NEW YEAR'S EVE.

It was New Year's Eve, and the snow, which had been falling steadily all day, had now ceased. A stinging north-west wind was blowing the streets were deserted, and most of the houses closed. One, however, and that the most imposing on Frontenoy Square, blazed with light, for a ball was being given within.

Before one of the drawing-room windows of this mansion, holding on to the railing, and looking in, was a woman, apparently not over twenty-one and who had once been beautiful. But her form was now attenuated, as if by long sickness, perhaps even hunger, and she was both poorly and thinly clad.

"That is Hetty," she said, in a hushed whisper. How beautiful she has grown!"

In her eagerness she rose on tip-toe, holding on to the railing, and lifting her head, till her bonnet fell backward.

At that moment, a gay well-remembered air rose from a superb band within.

"Ah! the 'Beautiful Blue Danube,'" she cried. "How I used to love to walk to it!"

She listened, breathlessly, till the last bars of the music had died away. Then the promenade began again.

"If only papa would come this way," she murmured. "He will never forgive me I know; he will never, never speak to me again; but if I could only see his dear face, only once—"

"Hillo, there!" cried a rough voice beside her, and a policeman's hand was laid on her shoulder. "None of this. Move on, move on!"

She shrank as if polluted, and fled frightened, from the big, burly policeman. But she went no further than around the corner. There, hiding behind a tree, she watched till he had disappeared on his beat, and then stealthily crept back to the window.

"Dear Hetty," she said, as a slender, graceful girl again approached the window, escorted by a cavalier, who bent down to listen to her in a way that told a whole story of love and adoration, "the glamour is on her too. God grant she may fare better than I did."

Helen Fortescue, for that was the wayfarer's name, had been a high spirited, potted, impulsive girl, when, at eighteen she fell in love with a plausible, handsome adventurer, who called himself a count, and whom she clung to and believed in, even after she had been told his real character. Had her mother lived, it might have been different. But Mrs. Fortescue had been dead for more than ten years, and poor Helen had grown up, without that most invaluable of all things to a young girl, a mother's constant, supervising care.

For now her once loved father seemed both prejudiced and tyrannical. There was a stormy interview, in which Mr. Fortescue forbade the sailor his house; an engagement; a vain appeal of the young wife for forgiveness; a curse, literally like that of the old Hebrew, pronounced on the disobedient child; and then a fainting girl borne off, by terrified servants, to the carriage that had waited for her, and which bore her away, to awake, only too soon, from her dream of love and happiness.

For her husband did not even pretend to care for her, now that he found she had come to him penniless. A few months after, when the money, raised by the sale of her jewels, was spent, he brutally deserted her. This happened at an out-of-the-way German town, and the shock nearly cost Helen her life. Her baby, born in this hour of two-fold agony, only survived for a little while; and then the poor, helpless girl was utterly desolate; for as long as Helen had something to love, she was not wholly miserable. She had supported herself during all these sad months, partly by the sale of her wardrobe, and partly by her needle; but when the tiny coffin was paid for, and the innocent babe laid in its humble grave, she was utterly destitute. Then began a terrible struggle—a struggle the merely for bread to eat. Hundreds of times Helen felt that it would be a blessing if she could die; death would not come; she was too healthy, she had too much vitality, to sink even under such burdens as oppressed her. She lingered at the obscure town, where her infant was buried, as long as she could cling to the last to that grass-grown hillock where all that was left to her was laid; but subsistence was, from that time, difficult to be earned there, and finally became impossible; and then she set her face homeward, with a sort of desperate feeling, saying, "Let me but see them once again, and then I will lie down and die."

By what lonely wanderings, through what hunger and sufferings she fought her way, months after, back to America, who can tell? Yet she did not return because she hoped to be forgiven. No! she knew her father too well for that. But at the end her health began to fail, a racking cough set in, and the desire grew on her to creep within site of the old house, and lie down and die. Sometimes, in her nights of fever she thought that, perhaps she might catch a glimpse of Hetty, or her father, afar off, they not seeing her. Or perhaps they might brush by her in the street, so that she could touch their garments, unknown to them.

This very day she had reached her native city, penniless, having spent her last dollar in railroad fare. She had eaten nothing all day. She knew not where she was to sleep. She had come, instinctively, to the old home; but she did not dare to enter; all she could do was to look in, hopefully, as she was doing now.

"How cold it grows," she said, as her teeth began to chatter, for the wind blew keener than ever. "I feel so tired too. Oh! if I could only see papa."

Gradually she grew more and more drowsy; but she did not feel so chilly now; only her limbs seemed to be giving way under her strangely, and her brain got dulled and stunted.

"I will rest a while," she said finally, sitting down on the door-step.

"By-and-by I shall feel stronger. No wonder I am so tired, I have not slept any, or so little, for so long."

When some time after, the bell began to break up, and the first carriage to arrive, the footman found an insensible figure on the door-steps, half lying, half leaning against the railing. The news of so strange an event soon penetrated to the master of the house, usually kind-hearted almost to a fault.

"Bless me!" he cried. "A homeless woman. Dead, or dying, did you say? Have her carried to the house-keeper's room. See that everything is done that can be. A beggar almost! That makes no difference. Why, on such a night, I wouldn't turn a dog from the door."

Helen was being borne in, according to these directions, when the old butler, who had been in the family for years, came bustling along the hall. Changed as she was, he recognized her at once.

"What are you doing?" he cried, in a frightened tone. "Toiled to carry her in the house-keeper's room, you say? There must be some mistake. Put her down here, and he pointed to a lounge in the hall.

He was so dazed he hardly knew what he said or did, his voice trembled till it ended in a quaver.

A crowd of curious servants and sympathizing guests gathered immediately around the prostrate form, and the noise attracted the attention of Mr. Fortescue, who, with Hetty, stood in the back drawing-room, receiving the adieux of the departing guests.

"What? James won't let her be carried?" he cried. "We'll see about that! He's lived with me till he thinks he's master. But this is insufferable!"

As he spoke, he moved towards the hall, Hetty, by some imperceptible motion, followed, putting her arm in his.

The crowd parted to make room for their host.

The moment Hetty saw that pale, wan face, she recognized her sister.

"Oo, papa oh papa! it is Helen!" she cried, in a breathless whisper; and bursting into tears, she flung herself on her knees by the couch.

"Helen—Helen—don't you know me?" she sobbed. "Oh! she is dead, she is dead," she cried, almost in a shriek.

For a moment Mr. Fortescue seemed about to stoop and drag Hetty angrily away from her sister. But something in the pale insinuating face reminded him of his dead wife, as he had last seen her, just before the coffin was shut on her corpse. He turned ashen pale, staggered, and would have fallen, if the butler, who had been watching him anxiously, had not caught him.

"Air, air! For God's sake, gentlemen, give him air," cried that functionary.

The rush of the keen, spectators from the open hall door, as the spectators drew away at these words, partially revived Mr. Fortescue. He gasped for breath, looked blankly around and put his hand to his head; then he recalled it all.

"Carry her in—take her to her old room," he said with a choking sob. "Run for doctor. Ah, Mr. Hunter," as one of his guests, the most eminent practitioner in the city, rose from Helen's side, where he had been feeling her pulse, "I forgot you were here. Only fainting, you say. Thank God! She that was lost is found, unconsciously breaking into the words of Scripture, the tears rolling down her cheeks, his voice shaking; "she that was dead is alive again."

"Oh, papa!" cried Helen, throwing her arms around her father's neck, "bless you for these words. We shall be so happy now—"

She broke down in hysterical sobs.

What more have we to tell? Helen recovered in time all her old health, though never her old vivacity. Life had been too hard for her for that. But she became what was better, a calm, earnest woman, whose ear was open to the cry of distress, a daughter who made her father's home happier than it had ever been, and the desire grew on her to creep within site of the old house, and lie down and die. Sometimes, in her nights of fever she thought that, perhaps she might catch a glimpse of Hetty, or her father, afar off, they not seeing her. Or perhaps they might brush by her in the street, so that she could touch their garments, unknown to them.

He was so dazed he hardly knew what he said or did, his voice trembled till it ended in a quaver.

A crowd of curious servants and sympathizing guests gathered immediately around the prostrate form, and the noise attracted the attention of Mr. Fortescue, who, with Hetty, stood in the back drawing-room, receiving the adieux of the departing guests.

"What? James won't let her be carried?" he cried. "We'll see about that! He's lived with me till he thinks he's master. But this is insufferable!"

As he spoke, he moved towards the hall, Hetty, by some imperceptible motion, followed, putting her arm in his.

The crowd parted to make room for their host.

The moment Hetty saw that pale, wan face, she recognized her sister.

"Oo, papa oh papa! it is Helen!" she cried, in a breathless whisper; and bursting into tears, she flung herself on her knees by the couch.

"Helen—Helen—don't you know me?" she sobbed. "Oh! she is dead, she is dead," she cried, almost in a shriek.

For a moment Mr. Fortescue seemed about to stoop and drag Hetty angrily away from her sister. But something in the pale insinuating face reminded him of his dead wife, as he had last seen her, just before the coffin was shut on her corpse. He turned ashen pale, staggered, and would have fallen, if the butler, who had been watching him anxiously, had not caught him.

"Air, air! For God's sake, gentlemen, give him air," cried that functionary.

The rush of the keen, spectators from the open hall door, as the spectators drew away at these words, partially revived Mr. Fortescue. He gasped for breath, looked blankly around and put his hand to his head; then he recalled it all.

"Carry her in—take her to her old room," he said with a choking sob. "Run for doctor. Ah, Mr. Hunter," as one of his guests, the most eminent practitioner in the city, rose from Helen's side, where he had been feeling her pulse, "I forgot you were here. Only fainting, you say. Thank God! She that was lost is found, unconsciously breaking into the words of Scripture, the tears rolling down her cheeks, his voice shaking; "she that was dead is alive again."

"Oh, papa!" cried Helen, throwing her arms around her father's neck, "bless you for these words. We shall be so happy now—"

She broke down in hysterical sobs.

What more have we to tell? Helen recovered in time all her old health, though never her old vivacity. Life had been too hard for her for that. But she became what was better, a calm, earnest woman, whose ear was open to the cry of distress, a daughter who made her father's home happier than it had ever been, and the desire grew on her to creep within site of the old house, and lie down and die. Sometimes, in her nights of fever she thought that, perhaps she might catch a glimpse of Hetty, or her father, afar off, they not seeing her. Or perhaps they might brush by her in the street, so that she could touch their garments, unknown to them.

This very day she had reached her native city, penniless, having spent her last dollar in railroad fare. She had eaten nothing all day. She knew not where she was to sleep. She had come, instinctively, to the old home; but she did not dare to enter; all she could do was to look in, hopefully, as she was doing now.

"How cold it grows," she said, as her teeth began to chatter, for the wind blew keener than ever. "I feel so tired too. Oh! if I could only see papa."

Gradually she grew more and more drowsy; but she did not feel so chilly now; only her limbs seemed to be giving way under her strangely, and her brain got dulled and stunted.

"I will rest a while," she said finally, sitting down on the door-step.

"By-and-by I shall feel stronger. No wonder I am so tired, I have not slept any, or so little, for so long."

When some time after, the bell began to break up, and the first carriage to arrive, the footman found an insensible figure on the door-steps, half lying, half leaning against the railing. The news of so strange an event soon penetrated to the master of the house, usually kind-hearted almost to a fault.

"Bless me!" he cried. "A homeless woman. Dead, or dying, did you say? Have her carried to the house-keeper's room. See that everything is done that can be. A beggar almost! That makes no difference. Why, on such a night, I wouldn't turn a dog from the door."

Helen was being borne in, according to these directions, when the old butler, who had been in the family for years, came bustling along the hall. Changed as she was, he recognized her at once.

"What are you doing?" he cried, in a frightened tone. "Toiled to carry her in the house-keeper's room, you say? There must be some mistake. Put her down here, and he pointed to a lounge in the hall.

GLADSTONE DEFEATED.

The great sensation of the week is the defeat of Mr. Gladstone—an event which has created considerable surprise in political circles, especially when it is remembered that England's Premier had tided over many crises in the administration of Government in Ireland when danger seemed to be more imminent than in the present instance, which occurred on the night of the 7th. The Commons were discussing the report on the Repression Bill, and were asked to support an amendment offered by Mr. Trevelyan, Chief Secretary for Ireland, limiting the right to search to the day time except in cases of secret societies—proposed originally by the Irish party in their effort to mitigate the severity of the Crime Bill. The object of the amendment was to prevent the police from searching houses at night for documents and arms, but was really of little value, the Irish Executive having the power under other Acts to order night searches. Notwithstanding this the Conservatives opposed the concession, mustering strongly in their effort to harass the Government, in this being aided by the absence of a number of Liberals, who in fancied security had left the House, and were absent when a division was called. At an early stage fears were entertained that the Government would be defeated—messengers were despatched in haste to muster the absent Ministers, but as they returned, the Tory forces were also strengthened by new accessions. An endeavor was made to win support by the statement that Gladstone would resign, if defeated—and in their strait the Gov't sought the help of Irish members who had but a few days previously been ignominiously suspended, only to be met with direct refusals—a humiliation which was witnessed by the House. Urgent appeals were made by Gladstone, Childers, Bright and others, not to refuse the concession, but all to no purpose, for when the division was called at seven p. m., the amendment was defeated by a vote of 207 to 194—several of the Irish members watching the proceedings from the strangers' gallery. It is not expected that a Ministerial crisis will be the result, Mr. Gladstone evidently being the vote as a non-party member, and content to carry out the Government. The Bill was read a third time on the morning of the 8th, and was forthwith sent to the Lords, where it was read for the first time.

Church of England. DIOCESEAN CHURCH SOCIETY.

The general committee of the above Society met in St. John on Tuesday morning, the 4th July. The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop, President, in the Chair, the Bishop Coadjutor being seated on his Lordship's right.

On the roll being called the following clergy members from the Northern Counties answered to their names. Rev. W. J. Wilkison, Bay du Vin; Rev. E. P. Flewelling, Dalhousie; Rev. J. F. Hiltz, Derby; Rev. H. S. Sweet, Newcastle; Rev. F. H. Almon, Richibucto.

On the name of the Rev. J. M. Davenport being given an additional clergy member, the Rev. Canon DeVeber, who had been enquired of his Lordship if he ruled that the Rev. J. M. Davenport was duly licensed, and under that claimed the right to sit at a meeting of this committee.

His Lordship ruled that as he was a life member of the diocese, resident here, and duly licensed, he was entitled to a seat.

Rev. Canon DeVeber then wanted to know if a minister duly licensed to a parish, but officiating in it against the protest of the Rector of that parish, was duly licensed according to the meaning of the words in the constitution of the society?

His Lordship said he was duly licensed and had a right to a seat.

Canon DeVeber then requested His Lordship to define the words duly elected.

His Lordship did not think that he had a right to, as he was only sitting as chairman.

Rev. Canon DeVeber then said: I protest against the validity of his license. (Applause and hisses.)

The following is the protest as handed into the secretary:

Rev. Canon DeVeber, Rector of St. Paul, hereby protests against the assumption that the Rev. J. M. Davenport, who has been licensed to the Mission Chapel in the Parish of St. Paul, without his, the said Rector's consent, by virtue of the license, a member of the general committee of the Diocesan Church Society.

Some discussion having arisen as to the matter of the production to the meeting of Rev. Mr. Davenport's license, the secretary asked how his minutes in regard to that Rev. gentleman's name should stand in view of the discussion and decisions. At present they stood in the minutes as follows:

His Lordship decided that they stand as already recorded.

REPORTS FROM MISSIONS. The secretary then read the reports from missions, prefacing them with a report, in which it was set forth that the long expected diminution on the grant from the society in England takes place this year. During the years that are passed, amid many difficulties, the society has gained an assurance of the Divine blessing both with respect to the funds entrusted to its charge, and the work it has been enabled to do. By means of bequests and special offerings the society has now a large funded endowment, the proceeds of which are for the benefit of the church in all coming time. A year ago there was a large balance overdrawn to meet the required expenditure. This amount, by special offerings, has been fully met. The society is now free of debt with a small balance in the treasurer's hands at the close of the fiscal year. The payments required from the several missions have also been paid up in full.

had raised money enough by this means, a large proportion of which had already been paid into the treasurer, and the remainder would no doubt be paid at an early date.

The roll was received and a hearty vote of thanks tendered Mr. Schofield for his services on the committee.

The following statement of estimated income and expenditure for 1882-83 was submitted:

Table with 2 columns: Item and Amount. Includes S. P. G. Grant, Interest, Hazen Trust, Sewell Trust, Boxes, Subscriptions and Collections, etc.

Available for grants to Missions, $16,010.00. The assessment and grants for the different missions were then ordered, among which are the following:

Table with 2 columns: Mission and Grant. Includes Bathurst, Bay du Vin, Newcastle, Richibucto, etc.

At 3 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon the Synod was called to order, and a long discussion took place in regard to the Mission Chapel and what was the right course to be pursued in regard to the question should be decided in a Court of Law, while others argued that the Synod should take the matter up at once, that the whole matter be referred to a committee.

Mr. T. Barclay Robinson, delegate from St. Paul's, Portland, presented and read the following memorial without comment:

TO THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF THE PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK, AND THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE LAITY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND, IN THE DIOCESE OF FREDERICTON, IN SYNOD ASSEMBLED.

The Memorial of the Rector; and of the Rector, Church Warden and Vestry of the Parish of Saint Paul, in the town of Portland, in the County of St. John.

That the Parish of Saint Paul was set off from the Parish of Portland, in the County of St. John, for all purposes ecclesiastical or relating to the Church of England, under an Act of the Legislature, (39 Vic. c. 60) passed in 1866, which provided as follows:

That from and after the second Monday of May, in the present year, the said Parish of Portland, in the County of St. John, shall be divided into two parishes, to be called the Parish of Saint Paul, and the Parish of Saint John, and the same is hereby declared to be a separate and distinct Parish, for all purposes ecclesiastical or relating to the Church of England, by the name of the Parish of Saint Paul, and the Parish of Saint John, and the same shall extend to the said Parish of Saint Paul, erected by this Act, as fully and effectually as if the same were a separate and distinct Parish.

That certain persons claiming to be members of the Church of England have recently erected a proprietary Chapel within the limits of the Parish of Saint Paul, and have caused to be erected thereon a Chapel of the Church of England, and have caused to be erected thereon a Chapel of the Church of England, and have caused to be erected thereon a Chapel of the Church of England.

That your memorialists are advised that such proceedings are contrary to the law of the Church of England, both in England itself and in this Province.

Your memorialists, therefore, beg most respectfully to call your attention to the fact that the Synod and the Bishop, and to express the hope that it will be taken into your most serious consideration.

Dated the third day of July, A. D. 1882. W. M. DEWBERRY, Rector.

By order of the Vestry, G. HERBERT LEE, Vestry Clerk.

that the committee consist of four clergymen and four laymen, and that they be empowered to call on and report to the Bishop as far as could be got.

The Bishop said he thought the committee would not be judge or jury, but would simply establish a precedent.

On the suggestion of Mr. John Sears, the Bishop withdrew his amendment and the original motion was carried, only five voting against it.

On Thursday the Board of Foreign Missions, through Rev. G. M. Armstrong, presented a lengthy report showing the condition of the mission work outside the Dominion of Canada as connected with three societies—the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the Church Missionary Society, and the Society for Propagating the Christian Faith among the Jews, to whom remittances were made.

The sums received by the Board for their societies during the year 1881-2, were as follows:

The Board of Domestic Missions, through Rev. Canon Brigstocke, reported and motion of Mr. John Sears it was decided that the reports be printed and printed for circulation in the diocese and in the journals of the Synod.

Rev. T. Dowling moved the following resolution:

Whereas, it is found impracticable, in the present state and prospects of the finances of the diocese, to support a school in connection with the Synod.

Therefore resolved, that the Synod do not support a school in connection with the Synod, and that the Synod do not support a school in connection with the Synod.

Mr. Dowling spoke at length and very earnestly in support of his motion, pointing out the great usefulness of this institution, and the fact that the Provincial grant had withdrawn from education, and that the Synod should be allowed to be preserved.

The Electric Light in New York.

"The light of other days" used to be the light of a tallow candle or a fluid lamp, but it will soon be that of the gas and kerosene, for the electric light is fast displacing these illuminators.

Everywhere you see, it took to the advantage of the appearance of the city, but to the disadvantage of the gas lights that are interspersed between and that look very dim and dingy by contrast.

About Town.

THE SPOOL FACTORY.—Additions are being made to the machinery and buildings of the spool factory. At the upper end of the main building a room 16x25 feet, single story, is being added for a planing machine, a necessary adjunct in making the boxes for the shipment of spools to their destination.

THE FRANK OF THE NEW RESIDENCE OF Mr. M. O. Thompson is now being raised, as also those of Messrs. Wm. and Donald McLeod and Mr. C. E. McKean.

A LARGE water tank of fire is very much needed in the upper part of the town, where there is an ample supply of water running to waste. If a fire should take place in this neighborhood, there is now no adequate supply of water, while there are several convenient places on the brook where tanks could be constructed to protect this vicinity, in which many buildings have been erected during the past few years.

THE R. W. DAVENPORT has been extensively renovated and repaired, inside and outside. The carpenter work was done under the supervision of Mr. John Murray, the plastering by Mr. W. R. Bell, and Mr. Humphrey Fayle is now at work putting on the improving coats of paint, varnish, &c.

FRANZ MILZ has not been at work for the past two days, putting in another new plunger block, the one so recently put in being found to be a bad one. It is now a new one, and the mill is running again.

SOME alterations are being made in the outside door of the building, and a door guard is being put in. There will be two windows, separated by a partition, one for the public and the other for the employees, conductors, engineers, &c., who will be enabled to receive their orders without going to the office or interfering with the public.

MR. W. DAVENPORT has been appointed to the position of Chief Engineer of the Public Wharf at Bay du Vin by the large number of people. She was bound on a cruise up the St. Lawrence, the party intending to spend the summer among the thousand islands and on the Lakes.

Excursion trip by the Andover on Wednesday next to Cape Breton. The excursion will be to the Picnic at Bay du Vin by the congregation of the Episcopal Church there. See adv.

Among the notices of marriages will be found in which newspaper friends were named. JAMES J. ANSLAW, Esq., of the "Advocate," occupies a prominent position in the list. He has been having obtained as a partner a lady who is so well known to many of the residents of Halifax, and who has many warm friends here, as well as in Windsor and other places in the Province. In Windsor, where she resided for several years past, the lady in question was the recipient of many tokens of regard prior to her departure, in acknowledgment of her successful career in connection with the Academy there, and also a slight return for her valued services in connection with the Methodist Sabbath School, both as teacher and organist.

The marriage was celebrated at Gysborough Thursday last, 29th ult., in the presence of a large number of friends, and was a beautiful occasion. The bridegroom, Mr. J. J. Body Found.

The body of Michael Graham (who was drowned of Newcastle, 29th ult.) was found floating opposite to the town and near the Chatham side, on Monday last about 3 p. m. The remains were found by a fisherman, and were taken to the shore, where they were found to be the body of Michael Graham, who was drowned of Newcastle, 29th ult.

An Inquest was held the same afternoon by Coroner Dr. A. C. Smith. The foreman of the Jury, Mr. A. C. Smith, said that Michael Graham came to his death by accidentally falling from his canoe while on his way to Newcastle, the water at the time being very rough, and the canoe very small and unsafe.

The remains were interred in the burial ground of St. James' Church on Monday evening.

Drowned in the Shaft of a Mine.

Near Fairville there is located a lead mine that has been worked some time. It is a short distance from Long & Barrill's mill, and is owned by Mr. Murray. A shaft has been sunk to the depth of 50 feet and the bottom of the shaft is nearly 20 feet, is filled with water. Yesterday afternoon about five o'clock, while some workmen were engaged at the mouth of the shaft, Edward McAfee, Sheriff street, Portland, one of them, was seized with a fit, and fell backward into the shaft. When he had descended some 12 feet he struck a bucket that was suspended at that distance, and he fell into the water. Before inquiring reached the bottom he was drowned. The body was brought to his late home and an inquest is to be held on Friday.

In May last, while steam driving for Messrs. Gilman & Brown on the Tuxford River, S. W. Miramichi, a young man named Jones, son of David Jones of Woodville, St. John's, was drowned. Though diligent search was made for his body, it was unsuccessful. On Friday morning last, however, the remains of the unfortunate young man were found six miles above Boiestown, where they had been left on the bank of the stream. The body was found in a position which indicated that the victim had been struck by a falling object, and the bones, the body having been almost entirely decomposed, the tracks of which were still visible in the sand.

Messrs. I. Harris & Son, Chatham, are evidently energetic canvassers. They have succeeded, within three weeks, in securing over $200 for the Jewish fund. Their industry in prosecuting the canvass is shown by the fact that they have secured $200 in only three weeks. Among the notices of marriages will be found in which newspaper friends were named. JAMES J. ANSLAW, Esq., of the "Advocate," occupies a prominent position in the list. He has been having obtained as a partner a lady who is so well known to many of the residents of Halifax, and who has many warm friends here, as well as in Windsor and other places in the Province. In Windsor, where she resided for several years past, the lady in question was the recipient of many tokens of regard prior to her departure, in acknowledgment of her successful career in connection with the Academy there, and also a slight return for her valued services in connection with the Methodist Sabbath School, both as teacher and organist.

The marriage was celebrated at Gysborough Thursday last, 29th ult., in the presence of a large number of friends, and was a beautiful occasion. The bridegroom, Mr. J. J. Anslaw, is a young man of fine talents, and is well known to many of the residents of Halifax, and who has many warm friends here, as well as in Windsor and other places in the Province. Correspondence.

LETTER FROM DR. DUNCAN.

To the Editors of the Advocate. After the very decided steps in the face of which "Jack" received from the Editor of the Advocate, he might well be allowed to make his bow, unnoted, especially so considering the high respectability of the Community for one of his ability. What he characterizes as "a gross lie" and "a false and dangerous" fact known to every body here. Wherever else is false, facts tell no lies. Mr. Jerome Boudreau, Disbursing Agent for Ferguson, was told Clerk for Bedford No. 1, and not Deputy Returning Officer as stated in my last, though none the less a violent partisan, who took pains to make himself particularly obnoxious to "Economic doctors" as he hard to squelch than he imagines, nor who sink into obscurity with the same ease with which he will, now, as he desire, following the advice of his mentor, to give "our time to more important subjects."

Yours, &c., G. M. DUNCAN, M. D.

LETTER FROM MR. O'BRIEN.

Editors Union Advocate. I notice in your issue of last week a letter dated from Bathurst and signed G. M. Duncan, M. D. It contains many gross misstatements, evidence of "a mind innately depraved, or so warped by habit as to be incapable of truth," most of which are trifling and low in their character so as to deserve only contempt and a charitable silence. Some of the more grave doubts will be answered from the proper quarters, through the columns of the local press.

There is only one assertion contained in his letter which I deem worthy of notice. It is a specific charge, criminally libellous in its character, which cannot be allowed to pass in silence. The statement referred to reads as follows: "What of the $1600 that is acknowledged to have come from St. John to assist the Liberal Cause in the Contest? $800 is said to have been received from John, the other $800 where? Echo answers there lining the pockets of a few who are lauded in this out-cry of corruption. This whole statement, it is perhaps needless to add, is a deliberate lie. Again he says, "Eight hundred dollars and the pockets of some of his former Cabinet Ministers." I now call upon Dr. Duncan to give through the columns of your paper, over his own signature, the names of the men whom he refers to as "some of his former Cabinet Ministers," or to stand convicted before the country as a common slanderer and liar.

Yours, &c., J. E. O'BRIEN.

Gladstone's Defeat.

HOW IT WAS BROUGHT ABOUT. London, July 8.—In the Commons, Friday afternoon, during the debate on the report of the Repeal Bill, Gladstone said the Government had taken measures unknown to Parliament to operate against secret societies. An amendment, offered by Trevelyan, Chief Secretary of Ireland, to limit the right of search to day time except in case of secret societies, was strongly opposed by Conservatives and others. Gladstone declared if the amendment was rejected he would have to consider his personal position involved. The amendment was rejected, 207 to 194. When the figures were announced Mr. Gladstone said that extraordinary circumstances he would have asked the House to postpone further proceedings, but in the remarkable state of Ireland he did not feel that it was right to take that course. The report on the Repeal Bill was finished at 1 p. m. Trevelyan moved the third reading which was carried, Collins, Cowen, Lamborne and Storey being the only dissentients.

How it Worked at the Murray House. Among the costliest hotels in Ontario, at the Murray House of St. Catharines, kept by Mr. Thomas Scully, who is a writer always stops when in the city. Upon a recent trip, the writer was speaking with Mr. Scully concerning his old ailment, weak back, when Mr. S. observed, "I take sincere pleasure in recommending St. Jacobs Oil to all sufferers. I have found it a most excellent remedy. Partly because I could of others who have used it with great success. I would not be without St. Jacobs Oil, nor do I believe any other would. I caught a cold about three years ago, which settled in my back and sorely afflicted me between my shoulders. The pain was almost unendurable at times, especially at impending changes of the weather; and at such times, I used to be incapacitated for attending to my business. I tried electric baths, salt baths, various strengthening plasters and other such means without success. Finally I procured St. Jacobs Oil, the Great German Remedy, and was cured and am permanently well. St. Jacobs Oil is a most excellent remedy, and I would not be without it at any time."
