AN EASTER STORY.
During the tedious hours that too often intervene in the domestic seclusion of Eastern life, a relief from its monotony is not unfrequently sought by the sultan and sultana, retreating to an apartment which overlooks the court, commanding a distinct view of the ingress and egress of all who approach or leave the palace. Here, reclined on her ottoman, and shaded by curtains and blinds, the favourite can observe, without being observed; while the sultan luxuriates laid on a couch, in a more remote part of the chamber, reclines himself, with closed eyes, to the dolce far niente, his sultana informing him of all who make their entrances or exits, and giving him her comments thereupon.

them to make such a disposal of this money as shall redound to their own honor, and secure lasting advantages to the State? We are too far "East" and our voice is too feeble to aid in this matter, but we should rejoice exceedingly, to see a disposition of this fund not based upon individual interests. Let the wants of the whole State be consulted in its disposal.—Calais Gaz.

By Robert Story.
The ancient banners of the land, Composed a haughty ring, When mail on breast and blade in hand, They stood before the King;
And dauntless in their Country's cause Their high resolve avowed, We will not that Old England's Laws, Be changed by King or Crowd!

In other lands at slightest shock,
The civil fabric falls, In ours eternal as the rock, It rears its massive walls.
A barrier to convulsion forms,
Firm as our Island shore;
Which has rolled back ten thousand storms,
And will ten thousand more.

To guard its towers from age to age, Brave men their last have breathed,
To us, as our best heritage,
It was by them bequeathed.
And mark us, Sir, to its defence, Our arms and lives we vow,
And it may fall in ages hence—We swear it shall not now!

They kept their oath, those gallant men,
The structure still is ours,
The twice three hundred years since then,
Have overtopped its towers.
A glorious barrier still it forms,
Firm as our Island shore;
Which has rolled back ten thousand storms,
And will ten thousand more.

EFFECTS OF HALLEY'S COMET ON THE SEA-SONS AND TEMPERATURE.—This comet, although only of late celebrity, may be traced with every degree of probability to a period of 130 years before Christ, as being the first time that it was observed. In 1230, its appearance was attended with the most extraordinary circumstances; during that year the heat was intense, with great inundations. In the spring of the following year the Mediteranean was frozen, and goods were conveyed across in carts. This comet so organised the atmosphere, that a year or two afterwards there was thunder and lightning for sixteen days successive.—As its next return in 1305, the Baltic Sea was frozen over for fourteen weeks between the Danish and Swedish islands. In 1455, its next appearance, there were great rains, inundations, and the Baltic was covered with ice from Mecklenburgh to Denmark during the following winter. Its next appearance was near the year 1531.
Rome, Antwerp, and Lisbon, suffered from inundations; and a flood is recorded to have taken place in England, extending from Som-mersetshire to Norfolk. The summer was intensely hot, yet on the 12th of June there was frost, and the succeeding winter intensely cold. We now approach on the last appearance of the comet, and let philosophers judge if it has effects or not on the atmosphere the unusual cold temperature of the summer the exceeding wet stormy autumn, which has rendered the result of the latter harvest extremely doubtful, and has so organised the atmosphere that the approaching winter, we have no doubt, will be intensely cold.

TEXAS.—Mr. Walker of the U. S. Senate has offered a resolution proposing to acknowledge the Independence of Texas. He made a few remarks stating the inability of Mexico to conquer Texas, and said that his resolution expressed the opinions of the President.
Whose opinions then, did the message express which was lately sent to Congress on this subject, signed "Andrew Jackson?"

CAMPBELL OF ISLAY AND HIS CONSTITUENTS AT DUNDEE.—Friday evening a public dinner was given at Dundee, by the liberal electors of the district of Cowal, to Walter Frederick Campbell, Esq. of Islay, the representative in Parliament of Argyllshire. A wooden booth was erected behind the Argyll Inn, the interior of which was formed in imitation of the large hall. Over the chairman's head was a profusion of hollies and other evergreens, tastefully formed in festoons. A bonfire was kindled behind the Inn, near which the firing of cannon was kept up during the night, while flags waved from the Castle-Hill, and from every eminence around. Shortly after five o'clock the company entered the pavilion.
Islay was splendidly dressed in the Highland garb, with a silk velvet coat, and kilt and plaid of the Argyll tartan. His pipe, a robust Highlander, followed him blowing with all his might, to the infinite gratification of the Assembly. The Chairman, Mr. Dugald M'Fie, was supported on his right by Islay.
Mr. Patrick Maxwell Stewart, Sir Donald Campbell of Duunstaffnage, Mr. Galbraith of Macbridehanish, Mr. MacNeill of Uggdale; on the left by Sir D. Campbell of Barcaldine, Mr. James Campbell of Craigie, and Sir John Campbell of Ormidale. The clergymen were, Mr. Wm. Fankier, Lieutenant Clark, and Mr. Peter Harris.—Edinburgh Observer.

We observe that it is stated in London papers that the Emperor Nicholas is afflicted with mental aberration, which exhibits itself in a most painful manner. It is said that the disease has been augmented by a fall from a sled, which the Emperor received while sledding down a "Russian mountain."

It is calculated that the wars of Napoleon caused the death of five millions of human beings, the number of broken hearts and broken fortunes has not been computed.

SOUND ADVICE.—A spendthrift Nobleman had a fortune left him, and was advised by a friend to purchase an estate notorious for its neglected state and sterility. "Why," said his Lordship, "there is not a single passable road through the whole estate." "That is the very reason I wish you to buy it," said the other, "it will take you the longer to raise through it!"
