The lieutenant-governor, while walking in the halls, was overcome by a dizzy spell, and in falling his head struck against the hard tiling of the floor. A nasty gash was inflicted near the temple and a severe wrench was given the muscles of the body.

His honor is now in his $2nd year, and the shock of the fall left him very weak. He has not since been able to move about except with the help of two assistants, and has been confined almost wholly to his room.

Grave doubts are entertained as to whether Sir Oliver will ever recovers his strength sufficiently to again appear in public. It was stated yesterday of another, of which the Good Hope is the flagship, is in commission. The Australian, the China and the other important stations are also to have their light cavalry divisions, each under the command of a rear-admiral, as soon as these can be got together. BURNED A PEST HOUSE

Neighbor.

Toronto, Feb. 14.—Provincial Detective Murray has been investigating the recent burning of the pest-house at Aylmer, Ont. When the smallpox scare struck the town some weeks ago, the council bought a building for a pest-house, which was to be moved to a block of land already owned by the town. The residents in the vicinity were very much averse to having a smallpox pest-house in their neighborhood, and protested loudly against Finally one night the building was burned down by some person or persons unknown. Detective Murray, after investigation, says that the house was burned down by some of the ladies who objected to its presence. Their names are known, but as the town is now free of smallpox, no prosecutions will follow.

The sub- Hobbling Around on Two Canes He ject was gone into very thoroughly, and a great deal of time was devoted to it. That an international bridge is a necessity is acknowledged. The Michigan Central, the Grand Trunk, the Pere Marquette, the Canadian Pacific, the Wabash, all realize that a bridge has got to come. Realizing this, and realizing that it must ome soon, the Michigan Central and the interested in the movement, got together and decided to appoint George S. Morrison, a noted engineer, a committee of one to look over the ground in Detroit.

In Two Days His Appetite Returned, His Sleep Was Natural and Restful. His Pains and one to look over the ground in Detroit.

He will be supplied with all the data, maps, etc., be supplied with all the data, maps, etc., in the possession of the various railroads. He will look over the situation, note the course of the vessels in the river, take surveys, whenever and wherever necessary, and render his report not later than Aug. 1, 1993. While his decision is not necessarily final, his view as to where the bridge should go will have a great effect on the roads interested. The Michigan Central is willing that the bridge should be placed anywhere where it is to the best interest of the railroads entering Detroit, and which will have occasion to use the bridge. The question of a union station will necessarily enter largely into the scheme. That will be a necessity. The bridge approach must be where sity. The bridge approach must be where there is a convenient junction point. That is one of the problems the Michigan Central hopes that Mr. Morrison will solve when he comes to look over the ground. Of course, it remains to be seen whether

Besides, the library board would have to sacrifice $300 a year, the rental now paid by the Young Women's Christian Association. The annual cost of utilizing the upper floor would, therefore, be at least $900. The board preferred to extend the ground floor space at an annual cost of $294 (interest and sinking fund on the debenture issue of $4,000). This plan has saved the city $600 a year, it has enlarged the library building, and, not least, it has kept everything on the ground floor and spared people the inconvenience of climbing upstairs. The upper floor is reserved, as was originally intended, for a museum and art gallery. The Free Press hasn't taken pains to inform itself of the facts or has been taking them second-hand from some old fogey, who has no use for a library himself and doesn't see why other people should have. It says a "strong municipal hand" should take hold of this question to stop the "extravagant outlay for story books." This is an invitation to Mayor Beck. That municipal marvel is a member of the library board, but he only shows up when there is a chairman to be elected. Why doesn't he apply his "strong municipal hand" toward stopping this extravagant outlay of $300 a year? ing zeal. Let him sweep Dickens, the shelves and prove himself a public

President Roosevelt has written a slashing letter to a friend in which he upholds large families and says that married folks who are deliberately childless are criminally selfish and exemies of their race, deserving of the contempt and opprobrium of rightthinking people. President Eliot, of Harvard University, in his annual report presents statistics of six Harvard classes which show that after having been more than 25 years out of college only 72 per cent of the members are married, and that the number of their surviving children average only about two to a family. That is, the married pairs have reproduced themselves and no more and 28 per cent of the classes are unmarried. President Eliot's conclusion is that the "highly educated" part of the American people, so far from increasing the population, is actually not reproducing itself. This "regrettable result" he attributes, in part, to "the late postponement of marriage by young men," which is made "almost unavoidable" by the "protracted education now prescribed for men who enter the learned and scientific professions." A young physician, lawyer, engineer or architect is fortunate if he is in position to marry at 28 or 29 years of age. President Roosevelt's letter and President Eliot's furore of discussion. The census returns, are not comforting as they show a steady decline in the birth rate of the native Americans. The fact is that the population of the United States is increasing only through immigration and the natural growth of can, The humorist of the Chicago Record-Herald finds material in President Roosevelt's letter:

One redeeming feature of the scandal in the Grenadier Guards Regiment is that the youngsters flogged were the sons of peers. Evidently snobbery is not at the bottom of the practice.

Brighter Days for Ireland. The session of the Imperial Parlia-

For years "Putnam's" be Jack Maxwell, of Goderich. Shaver was struck by his assailant over the eye and nose with a piece of board, rendering him unconscious. His nose was broken and he will lose the sight of the eye. It is believed Maxwell mistook Shaver for the license inspector or the policeman, the latter having arrested him here two years ago for horse-stealing. He was arrested at the Grip House two hours after the assault while sleeping in one of the boarders' rooms.

New York, Feb. 16.-The World says oday that from evidence brought out in the United States Circuit Court "it appears that Emperor William's sudden and mysterious recall of Baron Von Nolleben, German ambassador at Washington, closely followed charges that he had used his official position to advertise a certain wine. This wine had been urged in vain by the em-bassy for use in the christening of the Emperor's yacht Meteor by Miss Alice Reosevelt.

AMERICAN MARKETS CHICAGO.

CHICAGO.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—The wheat price was at times a little lower today, the May option going up to 77%c, as against a close last night of 77%c, but at no time did the market show much life. News of a pronounced character was in small showing. The receipts were not especially significant, the three principal markets reporting 429 cars, against 434 cars last week and 441 cars last year. At the moment we do not see much in the market on either side. Crop news of various kinds is likely to be the factor for some time to come. Weather may also be an influence. We lean towards the bull side of the market in a conservative way, believing that purchases on reactions are more likely to prove profitable than taking the short side. Estimated cars for Monday, 30.

Corn—The corn situation was a little heavy, the May price up to 45%c early and off to 44%c later. Large receipts, 537 cars, on an estimate of 505, induced free selling on the part of leading commission houses and corn specialists. It would not particularly surprise us if the market sought a somewhat lower level. Cars for Monday, 369.

By Henderson, the associate missionary secretary, of Toronto, preached an able discourse in the morning from the text:
"Sir, we would see Jesus." He dwelt on the fact that Jesus was the explanation of things human and divine and the solutions of man's truest existence and greatest destiny. It was for this reason, that he should be specially made known to men everywhere. In the evening he gave a powerful address on the different conditions of the people in Japan and China and outlined the various phases of Methodist missions in those Oriental empires. He also made a strong appeal liberal support of the growing work in our own Northwest. The doctor's addresses on both occasions held the close attention of large congregations that were present. The directors consider this a very valuable acquisition for the company, the property having been acquired by them upwards of a year ago for personal development. The contracts are now being made for active develcpment upon this property.

The Gurd Gusher is steadily producing about 100 barrels of oil per day, and the president states: "I have every reason to expect, as soon as we can make improvements by the installation of an air compressor, that the production will be increased to from 400 to 500 barrels per day." Owing to the courtesy of the Standard Oil Co., having, without expense to the Dominion Oil Co., Limited, installed a pipe line from the Gura Gusher, the Company posseses exceptional facilities for marketing this product, which is bringing THE HIGHEST PRICE OF ANY OIL ON THE NORTH AMERICAN CONTINENT.

the motto of Mrs. Smith. When one a post, and almost as blind as an kept a general store it was suicidal, so adder. If she did go there, and I doubt far as business was concerned, to shut one's shop early. Folks might want piness had been hers there, and to doubt it, it was because some bygone happiness had been hers there, and to visit anything in a hurry, from a bottle of unsweetened gin to a baby's comforter. And the same in the morning. Folk didn't all keep stores of everything in the house. Mrs. Smith felt it her duty to have the shutters up as short a time as possible, and acted accordingly.

It was 7 o'clock. The carrier had just called, and after wishing the worthy old lady good morning had deposited several wooden boxes in the shop. "Fish, I think," he said. "I seemed to detect the aroma."

"'Addicks," Mrs. Smith answered. this walk?" she asked. "It's not long since I introduced them, but they are going down well. Mr. Simes (Mr. Simes was the village fishmonger) will think I'm doing him a bad turn, but I can't help it; filthy was the only word to be applied to his dried fish, and the fresh ain't much better. Would you feel like a fresh-dried finnin (that was Mrs. Smith's way of profouncing it) yourself, Mr. Carter? If so, I'll just whip this case open, and you're very welcome.'

The carrier drew his hand across his lips and smacked them loudly. 'It ain't an offer to be refused, Mrs. Smith," he said, "and glad I am, and glad others is, that you've taken the fish in hand. Nature requires fish. Phosphorus is necessary to the human constitution, but nature also requires that the fish should be wholesome. Let me do that little job for you. No? Well, you were always a woman to do everything for yourself, and no one-let him he may—the King upon his throne, for that matter-could do it

Mrs. Smith had opened the box, selected a haddock of a golden orange hue, that spoke to her of a good rich full flavor, and was just wrapping it when someone entered the shop. She looked at the carrier and smiled.

"If I got up at cock-crow," she said, "I should have customers. And what" -she turned to the girl who had just entered-"can I do for you, my dear? If it's breakfast you're thinking about, I can recommend one of these"-and she pointed to the haddocks.

"I'm sorry it's not breakfast," Maria Bloor said, and her pretty lips smiled beneath her ugly goggle glasses. "I've come to see you, if you are Mrs. Smith. "If," the proprietor of the general store answered. "You don't come from these parts, my dear, or you wouldn't

"I am from London," Maria answered. If Mrs. Bloor had been there, she would certainly have wondered that the girl did not say, "I am from Aus-It would have seemed more natural, though last impressions are certainly sometimes strongest. "And I want to know whether you can tell me anything about Mrs. Carline." The carrier paused in the doorway. and wished Mrs. Smith good morning;

then she turned to Maria. 'The woman's been murdered, hasn't ?" she said. "I've not said a word case in the paper, and the photographer's evidence, and supposed it was

"You mean-?" Maria said, and

"I mean the man she called husband in the park, and, mind you, I think he was her husband. Mrs. Carline was a religious woman, not the sort of woman to go off the straight line."

Maria caught at one word. "Religious?" she said. "Then she went to church here? The clergyman would know something about her?" Mrs. Smith shook her head. 'No," she answered, "she didn't worship here, she made no friends here. She was a strange woman, was Mrs.

Carline. Some people fought shy of her, as some folk always will when a woman who is not a widow, can't or won't, give any account of herself. People do say she went into Market Burnham to church, but I don't know what would have taken her there. In spite of its name, there's not more than fifty souls in the place."

"Yes, a church, certainly, and Late to bed and early to rise, was clergyman as old as the hills, as deaf as piness had been hers there, and to visit the place brought it back again." "Some bygone happiness!" Maria said to herself. "I wonder—if I had ever been married I should know. I should know, I suppose?—would the wedding-day of a woman who had been neglected as Carline was, have been a day of happy memory? If so, is it possible she was married there?" She trembled a little as the thought came, and grew pale and afraid; but her voice was quite steady when she spoke.

calicoes. "Ah, that I can't say," she answered. "I don't know that she even went there at all, but one has the gossip brought to one. A woman in my position hears everything, both truth and lies. I heard a good many of what I am sure were lies about Mrs. Carline. She told me once that her husband was a sailor, bless me, they always say that when they can't produce them in the ordinary way. I've no business, I suppose, to be talking to a young girl like you like this, but you want to know about the woman.

Maria nodded her head. "Indeed I do," she answered. "Will you tell me how long ago it was that Mrs. Carline came here?"

Mrs. Smith put on her thinking-cap. "A matter of three years of a little less, I should think." she answered. It's a quiet, secluded place," she went "It might interest you to go and have a look at it, quite shut off from the rest of the world. I remember the night-yes, it must be less than three years ago-a closed carriage rattled through the village and made us all start a bit. Half an hour later, Job Jellow, one of the men that drives the station flies, tells us that he's just driven a lady and gentleman to the Hermitage. He didn't seem to have noticed the man, but the woman was Mrs. Carline. He described her to me and I recognized her when she came in the first time. She was a radiantly beautiful, happy young woman then, and chatted to me pleasantly. I may be wrong, but I think somehow the day she came to the Hermitage was her wedding-day. She and the man, too, though no one seems to have seen stopped at the Hermitage for a week. Then one night off they went again for six months. Then she came back alone, but happy still, and then slowly her face changed. She never with the team, and as he is considered said anything to me, but it was easy to see she was fretting. Her husband had probably grown tired of her, perdeserted her. She was poor, I think. She bought less and less, then suddenly she gave up the house and went away, but she paid up everything Miller, that is the landlord, thought be-

"Trust a man for looking after his own interests." Mrs. Smith answered. "Oh, he must have been a wily one! haddocks from the box, sorting them It's strange such a careful man should have done such a mad thing as to murder his wife in his own chambers. athlete. It would have been more like him to have done it in somebody else's."
"Much more like him," Maria Bloor answered. Hope beat high in her heart when she left Mrs. Smith's shop. Why she took so great an interest in poor murdered Carline she alone knew, but she felt very strongly that some sentimental reason had drawn the dead woman to the little village of Market Burnham. If her unhappy marriage-for without doubt her marriage had been unhappy-had taken place there, that was, perhaps, the cause.
