP.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention other Government agencies where people understand how you go about converting from oil to other forms of renewable energy. Today, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian International Development Agency, CIDA for short, has announced that the Canadian Government will be making a grant of over $8 million to Kenya to do just that, to undertake a similar program of conversion from oil to other forms of renewable energy. I want to commend the Canadian International Development Agency, we have at least one Government agency that understands how important it is to switch from nonrenewable to renewable energy. The sad part of the story, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government will deprive Canadians of a similar program.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we do not have a quorum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will check.

We do have a quorum. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see that Progressive Conservative Members do not want to hear anything about a Bill which is definitely not in the interest of Canadians. The Parliamentary Secretary does not know that CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency, has announced today a grant of more than $8 million to Kenya—at least CIDA is aware of the fact that conversion from oil to other renewable energy sources is highly recommended. Unfortunately this Government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources do not seem to understand that Canadians would benefit from that kind of conversion. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that what should happen—

[English]

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In light of the actions of the Hon. Member, I think it should be a matter of record that at the time the quorum was called, there was one Liberal Member in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: It is too bad that even senior Progressive Conservative Members do not know the Standing Orders of the House, Mr. Speaker. It is too bad, but that is the way it is. They are always in the Opposition, so they do not know how to run a government.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to please give the Tory Members a chance to reconsider their decision to impose closure.

• (1600)

I am surprised there are so few Members here. There are 40 of us on this side. We sit on all sorts of committees. I am the labour and housing critic. I also sit on the Labour, Manpower and Immigration Committee. In any case, Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party are willing to debate this very interesting issue. On the Government side, there are 211 Members, most of whom have nothing to do because they are not Ministers nor Parliamentary Secretaries and because they are not willing to debate in the House a subject that is so important to all Canadians, especially those living in the northern areas of our provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I know that our Prime Minister, a so-called representative of the northern part of the province of Quebec . . . why is the Prime Minister and why is this Government tabling a Bill that discriminates against the people in our North? It discriminates against Quebecers who live near James Bay, it discriminates against Ontarians who live in Timmins, Timiskaming, Blind River and all the other parts of Ontario where they cannot possibly dig in pipes before March 31. The Government should at least accept a motion to withdraw this Bill or grant a six-month extension to give the electricians of Quebec who are sending telegrams to Ministers and all Members of this House a chance to finish the work contracted before March 31.

Mr. Speaker, it is, I hope, common knowledge that this kind of construction creates a lot of jobs for Canadians. Home renovation and especially this kind of renovation is very labour-intensive. Mr. Speaker, we have just had a conference to find out exactly how we are going to resolve our economic problems in this country. Why do the Conservatives want to cut a program they already said was a good program? Why are they accepting this form of closure instead of fighting for their constituents in Cabinet and in the caucus, so they will at least keep some of the promises that have been ignored since September 4, ignored not only by Cabinet but by Members on either side of the House. Mr. Speaker, we urge you to speak for Canadians and to ask this Government to wait at least six months and withdraw this motion for closure which amounts to disenfranchisement of the rights and freedoms of all Members.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and the motion of Mr. Hockin (p. 3227).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to what has already been said. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the Government of Canada have decided to cut off the Canadian Oil Substitution Program which was established some four years ago. In addition, the Government has decided to terminate, ahead of schedule, the Canadian Home Insulation Program. The Government has said that these programs are being terminated to save money. According to certain Conservative Members, the most needy have already been taken care of and only the fairly well-off have not yet taken advantage of the program. However, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated, the main intent of the Bill is to save money for the Government of Canada. As previous speakers have pointed out, it does not make sense when compared with other initiatives which the Government has taken.

I would like to make reference to a point which was made by a member of the NDP with respect to PIP. He asked why so much money—indeed, billions of dollars—was being spent to pay oil companies for the cost of drilling. The amounts are absolutely staggering. They run into billions of dollars. The answer to the Hon. Member's question is quite simple. The answer lies in the reason PIP was introduced in the first place and why the Government cannot simply discontinue the Petroleum Incentives Program. If the Government did that, the oil companies would not drill for oil in the offshore areas. There would be no activity off the coasts of Newfoundland or Nova Scotia if the Petroleum Incentives Program were not in place. It is interesting to note the amounts of money which are involved and the fact that the money goes directly to the oil companies from the federal Treasury after the drilling is finished.

The Government of Canada is in a difficult position. During the election campaign it said that it would do away with PIP and replace it with a tax incentive program at the end of the year. However, we have not heard anything about that. In fact, the Estimates still show the same amount of money for the oil companies which are exploring. Let there be no doubt that once that money is removed, a lot of oil companies which are presently drilling for oil off the east coast of Canada will also be removed. I suppose it is only fair to make reference to that, since we are debating COSP.

Many people imagine Newfoundland as being a rich territory, like the Clampett's on television used to live in where there was black gold and Texas tea and everybody became millionaires because of oil. The fact is that the only thing which most Newfoundlanders know about oil and gas is that the prices have increased drastically. The prices have increased for two main reasons. Of course, one of those reasons is the taxes which have been placed on the bottom line by the provincial Government of Newfoundland. When people have to pay 22 per cent on the bottom line to fill up their cars on top of the increased charges—because Newfoundlanders are at the end of the line as far as the distribution system for gasoline and oil is concerned—then we can see why this program is so important.

It is important that some financial assistance be given to the people who want to convert and get away from burning oil in their furnaces and stoves. It should always be kept in mind that without the incentive which that program provides, a great many families will not be able to convert to wood.

There has been a lot of discussion in the House about the conversion to other sources of energy, but not very much of that discussion has concerned wood. If we examine the figures that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources presented to the House, we see why wood conversion is so important to provinces such as Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. When we look at the projections of the Department, we find that some 59 per cent of the residences it thought would qualify and convert to wood have not to date converted. When we look at the yearly figures we discover that the projections of the Department have shown far fewer people than the numbers which actually utilized the program. There has been 126 per cent achievement over what it projected would take place during the years this program has been in effect. So we are left with 59 per cent of the total number of dwellings which were thought would convert over a ten-year period. We are still left with that 59 per cent in Newfoundland which have not converted mainly to wood.

We also have to keep in mind that this Bill today does away as well with the possibility of having more hospitals in the Province of Newfoundland convert to wood chips. This was something which happened over the last few years because of this legislation and the incentives which were provided.

● (1610)

I think the bottom line is that we have in this chamber today a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who brings in legislation to remove money from the hands of ordinary Canadians and poor people who need that little grant to install a wood stove in the basement in order to give that person some heat. Those people don't want to pay $500 a month for oil in the months of December, January, February and March. They want to be able to put a chunk of wood in their furnace in the evening when they go to bed, and that one chunk of wood in the type of stove now being used would last the entire night.

These poor people who are looking for a little bit of assistance, a measly $800 to convert to wood, are now having that opportunity taken away from them. They will now be left to the fortunes of whatever side of the bed the federal Government gets out of in the morning. That will determine what the price of oil is which these people will have to pay to operate their furnaces.

Before the election the Conservative Party said it was not going to increase oil and gas prices—just the opposite. We can talk all day about the PIP program and all of the philosophical arguments about the rich being the only ones left who did not take advantage of the program. We can talk about the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in January approved a program to sell oil cheaper to the United States refineries than to Canadian refineries. The reason for that, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources decided to reduce the foreign charge on oil to the Americans but did not reduce the taxation charges to Canadians. So Canadian oil is sold at a cheaper price to the United States than it is to Canada since the month of January. Here we have the bottom line, Mr. Speaker. We come from all that philosophy down to this Bill, and this Bill takes away a simple $800 from the pockets of a poor person in Canada who wants to convert to wood or to another energy source. That is the bottom line in this debate and that is what the bottom line should be. Let no other Hon. Member proclaim again that only the rich people are left, that all the poor people have taken advantage of the program. As I mentioned before to an Hon. Member, can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, someone earning $100,000 a year having to go out and get splits for his stove? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, someone earning $100,000 in Newfoundland wanting to convert to wood? That is absolutely ludicrous. It is the ordinary person who wants to save money. That is the person who takes advantage of this program. It is not the man who goes to the Board of Trade or the woman who goes to a bridge party.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am also very pleased to take part in this debate. May I say at the outset that I was extremely disappointed that the Government with its huge majority should choose to move closure, all the more so since this program has always been and still is quite popular in Quebec. In recent years, this program has gained wide support and acceptance among Canadians because they realized that it had two major objectives. The first major objective was to reduce demand in traditional energy sectors, in keeping with Canada's energy policy.

The second objective, aspect or benefit is that conversion in one case and insulation in the other led to a significant decrease in heating costs so that, as a direct consequence, hundreds of thousands of Canadians found it less expensive to keep their homes well heated. All of a sudden, practically overnight, they simply decide to cancel both programs. To me, this was a very harsh and totally unacceptable decision, so much so that for months now our offices have been swamped with hundreds of letters urging us to give consumers more time to benefit from this program which has proved to be extremely popular.

I can only say that the reaction of our constituents is quite understandable. Not so long ago I came across some statistics concerning the Maritime Provinces where the program gained such wide acceptance that nearly 80 per cent of eligible households applied under these programs. The situation in Quebec may not be as encouraging, but still 30 per cent of eligible applicants did benefit from the program.

I can appreciate the attitude of the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) when he says that Quebecers know one thing for sure—the Conservatives are not there to pamper Quebec, they are there to administer Canada.

Well, perhaps I might remind Government Members who gained the confidence of Canadians last September 4 that they may not be there to pamper Quebec, but that is no excuse to disregard basic principles of justice and fairness in the distribution of public funds.

I think we should also recall that before the election on September 4, the present Government had promised to create hundreds of thousands of jobs. They promised they would deal with the problem on a grand scale. They promised to deal with the problems of the agricultural sector. They promised to reduce interest rates. They promised to stabilize the dollar. They promised that more services would be available. It did not turn out that way, however. Not only have they failed to deal with any problem of substance, they have managed to create a host of new ones. Unemployment is as substantial as it was before September 4. Interest rates are rising. The dollar is losing ground every week. And now, in addition to all those problems, they are adding one more, which comes as a shock to Canadians who were counting on making certain changes in their homes in the next few months, in order to reduce their heating bills.

I think the use of closure is absolutely undemocratic. We must not forget that the Government has 211 Members. On the basis of this historic majority, the Government should give the opposition parties a chance to demonstrate the relevance of all the arguments in favour of this program and let them try to persuade the Government to act fairly and equitably towards all Canadians and especially those who, for various reasons, have not yet been able to proceed with conversion and take advantage of the grants available.

In concluding, I would urge those Members who are supposed to represent the interests of Quebec to consider the flagrant injustice of the fact that not quite 30 per cent of Quebec homeowners have been able to take advantage of this admirable program, while statistics for Western Canada show that 80 per cent were able to take advantage of the program in those provinces. Therefore, we must provide an extension. We must extend the deadline to provide a fair deal for these Canadians who, like many others have already done, would like to take advantage of a program that has proved its worth from every point of view.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what business does the Government House Leader have in mind for the ensuing few days?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Opposition House Leaders, it is my intention to call Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as the first item of business tomorrow, followed by Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada. It was my intention to call the motion on the Order Paper, No. 17, with respect to CN pensions as the first item of business for tomorrow. In view of the fact that unavoidably and due to a tragic circumstance, the critic for the Official Opposition will not be in the House until Monday, it is my inclination to have that motion called at the beginning of next week when it is convenient to all Parties, with the concurrence of the Minister and the New Democratic Party. That will be the business for today, tomorrow and Thursday. Keep tuned in for further announcements.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved that Bill C-225, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on Bill C-225, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act. This very important legislation has been introduced in this House on several occasions. The purpose of the Bill is straightforward and yet fundamental, and is set out in the Explanatory Notes. It is to implement the repeated recommendation of the Canadian Human Rights Commission that "sexual orientation" be added as a prohibited ground of discrimination at the federal government level. At the present time under federal law, gays and lesbians receive no legislative protection from discrimination under federal jurisdiction.

The Bill would include as a prohibited ground of discrimination "sexual orientation" in addition to the other grounds which are set out in the Canadian Human Rights Act. As well, provisions of the legislation would require that the Canadian Human Rights Commission conduct a comprehensive study of all federal legislation and regulations to determine which, if any, might discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation and to report the results of that study to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) within one year of the coming into force of the Bill. Subsequent to that report, the Minister would be required to report back to the House on the steps that he has taken to remove the discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation from all existing federal legislation.

I might say initially that this occasion is, I suppose, somewhat historic in the following sense. This Bill or a similar Bill has been introduced in this House on a number of occasions. On each occasion on which it has been introduced, members of the Opposition or members of the Government have talked the Bill out. I am very pleased that the Government, through the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Speyer), has agreed that for the first time in the history of this nation this very important question will in fact be studied and given the thoughtful study that it deserves.

I understand that the Government is prepared to allow the subject matter of this Bill to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. That committee has struck a special subcommittee which is charged with the very important responsibility of examining the implications of the coming into effect of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

One of the issues which is being addressed by that subcommittee which I have the honour to be a member, is the whole question of the extent to which current federal legislation and practices may discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation. Therefore, I welcome the commitment of the Parliamentary Secretary as well as of the Chairperson of that subcommittee, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), who has recognized the importance of study without in any way precluding a decision to be made by that committee.

The parliamentary subcommittee is considering the whole question of equality rights. As I have indicated, one of the questions that has been addressed by the Minister of Justice in that study is the question of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. I have noted as well that each year for the last four years the Canadian Human Rights Commission has strongly urged Parliament to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act as I have suggested in this Bill, that is, to include the provisions dealing with sexual orientation.

There are some who ask why it is necessary, why the Government should add sexual orientation as a prohibited ground of discrimination and what is the need for change in this area of the law. After all, we are not dealing with a visible minority. Certainly there continues in Canada today to be a great deal of discrimination against visible minorities. The report Equality Now, an excellent report which was tabled in the last Parliament, has documented the extent of discrimination against visible minorities.

I would suggest that gays and lesbians in Canada today continue to be subject to discrimination and to many of the hardships and much of the pain that is faced by visible minorities. Indeed, I would venture to suggest that if all of the gays and lesbians in Canada were to suddenly become tomorrow a visible minority, Canadians would realize the extent to which gays and lesbians are active in our community, indeed are active in communities across Canada at all levels of our society.

There is still a great deal of discrimination. Gays and lesbians are still the victims of too much pain and too much violence in Canada. Discrimination exists in hiring practices at the federal level. One of the most glaring examples of that discrimination, of course, was the recent firing of five women from the Canadian Armed Forces, women with an outstanding record of service to the forces and to their country. They were treated as common criminals. They were interrogated by military police. They lost their jobs and lost their livelihood.

I would urge that this Parliament recognize that that is a grave injustice. Policies which allow for the firing of gays and lesbians from the Armed Forces, policies which prevent the hiring on the basis of sexual orientation in the Armed Forces, RCMP or External Affairs, are policies which have no place in the law books of Canada today.

I would suggest as well that we must look seriously at federal statutes, including the Criminal Code, the Canada Labour Code, the Public Service Employment Act, the Income Tax Act and the Immigration Act. To the extent that this legislation discriminates on the basis of sexual orientation, that legislation too should be amended. In the case of the Criminal Code, for example, there are still far too many discriminatory provisions in the area of gross indecency which perpetrate an unequal age of consent, provisions with respect to bawdy-house laws which have been used in a repressive manner against the gay community and which, once again, should not be in the Criminal Code today.

I spoke earlier of pain and I spoke of violence. Once again, we do not have to deal just with the pain and the violence of the five women who were fired from their jobs in Nova Scotia. We are reminded of the tragic death, the suicide of a middle-aged married man in St. Catharines who burned himself to death after he was arrested on a gross indency charge. I would suggest that to the extent that this Parliament fails to act to put an end to discrimination against gays and lesbians, we must all share to a certain extent in the tragedy and in the responsibility for tragedy that occurs because such discrimination continues.

I recently met with a group of gays and lesbians in Sudbury in northern Ontario. One of the people who was there was a young high school student. He spoke to me of the harassment, the taunts and, yes, the beatings that he faced in his school because of the fact that he happens to be gay. That cannot be acceptable in Canada today.

● (1710)

The National Gay Task Force of the United States documented in an excellent report on anti-gay and lesbian victimization the fact that violence continues to be far too widespread. The introduction to the report reads:

> After centuries of oppression, invisibility, and isolation, gay and lesbian people have claimed the right to participate fully in society and to enjoy the same rights and privileges accorded heterosexuals. In the ensuing struggle, ever greater numbers have "come out" and built new relationships, institutions and communities.
> While greater visibility has helped to strengthen gay/lesbian self-respect and community, for many it has resulted in greater vulnerability to violence and crime. Now that lesbians and gay men have a higher profile, they are more readily identifiable to those who deliberately seek to victimize them because of their sexual orientation.

The report goes on to document the very serious statistics indicating that more than nine in 10 of the respondents to the survey put out by the task force indicate that they experienced some form of victimization because of their sexual orientation. That can include threats of violence and being punched, hit, kicked or beaten.

As well, there is an added dimension of oppression and pain and that is the oppression of having to conceal one's sexual identity from one's friends, one's family and one's fellow employees. That particular form of oppression can be just as invidious. When the Canadian Coalition of Lesbians and Gay Men appeared before the Constitution Committee, this was put very eloquently in the following terms:

> In the present circumstances, gay people are either vulnerable to discrimination, or are forced to try to escape such oppression by concealing their sexual identity. Neither alternative can be countenanced in a democratic society. The first alternative offends the principle of minority rights. The second alternative is surely one of the most oppressive forms of discrimination—to pressure people into lives built around deception and lies. Imagine what it would be like for heterosexuals to be either exposed to unjustified discrimination against them, or to be forced to conceal their husbands and wives from co-workers, to never be truthful about their home lives.

That is the situation today.

I would like to make it very clear that this Bill is not in any way a statement of endorsement of a particular lifestyle. Once again, it is clear that the Bill is not suggesting that the majority does or does not endorse homosexuality as a way of life, but rather that we genuinely accept the principle of supporting the rights of a minority. It is one thing to recognize that someone has a right to do something, and something quite different to say that it is the right thing for that particular person to do.

The majority of Canadians recognize that democratic civil liberties require the elimination of discrimination against gays and lesbians. Just as the native Indian needs protection from racism and women need protection from sexism, gay people need protection in law from homophobia.

There are other forms of violence to which gay people are subjected. The violence of certain extreme elements of the Evangelical community like the Jimmy Swaggarts of the t.v. world incites people to violence under the guise of Christian philosophy. I suggest that this is a perversion of Christian philosophy. When people say things like Jimmy Swaggart did in his publication The Evangelist, we know that there are problems. After quoting from the Old Testament, he said:

> In Old Testament days the practising homosexual was stoned to death.

He went on to quote from Romans and then said:

> God is saying here that not only is the homosexual worthy of death, but (perhaps) also those who approve of homosexuality.

That kind of hate literature has no place in Canada today. Those same purveyors of hatred have promoted the hatred of gays and lesbians by taking advantage of public concern over the deadly disesse AIDS. There is in our community today a health care crisis. In the last three years in Canada, 105 people have died from AIDS and the incidence is increasing dramatically. It is therefore essential that we improve the level of funding of research as well as education about this deadly disease in a sensitive and responsible manner.

In conclusion, I would argue that the time has surely come for us in Canada to recognize that no man and no woman should be denied the fundamental equality of access to jobs, housing and services on the basis of his or her sexual orientation. Changes in the laws will not overnight change the hearts and the minds of people whose response to gays and lesbians promotes pain and oppression. However, such changes are an essential first step toward the creation of a society in which each individual is recognized for his or her inherent worth and dignity as a human being. Such changes in the law will hopefully also hasten the day when no man or woman and no young student in Sudbury or anywhere else in the country will be the victim of fear, violence and intolerance because he or she happens to be gay or lesbian. That day cannot come too soon.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago, a parliamentary subcommittee was established for the purposes of studying in detail across the country the question of equality rights in Canada. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has quite accurately stated that the subject matter of the Bill on which he spoke should properly go before that subcommittee.

I would like to emphasize that in no way does my Party associate itself with the comments made by the Hon. Member. Nevertheless, he is correct that the matter should be referred to the subcommittee because the subject matter ought to be studied and voted upon and a report ought to be made to the Justice Committee and in turn to the House.

I suspect that very soon in this debate there will be another motion which would refer the entire subject matter of the Bill to the subcommittee on justice. The Government accedes to that request because it has already had many other such requests and notices of testimony that will ensue with respect to that subject matter.

I do emphasize that the reflections and submissions that have been made today by the Hon. Member for Burnaby in no way reflect upon what I personally believe nor upon what Hon. Members on this side of the House believe.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak on this matter and to move a motion. I do not know whether or not a member of the Liberal Party wishes to speak. If not, I will speak briefly and move the motion to which the Parliamentary Secretary referred.

First, I would like to congratulate the Government for setting up the committee on equality and I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) who is present. He is a new Member. I would like to point out that he had better be successful with this committee. I grew up in Etobicoke-Lakeshore. If the Hon. Member is not successful, I will come back and run against him. I am sure he will have some measure of success with this committee.

I was listening to the words of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). He said that just as the native Indians need protection from racism and women need protection from sexism, gay people need protection in law from homophobia. In 1984, it still takes courage to say those kinds of things in the Canadian Parliament. People will read Hansard of today years in the future and will wonder why I am saying this. However, it is a fact of life that it is still very courageous for someone to take on those issues.

• (1720)

The riding of Vancouver-Kingsway was once represented by Angus MacInnis. Against a tidal wave of public opinion, he took up the cause of the Japanese-Canadians from 1941 to 1945. Unfortunately, he is not here to see some of the results of his labours and realize that in 1985 something is being done to correct the wrong that was done to the Japanese-Canadians. We are now acknowledging the hurt and the consequences of the actions which the Government took back then. It took a long time for society to respond to that issue.

His wife, Grace MacInnis, was the only female Member in the House of Commons in 1968. Today, there are many female Members in the House who are very active. When we see the swell and tide of the women's movement today we realize that sometimes it takes a long time to accomplish things.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby is courageous, outspoken and on the cutting edge of some of these issues. I applaud him, and apparently his electors do as well, as he received a handsome mandate in the last election.

The Hon. Member made reference to the gentleman who committed suicide after an unfortunate incident in southwestern Ontario. There could be a lot of debate about that issue, but I believe that all reasonable Canadians must feel that that suicide was a waste. Did that man have to do that? Are we in a society which forces a person to feel so much guilt that he has to commit suicide? He was a family man. There is something wrong. That suicide should not have happened. Therefore, I look forward to hearing representations on these matters in committee.

The Parliamentary Secretary should not back off too quickly, because basically we are recognizing equality. I feel as a social democrat—and I think my feeling is shared by others—that we are discussing equality. I think we all agree that people should be treated equally, without discrimination. We should end discrimination wherever possible in Canada. I think we are all committed to that. It is one of the things which makes Canada such a great country.

I welcome the Bill and the fact that the Government has referred it to committee. In addition, I am glad that the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore is chairing the committee. I am sure he will do a good job as he is well qualified. Again, I salute the Hon. Member for Burnaby for his courage, tenacity and willingness to tackle these very important civil liberty issues in Canadian society. It is a tradition which was evident in the CCFf and is evident in the NDP and in other Parties. People such as Gordon Fairweather, John Diefenbaker and Pierre Trudeau also worked very hard on these important issues.

I would like to move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-225, and Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Hon. Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, is unanimous consent required?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion is debatable.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few remarks on the Bill under consideration introduced by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), not to mention the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

First I want to congratulate both Members on their courage to raise in the House an issue which is highly controversial but which, in my opinion, in 1985, must be discussed in Parliament, be it here in the House or in one of the committees.

As Hon. Members know, illegality surrounding the whole question of homosexuality disappeared with the adoption of an omnibus Bill introduced by a Liberal Government in 1968. At the time, it was said that the Government did not have any business in the bedrooms of the nation. To put it shortly, the purpose of the 1968 Bill was to remove any suggestion of criminality from homosexual relationships. However, the message conveyed to the Canadian public was not that this House, the then Government and the Opposition Parties wanted to encourage or promote homosexuality in Canada by adopting that Bill. On the contrary, the House was attempting to tell Canadians that they should show tolerance and acceptance of principles which are not necessarily endorsed by the majority. In a sense, it was a way of alleviating the tyranny of the majority over minorities, over people who oftentimes share marginal ideas.

The fact remains that there is a widely spread sentiment among Canadians today, including those who do not share the views of the gay community, that persons who belong to that minority group do suffer from discrimination, that time has come to debate the issue in the Canadian Parliament and to take appropriate measures so that protection under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms be readily available to all Canadians.

I think that the matter ought to be referred to committee. Indeed, I commend the Government for seeing it that way. Besides, I would suggest that the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway makes it easier to debate the issue: we are not going to refer the Bill to committee, only the subject-matter of the Bill. The question is: Does the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provide enough protection against discrimination with respect to homosexuals?

Mr. Speaker, we need only mention the provincial charters and especially that of my own province, Quebec, which contains provisions to protect people against discrimination on the basis of homosexuality. I think that unless we want to go through life with blinkers on, we can hardly object to the subject of the Bill being referred to an appropriate committee of the House for discussion. I realize that some Canadians may not agree with a proposal to add a provision protecting homosexuals. However, if the subject is referred to committee, they will have a chance to express their views, and it will also be an opportunity for those who favour this point of view to come here to Ottawa before Parliament to express their opinion.

Personally, I support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I think the time has come to discuss this question openly here in Parliament.

● (1730)

[English]

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak quite briefly and not in any way to challenge the intent of the amendment or the original indication of the Parliamentary Secretary that this matter be referred to committee. I would just like to go on record as expressing regret for part of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), namely, his reference to Evengelical Christians. I do not think those comments added to the merit of his address. In fact, they detracted from it, and I think that someone in this Chamber should make that point for the record.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that one does not increase understanding and tolerance for one group of Canadians by indicating intolerance and rejection for another group of Canadians. Let us try to maintain in as wide a frame of reference as possible this desire for understanding and try to get inside the point of view of those with whom we disagree. We should ask ourselves what they are trying to say and what they represent.

I certainly, as much as the Hon. Member for Burnaby, abhor any incitement to violence against any group of Canadians. However, I think we must respect the values and convictions which have been part of Canada and its traditions, traditions which Canadians must honour.

I welcome the decision of the Government's spokesman to refer this matter to committee for a number of reasons. First, I think we need to take a very searching look, as a Parliament, at this proposal. We cannot do that within the time available in this hour. We need the more thorough inspection which can be given by the committee. We need to hear from the various groups within Canada who will make representations to the committee, and we may, indeed, find that worth-while things are said against the proposal, things which this Parliament needs to hear and considerations this Parliament needs to weigh. We do not have the opportunity within this hour, but I certainly anticipate that the committee, in giving a more thorough examination to this question, will afford us that opportunity.

Most of all, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the examination of this issue by the committee will enable all Hon. Members of Parliament, regardless of Party and personal convictions, and will equally enable all Canadians, regardless of their backgrounds, to consider a very important distinction which must be drawn between personal morality and the law; common law or criminal law. We do not need, because of personal convictions, to use the law to enforce those convictions on others. Conversely, we do not need to suggest that in the law being changed we imply a change of moral perspective on the part of individual Members of Parliament or Canada as a society. I do not feel it at all necessary for us to imply any approval of homosexuality because of any change which may be made in the status of homosexuals before the law. Whether we approve or disapprove is a matter of personal conviction which we as individuals take, and have a right to take, and we may insist in taking that stand as individual Members of Parliament with regard not only to our own behaviour but to our own attitude toward other individuals.

All Canadians have a right to equality before the law. All Canadians have a right to what is referred to in the original motion as "human rights". We have those rights for one reason alone, namely, we are people and, therefore, we have the right to claim certain rights and privileges which require no other claim but our humanity.

I look upon this motion in those terms and I welcome the opportunity of this committee and this House to examine this proposal again. But in no way should it imply to the Canadian people that we as a Parliament are changing our attitudes as individual Hon. Members with regard to personal behaviour or personal values. We are but taking a searching look at the rights of Canadians, in particular one group of Canadians, and these are rights which we would want for all people simply because they are people with us.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak very long and I do not intend to address the subject matter of this particular motion. I do however question the necessity to refer this matter specifically to the committee. One reason is that April 17 will be a very momentous and historic day in this country. On that day the equality rights provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms comes into effect. The Government is proposing Bill C-27, which will be discussed tomorrow. The Government also issued a discussion paper entitled Equality Issues in Federal Law. In effect, what the Government has proposed to do in Bill C-27 is to deal with the non-controversial items of equality, which are basically housekeeping matters in the existing legislation, that is, changing husband and wife to "spouse" and changing son and daughter to "child". The Government has then referred the more controversial aspects of Section 15, equality rights, to this special subcommittee headed by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer).

I personally question the necessity for that particular subcommittee. On April 17 of this year, Section 15 will be the supreme law of this country. No federal majority can in any way change that supreme law because it will be part of the Constitution and of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It will be a matter of interpretation by the courts to determine the extent of this particular section in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Much to my chagrin, and to the chagrin of all those who fought so very hard during the constitutional debate, the Government has not taken definitive action to correct the inequities, imbalances and discrimination which exist in present federal legislation. In that respect, I understand there are over 1,000 pieces of federal legislation. The former Government initiated an audit of the legislation, and it was the intent of the previous Government to amend the laws in major ways to conform to Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Instead of providing the necessary leadership to articulate what the Government feels the definition of equality to be, the Government has decided to allows the whole matter to have more public debate and more consultation. Therefore, the special subcommittee of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will travel across the country to hear the views of Canadians.

It was said by one human rights activitist that one does not define minority rights by the views of the majority. It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that that is what the Government is suggesting. The subcommittee will travel across this country and listen to the views of people, and no doubt the majority views will be articulated. There comes a time when the Government has to provide the necessary leadership. There comes a time when the Government has to make the tough decisions. The time has come, in my view, Mr. Speaker, for this Government to tell Canada what it believes to be the definition of equality, what those words in Section 15(1) mean in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Those 46 words will produce, no doubt, millions upon millions of other words in legal jurisprudence to define that particular subsection.

The Government, by its actions in refusing to provide leadership and amend the legislation to obviate the inequality which exists in federal legislation, is forcing litigation. It is forcing those minority groups, Indians, women, the visible minorities, gays and lesbians and all the others, to fight their battles again. When they fought their battles in 1982, they won and the result was Section 15(1). But now the Government is saying that these people have to refight those battles and come before a committee to articulate again their views and concerns. It will then be up to the subcommittee to make recommendations to the Government. Then they will have to wait, the oppressed and the discriminated against, for further legislation to amend the existing legislation.

It seems to me that if I was discriminated against, I would not bother appearing before this special committee. It would be a colossal waste of time. What I would do is to issue a writ. I would go to court immediately and have the courts define what Section 15(1) means. It is, as I indicated previously, the supreme law of the country now. This Government alone cannot change Section 15(1). Indeed, it requires the consent, as I understand it, of seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population before this section can be changed. I concede that there is an override provision, but it seems to me that it ought not not be used, and I am even somewhat concerned that it exists. Section 15(1) says:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

What is missing is sexual orientation. It is not here. No doubt this matter was debated at length in this House and in committee, and a decision was made. I was not here at the time but many compromises had to be made in order to ensure that we had a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. One of those compromises was that the legislation would be delayed three years in order to allow the federal and provincial Governments to ensure that their respective laws conformed to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, although the previous Government initiated the audit of our legislation and started the process, this Parliament has not completed it. I fully expected that this Government would have introduced that legislation to make April 17 a more historic and momentous day.

The discussion paper the Government tabled, called Equality Issues in Federal Law, indicates that the list under this section is open-ended in the sense that sexual orientation is not excluded because it is not enumerated, but that the items enumerated are not exhaustive. By the wording of that particular section one could challenge discrimination based on sexual orientation in the courts and could very well be successful.

I now go back to the process suggested by the Government and the NDP. They are suggesting that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and presumably it will also be referred to the subcommittee which will be travelling across the country. Notwithstanding the fact that I disagree with this travelling road show because I think the Government should provide leadership and amend the legislation and provide Canadians with a definition of equality, no doubt sexual orientation will be one of the items discussed before the committee. Therefore, in conclusion, I question the need for this process. Perhaps the Government is trying to give a message with respect to its position on this Bill. I personally do not think it is necessary specifically to refer the subject matter because no doubt it will be discussed before the committee. But once again, in my view, those who would waste their time by attending this subcommittee would perhaps better serve his or her cause by immediately going to court and getting a judicial interpretation of what equality means in this country now.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this House and one who has the honour to be Chairman of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights, I cannot let the comments that were just made pass without some rejoinder. I came into the House this afternoon not intending to speak but simply to be here and listen to what the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) had to say in the course of discussing this Bill, which is now to be referred to the Standing Committee. That is as I think it should be because the subject-matter can then be carefully considered and all points of view can be heard. Therefore, the last thing I wish to do is to talk at length now and run the risk that this Bill will be talked out and the subject-matter not referred to the committee.

But with respect to what the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has said, I will speak briefly now and when we have debate on Bill C-27 I will return to this Chamber again and speak at greater length, because he has taken a point of view which, if it were to be shared widely, either by Members of this House or by citizens of this country at large, would be harmful to the quest on which we have now embarked to establish true equality among men and women of all backgrounds who make up this country and are proud to call themselves Canadians.

When I hear the Hon. Member say it would be wasteful for people to invest time and energy to appear before our committee, then I think he does a profound disservice to the parliamentary process of this country. When I hear him say that his best advice to anyone would be to issue a writ and appear in court and try to assert his or her remedies under the Charter, then I say that that is the most narrow legalistic view that could possibly prevail. Indeed, I invite the Hon. Member to reconsider the traditions of his Party as well as of other Parties in this House in developing equality in programs and laws as the legal foundation on which men and women can stand and be seen to be equal, not only under the law but before the law.

To say that this is just a matter of law is to miss almost entirely the point and the purpose. The issues that are being referred to the Subcommittee on Equality Rights are not narrow legal issues. Yes, they come from the Constitution. Yes, they involve constitutional law. Yes, lawyers will have points of view on them. But, more profoundly and most important, we are looking at the social, economic and cultural policies of this country which are reflected in laws enacted through the decades. Our quest is to see whether those laws can now be changes. Wherever distinctions are made, we must ensure those distinctions are valid and do not employ any form of discriminatory practice or attitude. In making those changes we are going to carefully consider what has gone before so that we do not take part in unravelling important social relationships that have been developed in the laws and practices of Canada over many decades.

I see, Mr. Speaker, a three part process on which we are embarked. One is the narrow side of housekeeping amendments to eliminate from federal statutes the anomalies that are discriminatory in nature. That is what Bill C-27 is now before this House for. On the other side we also have the process whereby the conflicts and disputes will come before the courts of law and judges will decide whether rights are being infringed upon and what must be changed. That process will indeed start on April 17, but it will continue as long as Canada is a country and as long as we have the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The main purpose and process, the one on which we are now embarked as a committee, is to look at the broad and difficult policy considerations that are thrown up by the new provisions of Section 15.

Put very simply, Mr. Speaker, if we as Members of Parliament do not take that challenge to review profoundly the 1,100 federal laws in order to ensure that they are changed and brought into line with the spirit and the letter of Section 15, then we will have abdicated our role as parliamentarians, and the law makers of the country would be the appointed judges who sit in our courts. I, for one, much prefer to see the laws of this country made in the Parliament of Canada by men and women who are here elected by the people of this country.

I do not shrink away from the consultative process that is embarked upon. I think it is much preferable to have the men and women of Canada speaking on the issues. Reasonable men and women can differ on the issues before us. It is far better that the matter be turned over to a committee to weigh all these points of view and hear them together than that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) should make these points and decide what the laws should be.

The Member for York South-Weston referred with some pride to the fact that the previous Government had started an inventory of federal laws. In fact, less than two hours ago when our committee was meeting we heard from the Minister of Justice that the review of federal laws in light of Section 15 was not commenced within the Department until January of 1984. With that fact on the record and known to other members of his Party, it does not do him any great service to come to the House and lament the fact that there has been foot-dragging on this issue. Along with trade issues, this subject is very much the issue of the decade. It deserves the careful time and attention that it will receive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Waddell) agreed to.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, am I entitled to speak on the main motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes, you may debate the motion as amended.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but respond to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer). I was indicating that by the Government's lack of action and by its refusing to make the tough decisions, the Government is forcing minority groups to go to court. If one is serious about equality, one would be well advised to go to court rather than wait for the subcommittee to hear deputations and wait for legislation to be introduced in the House. I question what the results of this travelling committee will be. Certain questions are raised in this particular discussion paper. In a news release of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) he asks the question which this subcommittee should address, that is, whether requirements relating to length of employment for maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act should remain greater than requirements for regular benefits.

This issue will be discussed before this special committee and ultimately the Government will have to make a decision. Does the existing legislation constitute inequality? Should the Unemployment Insurance Act be amended? The Government will have to make that decision. It seems to me that the Government wants to govern by plebiscite and public opinion polls. The Government is afraid to make the tough decisions and afraid to protect minority groups. It is afraid to offend anyone. If you are sincere and true and believe in equality, you will make those tough decisions.

By re-opening the old wounds and issuing a discussion paper, the Government is telling these minority groups that everything is up for discussion again. The equality provisions have already been included in Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but we must now define what equality means. Mr. Speaker, I thought that was what the debate was all about in and before 1982.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he did indicate earlier that he had no intention of talking this particular motion out. I would hope that, in the spririt of co-operation which he showed earlier, he might recognize that there is a danger of doing that.

Mr. Nunziata: With respect to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), I did not indicate that I did not intend to talk this Bill out, and I do not intend to talk it out, but I think it is necessary to respond to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore. I have very serious concerns about this committee re-opening discussion on the question of equality. It is forcing these people to litigate if they truly want to further their particular goals. The Government should be making those decisions with respect to the issues that are raised in this discussion paper.

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Shall the motion as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Robinson) as amended, agreed to, Bill withdrawn and subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been made.

AGRICULTURE—BEEF IMPORT QUOTAS. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Wise), I put a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture concerning the Government's plans with regard to meat import quotas, especially as they relate to European Economic Community beef and U.S. beef coming into Canada.

On December 21, after three and one-half months, the Government invoked the meat import law as a result of the massive shipments of subsidized beef into Canada in the fall of 1984. The Government set the quota at 146.5 million pounds of beef. Although it took the Government three and one-half months to make this decision, I think it is a commendable move by the Department, especially in light of representations which we are receiving from the Canadian Cattlemen's Association and other groups.

The quota allotment for the EEC was fixed at 5.9 million pounds, yet since that time the Government has already let some seven million pounds into the country. I understand as well that the Government has negotiated an increase of some 44 million pounds from the 21 million pound quota for the United States, to some 65 million pounds.

According to a CP press report on March 15, it seems that the EEC is demanding a quota of some 23 thousand tonnes, or 51 million pounds of beef. It is trying desperately hard to increase that quota of 5.9 million to some 33 million pounds in this calendar year. They have registered a countervailing duty against a number of farm commodities, such as honey, maple syrup, tobacco, mustard seed and a number of other items, for $51 million. It would appear from the response by the Acting Minister of Agriculture that the Government is proceeding to negotiate with the EEC. However, I see no reason for negotiations when the EEC was dumping subsidized meat in unprecedented amounts by up to 48 cents a pound into the Canadian market in 1984. The historical average from 1978 to 1983 was some 5.9 million pounds and I do not understand why the Government should negotiate for up to 33 million pounds or even higher.

In order to put the question in perspective, the United States allows some 11 million pounds of meat into that country. The United States with 240 million people has a market that is ten times the size of the Canadian market. If that 11 million pounds is suitable for the United States, 5.9 million pounds or less would be suitable for Canada.

The Minister said that he is currently negotiating. I am concerned about allowing the 33 million pounds that the EEC is apparently demanding. This would mean that our meat imports from all sources—from Australia, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the United States and the EEC—would be some 216 million pounds.

• (1805)

It is important for the Government to stiffen its backbone and to stop acting like a jellyfish. It should march into the GATT tribunal in Geneva and fight for our beef producers in light of the 51 million pounds of subsidized beef which was allowed in last year and what the EEC is demanding now. Mark my words, if the Government does not do that, Canada will become a dumping ground for the entire world, because other countries will know that the Government of Canada is not prepared to go to GATT and fight countervailing duties such as the one which is now being proposed by the EEC.

It is very interesting that the Australian Minister of Primary Industry expressed his concern and support for Canada. In fact, I understand Australia offered its support in the GATT tribunal to stop the wholesale dumping of subsidized beef into the Canadian red meat market.

I certainly hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to indicate that the Government is prepared to stand up and fight for our beef producers and to maintain the integrity of our meat import law which has been set at 146.5 million pounds for this calendar year.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am almost tempted to frame one of the sentences my colleague from Algoma (Mr. Foster) pronounced a few minutes ago, when he referred to a measure taken by this Government as good. It must be the first time. I will have to re-read Hansard, since I have not been exposed to very many words of praise coming from my hon. friend from Algoma.

Mr. Speaker, obviously the Government is not backing down under pressure. However, it is consulting more with the exporting countries, as was announced when the import quotas were imposed. Mr. Speaker, Canada has a number of international trade obligations and rights and as a result, our trading partners are entitled to take part in a consultative process, as is happening at the present time.

[English]

In the case of the EEC, its publicly announced intention to retaliate against Canada's system of import controls in accordance with its perceived GATT rights is not the overriding criterion by which the Government is being guided. Rather, it is by our announced intention to work out an arrangement which would continue to safeguard Canadian industry from unfair and damaging import competition.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that a negotiated settlement is preferable to a series of attacks and counter-attacks which benefits nobody and which could not serve as the basis for a long term trade policy. The Canadian people clearly indicated their stand when they elected us on September 4.

I suggest that the era of confrontation is over. We must negotiate and deal openly with our partners. It is all very well to stand up and fight for Canadian farmers. But we are not here to fight but to solve problems. Mr. Speaker, we have solved quite a number of problems since September, without too much fuss about it. What matters is providing Canadian farmers with a sound administration both of our export and domestic markets. That is what the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has been doing all along, and that is what the government will go on doing in the weeks and months to come. There is no need to worry, in my opinion, about the way this matter is being dealt with. I think that we did what we had to do and I can assure the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) that Canadian beef producers can count on our monitoring the situation constantly.

LABOUR RELATIONS—CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS LAY-OFFS. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like this afternoon to pursue a couple of concerns I raised in the House about lay-offs at the CNR. I expressed concern sometime ago about the lay-off of railway carmen announced in early March, a lay-off which the CNR explained in terms of a reduced workload in the area of passenger rail equipment. This reduced workload is related to a VIA decision not to go ahead with plans to removate old equipment, a decision which I think will prove to be a mistake. When service is restored to several passenger rail routes this June, they will need all the equipment they can get and the new equipment will not yet be on stream.

I expressed concern more recently about even larger lay-offs announced just several days ago of some 474 railroaders across the CNR system. The injustice of this lay-off has been compounded by the fact that the CNR chose to give only two weeks' notice to these workers when normally they would be required to give several weeks' notice. The CNR has used the regulation in the Canada Labour Code which provides that companies can waive the normal notice period if employees will be in receipt of supplementary unemployment benefits.

Yet, many of the younger workers laid off at the Transcona shops, for instance, will not be eligible for such benefits as they will not have worked for the company the required two years, and yet will still only receive the minimum two weeks' notice. In my opinion, this is a violation of both the spirit and the letter of the Canada Labour Code. The CNR should be ashamed of itself. How the president of CNR expects to increase productivity or to improve its corporate image by acting in this way is beyond me. I certainly would not break my back for someone who was ready to cut off my livelihood on two weeks notice in order to improve his quaterly profit margin.

What is needed is a commitment to employment security, something the rail unions are in the process of negotiating. This was in conciliation at the time of the lay-off, and still is. What is the CNR up to? Is it trying to reduce its workforce before it agrees to a no lay-off clause or is it just the usual disgusting tactic of having a lay-off during the negotiation process, a tactic which has gone on for years and years?

I say to the Government and to the Minister that if the new Government is serious about trying to create a new era of labour management relations, it will at the very least instruct the CNR to give full notice to these employees who were laid off as a result of the most recent announcement. If it is really serious, it will order the CNR to cancel the lay-off altogether in view of the fact that negotiations are proceeding at this time, and stop asking railroaders and their families to pay for the short-term financial needs of this Crown corporation.

The CNR has been allowed to rent rolling stock from American railroads. These thousands of cars are not repaired in Canada, but returned to the U.S. for repair to create and sustain employment in the United States of America. Is this the new Government strategy, I ask, for creating jobs, jobs and more jobs here in Canada? Instead of renting American equipment, we should be employing all the Canadian rail workers we can to repair and maintain our own fleet of rolling stock, both passenger and freight, proceeding with the boxcar rehabilitation program that was planned for Transcona, and eventually building in Transcona the new hopper cars of which a prototype is about to be developed.

Keeping people working on the railroad is an investment in our future. It is a way of increasing the confidence the Government is always talking about. It would be a way of helping put to an end the erosion of the workforce of both the CNR and CPR as a result of short-term profit strategies, combined with an uncritical attitude toward technological change that is increasingly putting employee and public safety at risk.

• (1815)

The work force of the CNR and the CPR has been decreasing literally by the thousands for a number of years. It the railways have their way, it will decrease by a lot more. Whether it be the attempt to run cabooseless trains, the changes at the hump in Symington Yard where far too much is being expected of a new generation computer and human judgment is being removed altogether through the removal of the manual car retarders, the plan to have robot locomotives work in the yard, the attempt to reduce car inspection frequency and quality by utilizing trainmen instead of carmen to do inspections, or the attempt to abolish divisional points like Nakina, Ontario; all add up to a need for the federal Government to yell "halt", and to give Parliamentarians and the public an opportunity to take a second look at just what is going on with the railways in this country.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to reply to a question asked of me in the House by the then Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). I know the Hon. Member is aware that some of the questions with which he prefaced his statement will not be answered by the Minister of Labour.

Regarding the plans of Canadian National Railways to lay off 474 workers in Montreal, Winnipeg, Moncton and various other locations across Canada, I would like to explain that under Part III of the Canada Labour Code, 16 weeks' notice and the establishment of a joint planning committee are required whenever 50 or more employees are terminated over a four-week period within a single industrial establishment. The group notice requirement does not alter the fact that each individual employee to be terminated is still entitled to two weeks' notice or two weeks' pay in lieu thereof.

A lay-off does not constitute termination under the Code when, for example, it lasts for less than three months or it is longer than three months and the employee receives supplementary unemployment benefits, or it lasts up to 12 months and the employee maintains recall rights pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement. However, a lay-off is deemed to be a termination whenever the foregoing conditions cease to exist, such as upon the exhaustion of supplementary unemployment benefits, or when the lay-off lasts beyond 12 months in a recall-rights situation under a collective agreement.

A complaint of non-compliance with the group termination provisions in Division V.2 has been investigated by officials in the St. Lawrence region. I am pleased to advise that CN intends to pay each employee five weeks' supplementary unemployment benefits for each year of service, and furthermore that each employee has recall rights for life, under the collective agreement. At this time, there is no apparent violation of the group termination provisions of the Code. The lay-offs in question do not constitute terminations under the Code, because the employees will receive supplementary unemployment benefits.

Regional officials of Labour Canada will monitor the situation in order to ensure that all affected employees receive the benefits to which they are entitled under the Code, and that the provisions of the Code are complied with, particularly since the supplementary unemployment benefits will expire at different times because of the varying years of service of each employee. I believe that that would indicate to the Hon. Member and to the House our intention to ensure that the Canada Labour Code be adhered to. We in Labour Canada are determined always to adhere to the legislation under which we operate.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—DISMISSAL OF LESBIAN PERSONNEL. (B) REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF NO FURTHER DISMISSALS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on March 5 last, I questioned the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) with respect to a very serious situation in Nova Scotia in which five women who were members of the Canadian Armed Forces and who happened to be lesbians lost their jobs at Canadian Forces Station Shelburne. At that time, I pointed out to the Minister that the women posed no threat whatsoever to Canada's national security and that they were qualified members of the Armed Forces. I asked him why he allowed a policy to remain on the books which discriminates so blatantly against Canadian gays and lesbians.

● (1820)

I would like to take this opportunity to amplify that question and express the very serious concern that today in Canada this kind of firing can take place. The current policy of the Canadian Armed Forces is set out in Canadian Forces orders and regulations 19-20. It is a Draconian order. It states:

> 7. Service policy does not allow homosexual members or members with a sexual abnormality to be retained in the CF.

It goes further. It forces individuals who are members of the Canadian Armed Forces to identify anyone that they may suspect to be a homosexual. Paragraph 2 of the regulations states:

> If a person subject to the Code of Service Discipline becomes aware, or suspects that a member of the Canadian Forces . . . is a homosexual, or has a sexual abnormality, he shall report the matter to the commanding officer—

The military police are then brought in and the individual is apprehended and questioned. In some cases, the person is questioned over a period of days. In this particular instance, one of the women was questioned for several hours in a small room, as if she was a common criminal.

I would suggest that the policy of the Canadian Armed Forces in firing qualified men and women who happen to be gay or lesbian is completely unacceptable. It is a very serious denial of the fundamental rights and freedoms of those individuals.

What is the basis for that policy? In 1981, the former Chief of Staff for the Canadian Armed Forces said that in such a milieu, persons having unusual behaviour traits may attempt to inflict them upon others. He said that there was only one method of assuring the service men and women that their rights would be respected and that was by denying employment to homosexuals. That argument is patently unacceptable. Of course, anyone, anywhere in Canadian society who does not respect the rights of other individuals with whom he or she works is subject to the full sanctions of the law.

Another excuse was given by Admiral Falls. He stated:

> As a matter of fact, experience has shown that the presence of homosexuals can be most disruptive. Such disruption often takes the form of physical attacks on the homosexual(s) concerned, and it is possible to prevent this sort of thing only by avoiding the employment of homosexuals in the first place.

We have heard that argument before with respect to blacks, women and other minorities. We would love to be able to employ them but they might be beaten up if we hire them, so we will not hire them! Once again, I suggest that this Parliament should reject that kind of reasoning.

The final argument which was made by the Armed Forces in denying the right of men and women to join the Armed Forces who may be homosexual, and in firing others, is that those individuals may be a threat to national security. There are all sorts of bases upon which an individual might become a threat to national security, but how can it possibly be suggested that someone who makes no secret of their sexual orientation is a threat to national security? Surely, that argument is patently ridiculous. I would suggest that even the Armed Forces today does not attempt with any great degree of conviction to put that argument forward.

Pending a review of this particular policy by the Subcommittee on Equality Rights which has been charged with this responsibility, not only in the context of Section 15 of the Charter or Rights but also in the context of the referral of the Bill which I proposed today that would end discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, I would urge that the Government not wait until that study has been completed. There has been too much pain and suffering inflicted on people who are not criminals, but who happen to be gay or lesbian. Certainly, these are people who are outstanding members of the Armed Forces. I would call upon the Government to institute a moratorium. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Wenman) to give a commitment that, pending the review of this very serious question, and in recognition of the denial of rights of the individuals involved, the Government will undertake that no men or women will be dismissed from the Armed Forces, will lose their jobs and their livelihoods, on the basis of their sexual orientation.

It is not only a source of great pain, considerable financial loss and personal hardship to those individuals who are the victims of discrimination, but I would remind the House that for those many individuals who remain within the Armed Forces, at all levels, and who happen to be gay or lesbian, there is an additional element of oppression by virtue of the fact that they must maintain the secrecye of their sexual orientation. That oppression in many cases is certainly as serious as the oppression suffered by individuals who are kicked out of the Armed Forces.

I have had correspondence and telephone calls from a number of these people, and I emphasize, at all levels of the Armed Forces. Let us bring the Canadian Armed Forces into the twentieth century. Let us recognize the right to equality for men and women in the Armed Forces who happen to be gay or lesbian and put an end to this policy of blatant discrimination.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the points and questions raised by the Hon. Member in his question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) on March 5 are worthy of thoughtful and serious consideration. I am pleased to say that our Government has decided to give the matter that kind of thoughtful and serious consideration through the process of a parliamentary committee. We will follow the work of the committee with considerable interest and await the outcome in the very positive spirit with which the House of Commons has just considered the motion of the Hon. Member.

Referring to the Hon. Member's specific question, as the Hon. Member will recall, the Minister pointed out that he is in fact part of the formal grievance process which flows from the prevailing National Defence Act. On March 5 the Hon. Member stated, "There is no grievance provision in place for these women". I would, however, like to inform the Hon. Member that several of these former members of the Armed Forces are now in the process of pursuing their redress according to the law. They are now at the level of the Chief of the Defence Staff and could possibly go beyond that to the Minister and, indeed, to the Governor in Council.

The Hon. Member is aware that the Minister made mention of the existing Canadian Armed Forces policy and regulations in this area. However, since the sub-committee on justice and legal affairs has begun its meetings on the broad issues, and since a report is expected from this committee some time next September, it would be inappropriate for the Minister to comment substantively on these regulations and specific cases, so as not to prejudice or disrupt the sub-committee's work.

The Hon. Member is aware that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) appeared this afternoon before the sub-committee dealing with these issues. Parliament will have to await the results of its deliberations and I am sure its report will form an important part of the information for the Government in dealing with these very important issues.

I am confident that the intent and interpretation of the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will assure justice and equality among Canadians. The Hon. Member is now assured of his opportunity to express his point of view further in this committee and in this House of Commons, as are those who will present their opinions both for and against these points of view. We look forward to that discussion on behalf of the Canadian Armed Forces.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Before September 4, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—then Leader of the Opposition—would visit the Eastern Townships and the Bois-Francs region, harping on his favourite theme: job creation.

He promised to spur the asbestos sector, spoke of more active development in forestry, guaranteed that textile and footwear industries would be protected, and committed himself to creating more jobs as a result of better promotion of agri-food business through more intensive research. Practically in the same breath, the Conservative Party emphasized the need to boost and support those sectors whose main objective is external trade—Domtar and asbestos, among others. This region was also slated to become a strategic centre since the cartographic institute was to become reality.

Here is the tally after six months in office. Jobs: hundreds have been lost, thousands more are about to disappear. Asbestos: nothing whatsoever has been done. Footwear: quotas have been slashed. Cartography: the project is under review. Agriculture: pork producers are still waiting for their cheques. Research: Victoriaville's $14 million research project has been cancelled. Domtar: not a single Quebec Minister knows what is going on.

Yet, we are amazed at the haste with which $40 million were handed out to Kruger in the Maritime Provinces, not to mention the $73 million to a western bank, and over $600 million in defence expenditures to please the Americans.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF JEWISH POPULATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that Members of Parliament, and indeed all Canadians, will join in the appeal brought to us yesterday by the Jewish Students' Network in Canada on behalf of Soviet Jewry. With the emergence of the new Soviet leader, Mr. Gorbachev, we can be hopeful that there will now be an opportunity for a relaxation in the Soviet Union's policy which would permit the emigration of Jews who wish to go to Israel. A realistic goal would be the reinstatement of the Soviet policies of the late 1970s which permitted large numbers of Soviet Jews to leave for Israel.

We also welcome the statement made yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) indicating that he intends to take up the case of the Soviet Jews with Soviet authorities when he visits the U.S.S.R. next week. During his visit, I would urge him to endeavour to arrange to meet with the Jewish "Refusenik" groups so that he and we can be briefed on their present difficult situation.

ENERGY

AGREEMENT WITH WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the new agreement on oil and gas pricing in Canada initialled yesterday by the Minister of Energy (Miss Carney) and her provincial counterparts in western Canada is further evidence of the Government's positive record of success.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pennock: This agreement, like the Atlantic Accord, is proof that consultation and co-operation are the way to achieve positive results. For over four years, agreements of this nature eluded the previous administration.

Since September Canada's economy has witnessed growing signs of strength. The unemployment rate has fallen. Investment confidence is strengthening. Consumer spending and manufacturing orders are rising, and interest rates have dropped.

There are tough economic decisions that lie ahead of us, but those decisions will be made after listening to the people of Canada and getting their advice and opinions. The recent economic conference was an opportunity for Canadians to be heard and for politicians to listen.

On September 4 last, the people of Canada placed their confidence in this Government. We have achieved much in seven months. We will achieve more in the next four years.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TIME FOR PRESIDENT TO RESIGN

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to urge the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to hand in his resignation to the new Progressive Conservative Government. Requested by the Government to cut $75 million, the President failed to show any understanding for the plight of isolated areas where the service is inadequate and the unemployment rate has reached astronomical proportions as a result of Liberal waste and the absence of any economic policy for 20 years.

Unfortunately and predictably, the cutbacks were apparently not carefully considered, and I have the impression that the nonchalant way our region was dealt with is only the tip of the iceberg. I am therefore convinced that those who helped to "fatten" the system and expand this corporation cannot be expected to have the ability to manage negative growth and take a more reasonable approach.

Since the way the cutbacks are made is more important than the actual amounts involved, I think it would be perfectly legitimate to ask the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to give the new Progressive Conservative Government a chance to appoint a president more attuned to this country's new political and economic principles.

The President of the CBC should therefore have the courage to respond to the demands of a new Canadian reality, as of September 4, because in addition to the $75 million cutbacks, Canada needs an entirely new management style in public affairs, and the new Government should not be expected to take every manager by the hand to put Government spending in 400 Crown corporations and 40 departments on a more rational footing.

WOMEN

APPOINTMENT TO DECISION-MAKING POSITIONS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is very fond of consultation as we all have noticed. Few major initiatives have been taken by a government paralyzed by indecision and uncertainty. However, there is a consensus in Canada the Government has not yet discovered, a consensus supported by all Canadians, and I am referring to the view that more women should be appointed to decision-making positions on the boards of Crown corporations, in government agencies and on commissions. This is a genuine consensus that is supported by all the polls.

Even if the Government keeps giving us the assurance that appointing women to management positions is one of its priorities, that is obviously not what is happening. Last week, at Air Canada, only one of thirteen appointees was a woman. That is 7 per cent, Mr. Speaker. On a committee of experts in botany, two out of eight appointees were women and this was two out of five at the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada.

An Hon. Member: Incredible!

Mrs. Pépin: If the Government is so keen on governing by consensus, it should appoint women to decision-making positions, and it would certainly be a good thing for Canada.

NATIONAL PARKS

DEVELOPMENT OF FOUR MOUNTAIN PARKS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in 1981 Parks Canada initiated the Four Mountain Parks Planning Program to develop long-range management plans for Banff, Jasper, Kootenay, and Yoho National Parks. This program included extensive public consultation during which the vast majority of participants rejected wholesale tourist-oriented development within these parks in favour of little or no development, in keeping with Parks Canada's own mandate which puts first priority on ecological and historical integrity. The consensus in this regard was overwhelming, yet Parks Canada ignored popular will and recently proposed a pro-development management plan for the four mountain parks block. Is the new parks policy of the Conservative Government to ignore public opinion, to turn our national parks into Disneylands, and to sacrifice our environmental heritage to the market-place?

The year 1985 is the 100th anniversary of Parks Canada. All Canadians are justifiably proud of our national parks, and this should a be a year of celebration. Instead, ever since the election of the Tories, a dark, disturbing cloud of cut-backs, insensitivity, and uncertainty, has descended on our national parks system. I call on the Government to respect the mandate of Parks Canada, the wishes of the majority of Canadians, and our environmental heritage, by rejecting Parks Canada's pro-development scenario for Banff, Jasper, Kootenay, and Yoho National Parks.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM—CANADIAN EXAMPLE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, for over 100 years Canada has stood as a rock of freedom in an often troubled and tormented world. This country was built by hardworking, dedicated individuals who came to Canada because they could be free here, free to prosper, and free to speak out and participate in a democratic society that treated them as equals. For many, the greatest freedom of all was the freedom to worship in their own way.

● (1410)

Last week in my riding I met with a group of people whose friends and relatives, who live in another country, are being persecuted because of their religious beliefs. They spoke of the torture, killings, and beatings which have been perpetrated by the Government on these religious followers. All these people want is the freedom to worship God in their own way.

To us in Canada religious freedom is a basic and fundamental right. Yet, for millions of people around the world it is not. Let us always be mindful and thankful of the freedoms and rights for which this country has proudly stood. In addition, let us, as Canadians, remain committed to maintaining our freedoms and continuing to set an example for other countries of the world.

EXTERNAL AID

GENESIS OF RECORDING TO ASSIST AFRICAN FAMINE VICTIMS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, the power of music is used to soothe, to uplift, and to seduce. Now, Canadian musical artists have combined their talents to use the power of music to persuade Canadians to help feed the starving people of Africa.

We have all heard the record Tears Are Not Enough, the Canadian music community's response to an international call for help. I am proud to inform the House that the genesis of this unique venture occurred in my riding of Capilano, British Columbia. There, world acclaimed producer David Foster wrote the words, while Bryan Adams and Jack Vallance created the music. Others such as Bruce Allen and Terry David Mulligan formed the Northern Lights for Africa Society which will donate the proceeds from the sales of the record, the video, and the CBC documentary on the making of this record, to the African Famine Relief.

Fifty-five Canadian artists gathered together in a studio on a cold February afternoon and spent 15 hours to record the song, without recompense, and forgoing other engagements. Anne Murray, Cory Hart, Robert Charlebois, and Liona Boyd are just some whose generosity is only exceeded by their artistry.

Yes, we have a new hit in the Canadian recording industry, but it will be Canadians across the country who support this venture and transform music into dollars for famine relief. In the words of the song:

We can learn to share
And show how much we care
We can make the difference
Don't you know that tears are not enough?

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

COMMISSIONER'S ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Commissioner of Official Languages tabled his annual report. At that time he stated:

> The Canadian Government, indeed Canadians generally, need to wake up to the fact that progressive polarization threatens the probable extinction of most French-speaking minorities outside Quebec and, by ricochet, drastic reductions of the English freedoms within that province.

That is an alarming statement for both English and French-speaking minorities. However, I would like to advise the House that the ricochet effect has already started.

For some time the Anglophone minority in Quebec have been subject to repeated attacks on their language rights. Since 1981, 90,000 Anglophones have left that province. The situation has been equally critical for our French-speaking brothers in other provinces.

As well, the Commissioner made the following pleas. He urged the new Tory Government to use its financial and regulatory clout to extend bilingualism in the private sector. He urged the Government to help Canadians who go to the courts seeking delivery of minority language rights under the Charter of Rights. Finally, he urged the Government not to undercut language reform through spending cuts in the Budget which is to be brought down in May.

We support these measures and we urge the Government to respond positively to these recommendations as soon as possible.

ENERGY

AGREEMENT WITH WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Canadians watched with appreciation yesterday as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and her provincial counterparts announced in principle a new energy accord with the producing western provinces. This agreement is the result of skilful leadership by the Minister. It also fulfils another of my Party's election promises, that is, a new approach to energy development in Canada.

More important, however, it indicates the priority this Government places on the oil and gas industry and its importance to all Canadians. It recognizes the potential of this industry to grow, to be an economic multiplier, to help Canada become more energy self-sufficient and to create jobs in various parts of the economy.

Equally important, it sounds the death knell of that most devastating energy policy developed by the previous Government, which contributed so dramatically to the loss of jobs and the downturn in our economy, especially in western Canada. The Minister's announcement signals another step in Canada's road to economic recovery. It demonstrates the value of thoughtful progressive leadership.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—INVITATION TO PARTICIPATE IN RESEARCH

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Why did the Prime Minister not advise the Secretary of State for External Affairs that Canada had been asked to participate in star wars research? Why did the Prime Minister allow his Minister to hang in the wind yesterday, because he was not able to respond directly? Was it because there is a difference of opinion between the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Could the Prime Minister clarify the position of the Government on this issue?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the clarification, if required—and I think my right hon. friend would acknowledge this—is that a communication was delivered to the Deputy Prime Minister in Luxembourg. Given the different time zones and time frames, I think any fair minded person would agree that obviously net everything is instantaneous. Having said that, I think there is no doubt but that the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has set out the position of this Government on that and other issues, with great courage, thoroughness, and dignity. I salute him for that because I know that that calm and reasoned approach finds favour with the Canadian people, and I hope with my right hon. friend.

[Translation]

YOUTH—USE OF FUNDS FOR JOB CREATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the Prime Minister did not answer the question. I have a supplementary.

If Canada were to participate in U.S. Star Wars research, this would oblige the Government to spend several billion dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money on a U.S. arms program. It would be naive to think otherwise. Would it not be better to spend those billions on creating jobs for our young Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition will agree that the Government is going to do what he probably would have done himself in similar circumstances. When we receive a request from our allies, we discuss it in Cabinet and make a decision as soon as our schedule permits. We have just received this invitation. I am now going to submit it to my Cabinet colleagues, and we shall announce our decision to the House in the near future.

For instance, we recently received a request from the Prime Minister of Israel and from Egypt, asking us to consider the possibility of replacing the Australian contingent on a peace mission in the Middle East. That is a proposal, an invitation we have just received. We are going to submit it to Cabinet and we shall announce our decision in due time.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, of course the Secretary of State knew about Israel's invitation because it was made to him directly. I might say that this Party would support the Government's participation in replacing the Australians in that particular enterprise.

JOB CREATION FACTOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister said, or is reported to have said, that if star wars will create jobs then we should consider taking part. That is how he was reported. Does the Prime Minister think that there is some burning desire among Canadians, particularly young Canadians, to make a living off the escalation of the nuclear arms race?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I said was that if a proposal were brought forward consistent with the requirements of the ABM Treaty which could create, say, 10,000 jobs in Winnipeg-Fort Garry, we would take a look at it.

● (1420)

Unless my right hon. friend is saying that job creation and the dignity of human beings in Canada are unimportant, and I do not believe that, and unless he is suggesting that this Party is a Party of warmongers, after we fought off the Liberals on the question of nuclear arms—remember Mr. Diefenbaker fought you to a standstill and prevented nuclear arms from coming into this country. That is the position of this Party.

The last time nuclear arms were allowed on Canadian soil, it was by the Liberal Party of Canada, and Canadians will never forget it. That is the difference between you and I.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is very easy for the Prime Minister to rewrite history, but we are dealing with the problems of today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I was there at that time. I was not a back-room boy; I got elected in those days.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister is seriously considering the Americans' request for us to participate in star wars, will he live up to the reputation of Canadians, that we have always been on the side of peace, and not get into an adventure which will lead to escalation of the arms race around the world?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): We are very conscious of the tradition, in which this Party has played an honourable role, of searching for a durable peace in the world. I think my hon. friend would agree that it was not the most glorious moment in the distinguished history of the Liberal Party when it reversed itself and accepted nuclear arms on Canadian soil. I know you would be as ashamed of that today as you were then.

Miss MacDonald: So was Pierre Trudeau.

Mr. Mulroney: In fact a very distinguished Canadian, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, then a very distinguished journalist, said that the Liberals were the defrocked princes of peace for what you did on the nuclear arms issue.

This Party will always be here to protect the integrity of Canada and make sure that our approach to the quest for a durable peace is always serious and at the top of our priorities.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I was around in those days and I remember the Minister of Veterans Affairs having to resign because the Diefenbaker Government broke its word. The same thing happened with the resignation of Douglas Harkness, who had to resign because Mr. Diefenbaker was breaking his word.

PARLIAMENTARY RESOLUTION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Prime Minister if he is about to break the word of this Parliament, given a year ago when he was Leader of the Opposition, when all in this House agreed that Canada would never participate in any way, shape or form in star wars?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend should go back—

Mr. McDermid: Who is rewriting history now?

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, he is rewriting history, not of years ago but of months ago.

Mr. Chrétien: Three weeks ago he said they were against it.

Mr. Mulroney: I take seriously the observations of my hon. friend. I think he would take seriously the fact that, because it is not a partisan matter, we have no lessons to learn from anyone in regard to our commitment to the strength of our allies and the sincerity of our desire to be of assistance in the procurement of a durable and honourable peace. There is nothing more important to Canadians, irrespective of their political views, and nothing brings Canadians together with more certainty than the assurance that this Government, any national Government, is deeply and irretrievably committed to a genuine search for a peaceful solution and de-escalation of nuclear tensions in the world. Nothing is more important, and we are committed to that to the fullest.

Mr. Chrétien: Why are you reversing yourself?

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last year, following the patronage appointments by Messrs. Trudeau and Turner of over 200 Liberal individuals, the Prime Minister indicated that he had joined the majority of Canadians who were sick and tired of this kind of partisan appointment to serious jobs. At that time he said specifically that if he were elected he would make a basic change in the whole approach. Since then there have been Conservative appointees to Air Canada, Via Rail, the Senate, and Citizenship Courts, to name just a few. Instead of 200 appointees, we have now had over 1,000 Conservative appointees.

● (1425)

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

Mr. Broadbent: They are yelling "more". More pigs at the trough, that is what they are yelling on the other side. Where is the change? Why is Conservative patronage any better than Liberal patronage?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before my hon. friend dissolves in exasperation, I would like to tell him that I have spent a very long weekend looking for Conservative appointments made by the NDP Government of Manitoba.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Try as I might, Mr. Speaker, and I have a fine eye in this matter, I could not find a single one. In contrast, this Party has appointed distinguished people like Stephen Lewis, and Mrs. Gold to the chairmanship of the Committee on the Status of Women. Long after these people opposite should have done so, we recognized the distinguished service of Tommy Douglas and appointed him to the Privy Council of Canada. Many other distinguished NDP members have been appointed, and there will be more, because we believe that the Public Service and these appointments should reflect the best of Canada.

Having said that, I have been talking to my friend, a very distinguished parliamentarian, the Member for St. John's East, who, with his task force on parliamentary reform, will hopefully be bringing forward some mechanism that will allow us all to improve on what was a very sad and sorry Liberal record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the facts stand for themselves. To understate it, 95 per cent of the appointees whom the Government has named have been Conservatives. The Prime Minister knows it. The only reason they got the appointments was because they were Conservative, and the whole country knows that as well.

VIA RAIL CHAIRMAN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, last October the Government froze the wages of all the working people in VIA Rail so that they could make their contributions to the viability of the government of that entity. Having done that, how could the Government announce, just two days ago, that the new chairman of VIA Rail, a former Conservative candidate, would have his salary increased to $135,000? Why is there one sense of justice for ordinary workers and another for Tory patronage?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were to be fair, I think he would recognize that it has been my privilege, as Prime Minister, to make more non partisan appointments in six months than any of my predecessors whom anyone in this House can remember.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Lawrence Hanigan is widely regarded as an outstanding leader in mass transportation in Canada. If I recollect accurately, the Montreal Gazette pointed out with considerable pride the accomplishments of Mr. Hanigan in this field. He is a very distinguished Canadian and Quebecer who, it is true, once stood for the Progressive Conservative Party. Given his remarkable record of accomplishments over a long period of time, I do not think that that should disqualify him from serving as chairman in an area of public endeavour where he has received such high marks over the years. I think you should be standing up and congratulating us for this fine public service appointment.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister should go to all the workers in VIA Rail and explain to them why they should have their wages frozen while this man gets an increase up to $135,000 a year. Let him explain that to the working people of Canada.

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER SPEAKER TO CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question concerns a sacred trust that the Prime Minister entered into during the television debates. He said: "A series of appointments should be looked at attentively by House of Commons committees." "I propose to you tonight," he said to the people of Canada, "that this notion be extended so that all political appointments, for example to the CTC, be approved by a House committee." A sacred trust. How could the Prime Minister make that commitment on the one hand and then, after he obtained office, appoint Marcel Lambert, a former Conservative MP, to the CTC? It is the CTC about which he said appointments should not be made unless approved by a committee of the House.

In addition to his response, will he tell us that there will be no more such appointments coming from the Government until he sets up a committee to vet all such appointments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am appalled at the splenetic observations of the Hon. Member. He disparages a former Speaker of the House who served here for 25 years.

If my hon. friend is going to criticize me for it, I will accept the criticism because it is true that we have appointed people with previous political backgrounds, including Marcel Lambert, Lloyd Francis, and Stephen Lewis, and I am proud of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Ed, stand up again.

An Hon. Member: Let Ian ask the questions. He did so well yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We did so well yesterday.

ENERGY

AGREEMENT WITH WESTERN PROVINCES—MINISTER'S ROLE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources signed an agreement with the three oil producing provinces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I would not have done so, but I draw your attention to the fact that not one Member of the Tory caucus or the Cabinet, for that matter, knows what is in the agreement, and yet they have the audacity to stand here and insult their constituents who want them to act independently. They applaud an agreement—the form, not the substance. She could have sold the farm and they would still be standing up like trained seals applauding.

Let me refer to the text of a wire communique which I have in front of me. It says that the Minister said the Prime Minister gave her free rein to negotiate the agreement. "But before making the details of the pact public," she said, "I owe him the courtesy of telling him what I initialled." I ask the Prime Minister if it is true that he gave the Minister of Energy a free rein to negotiate an agreement which affects billions of dollars of federal government revenue and to initial what she pleased?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when he had the First Ministers' Conference the Hon. Member from Westmount went on TV and said that it made him ill. The last time there were energy negotiations, the Member for Saint-Maurice was on the phone to Marc Lalonde and Marc Lalonde was saying: "Don't do this or you are out."

Mr. Chrétien: I signed twice, and no delays.

Mr. Mulroney: You signed all right—with invisible ink.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That is what you signed. We know all about your deals.

In point of fact, I see my hon. friend from Westmount is stumbling from success to success here.

Mr. Gauthier: You are fumbling from joke to joke.

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources goes with the full support of the Prime Minister and her Cabinet colleagues, with whom all of this was amply discussed.

The difference is that I have full confidence in my Ministers and I encourage them to go out and innovate, accept the responsibilities, and make deals that benefit western Canada and all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I recognize in the gallery the presence of the distinguished Mayor of Westmount. But that is no reason for the Prime Minister to insist on forgetting that my riding is Saint-Henri-Westmount. I am sure the mayor would agree with that.

TAX REVENUE INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Prime Minister's answer it seems to me that the Minister did not have a free rein. I am less nervous about the agreement as is the Minister of Finance, I suppose.

It is clear from the response of the producing provinces that the PGRT will be reduced or eliminated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The rumour is that he is seriously examining a value added tax, which will affect every transaction of every Canadian in every walk of life, to replace the revenue that will be lost through the reduction or elimination of the PGRT. Will that happen? Yes or no?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I have been in close consultation on this on a regular basis in order to find a solution to the energy problems that the country has been beset with since October, 1980.

We feel that the result will be extremely good for western Canada, eastern Canada, and all Canadians, in terms of bringing this country together and creating the economic growth to create the jobs that are needed.

APPROACH TO WORLD PRICE LEVEL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would remind him that Premier Lougheed and Prime Minister Trudeau drank a champagne toast to the previous oil agreement. It did not work out exactly right.

While we do not know the details of the oil agreement, we know that the Government is moving to deregulate and go to world price. That has a potential short run effect of reducing the price at the gas pump for consumers. Will the Minister of Finance agree in principle that such benefits should be passed on to the consumers and not be absorbed by the Government through petroleum compensation charge collections, or by the oil companies pocketing windfall profits?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, I said in my statement last November that the petroleum compensation charge would be phased out. As far as the profitability of the oil companies is concerned, they have demonstrated a willingness to reinvest these profits in the Canadian economy to find oil and gas production, as well as to create the jobs that Hon. Members are asking us to encourage. Surely you cannot have it both ways. Either the oil companies will do what is right for the country and create jobs, or they will take their money and go elsewhere. We want them to leave their money here, create the jobs, and find the oil and gas production.

INVESTMENT BY FOREIGN OWNED OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the majority of the oil industry is still foreign owned and those big multinationals will benefit by going to the world price because they will get a windfall when their old oil moves to the world oil price.

Is the Minister prepared to introduce real legislation that will require these foreign oil companies to reinvest the windfalls they will get, in Canada? Will he also indicate to the House whether he is prepared to protect the consumer in the long run when the price of oil is liable to skyrocket again if there is an OPEC oil crisis, now that we are dependent on the OPEC price? Will he protect the consumer in the long run from the effects of drastic increases in this free market for oil?

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member asked two questions. First, are we confident that the oil companies will reinvest their cash flows into the Canadian economy and create the jobs? Yes, we believe they will. My colleague, the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources, and I have had extensive discussions and we are confident that they will do that and that they will create the jobs that we need here in Canada.

The second part of the question, I believe, was whether there would be some protection for the consumer in the event that, under price decontrol, there was a spike in the oil and gas price. That is something we propose to do.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

COMMISSIONER'S REPORT—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages was tabled in the House yesterday. The least that can be said is that it is an alarming report for francophones, for a bilingual Canada, and for those who believe in linguistic equity.

Considering that the Federal Government must set the example and be the driving force in linguistic matters, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to introduce a Bill in the not too distant future with a view to reinforcing the powers of the Commissioner of Official Languages to enable him to promote, encourage and even require linguistic equity, or, to put it another way, to meet the wishes of Canadians to have a public service sector that closely reflects the example they are giving?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my colleague is raising a very important issue. In the November Throne Speech, we indicated that as a Government we feel that bilingualism has to be a vital aspect of our national existence, a sentiment that is widely shared, I believe. Like my colleague, I am concerned about the undoubtedly justified remarks of the commissioner and, this morning, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister to make early arrangements to convene all Deputy Ministers in the Public Service so that we might undertake an operational analysis to enable us to define the parameters required for such a Bill.

FRENCH AS LANGUAGE OF WORK IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In his report the Commissioner of Official Languages mentions the progress we have made in Canada in the language of education and the language of communication, and he raises the important question of the language of work in the Public Service of Canada.

Is the Government prepared to explain to the Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs its policy concerning the important question of the language of work in the Public Service of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not look into that aspect of the question, but I think it is a very reasonable suggestion. If people cannot work in French, it is a myth, and everything must be done to maintain the integrity of that instrument, that cultural and linguistic wealth, either by coercion, or by making sure that it will be sought after as an instrument of work. The remarks of my colleague are quite appropriate and I will give them due consideration.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister who talked earlier about aspects of Canada's history as a promoter of peace, as a peacemaker and his wish to have his Government continue on this path. This is very commendable, and it would be even more commendable if the Prime Minister would say now, today, clearly, that Canada and the Canadian Government are opposed to the militarization of outer space and will not take any part whatsoever in research or otherwise in any development of an anti-ballistic missile system.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I were to make that comment without consulting with my Cabinet colleagues, the Hon. Member would accuse me of running a presidential-style government. We are opposed to a presidential-style government. This is a parliamentary democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I believe in consulting with my colleagues before making statements. I do not think that my hon. friend would find in my background, or in the background of this Party, anything other than initiatives designed to assist in the achieving of a durable and helpful process that will result in peace for the world.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, we may have to treat the Prime Minister like a president because two of his Cabinet colleagues, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence, are going in opposite directions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: We have to ask him what path it is we are to understand that Canada is following.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION INQUIRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): I ask the Prime Minister again will he support his Secretary of State for External Affairs who said last month that Canada would not participate in any way in the star wars project?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have to protect myself from time to time against misquotation. I have just been misquoted, I am sure inadvertently, by the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

The statement was that at the time the Government of Canada had no plans for any kind of involvement in any way with the Strategic Defence Initiative. As the Hon. Member will know, the Government of Canada, along with all of the other members of that alliance she now wants to join, NATO, has now received a formal invitation to consider participation in research that is consistent with the ABM treaty, under the Strategic Defence Initiative.

Ms. Jewett: You have heard about it? I am glad you have heard about it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are going to consider that proposal.

Mr. Benjamin: Send it back unopened.

BILINGUALISM

DECISION TO REDUCE NUMBER OF BILINGUAL POSITIONS AT RENOUS PENITENTIARY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada. Last Monday, the Telegraph Journal reported that the Solicitor General had decided to reduce the proportion of bilingual positions at the new penitentiary institution in Renous from 50 per cent to 30 per cent. In the light of statements by the Commissioner of Official Languages who deplores the state of bilingualism in Canada, and especially in the light of the Prime Minister's reply, to the effect that bilingualism is a vital issue, does the Minister intend to maintain his decision?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the measures taken with respect to hiring at the Atlantic Institution, or Renous as it is sometimes known, were designated in the light of the best interests of local residents for hiring purposes. These measures are not written in stone. For my hon. friend to raise it in this context shows that he lacks a certain appreciation of fairness and local conditions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Look who's talking. What about Hatfield? And you talk about fairness.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Since New Brunswick has been officially recognized as a bilingual province, and especially since the Solicitor General has a rather special relationship with our Premier, and Premier Hatfield, in his better moments, sees himself as the defender of Acadian rights, did the Minister consult the Premier prior to reaching this decision?

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I am always prepared to listen to representations from my colleagues, or provincial Premiers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Which room in the Chateau?

Mr. MacKay: I repeat to my friend opposite that this particular measure was taken after consultation with the Commissioner of CSC who is, himself, a Francophone from New Brunswick. It was not done with any intent to be unfair to anyone except to promote the best interests of local residents and to provide maximum utilization of local people at this new institution.

FORESTRY

SIGNING OF SUBAGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Since forestry is important to Quebec's economy, and especially to the economy of a region like Abitibi-Témiscamingue, I would like to ask the Minister when, further to the general agreement signed with Quebec on regional economic development, he intends to sign a subsidiary agreement on the forestry industry?

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, it is true that we are anticipating further arrangements with Quebec concerning the forestry industry in that province. When an announcement is to be made, it will be made by my colleague, the Minister of State for Forestry.

MINES

MAPPING INSTITUTE IN QUEBEC—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Prime Minister that we missed him during the past few days and that the people of the Eastern Townships were anxious to see him return to the House so they can get replies on two important issues, especially the one about the Mapping Institute. The Prime Minister, who has a good memory, will recall that last July he made a formal and solemn commitment to the people of the Eastern Townships that the Sherbrooke project to decentralize mapping activities would be carried out on schedule. Is the Prime Minister a man of his word and can we still take him at his word today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend is somewhat mistaken. As far as formal commitments to move the Mapping Institute is concerned, those were made by the Liberal Party to Sherbrooke in four successive elections, and nothing ever came of it. The Liberal Party misled the people of the Eastern Townships during four successive elections. They misled those people and that is why former Liberal Members are sitting upstairs, not down here in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The people of Quebec knew where they belonged. We on this side of the House are considering several possibilities in this area, despite the heavy financial burden we have inherited. I hope to be able to make an announcement in this connection in the near future.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FORMAL COMMITMENT TO START NEGOTIATIONS WITH DOMTAR

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I think it is in very poor taste to make disparaging remarks about candidates who were beaten in the last election, because the Prime Minister's own people may well be up there in four years' time. Speaking of formal commitments . . . last week, before the people from Domtar and representatives from the Eastern Townships, the Prime Minister made a formal commitment to start negotiations with Domtar within the next few days, and that is what he said last Tuesday. Considering this formal commitment, could the Prime Minister explain to the House why Domtar has not yet been contacted by his Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend misunderstood what I said. What I meant was that the good ones were beaten and the others turned up on the other side of the House. I was only pointing out the unfairness of it all, and I am sure the Hon. Member will agree with me.

Mr. Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that any reference to the presence of anybody in the gallery is not permitted.

Mr. Mulroney: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On March 15, in response to a question from the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Prime Minister indicated that in a conversation with Prime Minister Nakasone, a topic of great interest to southwestern Ontario was discussed. I guess we can assume in context that that concerned the automobile industry. There are two possibilities that would interest the people of southwestern Ontario, one, that there is an agreement to continue the automobile quotas on Japanese manufactured automobiles for an additional year, or that there will be a commitment to a level of Canadian manufacture of Japanese automobiles and job creation in Canada proportionate to the Canadian sales of Japanese automobiles. I would ask the Prime Minister which is it.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had checked with his Leader yesterday, he would have found that similar questions were put and answers were given. I would suggest that he check Hansard to get the appropriate answer.

DISCUSSION WITH JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would direct this question to the Prime Minister. He had the discussion with Prime Minister Nakasone. Did he discuss with the Prime Minister of Japan the issue of quotas being extended for Japanese manufactured automobiles imported into Canada, and did he discuss the imposition of the conditions of the auto pact on Japanese cars, as are imposed upon cars which are manufactured by North American manufacturers, or not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did. As I indicated to the House, I discussed with the Prime Minister the impact of this on Canada generally and southwestern Ontario in particular.

Mr. Deans: Did he say anything back?

IMMIGRATION

ERNST ZUNDEL—DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister has announced that since Ernst Zundel was sentenced to 15 months a determination must now be made about his possible deportation. Will the Minister please explain to the House what steps are involved in this process and how long it will take?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the order to launch an inquiry into deportation proceedings for Ernst Zundel was signed today. That inquiry will commence as soon as it is possible, given the arrangements that will have to be made by the adjudicator in this case. I would just add that any further judicial proceedings will depend upon the outcome of that inquiry.

THE BUDGET—RESTORATION OF HOUSES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the head clown is back in the House of Commons to get a round of applause from his 211 jerks.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour responsible for CMHC . . . Bissonnette, give him a shove and wake him up!

The Minister knows full well that the residential restoration program is very important to all Canadians and Quebecers alike. Can he tell us why he has decided to reduce Quebec's budget by 35.7 per cent, as compared with only 9 per cent in the case of Ontario?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to reply to that question. For the first time since RRAP has been in place, a form of self-assessment, which was taken from the 1981 census form wherein individual Canadians declared whether they felt their housing was adequate, was used in distributing the dollars that all Canadians put forward as tax dollars for repair and renovation.

[Translation]

ALLEGED PENALIZING OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I think the Minister is not too familiar with this file, I am referring to the residential rehabilitation and restoration program, not to insulation.

If the Minister knows what I am talking about, can he tell me why Quebec has been penalized to the tune of 35 per cent, while the cut-back was only 9 per cent in Ontario? Is this another case like Domtar or Melchers, or is it another one of the Prime Minister's promises to be generous towards Quebec? We see now what he meant.

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if the Hon. Member did not understand repair and renovation. I do, and I know the people of Canada do. I say once more to the Quebec lieutenant of the Liberal Party that we now have in place in Canada a formula for the distribution of tax dollars for repair and renovation which was devised on a self-assessment done in the 1981 census in which individual Canadians said whether they felt their housing was adequate.

ANNOUNCEMENT CONCERNING DOMTAR

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Prime Minister which concern representatives of the Common Front and Domtar workers in Windsor, Quebec. When will the announcement on Domtar be made? And furthermore, could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that this announcement will ensure the continuation of this project which is to provide 5,000 jobs in the Windsor area, in Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think an announcement will be made in the near future, and second, I have every reason to believe that our involvement will be seen as a useful contribution towards reaching a settlement so that construction can proceed.

PROTECTION OF DOMTAR JOBS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that Domtar is starting to lay off 100 employees working on these projects because of the delay? Bearing that in mind, will a decision be taken very shortly to ensure the continuation of present jobs and the upgrading of both plant and employment in the region?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): A decision will be made at a time to be agreed upon by the Government of Quebec and this Government, with a view to promoting economic expansion in the Eastern Townships.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Government to move second reading of this Bill which I believe is an important and significant piece of legislation. The Bill is brought before the House as a result of the enactment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which occurred in 1982. Also in 1982, certain provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms—which is now the ultimate law of the land in Canada—particularly those relating to equality matters, were not to come into full force and effect until April 17, 1985, in order to give Governments across the country an opportunity to prepare for the massive changes which will result in Canada and to the system of laws as a result of the enactment of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The federal Government, provincial Governments and territorial Governments, once the Charter had been proclaimed, undertook to review their legislation, regulations and administrative practices to ensure that they were consistent with the Charter as far as it could be determined. As a result of the review which has taken place in the Government of Canada, a broad range of federal initiatives were undertaken to bring about conformity with the Charter. This Government assumed office last September and it has moved as quickly as possible to ensure that Canadian laws reflect the values which are enshrined in the Charter.

There has been some cheap criticism of this Bill and the way in which we are dealing with the question of equality issues in the Charter from the spokesman of the Party which was formerly the Government.

Mr. Keeper: Where are they?

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman from the unofficial opposition asks "Where are they?" I ask that question as well. On the day that a Bill is being introduced to amend Canadian laws to ensure that they comply with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, there is not one member of the Official Opposition in the House. Let the record show that. Not even the official critic is here! The rat pack has disappeared. They are gnawing away somewhere in the building. They are certainly not in the Chamber, so let the record show that. But in any event, there has been some cheap—

Mr. Keeper: Here they come.

Mr. Crosbie: The rodents have their snouts coming from behind the curtains as a result of our call. I plead with them to take some interest in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

There has been the criticism that we are not moving quickly enough. As a matter of fact, the critic for the Official Opposition wrote to people across Canada suggesting that they should not appear before the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which the House has appointed and requested to do the job of looking at Equality Issues in Federal Law: A Discussion Paper. That paper has been referred to the subcommittee in order that it can take representations from the public across Canada, to involve them in consultation, dialogue and what should be the answers to the policy issues which are raised in the paper. The critic of the Official Opposition actually wrote to groups across Canada suggesting that they not appear before the committee or give their views to the committee because the committee was unnecessary. As he is a member of that committee, I suppose he is hoping that he will have an easy time of it if no one appears before it.

I want to point out that the project of reviewing federal statutes to discover if they comply with the Charter commenced on April 1, 1982. That is when the human rights law section was established in the Department of Justice. For over two years our predecessors were in charge of the operation of reviewing federal statutes to discover whether they complied with the Charter in so far as that could be determined. Of course, the courts will ultimately determine whether they do or do not comply.

I can assure the House that there were no concrete proposals left behind by the predecessor Government with respect to that question. As well, there were no answers left behind by that Government to the questions which are raised in the discussion paper. I would say to the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), who is the official critic for the Official Opposition, that if he has any answers he should give them in committee. If he can give quick answers to these intricate quesions, then the committee can report very quickly if it decides that his answers are correct and can be acted upon. As a matter of fact, he said that the Liberal Government was ready to implement laws. The peculiar thing is that the Department of Justice was instructed by the Liberal Government to examine issues and not to reach conclusions or suggest solutions. The Department was asked to examine the statutes of the Government of Canada to discover if they were in conflict, in any respect, with the Charter and not to provide conclusions as to how the policy questions which were involved were to be answered. I hope, if the Hon. Member for York Centre does have the answers, that he will present them to the committee and it can then report to us.

What is the Bill about? The Bill is to ensure that federal statutes which are obviously in conflict with the Charter will be amended so that the conflict will no longer exist. This Bill contains amendments to over 50 federal statutes. It is the result of the examination of more than 1,100 Canadian statutes.

Action has already been taken in certain areas. For example, the Criminal Code amendments, which are now under consideration by the Department of Justice, have already dealt with the issue of the abolishment of writs of assistance. Other initiatives are under way to ensure consistency with the Charter. As Members will know, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) introduced amendments to the Indian Act which will end discrimination, against Indian women. Those amendments are now before a standing committee of the House of Commons.

In addition, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) will be bringing forward amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. When that is done, certain provisions of that Act, which we feel are in breach of the Charter, will be amended.

The Chief Electoral Officer and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) are currently looking at the Canada Elections Act with respect to Charter concerns as well as other changes. That Act is now being considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Officials of the Departments of Finance and National Revenue are reviewing certain seizure provisions in the Income Tax Act and related statutes. When that legislation is brought before the House for amendment in connection with the next Budget, the legislation will also be amended in connection with any provisions of the legislation which we believe offend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Another statute which is being dealt with separately with reference to Charter concerns is the Emergency Powers Act. Obviously, that is a difficult area and a comprehensive review is required.

From time to time the Criminal Code of Canada will be amended and Charter issues will be part of that continuing review. By 1987 or 1988 we are aiming to have the project of reforming the Law Reform Commission study and the reformation of the Criminal Code of Canada complete. We intend to deal with Charter concerns in the ongoing Criminal Code review.

In the sphere of the promotion and protection of official languages of Canada, Charter concerns are also being looked at separately with reference to the present assessment of the Official Languages Act which is nearing completion. We expect to have a Bill before Parliament in the fall which will ensure that the Act is consistent with the Charter.

Of course, the last initiative is the one which I mentioned earlier, the document which is entitled Equality Issues in Federal Law: A Discussion Paper. That has been referred to the special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Charter guarantees equality, but it does not indicate how equality will be achieved. We believe that the people of Canada have a right to be heard on the complex policy issues which are outlined in this discussion paper and on other such issues which may be brought forward by anyone who appears before the committee. We think the public should be involved before changes are proposed in areas such as mandatory retirement and with respect to what should be done with pensions and annuities as a result of the fact that women generally live a longer life than men. The public should be involved in any decisions taken with respect to the question of gender discrimination—if that is the right description—in the armed services. The armed services have certain rules which do not permit persons to continue in the armed services who may be lesbian or homosexual. These are some of the difficult policy issues on which the committee will be asked to express an opinion.

In adopting this procedure, we are being the opposite of elitist. We are giving minorities a chance to be heard. I have heard some criticism, Mr. Speaker, from those who are active in women's groups and other groups that this is unnecessary. Well, it may be unnecessary for those particular persons. They are obviously interested in these kinds of public issues. They have studied them. They are at the forefront of the movements for women's rights, rights for the handicapped or visible minorities or whatever it may be. What we want to do through this committee, Mr. Speaker, is to involve the ordinary men and women of Canada in these issues. That is the purpose of having the committee. These persons have a right to be heard and we are giving them a chance to be heard.

There are some people who have said—I don't know how this twisted reasoning came about, how they could go from one supposition to the other—that we are permitting the majority to tyrannize the minorities. That would be a criticism, of course, of the whole parliamentary process and history certainly demonstrates that the reverse is true. It is Parliament, the House of Commons, which has responded to the needs of minorities throughout Canadian history. It is this House of Commons which responded to the needs of the minorities when the Charter and the revised Canadian Constitution was being considered in 1981-1982. The Charter itself was adopted through the parliamentary process. To suggest that we should not have a parliamentary committee consider equality issues which are controversial and raised by the Charter is certainly a peculiar bit of reasoning indeed.

I want to make it plain, Mr. Speaker, that we are not asking the committee for legal opinions. That is not what the committee was appointed for. The courts will give us the definitive legal opinions on matters which may arise under the Charter which are not clear or are in dispute. It is the Charter itself which raises the question, "What is reasonable in a free and democratic society?" We know that there are many situations of discrimination or discretion and choice throughout our legislation and our policy. The question is whether it is proper discrimination, discretion and choice. With respect to many of these issues the final question is going to be, "What is reasonable in a free and democratic society?"

In a free and democratic society, is a mandatory retirement age contrary or not to the Charter? On the face of it, it is contrary to the Charter because if there is a mandatory retirement age, it is a discrimination against those who are being forced to retire. The question then becomes, "Is that a reasonable rule in a free and democratic society"? That is not a legal question, Mr. Speaker. It is a question which anyone in the country can have an opinion on and your opinion, Mr. Speaker, is just as good as mine. Normally, I would not admit that, but today I do admit that anyone's opinion on issues like these are just as valuable as another person's. One doesn't have to be a Ph.D., a great lawyer at one of the bars of this country or particularly skilled in any direction to have a view as to whether mandatory retirement is a fair and reasonable rule in a free and democratic society.

Those are the kinds of questions which the committee, chaired by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), will have to seek answers to and make its recommendations. The other members of the committee, just for the record, are: the official critic for the Opposition, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan); the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the official justice critic for the New Democratic Party; the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes); the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch); the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins); and the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay). It is a seven-member committee and those members of the committee are going to have their hands full, Mr. Speaker, because these are pretty complex questions.

The paper sets out a number of programs and policies which are reflected in Canadian laws which may be flawed in light of the equality guarantees in the charter. We are asking the committee to get information and views from Canadians as to whether they think these laws should be changed and, if so, how they should be changed. It is the role of the committee in Parliament to make policy choices among the competing options, keeping in mind the charter guarantees. It is the views of individual Canadians which are essential if we are to make the best possible choices. This is for us to do, not the courts. We are not asking the parliamentary committee to do the job which the courts will be asked to do.

Before I forget, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on the record the names of some of the people in the Department of Justice who did the hard and gruelling work of examining 1100 statutes to see where conflicts might be, making recommendations, preparing this equality paper and preparing the legislation. They are Clare Beckton, who is on loan to us from Dalhousie University; John Scratch; Carole Johnson; Stan Cohen; Stephen Sharzer; Barbara Hough and Michèle Joubert; Lewis Seale looked after communications; Assistant Deputy Minister John Tait; and Martin Low, who is general counsel for human rights law in the Department.

The names of the drafters of this particular piece of legislation should be on the record as well and they are Guy Laurin and François Lafontaine. These are the people we have to thank for the hard work which has gone into this paper, Mr. Speaker, and it was very hard work. They had to deal with every other Department and agency in the Government of Canada in ways which are very complex.

I mentioned the criticism that somehow we were tyrannizing the minority by having this sub-committee. That is such a silly argument, I think it deals with itself. The committee is going to have to deal with the question of what is reasonable in a free and democratic society with reference to these particular issues. It is social policy which we are asking the committee to deal with. We are not suppressing minorities. The committee is giving the minorities a greater opportunity to put forward their views on these particular issues. In this Bill we are acting where it is wise to act. Through the discussion paper we are consulting where it is wise and necessary to consult.

With respect to the Department's review of the statutes, I am not claiming that this is some stroke of genius of mine. We have only been in the Government for the last six months. It was the decision of our Liberal predecessors, with which I agree, that the statutes should be reviewed based on the assumption that it was preferable to change questionable legislation rather than leave it to individual litigants to assert their rights in court. That involves costs, delay and hardships. So where it is clear that legislation is questionable, we are now changing it so it does not have to be challenged in court, and there are a lot of areas where it is not clear.

Of course, we want to avoid disruption of important government programs because of adverse court decisions. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in trying to decide whether or not some particular provision of the legislation is au fait with the Charter, there are very few decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada to go by. So it is a difficult proposition because we do not have many precedents in Canada to go by, although you can look at the U.S. precedents for some assistance.

The provisions proposed for amendment here are clearly contrary to Section 15 and do not involve complex social and economic concerns. The complex concerns will be dealt with by the subcommittee. It is also worth keeping in mind that the Charter does not dictate solutions in this area. It sets certain minimum standards and our committee is going to have to consider taking those standards into account in deciding what substantive policy should be reflected in our laws.

What are some of the provisions dealt with in this legislation? We deal with powers of entry in federal statutes. Do not think this is an unimportant piece of legislation because it is not. It deals with many important areas. Powers of entry in federal statutes such as the National Defence Act and the Canadian Human Rights Act are dealt with. There are also provisions to ensure that all Bills the Government presents to the House, and all regulations, are examined to ensure that they are consistent with the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Charter.

This is only one part of the over-all approach I described to try and ensure Charter conformity. There are a number of federal statutes which presently authorize entry to premises without a warrant, and other places, to ensure compliance with the regulations or evidence of contravention of statutes. The issue here is whether the guarantee in the Charter against unreasonable search and seizure in Section 8 is violated by these provisions.

In this Bill we are treating differently those powers of entry which authorize an inspection as against those which authorize a search. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in a routine matter an inspector will come to see if you are complying with some statutory regulation. It might have to do with agricultural or dairy products, or they might be coming in to examine the books. In those kinds of cases we believe a warrant should not be required unless the inspection is taking place in a private dwelling. If it does take place in a private dwelling, there should be a warrant. People who work in closely regulated activity expect to be inspected regularly, but there has always been a distinction between dwelling places and other premises.

So there are amendments in this Bill to statutes such as the Fish Inspection Act, the Canada Grain Act and the Textile Labelling Act which provide for a warrant when you are making a non-consensual entry for an inspection. That means that the person whose premises you are inspecting has not consented. A search will occur if an entry is made to seek evidence of a contravention of a statute. We are amending those federal statutes which contain search powers to provide that you must have a warrant when you wish to enter a building to seek evidence of a contravention of a statute.

We also spell out when a warrant will not be required. If a delay in obtaining a warrant will result in danger to human life and safety, or in the loss or destruction of evidence, then a warrant would not be required. The courts will, of course, have the opportunity to review whether or not those kinds of circumstances existed. There are changes to the Fisheries Act, the Environmental Contaminants Act and the Migratory Birds Convention Act in connection with inspection powers in those Acts. So the purpose of these amendments is to provide for reasonable searches, but in the meantime to provide that legitimate inspection functions in agriculture, fisheries and the environment will not be hindered.

There are important amendments to the National Defence Act. For example, the major changes provide for a greater degree of equivalence between the code of service discipline and the criminal law. I would just give one example. The amendments provide that any accused may have the benefit of any defence available under the Criminal Code or any other federal law if the person is being tried on a charge under the code of service discipline. That is a major change. The legislation will end double jeopardy. It will permit an accused to plead that he has previously been acquitted or convicted or punished by a service tribunal, a civil court in Canada or by a court of competent criminal jurisdiction in another country. That was not the case before. I will not mention some of the other changes because of the quick passage of time, and I do not want to be too long in introducing the Bill.

There are amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which reflect the Canadian tradition of procedural fairness. These changes have to do with a situation where the Commission finds a complaint to be substantiated and then appoints a tribunal to look into that particular complaint. Since the Commission presently makes a decision whether the complaint is substantiated and also appoints the tribunal, there is a possible perception that the Commission is making a finding of guilt before requesting the appointment of a tribunal. Now, under the new procedures and these amendments, the Human Rights Commission will screen complaints and determine whether a tribunal should be appointed. But we provide for an independent office, the president of the tribunal, who is independent of the rest of the Commission and he will now appoint a tribunal from persons listed and it will be done independently and appear to be done independently. It will give a better perception than the present provisions provide. By the way, the Human Rights Commission has been supportive of that amendment.

I am glad to see the official critic of the NDP is here even though his Official Opposition counterpart is not.

The Bill also deals with a number of areas where, quite clearly, equality provisions of the Charter were being violated; changing references to members of one sex, where there is no justification, to exclude members of the opposite sex; changing words such as "wife" to "spouse", "widow" to "surviving spouse", in various acts such as the Canada Shipping Act and so on. There is another group of amendments which deal with age. In the Canada Corporations Act the age 21 is replaced by age 18 as their criterion for pilotage and so on.

The Minister of Justice already has an obligation under the law to examine Bills and regulations to ensure they are consistent with the Bill of Rights. I am referring to the Bill of Rights enacted under the late great John Diefenbaker when his Government was in power. These amendments provide a similar obligation on the Minister of Justice to examine regulations and Government Bills to ensure they are consistent with the Charter. That is new. They also provide for the co-ordination of the examination of regulations under the Statutory Instruments Act, the Department of Justice Act and the Bill of Rights.

Then there are a whole set of other miscellaneous amendments. For example, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has the power to suspend or cancel leases or licences. There is a change being made there. The right of the Minister to order forfeiture is abolished. There are amendments to the Immigration Act to provide that when there is an inquiry of an adjudicator, and we heard of such as inquiry today, it will be held in public unless it is established that the person concerned or some Government interest would be adversely affected. The bar against action for false imprisonment in the Canada Shipping Act is removed and there are other amendments of that type.

Let me again emphasize that this Bill is not put forward as our sole initiative in ensuring consistency of federal laws with the Charter. There will be many other pieces of Government legislation in this session dealing with Charter issues. Of course, as decisions are made on the issues that come before the courts, we will have to act. One example which comes to mind is with respect to the Customs Tariff item which, about 10 or 12 days ago, was found by the federal Court of Appeal to be contrary to the Charter provisions with respect to the concept of immoral and indecent when people bring goods into the country. The House will have to amend the customs legislation in that respect.

As a result of court decisions, in the future the House will have to make changes in legislation from time to time. We also recognize that there may be aspects of federal legislation that we missed in this review. It is a continuing process to ensure conformity with the Charter. New problems will be identified from time to time. I have an open mind on the need for further changes and in connection with the nature of changes that we or other Members of the House may propose.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to move second reading of this Bill. I am a bit disappointed at the reaction of the Official Opposition to the steps we have taken, particularly since they were exactly the steps that they were going to take. They have not offered any suggestions for any different steps in the last six months. However, their ranks are rife with hypocrisy and hypocrisy is often their standard on issues such as this.

I was shocked by the actions taken by the Member for York Centre. As I mentioned earlier, he had the audacity to write to groups across the country suggesting that they not take an interest in this matter and not appear before a House of Commons subcommittee. I have never heard of any Members of the House writing to groups across the country trying to persuade them not to appear before a committee that the House had decided to set up. I am happy to realize that no one has paid any attention to his advice in that respect. I am delighted that other members of his Party, such as the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), are demonstrating more interest in the matter than is the official critic. I know the Hon. Member for Mount Royal will be following the issues closely.

If the official critic for the Opposition can give answers to the issues raised in the discussion paper or can persuade the subcommittee to accept some good, sound, sensible policy advice, then the committee can make interim reports from time to time and we will be pleased to prepare the necessary amendments. The subcommittee has been asked to report at the end of August. It may find that it needs more time. If so it will have only to report to the Government and House asking for an extension of time. It can make an interim report and go on to deal with the matter in more depth.

Evidence of the seriousness with which we take this matter is shown by the calibre of the Members that we on this side have appointed to the committee. The Chairman himself is a distinguished lawyer with a great interest in this particular subject. We have appointed the Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), who is one of our women Members. I suppose I am allowed to mention that without being held to be discriminatory. We also have the Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes), who is another of the Canadian women who were elected to the House in the last election of September, 1984. We on this side of the House are very glad to have a very healthy representation of women. We want more, of course, and will have more as the years go by. Two of the five Members whom we have on this subcommittee are women members of the PC caucus. We notice that the Opposition have appointed all male Members to represent them on the committee, although the Hon. Member for Mount Royal will be appearing in substitution.

Mr. Nunziata: We're only entitled to one member. You only allowed one.

Mr. Crosbie: You are only entitled to one member, but do you not trust the women members of your caucus?

Mr. Nunziata: The official critic is our member.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if there is only one member allowed from the Official Opposition, surely they could appoint one of the lady Members if they feel I am making a valid point. Apparently the rat pack does not trust the lady members of their caucus. The official critic for the New Democratic Party is on the committee and I know he will make a distinguished contribution.

We have two other distinguished Members from our side of the House on this committee. They are going to give it their all. They want to work co-operatively with the Members of the Opposition. I am sure we will have great co-operation from them in travelling across Canada so that anyone who feels he has a contribution to make or an opinion to offer will have the opportunity to do so. I would like to tell the people of Canada who might be watching now that they do not have to have a Ph.D., a BA, an LLB, an MA or a B.Sc. You do not have to be a Liberal, Conservative or New Democrat. You do not have to be anything in particular. All you have to do is be interested and you can come before this committee and give your views on the issues it is raising. Believe me, there are many interesting issues that will be discussed before that committee.

I think I have gone on long enough, Mr. Speaker; I know other Members are anxious to speak. I look forward to hearing from the committee when it gives its first report. I know it will be a non-partisan committee engaged in the non-partisan activity of protecting the rights of Canadians and giving us its views on how the Charter affects Canadians, particularly with respect to questions of equality, and pointing out how we should deal with some of the esoteric issues that are raised in the discussion paper. I can promise that once the committee reports we will move as quickly as possible to reach decisions on the matters it reports to us and then proceed with additional legislation. This will not be the last legislation to ensure compliance with the Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills:

Bill C-34, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1985; and

Bill C-35, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1986.

STATUTE LAW (CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions. Under Standing Order 35(2) you are entitled, if you are going to be speaking for the Party, to speak for 40 minutes. There are no questions for the first three speakers. I can recognize you as the first official speaker, or I can recognize the Hon. Member for York-South Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps there might be a disposition within the House, if there is unanimous consent, that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) may entertain a question, notwithstanding the purport of S.O. 35.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think there would be a great opportunity for you to bring that matter to the attention of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr.

Crosbie). However, we must proceed under rule 35(2) today. The first three speakers have 40 minutes with no questions. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for York-South Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You are entirely right in saying that there is no provision under our rules for questions to the three first speakers who have a 40-minute period for their speeches. However, I thought I heard an Hon. Member requesting that you ask for unanimous consent. With all due respect, I think the Chair must ask if there is consent. If there is not, of course, we will forgo the questioning. However, there might be consent, and I would plead with the Chair to ask whether there is consent or not.

Mr. Baker: The Minister is leaving. He's afraid to answer questions.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Minister has left the House. We will forgo that opportunity at this time and perhaps the Hon. Member could bring it up with the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) in order to change the rules under Standing Order 35(2) to permit a question and answer period after 40-minute speeches.

Mr. Dingwall: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It concerns this ruling, I cannot recognize the Hon. Member. I have already mentioned that.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to question your ruling but I thought that a Member has a right to ask for unanimous consent in order to question a Minister who has just made a very important statement which was flippant in its content. Perhaps the Speaker would be so accommodating and put forward the question to see if there is unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, indeed, the record will show that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) did not have the common decency to remain in the House to listen to Hon. Members speak on Bill C-27.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is correct that it is a tradition for a Minister to stay in the House to hear the critics reply to an initial speech introducing a piece of legislation. Regrettably in this instance, the Minister of Justice is now briefing the Prime Minister. He was supposed to do that at 3.15 today but he gave the speech that I was going to give so that I could be in committee with both critics.

I think everyone can understand that in these circumstances the Minister of Justice came here to give a speech but regrets that he is not here. I certainly will be listening with great attentiveness to the speeches given by both critics.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what the Parliamentary Secretary has had to say, it is obvious where the priorities of the Minister lie. The Minister had the unmitigated gall and audacity—

Mr. Mazankowski: Where were you?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion is that Bill C-27, an act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to comment on the fact that the Minister has shown disinterest in this particular piece of legislation, but the Minister himself—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will the Hon. Member please carry on with his speech on the Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Listen, you clown on the other side who does not know anything!

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a point of order to explain the absence of a colleague. That Member was not in the House when the same Member for—I forget the name of his riding—pointed out that our critic was not in the House. So he explains—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member was in the Chamber when the Minister was here. He understands what is going on in the House. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has the floor for debate on Bill C-27.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I fully intend to debate Bill C-27. It is important to note with respect to Bill C-27 that the Minister is not here. As I indicated, it shows a lack of interest on behalf of the Minister of Justice and I did intend—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the Hon. Member keeps sounding off, I think he should explain where he was for the first three-quarters of the speech by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Mazankowski: Where is the critic?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. This is exactly why I do not want to hear debate about who is in the House and what is happening here. The debate is on Bill C-27. The Hon. Member has been around for six or seven months and I hope he understands the situation. I do not want to get into this wrangle of who is in the House and who is not in the House.

I hope the Hon. Member will take part in the debate in which he has 40 minutes. He has 40 minutes on Bill C-27. Approximately five minutes have been deducted from that since the points of order have come up. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston has the floor on Bill C-27.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order, not to speak on Bill C-27. My point of order is that the Minister of Justice, in his opening comments, commented on the absence of the official critic for the Official Opposition. He also commented on the fact that I was absent for the first five minutes—

Mr. Speyer: Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can confirm that it was because there was an urgent meeting of the Justice Committee to deal with some very urgent matters.

My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that you permitted the Minister of Justice to comment on the absence of the official critic for the Official Opposition. Now you are denying the Opposition the same right to comment. In fairness, what is good for the goose is good for the gander. We should have every right to comment on his absence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The goose and the gander have had their say. The Hon. Member has the floor to speak on Bill C-27.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, could I have an indication as to how much time I have to speak on this Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member may carry on. He has plenty of time and I will give adequate warning. I will give the Hon. Member the full time that he requires. He may carry on with his debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Can I have an assurance that the time occupied by the points of order will not be deducted from my time?

Mr. Andre: Get up and give a speech or sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has until 4.36.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The official critic for the Liberal Party has considerable interest in this Bill, considerable interest in the whole question of equality rights and considerable interest in Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It was totally unfair of the Minister of Justice to comment on the fact that the Hon. Member is absent. At least the official critic for the Opposition is monitoring the situation. The Minister of Justice does not even have the common decency to stay and listen to Opposition critics explain their position on this Bill.

Mr. Taylor: You haven't said anything yet.

Mr. Nunziata: It is obvious that Hon. Members opposite are very sensitive about this Bill. It is quite obvious why they are sensitive.

It is also interesting to note that the Minister of Justice spent a great deal of time defending Bill C-27. He was correct in doing so because, in my respectful submission, Bill C-27 is quite simply a cop-out. It is a cowardly act on behalf of the Government because it is afraid to make tough decisions that are necessary with respect to equality in this country. Rather than providing the necessary leadership, the Government has introduced a Bill that basically does very little. In effect, all the Bill does—and is there any wonder why the Minister had to go on the defensive because he had nothing good to talk about with respect to this Bill—is change the language in the various pieces of legislation. I believe the Minister indicated there are about 50 pieces. It changes "husband" and "wife" to "spouse". It changes the words "son" and "daughter" to "child". What it does not do is address the very important issues facing this country concerning equality rights.

• (1600)

This Government had a choice. This Government could have taken definitive action as a result of the extensive audit initiated by the previous Government and as a result of the work done by the Justice Department to indicate the inequities and parts of the various pieces of legislation that do not conform to the Charter. The Government could have made a decision on issues such as mandatory retirement, sexual orientation, combat roles in the Canadian Armed Forces and whether those roles should be open to women. But this Government refused on the pretext that it had to consult and on the pretext that it wanted more information from the Canadian people.

In my submission the Government was afraid to lead, it was afraid to make decisions. Instead, it opted for a consultation process which, in my view, is a cop out. It appears the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are afraid to make those very important decisions. The Government is afraid to alienate any individual in society. Therefore it has decided to put off the issue of equality rights for many months, if not years. April 17, 1985 will be upon us in a few short weeks. The supreme law in this country, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, will be law. No federal majority, not even the Conservative majority we have today, can over-rule the supreme law of this country.

Of course, there is the over-ride provision in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but I would hope this Government will not exercise that over-ride position, as the Government of Quebec has done consistently since 1982.

What does Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provide? There are 46 words in Section 15, a mere 46 words, but the importance of those words is indeed tremendous. Section 15(1) reads as follows:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, or mental or physical disability.

That will become law on April 17. At the Constitutional Conference of 1982, as a result of compromises and considerable conflict resulting from the compromises, it was decided to put off the implementation or proclamation of Section 15 for three years. This was in order to give the federal Government and the 10 provincial Governments the opportunity to audit their respective legislation and there was the understanding that that legislation would be brought into conformity with Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

What has happened, Mr. Speaker? You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that there were certain Conservative provincial Governments that fought tooth and nail for the entrenchment of rights and freedoms in the Constitution. Those same Governments are continuing to procrastinate and delay and are doing everything in their power to obstruct the implementation of this section.

Specifically, what have the provinces done since 1982? We know the province from which I come, Ontario, which has a Conservative Government for a few short weeks longer—

Mr. Shields: You dreamer.

Mr. Nunziata: —has put together a 400 page document. Has that province taken definitive action? No, Mr. Speaker. The Ontario Government has not amended its legislation to conform with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It will be a long time before we get some definitive action out of that Government as long as it continues to be the Government of Ontario.

What has Quebec done? Quebec claims a blanket exemption from the Charter of Rights and Freedoms for all of its laws because of certain conflicts that existed at the time, and Hon. Members are aware that Quebec was not part of the constitutional accord.

Much to the credit of the Province of New Brunswick, that province has passed a law to eradicate the worst clashes between provincial laws and the Charter. I am proud to say that Government has taken definitive action and it was supportive of the Charter right from the start.

Mr. Valcourt: That was Premier Hatfield.

Mr. Nunziata: What is happening in Alberta, Newfoundland and Saskatchewan? Precious little is happening in those provinces. All they are doing is what this federal Government is proposing, and that is to encourage further debate on this important subject.

What has British Columbia, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island done? Those Governments have done absolutely nothing. This suggests to me and to the people of Canada that those Governments are not sincerely interested in or concerned about equality rights in Canada.

What has the federal Government done? As I indicated previously, the previous federal Government initiated an audit of the approximately 1,100 federal statutes in order to determine the extent to which those statutes would contravene the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It was the intention of the previous Government to make the tough decisions and to implement the laws that would change the old laws to bring federal legislation in conformity with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Unfortunately for the issue of equality in this country, the Conservative Government came to power on September 4 with an overwhelming majority, with a mandate from the Canadian people to make decisions, with a mandate from the Canadian people to provide the leadership that they were promised. What do we have, Mr. Speaker? We have a total lack of leadership with respect to the issue of equality rights in this country. This Government has opted basically to do nothing. This Government has opted to force the minority groups, the women, the visible minorities, the young, the disadvantaged and the disabled to fight their battles again when all these groups in 1982 came forward and fought. They fought hard. They got their Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They thought the battle was fought and won. They thought the wounds of discrimination that have existed for so long were beginning to heal. They thought that discrimination was coming to a rapid and quick end. What has happened? This Government is intentionally reopening those wounds of discrimination. This insensitive Conservative Government is forcing those groups, the women, the visible minorities, the disadvantaged, the young, the old and the Indian groups to come forward and fight their battles again. That is totally unfair.

I agree wholeheartedly with my colleague from York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who said to those groups that this Government is not interested in the issue of equality. If you want to ensure and protect your right, Mr. Speaker, you must go to court and let the courts determine what equality means. Let the courts define what Section 15 means.

Those people have been provided with no alternative. This Government is continuing to procrastinate on these very fundamental and very important issues facing the country. The sad part is that the Government is forcing these people to litigate, which is not a desirable consequence. We, the 282 elected Members of Parliament, should be making the decisions, not the courts of law. We represent all the good people of Canada and we should be the advocates of civil rights, human rights and equality. We should protect the minority groups. It is the 282 individuals in this House of Commons who should be making the decision, not having the courts defining Section 15 in a purely legalistic manner.

These people have no option but to go to court. There is no option but to have a court of law make a decision to interpret equality in their particular case based on a particular set of circumstances. What makes matters worse is that the Government refuses to establish a fund. It will not put money aside to assist these people, who for the most part are not affluent, so that they can litigate.

The Minister indicated that he will think about it, but he has not provided money. It costs money to litigate. The Minister is forcing these people to litigate, but is not providing them with money. It is a strange and ironic situation. Equal opportunity to litigate does not exist. The poor minority groups do not have that opportunity. If someone affluent wants to exercise his right and have a legal determination of what equality means in his particular circumstance, he can have that opportunity. He has the resources. He can go to court and get a legal interpretation.

The Government has provided us with a do-nothing piece of legislation. It refuses to provide leadership. It has established a subcommittee of the Justice Committee, a travelling road show, a make-work program for the Tory back-benchers. It will go across this country to again hear the interest groups, the minority groups. It will hear what they have already said.

I have a bit of advice for Members opposite. All they need do is look at the minutes of the various committees which dealt with the Constitution, including the Justice Committee in 1982. Read what those groups had to say. What they tell the committee today will be the same as they told the committee three years ago. They want equality, an end to discrimination. Members opposite can save a lot of time and effort by simply reading Hansard and reading the minutes of the Justice Committee two, three or four years ago to see what these groups had to say.

What could possibly be expected of this travelling road show, this subcommittee? It is a farce and a camouflage because this Government is too cowardly—

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member might indicate why, if this travelling committee is a farce, his Party will be participating in the committee?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is debate. I know the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will have the opportunity to reply.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that that is not a point of order, I think it is important to reply to the question of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I will tell him why we intend to participate in this committee. It is because the Government has decided that it wants to be the champion of popular causes. It wants to champion the views of the majority in this country. Notwithstanding our profound disagreement with the procedure that is being followed by the Government, we want to monitor this committee. We want to speak out for the minority groups in this country. We will again go to bat for them, as we did a few short years ago. This committee will soon be hitting the road. It will be packing its gear.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member expressing the views of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) or his own views?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would have expected the Hon. Member to know better. This troupe will be travelling across the country. What can result from this exercise in futility? As Shelagh Day, a community activist, said, you do not define minority rights by majoritarian views and values. That is not the way to do things.

What will happen as a result of this committee? The majority of Canadians might say that they do not believe in mandatory retirement. There may be a minority which says that mandatory retirement is necessary. They might talk about combat roles for women in the Armed Forces. The majority of Canadians might believe that women should not be enlisted in the Armed Forces. Precious little comfort that is to the women who want equality in the Armed Forces. Precious comfort that is to the women who want the right to get involved in combat roles.

What is this committee going to do? Will the committee say that because the majority of Canadians say no, therefore equality does not mean that women are entitled to get involved in combat roles in the Armed Forces; or is the Government going to say that, notwithstanding what the majority says, it believes women should have full equality when it comes to the Armed Forces? Given its actions, I believe this Government will opt for the former rather than the latter option. It is afraid to offend people. It believes that minority rights in this country are defined by majoritarian views and values.

The Charter is important because it involves the protection of individual rights. Although Canada has one of the best records anywhere in terms of safeguarding the rights of its citizens, we must never become complacent. In many places around the world it is a sad fact that rights are too often proclaimed and too seldom protected. Countries that have constitutions with glowing affirmations of human rights are often the same countries where violations of basic rights are an every day occurrence. It has been said many times that the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. The protection of rights is indeed one of the most solemn duties we face in a free and democratic society.

As I indicated previously, on April 17, 1982 the Constitution Act was proclaimed in this country. A tremendous step forward was taken at the time in terms of protecting the rights of future generations. The Act provided for the patriation of the British North America Act from the United Kingdom but, more importantly, it included a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In my respectful opinion that Charter is second to none in the world.

• (1620)

The patriation of our Constitution was largely a symbolic gesture since Canada has long been regarded as a sovereign and independent nation. However, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was intended to have a more direct impact on our daily lives. Why was the Charter necessary? The answer is quite simply that Canadians wanted their rights enshrined in the Constitution. It was recognized at the time that full equality was not a reality in this country. In a great many cases only lip service was paid to the concept.

We wanted a Charter because we as a nation believe in freedom and equality and we believe profoundly in justice. The Charter is merely and affirmation of that fact. It is a statement of principles entrenched in our most basic law. It is intended to protect individual rights and freedoms each and every day as part of a living, breathing constitutional document.

As Hon. Members know, when the Constitution Act was proclaimed in 1982, the implementation of this part of it was delayed for three years. That was one of the political compromises that was necessary in order to entrench the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our Constitution. April 17 of this year could be a more historic and momentous day if the Government opposite would take the definitive action necessary to ensure that full equality becomes a reality in this country.

The implementation of Section 15 attests to our full maturity as a free and democratic nation. The words of Section 15 form the core of one of the most significant parts of the resolution, a part that former Prime Minister Trudeau called the people's package. Canadians have cause to be proud of this Charter because it is indeed one of the best in the world. It is the legacy of Mr. Trudeau, a testament to his political courage and determination.

Much more could have and should have been done by this Government to enshrine full equality in the laws of Canada. There was a great deal of hope and anticipation on April 17, 1982 when the constitutional resolution was proclaimed by the Queen. We all recall that very momentous and historic day.

I sense none of that same mood as we approach the date for the proclamation of equality rights. At the end of three years, Canadians were expecting the federal Government to present a Bill containing the necessary amendments to the laws that fail to comply with the provisions of the Charter. What Canadians expected and what the Government is offering through Bill C-27 are two different things. Many laws, both provincial and federal, still to this day contravene the equality rights provisions contained in Section 15.

In some respects, the foot dragging on equality rights on the part of the federal and provincial Tories should not come as a surprise. As I indicated previously, five of the Tory provincial Governments opposed the constitutional resolution and fought against it tooth and nail. Sterling Lyon of Manitoba was particularly adamant that there should be no constitutional guarantees of any rights whatsoever. There were many supporters of his point of view among Conservative Members of this House, many of whom are still here today. I take comfort in the knowledge that Hansard faithfully recorded their remarks. Indeed, it must be difficult for these Members who opposed the Constitution to witness their own Tory Government carrying on where Mr. Trudeau left off with respect to enshrining equality rights provisions, albeit the Government is carrying on meagrely and modestly, as shown by this proposed legislation.

We all know that the dinosaurs within the Tory caucus were brought into line once a deal had been struck with nine of the ten provinces. One of the aspects of that deal between the federal Government and the provincial Governments was the three-year delay. Those Governments are continuing to procrastinate and delay. Where there should have been substantive measures put forward, we have a Bill that falls desperately short of the mark. Bill C-27 falls far short of what is necessary in order to guarantee full equality in the Constitution. The Bill constitutes an exercise in language reform rather than a true application of the spirit of the Charter.

The policy questions that were raised in the document entitled Equality Issues in Federal Law are the policy questions that should have been decided by the Government. This legislation does not address age discrimination as it relates to mandatory retirement or sexual discrimination as it relates to pension contributions for women in the Public Service. It does not address the issue of whether requirements relating to the length of employment or maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act should remain greater than requirements for regular benefits. It does not deal with the issue of whether combat roles in the Canadian Armed Forces should be open to women. It does not address the question of whether mental or physical disability ought to be a bar to immigration in some circumstances. It does not come to grips with whether native Canadians should remain effectively excluded from participation in the Canada Pension Plan because participation is tied to income as defined in the Income Tax Act and earnings on a reserve are non-taxable. Bill C-27 does not deal with whether persons should continue to be excluded from the Canadian Armed Forces on the basis of their sexual orientation.

There are many, many unresolved issues in many areas of discrimination based on race, ethnic origin and physical disability that remain completely untouched by Bill C-27. In many respects, April 17, 1985 will be a sad day for justice and equality in this country.

The Government could have corrected the inequities and injustices that continue to exist in our free and democratic society. It could have dealt bigotry and racism a body blow. It could have told the provinces to bring their legislation into line and it could have led by example. Instead, it has left all of the tough decisions out of Bill C-27. It has put them off into yet another subcommittee and discussion paper for further review and further public hearings.

I was not present in the House three years ago as were many Members opposite. They know about the many hours of debate that took place with respect to the Constitution and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They know and will remember well representatives of dozens and dozens of different organizations coming to Ottawa to make their views known. Now the Tories want to repeat a significant portion of that process. The purpose of this exercise is questionable but we all know what the results will be. The results will be more procrastination and more delay. Delay is a key word because justice delayed is justice denied, and justice is being denied to all those groups that are suffering from discrimination in this country.

• (1630)

The Tories are paralysed with fear about doing the wrong thing. So they do nothing so as not to offend anyone. They are afraid to lose a seat or two. They are afraid to go to bat for minority groups. They are prepared to take on popular causes, but they are afraid to go to bat for the people who are suffering. We all know that consultation is important. It is a vital element in the legislative process. Governments should not take precipitous or hasty action for the sake of appearing decisive. That was the fatal flaw of the nine-month Tory Government. Neither should Governments let consultation be an end in itself. A balance must be struck, otherwise the consultative process becomes like molasses in the decision-making machinery of Government. It gums up the works and nothing gets done.

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate the serious concerns which my Party has with respect to this legislation. We will, of course, support the legislation because it will tidy up some of the language in the legislation which now exists. However, we will continue to press for full equality. We want to ensure that equality becomes a reality in the very near future. We disagree profoundly with the procedure which is being proposed by the Conservative Government. If it were truly interested and sincere about equality, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) would be in the House to listen, and the Government would take the definitive action which is so necessary.

I look forward to further discussions with respect to this legislation in committee. I am sure that other members of the Official Opposition will have more to say on Bill C-27.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I had the honour four years ago, as a relatively new and young Member of Parliament, to sit on an historic committee. That committee was the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada. That committee was charged with the responsibility of reviewing a proposed constitutional resolution and hearing not only witnesses with respect to the proposed Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but also the provinces and other concerned groups about the constitutional process.

I recall vividly the fact that witness after witness came before the committee—whether they were representatives of native people, minorities, women's groups, or the disabled—to urge the Government to strengthen the resolution which had been tabled in the House. That resolution was strengthened. The equality rights section of the Constitution was improved significantly.

The constitutional package came into effect on April 17, 1982. It was felt that Governments needed three years, until April 17 of this year, to bring their legislation into compliance with the provisions of Section 15, the section which deals with equality rights. We waited three years, but I would suggest that when this Government finally moved on January 31 it was a black day for human rights in Canada. What it constituted was a bitter betrayal of the hopes of women and minority groups in Canada who had hoped that the Government would take its responsibilities seriously, not simply to review legislation, but where the review showed that the legislation was in conflict with the fundamental principles of equality, that the Government would bring forward changes.

I would like deal briefly with the arguments which were made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I appreciate that he is a new Member and that he was not present for some of the debates which took place subsequent to the passage of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As Members, we have been witness to the most extraordinary rewriting of history which this Chamber has probably ever seen. That Member stood and attacked the Government for refusing to move on issues of concern to minorities. He attacked the Government for listening to the majority and refusing to heed the concerns of minorities, including the disabled and the minority which is discriminated against on the basis of sexual orientation.

I would like to remind Members of what really happened and of the history of the Liberal Party after the passage of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The history of his Party, when it was in Government, was a history of explicitly and deliberately denying the claims to full equality for the groups which the Hon. Member for York South-Weston now stands up self-righteously to defend. What is the record? I would like to give the House a couple of examples.

A special parliamentary committee was struck to look into discrimination against the disabled. That committee tabled in the House a report which was entitled Obstacles. That report very eloquently documented the history of abuse and inequality. I would like to salute the members of that committee. In my view they did an outstanding job of bringing to the attention of Parliament and the Canadian people discrimination, both economic and social, against the physically and mentally disabled people of Canada.

That report was tabled in 1981. I would remind Members of the House that the Liberal Party was in Government from 1981 until 1984. I would ask the Hon. Member for York South-Weston—who has attacked the Conservatives for doing nothing to assist the disabled in the country—where was he and his Party when the disabled people said that it was time for action? For him to suggest that they were prepared to take action to remedy the historic injustices against the disabled, when they did nothing for three years after the tabling of the report, surely to goodness Canadian people must recognize that something is wrong.

The Hon. Member for York South-Weston said that this Government was copping out on human rights and fundamental justice. He accused the Government of listening to the views of the majority. Both of those criticisms, Mr. Speaker, may be well founded but, I recall vividly, as a member of the Justice Committee—and the Hon. Member suggested we should look at the records of the justice committee—hearing the Liberal Minister of Justice, Mark MacGuigan—who got his reward in the Federal Court—refuse to move on amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which would strengthen the protection of minorities in this country. I proposed those amendments to strengthen the Canadian Human Rights Act, but the Minister of Justice of the day said, no, there was not a consensus of the majority to move forward on those amendments. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston says that the Tories are waiting for the majority, that they are abandoning the minorities to the will of the majority. Where on earth was he when his Minister of Justice stood up before the Justice Committee and made exactly that argument? He said he was not prepared to amend the human rights legislation because the majority was not ready. What utter hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, on the part of that Party and that Hon. Member.

I would like to deal with some of the concerns which we in this Party have with respect to the process which the Government has undertaken in the area of equality rights. We strongly support, and historically have always supported, the concept of a charter of rights entrenched in the Constitution. We fundamentally disagree with the inclusion of Section 33 of the Charter which allows any Government, provincial or federal, to override the most basic and fundamental rights in this country at the stroke of a legislative pen. However, we recognize that in the contest between the judiciary and Parliaments, as former Justice Tom Berger put it so eloquently in his book Fragile Freedoms, "Judges may not always be wiser than politicians but they should be able to stand more firmly against angry winds blowing in the streets". It was that philosophy which very much guided this Parliament and members of this Party in supporting the concept of an entrenched Charter of Rights.

Following the passage of the Charter, one would have hoped that the Government would be moving forward very quickly to review legislation—there were some 1100 federal statutes and many more regulations and policies—to bring it into compliance not just with Section 15 of the Charter of Rights but with the other section of the Charter as well. I note that the spokesperson for the Official Opposition was silent with respect to all of those other vital sections of the Charter: freedom of association, freedom of speech, freedom in terms of the media and fundamental legal rights. I would have hoped that this Government, in reviewing its legislation, would have recognized that many of its statutes and policies conflict, and conflict seriously, with the values set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and not just in Section 15 but in other sections as well.

I might note as well, Mr. Speaker, that it was not until January of 1984, some two years after the Charter of Rights came into effect, that the Liberal Government finally got around to starting its review of equality rights. One must question, then, the seriousness with which it approached that very fundamental review process. But the review was undertaken and on January 31, Bill C-27 was tabled in the House of Commons along with a discussion paper. The Bill is a thick Bill but there is very little of substance in the legislation. The fact is that in issue after issue that the Government should have addressed directly by way of legislation, it has copped out. It has abrogated its responsibility and has called for further study.

What does the Bill do, Mr. Speaker? There are a whole series of changes to the legislation dealing with inspection and powers of entry and search. I do not believe anyone would disagree with the direction the Government is taking in those sections. Then there are some proposed changes to the National Defence Act. I would note that the National Defence Act was the subject of extensive challenge in the Supreme Court of Canada and the majority of the Supreme Court in the decision in McKay v. the Queen upheld the validity of that Act. But that was before the Charter of Rights came into effect. A concurring minority of judges in the McKay decision found that the provisions of the National Defence Act were inoperative as being in breach of the Bill of Rights in so far as they purported to deal with defences which might not have a military connection. One would have thought and hoped that this Government would have been at least prepared to strike down those provisions of the National Defence Act which permit the trial of members of the Armed Forces, civilians and others without any kind of military connection for the offence. One would have hoped, in short, Mr. Speaker, that the Government would at least have gone so far as to adopt the reasoning of Mr. Justice McIntyre in the McKay decision. There are some of us who found the very powerful dissent of former Chief Justice Laskin persuasive. However, at the very least, one would have hoped that this Government would have accepted that far more fundamental changes in the National Defence Act were required than the changes which were brought forward in this Bill. Certainly, we will look forward to hearing from witnesses from the Department of National Defence as well as from the Department of Justice on that question.

The amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which restore some semblance of independence to the process of appointment of tribunals are certainly unobjectionable. I would have hoped the Government would have gone further and accepted the recommendations of the Special Committee on Discrimination Against Visible Minorities in the report Equality Now! and had the Canadian Human Right Commissin reporting directly to Parliament, but that was not to be.

There are amendments as well, Mr. Speaker, in some other relatively non-controversial areas, although I would note that one amendment to the Immigration Act of 1976 gives rise to very serious questions. Under the proposals in Bill C-27, an adjudicator in an immigratin hearing is given for the first time discretionary power to decide if a hearing is going to be open to the public. In the past it has always been the prerogative of the immigrant to ask for a closed hearing. It is most important, in my view, that this prerogative continue, because in many cases a refugee from another country who is seeking refugee status may have very sensitive issues to raise. He may, for example, wish to make some very strong statements about the country he is leaving and does not want himself or his family to be prejudiced by the statements he is making. I would suggest that this change, instead of promoting equality, is a step backward. There is no requirement whatsoever for us to deny the right of a potential immigrant or refugee to have a closed hearing at the option of that individual.

• (1650)

However, it is in the area of equality rights that this Bill is most lacking in substance. Indeed, tremendous work was done by women right across this country to persuade the Government to strengthen the provisions of the Charter of Rights, not just in Section 15 but to include as well a very clear statement in Section 28 of the Constitution. Hopes arose that there might actually be some real equality, a real equal rights amendment in Canada for women. But this Government has come forward with a shocking betrayal of the hopes of Canadian women for equality.

I know a number of my colleagues are going to be addressing this question in greater depth, including the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who has worked very hard on this question, both as a Member of Parliament and, before she was elected, in promoting euqality for women in her capacity as Chairperson of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. I know that she and other members of my caucus share my concern, my anger, my sense of betrayal because this Government has not moved further.

What has the Government done to promote equality of women in Canada? What it has done in this Bill is to change a total of nine laws. The irony of this approach is that the majority of those changes do not enhance the rights of women, they enhance the rights of men. For example, the amendments would offer the same benefits to husbands and widowers to which wives and widows are now entitled under a number of Acts, including the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act, the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, and several others. It would give marriage settlements made on men the same protection under the Bankruptcy Act from a spouse's creditors as that which women now have. It would remove the possibility of preferred treatment for women under the National Defence Act; that is, the application of the code of service discipline. In short, there is but a single change, one piece of legislation which is being changed by this Government to benefit women, and only one. That change is to the Canada Shipping Act so that a woman who works aboard a ship will have part of her earnings payable to dependants at home, just as a man can do now. That is it. That is the sum total of this Government's response to the demand of Canadian women that they be granted equality—one change in one Act which is virtually of no consequence. What an incredible failure by this Government to take seriously its responsibilities for the promotion of equality of women in Canada today.

I am not going to take a great deal of time to emphasize some of the areas that we in this Party believe this Government should have moved forward in. Some of my colleagues will be elaborating on that point. However, I would remind Members of this House that women continue to be the victims of discrimination, economically and socially, in many different spheres. A report released just a couple of weeks ago clearly documents the fact that a woman in 1982, working full time, earned on average about 60 per cent of the wage of a working man. This wage gap has not closed, it has become bigger. Federal legislation continues to discriminate against women in many respects. The Unemployment Insurance Act continues to discriminate against pregnant women. I might say that one of the concerns of this House was to overrule the absurd decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Bliss which said that discrimination against people who were pregnant was not discrimination on the basis of sex, even though the only people who can become pregnant are women. Well, we in this Parliament made it very clear that we did not accept that logic, and we had hoped that this Government would have come forward with meaningful legislation to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and other legislation with respect to pensions to deal with the fact that two thirds of the elderly women in Canada today live in conditions of poverty. But this Government has done nothing.

With respect to discrimination against women, the Government has again moved in a manner which is almost worse than not having moved at all because it gives Canadians the illusion of action, but in fact no meaningful action whatsoever has been taken.

What about the disabled? There is no excuse for further study of the issues of concern to the disabled community of Canada. One of the finest reports ever tabled in this House was the unanimous report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. I want to salute the contribution of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who will be speaking in the course of this debate and who was a member of that committee. The committee tabled a report which made a whole series of very important recommendations for changes in policy and federal legislation and for encouragement of independent living as well as an end to discrimination in the workplace. There were many other similar recommendations. The studies have been done but what is this Government proposing? The disabled community in Canada appeared before the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, and I recall vividly as a member of that committee how, day in and day out, they would come to our committee until finally the Government was forced to respond to their cry for full equality. Following the entrenchment of the rights of the disabled in Section 15, this special committee held hearings in cities and towns right across this country. It heard from the disabled and submitted a unanimous report recommending action and changes in the law. We waited with great interest and great hope for the response of this Government to those recommendations. But what did it do? Did it in fact implement, let us say, 50 per cent of the changes recommended? Did it implement three or four of the key recommendations made by the committee? No. The single change made by this Government to assist the two million Canadians who are disabled was an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act to change the word "lunacy" to "mental disability". Shameful, absolutely shameful. After years of study, after unanimous recommendations for change, after the disabled had got their hopes up that this Government might just take seriously its obligations—and I stress that, its obligations—to respond to the call for equality as set out in the Charter, what does this Government come forward with? An amendment to the Canada Shipping Act to change the word "lunacy" to "mental disability".

If I were a member of the disabled community today and looked back at the promises that were made, the hearings that were held and the recommendations that were made, I would ask how much longer we must wait, how many more studies there must be, and how many more hearings must be held before the Government will finally realize that a disabled person in the country is entitled to full equality rather than to having a single word in the Canada Shipping Act changed from "lunacy" to "mentally disabled". What a cynical cop-out on the part of a Government which purports to be concerned about the rights of the disabled.

The Official Opposition is urging all of the groups that appeared before the Constitution Committee to boycott the deliberations of the special committee on equality. Their official critic has actually sent out a letter to every group that appeared before the Constitution Committee urging them not to appear. I suggest that that response is totally wrong. Every group that appeared before the Constitution Committee in 1980 and 1981 and before the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped should appear once again before this committee. They should demand that the Government finally accept its responsibility to change laws to implement full equality for the disabled.

I suggest that that is a more appropriate response than that of the Official Opposition which is telling those groups to stay away and have nothing whatsoever to do with the committee. Those groups should come to the committee and demand that the Government explain to the disabled community why it refused to take action, why it labelled the disabled in the country as a grey area, and why it did not change the laws that it should have changed.

There have been other studies done by the House. A Special Committee on Visible Minorities in Canadian society was struck. It produced an excellent and very strong report clearly documenting the extent of discrimination against visible minorities in Canada. Your Honour was a prominent member of that committee and is well aware of the fact that that committee made many important recommendations for legislative change to improve the position of visible minorities in Canada. I looked with great care through the Bill that was tabled by the Government. There was not a single amendment which responded to the report, Equality Now! So much for the concern of the Government for the recommendations to improve the position of visible minorities. So much for the concern of the Government to respond to the cry for equality from the disabled. So much for the response of the Government to the cry of Canadian women for equality. There was nothing, silence, abdication.

One of the recommendations that was made by the Special Committee on Visible Minorities, which held hearings across Canada, was that the War Measures Act be reviewed so that never again would 20,000 Canadians be uprooted from their homes and have their property confiscated as occurred during World War II to Canadians of Japanese origin. Never again at two o'clock or three o'clock in the morning would Canadians, who have broken no law whatsoever, be scooped from their homes in the Province of Quebec under the provisions of the War Measures Act. Where is the response of the Government to the suggested changes to the War Measures Act? There is silence, nothing at all.

Another recommendation made by the Special Committee on Visible Minorities was that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to cover systemic discrimination, in other words, discrimination which may not be intentional, but practices which might have the effect of discriminating against minorities in Canada. There are two cases, one of Bhinder and the other of O'Malley, before the Supreme Court. In both of those cases the federal Government stood deaf, dumb and mute and refused to say before the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada that it does not accept systemic discrimination and that it believes that that kind of discrimination should be barred by the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

I checked with care the legislation that was tabled by the Government hoping that it may have accepted the recommendation of the Committee on Visible Minorities to make it very clear that the Canadian Human Rights Act applies to systemic discrimination. You will know, Mr. Speaker, of the issues that I am referring to here such as job requirements in terms of height, for example, that might discriminate against women, or the wearing of a turban which might discriminate against Sikhs. I looked in vain. Nowhere did the Government deal with that question. Not only did the Government refuse to deal with the question in the context of this Bill, but it refused to stand before the court and argue in support of that broad interpretation of the Canadian Human Rights Act. In the event that the Supreme Court of Canada does uphold the decisions in the cases of Bhinder and O'Malley, I hope that the Government will move very quickly to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act.

The other very important issue which the Government has refused to come to grips with is that of financial aid for groups and individuals who want to challenge various federal legislation and policies as being in breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I am sure there will be many such challenges, because the Bill which was tabled in the House certainly has no substance. The effect of the Government's response to Section 15 of the Charter of Rights is to force minority groups and women into the courts to defend their rights and freedoms. Indeed, the Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), who chairs the Special Subcommittee on Equality Rights, described the Government's effort as a housekeeping Bill. I think that is an accurate description of the Bill.

The fact is that so far the Government has refused to accept its responsibility to establish financial aid for individuals who do seek to challenge legislation that may be in breach of the Charter. This is in direct violation of a promise that was made by the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) before he became Prime Minister. On August 14, 1984 he was asked by the coalition of provincial organizations for the Handicapped whether he supported the provision of resources by the federal Government to disabled Canadians for the establishment of a rights and freedoms defence fund. The Prime Minister said that a Progressive Conservative Government would financially assist all Charter of Rights cases deemed to be of national importance. He said that cases involving rights of the handicapped and disabled would certainly fall into this category. Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that the promise was fairly clear and one would have hoped that the Prime Minister of the country, being a man of his word, would have fulfilled that promise to the disabled, other minorities, and women. Yet the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), in reply to a question which I put to him in the Justice Committee, indicated that he personally did not mind making a contribution to funds established by private groups such as the women's groups that are establishing a fund now. He said, "I personally feel that is the best way to go about this. Then they have independence and no one is interfering". He went on to say, "You are suggesting the Government should do all this, the Government should finance it all, but I say that is very much open to argument".

• (1710)

During the election campaign in August the Prime Minister promised that he would establish a fund to assist litigants who want to challenge legislation. In the next breath, when he is in government, his Minister of Justice refuses to establish that essential fund. To suggest that groups and individuals have rights but to deny them the tools with which to fight for those rights, is a hollow remedy.

You are signalling that my time is coming to an end on this speech and I will draw my remarks to a close. Once again, I want to register my profound concern and anger at the fact that the Government has refused to take seriously the challenge which Parliament set forth in passing the Charter of Rights. That Charter does not belong to governments, it belongs to people. The effect of the Government's inaction is to force women and minorities into the courts but to refuse to assure them that they have the financial resources to defend their rights.

Women, the disabled and other minorities are gravely disappointed with the approach that the Government has taken, and I hope that they will make their views known loudly and clearly to the special committee that has been established to consider Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In closing, I am reminded of the somewhat mocking words of the great British poet, A. E. Housman, who said, "Be still my soul, it is but for a season. Let us endure an hour and see injustice done". There has been too much injustice and too many hours have passed. The time to promote full equality is now. I appeal to the Government to recognize that and to move forward quickly to comply both with the spirit and the letter of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Madawaska-Victoria, I welcome this opportunity to rise in support of the motion by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) for second reading of Bill C-27, legislation aimed at amending certain federal Acts to bring them into line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, Mr. Speaker, although I have already had an opportunity, as Parliamentary Secretary, to take part in the adjournment debate, this is the first time in this House, that I have a chance to speak to my constituents, and I want to take advantage of this opportunity to thank the people of Madawaska-Victoria for having given me the privilege of representing them here in Parliament, and also to describe briefly for my hon. colleagues the riding of Madawaska-Victoria.

My riding is located in the northwestern part of New Brunswick. To the west it borders on the Province of Quebec and to the south on the State of Maine, in the United States. My riding extends along the St. John River from the Quebec border to Perth, Andover, and has a population of about 57,000. Seventy-five per cent are Francophones and of French ethnic origin, while 25 per cent have English as their mother tongue. The federal riding of Madawaska-Victoria covers six provincial ridings, five of which are represented by provincial Members in the Government of the Hon. Richard Hatfield.

Mr. Speaker, following the example of some of my colleagues, I would like to explain to the Members of this House that Madawaska-Victoria is a very special riding, because the people belong to what we refer to as the legendary republic of Madawaska, and also because of those hardworking people in the Victoria, Tobique area.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents are mainly engaged in the agro-food business and forestry. I wish I could be as eloquent as some of my colleagues have been with respect to their own ridings, in describing Madawaska-Victoria as a region with warmhearted people, beautiful rivers and marvelous landscapes. However, the people of Madawaska-Victoria also have some major problems. The statistics are nothing to be particularly proud about, but I feel they reflect the legacy we received from the previous Government.

My riding's per capita income is lower than the provincial average, and need I add, Mr. Speaker, that the average per capita income in New Brunswick is much lower than the Canadian average. The unemployment rate in my riding is very high, in fact it is higher than the provincial and national average.

We hope this situation, which has existed for a long time in Madawaska-Victoria, is going to change, and we are confident that by electing this Government on September 4 we are now on the right track.

The people of Madawaska-Victoria have traditionally supported the Official Opposition in federal elections, and they have seen what good this has done them. Mr. Speaker, that is the context in which should be considered my election on September 4 and for which I am truly grateful to my constituents in Madawaska-Victoria. They gave a massive support to the Progressive Conservative Party at the last election and gave their confidence to a team led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). During my mandate and during this Parliament, I really intend to prove worthy of their confidence by discharging my responsibilities as best I can.

Mr. Speaker, after being in power for almost seven months, even if we are young and inexperienced members, we follow the proceedings in the House and we are tempted to make some comments . . . I listened carefully to the comments made by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) a while ago in reply to the speech made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). I also heard the criticisms of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Certain things were brought out in the speech made by the spokesman of the official opposition.

It is clear from their speeches since September 4 that they are frustrated after being decimated throughout the country, but when I see in this House the logic and rhetoric of the Liberal Party, I am grateful that my electors had enough wisdom to elect a member of the Progressive Conservative party. I thank the Canadian people for having elected a government which has avoided the Liberal Party rhetoric.

• (1720)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. I thought he was making his maiden speech and I did allow him a few minutes to speak about his constituency, but I must now ask him to speak on Bill C-27.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, that is what I am going to do. I listened with attention to the comments made by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) in reply to the speech of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and I was saying how amazed I was at the rhetoric.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I understand. I heard the Hon. Member repeating the same thing in French. I would like him now to carry on with Bill C-27.

[Translation]

Mr. Valcourt: Of course, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-27 now being considered comes under attack by the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. I do not want to prolong the debate, but the Opposition is trying to prove that Bill C-27 is a very minor piece of legislation which is not quite in the same league as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Well, Mr. Speaker, they have to admit that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms adopted in 1982 does enshrine the rights and freedoms of all Canadians and did make radical changes in our society. Courts, provincial legislatures, the Federal Government and all citizens are affected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, because the Constitution, our most basic law, acknowledges those rights in no uncertain terms.

They now claim that the Government is not doing anything. Well, none of the critics has mentioned the fact, among others, that as recently as September 14, 1984 the Supreme Court of Canada rendered a decision in the Southam-Hunter case with respect to the powers of entry and inspection provided under some federal Acts. In less than four months the Government took into consideration the principles of that decision and embodied them in Bill C-27 which contains amendments related to powers of entry and search as well as powers of entry and inspection.

As a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleagues in the House that those amendments stemming from the Supreme Court of Canada decision in the Southam case are more than welcome. The critics of the Official Opposition or of the New Democratic Party can say what they like, but the fact is that the Government did not wait for years before taking action, with the result that the amendments can now be found in Bill C-27.

Mr. Speaker, I also deplore the fact that the official critic of the Liberal Party has urged all Canadians from coast to coast to boycott the hearings of the major committee duly appointed to look into the document entitled "Equity Issues in Federal Law, A discussion paper", that was recently published and tabled by the Minister of Justice. This committee, made up of representatives from the Government, the Official Opposition and the NDP, was asked to consider some truly important issues in the light of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Of course, our hon. friends from the Liberal Party will regard that as evidence of inaction and lack of leadership, claiming that the Government should put an end to its consultations and take some strong positive action. What the Official Opposition critic is saying is that we should not seek the Canadian public's views on the important issues raised in this document, including retirement, status, age of majority, sexual preferences of individuals. These critics are consistent with the philosophy of the Liberal Party which claims to be the sole possessor of all knowledge and the supreme judge of all truth and virtue . . . Yet, the very first lines in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms provide, under Section 1, that these rights and freedoms are——subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Mr. Speaker, no government, even one controlling 211 seats in the House, can rightfully claim that it has the exclusive knowledge of what is good for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that I am about to run out of time. I urge all my hon. colleagues, irrespective of their party affiliation, and even my learned friend the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) to contribute positively to this debate on Bill C-27 and to refer it without delay to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for further study and possible improvements.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments?

Since there are no questions or comments, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, as April 17 approaches, I take great pride in both my country and my Party.

Three years ago the Liberal Government and its provincial counterparts brought to Canada the guarantees that are so vital to life in a democratic society such as ours. The Canadian Constitution with its entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms expresses in legal language the values that we hold dear, the values we proudly stand for on the world stage, the values we wish to protect and pass down to our children and to our children's children.

[Translation]

For the first time, the Charter was entrenched in the Constitution to fight against oppression and discrimination. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms asserts the basic freedoms and rights to equality of every Canadian. Section 15 of the Charter lists these rights:

—the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination . . . discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, color, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

• (1730)

[English]

We are all aware that Section 15 of the Charter comes into force on April 17. Unfortunately, we will not be able to greet the present Government's treatment of Section 15 with the enthusiasm that we should have for the Charter as a whole or that which we were able to show and demonstrate for this Charter. There will be small reason for us to celebrate that day. The present Government has done less than half its job. Almost two months ago, it introduced Bill C-27 into this House. The Bill was to ensure that federal legislation complied with the Charter. In part, it sought to ensure compliance with the forthcoming implementation of the equality rights provisions of this Charter by amending only 50 pieces of federal legislation out of 1,100 statutes which they had to look at, including legislation in the Livestock Pedigree Act and the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

I really do not think that these were the major issues that the Coalition of Women's Groups had in mind when they fought so hard to ensure that this vital section found its place in the Charter reflecting our value system. In fact, it is a tremendous disappointment.

What the present Government failed woefully to do in Bill C-27 was to bite the bullet. It failed to bite the bullet on a score of other equality issues that it is obliged to address in order to ensure compliance with the grounds outlined in Section 15. Instead, it has chosen to introduce partial and cosmetic changes. It has merely tinkered with language and delayed decisions on a number of truly critical equality issues through the mechanism of another discussion paper.

I suggest that the Government is afraid to address too many of the hard issues of the day. It lacks the political will to treat unpopular issues. Governing a country of over 25 million people is not a popularity contest. Canada prides itself on its multicultural nature and, therefore, it makes it an even more complex society, along with its bilingual character. Unfortunately, this Government has not yet learned really to face the facts. Perhaps it will one day realize that it cannot have everyone love it all the time. This Government is busy perfecting the art of protracted consultants and is confirming to everyone what the initials PC really stand for. In the meantime, it subsists on language doctoring to appease the requirements of Section 15 in the few pieces of federal legislation that it proposes to amend with this Bill. The present Government's treatment of the obligations imposed upon it by this Charter, particularly the equality provisions, show too clearly its timidity and its inability to face the hard facts of political life.

The Liberal Government set in motion an audit of federal statutes almost two years ago. Its purpose was to determine whether those statutes contained provisions that would be discriminatory, that is, whether the distinctions were made in legislation for irrelevant or capricious reasons or whether the legislation contained valid distinctions that would not amount to a denial of the equality rights and thereby create unexpected and unlawful discrimination practices.

[Translation]

I am well aware that a complete review of all the federal statutes is a monstrous task. I am also aware of the complexity of the decisions required to determine whether this or that order includes a denial of the rights to equality, or, to go even further, a recognition of these rights.

[English]

For example, a straightforward statute audit would probably be inadequate to examine equality issues in areas such as criminal law, the legislative treatment of reproductive capacity, pensions, and the position of Indian women, but even here the Government did not respect its own constituency or intentions. Here something more than a statute audit is needed.

We will need to see a very sophisticated level of constitutional analysis, argumentation and policy review. We will need to examine laws and other jurisdictions such as international jurisdictions that we have signed. We will also need to give in depth consideration to numerous law reform proposals in light of the equality provisions of the Charter.

The parliamentary Subcommittee on Equality Rights proposed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is an appropriate vehicle in these very limited cases for determining whether certain federal laws need to be amended to conform with the Charter. In these limited areas, I support the naming of that subcommittee. This subcommittee will have the delicate task of balancing social, economic, political and constitutional considerations as it examines our federal laws.

This Government has gone beyond simply delaying decisions on some of the more difficult questions. It has avoided its responsibility to make the hard decisions of political life by not introducing more comprehensive legislation on equality. It could have ensured that all distinctions be given the broadest and largest interpretation, thus setting the appropriate tone and sending out the kind of message of openness to our visible minorities, to the native people, women, the handicapped and the courts of this land. Instead, it has tossed the bulk of equality issues, equality issues that need no more discussion and which should be legislated immediately, into a discussion paper.

The Charter of Rights educational fund, a volunteer group of women lawyers, certainly gave us something as a model, for they produced a 2,000-page document addressing and recommending in great and minute detail the needed changes. How can the Minister of Justice with all his staff and all their resources not feel both embarrassed and irresponsible when he presents such meagre, almost unimportant technical changes as his response to the April 17 deadline? I think it is a shame.

My colleagues, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), expressed their concerns for the present Government's action. Only the least controversial amendments have been introduced, they noted. All the issues that dealt with unpopular groups or were controversial or expensive to implement have not obtained justice from the Department of Justice. My confrères feared that the neglect of the Government to implement the Charter fully might result in the Government's relying on public opinion, which can be very insensitive to women, minorities and to the determination of their rights.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if the Government allows the general public to make the decisions about these rights instead of acting itself to entrench vested rights in the Charter, the Conservatives could be allowing the majority to determine the rights of the minority. I should not have to remind the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) of the danger of this. Unfortunately, this must be done, and urgently, because I am very much afraid that this discussion paper will give the Government an excuse to blame the so-called majority for any possible irresponsibility.

[English]

If this Government is afraid to bite the legislative bullet, those in this country who are minorities or disadvantaged groups will have no recourse but to go through a prohibitively expensive court process to see non-complying legislation tested and struck down.

I listened to the comments of a number of Members here with respect to Obstacles and the document Equality Now! I remind Hon. Members that Equality Now! was just recently tabled and was in the process of being addressed by our Government. With respect to Obstacles, 116 of the 145 recommendations have been implemented, and follow-up responses and meetings have been taking place. Is this Government going to treat its women and its minorities fairly, without forcing them to undertake expensive, unnecessary and time-consuming court challenges? Actions to date lead me to assume that the Government is going to let these groups incur incredible costs. It is patently clear from the the limited actions taken in Bill C-27 to correct inequalities that the Government is unresponsive to the handicapped, visible minorities, and native and women's groups it was elected to serve. Time, effort, thought, new directions and legislative change recommendations went into the report, but they were not heard. The Government has made many promises. The time for action is now.

● (1740)

I would suggest that the voices of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) and the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) have not been heard in an appropriate manner, and I think that is a shame. Why did they not insist on appropriate legislative change?

[Translation]

Let me give you an example. Bill C-27 does not deal with the issue of sexual orientation. Quebec is the only province to have shown enough courage to guarantee non-discrimination based on sexual orientation. Indeed, what has the Federal Government done until now? Has it acted fairly to provide true equality, especially for women? Has it taken its responsibilities seriously? I do not think so. We can look in particular at their actions on the issues of sexual orientation, the disabled, visible minorities and women. The Government has suggested a discussion on these issues so that it would not have to make a decision which the public might not like.

Mr. Speaker, we have had enough rhetoric. The Charter on equality deserves better than to be evaluated on the basis of its popularity at the polls.

[English]

Surely the Government could have opened its mind a little further and accepted certain legislative provisions that contained distinctions between the treatment of certain sectors of society, distinctions that the needs of society and the welfare of its members will support. I am referring specifically to the handicapped, to older workers and to maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

With respect to the latter, maternity benefits have been called into question by the discussion paper. The legislation that permits pregnant women maternity leave benefits is not discriminatory but, rather, provides distinct treatment on the basis that it is conducive to the welfare of our society as a whole, recognizes women's attachment to the labour force and makes a place for them. It is also in keeping with our signature on international covenants. Yet the Hon. Minister of Justice has chosen not to make a decision in time for the coming into force of the equality section. He has let the issue sit on the discussion paper.

Dealing as I do with a variety of portfolios, I am aware of the complexities of some of the decisions we must make when squaring the equality provisions of the Charter with our existing and future federal legislation. As I stated a few moments ago, I cannot fault the Government for reflecting carefully on the implications of the Charter, but I absolutely deplore, first, the Minister's cynicism and, second, the Government's seeming inability to make a number of straightforward decisions about straightforward laws, whether they deal with unemployment insurance benefits for pregnant women, family allowance cheques, mandatory retirement, needs of the handicapped or equality needs of the visible minorities.

Rather than proceeding with an abundance of caution, the Government has demonstrated an abundance of paralysis. It has cast the bulk of equality issues into the public arena when it should instead act as the Liberal Government was prepared to act. Perhaps it is time to see a little more courage coming from the other side of the House, a little less rhetoric and a little more keeping of the promises that were in the hearts and minds of the men and women who elected the Government with such a great majority. It should begin to live up to the things it promised the country.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has gone to great lengths to criticize the Government for its handling of this issue. A criticism was levelled at the inaction and inappropriate direction that has been taken. The Hon. Member reminds me somewhat of the justice critic of her Party whom I understand she may possibly have replaced as a member on the subcommittee.

In his comments, the justice critic of the Official Opposition has been even more harshly critical of the Government's handling of the entire affair and indeed has even made the comment in committee that the interest groups to which the Hon. Member has referred should boycott the hearings. Of course, the opinions he expresses in committee and beyond committee are substantially felt and we have heard them in the House. Does the Hon. Member support the justice critic of the Official Opposition in his position that interest groups should indeed boycott the hearings of the subcommittee?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that the Hon. Member did not bother to listen to what I said. If he had, he would have been somewhat clearer in his ability to question our direction.

First, I would like to advise the Hon. Member and the Minister of Justice, who did not seem to know it that I am very pleased to be sitting on the subcommittee. I am even more pleased because the Government did not take into its hands the decisions that it should have taken. It left some of the thorny issues which I had said needed to be addressed by the subcommittee for the subcommittee to consider, and it is for that reason that I am pleased to be sitting on that subcommittee. However, it left a great many other questions to that subcommittee which it did not need to leave.

There were reams and reams of real documentary evidence presented in the documents Equality Now! and Obstacles as well as evidence obtained through hearings that had been taking place from 1980 to 1981 on which the Government could easily have acted and shown the courage of leadership. That was the issue addressed by our critic. That is why I believe the Hon. Member for York Centre was perfectly right. I have not seen the document to which the Hon. Member refers but I believe the intent behind the Hon. Member's action was that those groups that have spent much time, money and effort to enunciate their plans are asking what the point of returning is because the Government did not listen to them in the first place.

The reason other groups should come, and I would encourage them to come, is that there are other thorny issues that have social, economic and political consequences which go beyond the limits of discrimination as we understand it and which have very serious social impacts. Those are the things at which we should look and those are the things I think we will address with a great deal of care at the same time as we will insist on looking through the documents that were already tabled, so that in committee we may make some of the hard decisions the brave Minister of Justice was not prepared to make regarding his over-all responsibility.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had the privilege of meeting the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) but I have had the great pleasure of listening to her on a number of occasions. Then as now, I have listened with interest and benefit. I have always admired the graceful way in which she addresses the House. It sets an example that I wish some of her fellow members of the Opposition might emulate.

I would like to focus attention for few moments on one theme that ran throughout the Hon. Member's remarks. Indeed, this theme began almost at the beginning of her speech. She was referring to the Constitution and her own Party's share in bringing that Constitution and the Charter into existence as the basis of government in this country. I quite agree that her Party and its then Leader deserve great credit. They certainly took what could be called the lion's share in initiating that great development. But we must recognize that the Constitution belongs to all of us. Both sides of the House of Commons participated in the leadership which made the Constitution possible and all of the provinces engaged actively in the process. The courts were involved. Ultimately, the Constitution became the achievement of all Canadians. It was not due to what the Liberal Government did, but in spite of it.

● (1750)

The Constitution Act was initiated as a partisan venture which expressed the views of the then Government. But it had to become bigger than that. There had to be consulation with the nation which the Government had not intended. That consultation was forced on the Government by provincial Governments, the strong and courageous stand of the Opposition Parties and, finally, it was forced on it by the courts. In that great constitutional debate we have an example of what we were trying to achieve through the process which is under consideration in this legislation, that is, to bring the entire nation into the discussion and to involve all interested parties.

Over and over again the Hon. Member said that this Government wants to maintain its popularity and that democratic government is not a popularity contest. I believe that the Hon. Member is misreading the situation. The word "popularity" originates from the word "populus". It involves the populace of the country. This Government is striving to involve the population of Canada in a Bill which is vital to all groups. Surely, the wisdom in that is that the Government should not attempt to set forth the rights of certain minority groups and risk polarization in society. Very frequently that has been the result, because social change has been made without the widest consensus possible.

I would hope that the Hon. Member would see the merits and the value of the process in which we are engaged. In spite of the credit which is due to her former Leader, the former Prime Minister of Canada, I have to believe that no one ever talked so much about unity and no one ever did so much to polarize the country. With the style of government in which we are now engaged, we are striving to avoid polarization by bringing the people of Canada together to express their consensus in legislation which will achieve their common aspirations.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his observations as they give me an opportunity to express my point of view. He spoke about vox populi. It was the vox populi that said they were going to elect a large and strong Conservative majority. Every Tory Member is a representative of a riding and the people who live in it. The people have given them a mandate and have shown trust. The issues before this House—when it comes to minority and majority responsibilities and how a Government must respond—are the responsibilities of those Members. Government Members will have to face their electors. If the electors do not like what they are going to do, they will let their Members know. The electors certainly let them know when the universality issue arose. Government Members changed their view.

I am not concerned. This is a consultation with the public. Members of the Government have come into the House to put into operation a new form of government and a new direction. They can go back and consult their constituents one by one if they wish, but not when it comes to legislating the kind of values which stand behind the people who are the most vulnerable and weak in our society.

I am a new Member and I am learning lots of things. I do not know if he is a new Member, but I look forward to meeting him. I would like to bring to his attention—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I would like to indicate that she has 30 seconds remaining.

Mrs. Finestone: I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member a list of very important witnesses who represent the grass roots all the way along the political spectrum. Those witnesses came, in 1980 and 1981, to the constitutional hearings to express their concerns and to indicate what needed to be done to put Section 15 into application. All the texts of the drafts of law were there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allowed for questions and comments has now terminated. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) on debate.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There is nothing very objectionable about the Bill. What is wrong with it is the omissions. The Bill consists of a lot of trivial points. Certainly, amendments are required. But the really important issues were not dealt with in the Bill. Those issues appear in the discussion paper.

The Bill has been referred to as housekeeping legislation. If it had really been housekeeping, it would have been much better. It is no better than a lick and a promise. With regard to justice and equality, what is needed is a good spring cleaning. That, we do not have.

[Translation]

What is scandalous is that, instead of introducing legislation to ensure equality with regard to pensions, equal opportunities in the labour market and maternity leave, the Government wants to have a discussion. It has raised the question of equality on the matter of pensions, but is it fair that women should receive a lower pension because they live longer than men on the average? It is obvious that women need the same pensions as men. They pay the same for housing, food and transport. Their pension is lower because pensions are linked to wages and women do not earn as much as men.

[English]

Instead of dealing with that very important matter in a concrete manner, it has been relegated to discussion. The sex-based mortality tables are used to compute annuities, which will mean that women will get lower amounts than men. There is no discrimination on the basis of race or any other behaviourial characteristic in the tables. Simply, women get lower annuities than men because they live longer. However, there is no discrimination between the different races because they have different mortality rates. There was a recommendation made by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women as far back as 1970 on this matter. It appeared in the green paper on pensions, and women's groups have lobbied for that reform for years. The women will have to raise this matter again and again. But the Government only wants to discuss the matter.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) showed a decided lack of enthusiasm when he introduced the Bill. It is clear that the Government feels that we have to have equality because it is in the Charter and something has to be done. Certainly, the Government will do the absolute minimum. The Minister said that he wanted to hear the groups and that they would be given an opportunity to be heard. However, he has not been listening because groups, individuals, experts and people from across the country have been saying that they want equality, justice and specific amendments to legislation without further delay.

The Charter of Rights Educational Fund has recently released a report which has a much more ambitious and to-the-point approach to the issue of equality. That group raises the real issues. It points out that there is discrimination against women on matters such as the lack of protection for women's health products. That is a hidden form of discrimination which has not been raised. The old boys' network in employment matters discriminates against women with respect to employment. That matter has not been raised for discussion. Unemployment insurance limits against women—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. When debate resumes on Bill C-27, the Hon. Member will have 16 minutes remaining for debate, plus the ten-minute question period.

STATUTE LAW (CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned yesterday I was pointing out the severe limitations of Bill C-27. It deals with rather trivial matters and puts the important matters of equality, for which women have been struggling for the last number of years, into a discussion paper to be considered again, as if we need continually to discuss whether equality is a good thing or whether we want it. I pointed out that groups such as the Charter of Rights Educational Fund have proposed much more serious measures for achieving equality for Canadian women.

I also pointed out the real problems in the legislation and some of the hidden and systemic forms of discrimination which appear, for example, in the provisions for pregnancy. As opposed to being outright sex discrimination it has the effect of being discriminatory on the basis of sex.

The discussion paper which the Minister brought forward has a very hostile tone toward women. For example, in the area of maternity benefits the discussion paper notes that the Supreme Court of Canada found a distinction on the basis of pregnancy not to be a distinction on the basis of sex for purposes of the Bill of Rights. That is the famous pregnant person case, the Bliss case. But the discussion paper does not admit that. It does not mention the fact that the Department of Justice appealed the case against Stella Bliss when she won the case in a lower court. The discussion paper notes, I suspect reluctantly, that it would not be possible to appeal such a decision on the new wording of Section 15 because it is broader. It points out that this whole matter will be reopened before the courts.

Why is Section 15 more broadly defined than the old wording under the Bill of Rights? It is because of cases such as the Bliss case which made women insist on a better wording. The discussion paper notes that the primary purpose for pregnancy leave, the 15-week period, is social adjustment. In fact, that is a misnomer. The primary purpose is recuperation after the pregnancy and the delivery, and child care. The Department of Justice does not deal with real people who are raising children.

The discussion paper asks if the male parent should be permitted to receive benefits for part of the allowed time. It asks if the couple should be allowed to choose who will take the parental leave. The obvious answer to that question is, yes. That has previously been proposed. I proposed that when the House was amending other discriminatory provisions in the Unemployment Insurance Act a couple of years ago. Both parents should be involved in parental leave. Obviously, only the mother can take advantage of the maternity benefits section, but when it concerns child care, both parents should be able to take part. It is time we realized that in a lot of cases both parents want to take part, and they should be allowed to do so.

[Translation]

The issue of combat roles for women in the Armed Forces is more complex. It is a fact that women play a major role in creating and protecting life, but it is also true that our Armed Forces are using the exclusion of women from combat roles to exclude them from high ranking positions. This rule excludes women from our peace-keeping forces. They are not even allowed to work in the kitchen for our Forces in Cyprus. For many women, the army is a career, and this rule is a barrier to their professional advancement.

[English]

The paper discusses women in the Armed Forces, and I think it does so quite stupidly. Nowhere is it admitted that the reason for excluding women from combat roles is the reason for excluding them from career opportunities. Rather silly statements are made about national security. For example, a potential enemy may view a mixed force as being less capable of dealing with an invasion. I would ask the Department of Justice to name the enemy who is going to invade Canada because there are women in the Armed Forces. It is absolutely preposterous. The paper raises the problem of female prisoners, yet females as civilians are indeed the victims of all kinds of violence in war. They have participated in wars. This problem has been faced before.

The discussion paper also indicated that the cost of making trades available to women may be prohibitive. I wonder if it is more prohibitive than providing new uniforms to the Armed Forces. So many of the casualties in war are civilian. They include women, men and children. So the notion of keeping women out of the Armed Forces in peacetime, when jobs could be provided for women, seems to be unreasonable.

● (1110)

Only very near the end of the discussion do we reach the nitty-gritty. The exclusion of women from combat related roles prevents their promotion. The discussion paper asks, "Can some alternative method be found to provide that opportunity?" That question does not need to be asked. Of course, some alternative way should be found. If it is decided that they should be excluded, obviously, it is only justice that other means be found to give them opportunities for promotion.

This Section ends with a threat. It is in the driest possible language but it is a threat. I quote from page 33:

A concomitant question is whether equal access in peace time means equal liability for compulsory combat duty in war.

What the discussion paper is saying to Canadian women is, "If you want jobs in the army, you are going to be in for a lot of trouble so perhaps you should not be seeking equality because you are really going to get it". It does not raise the real problem, that women are the child bearers and, for the most part, the child rearers. That does not even get discussed and that might be a good reason for keeping women out of combat roles. Both men and women are child rearers and army life is not very good on families. That problem is not addressed.

The very significant question of women wanting to be in combat roles because of their involvement in the peace movement is another matter which is simply excluded, although, frankly, I do not see that there is a contradiction with respect to an army which is going to be engaged in conventional defence measures and in peace-keeping roles. I would note that women are excluded even from peace-keeping roles in the Canadian army, jobs which require alertness, tact and diplomacy rather than physical strength, and I believe this is something where women's abilities could be very well used.

The discussion paper notes with respect to the Canada Elections Act that there is a form of discrimination in that spouses of Armed Forces electors are denied the opportunity to choose a place of residence for voting. It does not raise similar problems for spouses of civilian employees engaged abroad. It seems to me very reasonable, when a family moves, that the spouse and any adult children should have the opportunity to vote. The family unity is important, and other members of the family, apart from the bread-winner, should not be denied their opportunity to vote. Yet this is a form of discrimination which the paper does not even recognize.

Family allowance is one of the most scandalous discussion areas in the discussion paper. It refers to two-parent families and whether the family allowance is paid to the "female parent". Again, we do not hear of mothers or fathers; it is the "female parent." This betrays an enormous amount of ignorance as to how hard the woman's movement fought to have the role of mothers recognized so that they would get the family allowance, because overwhelmingly it is the women, the mothers, who are doing the work of raising the children. Let me quote from page 33 of this very foolish discussion paper:

The assumption behind this sex-based distinction appears to be that female parents are the primary care givers.

Appears to be? The Department of Justice does not know who looks after the children.

Mr. Boudria: Where has it been?

Ms. McDonald: Where, indeed, has it been?

This, therefore, excludes males from control over Family Allowance money unless they have custody of the children.

Poor fathers are being excluded. This is absolutely preposterous. In many families the family allowance cheque is the only money to which the mother of the family has direct access and we know that women have access to very little money. Full-time workers who are women receive only 60 per cent of what male full-time workers receive. On average women are only earning half as much as men. Yet the Department of Justice wants to take more money away from women, the small amount in the family allowance cheque, and see that it goes to the main bread-winner of the family. Let me quote again from page 33:

Both parents have an obligation in law to care for and support their children, and payment to the female parent disregards the sharing of this obligation.

The Department of Justice cannot distinguish between a legal obligation, which indeed is there, and reality. In fact, overwhelmingly the women do the child care work and deserve to get the family allowance. They should not have to fight for it.

We know that 10 per cent of Canadian wives are beaten in any one year, according to statistics gathered in a recent survey. Should these women have to negotiate to get the family allowance cheque? These are women who are at home raising their children and who are economically dependent on their husbands. I quote from Page 33 of the paper again:

Should the state take the responsibility of selecting one of the two parents on an arbitrary basis when there are undoubtedly other selection mechanisms available?

It is not arbitrary. Women in reality, in real life, are doing this work, and the Department of Justice does not know it because it is incompetent and should not have been writing this paper. People who know something about how Canadians really live ought to have been writing the paper.

● (1115)

Let me give another example of the stupidity in this paper. In the Criminal Code it is an offence for a male to have sexual intercourse with a female under 14 not his wife. That is statutory rape. It is not an offence, this discussion paper points out, for a woman to have sexual intercourse with a male under 14. What a preposterous problem to raise. How many boys under the age of 14 have become pregnant or received venereal disease as a result of the activities of Canadian women? This is absolutely outrageous. There is a physical difference between men and women and boys and girls, and girls under 14 do need this kind of protection. The Badgley report pointed that out when it was published last August.

It is absolutely outrageous to see this totally arbitrary notion of equality. Yet when we come to the real problems that women are actually suffering, the real inequalities, these people are not there protesting or coming up with constructive alternatives. They are quite complacent about all the economic problems, such as women earning only half the income that men do, the fact that they have very little economic independence. They do not address any of the issues of women's pensions, women as homemakers being excluded from the Canada Pension Plan which results in their being poor in their old age because they do not have adequate means of support.

All these issues have been brought before the House. We have been lobbying year after year. But they have only been looked at as a matter of principle—whether we should be allowing women equal pensions; this is a matter to be discussed. Well, it is time we stopped discussing these matters. It is time that the Government took a principled stand and brought in legislation on all these issues.

Canadian women will, of course, continue to lobby on these issues. They are not going to quit. But I think it is very unfortunate that they have again to come before a committee to plead their case for equality. I remember the time I was President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women lobbying for equality at the time of the Charter fight. We won that fight. We hoped the Charter would really mean something, that it would have some guts to it and that women would not have to continue to go to court and again lobby time after time after time. But the Government is obviously very reluctant to bring in concrete measures.

The Minister of Justice's remarks yesterday in the House were shameful. And his approval of equality is as reluctant as it could be consistent with his position as Minister of Justice. It is very clear that women are going to get justice and equality in only the smallest possible measure. It probably means that women are going to have to go to the courts to fight for equality on measures which should have been brought in by way of legislation. A responsible Government would have legislated and not forced women to take the trouble, time and effort to plead their case in court. The fight will continue on these issues, I assure you of that, Mr. Speaker. I only regret that the Government is not leading the way with constructive, useful and fair legislation for Canadian women.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, as this is the first opportunity I have had to speak on a Bill in this House of Commons, may I seek the indulgence of the Chair for a few moments to talk a bit about the county I represent, Gloucester in northeastern New Brunswick.

[Translation]

If we were to look for a region in Canada that reflects the Canadian mosaic, the riding of Gloucester would do that perfectly, Mr. Speaker. Everyone has heard of the Acadian peninsula, located in the heart of the riding. Towns and villages such as Caraquet, Shippegan, Tracadie and Lamèque depend mainly on the sea as their source of income, and the people in these communities are among the hardest working individuals I have ever met, Mr. Speaker.

• (1120)

[English]

In the summer the whole region is a paradise for tourists.

[Translation]

The Village acadien and the Caraquet Acadian Festival are very well known, as well as the Centre marin and the Shippegan Fisheries Festival.

[English]

In the region of the urban centre of Bathurst the hospitality and the festival during the summer months which reflects that hospitality will attract thousands of tourists who can visit some of the finest beaches on the East Coast of Canada. Along the coast of the beautiful Bay of Chaleur, nestled between the Gaspé Peninsula and the Town of Grande Anse, are the small coastal localities which include Clifton, Stonehaven, Janeville, New Bandon and Salmon Beach. The urban centre of the riding is Bathurst, the city in which I was born, and I am very proud to say my family still lives there. Bathurst is the economic centre of the northeast of New Brunswick. The major private employer in the riding is Noranda whose Brunswick mine is one of the largest lead-zinc deposits in the world.

[Translation]

The forestry industry also plays a very important role in the region's economy, thanks to Consolidated Bathurst Limited, which has one of its operations in Bathurst.

[English]

Fishing, mining, forestry and the peat industry are the natural resources which initiate much of the economic stability of Gloucester. However, the greatest of its natural resources is its people. With both founding groups, Anglophone and Francophone, living harmoniously, Mr. Speaker, we can truly say that Gloucester county is an example to New Brunswickers and all of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent in this House all groups and individuals in the riding of Gloucester. I greatly appreciate their support and confidence, and I want to give them the assurance that throughout my term as a Member of Parliament, their needs will always be uppermost in my mind.

[English]

Bill C-27, which provides for amendments to over 50 statutes to ensure Charter consistency, results from an extensive review of federal laws carried out by the Department of Justice. There are a number of other Government initiatives also under way to amend other laws which might conflict with the Charter. In the past Canadians have become increasingly concerned with the protection of rights and freedoms. It is for this reason that I think it is very important that the people of Canada work together to ensure that the Charter forms an integral part of our laws.

A major part of this endeavour is the discussion paper on equality issues. It is a great honour for me, as a new Member of Parliament, to have been appointed to the House of Commons subcommittee on Justice and Legal Affairs which will be reviewing and discussing equality issues in this great nation. Equality is a fundamental goal in Canadian life. The Government is committee to eliminating any discrimination in legislation and policies that could prevent Canadians from moving toward equality. The discussion paper is a step toward attainment of that goal.

The Government considers it most important that we have the widest possible consultation with the people of Canada. This committee can and should be used on a platform by all concerned groups to tell parliamentarians how they want our laws to be changed. Before making firm proposals the Government needs to know the views of Canadians on all the issues.

Ours is a free and democratic society as described in Section 1 of the Charter. There must be an opportunity to advise on the way the equality rights of Section 15 are applied. It is important that we raise the broad issues on which policy decisions, once made, will have an impact on many statutes in this country. Section 15 reinforces the responsibility that governments have to shape laws, policies and programs to the goal of equality. But I submit that equality cannot be achieved by government alone. Individuals and groups must promote this equality through their dealings with each other.

• (1125)

[Translation]

Subcommittee consideration of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms Section 15 will give the people of Canada an opportunity to have their say and express their views in connection with the practical implementation of those basic rights and freedoms, including equality before and under the law, equal protection and equal benefit of the law. Inequality may derive from the law itself as well as from the way it is administered.

[English]

This is the first initiative, to ensure that federal laws are in conformity with the Charter.

The task of reviewing federal statutes is an enormous one and issues can be missed. As courts interpret provisions of the Charter in specific cases, changes may be necessary in federal laws that are under review.

The issues raised in the discussion paper involve difficult legal policy choices where the views of reasonable peoples may differ. It is not clear that these provisions are contrary to the Charter. To assist the Government and make the appropriate policy choices, public consultation is essential.

No doubt some equality measures will be dealt with in the same manner as other Charter rights as they come up and the courts make decisions on issues presented to them, but I think it is understood that protecting human rights in law is not something that can be done once and for all.

[Translation]

To the extent that our laws deal with equality, we want to know what kind of experiences people have had with them. Many of these questions have already been studied, but few solutions were proposed, a situation we hope to remedy.

This process is the best assurance that changes will reflect more than the views of public officials or the opinions of politicians. This House committee will listen to representations from every region of Canada.

[English]

There are many topics which will be open for discussion with Canadians. Among those distinctive areas where people may be experiencing some inequality are age, sex, race, citizenship, marital and family status, to name a few.

Age-based distinctions are common not only in our society but throughout the world. The rationale for many of these distinctions originates in the earlier times and in different societies. Most age distinctions are made with respect to youth and the elderly in Canada. Hence, we have an age of majority and the age for mandatory retirement. As such, age distinction in Canadian society must be re-examined to determine if they are justifiable in today's society. There are other statutes that contain age distinctions and I know that these will also be considered by the House.

Section 28 of the Charter stipulates that Charter rights are guaranteed equally to men and women. Any distinctions made on the basis of sex must be examined carefully to determine if they result in adverse consequences which cannot be justified.

• (1130)

Mental and physical disability are enumerated grounds in Section 15 of the Charter. In recent years Canadian society has become more aware of and concerned about the treatment of disabled persons. The Canadian Human Rights Act prohibits discrimination on grounds of physical or mental disability. It is entirely possible that an assessment of reasonable limits under the Charter will consider factors similar to those used under human rights legislation.

Human rights legislation in all jurisdictions in Canada identify race as a prohibited ground of discrimination. However, Section 25 states that the guarantees in the Charter of certain rights and freedoms—

—shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada—

[Translation]

Section 15 applies as well to the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act. Two basic questions come to mind concerning citizenship: first, the requirements an applicant must meet to become a citizen and, second, the obligations inherent in the status of citizen—and this will certainly be the focus of discussions.

[English]

Although marital status is not an enumerated ground under Section 15 of the Charter, every human rights code in Canada prohibits discrimination on the basis of marital status at least with respect to employment. Some of the areas of distinction that may be of concern will include equality rights in relationship to income tax, old age security, remarriage and immigration.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms must be interpreted in the light of what Canadians expect from their society. I am certain that deep feelings will be aroused by some of the questions which will be asked and some of the answers that will be sought.

The Government has the responsibility for making laws and policies. However, individual Canadians have a fundamental role in this process. So I invite all Canadians to take advantage of the opportunity to voice their opinions. It is a forum which reflects the heart of the Charter, giving Canadians the power to help shape the laws that they want and need.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clinch: Today, governments must face the challenge of providing leadership in the continuing struggle to achieve equality in this country. While the courts will play a significant role in the protection of rights, it is the responsibility of the governments of this country, along with all citizens, to promote the goal of equality. If equality is not to remain merely an abstract principle, the guarantees in Section 15 must be seen as a motivating force for governments to act.

Multiculturalism has become a recognized principle in our society and any definition of equality must encompass this reality.

[Translation]

We have to make sure that equality as advocated means something; no one should be denied opportunities for reasons which have nothing to do with his or her abilities.

[English]

The parliamentary committee represents an opportunity for Canadians to put forward their equality claims in a forum where they can contribute to legislative change. This committee offers Canadians a chance to help legislators make changes they want consistent with the Charter. By ensuring the availability of this forum, government policy choices will be made with the confidence that all claims have been heard and all claims have been assessed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

We shall now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch) on his maiden speech today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I am sure I speak for all Hon. Members when I say that we certainly hope the Member for Gloucester will participate on a daily basis in speeches, questioning the Government and ensuring that this Government always acts in the best interests of the constituents of the riding of Gloucester, because we know they are counting on him to use those good words on their behalf. We will be here to remind the Hon. Member that he must do that now that he has made his maiden speech.

We are dealing with a very important issue. As all Members know, it is almost four years since we started discussing it. We have passed the time for consultation. This is now the time for action. I believe that all representation has been made. I am sure the people who came to speak to the committee a number of years ago were not under the impression that they would have to do their work twice, that they would have to repeat everything again through a second series of consultations with this Government.

I must take some objection to some of the words the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) used yesterday. He accused a number of Hon. Members yesterday of not being here. To use his own words, he said: "There are no members of the rat pack in the House".

Mr. Kaplan: Shame.

Mr. Boudria: I am not the one who will say today that there are no members of the dense pack in this House. I will leave it at that. However, when we are discussing the Charter of Rights, one would not think that the Minister of Justice would be absent from this House for five minutes.

Mr. Nunziata: He left right after his speech.

Mr. Boudria: I cannot say that he left right after his speech yesterday, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure he would want to be here for the rest of the deliberations on this very important issue. In the event the Minister does not show up, we hope that this House will be blessed with the presence of a number of Cabinet Ministers who will participate in this debate and listen to what Hon. Members have to say. Unfortunately, at the present time there is only one such Cabinet Minister in the House.

Mr. Cadieux: Where is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner)?

Mr. Boudria: The changes we have seen in this legislation are purely cosmetic. We are talking about amending 50 pieces of legislation. I think that is getting carried away a little. For one, I do not consider that putting in the word "spouse" for "husband" and "wife" is a major change. It is purely cosmetic. The same is true when it comes to replacing the words "son" and "daughter" with "child". I hardly consider those changes very substantial when it concerns equality of people.

I think we should seize this opportunity in debating this very important issue to remind the Government of some of the commitments it has made toward equality. I think we should remind the Government of the promises it made in terms of equality for women.

• (1140)

Mr. Taylor: Which of you is making the speech.

Mr. Boudria: I await anxiously the participation in this debate of the Hon. Member who is heckling me from across the way. I am sure he will recall the meaningful commitments of the Government toward establishing equality. Equality is not achieved simply by replacing one word with another in a document, saying that everything else is too controversial and that one has to return to the drawing-board for more input. That is not leadership; that does not advance equality. There will not be equality for women until we change the situation whereby women on average make 60 per cent of the salaries of men. That is first and foremost. I, along with other Members in the House today, have children. In fact, I have a daughter, and I will never accept the notion, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you would not either, that she is worth only 60 per cent of someone else's son. That is not good enough for me and I am sure it is not good enough for all Hon. Members. Equality has to manifest itself in a way where there is financial equality, and many things will evolve from that equality.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) when she spoke about the family allowance issue. That is an important issue because if we remove from women the only money they have in many cases, we will not achieve a step toward equality. We will go one step backward, and that is not progress. We have to start by achieving financial equality. At that point, if it ever happens, perhaps we will realize that the law is unfair because family allowance cheques are always made out in the names of women. Once financial equality has been achieved, perhaps that would be a proper subject to raise. We need not worry about it this week or next week because at the pace we are going now, financial equality will not be achieved in the near future.

The other day the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) indicated very eloquently in the House that the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), the lead Ministry in terms of equality for women within the Government, was satisfied, pleased, proud and so on, to have a 1 per cent increase in the number of women participating within his own Department. That Department is supposed to set an example for all other Departments. In fact, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East calculated that it would take until the year 2025 to achieve equality within that Department, the Department which is supposed to act as a catalyst for other Departments. That is dismal. It does not coincide with some of the Tory promises during the election campaign last summer, promises in terms of fairness and equality. I should like to read a few of them to you, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure you will recall having heard some of them.

Mr. Nunziata: And making some of them.

Mr. Boudria: No, no, our Speaker is non-partisan. One promise was to work with the provinces to achieve complete pension reform which would guarantee all Canadian men and women fair and adequate pensions for their retirement years. For many years the federal Government tried to convince provincial Governments to include the child rearing drop-out provision in the Canada Pension Plan so that women could leave the workforce for a number of years without affecting their level of pension. That is not to say that the provision meant that women had to contribute while they were off work; it merely asked that they not be penalized for the years they were removed from the workforce for the purpose of child rearing.

Who was against this provision and fought the federal Government for years and years? It was the Conservative Premier of the Province of Ontario. Even after all other provinces wanted to end the present structure and opt for the child rearing drop-out provision, Ontario refused. The provinces must be in accord before changes are made to the Canada Pension Plan. I am sure the House is aware that the CPP does not have a Quebec component. Therefore Ontario represents greater than a third of the population of the country and has an effective veto over changes to that plan. It used that veto for years to stop the child rearing drop-out provision from coming into effect. That is a dismal effort in terms of equality.

Only recently have we seen a last minute, deathbed repentance on the part of the Conservative Government of Ontario which now claims to be ready for this particular change. It is taking a long time to reach this point, and women have been penalized because of the actions of the Government of Ontario which refused the change. It refused this change because it had borrowed extensively from the pension fund and did not want to add benefits in that it would have to repay some of the funds it owed. In order not to repay, it told the women of Ontario that they could not get the increase in benefits they deserved which the rest of the country and the federal Government wanted to give them. That is the sad record of the CPP.

I should like to continue with some of the Tory promises in terms of achieving equality, particularly for women. Government Members promised to make the federal Public Service a model to be followed in regard to equality of women in the workplace. I have already enumerated what the Minister of Labour is advocating. I do not read in this particular promise that the Government would act as a catalyst for the private sector from the year 2025 and on. This was not advocated during their campaign. Another promise was to implement an effective affirmative action program with adequate control, monitoring and evaluation mechanisms within the federal Public Service, its agents and Crown corporations. They have not exactly lived up to that one either. The effort has been pretty poor.

Another promise was to hold an economic summit to establish national objectives. It may have been held, but I do not think it has been successful. Also it was promised that at the conference the question of barriers to women's economic equality would be a top priority. People watching the television last weekend and listening to what the government had to say on various issues discovered that this was not a priority by any stretch of the imagination.

In order to achieve equality, we must start by offering the financial equality to which I referred earlier. As well, we listened to a discussion of the issue of spousal abuse. Of course, spousal abuse is a euphemism for wife battering. As we know, in about 95 per cent of the cases the victim is the female and the aggressor is the male.

• (1150)

While a Member of the Ontario Legislature, I had the opportunity of serving on a parliamentary committee which looked into this very important issue. It is indeed a sad one. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood raised this issue. She indicated that one in 10 women were beaten regularly by their male spouses. That is quite true, but I would like to add to that. The operative word here is "regularly". The real figure is even worse than the one we heard referred to a little earlier. The prospect is actually sadder than some of us would think it is and that is unfortunate.

Perhaps we must remind ourselves very frequently of the important issue of spousal abuse. The issue of financial equality to which I referred a while ago is closely tied to that issue. It is not tied into the fact that the wife is the victim but it is tied into the fact that the wife is the victim regularly. Many times a woman is in a situation which is almost inescapable, as we learned while sitting on the parliamentary committee. There are many occasions on which women leave their households but because of financial pressures and all kinds of other pressures, they must return to places where they are being battered because there does not seem to be any other alternative offered.

There are a variety of other issues as well which I do not wish to deal with any deeper at this particular point in time. Wife beating is nevertheless just another way of describing that general malaise that will not correct itself until we begin by having financial equality for women. We start with financial equality and then we will worry about the other issues. It is only through financial equality that we will begin to accomplish anything.

I heard the Hon. Member for Gloucester say that the equality rights of the Charter at the present time do not refer to marital status. Of course, as we know, the list in Section 15 of the Charter of Rights is not exhaustive. In other words, it describes the protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination, but it is not an exhaustive list. I am sure all of us here in the House today and all Canadians want to end any discrimination in terms of marital status as well.

I would like to speak very briefly about age discrimination because I think it is an increasingly important issue. I know that a few of us here are losing a few hairs or are getting a little grey on top. I think it is about time that we started to worry increasingly about that particular topic. The baby boom generation is getting older and older. This issue has always been an important one but the numbers are so significantly larger now that the retirement age legislation that now exists is not only discriminatory but very soon will be totally impractical.

When looking at some of the so-called major amendments to these 50 pieces of legislation, we see that the Pilotage Act has been amended by deleting the age factor in the calculation of intervals between examinations. In other words, the frequency of medical examinations will not increase with age. However, we see no reference in the amendments to changing the mandatory retirement age of 65. If we are going to amend that piece of legislation in reference to age, why amend only part of it and not the other? It would seem to me that the most discriminatory thing of all is the fact that compulsory retirement age remains 65.

Mr. Speaker, Government is facing difficult decisions with this Bill—no one will deny that. However, the Government was elected to make difficult decisions, and a review and referral of the question to a parliamentary committee is unacceptable. I do not really have anything against the amendments as proposed, but I must point out that they are cosmetic rather than of any real substance. We do intend to support the Bill, but we would like to see amendments that go much farther than the present ones, so that Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will become effective as soon as possible, to protect the rights of Canadians.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not have a chance to talk about the consultation process, in the little time available to him to discuss the Bill's shortcomings. I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member, who is well aware of this Government's tendency to launch consultation projects. What does the Hon. Member think about the consultation being proposed, in the absence of any decision by the Government to act responsibly with respect to equality issues?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, personnally, I think the time for consultation is over and has been for quite some time. Canadians have appeared before the parliamentary committee in the past, so there has already been consultation. I fail to see what we would accomplish today by having Canadians take part in the debate and voice their claims again in order to obtain their rights. In drafting the text, Mr. Speaker, we already agreed that these were rights and not privileges.

If we ask them to take part in another round of consultations and to make representations, are we not in fact saying that these rights are not rights but privileges, Mr. Speaker? I think this is entirely unacceptable, and I would like to add, and

I am sure my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is aware of this, that the Government is entirely mistaken, Mr. Speaker, and especially the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), when he informed Hon. Members yesterday that the previous Government, the Liberal Government, had done no work at all on this question. Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, Cabinet documents are not available to the new Minister, so he is in no position to accuse Members of the previous Government of having failed to work on this question. He does not know. In any case, the Minister does not know what the previous Government did, but we can see for ourselves that the Minister has done nothing at all.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, when the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) was a Member of the Ontario Legislature, he fought very hard day in and day out for equality rights for women, visible minorities, the aged and the disadvantaged in our society. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that, as part of the constitutional compromise made in 1982 resulting in the entrenchment of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Constitution Act, it was agreed that Section 15 of the Charter would be delayed for three years in order to give the provincial Governments and the federal Government an opportunity to conduct extensive audits of their respective legislation. It was delayed in order to give the provincial Governments and the federal Government an opportunity to bring those laws into conformity and compliance with Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

• (1200)

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell was a member of the Ontario Legislature. As I have indicated, he fought very hard for minority rights. He is aware that the Government of Ontario has done precious little to bring its laws into conformity with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and specifically Section 15. All the Government of Ontario did was produce a 400-page document to articulate the controversial issues. The Government of Ontario has failed miserably in implementing changes in provincial laws which would ensure compliance and full equality in provincial legislation.

My question to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is: Does he believe that the Government of Ontario has proceeded quickly enough to implement the necessary changes in Ontario laws to ensure full compliance with Section 15 of the Charter?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, indeed, that is an excellent question. I am sure we all agree that the provinces played a major role in this. But I think the provinces should have seized the opportunity to reassert their commitment toward minorities, women and all people who are disadvantaged, financially or otherwise, and those who are discriminated against. I know that equality has been a low priority for the Government of Ontario. Of course, it published and distributed a very extensive document, in a manner which was not dissimilar to what the federal Government is doing now. The matter is a hot potato. It raises certain controversies. So information was distributed to inform the people of the important issues and the Government waited to see what would happen. It requires a bit more than that if we are going to look into the fundamental rights and freedoms of people.

We measure how civilized a society is by how well it treats its minorities and disadvantaged people, not by how strong the people are. In all societies there are strong people, whether it is or it is not a civilized society. What makes the so-called civilized societies different is the factor of how well the minorities are treated. We must be willing to give the minorities the priority which they deserve and we must be willing to make difficult decisions. They may be decisions on affirmative action.

We have witnessed the reluctance of the provincial Government of Ontario to deal with that issue. Affirmative action programs in Ontario have been delayed and delayed, and nothing has been done by the provincial Government. It has only provided years and years of indecision. I think the best way to summarize the policies of the Government of Ontario is that the best decision is indecision.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: One last question. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on his last answer. Concerning Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the table of contents does not include the Official Languages Act, and I am wondering whether the Hon. Member might give us his impression or view as to why the Government did not deem it appropriate to list the Official Languages Act as being vital to the minority groups he mentioned? As everyone knows, the language issue is important in Canada, and a controversial subject in many regions. I should like to ask him if, in his opinion, there is a major reason why the Government avoided or forgot about including the Official Languages Act in Bill C-27.

Mr. Boudria: First, Mr. Speaker, may I commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for all the work he has done with respect to the official languages. I see some Members on the other side who have a somewhat different reaction about this. Even Conservative Members will acknowledge the hard work done in the field of official languages by the former chairman of the Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs. If Conservative back-benchers are not satisfied, they can join the debate.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say briefly that the primacy of the official languages must be upheld, of course. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier made that point on many occasions in a Private Member's Public Bill introduced in the House, and I would have hoped that the Government would have jumped on that opportunity to reaffirm its policy on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) on debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, if the applause keeps up I will not have time to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: I can tell that I am very popular when I rise in this House!

It is a pleasure to address a few remarks to Bill C-27 which, as many Hon. Members have indicated, is an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Bill C-27 has been described as an omnibus Bill. It amends over 50 separate pieces of legislation. In preparing this legislation, the Government reviewed in excess of 1,100 separate statutes in an attempt to bring them into line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In particular, the Government attempted to bring those statutes into line with the Charter prior to April 17 of this year. Of course, that date is very significant.

Some Hon. Members have previously referred to the significance of that date. I would like to remind Hon. Members of the significance of the equality section, Section 15(1), which reads as follows:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

That is a very important section of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

It is interesting to note that there is another section of the Charter which limited the time in which Section 15(1) would come into effect. That is Section 32(2) which reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

The Constitution Act of Canada and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into force by proclamation on April 17, 1982. Three years from that date, which is a few short days from now, Section 15(1) of the Act will finally come into force and be part of the law of this country. I have been shocked in the past, Mr. Speaker, to find that, notwithstanding my belief and understanding that this was not only part of the basic rights and freedoms of this country from time immemorial, but part of the rights recognized around the world as basic rights and freedoms, the courts of this country really did not recognize these rights and, frankly, I suspect do not recognize these rights at this present time, and will not recognize them until April 17 of this year.

• (1210)

As a lawyer practising law a year or two ago in Metropolitan Toronto, I had the occasion to raise this point in a case in court involving a matter where I felt very strongly that the accused party had been discriminated against. I referred to the common law of the Province of Ontario. I referred to the Charter of Rights and, in particular, to Section 15(1) of the Charter of Rights. I was shocked, quite frankly, when the judge pointed out to me that, according to Section 32(2) of the Charter, in fact this section does not come into effect until April 17, 1985. So it is not in effect even at this time.

I always thought, as I indicated, Mr. Speaker, that these rights which are enunciated here were part of the basic rights and freedoms of this country, that they had been part of the basic rights and freedoms which evolved from the British common law which is in force in this country, apart from the Province of Quebec. I believed these rights were in force as a result of importation, perhaps one might say, from other countries such as the United States and France with their Bill of Rights, and that it was imported into this country certainly by the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights of which we are signing members. I thought it was in force in this country through the Bill of Rights which a former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, introduced into this House and which was passed into law. I always thought that, as a result of that long chain of events, this was and always had been part of the rights and freedoms of every canadian. But that is not so. Mr. Speaker, and it is still not so today and will not be so until April 17 of this year.

I am particularly delighted, therefore, notwithstanding that I do not usually like to see the days of my life zip by, that we are coming up to that date so that at long last all Canadians will have these rights and freedoms which are set out in Section 15(1), the right that every individual is equal before and under the law.

Some Hon. Members of this House have indicated that they have many concerns about this Bill. One concern is that the Bill does not go far enough, that it does not take into account all of the positions put forward in the past by many different groups and organizations. They have concerns that the special committee, which will be headed by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) and represented by Hon. Members on all sides of this House, and the hearings which it is going to hold, is merely a duplication of things which have happened in the past.

I was interested to note, Mr. Speaker, some of the comments which Hon. Members have made in that regard and the points to which they have directed their attention. In particular, I note that a good deal of attention has been paid to the question of the equality rights of women. That is a very important and significant area which obviously must be addressed. But it seems to me that Hon. Members of the Opposition have overlooked the fact that it was but a week or two ago that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) rose in this House and announced some very important and significant improvements and strides as far as women's rights in this country are concerned. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that that announcement had to do not only with the rights of women but also took into account the rights of visible minorities, the disabled and native people. It provided for equality of opportunity for all of those groups in hiring, training, promotion and in pay and provided that this new policy which was announced by the Minister would apply to the federal Public Service, to federal Crown Corporations, to all industries which are regulated by the federal Government and to all businesses doing business and having contracts with the federal Government worth over $200,000. That took into account and affected some one million employees in this country.

So it is not as if nothing has been done. It is not as if this Bill is the only initiative which the Government is taking with respect to the question of equality rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This Bill is only one of many initiatives the Government is taking and has been taking. Another initiative in which I have been involved in particular is Bill C-18 which amends the Criminal Code. This Bill has been part of extensive hearings by the Standing Committee of this House on Justice and Legal Affairs for a number of months and represents a great many amendments to the Criminal Code. In particular, the committee deals with the question of writs of assistance. For some reason or other, although that Bill was introduced in the House prior to the Christmas recess, we are still dealing with it. Obviously, there were great numbers of people who were interested in making submissions to the committee on that point. I think that in itself is a good indication that people across this country want to be heard and consulted. They do not want to consider that they have already been consulted on these issues; they want their voice heard whenever a subject of this sort is raised. I am sure that they are going to come out in large numbers to meet the special committee dealing with this subject. I am sure they are going to have some very important things to say and that their words will be heeded. I am also sure there will be recommendations forthcoming from that committee which will be helpful to this House in formulating the proper types of amendments to the legislation which will finally deal with these subjects, hopefully once and for all.

Another point which many Hon. Members of the Opposition have raised has to do with age discrimination and the whole question of the compulsory retirement age. That is also a very significant and important aspect and one which is certainly not clear cut. I do not believe any Hon. Members of this House would really suggest that there is a clear-cut answer which everyone in this country would rally to and support right at this present time.

I remember personally, Mr. Speaker, a few short years ago, as the mayor of a major municipality in this country, dealing with this issue with a member of our own fire department. He was a man who came up to retirement age not only under the terms of a pension plan but under the terms of a collective agreement with the firefighters' association. He wanted to carry on beyond the mandatory retirement age but was opposed in that wish by the trade union of which he had long been a member. That was quite understandable. The union had legitimate reasons for opposing this man carrying on beyond the mandatory retirement age.

On the other hand, all of us know good and legitimate reasons why people should carry on beyond those now mandatory retirement ages. The question is not clear cut, Mr. Speaker. There are strong arguments on both sides. That is a question with which, I am sure, the special committee will be dealing and will have many submissions on.

There are a vast array of other issues as well. If one looks at the number of subjects which are being dealt with by the special committee in its consultations, one finds it involves a vast array of subjects other than the very limited ones which have been raised by Hon. Members of the Oppsition to date. For example, the question of disability as it applies to the Armed Forces; immigration; voting; unemployment insurance; the question of sexual orientation; citizenship and whether rights can be restricted to Canadian citizens or should apply to all Canadian residents.

That in particular is a very controversial subject. As recently as this past weekend I had people in my own constituency suggesting to me that we should be restricting old age security payments to citizens of this country. It is items such as this which are certainly not clear cut and need a complete public airing. That is what the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is going to be dealing with and I am sure we are all going to benefit by it.

Having said all that, I want to reiterate that this is not the only piece of legislation the Government has introduced so far dealing with the subject of rights and freedoms, and it will not be the last. We have this Bill, C-27. Then there is Bill C-18. There is already an amendment to the Indian Act which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has introduced. There will be amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, Canada Elections Act and the Income Tax Act, just to name a very few, which will have an impact on this whole issue.

The most important thing of all is the fact that we will on April 17 finally have those equality rights enshrined in the laws of this country, rights that we do not have at the present time. The general principles will be enshrined and we may want to go beyond those general principles. We may want to extend those rights even further. I think that is really what the members of the Opposition are talking about. They are not talking about bringing things into line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms; they are really talking about possibly going beyond the base limit that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides. I think those are the things that we are going to be dealing with in the near future when the subcommittee reports, and they will be very important issues.

Having said all that, I think all of us as Canadians should be looking forward with great anticipation and rejoicing to the dawning of April 17, 1985 when finally, once and for all, we have these equality rights enshrined in the law of this land.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) and it has to do with mobility. It has been said—

[English]

On the mobility question, especially in the construction industry in Quebec, we have quite a problem. I had a case in my riding where a young Canadian from British Columbia moved to Quebec. He had to follow his wife because she was transferred to Montreal. He is a pipeline welder and he found a job but unfortunately he could not get a permit to work. Can the Hon. Member comment on what Bill C-27 does concerning mobility rights throughout this country?

Mr. Redway: Certainly mobility rights are very significant and the Charter of Rights speaks to that issue. Regardless of the diversity, regardless of the fact that there are many different regions, this is one country. We all have different points of view and different perspectives based on our geographical location and perhaps our cultural origins, but at the same time it is one country and everyone, regardless of how proud they are of their own region or their own ethnic and cultural background, is enormously proud of the fact that they are Canadians. To me that means any Canadian should be able to work in any part of this country.

At the same time we should not only look at the question of working in different parts of the country, but the economic and commercial life of this country should also be open and equally available to all. Certainly that is what the Charter of Rights is all about and I hope we will not see this sort of thing in the future. I hope that from now on we will have a country where people can move from region to region to work, and where people can truly be proud to be Canadians in every part of the country.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the views of the Hon. Member about whether he feels this legislation is an adequate response by the Government to the obligation it has to review our laws and bring them into compliance with the Charter. At page 6 of the discussion paper put out by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) he makes an interesting concession. He says that Section 15 reinforces the responsibility that governments have to shape laws, policies and programs to the goal of equality. But then we have this pathetically short statute which deals mostly with questions of grammar and semantics and very little with rights.

Mr. Boyer: Read the rest of the sentence.

Mr. Kaplan: The rest of the sentence says that the Government alone cannot achieve equality.

Mr. Boyer: Right on.

Mr. Kaplan: That is the Government's opinion, but I am emphasizing the admission by the Government that it has the responsibility to shape laws, policies and programs to the goal of equality, as well as to show some leadership.

Is the Hon. Member satisfied with the leadership that is shown to other governments by this measly piece of legislation which the Government has put before us? Why does he not think that the Government had a responsibility to deal with all the other areas where it is so obvious that changes are required to bring laws into compliance with the Charter? Why is the buck being passed to a consultation process and a parliamentary committee when the duties of the Government are recognized so clearly in this sentence of this document?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the "measly little Bill" that the Hon. Member refers to is 111 pages long. While I have been here admittedly a short time, I cannot remember another Bill introduced in the House which was 111 pages long. That is not to say that the Bill contains all of the amendments and changes in legislation that the Hon. Member might like to see; but as I explained in my earlier remarks, this is only one of a number of initiatives the Government is taking and has taken in order to bring the laws of this country into line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

For instance, the Hon. Member well knows that Bill C-18 deals with the rights of citizens. He is a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and knows full well that that is one of the issues being dealt with in that particular Bill. He knows as well, I am sure, because he was here in the House, that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has announced that policy relating to the rights of women.

I referred to the impact of that particular policy and those new regulations, but one of the things I neglected to comment on was the fact that involved in that was putting in place a procedure whereby the federal Public Service and the Government are sitting down to bring forward a policy—hopefully we will have an interim report by the end of June—to provide for equal pay for work of equal value in the Public Service for women, minorities, the disabled and native groups. That to my mind is a great step forward and something I am sure the Hon. Member supports and wants to see.

What disturbs me, of course, is that the Hon. Member and the Government he was part of had a long, long time to bring forward legislation of that sort. They had 16 years rather than six months to do it in. For some reason the Hon. Member and the former Government did not do that. Now, for an unexplained reason, he is being highly critical of the initiatives of our Government in those respects. I hope the Hon. Member will look at these things and give credit where credit is due. We tried to do that in the past whenever his Government brought forward good initiatives. I am sure the Hon. Member will do the same for us.

• (1230)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, April 17, 1982 was certainly a landmark date in terms of the proclamation of the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Toward that end hundreds, perhaps thousands, of minority groups and individuals came to Ottawa, at great expense, to make their views known to the Government. Hundreds and thousands of other individuals wrote to the Government on the various issues that this Bill addresses. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) indicated that he has met with a number of individuals and groups in his constituency.

I would like to follow up on the earlier question that was asked of him and ask what he can tell those minority interest groups that are once again being asked to come before another committee. Perhaps on April 17, 1982 they thought that they were given a special privilege which others did not have and that some social equality was being undertaken. They assumed that on the proclamation date of April 17, 1982 that would come to be. What can he tell those groups when they are now invited by the Government to come back to repeat the same story they told the Government and Parliament only three years ago? How can we justify calling those groups in again when we heard that message loud and clear the first time?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to answer that question. I believe the consultations which occurred previously were directed specifically to the general principles of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Those principles were not brought into effect, as far as equality rights are concerned, as of April 17, 1982; they will only come into effect on April 17, 1985. On April 17, 1985 you, I and all Members of the House will be able to tell those groups that at long last they do have the rights and freedoms on which they made their positions known in 1981 and 1982. Those rights will finally come to fruition.

At that time they were dealing with the general principles which I had always felt we had in our law. However, apparently we do not and will not until April 17 of this year. They came to make their views known on those general principles. At the same time, no doubt, they made known their views on particular issues and items of concern to them. Now, within the framework of a general principle that guarantees equality for all, they will have the right to put forward those views and have them shaped within that context and finally dealt with. Hopefully, they will all come away from the round of consultations which is about to commence very pleased and content that this is the country which we always thought it to be, a country where equality reigns and a country that we can all be very proud of.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I was fortunate enough to have been a member of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons when Canada's Constitution was before it. At that time groups of handicapped persons appeared before that committee to argue for inclusion of their rights and for exclusion of discriminatory practices that had gone on in this country for very many years. I also sat as a member of the Justice Committee which was finally able to convince the then Government to include prohibitions of discrimination against disabled individuals on all grounds whereas previously the only exclusion had been in the area of employment.

I was also a member of the special House of Commons Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped which produced a report entitled Obstacles which was tabled in the House. That report was highly praised by Members on all sides of the House and by disabled groups and individuals across the country. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this report has become something of a bible in terms of issues affecting the disabled community in countries across the world. I mention that for a number of reasons. In Bill C-27 the Government missed a golden opportunity finally to do something that would be of great benefit to the disabled and handicapped community in the country.

Other speakers have addressed issues of equality with respect to women's issues and others. I do not want to repeat those arguments except to say that I am in agreement with much of what has been said. In so far as the disabled are concerned, the Government not only missed an opportunity but appeared to be avoiding accepting any responsibility in this area.

I listened with great interest to the comments of my good friend, the Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I was associated with him before on the Board of Governors of Centennial College in Scarborough and know him very well. He was extolling the virtues of this particular piece of legislation, saying that magically on April 17 every Canadian will be in a position to enjoy every right that previously had been denied to them under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I am not as convinced as he apparently is.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, discrimination is a very subtle thing which is very difficult to prove. Simply by saying certain things in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms without having enforceable regulations to accompany them will not magically end the discrimination in several weeks' time when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms comes into full force and effect. I predict that it will not come into full force and effect until there have been many, many court challenges under the provisions of that charter. It will be a very expensive proposition for many groups which simply do not have the financial resources to press the case before the courts.

I express disappointment, not only on the contents of the Bill but also on the discussion paper which was tabled several weeks ago by the Minister of Justice entitled Equality Issues in Federal Law. When I took a look at the discussion points that were put forward by the Department of Justice with respect to disabilities, I found the terminology and language used in those sections to be quite offensive. Throughout the points that it raises, the Justice Department continues to perpetuate the myth that a disabled or handicapped person is somehow ill or sick. The Minister of Justice would be well advised to ask his officials in the Department to obtain some copies of the Obstacles report. I would be happy to send them a copy.

The emphasis of that report was to dispel the myth that a person with a disability or a handicap is somehow suffering from an illness. Those people are not ill, they are simply disabled. They are whole in every other respect. However, the thrust of the points made by the Department of Justice in this paper is that they are ill or sick. I find that offensive and it displays a mentality that exists not only in some parts of the Government but in the Canadian public and people elsewhere. We must dispel that myth in order to come to grips with our collective discrimination against people who have a disability.

I would have been impressed if the Minister of Justice had said that in order to enforce any rights under the Charter it is necessary to have public funding. Disabled groups simply do not have the funding that is necessary to enable them to press cases before the court finally to determine what their rights are. There is a real need for such funding, which in fact was apparently recognized by the Conservative Party during the last election campaign. During the campaign the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped circulated a questionnaire to every candidate and each Party. Several weeks ago COPOH circulated the response to those questionnaires to all Members of the House.

One of the questions asked of the Government when it was the Official Opposition was if it would support the provision of that kind of defence fund to those organizations and individuals in order to press their cases before the courts. The Conservatives gave the assurance that they would do so but only to organizations concerned with issues which the Government considered to be of national importance.

Organizations do not necessarily reflect the views of individual disabled Canadians at the community level. Surely if the Government still intends to provide those necessary funds for disabled organizations, it should also consider implementing our recommendations in the Obstacles report. Disabled people are quite capable of looking after their own interests.

Why does the Government not consider making funds available to COPOH and other consumer self-help organizations for them to use as advocates on behalf of disabled individuals? We made that recommendation in the Obstacles report. That committee, which was made up of Members from all sides of the House, was totally non-partisan and I hope that anything I am saying now is not construed as being partisan because that is not my intention. I believe that this particular issue, above all, is one that is non-partisan and one which every Member of the House can agree with.

I do not stand here to say that the NDP is the only Party and I am the only Member who cares about disabled individuals because I know that that is not the case. For instance, I know that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crosbie) was quite concerned and interested in the committee's report with respect to disabilities affecting the native population. Their difficulties are entirely different from those facing disabled individuals living in urban communities. In northern communities, for example, the fact that there are no roads makes it extremely difficult to be mobile in a wheelchair. Transportation costs make it very expensive to own or repair a wheelchair in the north, and when one considers that disabled people are at the low end of the income scale, it becomes virtually impossible for that individual to have the kind of mobility that such a device makes available to them. I know that the Minister is aware of these problems facing native peoples and wants to address them.

The assumptions made in the discussion paper entitled Equality Issues in Federal Law are unfortunate. There is a bald statement that individuals who are disabled may not be suited to be employed in Canada's Armed Forces. I see absolutely no reason why an individual who is confined to a wheelchair could not be employed by the Armed Forces in the communications area. No one even argues that a person in a wheelchair should be on the front line in an infantry troop, but we must open our minds and stop assuming that a disabled person has every opportunity closed to them. Surely a better approach would be to consider how best we can assist a disabled person to fit into an employment field rather than putting up other barriers, preventing adequate employment opportunities for him and saying that his disability makes him unemployable in certain categories. I would ask the Department of Justice to reconsider its approach to developing legislation to assist disabled individuals.

With respect to immigration, we heard many witnesses before the Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped. We heard about reuniting families from around the world. Our Government could set an example for other governments in the world by asking if it is fair to continue to deny a family the right to reunite simply because a child whom they were forced to leave in the country from which they emigrated happens to be developmentally handicapped. I suggest that is not fair at all. The argument used for preventing their reunion is that the child is developmentally handicapped—commonly referred to as mentally retarded—and the child would be a burden on the state in terms of health costs. That is the argument which is made. It helps to cement the myth that persons who are developmentally handicapped are somehow mentally ill. They are not, they are mentally disabled.

• (1250)

A young child who was developmentally handicapped appeared before the committee in Vancouver. He made the point that he deeply resented being forced to be represented by the Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded. In fact, he wrote his presentation himself; it was one of the best papers presented to the committee. A member of the committee said: "If you don't like being referred to as being mentally retarded, what else would you like to be called?" The child said: "Simply because I have an IQ of 60 does not mean to say that I am stupid. Members of Parliament might be stupid but I ain't". The person who asked the question deserved that answer.

In the early stages of the committee hearings we had problems understanding the difficulties faced by these people.

By the end of the hearings we certainly had a greater and much deeper degree of understanding about what it meant to be disabled in society. If one is not personally involved, one cannot fully understand some of the difficulties of disabled persons because one does not have the disability.

There are several other points I could make, but I do not have much time left. Some of the bodies which make regulations affecting disabled individuals could be forced under pending legislation to start becoming much more sensitive to the needs of various groups. For example, the CRTC makes regulations covering such things as telephones. It has yet to deal in a forthright way with employed individuals who are hard of hearing and who are denied access to telephones because those systems are not compatible with hearing aids. That is an area upon which the Government could move quickly so that the telephones of people with hearing problems could be made compatible and they would be able to maintain employment. Surely the Government could pass legislation which would require that to take place. It is a very simple device. I am no great supporter of Bell Canada, but in this case it is being a very responsible corporate citizen. Bell Canada has made its telephones fully accessible to deaf and hard of hearing people. However, foreign importers of telephones refuse to do that. Surely the Government has a responsibility to tell those importers that if they want to import telephones into Canada they have to be accessible to individuals who require hearing aids in order to function fully in society.

The last point I should like to make would not cost the Government a red cent, not a dime. It should finally do what organizations representing the disabled have been calling for over the last two years. It should establish a subcommittee on disabilities and handicaps of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, for example. These organizations and disabled individuals must have a forum in which to bring their concerns before people who are making decisions on their behalf; in other words, legislators.

I welcome this travelling committee. I think it is a great idea. It will fill a void. It will allow the Government to hear the real concerns of those individuals. I have no qualms about it. In fact, I wish I was a member of the committee. However, the one productive thing which the House could do quickly would be to establish a subcommittee on disabilities and handicaps under the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. It would go a long way toward allowing people who need a voice to be heard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member a question. I listened this morning to Hon. Members praising the fact that certain things were changing. They indicated that persons should have mobility rights, the right to work in any part of the country, and not to be discriminated against because of where they live.

The Hon. Member is familiar with the high unemployment areas of Canada. He has visited northern and rural areas. Very shortly the summer student employment program will start. Because of Section 15 of the Charter, on Monday of this week the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) sent a telex to all Manpower offices in Canada removing the residency requirement as it related to potential employees on summer student employment projects. She indicated that it was no longer a requirement for a student to be resident in a community or an area to which the job related or for which referrals went out. The Hon. Member knows that when grants are given to communities in high unemployment areas, they expect students in the community to work on the grants. In fact, there would be absolute war in some communities where normally jobs are not available if students from major metropolitan areas with available jobs were hired to work in those communities.

Mr. McDermid: It works the opposite way.

Mr. Baker: I will deal with that Hon. Member this afternoon when the Minister makes her statement on the energy pricing agreement. Does the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) agree with the telex the Minister sent on Monday? There are exceptions to the Charter in terms of affirmative action programs, and the Government approves money to create employment in a high unemployment area. Her telex indicated that this summer the residency requirement would no longer be in place and that Manpower offices would have to match jobs with students across the country by computer. Does the Hon. Member agree with that particular aspect of the Charter?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the telegram to which the Hon. Member referred. However, as a general principle, I think the community is better able to determine its own priorities by itself.

My concern in terms of employment opportunities does not centre on the summer student employment program. It concerns a number of areas affecting disabled persons. We cannot isolate unemployment and only say that it is the major problem of the disabled community. Of course it is, in that without a job one cannot become a whole person. However, each one of their problems is synonymous with the other. We cannot talk about providing a person with decent and adequate employment without providing them with an education or access to an education. We cannot talk about education and employment without talking about access to transportation, to get them from home and to the job. We cannot talk about adequate employment without talking about deinstitutionalization, getting people into the community and supporting them. All those matters are intertwined. May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FIREARMS

STUDENT KILLED IN MONTREAL HOLDUP

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday evening, March 14, a tragedy of an unspeakable nature occurred in my constituency. A 19-year-old student by the name of Emmanuel Tavares was shot to death in an attempted holdup while tending to his family's convenience store during the dinner hour. He was described as the type of kid every man would like to have as a son. His father said that he went to school and helped the family. He did not have a girlfriend, only his books; indeed, three or four books were open in front of him at the time of the shooting.

He was a former member of the Sun Youth Organization where he played football and baseball. He was six feet two inches tall, and weighed 250 pounds. He always volunteered to help out if needed, it was said.

At his funeral the parish priest stated that it was in the hands of young people to do something about it; not to waste his life but to make it into something positive and to do something to prevent this kind of tragedy from ever happening again. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has a private Member's Bill on gun control on the Order Paper, a Bill which will be debated soon. I would hope that Members of the House will allow it to proceed to committee so that we can study the additional steps that may be taken to see that this young man did not die in vain.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

COURT BAN ON MEARES ISLAND LOGGING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's decision by the B.C. Court of Appeal to prohibit logging on Meares Island until the issue of Indian rights has been addressed is certainly cause for celebration. We can all be happy that some of the oldest, largest stands of cedar in the world, some more than 1,500 years old, are to be saved, at least temporarily, and hopefully permanently, from the mechanized death and destruction of clear cutting that MacMillan Bloedel had in mind.

We can be happy that on the eve of a constitutional conference to determine the nature and shape of the treaty and aboriginal rights of Indian people, a Canadian court has seen fit to make such a decision out of respect for the need to address the issue of Indian rights. The rights of Indian people are realities which Governments and corporations should not, and in this case now cannot, ignore.

Let us hope that the day comes when Indian people do not have to go to court in order to have their rights respected, and let us hope that the provincial Government in British Columbia will finally see the wisdom of taking their rights seriously and will get down to working out a resource policy that takes Indian rights into account, as well as taking into account the need for protecting ecologically invaluable areas like Meares Island. While it is at it, the British Columbia Government should also declare its support for the proposal to create national marine and terrestrial parks in South Moresby.

PUBLIC WORKS

EXPROPRIATIONS AT MIRABEL—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT PROTOCOL

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Yesterday, at Sainte-Scholastique, Mr. Speaker, we experienced emotionally charged moments when, at 2.20 p.m., after 16 years of struggles, the expropriated landowners of Mirabel signed an agreement protocol to settle one of the many despicable confrontations sparked by the previous administration.

Mr. Speaker, barely six months went by since our Government promised to reach a humanitarian settlement concerning what is widely labelled as a white elephant and a monumental error on the part of the Liberal Government.

No matter what our colleagues in the Opposition may say, consultation and a humane approach to the problems experienced by those people have led to progress in and the impending settlement of this case. Whatever the views of the handful of former Government Members who survived the onslaught, the approach advocated by our Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney—dialogue and consultation—has given and will give results.

When the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) signed this historic agreement yesterday, he proved that our Government is on the right track by being open with the people.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my constituents of Argenteuil-Papineau, and more particularly to my constituents of Mirabel, that the experience I had yesterday was as exciting as the evening of September 4, 1984.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

COMPLAINT HOTLINE PROPOSAL

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, we have all read and heard of the many horror stories with regard to government waste and inefficient use of taxpayers' funds. Such waste amounts to the millions of dollars. I know that all of us here in the House are concerned. I know that taxpayers across the country are concerned. Therefore I am seeking the assistance of all Hon. Members of the House in supporting a motion that I am having drafted at the present time and will be placing on the Order Paper, a motion which will allow the federal Government to install, from coast to coast, a hotline to a special department or agency in Ottawa that would take complaints or suggestions on government waste as Canadians see and observe it firsthand.

It is my firm conviction that, in this way, taxpayers can be encouraged to protect their investment in the federal Government of Canada, their tax dollars, by observing what is happening in the hinterlands of this great country of ours. It is also my contention that federal government employees would be encouraged to use the hotline to report government waste as they observe it within the Departments—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE PRIME MINISTER

VISIT OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT—ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I share the sentiment of the many Canadians who expressed shock and dismay when they realized that Her Excellency the Governor General, Madame Jeanne Sauvé, would not participate in ceremonies surrounding the visit of the President of the United States.

It has been alleged that Mr. Reagan's visit was a working visit, not an official visit from a head of State, but the welcoming ceremonies for the American President definitely made it look otherwise. What every Canadian ought to know, Mr. Speaker, is that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), cheap, self-centred and jealous, was afraid that the media and the TV cameras would focus coverage on a great lady, our Governor General, Madame Jeanne Sauvé, Indeed, I am convinced that such a cheap behaviour will be the downfall of the Prime Minister and gradually undermine his evident hopes of being a great statesman one day.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, as of April 1 of this year Canadian workers who, through no fault of their own will lose their jobs, will be dealt yet another economic blow. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has decreed that severance and vacation pay will now be used to reduce UIC payouts to the workers. Clearly this step is an outright theft of the equity that these workers have built up over their work life.

In the community of Ear Falls, the corporate sector, with the blessing of the Government, has closed a mine, thus putting hundreds out of work. Some of these workers were laid off before the decision to which I referred was made, and are therefore able to retain their profits from their work. Others who are to be laid off after April 1 will lose their equity.

In the community of Atikokan, construction of the hydro project is winding down and the workers there will lose their vacation benefits in order to prop up the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

The citizens of Canada do not accept this regressive attack on workers and their families, as evidenced by the petitions we have tabled over the last number of days. Many of those who have been laid off in Ear Falls and Atikokan will not find jobs easily. They do need the full benefit of UIC, payments as well as their savings throught vacation and severance pay. On behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry), and myself, I call on the Conservative Government to rescind this regressive decision.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EXCLUSION OF RIGHT TO PROPERTY

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have now recognized how confidently and methodically the Government is working to restore economic and social health to our country. Our recovery is a reality, because Canadians are sure that effort and enterprise will be fairly rewarded, and because the rules of the game are being upheld by the Government in a just, consistent, and reliable way. The process of renewal, as well as the everyday life of our country, are conducted on the basis of certain principles enumerated within the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I have risen to speak because I believe our Charter has a serious flaw.

Within any system that relies on incentive, investment, and enterprise, something important is missing when there is no guarantee of the right to private property. We are fortunate enough to live in a stable country where this right is not overtly threatened; we all exercise it more or less freely. But each day, more and more rules, regulations, legislation, and by-laws hamper the activities that should be protected by this liberty which is traditionally defined as a fundamental right, and as such must be positively protected. Only by including it in the Constitution will this liberty take its place beside other basic freedoms.

• (1410)

Let us take a progressive step by instituting the right for all Canadians to purchase or acquire property in full knowledge that this liberty has the approval and protection of our Charter. To ignore the protection of private property is to disregard one of the greatest assurances of freedom and prosperity our country enjoys today.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

THE NEW FEDERALISM

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take advantage of this opportuniry to salute our new Canadian federalism, the components of which were clear for all to see last month during the First Ministers' Conference in Regina. As a Member of this House, I had the privilege of attending the Conference as an observer. I am proud to be part of a Government that speaks with one voice, a Government that favours change within the Canadian federal system and which has taken the right approach and the appropriate means to get along with the provincial governments. This new strategy has already born fruit.

Whether we are talking about the agreement with Quebec on tourism and industrial development, worth $1.6 billion, or the agreement with Nova Scotia worth $200 million or the important agreement signed on February 11 of this year with the Province of Newfoundland—the Atlantic Accord—there has already been a visible change in the area of federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Speaker, for years the Liberals refused to sign agreements that did not fit in with their centralist approach. Since the Progressive Conservative Government came to power, Canadians have seen a new openness on the part of their Government in Ottawa. They are also seeing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but her time has expired. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

AGRICULTURE

PORK PRODUCERS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of this House to a fundamental question that today is affecting 70,000 pork producers in Canada. Two weeks ago, the Prime Minister and the President of the United States were drinking champagne together, but today the champagne has turned sour for 70,000 pork producers in Canada. Since this morning, the markets have been panicking, not only in Toronto but also in Montreal, and pork producers . . . and I see the Parliamentary Secretary who should be listening instead of shouting. The Parliamentary Secretary ought to realize that hog producers in Quebec and across Canada are on the brink of bankruptcy as a result of a unilateral decision made by the U.S. Government, and that unless drastic steps are taken today to save Canada's pork industry, it will be the Government's fault, for smiling and talking instead of making tangible gains. When it comes to taking action, the American Government thinks nothing of imposing a special tax on Canadian products.

Mr. Speaker, I predict that today, the price of pork will drop by more than 10 per cent, and within the next few days, there is going to be a major crisis for which the Members opposite will be responsible, if they neglect to react when Americans are up to dirty tricks against Canada.

PUBLIC WORKS

EXPROPRIATIONS AT MIRABEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a historic occasion, and I say historic because at long last people who bear the scars of sixteen years of unrelenting struggles can now look forward to a better future. I am referring, of course, to the expropriated landowners of Mirabel.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Roch La Salle, who in five months—yes, only five months—has shown that goodwill, fairness and justice could pave the way for a most humanitarian agreement.

It was simply a matter of sitting down and discussing so as to hear and understand one another. And the trademark of our Government and of our leader, the Right Hon. Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, is a policy of dialogue, consultation, compassion and humanism.

Unlike the previous administration which was unable to settle this case, the Progressive Conservative Government did proceed with diligence and efficiency, finally closing the book on this contentious issue which had lasted long enough.

REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in Canada there are over 12,000 people who are waiting to have their status as refugees determined by the Government. Over 2,000 of those people are awaiting a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which will decide whether they have the right to an oral hearing that, until now, has been denied to them. All observers who have studied the matter agree that those people have that right. Thousands more may enter into the same danger.

I call on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), first, to publish the report by Rabbi Plaut, which has been due for many months. She should cease the delaying of that publication. Second, I would ask that the Supreme Court decision be put before the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, if and when it is published, and that the committee be asked to recommend action on the matter of oral hearings at once.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—INVITATION TO PARTICIPATE IN RESEARCH

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister told me yesterday that the Deputy Prime Minister failed to inform the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs about the American invitation to take part in the research on star wars because Luxembourg is in a different time zone from Ottawa, and because—using the Prime Minister's words—"not everything is instantaneous".

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister were there no telephones in Luxembourg? Did the Deputy Prime Minister not know how to dial long distance? Or, did the Deputy Prime Minister deliberately want to let his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, look ridiculous?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at two things. One is that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition did not welcome me back.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The second thing is that he would embark on splitting five and ten-minute hairs in time zones, rather than address the more important and substantial political and strategic dimensions of what we were discussing in Luxembourg with NATO Defence Ministers.

The Prime Minister was quite right. The time zone was one factor. I think the other factor which has been mentioned is that of telephone security. The Leader of the Opposition knows as well as I that we have no mission in Luxembourg, and that the discussions which take place within the four walls of the conference centre on matters of this nature are NATO secrets. The fact of the matter is that, as soon as I learned that the substance and/or text of the letter, which I received very late in the afternoon, was indeed public in North America, the text of that letter was communicated over open telephone lines to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): At an ungodly hour of the morning.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, at an ungodly hour of the morning, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs advises me. It was ungodly at this end, but not ungodly at the other end.

NOTIFICATION OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to the Deputy Prime Minister for not welcoming him back. The question I would ask him is: did Joe welcome him back?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The time zone reference is really a reference from the Prime Minister, but I wanted to get on the same linkage as the Deputy Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have before us the famous comedy duo of Canadian politics.

• (1420)

[English]

The Government is turning the conduct of foreign policy into a Broadway farce. Knowing, as the Deputy Prime Minister did, that star wars is uppermost in the minds of Canadians, why did he so arrange the communication between himself and the Secretary of State for External Affairs so as to leave his colleague in the dark? Does he not know that simple dialling of the telephone would have cost the Canadian Government only $4.50 to let his colleague know what was happening?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The right hon. gentleman might believe in that kind of abbreviated form of communication, but that certainly is not my style. I spent a good deal longer than that on the telephone with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and can assure the right hon. gentleman that the text of that letter was conveyed to him at the earliest, proper, and available opportunity.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I bet you did.

Mr. Nielsen: But I am still really waiting for questions of substance on the real issues involved here to be asked by a responsible Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We ask those questions of substance in the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister.

MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING VISIT TO U.S.S.R.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Secretary of State for External Affairs, as the Deputy Prime Minister knows, is going off on a visit to the Soviet Union with a few of his own colleagues. That ought to be a classic visit. May I ask that the Deputy Prime Minister, if anything changes in the picture of the defence posture of our country while the Secretary of State for External Affairs is away, would he be good enough to telephone his colleague in Moscow? I have here a booklet called Canadian Representatives Abroad, and the telephone number of our embassy in Moscow is 241-9155. Would the Deputy Prime Minister please keep his colleague informed so as to avoid future embarrassment of this kind for the Government of our country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, not only will I continue to do that but, where appropriate, if the right hon. gentleman will leave me his telephone number, I will telephone him as well.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EXPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES TO CANADA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. There are reports that today in Tokyo the Japanese Department of International Trade and Industry announced that, as part of a new arrangement with the United States, it had agreed to increase the export of Japanese cars to that country by 24 per cent. Would the Minister tell us if the Government has agreed, or will it agree, to the same arrangement with Canada with respect to the export of Japanese cars to our country? Or is it going to speak up on behalf of Canadian workers and tell Japan that the quotas must remain, unless and until Japan makes commitments to ensure for Canada a fair share of Canadian content in Japanese cars, particularly with respect to a fair share of North American investment by Japan in Canada in jobs and production? Will the Government speak for Canada in that way?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if I may respond to the Hon. Member, I can tell him he is quite correct in referring to the statement which has been made in Tokyo. The Government of Canada will have an announcement with respect to this matter tomorrow. I can once again assure the Hon. Member that we will take his representations into account.

TRADE ARRANGEMENTS INQUIRY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not tell us right now what is going to happen on March 31? Is the Government going to allow a sudden flooding of the Canadian market by Japanese cars after that date, threatening the loss of 20,000 jobs? If the Government is ready to make an announcement, will it make it now and show it is able to do something for the Canadian people, particularly the Canadian workers?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would have expected that the Hon. Member would have liked us to have taken his representation into account before we make an announcement. The announcement will be made tomorrow.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—INVITATION TO PARTICIPATE IN RESEARCH

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it goes back to the substance of star wars. Surely the Minister realizes that research inevitably leads to development and deployment. He has only to look, for example, at the MX missile and many others, on both sides. Therefore, pursuit of star wars will mean abandoning deterrence, threatening the ABM Treaty and diverting money and resources to an armed race in space. Acknowledging all that, as I am sure the Minister will, why will he not say, no, now, to star wars?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not share the assumptions of the Hon. Member, nor do any of the members of the North Atlantic Treaty organization which she now wants to join.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, if Canada would take a little initiative within the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance, perhaps I would look at it, but not as long as we behave as the Tories and Liberals behave. Denmark is the only country which has any spine.

JOB CREATION FACTOR

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Since the Minister seems to be having difficulty addressing the substance of the star wars proposal, may I turn to the remark of the Prime Minister about it being such a great job creator? Does the Minister frankly believe that work on military research and production creates more jobs per dollar than work in socially productive and consumer oriented activities?

If not—and the evidence shows that it does not create more jobs—why is the Government pursuing star wars as a great job creator? Why is it following this totally fallacious and morally corrupt line?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to summarize what has been said on thousands—on several occasions in the House of Commons—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's better.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It seems like thousands. We accept the view that when the Soviet Union is involved in research relating to what could broadly be called its "strategic defence initiative", it is prudent for our side, for the NATO alliance, to be involved in research of that kind.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): So much for escalation.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is point number one. Second, as we have indicated before in the House of Commons, the interpretation of the ABM Treaty is an interpretation which allows research. That is all that Canada has approved. Third, as the Hon. Member will know, we have now received an inviation to consider taking part in that research. That is consistent with the ABM Treaty. Any research in which Canada might be involved also means jobs for Canadians. We would not turn it aside because it meant jobs for Canadians.

U.S.S.R. POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs not agree that the Soviets do not want to get engaged in a race in space?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: Take off the red glasses.

Ms. Jewett: Hon. Members simply do not know the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: It has had a moratorium—and the Minister knows this—on the development of ASAP weapons. It has had a moratorium on the development of ASAPs. The United States has not. It wants space weapons on the agenda—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, does the Hon. Member have a question?

Ms. Jewett: If they would settle down.

I am asking the Minister if he will not, in his talks in the Soviet Union with Mr. Gromyko, pursue this question—which his colleagues doubt—about the Soviet desires in relation to outer space, and bring back that knowledge and information to his colleagues and to this House?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course I will pursue that question in my meetings with Mr. Gromyko, and I will bring back what I learn to the Hon. Member and to other Hon. Members in the House.

ENERGY

AGREEMENT WITH WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy and concerns the recently signed oil pricing agreement with the western provinces. In view of the fact that this document has far reaching effects on the people of the Province of Ontario, and in view of the Government's professed commitment to consultation with the provinces, will the Minister tell this House why the leader of the largest oil-consuming province in the country, the Premier of Ontario, was not consulted on the details of this agreement, as he has stated himself?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that I will be making a statement, after Question Period, on the western accord.

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—COST OF GASOLINE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. Could the Minister give Canadian consumers, especially those in Ontario, the assurance that they will be spared an increase of as much as 23 cents a gallon in the price of gas, in the Budget that, by sheer coincidence, is to be tabled a few days after the provincial election in Ontario? Can the Minister give us that assurance?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Minister of Energy will be addressing most of these questions in her statement after Question Period, and I think it will be quite clear to the Member opposite that the effect of this energy agreement will not be an increase for the consumer.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

NECESSITY FOR AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In spite of some rather euphoric press reports, the federal Government is not proposing to entrench the right of aboriginal peoples to self-government except where such rights are defined by agreement with the provinces. There is no commitment to a time-frame or agenda in order to reach any such agreement. Again, aboriginal people will have to bargain from a position of weakness. If no agreement is reached, they will have to start all over from scratch. Is the Government prepared to recognize explicitly the right of aboriginal peoples to self-government, and will it alter the federal proposal to do so?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is probably aware, we have had two preparatory meetings at the ministerial level with aboriginal groups and Ministers from all provinces. They have been very, very good discussions. The federal proposal as it was at that stage was distributed at that time, and I can assure the Hon. Member that the meeting next week on April 2 or April 3 will be very productive for the rights of Indian people.

FEDERAL ROLE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The question has not been asked, but I would—

Some Hon. Members: You're telling us!

Mr. Manly: The question has not been answered.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You were right the first time.

Mr. Manly: The previous question was not answered, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he is aware that the Province of British Columbia was not even represented at yesterday's meeting? Is the Government prepared to use some of its authority and moral suasion to deal with the recalcitrant provinces and ensure that they get on board on the whole question of entrenching aboriginal rights? Or is it simply going to work for the lowest common denominator of what the recalcitrant provinces are willing to accept?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the track record of this Government in bringing consensus to all parts of the country, involving all provinces, shows that it has the ability to do so at the conference next week.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As he knows, the National Council on Welfare released a study yesterday which shows that some four million Canadians live below the poverty line. Those poor in our society realize that your spending priorities are for 20 per cent pay increases for your political hack appointees—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Frith: —some 54 per cent increases in the salaries of your chiefs of staff, but the poor in our country—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Speaker is not a hack. Order.

Mr. Frith: —but the poor in our country want to know, Mr. Speaker, where do the problems of the poor rank in your list of spending priorities?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that it is not only the intention of this Government but I think of every Canadian to see the economy improve in order that poverty can be reduced. I think that is a given, and that is a political priority of this Party, of the Minister of Finance, indeed of all of us. The major impact on poverty would be from getting the economy turned around, creating more jobs and creating economic wealth.

CONSEQUENCES OF OIL AGREEMENT WITH WESTERN PROVINCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister therefore give a guarantee to this House that in the May 20 Budget the poor in our society are going to be protected from that oil energy agreement just signed with western Canada?

Mr. Shields: That is why you are sitting where you are now.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will tell the Hon. Member that, first of all, getting an oil agreement with the provinces is going to help the country create the very jobs I spoke about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frith: What about the poor?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The second point I would make is that we lost jobs because of their National Energy Program, which hurt the poor. Surely he knows enough about social policy to know that you cannot have such an artificial economy as they tried to create, which hurt the poor more than anything else.

Oral Questions

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and has to do with star wars. In view of the fact that there is confusion, not only here but in the U.S. and in Europe, with respect to this research and its horrendous implications, would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to submit the issue of Canada's entry into a research agreement with the United States to the appropriate House committee so that parliamentarians would have some very significant input into the Government's ultimate decision?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Well, consistent with our desire, unlike the previous Government, to see matters of significant import such as this one obtain the fullest possible public discussion, of course we would want to generate House input, and the input of the standing committee and others. But in the final analysis it is the committee itself which will have to make that kind of request, rather than us imposing an agenda on the committee. Certainly if such a request is received, it will be given every consideration.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I thank the Hon. Minister for his answer. I have to assume that if a committee did request a House order he would not oppose it. I assume that is the substance of his answer.

CANADIAN SUPPORT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief supplementary. The Prime Minister has been quoted as saying that a majority of Canadians are supportive of the SDI concept. I would like to know what evidence the Government has to support that assertion, and would it please table it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): To answer the first part of the question first, if the committee comes to the conclusion that it wishes to examine this or any other current matter in the public domain and before Parliament, we would expect to receive a request from the committee when it is considering what kind of reference it wishes to have. It would be at that point that we could give the matter attention. I would suggest that the logical point to start would be in the committee itself, in the steering committee.

With respect to the larger question of support or non-support for the specific research program of SDI, we are well aware that there are significant political and strategic implications to the research program which, in all probability, certainly judging from the questions from the Official Opposition and from what I have read, really have not gone to the core of the issue. It would seem to me to be most important for Members to be conducting that kind of dialogue in committee rather than in the House of Commons.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

HIRING OF MAIL CARRIERS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue who is responsible for the Post Office. As the Minister is aware, because of questions put to him previously, there are persons in Canada Post who are indicating there will not be additional mail carriers hired. I look to the Minister for the assurance that this will not be the case, so that all Canadians are treated equally and growth areas in Canada will be provided an "essential service", as it is labelled by Treasury Board.

● (1440)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Did you ever notice, Mr. Speaker, that if you really want to get a tough question you have to go to this side of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I know that Members on all sides of the House share the Hon. Member's priority for providing the best possible service to postal customers. Obviously there is a trade-off which the Post Office has to make at a time when a massive deficit is being run. The Post Office will be coming before the parliamentary committee to defend its Estimates. At that time perhaps the Hon. Member, and others, could raise these matters and give the Post Office their guidance on where the priorities should lie.

There is some allocation in the Budget this year for increased service to households, as well.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—INTERNAL INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, and it concerns the Richard Hatfield affair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Hon. Members wanted a tough question, and I am going to give them a tough question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Canadians are still waiting for answers. They are waiting for the internal RCMP investigation into the Hatfield affair. On Tuesday of this week we learned that this internal report is substantially complete. However, we were shocked to learn that Premier Hatfield was not personally interviewed in the course of the investigation.

In view of the very serious allegations made by Premier Hatfield concerning the conduct of the RCMP, accusing the RCMP of being a party to a conspiracy to overthrow him and his Government, would the Solicitor General not agree that it is absolutely imperative that the RCMP personally interview Premier Hatfield to determine whether there is any substance to those most serious allegations, and to clear the good name of the RCMP?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, and that is supposed to be a tough question? I would hope the Hon. Member would not expect me to undermine public confidence in the Commissioner of the RCMP by directing him on what he should or should not do in terms of this particular internal review.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General undermined public confidence in our criminal justice system. His conduct continues to be disgraceful and deplorable in this matter.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE INSTRUCTIONS TO RCMP

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Will the Solicitor General immediately instruct the RCMP to investigate Premier Hatfield's allegations fully? Will he instruct the RCMP to interview Premier Hatfield personally?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Member, who continues to demonstrate that his reach concerning this issue far exceeds his grasp of it, the answer is no.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST COMPANY—PLIGHT OF RETIRED FARMER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Could we have some order, Mr. Speaker? My question is in relation to Pioneer Trust which the Government allowed to collapse a few weeks ago. I have in my hand a letter from a retired Saskatchewan farmer who informs me that he put all of his assets into two guaranteed income averaging certificates, one for a six year term and one for a seven year term. He did so with no hesitation, knowing that he could be fully insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation for those particular deposits.

Is the Minister aware that this retired farmer, and perhaps hundreds like him, will not be reimbursed for one single cent of their savings because they were not informed by Pioneer Trust that the CDIC only insures investments of this kind for five years? If she is aware of that, can she tell us what assistance she will give to this retired farmer, and hundreds of ordinary Canadians like him, who have lost their entire savings because of what Pioneer Trust did?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, no one is more concerned about the people who save money in this country than I am, and that includes retired farmers. I am aware of the situation that the Hon. Member raises. I have looked at the legislation and discussed it with my officials. I have informed him, time and again, that I am in constant conversation with officials in Saskatchewan. The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation legislation is clear, but I am still discussing the situation with the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I do not want sympathy. I want action from the Minister across the way.

TIME LIMIT ON INSURANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I had a chance to talk to this farmer on the telephone yesterday. He told me that his application for these two guaranteed income averaging certificates have a standard CDIC stamp on them saying that his investment was insured. They are stamped "insured".

The Minister responsible says she has looked into the case. Can she inform the House why Pioneer Trust was allowed to ignore the CDIC by-law which states that member institutions must clearly refer to the five-year limit guarantee for investments of this kind? Why was it allowed to do that? Can she also tell the House very clearly whether or not she will compensate these innocent victims of Pioneer Trust?

Mrs. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have informed the Member before that I am looking into this matter with the Province of Saskatchewan and with the officials of my Department. I would also like to point out that one of the first things I did after taking office was to appoint a committee to study the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and its operations. I share the concern of the Hon. Member for people like his constituent.

OLYMPICS

COST OF 1988 WINTER OLYMPICS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. It is with regard to the Winter Olympics which will be held in Calgary in 1988. The Chairman of that committee stated that it will not cost taxpayers 1 cent. Can the Minister assure the House that this will be true?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there will be no deficit financing of the games because there will not be a deficit. As the Chairman of the Olympic Organization Committee, Mr. Frank King, said: "We will only spend $1 Billion if we raise $1 billion and invest it in the games". I applaud that attitude, because bigger and better games are going to be beneficial for Calgary and Canada, and will leave a tremendous incentive and legacy for our youth, and amateur athletics as a whole.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A federal government position paper dated March 26 seems to indicate that the Government may be ready to advocate the recognition of aboriginal self-government and entrench it in our Constitution. However, like so many government documents, it is not clear at all. It hedges and fudges quite a bit.

I would like the Minister to clarify this for us. Is the Government of Canada going to advocate, at the First Ministers' Conference, that the right to aboriginal self-government be entrenched in the Constitution as an inherent right? Or, do all these ifs, ands, and buts in the document mean that all we are going to do is transfer to aboriginal people some administrative duties and responsibilities? If that is all it means, we do not need a constitutional conference.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I think the Hon. Member is aware, according to the papers the document he has is a "leaked" document. Since it is a "leaked" document by definition, it is fair for me to say that I probably do not know what it is. If I knew what it was, it would not be "leaked". I am not sure exactly what the Hon. Member is saying since I do not have a copy of the document he has in his hand.

With regard to the question about self-government, I think the Hon. Member would be the first to insist that the discussion ought to occur and the information ought to flow between the Government, the provinces, and the aboriginal people. We will do it at the appropriate time.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point. Unless we will have a recognition of the inherent right of aboriginal people to self-government, and unless the provinces are prepared to go along with such a progressive position as may be in this document, then all we will have next Tuesday and Wednesday is another public relations exercise, which the Tories are so good at.

● (1450)

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member won't mind if I remind him that the previous conferences in 1983 and 1984 were run by his Party and, by all standards, they were lacking in success.

I can assure him that on April 2 and April 3, if he would give us a little hope and charity, he will find some success which his own Party was unable to deliver.

TRADE

UNITED STATES ACTION AGAINST CANADIAN PORK EXPORTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. He will remember that a week and one-half ago there was much bally-hoo about the new relationship between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States and between the Government of Canada and the administration in the United States. I understood the import of that to be that Canadians were going to benefit from this brand new and cozy relationship. Why, then, are the Minister's friends in the administration in the United States shafting our hog producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): I must apologize, Mr. Speaker. I did not hear the Hon. Member's question. I thought it was directed to the Minister of International Trade.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: It was.

Mr. Wise: However, I would like to utilize this opportunity to respond to the question.

Mr. Riis: You have no idea what the question is but you will say something anyway.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is a little difficult for the Chair to accept that a Minister can respond to a question whicl. he did not hear. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, on a supplementary question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMPACT ON CANADA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, but I asked the original question of the Minister for International Trade. He does not seem to understand that it is his responsibility. Therefore I will also ask him how many Canadians will be sacrificed before the Minister and the Government understand that the new relationship works in only one direction, in favour of the United States of America and against the Canadian best interest?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am now certain that I heard enough of the last question to know that indeed the Hon. Member was absolutely wrong, because it really points out the need for closer co-operation and, indeed, further meetings with the President and the United States, to resolve these problems in the future. There is no question about that at all.

The Hon. Member must remember that this is a situation that started in 1984. I believe we should take some satisfaction in the fact that the President of the United States indicated that on his return to the United States he would do everything possible to eliminate these situations from taking place in the future.

PORK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister says that the American President went back to the United States and did what he could. He can thank the President for unilaterally slapping on a tax of 5.3 cents per pound. If that is the kind of help this Government wants from the President of the United States, Canadian farmers are not likely to forget it.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives have barely managed to sleep off their Irish coffee when we get a tax of 5.3 cents per pound. The Minister of Agriculture must be aware of the fact that since this morning, the markets are in a panic, the price of pork has dropped nearly 10 cents and millions of dollars worth of orders have been cancelled. What has the Minister done this morning to deal with a crisis that is going to ruin the pork producing industry?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think we should recognize that this question was raised yesterday outside the House and I responded to it yesterday. I indicated that I am extremely disappointed that this action was taken by the United States Government. However, it should be noted that it is a preliminary action and, of course, we will not know the final outcome until June or July.
